This is the ninth volume in the series "India's Foreign Relations" published annually in cooperation with the Public Diplomacy Division of the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India. The documents showcase the reach of Indian foreign relations in a globalised world. They are reflective of the complex web of considerations between nations. They indicate the shift of economic power to Asia and emergence of India as a major player. No international gathering today is complete without Indian presence and in finding solution to international problems Indian input is valued. In the last six decades, India has made success of its experiment with democracy and the nations around the world look at it with admiration. It is no wonder now that the United Arab Republic after the overthrow of its old regime and anxious to adopt the creed of democracy, looks towards India for help in organising its elections.

In the last couple of decades, India's success story in democracy has been buttressed considerably with another success story of economic miracle with the achievement of high growth of eight to nine percent. The manner in which India came out unscathed from the economic meltdown of the 2008 have left many wondering at the resilience of Indian institutions. It is the strength of its institutions and their ability to overcome any setbacks which nations encounter now and then, that inspire confidence in Indian story. The preference of India to project its soft power over the hard one, helped New Delhi to build confidence among the developing countries. The emergence of new consultative groupings intersecting continental barriers have forged new relationships among nations to work towards human wellbeing - a far greater guarantee of peace.

India's story now attracts global interest. These volumes seek to carry this message of India to people around the world. The global engagement of India and its increased interaction has led to the generation of plethora of documents thereby increasing the bulk every year. This needed tackling and in 2009 we experimented by combining electronic technology with the print and found it quite successful. While the printed volume, like last year, provides the ready reference to the totality of material made available, by placing the text of some of the documents in the accompanying Compact Disc (CD), the bulk has been brought within a reasonable limit.
The documents have been, as in the past, categorized thematically and region-wise and arranged chronologically. Those which do not fall in any particular category or deal with two or more subjects/countries have been placed in the general list, with cross referencing where necessary.

As always TCA Rangachari, has been of great help. He particularly went through the introduction with a fine comb. Thank you sir. Having said that, I hasten to add that I remain fully responsible for any deficiency that may have crept in the introduction or any where else in the volume.

New Delhi,

INTRODUCTION

It had been an eventful year for the Ministry of External Affairs. A record number of high level visits from abroad and an equally large number of visits by Indian leaders abroad, kept the lights of South Block burning 24x7. Twenty-four Heads of Government/State and 35 Foreign Ministers came to India. Indian President, Vice President and Prime Minister between them visited 22 countries. The External Affairs Minister went to 18 countries and with Minister of State visiting another 8, it made a total of MEA ministerial level visits 26. Noteworthy was the fact that during the year, Heads of Government of all the five Permanent Members of the UN Security Councils–USA, Russia, Britain, France and China made it to New Delhi. These visits covered as broad an area as possible. As the review of the year by the Ministry of External Affairs said the year “witnessed a qualitative expansion of strategic relations with key partner countries and robust engagement with India’s neighbours”. Apart from the visits by Prime Minister himself, many other senior ministers made it abroad on behalf of the Prime Minister to attend international gatherings. Minister of Power Sushil Kumar Shinde attended the Summit of the Council of Shanghai Cooperation Organisation at Dushanbe, Commerce Minister Anand Sharma attended the CICA Summit at Istanbul, and the Vice President went to Brussels to attend the ASEM Summit. The External Affairs Minister represented the Prime Minister at the SCO Summit at Tashkent. The Summits that the Prime Minister himself attended were–India-ASEAN Summit, EAS, two G-20 Summits at Toronto and Seoul, SAARC, BRIC, IBSA, NUCLEAR SECURITY CONFERENCE and the India-EU. In keeping with India’s consistent engagement with the OAU multilaterally, an Indian delegation attended the Executive Council Session of the OAU at Kampala and called on its Chairman.
International relations today are no longer uni-focused, demanding action only at diplomatic level. The spectrum on which the nations today conduct their relations is much wider than before and includes - trade and industry, finance and business, culture, information, art and education, science and technology, energy and agriculture and many other fields. The problems that the globalized world faces today are much more complex than at any time in the past. Many of them have no national solutions and must be tackled at multilateral level. The recent financial crisis is an example when the global community got together to create a new multilateral forum— the G-20 to work out a consensual solution. To guard the international community against the evils of war, the horizon too has expanded to include social, economic and all other problems which are the bane of humanity. The problems like terrorism, climate change, energy security, etc. have no national solutions.

In recent years, India has focused on its soft power to create a niche among the nations and people around the world. The diaspora has been a major catalyst in projecting India's soft power. The creation of eight Chairs of Indian studies in a single year alone at the internationally famous universities is a step in the same direction.

II

NEIGHBOURS

Relations with the Neighbours constitute the priority in the pursuit of India's national interests. With them we share the air we breathe and the waters which are our lifeline. Our peace and security are inextricably linked to our neighbours. How we manage our resources determine our and theirs prosperity. The interdependence which is inherent in our relationship determines the mutuality of interests. Therefore when we study our foreign relations, it becomes imperative to determine how we and our neighbours have managed to live together.

Afghanistan

India's policy in Afghanistan was unambiguously articulated by the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in his speech in the Lok Sabha while reporting to the House on the Conference on Afghanistan which took place in London in February 2010. He said India's "stand was to ensure an emphasis on the international community's long-term engagement in Afghanistan, the central and coordinating role of the UN, a focus on the resolve to combat terrorism, condemnation of terrorist groups, and the importance of the Afghan National Security Forces assuming a leading role in ensuring security. While supporting the Afghan Government's efforts to reintegrate those individuals who abjure violence, give up the armed struggle, accept the values of democracy, human rights and pluralism as enshrined in the Afghan constitution and do not have ties with terrorist groups, India stressed on the need to ensure that the Afghan peace and reintegration process should be inclusive and transparent."

He was more explicit at the Kabul Conference in July and said:

"India is committed to the unity, integrity and independence of Afghanistan underpinned by democracy and cohesive pluralism and free from external interference. India has contributed to these goals through our Development Partnership which is implemented entirely in accordance with the priorities of the Afghan Government and people. Our Assistance programmes are spread all over Afghanistan and cover all sectors of development: humanitarian, infrastructural, institution and capacity building, small-scale quick gestation projects, and agriculture. The ultimate aim of our assistance is to strengthen the capacity of the Afghan state and people to stand on their own feet in the areas of governance and services for the Afghan people."

When the Afghan President Hamid Karzai and Foreign Minister Zalmay Rassoul visited India in April and February respectively, they were reassured of India's commitment to these ideals which inspired Indian policy towards their country.

Bangladesh

The visit of Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina in January 2010, provided a new impetus to "launch a new phase in (their) bilateral relations." The opportunity was utilized by the leaders of the two countries to work out "a comprehensive framework of cooperation for development..... encapsulating their mutually shared vision for the future", based on their faith in, inclusive social justice, and democracy to promote "cooperation in water resources, power, transportation and connectivity, tourism and education". Responding to Indian concern for security, Prime Minister Hasina agreed with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh that the territory of either country should not be allowed to be used "for training, sanctuary and other operations by domestic and foreign terrorists/militants and insurgent organizations and their operatives". A major programme for social and economic development of Bangladesh was agreed upon between the two Prime Ministers. The icing on the cake was a billion US dollars EXIM credit for the supply of locomotives, rail coaches and other equipment for Bangladesh railways, buses and machinery etc. (The Exim credit agreement was signed in August when Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee visited Dhaka.) Agreeing to promote inter-grid connectively in power sector, New Delhi agreed to provide Bangladesh with 250 MW of power to boost its power system. New Delhi was most responsive to Dhaka's desires for improved connectivity with Nepal and Bhutan, and her concerns on Tipaimukh hydroelectric project in the Northeast. Bangladesh was assured that "India would not take steps on the Tipaimukh project that would adversely impact Bangladesh".

Agreeing with New Delhi on the need for reforms of the UN System, Sheikh Hasina supported India's candidature for a permanent seat on the UN security Council.

Nepal

Despite the constitutional logjam in Nepal during the year, bilateral relations were not allowed to suffer. The External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna visit to Kathmandu at the very start of the year in January 2010 was an assurance of India's goodwill towards the young republic. Mr. Krishna by signing a MOU for construction of the Terai Roads at an estimated cost of Indian Rs. 805 crores, sent a clear message to Nepal that while it could sort out its internal constitutional problems at its own pace and in its own way, New Delhi would not withhold its cooperation for its development in any manner. In the projection of its soft and knowledge power, New Delhi agreed to help in setting up Science Learning Centre with an assistance of Indian Rs. 16.6 crores for which a MOU was signed. In order to give Nepal a modern equity market culture, a further amount of Rs.9.2 crores was committed to provide technical assistance to establish a Central Depository System.
In the fragile political situation prevailing in the Himalayan state with its open border, security has always been a major area of concern for New Delhi, which has been emphasized to Kathmandu repeatedly. It was no exception now. The Nepalese, as always, assured New Delhi of their being sensitive to its concerns. Given the need to strengthen the security related infrastructure, EAM conveyed the assurance that India was willing to provide all possible assistance to the Nepalese security agencies, of course, as per their request. India is already committed to help in the construction of a police academy in that country.

For various reasons, India-Nepal Treaty of Peace and Friendship of 1950 has been a sensitive issue with Nepal and it had been asking for its review. India is not unmindful of it either. There have been such reviews in the past but with no concrete results. Since the Nepalese raised this question again with the EAM, he did not fight shy of undertaking another review to satisfy the Nepalese sensitivities.

The environment for the Indian business and industry continued to be unsatisfactory with all Indian joint ventures almost lying shut. The External Affairs Minister Mr. Krishna was quite frank to bring this unsatisfactory situation to the notice of his interlocutors. There appeared little hope of improvement notwithstanding the agreement between the two countries for the need to sign a Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement, besides an agreement for Avoidance of Double Taxation. Nepal continues to drag its feet on signing the extradition treaty the draft of which was negotiated and finalized between the two countries almost five years ago.

EAM in his meeting with the Maoist leader Pushpa Kamal Dahal "Parchanda" was forthright to disabuse him of any notion that India was interfering in Nepal's internal affairs, a charge which the Maoist leaders hurl at India to gain the dubious advantage of winning popular sympathy and support. Conveying his "deep disappointment on the baseless attacks on India" he warned that such things "vitiate the age-old and time-tested friendly relations".

Within days of the return of EAM from Kathmandu, the Nepalese President Ram Baran Yadav visited India. President Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil reminded her guest of India's continued goodwill for his country. She expressed the hope that the task of achieving "an inclusive multi-party democracy" in Nepal would be "expeditiously" completed.

Sri Lanka

It was a year of peace in Sri Lanka marked by stronger ties with India. To reach out to the people across the island, India opened two new Consulates General at Jaffna in the North and Hambantota in the South of the country. India already has a consulate at Kandy in Central Sri Lanka. The exchange of visits of service chiefs was a sign of new thaw. Sri Lanka has no more qualms about strengthening linkages in various fields and levels. India on its part, to prevent any possibility of any remnants of the LTTE regrouping, on May 14, 2010 renewed its ban on the LTTE, which was first imposed in 1992.

The war left in its wake 2,80,000 Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs), who needed relief and rehabilitation. India stepped in to help Colombo to tie over this urgent humanitarian problem with a grant of Rs. 500 crores besides construction materials, and family packs containing the basic necessities. The joint efforts helped in providing immediate relief to almost all the IDPs. The Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao who toured most of the rehabilitation centers in the North and East in September 2010, did not find anything to complain on this account. But they remained vulnerable needing support until livelihoods were restored which presages economic activity to generate employment.

The visit of President Rajapaksa to New Delhi in June 2010 was a landmark visit in many ways. The 45-paragraph Joint Statement issued on the occasion underlined the two countries commitment "to substantially enhance the range and depth" of their ties including "through greater economic integration, enhancing connectivity and other linkages and closer developmental cooperation". Recognizing the need of the hour, all the projects that India committed were located in the North and this in itself underlined the Indian commitment to the welfare of the Tamils.

Progress in these projects would generate jobs and employment besides the much needed economic activity, ensuring long-term goal of rehabilitation of the IDPs. Resumption of ferry services between Tuticorin and Colombo and Rameswaram and Talaimannar would enable greater people to people movement and contacts. Already the largest number of transnational flights between India and Sri Lanka ensure heavy tourist traffic between the two countries. When the re-development of the Palali air port and Kankasanthurai port are completed it would further boost island's air and sea connectivity with southern states of India in a big way. The proposal for an energy grid will be the second of its kind after Bangladesh. After the success of the FTA in promoting two way trade, a more comprehensive framework of economic cooperation is in the offing. Already Bharti Airtel, the leading Indian telecom company is involved in Sri Lanka telecom sector and public sector NTPC in power generation. IRCON another public sector consultancy company is involved in railways.

Resettlement, rehabilitation, employment and livelihood are one side of the coin. The other, which is perhaps more important and will facilitate long term reconciliation between the two most important communities of Sri Lanka, is resolution of the core issue for political settlement of the ethnic problem which created the conundrum in the first place. The President is aware of what needs to be done. The prescription is already there and accepted by and large by all the stake holders. What is needed is to add a little potion so as to make the devolution more effective and meaningful. The 13th amendment, which was enacted following the 1987 India - Sri Lanka agreement, has been accepted as a basic document. It is also accepted at all hands that there was a need to strengthen the devolution prescription. The need to make the police administration accountable to the Provincial Chief Ministers and the devolution of power to the Provincial Councils to raise the revenue to meet their developmental aspirations, were some of the core issues that need to be attended to.

India acquiesced in President's priority to strengthen himself politically to be in a position to tackle the ticklish political question effectively. He has succeeded in that direction and his political position was now unassailable. He has won the second term as President. His rival, the former Chief of the Army Staff, Gen. Sarath Fonseka was vanquished and behind bar. The main opposition party, the UNP was in disarray and his political rival Ranil Wickremesinghe was facing a challenge to his leadership. The President has got the 18th Constitutional Amendment through the parliament. His road to a third term is clear if he chooses to do so when the time comes.
India having identified itself with the Tamil aspirations in Sri Lanka on the ethnic issue, is looked upon by the Tamils both in Sri Lanka and India to pull their chestnut out of the fire. Worried that in the first flush of victory, the President might ride rough shod over the Tamils, New Delhi availed itself of the first opportunity to convey its concerns to Colombo. On July 17, 2009 Prime Minister Manmohan Singh at his meeting with President Rajapaksa at Sharm-el-Sheikh, on the sidelines of the NAM Summit, had left him in no doubt about Indian concerns. He had told him "we are deeply concerned" and that "we have legitimate concerns about the welfare of Sri Lankan Tamils. It has a bearing on Sri Lanka's relations with India." It is now two years since the elimination of the LTTE. Already internationally concern is being expressed at human rights violations during the ethnic war. This concern could best be doused by expeditiously attending to the ethnic question. Time is the essence of the game and it is ticking away with Colombo sitting pretty!

Pakistan

Since 26/11 the relations with Pakistan remained in a state of suspended animation. New Delhi was unhappy at the tardy manner in which Pakistan dealt with the masterminds behind this horrendous attack, even after accepting that its nationals were indeed involved. India, however, realized that Pakistan being a next door neighbour, must be kept engaged, did not give up its efforts. As Prime Minister said so often: one can choose one's friends, but not the neighbours. It was in this spirit that New Delhi wanted to test the waters if Islamabad was ready to start the process in a meaningful way that the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna went to Islamabad in July. But unfortunately the talks floundered because there was hiatus in the expectations that the two countries had from the talks. As the Foreign Secretary, in one of her TV interviews, which she gave on return to New Delhi, said: "We had very precise... defined ideas on how to take this dialogue forward. We had had the opportunity to discuss this with Pakistan over the last few months so we clearly knew where we were going. I think in Pakistan's case the idea or the perspective was to resume dialogue across all fronts. But obviously the process of building trust, the enhancement of confidence has to proceed before you can resume dialogue in all the areas in which Pakistan and India were engaged in years before."
Notwithstanding the fact that the aftermath of the Islamabad talks left a bad taste in the mouth, Foreign Secretary could discern a silver lining. She said: "But a positive thing that has emerged out of what we discussed with Pakistan... was the affirmation by Foreign Minister Qureshi that Pakistan stood by the achievements made in the bilateral dialogue between our two countries in the period between 2004 and 2008." Regarding the future of the talks, Mrs. Rao remained optimistic and expressed the view that "the dialogue process must go on...". The groundwork for the process to go on has once again been laid in Thimphu in February 2011 on the sidelines of the SAARC ministerial level meeting. The Foreign Secretaries of the two countries had an exchange of views and announced the resumption of the process.

Hope is eternal. India as a bigger country must persist in its efforts to bring Pakistan round to realize the futility of an estranged relationship. It was in this spirit that the Prime Minister grabbed the opportunity offered by the semi-final cricket match in the World Cup Cricket Series between the teams of India and Pakistan. He first decided to watch the match himself and then invited Pakistan Prime Minister Gilani to Mohali (Punjab) for the same. The opportunity so offered was quite productive. It once again kindled the hope that the two countries will live in peace and the difficulties in the path of peace will be removed. If the year 2010 was a year of stalemate, 2011 offers hope of a better and brighter future relationship.

III

SOUTH-EAST AND EAST ASIA

Look East a buzz word in studying India’s relations with the South-East Asian countries was no longer a cliche but the bedrock of India’s foreign policy in the region. The emergence of regional sub-groupings like BIMSTEC brought about a new realization that Southeast Asia was an immediate neighbour of India through the connectivity provided by North East States. New initiatives have helped to generate a new understanding and friendly feeling towards India in the region. Regular interaction at the ASEAN level through the mechanism of India-ASEAN and East Asia Summits and other institutional interaction at various forums have now been combined with the regular nurturing of bilateral relations.
There was active traffic in forging bilateral relations. President Pratibha Devisingh Patil visited Laos and Cambodia in September and Prime Minister visited Japan, Malaysia and Vietnam in October. South Korean President and Malaysian Prime Minister visited India in January, Gen. Than Shwe of Myanmar's in July and Chinese Premier came just before the close of the year 2010. The External Affairs Minister visited Australia in March and China in April and Seoul in June. All this VVIP traffic kept the Ministry of External Affairs busy with the region. The Prime Minister also met his Chinese counterpart in Hanoi in October on the sidelines of the India-ASEAN Summit.

China

April 1, 2010 marked the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China. External Affairs Minister Krishna visited China to mark the occasion. The year-long celebrations of Indian culture in China and of Chinese in India concluded formally in December 2010 with a function presided over by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh when the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao was also present. The festivities played a crucial role in increasing awareness and consciousness of each other's country and culture. The significance of the relationship was oozing out of the assertion that India-China relations go beyond their bilateral scope and have "acquired global and strategic significance." On the bilateral front the Communiqué issued during the visit of the Chinese Premier in December was a reminder to the doubting Thomases that the two countries were capable of sorting out their differences that might crop up in their day to day relationship. It said:

"The two sides reviewed with satisfaction the comprehensive and rapid progress of India-China relations in the last ten years, and reaffirmed their commitment to abiding by the basic principles and consensus concerning the development of India-China relations set out in the Declaration of Principles for Relations and Comprehensive Cooperation between India and China in 2003, the Joint Statement of India and China in 2005, the India-China Joint Declaration of 2006 and A Shared Vision for the 21st Century of India and China of 2008. The two sides decided to enhance strategic communication, advance functional cooperation, broaden cultural exchanges, and deepen and enrich the India-China Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity on the basis of the Five Principles of Peaceful Co-existence, mutual respect and sensitivity for each other's concerns and aspirations."

Japan

Japan and India have more or less institutionalized their relations in different fields. They span economic, political, defence, culture and education, climate change, science and technology etc. The annual summits at Prime Minister level are expression of their keen desire to relationship-building. The visit of Defence Minister AK Antony to Tokyo, in November 2009 institutionalized the ministerial defence dialogue as an important step forward in the background of the participation of India and Japan with the United States in naval exercises.

The depth of economic cooperation was summed up by External Affairs Minister in his statement in the Lok Sabha on 19 December 2010 on the Prime Minister’s visit to Tokyo while recounting the areas of cooperation like flagship infrastructure projects as the Delhi Metro, Dedicated Freight Corridor Project and Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. The conclusion of negotiations for a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement would eventually lead to a quantum increase in bilateral trade. A suggestion coming from the Japanese Prime Minister for establishing a comprehensive Ministerial-level Economic Dialogue was welcomed by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. The breakthrough achieved by India in persuading Japan to start negotiations for an Agreement of Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, despite Japanese sensitivities, was a tribute to India’s non-proliferation record. Japan and India together with Germany and Brazil are aspirants for entry into the UN Security Council as permanent members and are coordinating their efforts in this direction.

Malaysia

The deepening of relations between India and Malaysia was evidenced by the exchange of visits by the Prime Ministers of the two countries in 2010. The Malaysian Prime Minister came in January and Dr. Manmohan Singh reciprocated the visit in November. The signing of the 12 Agreements/MoUs during the two visits was an expression of a desire on both the sides of the need for a deeper relationship. The most significant of all was the omnibus Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement covering goods, services and investments. The setting up of a CEO’s forum would provide a platform for cooperation between the corporate sectors of the two countries.

Summing up the Prime Minister’s visit to Kuala Lumpur the External Affairs Minister told the Lok Sabha on November 19 that keeping the future relations in mind “both Prime Ministers identified various elements to develop Strategic Partnership between the two countries. These include maintaining regular dialogue and contact at the summit level; biennial meetings of the Joint Commission headed by the Foreign Ministers; enhancing defence exchanges, cooperation and joint collaboration on projects of mutual interest in the defence sector; enhancing cooperation in counter-terrorism, including through information sharing and the establishment of a bilateral Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism at an early date; further strengthening bilateral trade and investment cooperation; expanding cooperation in infrastructure development and exploring possibilities for development of cooperation in financial sector; studying the possibility of enhancing the scope and level of joint collaboration in the hydrocarbons sector between PETRONAS of Malaysia and ONGC Videsh Limited of India in third countries; and identifying possible collaborative projects in the new and renewable energy sector through the establishment of a Joint Working Group.”

Laos and Cambodia

The high level President’s visit to Laos and Cambodia in September gave a special boost to promoting India’s relations with the countries with which India had centuries old civilizational contacts. Building on that advantage President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil endeavoured to build a dynamic economic and developmental partnership with both of them. The visit was significant because the last visit of an Indian President to these countries was in 1959.

Government of Lao PDR repeatedly conveyed to her its deep appreciation for India’s continued assistance and support for its developmental efforts through loans and assistance in the field of human resource development, hydropower and irrigation schemes in particular. India’s preferential tariff assistance to Laos came in for special mention. In Vientiane, a Cultural Exchange Agreement for the years 2011-13 was signed as also an agreement for a new Government of India Credit Line of US $ 72.55 million to finance two power projects. Agreements between the newly set-up Indian Chamber in Laos (INCHAM) with each of the three leading Indian Chambers of Commerce (viz. FICCI, CII and ASSOCHAM) would catalyze greater cooperation between the businessmen of the two countries.

In Cambodia, the Indian developmental assistance also came up for appreciation. Oil and gas, mineral extraction, agriculture and tourism were mentioned as future areas for bilateral cooperation. A MoU for cooperation between our Comptroller and Auditor General and the National Audit Authority of Cambodia was signed. A US$15 million Credit Line Agreement between EXIM Bank and the Cambodian Government was signed for Phase II of the Stung Tassal Water Development Project. The President announced a financial grant of US$ 246,000 for upgradation of the Cambodia-India Friendship School.

IV

WEST ASIA

India’s relations with the West Asian countries are based on dynamic factors of civilization, culture, and historical links. Housing a large Indian diaspora, pressure of energy resources, and an extended neighbourhood make West Asia a critical area for Indian policy makers. Security of sea-lanes joining the east and the west and increased piracy in the waters around the region has made it incumbent upon India to increase its footprints in the Indian Ocean. New Delhi is conscious of the sensitivities of the countries on the rim and therefore has made every effort to keep other stakeholders on board.

To nurture and to carry forward its ties developed during the earlier years, New Delhi has kept itself in constant touch with the countries of the region. While strengthening economic ties, political interaction has been maintained at the highest level. The President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil took a tour of the area visiting Syria and UAE in November. External Affairs Minister visited Oman in October. Prime Minister visited Saudi Arabia in March. His visit to Saudi Arabia was after 28 years of the visit of Mrs. Indira Gandhi in 1982. It may be recalled that in 2006 King Abdullah had visited New Delhi. He was then the Chief Guest at the Republic Day celebrations.

The most important outcome of the Prime Minister's visit to Riyadh was the signing of the historic Riyadh Declaration by the Prime Minister and King Abdullah, in which India and Saudi Arabia decided to raise their cooperation to a strategic partnership covering security, economic, defence and political areas. In particular, both leaders emphasised the importance of strengthening the strategic energy partnership. It was also agreed that both sides would work towards meeting their vast requirements relating to infrastructure and development by augmenting the flow of investments into each other’s countries.

The meeting of the India-Iran Joint Commission in New Delhi in July saw the presence of Dr. Seyed Shamseddin Hosseini, Iranian Minister of Economic Affairs and Finance. On this occasion a review was made of bilateral economic and cultural cooperation and six agreements/ MoUs were signed. The joint Commission, set up in 1983, had been meeting at regular intervals on issues relating to economic cooperation.

India reiterated its commitment to the Palestinian cause by deploring and condemning the tragic loss of life and injuries to the people on the boat carrying supplies for Gaza by the indiscriminate use of force by the Israelis. In the meeting of the NAM countries in New York in September External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna renewed India's support for a "negotiated solution resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders, side by side at peace with Israel as endorsed in the Quartet Roadmap and UNSC Resolutions 1397 and 1515." In 2010, like in 2009, New Delhi once again contributed a million US dollars to UNRWA in response to UNRWA flash appeal. It also contributed like in previous years, another 10 million US dollars as budgetary support to the Palestinian Authority.
India has a very lively and active relationship with countries of Africa and as in previous years close and high level contacts were maintained with the countries of this continent. In January the Vice President visited the southern African countries–Malawi, Botswana and Zambia. In March a delegation of the African Union came to New Delhi and in its meeting with senior officials of the Government of India discussed the implementation process of the decisions taken at the India-Africa Forum Summit. The delegation conveyed their appreciation for the manner in which India had engaged with them to implement the decisions. The Chief of Staff of the African Union Chairperson said that they appreciated India for believing in this multilateral relationship with Africa and for putting on the table the resources required to implement the commitments it had made.

In August the second phase of the Government of India’s Pan African E-Network project was inaugurated. Conceptualized on the vision of India’s former president Dr. A P J Abdul Kalam of connecting India with all the fifty three (53) countries of the African Union with a satellite and fibre optic network for sharing India’s expertise in education and health care, the project is being implemented in 47 African countries, of which actual commissioning has been completed in 34 countries.

Under this Project India has made available the facilities and expertise of some of the best universities and super-specialty hospitals in India to the people of Africa. The project is also equipped to support e-governance, e-commerce, infotainment, resource mapping and meteorological and other services in the African countries, besides providing VVIP connectivity among the Heads of State of the African countries through a highly secure closed satellite network. More than 1700 students from several African countries have already registered with the Indian universities for the various courses being offered by them under the tele-education component of the Project. Regular tele-medical consultations have also started between the African doctors and the Indian specialists through this network. Likewise, nearly 700 CME lectures have been delivered by our doctors from the Indian Super Specialty hospitals.
At the highest level the Presidents of Seychelles, South Africa and Mozambique visited New Delhi. Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Ethiopia came in December and along with the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna jointly presided over the proceedings of the first India - Ethiopia Joint Commission. Earlier in March the two countries had a round of Consultations between the two Foreign Offices.

In August the Foreign Minister of Gambia visited New Delhi and among other things he signed an agreement for annual consultations between the two Foreign Offices. In March the Foreign Ministers of the Kingdom of Lesotho and Congo had visited New Delhi. The Chadian Foreign Minister came calling in September. In October Commerce Minister Anand Sharma visited Kenya where Indian investments touched an impressive figure of 1.5 billion US dollars. Minister of State Mrs. Preneet Kaur paid a visit to Namibia and Minister of State for Minority Affairs Salman Khurshid to Nigeria. Mr. Khurshid represented India at the 50th anniversary of Nigerian Independence and also laid foundation stone of the India–Nigeria Friendship Hospital in the capital city of Abuja. The hospital to be completed in two years will be the biggest health care project of its kind in West Africa.

EUROPE

There were a series of visits to and from Europe which houses the three permanent members of the UNSC—the UK, France and Russia. India had the privilege to host Heads of Government/State of all the three during the year. In the case of Russia, its Prime Minister too was invited and he came. The Presidents of Iceland and Turkey as well as the Polish Prime Minister were honoured guests. The Vice President visited Belgium for the ASEM Summit besides Croatia and Czech Republic. The Prime Minister was in Belgium for the India-EU Summit. He went to Germany for a bilateral visit. Foreign Minister of Russia was in New Delhi for a meeting with the External Affairs Minister and Minister of State Mrs. Preneet Kaur visited Hungary and Slovenia.

France

In recent years India and France are engaged in regular dialogue at the highest level. In 2008 President Sarkozy was the Chief Guest at the Indian Republic Day and in 2009 Dr. Manmohan Singh was the Chief Guest at the Bastille Day parade. If in 2009-10, India had 'Bonjour -India' (French Cultural Festival), in 2010-11, Franc will have 'Namaste France' (Indian Cultural Festival). In 2010 before the formal visit of French President to India in December, the Prime Minister and President met twice in April and June on the sidelines of the Washington Nuclear Security Conference and G-20 Summit respectively.

In May the foreign offices of the two countries had their annual consultations, the last one was in Paris in 2009, when they reviewed the entire gamut of bilateral relations and exchange of views on regional and multilateral issues. The visit of President Sarkozy and his wife in December 2010 which also marked the 12 year of India-France strategic partnership offered them an opportunity to reiterate "their common determination to work for global peace and security."

The visit offered the two leaders an occasion to reaffirm "their shared vision and values inspired by multilateralism, justice, freedom, equality and fraternity." They reiterated their determination and confirmed their commitment to work together towards "peace and global security and reiterated their determination" to give a new impetus to the Indo-French Strategic Partnership. France has consistently supported India's aspirations for a permanent seat on the UNSC. In the Joint Statement issued at the end of President's visit the two counties reaffirmed their wish to continue and expand their dialogue and concrete cooperation in multilateral bodies, especially in UNSC during the 2011-2012 biennium, so as to address threats such as regional crises, terrorism, climate change and proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems, as well as to promote arms control and global disarmament. France recognized "India's non-proliferation record as well as its willingness to further contribute to global non-proliferation efforts". It also extended its full support to India's desire "for membership of multilateral export control regimes NSG, MTCR, AG, WA in a manner consistent with procedures and objectives of these groups."

At the start of the year 2010, on 14 January the India-France Cooperation Agreement on the Development of Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy entered into force along with the signing of Agreements on the protection of Confidentiality of Technical data and information relating to cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and concerning intellectual property rights on the development of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy which supplemented it.

While having some reservations but unmindful of the contents of the Indian nuclear civil liability Act, passed by the Indian parliament and much to India's satisfaction, France was willing to go ahead with the implementation of its agreement on the supply of nuclear reactors.

France agreed with New Delhi that the best way to secure Afghan independence and security was to strengthen the Afghan National Security Forces. Another area of concern to India is the question of terrorism particularly from across the border. Since it required international cooperation, President Sarkozy agreed with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in calling upon the international community to combat it firmly.

Russia

There were several visits from Russia underlining the continued warmth in the relations between the two countries. Both the Russian President and Prime Minister visited New Delhi for high level talks. During Russian Prime Minister Putin's visit five agreements/MoUs were signed in the fields of atomic energy, space, mineral development and their import etc. The visit of Russian President was an occasion to sign another eleven agreements also in diverse fields-- emergency management, simplification of travel documents, oil and gas sector, Science and Technology, combating irregular migration, pharmaceuticals, hydrocarbon etc.

The meetings of several joint commissions, functioning in multi disciplines, took place. The Inter-Governmental Commission on Military and Technical Cooperation met in October, the Joint Commission on Economic Cooperation in November and the Joint Commission on Trade and Investment in December when a Protocol on trade and investments was also signed. A landmark contract was signed between the two countries coinciding with the visit of the Russian President in December for design and production of 5th generation fighter aircraft.

Russia ab initio has been in support of Indian permanent membership of the UNSC.
INTRODUCTION

United Kingdom

The visit of British Prime Minister David Cameron to New Delhi in July was an opportunity for the Prime Ministers of the two countries to continue their discussion on bilateral and international issues initiated only a few weeks earlier on the sidelines of the Toronto G-20 Summit. While welcoming the development of broad based UK - India cooperation in the Defence Sector, they too stressed the importance of existing cooperation in combating terrorism. The British Prime Minister was supportive of a permanent seat for India in the UN Security Council. Treating Afghanistan as one of the global security challenges, they agreed on the need for stability in Afghanistan.

Germany

Relations with Germany were described by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during his visit to Berlin in December as "excellent" and without "bilateral irritants", for which he gave full credit to Chancellor Markel and extended India’s thanks to her. Since both India and Germany are members of the UN Security Council for the 2011-12 period, he promised "to work closely with Germany both bilaterally and within the G-4, to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council, as well as in support of the expansion of the permanent and non-permanent categories of its membership."

Poland

Another important visitor from Europe during the year was the Polish Prime Minister Donald Tusk who came in September. In exchange of views between the Prime Ministers of India and Poland it was agreed that both sides would endeavour to enhance trade and investments in both directions with the target of doubling the value of bilateral trade by 2014. They discussed global issues like reform of the UN Security Council and climate change and agreed to expand cooperation in the field of clean coal technology. Prime Minister Tusk reaffirmed the support of Poland for India’s candidature for the non-permanent seat in the UN Security Council for 2011-12 as well as for a permanent seat in an expanded Security Council.
Ice Land

President of Iceland, H.E. Dr. Olafur Ragnar Grimsson accompanied by a 20-member strong business delegation was in New Delhi from January 11-17, 2010. He was conferred the Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding for the year 2007. In his meeting with Prime Minister, President Grimsson discussed bilateral and international issues, including cooperation in the field of geo-thermal energy, IT, carbon sequestration and recycling, glaciological studies, earthquake prediction and, oil exploration by Indian companies of Iceland's coast, besides discussing the way forward on Climate Change after the COP-15 Conference.

Turkey

Turkish President came calling in February in the background of rich historical connections, both cultural and political, dating back to the exchange of embassies between the Mughal and Ottoman courts in the 15th and 16th centuries and the enthusiastic support that the people of India lent in the foundation of the Turkish Republic after the First World War. The visit of President Abdullah Gul was marked by complete understanding on matters of mutual concern which led to the signing of two important declarations between the two countries—the Declaration on Terrorism and Declaration on Scientific and Technological Cooperation. Great stress was laid on building institutional linkages such as parliaments and political parties of both the countries.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The anxiety felt in New Delhi when President Obama took over in Washington did not take time to vanish following the assumption of the reins of administration by him. The visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the US in 2009 gave enough indications that not only would the older relations be maintained but pushed forward vigorously for which a new agenda was set. Mr. Obama in deference to Indian sensitivities maintained a hands off policy on Kashmir and prudently put pressure on Pakistan to be sensitive to Indian concerns about terrorism, cooperate in the investigations of the 26/11 and bring the perpetrators of the horrendous crime to justice. Similarly Obama Administration has been quite appreciative of the Indian assistance programme in Afghanistan which sought to build and develop human resources and the much needed infrastructure in Afghanistan.

The high point of India-US relations was the visit to New Delhi of Mr. and Mrs. Obama. He went all out to respect the Indian sensitivities on all issues and characterized "the India-US relationship as one of defining partnership of the 21st Century". On the question of India’s permanent membership of the UN Security Council, an issue close to the hearts of millions of Indians, President Obama was more than categorical. In his address to the Indian Parliament he gave an explicit assurance that the United State supported India’s quest for a permanent seat, an assurance which was reflected in the Joint Statement issued at the end of his visit—"in the years ahead the United States looks forward to a reformed UN Security Council that includes India as a permanent member." They also pledged as strategic partners "to continue to consult each other closely on regional and global developments and remain sensitive to each other’s interests". Until India’s permanent membership came through, it was agreed between the two leaders that while India was non-permanent member of the UNSC their delegations in New York "will intensify their engagement and work together to ensure that the Council continue to effectively play the role envisioned for it in the UN Charter".

At the beginning of the year in January Defence Secretary Gates came calling and in his interaction with the Defence Minister A. K. Antony exchanged views and perspectives on a number of issues including the regional security situation and global security challenges. Both expressed "satisfaction about the improvement in bilateral defence relations since the signing of the bilateral cooperation agreement in 2005". The enhanced bilateral defence relations are now reflected in all areas, "including military to military interactions and in the area of defence trade".

Following the launch of India - US Global Strategic Partnership in 2009, the first such Dialogue, led by External Affairs Minister SM Krishna, took place in Washington in June. On the US side the talks were led by the Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. At this talk, Mr. Krishna reiterated the importance that the Prime Minister attached to the Strategic Dialogue and his personal commitment to it. The EAM assured the US that India considered the mutually beneficial relationship with the United States to be one of India’s foremost foreign policy priorities. This reality was reflected in the Joint Statement issued at the end of the strategic talks, in the word that "as strategic partners, India and the United States would continue to consult each other closely on regional and global developments and remain sensitive to each other's interests".

VIII

MEMBERSHIP OF THE UN SECURITY COUNCIL

Coming to their own after half-century of waiting on the sidelines, the countries of the South are out to challenge an international order, built, when they were struggling to overturn the colonial yoke. In resisting the reforms, some powers are now seeking to perpetuate themselves at the UN. But the reforms of the UN have become urgent. New Delhi with some other countries is engaged in a relentless struggle to break that monopoly of power of the few. The campaign has gathered enough momentum and support and it is now a question of time before the reforms come.

India by itself has gathered enough support from a range of countries both developed and developing. Of the P-5 countries only China has not yet come out clearly in favour of New Delhi though it continues to hedge its position by taking the line that the question of reforms of the UN needed "extensive and democratic consultations". To the G-4 Statement issued recently on the SC membership, China said "forcing premature plans (would) undermine the unity of the UN member states" since there were sharp differences over major issues". Barack Obama in his November speech to the Indian members of Parliament said: "We believe that India is a deserving candidate for permanent membership of the Security Council". The other three—the UK, France and Russia are committed to New Delhi’s support. Meanwhile India has been elected to one of the non-permanent seats for the year 2011-12. India’s candidature obtained 187 votes against 128 which were actually required. The External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna described "this resounding endorsement of India’s candidature at the United Nations …as a reaffirmation, if any were needed, of the overwhelming support that India enjoys in the international community". Significantly all the BRIC and IBSA and G-4 partners of India find themselves simultaneously on the Security Council.
ASEAN now has a population of more than 600 million with a combined gross domestic product of US $ 1.5 trillion, marked by a high growth and political stability, a growing middle class, endowed by enormous natural resources, including some of the world's largest tracts of rainfall forests. With these considerable assets, ASEAN has thus become a regional organization with global significance. It is in a position to evolve the larger regional architecture in the Asia-Pacific region. With its dialogue partner, the East Asia Summit, the ASEAN Regional Forum and the ASEAN plus Three forum, ASEAN is already the hub of the region's key diplomatic process. ASEAN has naturally become an essential partner for India in the pursuit of its Look East Policy.

The ASEAN-India are having a dialogue since 1992 first as sectoral dialogue partners and since 1995 as full dialogue partners. The relationship was further elevated in 2002 at the ASEAN-India Summit in Phnom Penh, Cambodia. Since then the ASEAN-India Summit has been held annually. From economic relationship, it now transcended to cover political and security dimensions. India participates in a series of consultative meetings with ASEAN under the ASEAN-India dialogue platform, which include Summit, ministerial and senior officials' meetings besides meetings at experts' level. It demonstrates its commitment and shared interest to ensuring peace, security, stability and development in Southeast Asia.

In October 2003 India acceded to the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in Southeast Asia at the 2nd ASEAN-India Summit in Bali and also signed the Joint Declaration for Cooperation in Combating International Terrorism. In November 2004 at the Vientiane India - ASEAN Summit, the ASEAN-India Partnership for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity was signed. It set out the roadmap for long-term ASEAN-India engagement. India has now appointed Mr. Biren Nanda as its Ambassador to the ASEAN. ASEAN and India will mark the 20th anniversary of their dialogue relationship in 2012 with a Commemorative Summit to be held in New Delhi. A number of commemorative activities have been planned to signify the expanding and deepening of the dialogue partnership.
The ASEAN-India Eminent Persons Group (EPG) has been established to take stock of ASEAN-India relations over the past 19 years and explore ways to widen and deepen existing cooperation between ASEAN and India. The EPG is expected to present their final report and recommendations to the ASEAN-India Summit in October 2011.

In 2008, the total volume of ASEAN-India trade was US$ 47.5 billion. ASEAN's exports to India were US$ 30.8 billion - a growth of 24.4% in comparison with that of 2007. ASEAN's imports from India were US$ 17.9 billion - a growth of 44.5% in comparison to that of 2007. In 2009, the two-way trade between ASEAN and India stood at US$ 39.1 billion. As for foreign direct investment (FDI), the inflow from India to ASEAN Member States was US$ 591 million in 2008, accounting for 1.2% of total FDI in the region. In 2009, the FDI inflow from India to ASEAN was US$ 970 million, accounting for 2.5% of total FDI in the region. Despite impact of the global financial/economic crisis, India remained the seventh largest trading partner of ASEAN and the sixth largest investor in ASEAN in 2009. At the 8th ASEAN-India Summit in October 2010, both sides reaffirmed their commitment made at the 7th ASEAN-India Summit to achieve bilateral trade target of US$ 70 billion by 2012. While in 2009 India and ASEAN signed an agreement in goods under the Framework Agreement on Comprehensive Economic Cooperation (which was signed in 2003), an agreement on Services is being worked out paving the way for the establishment of an ASEAN-India Free Trade Area. The Agreement on Goods of August 2009 has created one of the world's largest free trade areas (FTA) a market of almost 1.8 billion people with a combined GDP of US$ 2.8 trillion.

SAARC

The 16th SAARC Summit marked the 25th anniversary of SAARC and was hosted by Bhutan in April 2010. In the two and a half decades robust institutional framework for cooperation in areas such as food security, poverty alleviation, terrorism, communications, and trade and economic has been set up. SAFTA, the SAARC Development Fund and the South Asian University and the like projects would promote greater economic linkages and people to people contacts.
The major theme of this year's summit being climate change, the Declaration that it adopted on Climate Change agreed to establish "an Inter-governmental Expert Group on Climate Change to develop clear policy direction and guidance for regional cooperation as envisaged in the SAARC Plan of Action on Climate Change." In keeping with the theme of the Summit, the Summit Declaration too was appropriately titled "Towards a Green and Happy South Asia".

Accepting the need for a 'Vision Statement' after its existence for 25 years, the Declaration agreed to form a 'South Asia Forum' consisting of eminent personalities with diverse background from all the member States for the "generation of debate, discussion and the exchange of ideas on South Asia and its future development".

A very significant point that emerged at the meeting was that in the last few years all the SAARC countries have now multiparty democratic system and hence the need to focus on providing "effective, efficient, transparent and accountable government" to the people. This necessitated sharing of experiences by various countries by establishing institutional linkages in the political and parliamentary fields. The Bangladesh proposal for a "SAARC Charter of Democracy" to be discussed at an inter-governmental meeting was accepted and Dhaka offered to provide the venue and a Concept Paper for this purpose.

Shanghai Cooperation Organization

India attended the two meetings of the SCO in the year 2010 as Observer. External Affairs Minister SM Krishna was present at the Summit at Tashkent in June and Sushil Kumar Shinde, Minister of Power attended the Council of the Heads of Government meeting at Dushanbe in November.

BRIC and IBSA

The Prime Minister visited Brasilia in April for the second BRIC and IBSA Summits. The first BRIC Summit was held in June 2009 at Yekaterinburg(Russia). The agenda of the Second BRIC Summit included discussions on the international financial and economic crisis, the G-20 related matters, climate change, UN reforms, regional issues including Iran, the Middle East and Haiti, and a general follow-up of the dialogue of BRIC countries.
It may be recalled that the BRIC idea took shape with the first meeting of the foreign ministers of the four countries—Brazil, Russia, India and China on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in September 2006. Since then they have been meeting annually on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly. A standalone meeting of the Foreign Ministers was held in Yekaterinburg in May 2008. These consultations were found particularly useful especially in the context of the world economic and financial crisis. Since the last Summit Foreign Ministers, Finance Ministers, Agriculture Ministers, National Security Advisers and Governors of Central Banks of BRIC countries have met to make it a vibrant entity. The four large countries with abundant resources and large populations accounting for one-fifth of the world’s GDP, working together expect to bring the benefits of inclusive social and economic development to their peoples. In 2011 the BRIC is to be expanded into BRICS by the inclusion of South Africa.

Simultaneous with the BRIC Summit, Brazil hosted the 4th IBSA Summit composed of India, Brazil and South Africa. IBSA has become a significant vehicle for comprehensive trilateral cooperation between three large democratic countries from three continents that share common values and are engaged in the development process to improve the lives of their peoples.

It is significant that IBSA cooperation is not limited to governments, but engages the civil societies of the three countries. Indeed civil society involvement is a significant aspect of IBSA. The IBSA countries also take up projects in other developing countries under the IBSA Trust Fund. This is a novel initiative of South-South cooperation. Currently such projects are located in seven countries. IBSA has committed more projects in Haiti in the wake of the recent earthquake there, and is considering additional projects in Palestine.

The Summit particularly focused on UN reform, the impact of global economic and financial crisis and scourge of terrorism. As the External Affairs Minister told the Parliament the leaders of the IBSA "reiterated the need for urgent reform of the United Nations, including the Security Council, to make it more representative and democratic". Recognising the negative impact of the global economic and financial crisis on developing countries, the EAM told the parliament the three leaders meeting in Brasilia "emphasized the importance of promoting sustainable development and called for a development-oriented, balanced and successful conclusion of the Doha Round of trade talks." Focusing on terrorism the Leaders "considered the scourge of terrorism as one of the most serious threats to international peace and security". While sympathizing with India as a victim of terrorism the IBSA Leaders "emphasized the need for early finalisation of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism."

Nuclear Security Conference

President Obama of the United States while addressing the UN Security Council Summit in September 2009 on the question of nuclear non-proliferation had called for a nuclear Security Conference in Washington in April 2010. Accordingly this conference did take place in Washington and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh was an important participant among the 47 Heads of Government apart from the UN, IAEA, and the EU.

Prime Minister informed the Conference of India's nuclear development programme and in so doing "also underlined (India's) concerns on clandestine proliferation and the danger of nuclear material and technical know-how falling into hands of non-state actors." He described the "new Russia-US agreement to cut their nuclear arsenals as a step in the right direction" and called on "all states with substantial nuclear arsenals to further accelerate this process". He said the "danger of nuclear terrorism makes early elimination of nuclear weapons a matter of even greater urgency".

At the Summit, Prime Minister announced "the establishment of a Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership in India". The Centre to be "wholly owned and managed by the Government of India, would have four schools on Advanced Nuclear Energy System Studies, Nuclear Security, Radiation Safety and Radiisotope applications. The Centre would also assist in safe, secure and proliferation-resistant promotion of nuclear energy, upgrading of standards and sharing of experience. The Prime Minister assured his audience that India "will develop it in partnership with IAEA and interested countries."

The Summit's outcome "was contained in a Communiqué and a Work Plan aimed at fostering political commitment on nuclear security and follow up action in forums such as the IAEA." India's Weapons of Mass Destruction

Other multilateral forums were also quite active during the year. There were two Summit level conferences of G-20 countries - in Toronto in June and in Seoul in November both of which were attended by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister felt that it was quite difficult to protect global growth in a situation where markets were nervous about debt sustainability. His assessment was that the recovery of the economy was quite fragile and private demand in the industrialized countries was likely to remain weak. His fear was that under the circumstances the "contractionary policies, if followed by many industrialized countries simultaneously, could provoke a double dip recession" which "would have very negative effects on developing countries, and on the prospects for achieving the Millennium Development Goals."

Speaking from his own experience he said: "Thanks to an effective fiscal and monetary stimulus, we were able to contain the effect of the global crisis on our economy. After growing at 9 percent for four years before the crisis, our economy averaged about 7 percent growth in last two years. We expect to grow by 8.5 percent in 2010-11 and we hope to go back to 9 percent by 2011-12." He said India was "giving a strong push to investment in infrastructure, relying on private public partnership as much as possible to reduce the burden on scarce public resources".

ASEM

The Vice President Hamid Ansari represented India at the biennial Summit of Asian and European countries popularly known as ASEM at Brussels in October.

The overarching theme of the Summit was "Achieving Greater Wellbeing and Dignity for all Citizens". The agenda had five themes - (1) Financial and Economic Governance; (2) Sustainable Development; (3) Global Issues; (4) Regional Issues; and (5) People-to-People Visibility and Future of ASEM. This was the second summit level participation for India. The Summit witnessed expansion of ASEM membership further by welcoming three new partners - Australia, New Zealand and Russia who attended the Summit for the first time. The total strength of the ASEM stands enlarged at 48.

ASEM brings together 27 European Union members and the European Commission from the European side, and from the Asian side it has ten ASEAN members and six other countries - China, India, Japan, Mongolia, Pakistan and South Korea. The six other countries are under a subgroup North, East and South Asia (NESA).

ASEM is a unique framework which brings Asia together with Europe on one platform for cross-continental dialogue and cross-fertilization of ideas on a wide range of topical issues. One of the objectives of ASEM is to focus on issues in which it can add value to ongoing processes in other multilateral frameworks. ASEM not only offers a platform to the leaders for informal dialogue on topical issues but also helps to shape the international policy agenda.

ASEM members together account for more than 40 per cent of the world’s population; 50 per cent of global GDP; and 60 per cent of world trade. Twelve ASEM countries figure among the top 25 trading partners of India which itself offers a valuable forum for India’s bilateral and multilateral cooperation. The last ASEM incidentally was held in Beijing in October 2008, which was attended by the Prime Minister. That was the first summit level meeting attended by India.

The Vice President in his intervention at the Summit particularly articulated the point highlighted by Prime Minister at the G-20 Summits "how to ensure global growth amidst debt sustainability concerns, especially in some of the Eurozone countries". Vice President stressed that fragile economic recovery and weak private demand in developed economies had caused sovereign debt problems which need utmost priority for fiscal consolidation. He stressed that shortcuts would not work to resolve the crisis and a differentiated strategy would need to be crafted to take into account the special circumstances of each country. In his opinion, international trade and investment offered "an important route forward towards non-inflationary and sustainable global economic recovery. Developing economies are focusing on increasing domestic demand, especially through enhanced infrastructure investment". Hence the role of enhanced multilateral and private capital flows to developing economies had become critical.

TERRORISM

That terrorism has snowballed into an international problem needs hardly any emphasis or reiteration. India has suffered enormously from cross border terrorism and for too long. It has therefore consistently waged the struggle against this scourge at all levels. It is a recurring theme of discourse both in bilateral discussions and at international fora, whenever an opportunity offers itself. In the last few years, bilateral meetings have been coordinated by Ministry of External Affairs with 18 countries and groupings. Bilaterally, it is done through the mechanism of Counter-Terrorism Joint Working Groups (CT-JWGs). The Ministry currently coordinates CT-JWGs with 25 countries and 2 regional groupings. Ministry of Home Affairs also contributes its share by taking up this issue with the neighbours through bilateral mechanisms that exist with them. These efforts have proved very helpful in enabling exchange of views and experience regarding terror threats and groups, sharing of information, cooperation in training and capacity building, countering terror financing, sharing best practices, strengthening of multilateral efforts in countering terrorism and in facilitating agency to agency cooperation.

NUCLEAR

Since the signing of the India-United States Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement, India has successfully widened the area of its cooperation with many other countries. Another similar Agreement signed with France was ratified through exchange of Instruments of Ratification between the Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao and the French Ambassador Jerome Bonnafont on January 14, 2010. In accordance with the provisions of the Agreement, it entered into force on the date of exchange of instruments of ratification. In 2009 the United Kingdom, Canada, Kazakhstan and Mongolia had promised cooperation in this field. Talks on nuclear cooperation for peaceful purposes also opened with Japan.
On March 29 India and the United States took an important step towards implementing the civil nuclear cooperation agreement, by completing negotiations on "Arrangements and Procedures" for reprocessing U.S.-obligated spent nuclear fuel. Negotiations on these 'arrangements and procedures' commenced in July 2009 and were concluded during the last round of negotiations held in New Delhi on 2-4 March, 2010. These arrangements, negotiated pursuant to Article 6(iii) of the Agreement for Cooperation between the Government of India and the Government of the United States of America concerning Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, will enable Indian reprocessing of U.S.-obligated nuclear material under IAEA safeguards.

India crossed the final hurdle in the nuclear cooperation domain with the passage of Civil Nuclear Liability Damage Act in Parliament in August. With the Presidential assent granted on September 21, 2010 the way was cleared for India to sign the Convention on Supplementary Compensation on Nuclear Damage (CSC). It signed that Convention at Vienna on October 27, 2010 thereby delivering on the last of its commitments stemming from the nuclear agreement with the United States. The international covenant provided a framework for channeling liability for providing speedy compensation in the event of a nuclear accident, was signed at the International Atomic Energy Agency headquarters in Vienna by Dinkar Khullar, India's Ambassador to Austria. The IAEA is the "depository" of the CSC, which has so far been signed by 14 countries but ratified by only four. The CSC will enter into force only when at least five countries with a minimum of 4,00,000 units of installed nuclear capacity ratify the treaty.

With India signing the CSC and the Obama administration issuing the requisite 'Part 810' licensing certification, the stage is now set for the Nuclear Power Corporation of India Ltd. to begin full-fledged commercial negotiations with General Electric and Westinghouse for supply of two 1,000-MWe reactors. Three rounds of discussions of an exploratory nature have already been held.

There has been some difference of opinion between India and some of the supplier countries regarding certain provisions of the Act with regard to the liability of the Suppliers in case of civil damage. Despite this there has been God speed for the cooperation as no country has reneged from its promise to supply nuclear reactors for its civil nuclear energy programme.
Prime Minister described the passage of the Act a completion of journey to end apartheid against India in the field of atomic power. Widening the area of cooperation, India and the United Kingdom signed a Joint Declaration on February 11 on Civil Nuclear Cooperation and another agreement was signed with Canada on peaceful uses of Nuclear Energy in June. On March 12 India and Russia signed an Agreement for construction of Reactors of Russian design in India. The Agreement outlines the timelines for steps to be taken for the construction of Kudankulam units 3 & 4, provides for construction of two more reactors at Kudankulam (Units 5&6) and two reactors at Haripur, West Bengal during 12th Five Year Plan.

XII

In this globalized village, the story of India's vibrant democracy, emerging economy and transformation into a knowledge society has attracted worldwide attention and interest. Recognition of new found status of India as a responsible nuclear power with an impeccable record of non-proliferation has added to its prestige externally. The soft power that it has gathered through sports, education, cinema, music, art and literature, and advanced level of Information Technology have all contributed to its claim to its rightful place in the reformed UN Security Council reflecting the present day world than the one embedded in the post-war world when most of Asia and Africa were struggling to overthrow the colonial yoke.

The message of new and emerging India is now catching up fast through the medium of Public Diplomacy, which the Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao emphasized as one of "vehicle of dissemination of the ideas, the interests, the concepts and the approaches that define our foreign policy". Mrs. Rao while inaugurating the Public Diplomacy Conference in New Delhi on December 10 put it succinctly when she said: "As our foreign policy interests and strategic perspectives become more sharply honed, as our global presence become much more visible, as India's re-emergence grasps the world's attention, as our economy becomes one of the international frontrunners in terms of its accelerated growth rate, India's voice must be heard in multiple situations, before diverse audiences, and the task to fulfill this will be that of its diplomats who must be ever active in the tasks of advocating and explaining the Indian 'brand' as it were, because this is a compelling narrative surrounding the world's largest democracy. that must be heard." These are all the attributes of a soft power built on the values of Indian culture, ancient mingling with the modern building an inclusive society at home while projecting itself externally as a country willing to partner in building new relationship of 21st century discarding those of the post-war vintage.

India has not lagged behind in developing its hard power either. While a country can project its image on the strength of soft power, it cannot meet challenges to its security without hard power. All the three-arms of its defence forces are busy acquiring cutting-edge technologies. Its naval power is keeping the sea lanes in the Indian Ocean open and free. It is effectively engaged to meet the menace of piracy outside its waters in the Indian Ocean. In reaching out to the countries hit by Tsunami, its navy gave ample proof of its ability to play multiple roles. In joining with the ASEAN + Eight Defence Ministers conference at Hanoi in October, 2010
New Delhi gave notice of its expanded interest beyond the Indian Ocean to the Pacific. Through the Regional Cooperation Agreement on Combating Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships in Asia and the Malacca Straits mechanisms, India is now partnering with other countries in the region to improve the safety of navigation in the Southeast Asia. As pointed out in this narrative earlier, India is a targeted country of such elements and is enthusiastic supporter of trans-national cooperation to meet these challenges. It army and air force take part in war exercises with the armies and air force of the most advanced nations in the world and have acquitted themselves with distinction. Its security forces are helping in peace keeping operations on behalf of the UN in many parts of the world for the past almost half a century with distinction. Its police too has been engaged in maintaining law and order in many countries at the request and on behalf of the UN. It is acknowledged that the twenty-first century belongs to Asia.
India is a hot contender for its rightful role in Asia and beyond.

Finland, Japan, Luxembourg, New Zealand and Singapore on an experimental basis w.e.f. 1.1.2010. Tourists from the said countries can also procure their visas from the Missions / Posts in the normal course.

2. The said "Tourist Visa-on-Arrival" with a maximum validity of 30 days with single entry facility shall be granted by the Immigration Officers at Delhi, Mumbai, Chennai and Kolkata airports to start with.

3. The grant of a "Tourist Visa-on-Arrival" shall be regulated as per the guidelines prescribed in the Visa Manual.

New Delhi, January 19, 2010.

Intelligence for the World of Tomorrow

I am honoured to be invited today to deliver this lecture to commemorate an iconic personality who dedicated his life to the service of the Republic and created structures deemed essential for the security of the state and the promotion of its essential interests. In another age or another system of governance, he would be honoured suitably in a pantheon of Immortals. We as a people, however, are diffident in matters relating to some aspects of the functioning of the State and prefer a discreet veil to a public acclaim.
It tantalises imagination but does not add to the compendium of knowledge for succeeding generations.

We remember Rameshwar Nath Kao today for his work and for his engaging personality. In regard to the former, I cannot help recalling a couplet by an Arab poet of the 10th century:

These are our works, these works our souls display
Behold our works when we have passed away.

I personally cannot claim to have known Kao saheb well but do recall an occasion, in early 1980, when I happened to sit next to him on a journey from Bombay to Delhi. He spoke in chaste Urdu, discussed the happening in Iran, and was candid enough to acknowledge that like most other people he had not anticipated the revolutionary changes.

Ramjee Kao created an organisation, negotiated rather than confronted inter-agency contentions and achieved a historic success. He could also be indulgent to a fault. Those who worked closely with him have described Kao as a complex mix of objectivity and subjectivity in matters concerning human relationships. A peer in a position to assess from a distance described him as a fascinating mix of physical and mental elegance, and one who was shy to talk about his accomplishments.

Kao's business in life was intelligence, more specifically external intelligence. Its relevance is in no need of commentary. We can go as far back as Kautilya, or even earlier, to perceive its importance. In fact, the methodological sophistication exhibited in Kautilya's chapters on the secret service and internal security can be read with benefit even today. The same holds good for Sun Tzu's chapter on secret agents. He highlights the relevance of 'foreknowledge' and concludes with the interesting observation that 'there is no place where espionage is not used.' Over centuries the ambit of intelligence, and the craft itself, expanded and enriched itself in response to requirements. Techniques were refined and technology opened up qualitatively different vistas. In the 20th century individual agents on specific assignments gave way to regular agencies. Fascination with the unknown also brought forth a vast amount of literary output that combined fact and fiction, working powerfully on public imagination and even lending respectability to questionable acts. There is merit in C.P. Snow's observation that "the euphoria of secrecy does go to the head."

Intelligence, by definition, is primarily directed at anticipating happenings. Intelligence information, by its very nature, is a glimpse of reality. It is often inconclusive because the methods of acquisition are at times surreptitious. On the other hand, the probabilities of reality that can be established by intelligence information are necessary and sufficient to enable national decision-makers to make reasonable judgments about courses of action. While intelligence information is at times incomplete, good intelligence often has made the difference between victory and defeat, life and death. By the same token, faulty intelligence leads to failures of varying degrees. Over time, reasons for failure are analysed and classified. These range from overestimation to underestimation, lack of communication, unavailability of information, received opinion, mirror-imaging, over-confidence, complacency, failure to connect dots and subordination of intelligence to policy. Case studies on each of these abound; they are a sobering reminder of Karl Popper's observation that "the more we learn about the world, and the deeper our learning, the more conscious, specific and articulate will be our knowledge of what we do not know."

The qualities that go to make a good intelligence operative have been defined in all systems of governance. A medieval classic called it "delicate business involving some unpleasantness" to be "entrusted to the hands and tongues and pens of men who are completely above suspicion and without self-interest, for the weal or woe of the country depends on them." In an interesting passage in his book, the formidable Mr. Allen Dulles observed that "a good intelligence officer must have an understanding of other points of view, other ways of thinking and behaving, even if they are quite foreign to his own." Record shows that this is easier said than done even in normal times. The ability to assess what Trotsky called "changes in mass consciousness in a revolutionary epoch" is rarely acquired by those who collect and analyze intelligence. The reason for this would seem to lie in insufficient comprehension of the nuances of a changing situation, inadequacy of coverage and inability to challenge working assumptions.

Other problems emerge as occupational hazards. Compulsive secrecy tends to become obsessive and impacts the personality of the individual. An intelligence organization, one observer has noted, tends to be a self-sufficient society to which "the outside world becomes more and more remote and its realities less and less important." Rob Johnston, who conducted an ethnographic study of the U.S. intelligence community in 2005, observed that "within the intelligence community, more organizational emphasis is placed on secrecy than on effectiveness." Making a judgment about open source versus secret information, a professional concluded that ninety percent information comes from the former and only ten percent from the latter. "The real intelligence hero", he wrote, 'is Sherlock Holmes, not James Bond.'

The need to strike a balance between secrecy, openness and efficacy on a continuous basis is thus essential. Much greater coordination is required to maximize results in complex situations. The time-honoured formula of "need to know" has to be modified by the requirement of the "need to share". The point was driven home by an eminent leader very recently: "I'll never fault anybody for not having full intelligence, what I will fault is when we have full intelligence that's not shared."

II

Beyond the confines of professional competence, the question of intelligence is intrinsically linked to the nature of challenge perceived by a society. It tends to be based on past experience and on assumptions that seem logical. This is essential but not sufficient and its relevance now is increasingly open to question. The resulting dilemma was aptly expressed a few years back by the historian and jurist Philip Bobbitt:

"Now it happens that we are living in one of those relatively rare periods in which the future is unlikely to be very much like the past. Indeed the three certainties ...about national security - that it is national (not international), that it is public (not private), and that it seeks victory (not stalemate) - these three lessons of the past are all about to be turned upside down by the new age of indeterminancy into which we are plunging."

Bobbitt went on to assert the need to appreciate "the essential ambiguity" of attacks to which societies may be subjected to and as a result of which strategies of retaliation and deterrence may become less useful. In such a world, he added:
"We must move our thinking from threat-based strategies that rely on knowing precisely who our enemy is and where he lives, to vulnerability-based strategies that try to make our infrastructure more slippery, more redundant, more versatile, more difficult to attack."

This conceptual shift, from threat-based to vulnerability-based strategies, would necessitate a comprehensive reorientation of the work of the State and therefore of its intelligence apparatus, its objectives and its work methods. Some of this is already underway in the light of the experience of the first decade of the 21st century; this, however, have been pragmatic and halting since the requisite paradigm shift in thinking is yet to be put in place. The extent and speed with which it is done may well determine success or failure in the foreseeable future.

To develop the argument further, I would like to borrow the definition of the term vulnerability from the meaning given to it in the terminology of computer security. There it is referred to as a weakness which allows an attacker to reduce a system's Information Assurance. This happens at the intersection of three elements: a system susceptibility or flaw, an attacker's access to the flaw, and an attacker's capability to exploit the flaw. In societal terms, this would read as (1) flaw or susceptibility (2) existence of an enemy or a threat (3) ability of the threat to exploit the flaw. Such a framework would necessitate going beyond the traditional approach to a comprehensive assessment of both the susceptibility of the target and the capability of the opposing force.

A complicating factor of increasing relevance is the changing nature of the actors on the global stage. In addition to nation-states, it now includes a mix of non-state entities, benign and malignant. In the absence of effective multilateralism, the relative power of these non-state actors has increased to reflect the fragmentation of interests.

The conclusion is inescapable that in the world of tomorrow, the nature of intelligence required for comprehensive security would be qualitatively different. This would have implications for the methodology of acquiring and analysing it. As a first step, it would necessitate a wider understanding of target areas. Much too often, governmental intelligence efforts have focused on politico-military and economic intelligence. While its relevance... cannot be questioned, its sufficiency can be. The reason is obvious. Most often, the standard check list does not go beyond or behind the superstructure, does not look at societal realities, pays inadequate attention to other people’s ways of thinking and behaving. Intelligence services, as David Kay of the Iraq Survey Group put it, “don’t do a very good job of trying to understand the soft side of societies.”

Nor does the check list takes a good look at the national security implications of non-traditional threats including cyber-attacks, attacks on food and water security, bio-terrorism, pandemics or worst case apocalyptic visions of the future. It has, for instance, been assessed that in a post-pandemic world dangerous patterns of inter-state behaviour may emerge and seriously endanger security of states.

The ambit of intelligence, consequently, has to be comprehensive. It is to be assessed simultaneously on three planes: state-centric, society-centric and environment-centric. The dynamics of these may be different and may require different tools of analysis. The resulting conclusions may be fluid, complex and contradictory and thereby challenge the analytical skills of the operative to bring forth options that can be comprehended and acted upon. Access to these skills, if not available in-house, would necessitate review of security rules that generally govern the functioning of intelligence organisations.

A particularly serious problem relates to the misuse of intelligence. The classic instance in recent times is the process leading to the invasion of Iraq in March 2003. The July 2004 Report of the US Senate Select Committee on Pre-War Intelligence Assessment of Iraq revealed that “group think dynamics” led the intelligence community to interpret ambiguous evidence as conclusive and ignore in the process established mechanisms to challenge assumptions and group think. Closer to the mark was the secret Downing Street Memo of July 23, 2002 in which the head of British intelligence reported after discussions in Washington that “intelligence and facts were being fixed around policy” of regime change. The Iraq Enquiry now in progress in London is shedding more light on this.

These instances can be multiplied. They are not the monopoly of one nation or set of nations. They are revealed earlier in open societies and less so in closed ones. They have led to follies and catastrophes. Failures propel thinking in the direction of correctives and reforms. They focus analysis on the political or economic pressures at work in individual societies. These, together, propel thinking in the direction of accountability and necessitate oversight. Both are considered unwanted and bothersome by intelligence communities for reasons that range from secrecy and operational efficiency to downright contempt for any individual, body or arrangement that endeavours to assess their functioning. The problem nevertheless exists and was posed by an expert in precise terms:

How shall a democracy insure its secret intelligence apparatus becomes neither a vehicle for conspiracy nor a suppressor of the traditional liberties of democratic self-government?

It is hardly necessary to remind an Indian audience that ministerial responsibility to the legislature, and eventually to the electorate, is an essential element of democratic governance to which we are committed by the Constitution. The methodology of this is in place for most aspects of governmental activity; the exceptions to it pertain to the intelligence and security structure of the state.

How then is oversight and accountability ensured?

The traditional answer and prevailing practice, of oversight by the concerned minister and Prime Minister and general accountability of the latter to parliament, was accepted as adequate in an earlier period but is now considered amorphous and does not meet the requirements of good governance in an open society. Concerns in the matter have primarily arisen on two counts: (a) the nature and extent of supervision over intelligence services exercised by the political executive and (b) the possibility and scope of misuse of these services by the political executive. Both concerns emanate from the absence of specific accountability, on these matters, to the legislature.

The problem is not a new one and has been faced by other democratic societies. In late 1970s opinion in the United States reached the conclusion that "oversight of the Intelligence Community is essential because of the critical importance of ensuring the nation's security, as well as checking the potential for abuse of power." As a result, two congressional committees were established in 1976 and 1977. Despite this, the 9/11 Commission Report of 2004 found the congressional oversight of intelligence "dysfunctional" and recommended structural changes. A similar exercise was conducted in the United Kingdom through the Intelligence Services Act 1994 that established the Intelligence and Security Committee of Parliament to examine the expenditure, administration and policy of the intelligence services. Other countries like Canada, Australia, South Africa, Norway, Germany, Argentina, the Netherlands, Poland and Romania have also put in place similar mechanisms of public accountability.

It has been argued that the scope of the mandate of the parliamentary intelligence oversight committee is crucial for its success. Three models of the mandate can be identified: (a) comprehensive to include both policy and operations, as in the U.S. and Germany (b) limited to matters of policy and finance, as in UK (c) focused on human rights and rule of law, as in Norway. The basic purpose of all three is to ensure that government policy in a given field is carried out effectively within the boundaries of the law. For this reason, it is felt that without access to some operational detail, an oversight body can have or give no assurance about the efficacy or the legality of the intelligence services.

Given these models of calibrated openness to ensure oversight and accountability, there is no reason why a democratic system like ours should not have a Standing Committee of Parliament on intelligence that could function at least on the pattern of other Standing Committees. Since internal and external intelligence do not in our system report to the same minister, the possibility of entrusting this work to the Standing Committee on Home Affairs may not meet the requirement.

In the same spirit, and keeping with the practice of other democracies such as the United States of America and the United Kingdom, the concerned agencies should make public their mission statement outlining periodically their strategic intent, vision, mission, core values and their goals. Existing models range from periodic executive review of the mission statement to statutory definition of the function of these agencies. Furthermore, and in step with the globalised information architecture, there is a case for greater openness with regard to the history of intelligence institutions. We need to study initiatives taken elsewhere and determine the extent to which we can proceed in the matter.
The shortcomings of the traditional argument, of leaving intelligence to the oversight of the executive, became evident in the Report of the Kargil Review Committee and its sections on Intelligence in its Findings and Recommendations. It identified flaws, acknowledged the absence of coordination and of "checks and balances", and noted the absence of governmental correctives. The Report referred to relevant systems in major countries but did not include in it their systems of oversight and accountability.

Some correctives were introduced pursuant to the establishment of the National Security System and the report of the Group of Ministers on the reform of the national security system in its entirety. These improvements enhanced internal accountability and coordination but did not go far enough and did not put in place a more open system of public accountability. In the discussions that followed the publication of the Kargil Review Committee Report, and apart from inter-agency spats and the blame game, one informed commentator described it as a "substantive contribution in educating our Parliament and public opinion" aimed at "introducing transparency in this sensitive sector."

Arguments of this nature tend to be condescending. They ignore the time-honoured formula which is the bedrock of democracy: that "instead of looking on discussion as a stumbling block in the way of action, we think it an indispensable preliminary to any wise action." They belittle the capacity of elected representatives to be responsible in matters of national security. Also overlooked is the fact that depending on the fall of the electoral dice, these same representatives are transformed into the political executive entrusted with the responsibility of supervising the work of intelligence agencies.

The contention that openness and public discussion would compromise the secrecy essential for intelligence needs to be examined carefully. Operational secrecy is one aspect of the matter and has to be maintained. The legislature, nevertheless, is the organ of the state that allocates funds and is therefore entitled to insist on financial and performance accountability. The practice of subsuming allocations is not conducive to transparency; it may even encourage misuse. The proposed Standing Committee could fill this void; it could also function as a surrogate for public opinion and thus facilitate wider acceptance of the imperatives of a situation.
Given the nature of emerging threats to human security, a wider sampling of opinion would in fact facilitate better comprehension of the issues and of possible remedies to attain total national power and comprehensive defence.

IV

Let me conclude by saying that in a fast changing world, the challenges facing intelligence practitioners are enormous. Can they adapt their organizations, policies and practices to a world in which there is a qualitative change in the notion of security and in the nature of threats? Both compel a paradigm shift in procedures and objectives; so does the imperative of accountability in terms of democratic norms of good governance. Each of these needs to be factored into the work patterns of the intelligence operative of tomorrow. A timely synthesis would pave the way for success.

I thank Shri K. C. Verma and the Research and Analysis Wing of the Cabinet Secretariat for inviting me today.

003. Address of Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the inauguration of the Conference titled "An International Dialogue between Islam and Oriental Religions", at the Jamia Millia Islamia, New Delhi.

New Delhi, February 20, 2010

Islam and Oriental Religions

Religious discourse is a ponderous subject. I claim no competence in it. Inter-faith dialogue is seemingly simpler but is in reality equally obtuse. Here, too, I claim no expertise. Both frighten away the novice and make the initiated cautious. Despite this, I succumbed to Dr. Zafarul Islam Khan saheb's request to present myself in your midst today. Temptation, said George Bernard Shaw, should not be resisted:

*Rang-e-sharaab se meri neeyat badal ga-ie
Waaiz ki baat reh ga-ie, saaqi ki chal ga-ie*
The organisers of this conclave are to be congratulated for taking up a subject that is in dire need of open discussion in our country. My personal inclination would be to dispute the title. It imposes a geographic definition on a theme that transcends geography. It categorises faiths or belief systems in terms of their region of origin. It severely limits a reading of the history of inter-faith dialogues.

This "Oriental" distinction is significant in view of the results of the survey of the world’s Muslim population done by the Pew Research Centre. It revealed that two-thirds of the world’s 1.57 billion Muslims live in Asia. Islam, indeed, is as much an Oriental religion.

Be that as it may, and taking the subject on face value, I presume the intention is to examine the interaction of Islam with religions that originally emanated from the Indic and Sinic societies. These would principally be Hinduism, Buddhism, Sikhism, Jainism in India, Zoroastrianism in Iran and Confucianism and Taoism in China. One reason for this could be that while there has been an on-going dialogue between Islam, Christianity and Judaism in recent times, the same is not the case with other faiths mentioned above. Another reason, equally valid, is the religious diversity of the Indian society and the consequent need for a dialogue with the religious Other.

It is to be noted that all these faiths emerged in the Eurasian landmass and the vast majority of their adherents are to be found in geographically contiguous regions. Together they constitute over two-thirds of the world’s population. The normal business of living brought them together from time to time in the past and does so today. Such social intercourse may include religious dialogue but is not necessarily synonymous with it. The frequency and intensity of this interaction varied with time and place. Despite the abridgement of distances due to modernisation, urbanisation and globalisation, the disappearance of traditional channels and modes of communication have impacted adversely on this interaction.

Inter-faith dialogue has emerged as a prominent civil society initiative between nations and groups in the post-Cold War world, amidst the "Clash of Civilisations" debate and the raging ethnic and religious conflicts in various parts of the globe. The "The Alliance of Civilizations" initiative under United Nations auspices connects people and organizations devoted to promoting dialogue among political, religious, media and civil society leaders, particularly between Muslim and Western societies. Other such dialogue frameworks include the Cordoba Initiative on improving Muslim-West relations, the Madrid Dialogue Conference that was a Saudi-Spanish effort, the Assisi interfaith work of the late Pope John Paul II and the Common Word initiative of Muslim scholars.

Despite the significant progress achieved, the record shows that inter-faith dialogue has remained confined to the select few and has not percolated to the public at large.

Religion, in a generic sense, covers both the articles of faith or creed and a set of rituals emanating from them. The two are connected but not synonymous. Furthermore, all systems of faith also promulgate certain universal values and principles of human conduct that are similar to each other. On a metaphysical plain thinking about Creator, the Purpose of Creation, and the relationship between the Creator and the Created often tends to run along parallel lines and reaches proximate conclusions. Once that level is reached, commonalities prevail:

Dialogues and discussions between adherents of different faiths have always taken place and are not a modern day novelty. Occasionally, they have been state-induced; more often, they emanated from individual or group initiatives.

This backdrop helps us address a set of questions. To what extent did this contact help the process of mutual understanding, particularly an understanding of each other's religions and systems of belief? What were the points of convergence and divergence? To what extent were these influenced by politics and state craft? What conclusions can be drawn from it? Above all, what needs to be done today?
II

The first, and unquestionably the most important in the Indian context, is the contact between Islam and Hinduism. This was not a single point happening in space and time and response patterns were not uniform. In southern India Islam as a faith came through traders and had little difficulty in being accommodated. The story was different elsewhere in the sub-continent where Islam was often identified with rulers; here too, however, response patterns varied and their homogenisation does no service either to history or to proper understanding.

It is a truism that all social orders are impacted upon by belief systems as well as by politics. In order therefore to comprehend the interaction between the two, it is essential to distinguish between (a) a religious action that is politically relevant or conditioned and (b) a political action that is religiously relevant or conditioned. A good many examples in both categories can be found in history as well as in current practices.

An early example of Muslim perception of Hinduism is to be found in the Central Asian scholar Abu Rehan Alberuni’s account written in the early years of the 11th century. He candidly admitted the dissimilarities between the adherents of the two faiths, highlighted “the deeply rooted hatred” resulting from the invasion of Mahmud of Ghazna, and then went on to dwell on the essence of Hinduism:

“The Hindus believe with regard to God that he is one, eternal, without beginning and end, acting by free will, almighty, all-wise, living, giving life, ruling, preserving: one who in his sovereignty is unique, beyond all likeness and unlikeness, and that he does not resemble anything nor does anything resemble him.”

In a similar vein Amir Khusro in the 14th century said the Hindus are among those good people who believe in God who is omnipotent and omniscient and is “pure Truth and inimitable Reality.”

Another example of this approach was Dara Shikoh's Majma-ul Bahrain wherein he concluded, with regard to Indian monotheism, that “he did not find any difference, except verbal, in the way they sought and comprehended Truth.” (Juz ikhtilaaf-e-lafzi dar daryaaft o shenaakht-e-Haq, tafaawati na deed).
In the 20th century, Muhammad Iqbal went even further in a popular poem, Hindustani bachon ka qaumi geet:

\text{Wahdat ki lai suni thi dunya ne jis makaan se} \\
\text{Mir-e-Arab ko aai thandi hawa jahaan se} \\
\text{Mera watan wahi hai, mera watan wahi hai}

These should have signalled a mutual appreciation of two systems of belief. The Mughal Emperor Akbar and his Prime Minister Abul-Fadl came close to such an appreciation. However, compulsions of statecraft directed the majority of rulers in an opposite direction. As a result, identities were principally sustained through the cultivation of prejudices rather than through spiritual and social values. Politics contributed to it in great measure. Rulers were motivated by political and economic considerations; principles of their faith rarely guided their actions. The result of this approach was twofold: on one plane, the coming together of people in daily life impacted on habits and customs and induced acceptance of each other; on another, they lived together separately.

The chasm was sought to be bridged by the Sufis who, as one scholar put it, took religion from the classes to the masses; another described it as “a walking incarnation of inter religious dialogue”. This achieved degree of success, had its imprint on the Bhakti movement, left some mark on perceptions but did not alter the wider picture. Over time, the negative perceptions congealed.

It is evident, therefore, that despite adequate knowledge and good intentions, misperceptions were allowed to prevail. Their impact on Indian society is in no need of commentary.

The need of the hour is to seek a more effective approach to further mutual understanding.

A beginning has to be made with the first principles of social order. This is a set of values that regulate social intercourse and dispense justice. These values, in a religiously homogenous society, are generally taken from religion or conditioned by religious precepts; in a non-homogenous one, however, the only available and acceptable course is to seek values common to all faiths, is subscribed to by the votaries of all faiths, and is not overtly offensive to any segment. Every society in its political manifestation accepts these common values; it also subscribes to a set of secular values. The historian Edward Gibbon dwelt on this in the context of ancient Rome in its republican period; his words remain relevant:

"The various modes of worship were all considered by the people as equally true; by the philosopher, as equally false; and by the magistrate, as equally useful. And thus tolerance produced not only mutual indulgence, but even religious concord."

Our requirement today is no different. We need to go beyond tolerance; the imperative for religious concord in a framework of equality is evident and compelling. This would be achieved only through a sustained, candid and uninterrupted dialogue without a syndrome of superiority or inferiority and with the objective of locating common values conducive to the maintenance of ethical standards essential for social harmony and furtherance of common objectives. The process of locating these values would bring forth other commonalities. Experience over time of shared public space and common national resources in everyday interaction, and mechanisms that blur boundaries through management of differences, would assist the process.

The quest for common values would not be a substitute for religions. All it would do is to locate a minimum of basic values on which consensus exists or can be developed; these would include faith in the unity of humankind and equality among human beings, contemplation, penance, ascetic living, justice, charity, truthfulness, help to poor and needy, contentment, self respect, tolerance and promotion of social peace and stability.

These values unite, they do not divide; they foster love, not hatred. Because they are embodied in all faiths, they transcend formal boundaries. Together, they would involve a commitment to a culture of peace, respect for life and non-violence, justice and social solidarity, truthfulness and human equality.
Commitment is one aspect of the matter, practice is another. The latter has to go beyond the circle of the select few and percolate to the masses. In the final analysis, we will be judged not by what we say, but by what we do. To do this meaningfully, institutional arrangements would be helpful; these would be means to an end, not the end itself.

Today’s conference is the beginning of a process debating how to foster dialogue between various faiths in East and South Asian societal contexts. It is an affirmation that the process starts through cooperation among religious, cultural, political, educational, and media establishments with a view to consolidate ethical values and encourage progressive social practices.

Prof. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan in his epic study of Indian Philosophy has concluded: “The twin strands which in one shape or another run through all the efforts of the Indian thinkers are loyalty to tradition and devotion to truth...The different views are not looked upon as unrelated adventures of the human mind into the realm of the unknown or a collection of philosophical curiosities. They are regarded as the expression of a single mind, which has built up the great temple, though it is divided into numerous walls and vestibules, passages and pillars.”

Inter-faith dialogue should proceed on this Indian heritage that we have inherited. This heritage has no specific religious, linguistic or cultural label and no attempt should be made to keep it exclusive or make it exclusionary. The inclusiveness of our constitutional ideals derives its inspiration from this heritage and any process that further strengthens it is good for the nation and needs to be encouraged.

The message from this Conference should be loud and clear:

*Aa ghairiyat ke parde ek baar phir utha dain
Bichroan ko phir milaa dain, naqsh-e-duie mitaa dain*

I thank Dr. Zafarul Islam Khan for inviting me to inaugurate this Conference and wish its deliberations all success.
I am delighted to be here today. The JNU has for decades occupied a place of pride amongst institutions of higher learning, has contributed and continues to contribute in good measure to academic pursuits and to the national discourse, and has justified Jawaharlal Nehru's vision for a university.

I also recall with some nostalgia my own short but productive association as a Visiting Professor some years back with the Centre of West Asian and African Studies of the SIS.

Let me begin with a confession. When Professor Mattoo first mentioned the idea of having such a body, I related to him my own experience in 2005 of trying to bring together on one platform all those working on or interested in contemporary West Asia. The effort failed, despite an initial spurt of activity and a helping hand from many well meaning individuals.

This state of affairs, clearly, is unsatisfactory.

My purpose was to caution, not to dissuade. While a miniature has its own artistic value, a wider canvass allows for more space, perhaps more creativity. I am glad he and others associated with the initiative went ahead; today's gathering is evidence enough of their success.

The need for an association of international studies is self evident; its absence, in fact, invokes questions. Could the latter be attributed to a mind-set flaw that propels us as a people to be considerate to the pardesi but indifferent to pardes?

Be that as it may, and whatever be the reasons, the harsh reality is that despite impressive statistical data, the study of international affairs in our country is episodic, emotive and inadequate, propelled much too often by a propensity to conform rather than be driven by the logic of evidence.

Someone once said that nations, like men, have their infancy. This can no longer be true of present-day India. We have had six decades to develop, to mature, and to find our place in the comity of nations. Facts tell the story eloquently: we have a population of 1.2 billion, an economy of over a trillion dollars, a capacity in some measure to project power in immediate or proximate neighbourhood, as well as the wherewithal to become a knowledge society. Together they sustain the claim to have both hard power and soft power and the ability to enhance both in good measure.

Does this lead us to comprehensive power or what the Americans have called smart power—the capacity to combine elements of both in ways that are mutually reinforcing? Its objective, quite obviously, would be to enhance national power, to be an active and effective participant in global decisions, and in the implementation of those decisions. A prerequisite for these is a sound knowledge of the world, of the equilibrium of power, of the dynamics of current or anticipated changes, and of the manner they impact on India and Indian interests. Each is a function of incisive scholarship in which conceptual frameworks and micro-analysis would lend credence to the national effort.

Three aspects of the matter need to be considered. The first relates to the need to conceptualise our own experience as a player on the global stage; the second to the requirement of in-depth study of countries and regions of relevance to us and the acquisition of tools, particularly language skills, required for such studies; the third to the manner in which this experience and knowledge is to be related to our present and future policy options.

How well are we prepared to shoulder this responsibility? How do we fare in comparison to our peers among players on the global stage?

Record would show that our performance on each of these counts is less than adequate; given our intellectual resources, the output should have been better in terms of quality and content.

The need for correctives is thus evident. It is here that a platform like the one being launched today, where concerned scholars and researchers from all parts of the country could exchange ideas and experiences, would be of great relevance. It would be of lasting service to Indian scholarship, and to the conduct of Indian diplomacy, if this Association could identify the deficit areas, bring forth immediate and near term course corrections, and raise public awareness about the imperative necessity of charting a more purposeful course in international studies.
I thank the Vice Chancellor for inviting me on this important occasion. I wish the Association all success and I congratulate the JNU for having taken this important initiative.

Realism in international studies is an unavoidable necessity. Good scholarship should, nevertheless, factor in what Hedley Bull called "the limitations of our own imagination and our own inability to transcend past experience."

Last but not the least, scholarship of international affairs should also be a rewarding pursuit and be able to provide a livelihood for those who opt for it. In a recent interaction with students of JNU, many students who have specialised in various aspects of international studies remarked that they were unable to find suitable and rewarding employment opportunities. The newly established universities, think-tanks and specialised centres of study and the globalising footprint of Indian business and industry should provide new avenues for employing scholars of international studies.

Washington (DC), April 12, 2010

Please See Document No.57.
I am happy to be here today to join you in commemorating the Golden Jubilee of the National Defence College. Through five decades of sustained work the College has earned reputation and respect amongst its peers in the world.

The primary purpose of the establishment of the NDC was to instruct senior service and civilian officers in the 'wider aspects of higher direction and strategy of warfare.' It represented a systemic attempt to synergize the various dimensions of a principal objective of social order, that is, to seek security and develop the capacity to face challenges to it.

The meaning and content of these concepts has evolved with time and human progress. Security today is viewed as human security. It goes beyond state security in the traditional sense and encompasses environmental protection, resource security, sustainable development, basic amenities, good governance, social justice, and human rights. War too now has a meaning that transcends the one given to it in textbooks of strategy or international law. Concepts like interpolarity, hybrid wars and networked adversaries have acquired relevance and are re-shaping strategies and tactics.

The collective impact of these perceptions dilutes the traditional paradigm and induces a comprehensive review of concepts and practices. Such an approach excludes compartmentalized thinking.

The challenge for the strategist therefore is to think beyond the obvious, visualize the improbable perhaps even the impossible. A tsunami, a pandemic, a global financial meltdown, a volcanic eruption of the type witnessed in Iceland earlier this month are indicative of the type of challenges that national planners may have to confront in addition to the traditional ones. Each of these would necessitate inter-agency planning and implementation.
Here lies the relevance of institutions like the NDC where a pooling of knowledge and experience is intended to shed new light on questions of comprehensive security and to bring forth policy options.

Equally important are the "higher direction" aspects of the Course and the question of management and leadership. These are critical to success in any organization. Captain Liddell Hart, a strategic thinker of an earlier era, penned a passage that to me has continuing relevance. Allow me to share it with you; it may, or may not, resonate:

A study of history, past and in the making, seems to suggest that most of mankind's troubles are man-made, arise from the compound effect of decisions taken without knowledge, ambitions uncontrolled by wisdom, and judgments that lack understanding... Men who are helped to authority by their knowledge continually make decisions on questions beyond their knowledge. Ambition to maintain their authority forbids them from admitting the limits of their knowledge, and calling upon the knowledge that is available in other men.

Ladies and Gentlemen

Developments in the last two decades have changed the world and the way we interact with it nationally and globally. The end of the Cold War, the induction of new technologies, the implications of globalization, the debate about the place of state sovereignty in world politics have, together, undermined in varying degrees the foundations of the pre-1990 world.

Alongside, the receding horizons of science have given a new profile to genomics and neuroscience, offering a new definition of human nature and leading, in the view of some competent observers, to the possibility of "promethean powers to repair and even redesign that nature."

It is here that two questions of immense importance confront us: What is the nature of the threat today? How prepared are we, nationally and globally, to cope with the implications of the changes that events and our own actions have unleashed?
An answer to the first question is inextricably linked to our perception of insecurity. Beyond traditionally politico-military threats, any impediment to national development to achieve an inclusive and equitable society would be considered a threat. The dimensions of human security were spelt out by the UNDP many years back. More recently, the India Social Development Report 2005 used six indices to make an India-specific assessment. Correctives to some of these lie in the domestic sphere while some others are of a regional or global nature and can only be addressed through wider cooperation.

A sober assessment would show that the national will and national capacity is being impacted adversely by the sub-national and the supra-national. The state, as Professor Barry Buzan has observed, "is less important in the new security agenda than the old one. It still remains central, but no longer dominates either as the exclusive referent object or as the principle embodiment of threat."

How is this to be achieved? What are the pitfalls?

The challenge, in the first place, is to craft methodologies by which the state can still act effectively within constraints, be they of national law or of multinational covenants. This is possible because increasingly transnational threats to common good are evoking collective responses. Heightened awareness has helped. The trends are clear even if the pace is uneven.

Secondly, while providers of security are primarily state actors, the threats to security of states is increasingly moving beyond the sovereign space to include non-state, sub-state or trans-state actors. The technological changes and quicker communication and transportation have become force multipliers to such non-state actors. The instrumentalities available to State actors to deal with such threats have to be adapted or modified accordingly since traditional deterrence models may not be effective when confronted with cellular organizations and their decision making structures.

Thirdly, it is important to acknowledge conceptually and in empirical terms that security of states and security of societies is not necessarily synonymous since there can be state actors that disregard accepted norms of good governance and thereby induce insecurity. This gives rise to doctrines on intervention. Recourse to it complicates matters and causes untold hardship to affected societies. A societal or political version of nano-medicine that seeks out a diseased tissue and pathogens and spares healthy tissue from collateral damage is yet to emerge.

Finally, and given the experience of the first decade of this century, the "multi-polar" world that is tending to emerge encapsulates within its fluidity opportunities as well as risks and therefore calls for careful navigation.

Friends

"Few countries of the world", according to the Annual Report for 2009-2010 of the Ministry of Defence, "face the range of security concerns that India faces today." Addressing these concerns, internally and externally, remains a matter of the highest priority. Institutions like the National Defence College contribute to the national effort. The NDC deserves appreciation for its structured study of dimensions of national security in our increasingly complex global environment. The officers who have graduated from here have contributed to it in good measure. The College can be justly proud of its Alumni.

I am confident that the next fifty years of the National Defence College would be equally productive. I wish the College, its faculty and staff, and all the officers, success in their endeavour and I thank Lt. Gen. Prakash Menon for inviting me to this function.

007. Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Inauguration Ceremony of Passport Seva Kendra.

Hon'ble Chief Minister of Karnataka, Shri B.S.Yeddyurappaji, Members of Parliament,
Members of Legislative Assembly and Legislative Council,
Mayor of Bengaluru,
Colleagues from the Ministry of External Affairs, Passport Office and Passport Seva Kendras, Government of Karnataka and Tata Consultancy Services, Friends from media,
ladies, gentlemen and friends.

It gives me great pleasure to inaugurate the Passport seva Kendras in Bengaluru, Mangalore and Hubli. Today's inauguration marks a red letter day in the quest of my Ministry to bring about quantum improvement in the quality of Passport services to our citizens. This also marks the culmination of a long and arduous process of changing a 50-year old system in line with today's needs. This change involved a study of the existing processes, study of the procedures being followed in other countries, adapting these best practices to India. This was not an easy task. There were challenges and difficulties which needed to be surmounted before the system could be opened to the public.

There were a few important factors that drove our team of dedicated colleagues in their mission to implement the Passport Seva Project. The process of economic liberalization and reforms envisioned by Shri Rajiv Gandhiji and pursued with dedication and redoubled vigour by the central government since the early 1990s, brought about high growth rates and also integrated our country more closely into the rapidly globalising world. The resultant opportunities and the growing proportion of the youth in our county pushed the demand for passports to unprecedented levels. Between 1958 and 2006, the number of passport applicants increased 133 times and between 2006 and 2010, the number of passport applicants almost doubled.

This increase in the workload meant that citizens faced delays and difficulties in obtaining passports despite extensive simplification of the processes, opening of new passport offices, opening of new channels for submission and some computerization. It became clear to the Ministry that mere growth in capacity would not suffice to meet this challenge. Hence, the Ministry of External Affairs undertook the Passport Seva Project with the aim to dramatically increase the productivity.

The Project involves:

- setting up of seventy seven state of the art Passport Seva Kendras across the country in the first phase,
- a 14x7 call centre operating in 18 languages,
- capturing biometrics of all applicants,
- more counters and increased public dealing hours,
- connectivity of the system to the district police headquarters to ensure faster police verification,
- status updates to the citizens through SMS and email,
- uniform procedures and transparent and time bound completion of all processes.

Live trials have revealed that these measures have indeed led to a quantum improvement in the speed of processing of passport applications.

The Passport Seva Project is a path breaker in more than one way. It involves several innovations. It is the first National Level Project capturing biometrics, and has set up the first Government Call centre run in 18 languages. Other hallmarks of the project include bringing together the best of the government and the private sector for the benefit of the citizens in a security sensitive project; performance linked incentives for Government staff; and retention of strategic control by the government in an IT project.

The passport system is totally dependent on the State Police for the verification of the antecedents of the applicants. While all Police Verification proformas of the applicants will flow to the district police headquarters electronically, the verification will still be done manually. Ministry has enhanced the amount payable to the State Government from Rs 100/- to Rs 150/- per verification. I would like to request the State Government, through the good offices of the Hon'ble Chief Minister and the senior police officials present, to extend their fullest cooperation to the Passport Office to get all police verification done expeditiously for the benefit of the residents of Karnataka State.

We have only taken the first step now and have a long way to go. The journey will involve learning through the challenges that lie ahead. I am confident that with the unstinted cooperation of the staff, the able project leadership team at the helm, and an experienced Service Provider in Tata Consultancy Services, we would be able to quickly move to the next phase of the project.

Such a large project would not have been possible without the support of a multitude of agencies, each playing its part. I would take this opportunity to thanks the Department of Information Technology and the bodies working under its supervision like NIC, STQC and CDAC, Tata Consultancy Services, NISG, the officials of the CPV Division of my Ministry, India Post, Karnataka Police, the Project Management Unit and most importantly, all officers and staff of passport office Bengaluru.

I am pleased to inform this august gathering and the citizens through the media that next month we will launch the project in Chandigarh. After these pilot locations go full steam and are certified by an independent authority, the project will be rolled out across the country. I solicit your cooperation in fulfilling our commitment to bringing world class services to the citizens of this great country.

Thank You.

Jai Hind.

"New Dimensions of Security"

Thank you for asking me to speak to this increasingly important dialogue forum on global and Asian security and defence. Singapore is the dialogue's natural home, as the fulcrum of the most interesting and exciting part of the world for practitioners and theorists of defence, security affairs and international relations.

I was asked to speak on new dimensions of security. To do so at a time of unprecedented and rapid change in the international situation, and when we are in the midst of a transition, requires courage and some foolhardiness. But the attempt must certainly be made. The price is too high of not understanding the changes around us and of failing to adapt to or manage that change.

Today's situation

We live in a time when the global and regional balance of power is shifting rapidly, as a consequence of economic shifts and technological change. And the region of the most rapid change is Asia. Uncertainty in the international system is higher than it has been for a long time. We can debate whether the unipolar moment is past, passing, or poised to return, or whether this is a "non-polar" world. But there is no question that Asia is witnessing the simultaneous rise of several powers, each convinced that its position relative to the others will improve rather than worsen in years to come. And this shift occurs when decades of globalization have integrated economies of the major powers and made them, to a degree unknown in history, dependant on the outside world for their continued prosperity and even regime stability. By one account emerging economies, which accounted for about 27% of global GDP in 1995, will now produce a little more than half of global GDP this year. The geopolitical consequences of the world economic crisis include an acceleration of past trends towards multi-polarity, while strengthening the interdependent nature of the present international economic and political system.
What this means in practice is that to a greater extent than before transnational peace and security can be regarded as global public goods, in the sense that no single state can deliver them on its own. We are used to thinking of global public goods as a clean environment, health, knowledge and property rights. But like other public goods, everyone depends on peace and security, and neither the market nor the wealthiest or strongest person can do without them. As power is increasingly widely distributed in the international system between states, and even to some non-state actors, peace and security have become global public goods in the sense that no state can create order or deliver peace and security on their own.

While the new dimensions of peace and security can increasingly be thought of as global public goods, this is not to say that there is less incentive for competition among states for power, influence, and resources, with the goal of determining or affecting the behaviour of other state and non-state actors. The nation-state is still the basic unit of international security. Sovereignty and territorial integrity remain the foundation of the international system, as do traditional security concerns and zero-sum competition between nation states. But such competition continues, with its attendant risks, within boundary conditions imposed by the globalised and interdependent nature of our security. This is more than just saying that in a globalised world both security challenges and their answers are global. This is to argue that security has acquired new transnational dimensions because of recent geopolitical, technological and economic developments, and that these have to be dealt with differently from traditional security concerns.

In this light, let us look at some of the new transnational dimensions of security in a little more detail. A listing of the new dimensions of security today would include:

- Thwarting the spread of weapons of mass destruction: The world may now be at a "proliferation tipping point" in terms of both nuclear weapons and the militarisation of space. For India, clandestine proliferation networks in our neighbourhood have already adversely affected our security. The risk of nuclear weapons or of other weapons of mass destruction falling into extremist or terrorist hands is real and must be factored into our thinking. It is clear that a new non-proliferation paradigm is necessary to deal with issues of nuclear security caused by the rise of non-state actors and their links to formal or organized structures in weak states. Today, India is the only nuclear weapon state to announce an unequivocal no-first-use commitment, and to declare that a world without nuclear weapons will enhance our security.

- Fighting terrorism: anarchy on land and sea has been empowered by new technologies, as piracy and cross-border terrorist attacks have shown. The Indian experience of cross-border terrorism shows the complexity of what we are dealing with. The 26/11 attacks on India were planned and organised in one country, where the attackers were trained, the logistics and communications support chain extended over at least seven countries, and the attack was carried out in our country. Terrorist groups are networked to an unprecedented extent and it is no longer possible to segment them by origin or ideology or targets. Located as we are in India beside the epicentre of global terrorism, we are acutely aware of the value of collaborative counter-terrorism efforts and of the need for more to be done.

- Energy security and stability: The politics of energy, which is linked to climate change as well, will be a key to global stability. Limited physical availability of hydrocarbon resources and the high energy import dependence of several major powers is a recipe for resource nationalism and competition. Technological solutions available today have not prevented this competition for hydrocarbon fuels from becoming sharper.

- Slowing climate change: Fortunately, Copenhagen has brought some sanity into the overblown rhetoric about climate change as a global challenge to the very existence of humanity requiring us to transcend inter-state rivalries and narrowly defined economic and trade interests. As each group of states asserted their interests with tenacity in Copenhagen, it became clear that there is no alternative to the heavy lifting of international negotiations within the UN process to arrive at an equitable outcome that takes into account the differing interests of the states concerned.
Some geopolitical and security effects of climate change are becoming apparent, changing the environments in which we will operate, (perhaps even opening up the Arctic passage, for instance), and in adverse impacts on human security. Migration, water stress and food shortages are likely consequences and will most affect the poor and weak and those least capable of mitigating or adapting to climate change. National plans like India’s National Missions provide a robust response within the limits of one state. But there is no escaping the need for a matching and equitable international response, based on the UNFCCC. For countries like ours many proposed international actions sounds like a cap on development or an attempt to perpetuate an unsatisfactory distribution of the limited carbon space. Equity and a cooperative mindset are essential if we are to find cooperative solutions that this problem requires. But to treat climate change as a security issue at this stage, especially after the Copenhagen experience, would be to add an unnecessary layer of complexity to an already difficult task.

Maritime security: Apart from the 90% of global commerce in goods and 65% of world oil supplies that are carried by sea, today 95% of internet traffic is carried by undersea cables. Over a hundred thousand ships pass through the sea lanes near India each year. We in India had a stark reminder of threats from the sea when Mumbai was attacked by terrorists from Karachi on 26/11/08. Sitting in Singapore beside the Straits of Malacca we need no reminding of the importance of the oceans. I mention these facts because they remind us of the common interest of littoral and other major powers in keeping these sea lanes open and free. And yet most of the debate among strategists on this issue is phrased solely in adversarial terms, as a zero sum game.

Efforts to keep vital sea lanes open from Suez and Hormuz to the US west coast are presumably in the common interest of all the littoral and user states of these oceans. India has begun a process of consultation and cooperation among littoral navies in the Indian Ocean Naval Symposium. To be truly effective, this effort needs to encompass the entire Indian-Pacific oceanic domain. India would be happy to work with the other littoral states and naval powers in this domain to see how we can address the threats at sea from terrorists, pirates, proliferators and organized crime. The experience of working together against such transnational threats may encourage the navies concerned to higher transparency and build confidence among them. Such mutual confidence is essential today, when there is such a rapid accretion of strength of several regional navies.

- Managing the security of the global commons: outer space, the oceans, cyber space, and global transport and communication networks. Today there is hardly any aspect of our lives that is not touched by outer space or by IT. As this intensifies, we have seen a steady technological shift in favour of the offense over the defence in both domains. There are major issues regarding the placement of weapons in space and of weapons designed to attack space based assets. Military uses of space based assets for intelligence, reconnaissance and communication are a reality. We are at the point where rules of the road are required as soon as possible.

- Cyber security is also a problem that recognizes no boundaries or rules today, at a time when ICTs are critical enablers in communication, development, infrastructure, security and defence. Cyber security may actually be the exception to the rule that these new dimensions of security require collective international effort. Cyber attacks are global, occur at the speed of light and skip the battlefield. Conventional deterrence or suasion is therefore relatively ineffective in this battle-space, and there is a premium on offence at these high rates of operational manoeuvre. Cyber security threats have reached the stage of undermining public confidence and of sowing distrust among nations. And yet, dealing with this challenge is largely left to effort by individual nations. If there are arms control approaches available to deal with these threats, they are yet to even be widely discussed in the international community.

In effect we are speaking here of the security of the global commons, "that which no one state may own or control and which is central to life". The very definition of the global commons has been expanded by technology to include outer space and cyber space in what are natural assets beyond national jurisdictions. Cyber security is a good example of national public goods, (and “bads”), going global.

Only collective effort can meet such common challenges. They require new global partnerships involving those powers with the capacity to address the issues. As new powers emerge they are becoming stakeholders in the global system. In each of the areas mentioned above, new paradigms are necessary to cope with the changes wrought by technology and shifts in the balance of power. And not one of them can be addressed satisfactorily without a new paradigm. The world order defined by WWII or Cold War victors no longer suffices.

In this interdependent world of intertwined security, great powers will be defined by their use of power and not just by its accumulation. If the essence of power is to affect the behaviour of your adversaries, today the nature of security makes a degree of cooperation with potential adversaries necessary. Of course, there is space within interdependence for the great rivalries that characterize great transitions; but their form and nature have changed in time, space and nature, and in their effect.

The Asian dimension

We sometimes bemoan the fact that rapid shifts in the balance of power among nation-states in Asia are unmitigated by institutions or collective arrangements for security. And yet that may actually turn out to be to our advantage. While sclerotic Cold War institutions in other regions seek new roles for themselves, Asia is free to build the open, inclusive, plural and flexible architecture required to deal with these new transnational dimensions of security. Whether Asian states will be able to build such a security architecture will be a real test of our wisdom and skill. Asia has shown an ability to create new models of rapid economic growth, and of pragmatic coexistence despite political divergence and pluralism.

The question is whether we can also show such innovation in dealing with the new dimensions of security as well. A promising beginning has been made in the proposed ASEAN Defence Ministers’ Meeting+8 that is planned for later this year. ASEAN must remain the bedrock on which this region deals with these issues. India looks forward to working with Singapore and other partners in ASEAN on traditional and new dimensions of security in the broader region which affect the world.

The Way Forward

It is probably easier to say what we should avoid in the way forward as we try to deal with these new dimensions of security.

We must avoid the tragedy of the commons, where multiple individuals, acting independently and solely and rationally consulting their own self interest, will ultimately deplete a shared limited resource even when it is clear that it is not in anyone's long-term interest for this to happen.

The existing organs of power in the international system should be rebuilt to reflect today's realities. For international peace and security this would require restructuring and expanding the UN Security Council.

We also need to build new structures that can cope with new dimensions of security such as the power of non-state actors. We need to build structures that are inclusive and flexible enough to avoid the inadequacies of existing international organizations. Logically speaking, these structures would counter the nature of the threats that we face and be networked. As we have shown in responding to piracy off the Horn of Africa, improvisation is often more successful than rigid approaches might have been. The security situation around the Straits of Malacca offers a striking example of the success that results from cooperative effort by like-minded countries.

And, most important, we need to build the habits and experience of cooperation that will enable us to deal with the unpredictable challenges that will certainly confront us. Our navies have made a beginning, showing us the way.

We in Asia are still learning as we go. India will participate actively and constructively in this process.
Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao with Kalyani Shankar for the All India Radio.

New Delhi, August 12, 2010.

Interviewer (Shrimati Kalyani Shankar): Welcome to this programme, Mrs. Nirupama Rao. Parliament is rocked with the issue of Commonwealth Games controversy. Are you worried about the image of India abroad in view of the controversy regarding the Commonwealth Games and what kind of damage control exercise could be undertaken?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Let me say as far as the Commonwealth Games are concerned, the Games are a matter of national pride and prestige. Naturally, we all look forward to hosting them successfully. As far as the participating countries and delegations are concerned, the Government has kept them fully briefed about all the issues, about infrastructure and security to assure them that preparations are on track and we are committed to holding a very successful Commonwealth Games.

Interviewer: The problem now is that we are not ready. That is what the controversy is all about. But are you confident that we will be somehow able to manage?

Foreign Secretary: When the hon'ble Minister of Youth Affairs and Sports spoke in the Lok Sabha yesterday and he briefed the hon'ble Members about the state of preparedness for the Games, he indicated that almost all the stadia, other sports venues, and the Games Village facilities are ready. So, I think the nation has been kept fully in the picture about the fact that the preparations are going ahead and that we are committed, as I mentioned at the outset, to holding a very successful Commonwealth Games.

Interviewer: Have you received any concerned queries about preparations?

Foreign Secretary: No, let me say that we, as I said earlier, maintain a very close and very regular communication with all the participating countries. Our Missions abroad are publicizing the fact of the Games through the local media in those countries. Our Missions are collaborating with the local India Tourism Offices wherever they are. And a special effort is being made also to publicize these games through events that we will hold in some Commonwealth countries during the celebration of our Independence Day.

Interviewer: Mrs. Rao, you had been part of the delegation which went to Pakistan last month along with EAM for Pakistan and Indian Foreign Ministers’ talks which are seen or perceived as a failure. Have you received any communication from Pakistan? When will the Pakistan Foreign Minister Qureshi visit India resuming the talks again?

Foreign Secretary: I would by no means describe our External Affairs Minister's visit to Islamabad in July as a failure because it was not a failure. Our relations with Pakistan are complex. As you know, you have to be aware of the last sixty years in our ties. Each visit or meeting that we undertake is part of a long process which no one believes is going to be easy. What this visit did was to help us promote understanding of each other's point of view on issues of mutual concern. Now, despite the fact that there were differences on a few issues and I do not deny that given the complexity of this relationship, one must be aware of the fact that differences cannot be bridged in one meeting alone. But we had a good understanding on many other issues, and Foreign Minister Qureshi has accepted EAM Shri S.M. Krishna's invitation to visit India at a mutually convenient date which we will decide through diplomatic channels. Subsequent to the meeting also, both sides, and we have heard this from Pakistan also, that they believe that dialogue is the most effective means to tackle outstanding issues and, as I have said on many occasions previously, any interruption in the dialogue or an abandonment of dialogue does not serve the interest of either country.

Interviewer: So, what would be the next meeting's agenda?

Foreign Secretary: I will not prejudge agendas or outcomes as far as the next round of talks with Pakistan is concerned. Let me say there is an invitation, a standing invitation from our Minister of External Affairs to Foreign Minister Qureshi of Pakistan to visit India to continue this process of dialogue.
Interviewer: About 26/11 we have been talking to them. We have been telling them they should do something about punishing the culprit. But after your visit and till now, is there any forward movement in that?

Foreign Secretary: Trial of the Mumbai suspects who are in the custody of Pakistan is still to be completed, and that process has been very slow, and we have remarked on the glacial pace of that process previously also. So, what I am telling you is nothing new. We have time and again emphasized to Pakistan that it is our expectation, it is our hope, and it is our desire that this process moves forward because Pakistan has also acknowledged that the masterminds and the handlers involved in the Mumbai terror attacks came from Pakistan. Therefore, there is action to be undertaken by Pakistan to bring those culprits to justice. And public opinion in India is naturally very concerned about it. The degree of alienation that our people in India feel about Pakistan because of the fact of terrorism that has been promoted and encouraged from that country's soil directed against India, is very real and palpable, and I think Pakistan should understand the force of Indian public opinion on this issue.

Interviewer: How much of WikiLeaks information was known to India and what use will it be to continue the dialogue with Pakistan while Pakistan-sponsored terrorism continues?

Foreign Secretary: The role of official agencies from Pakistan in encouraging terrorism against India is something that we have been speaking of and drawing attention to for a long time now. It is not just that the WikiLeaks came up with that revelation. It has been known to us for a long time. And Pakistan has from time to time made the commitment to us that it will not permit the pursuit and encouragement of terrorism from territory under its control or, from Pakistani territory. So, I think what we have done over the last few occasions when we have had the opportunity to raise these issues with Pakistan is to make it very clear to them that the atmosphere for the pursuit of our dialogue with that country can never be really conducive until and unless they stop the encouragement of terrorism against India. So, this dialogue that we have had with Pakistan has served the purpose of putting across our deepest concerns to Pakistan on this issue. I think it is the best option available to us.

Interviewer: Do you expect a change in the attitude of the United States towards Pakistan after the WikiLeaks leak, now that there is some hard evidence against Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: We have had a very useful and productive dialogue and a very frank dialogue with the United States about our concerns on terrorism emanating from Pakistan. I think the United States is fully aware of the concerns that we have in this regard, and our cooperation and our dialogue with the United States on counterterrorism issues has been, as I said, very productive and useful. Now there is of course the context of the war against terrorism that the United States is engaged in in Afghanistan and the role that they see for Pakistan in this context. But let me say that a lot of people speak of the dependence that countries have on Pakistan in this regard. I think more and more the world community is coming to understand the nature of terrorism emanating from Pakistan, the need for Pakistan not to adopt a selective approach when it comes to dealing with terrorist groups on its territory. The British Prime Minister Mr. David Cameron referred to it very very eloquently during his recent visit here.

Interviewer: Are you worried about the increasing dependence of the US on Pakistan for getting out of Afghanistan? Where does that leave India?

Foreign Secretary: I do not believe that our development partnership with Afghanistan is a zero sum game. Afghanistan, as I have said earlier also, is a very fiercely independent country. And the kind of takeaway we have had from meetings with the Afghan leadership in the recent past is that they are very zealous about guarding their independence, and in ensuring that the progress that has been made in Afghanistan over the last nine years is not eroded in any manner. This is progress in the field of development, in the field of gender issues, women particularly, that is an issue that concerns all of us. For India, Afghanistan is a neighbor. So, let me say that being friends as we are with Afghanistan, and this is a very deep friendship, we are confident about our profile in Afghanistan and the fact that our interests there are well recognized by the Afghan Government and by the international community.

Interviewer: Mrs. Rao, when will the US President Obama visit India? Are the dates finalized? What would be the highlight of his visit?

Foreign Secretary: When our Prime Minister visited the United States in November last year on a state visit at the invitation of President Barack Obama, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh invited US President Obama to visit India. President Obama has accepted this invitation and the visit is to take place in early November 2010. This will be the first visit of President Obama after he became President of the United States. So, it is a very important visit and I am sure it will be a very definitive visit in the context of the growing strategic global partnership between India and the United States. During this visit we will discuss not only bilateral issues but regional and global issues of mutual interest. The programme and other details for this visit are being decided in consultation with the Government of the United States. There has been a steady improvement of our relations with the US over the last decade and we intend to move ahead on a broad range of issues. We have constantly heard from our friends in the United States that our rise, our progress, our development is good for the world, is good for the United States; and that given India's orientation towards peace and stability in world affairs, and our democracy, our rule of law, that the United States and India share a balance of values. So, that is the underpinning for this relationship. So, I think there is potential in this relationship beyond our present imagination. The scope is truly immense for the relationship between two of the world's largest democracies who share similar values.

Interviewer: How long will the visit be?

Foreign Secretary: As I said, the programme and other details are being decided at this moment.

Interviewer: Mrs. Rao, the Nuclear Liability Bill is all ready and the Government wants the Bill to be passed this Session. What would be the next step?
Foreign Secretary: The passage of the Bill, as in when it is completed, would enable the expansion of the generation of nuclear energy in our country. This would include cooperation with a number of countries. Basically what we have felt is that we should have the domestic legislation that conforms to international standards to deal with civil liability in the case of any future nuclear incidents. That is what Government is doing and that is why we have proposed the Civil Liability for Nuclear Damages Bill, 2010, which was placed before Parliament in May and is currently under consideration of the Parliamentary Standing Committee concerned.

Interviewer: Our National Security Advisor Mr. Shivshankar Menon visited China sometime ago. When will the next round of border talks take place?

Foreign Secretary: We do not have dates on the next meeting of the Special Representatives to discuss the boundary question between India and China. But as you know, we have had thirteen rounds of these talks so far. The last round took place in August 2009. We have achieved some concrete results in this process, especially in 2005 when our countries signed the Agreement on Political Parameters and Guiding Principles for the settlement of the India-China boundary question. Our National Security Advisor Mr. Shivshankar Menon has been appointed by our Prime Minister as the Special Representative for India at these talks. We are confident that the next round of the Special Representatives’ talks will be held soon.

Interviewer: There are some concerns about China not issuing visas to Kashmiris. China on its part has also expressed concerns about the Chinese labour not getting visas and the businessmen not getting visas. Are these concerns addressed now?

Foreign Secretary: As you are aware, the nature of our interaction with China has grown enormously over the past few years; and in particular economic exchanges between India and China have grown exponentially. As far as the issue of visas which you mentioned for Kashmiris, for citizens of India who are domiciled or belong to the State of Jammu and Kashmir is concerned, you know our point of view has been put across very clearly to the Chinese that we do not accept this policy of stapled visas to our citizens who belong to Jammu and Kashmir. The Chinese Government has been informed very clearly that we reject that policy. As far as the visa regimes for both India and China are concerned, these are being constantly adjusted to meet the growing requirements of travel between our two countries because these regimes have to take into account the tremendous growth in our economic exchanges. But today I believe there are no significant problems apart from the issue that I mentioned earlier about the stapled visas.

Interviewer: What about the Iran pipeline? How do we balance our relationship with Iran along the United States?

Foreign Secretary: You are talking about the Iran-Pakistan-India pipeline. Our relations with the United States and our relations with Iran are independent of each other and you should not hyphenate them. As far as the pipeline is concerned, India is very interested in cooperation with Iran including in the oil and gas sector. To put that in context, especially in terms of the import of crude which we require for the growing economy, Iran is an important supplier. Issues of pricing, transit fee, transportation tariff, point of delivery, project structure, and security would apply when it comes to the pipeline. This is a multilateral project. It would naturally involve protracted discussions as all aspects have to be carefully examined and deliberated upon to the satisfaction of the participating countries. So, we are going to discuss this further - the bilateral aspect of this, the India-Iran cooperation in this regard - when we meet within the Joint Working Group on Oil and Gas that we have with Iran, and that is likely to be convened later this year.

Interviewer: Thank you very much for being with us, Mrs. Rao.

011. Inauguration of the 3rd Indian Heads of Mission conference.

New Delhi, August 27, 2010.

The third Conference of Indian Heads of Missions (HOMs) commenced today at Vigyan Bhawan in New Delhi.

Welcoming the 119 High Commissioners and Ambassadors from across the world, Foreign Secretary Smt Nirupama Rao, remarked that they represented a transforming and transformational India. The country's economy was resilient enough to register one of the highest economic growth rates in the world even in the midst of the global financial crisis. The fact that a majority of our population was under 25 years of age gave us an empowering advantage.

India had always attached high priority to the development of close ties with the countries in its neighbourhood, based on the fundamental principles of equality and mutual respect and mutual sensitivity to each other's concerns. It was our responsibility to meet the challenges of managing a complicated and sensitive relationship with our neighbours in a mature and balanced manner.

Foreign Secretary also noted that India was today a member of an increasing number of multilateral, regional and bilateral arrangements, including NAM, G-77 and G-15 on the one hand and recent initiatives like G-20, G-4, BRIC, IBSA, BASIC and EAS on the other. It is this quantum jump in the levels of our global engagement that has given us our greatest opportunities while at the same time presenting to us some significant challenges.

The intersection of the domestic environment for national development and the state of health of our neighbourhood relationships had never been as sharply defined as it was today. How do we align our foreign policy objectives with the country's fundamental security and developmental priorities? How do we combine a firm commitment to our core national values with dynamic, flexible, adaptation to changes in the international environment? How do we ensure that our periphery remains peaceful and free from tension so that our economy can grow even more rapidly? How do we deal with the threats of transnational terrorism especially that which emanates in our close neighbourhood? How can the Ministry of External Affairs best adjust to the exponential increase in demands on its expertise, experience, time and resources? The debate on the nuclear liability bill, the targets set for electricity generation from nuclear energy, and the steady expansion of dialogue with key partners on cooperation in nuclear energy had shown how foreign policy and domestic priorities were exceptionally inter-twined, indicating that our work was increasingly interconnected with that of other departments of government.

India's growing international profile, said Foreign Secretary Rao, had brought new responsibilities and challenges in the transaction of diplomacy and an organisational complexity, that was redefining the traditional role of a Head of Mission.

The External Affairs Minister Shri S M Krishna, formally flagged off the 3rd Conference of the Indian HOMs. He commended Indian diplomats for functioning abroad in alien, often difficult and sometimes harsh and adverse conditions, in volatile and even violent zones, with professionalism and commitment.

EAM underlined that aspirations of aaam admi - the common man, should remain at the core of our foreign policy oriented to providing an external enabling environment for the country's transformation through inclusive economic growth.

Salient Excerpts from EAM's address

"External prerequisites for sustained high economic growth over medium to long term include more foreign investment, and meeting our growing energy needs. The agreements that India has concluded in the recent past in the field of civil nuclear energy, and the Nuclear Liability Bill represent fruits of such efforts. We are rapidly evolving economic content of our growing partnerships, including those with industrialized nations such as the US, the UK, France, Russia and Germany. Of particular relevance in this regard will be our Look East policy which is aimed at further developing our multi-faceted relations with the South East Asia, the East Asia and the Pacific."
‘Security’ represents a vital cluster of our priority. Our interests lie in a peaceful and prosperous neighbourhood. We believe that dialogue can address all outstanding issues, and have seen from 2004-’07 the potential of such a process with Pakistan. Given the complexities of our relationship with Pakistan, we have advocated a step-by-step, graduated approach. We have conveyed to Pakistan that credible and effective action by Pakistan on our terrorism-related concerns, including the investigations and trial in Mumbai terror attack, would be the most important confidence building measure.

In the context of our pursuit of prosperity and cooperation in the neighbourhood, I cannot overemphasise that India's commitment to discharging its responsibilities in SAARC in an asymmetrical and non-reciprocal manner has revitalized SAARC in recent years.

I am also happy to mention two important initiatives which we have vigorously pursued. Coincidentally, both of these crossed important milestones yesterday: the South Asian University began its first academic session and the Parliament passed the Nalanda University Bill.

Over the years, India’s development cooperation has emerged as an important component of our foreign policy. Our partners appreciate that India's contributions to their wellbeing emanate not from a state of affluence or surpluses. Our small development projects represent an innovation both in terms of targeting and delivery model. We are successfully replicating this approach in several countries, even as international development institutions have commended this model. India's projects in Africa, such as the prestigious Rs.540-crore Pan-African e-Network project, help achieve e-connectivity in the important fields of tele-education and tele-medicine and hold enormous promise.

Indian diaspora is an important aspect of the responsibility of our Missions. Estimates suggest that India will be the largest contributor to the world's workforce -around 136 million people - over the next ten years. Indian investments and business are today creating or protecting a significant number of jobs in Europe and America.

There are other people-centred services, which carry enormous weightage in terms of public perception of our Ministry. Primary among them are passport and Haj. We issue over 50 lakh passports annually. The Mission Mode Project to establish 77 Passport Seva Kendras was launched with the objective of improving the delivery of passport to applicants. Preparations for Haj this year are now progressing well. The Ministry will continue to remain active in ensuring that about 1.5 lakh Haj pilgrims from India are able to perform their sacred duty in the best possible manner”.

Home Minister, Shri P. Chidambaram shared his thoughts on India’s security environment and challenges with the HOMs. He also spoke about the multi-pronged strategy adopted by the Ministry to counter the challenges.

MOS for External Affairs, Smt Preneet Kaur and National Security Advisor Shri Shivshankar Menon also addressed the HOMs and responded to a number of questions.

In the evening, CII organized an interactive session for the visiting diplomats where they had a useful exchange of views with Indian industrialists.

012. Address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Heads of Indian Missions.

New Delhi, August 27, 2010.

In his inaugural address to the Heads of Missions today at Vigyan Bhawan, the Prime Minister observed that foreign policy was basically aimed at pursuing India’s national interests. Indian diplomats were facilitating the creation of an international environment that was conducive to India’s progress, development and attainment of its external goals.

Outlining his vision of India, the Prime Minister said that the foremost national goal was to remove poverty and accelerate the pace of economic development. We were building modern infrastructure which would stand up to the challenge of a fast moving economy. The nation was also focusing on human resource development, as it was the quality of human resources that determined the standing of a country in the comity of nations. By the same token, Science and technology was a major factor of power and wealth of a nation. India had to have the ability to master technology, he emphasized.

The Prime Minister remarked that India was among the fastest growing economies in the world, which despite the global melt down in 2008-09, had returned to a growth path of 8.5%. Energy availability was critical to attaining a 9-10% growth rate, as 1% growth needed 0.8% increase in energy availability. Foreign policy had a very important role in securing India’s energy needs.

Reflecting on the international environment PM noted that we were living today in an increasingly inter-dependent world. India needed an open trading system and wanted to emerge as a major trading nation in the world. G20 had become a key forum for discussing and shaping international economic and financial policies. Foreign policy had also to pay more attention to functioning of G20.

India sought a peaceful and tranquil international environment, as well as, very good relations with all countries, especially with our neighbours and major powers. Foreign policy should also be oriented towards East and South East Asia which were poised for a sustained growth rate in the 21st century. He remarked that India, by and large had good relations with her neighbours. We were engaging them without looking at reciprocity, in our own enlightened interest.
013. Excerpts from the address of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Combined Commanders’ Conference.

New Delhi, September 13, 2010.

The Nation is proud of the selfless devotion to duty displayed by the officers and men and women in uniform and on behalf of the Nation, I convey our gratitude to each and everyone of you and your families.

The Indian Armed Forces are a hallmark of professionalism and national integration. Your contributions during times of natural disasters across the country, and most recently in Leh, have been invaluable. They have saved precious lives and brought relief and hope to the worst affected. In Jammu and Kashmir and the North-East you have stood shoulder-to-shoulder with civil authority to protect the Nation's vital interests.

Our Armed Forces deserve the best and I wish to assure you that the Government will make every effort to ensure this. No country can make progress without ensuring its security and territorial integrity.

As our economy grows and our technological capabilities expand we must set higher standards for the modernisation of our defence forces. It is not enough for us to keep pace with change. When it comes to defence capability, we must be ahead of the technology curve. Defence modernisation, however, is a complex task. If it is to be effective it must involve the full chain starting with updating our war fighting doctrines to meet new threats to our security, preparation of appropriate staff quality requirements and creating a broad-based production and delivery infrastructure on the ground.

The other integral part of our defence preparedness is border infrastructure. This involves not just our land borders but also ensuring appropriate coastal security. Several measures have been taken and are underway but it is important that all Ministries and Departments work in close coordination to ensure timely implementation of existing plans. It is necessary to approach this task with a sense of urgency.

In the ultimate analysis the strength of a nation flows from the strength of its institutions, its values and its economic competitiveness. If India is looked upon today with respect and seen as a force for the future it is because of the stable and orderly fashion in which we are transforming the lives of our people. Transformation on such a scale, within the framework of a democratic and pluralistic society, has not been seen in the world before.
If we succeed, our example will have repercussions for the new global order.

We have always prided ourselves on preserving our strategic autonomy, and this is an article of faith for us. India is too large a country to be boxed into any alliance or regional or sub-regional arrangements, whether trade, economic or political. If we are to sustain a growth rate of 9 to 10 percent in the foreseeable future, we require foreign capital inflow, both portfolio and direct investment, the best of modern technology and access to markets of the advanced economies. We have to modernise our infrastructure. For all this, we need to maintain healthy relations with all major powers.

In global terms, we are witnessing a shift of economic and political power to Asia. The Asia-Pacific region, including South East Asia, needs much more attention by us, and this must seep into our defence and foreign policy planning as never before. There is a palpable desire on the part of the countries of this region to enhance cooperation with us which we must reciprocate.

Some of our toughest challenges lie in our immediate neighbourhood. The fact is that we cannot realise our growth ambitions unless we ensure peace and stability in South Asia.

The countries of the Gulf, West Asia and Central Asia are our natural partners. We have tangible interests in these regions, among which energy security is one of the most important. We have to ensure adequate availability of commercial energy to support our growth targets. This requires not only diversification of the sources of our energy imports but also the widening of our overall energy mix. It is in this context that we need to operationalise our nuclear energy option, which holds great promise and is a necessity.

The unrest in the State of Jammu & Kashmir over the last few weeks is a matter of concern. The youth of Kashmir are our citizens and their grievances have to be addressed. We have to ensure better delivery of services and generate avenues for economic advancement for the people of that State. We are willing to talk to every person or group which abjures violence, within the framework of our Constitution.

In the North-East, the situation in general is better today than it was in the recent past, but some areas of concern still remain.

Naxalism is a serious challenge to our internal security. We will do all that is necessary to protect each and every citizen of our country, and deal firmly with those who resort to violence. This is a collective task involving the Centre and the States. At the same time we have to accelerate our development efforts in the naxal affected areas and make our administrative machinery more sensitive and responsive to local concerns.

The Indian economy has weathered the global economic crisis of 2008 better than most of the large economies of the world. We have the advantage of a continental sized economy and a large internal market, but our challenge will be to ensure that our growth is balanced across all regions and reaches all sections of our society. Given our young demographic profile, we will also have to ensure access to good quality education and health services to all. We have put in place a National Skill Development Mission to empower our youth which will yield positive results.

The Armed Forces have and must continue to serve as a shining example for all citizens of India. As leaders of a modern military, each of you has an important role to play in the transformation of the services. The country expects much from you and looks to you for your continued leadership. The country will consistently accord priority to issues related to equipment, training and welfare of our soldiers and ex-servicemen. We will do all that is necessary to ensure that the armed forces attract the best talent in the country. I would also like you to know that the sacrifices of the men and women of the Armed Forces will never go in vain.

I wish to once again place on record my deepest gratitude and appreciation for your professionalism and competence. I wish you the very best in the service of the Nation and greater glory to the mighty Indian Armed Forces.
014. Address by Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao at South Asia Initiative, Harvard University on "India's Global Role".

Boston, September 20, 2010.

Mr. Michael D Smith, Dean of Faculty of Arts and Sciences
Dr Sugata Bose,
Distinguished Guests,

It is indeed an honour and a privilege for me to be here today. Coming back to Harvard - and all the wonderful memories it brings back of the year I spent in 1992-93 as Fellow at the Center for International Affairs or the Weather-head Center as it is now called, and an earlier stint when my husband was Edward Mason Fellow at the John F. Kennedy School of Government in 1983-1984 - is truly a pleasure and a privilege. When I came to America for the first time, it was to Harvard, and Harvard became my introduction to America. I shall always treasure that connection.

The annual Harish C. Mahindra memorial lecture series has become one of the most talked-about events in Harvard promoting exchanges with South Asia specialists and public figures from South Asia as also in understanding the challenges facing the region. Harish Mahindra has been justifiably compared to someone like a prince of Florence, truly a Renaissance figure, a man who personified the true spirit of intellectual and entrepreneurial endeavour and who knew the beauty of life. In this context, the topic of this evening's discussion, "India's Global Role", has a resonance and topicality that will, I am sure, prove to be a catalyst for an even greater involvement between Harvard and India.

Of late, India's global role has been mentioned frequently against the backdrop of what we would call a shift of economic power to Asia. Today, it is almost de rigeur to speak of the dynamic Indian growth story despite the ravages of the global economic crisis. But, to put our arms around the Indian experience, you have to beyond just the factor of fast economic growth. And that would lead us onto the quest of India's attributes and its enduring stability as a modern and democratic nation state.

We are celebrating the sixtieth anniversary of the adoption of India's Constitution, this year. I believe that all those who have studied India's evolution since our independence in August 1947 would agree that the most important, and indeed the most durable, element of India's profile as a modern nation state is its democratic orientation. Pratap Bhanu Mehta who taught here at Harvard, spoke recently of the deeper virtues from which our Constitution sprang, and I quote: "an ability to combine individuality with mutual regard, intellectualism with a democratic sensibility, conviction with a sense of fallibility, ambition with a commitment to institutions, and hopes for a future with due regard for the past and present". Ideally, I should like to think that these attributes are as valid in their application to India's global role in the 21st century, as they were to the founding fathers of our Constitution. Our democratic transformation and the empowerment of millions of Indians who moved from being subjects of a colonial power, to citizens of the world's largest democracy, is in itself an epic story. Indeed, the Indian model of democratic governance together with its economic strength and dynamism, propels the promise and the potential of India's role on the global stage.

When we talk of India's economic transformation, we expect India, at an average growth of a minimum of 7.5% growth in GDP per year to achieve a ten-fold increase in per capita income in the next 30 years and join the ranks of the developed countries; at this rate of growth, by 2020, we should be able to be categorized as a middle income developing country. We do not underestimate the challenges we face of meeting the education, health, energy and infrastructure needs of our population. 66% of our population live in the rural sector which at present contributes only around 20 per cent of our GDP. The issue of increasing agricultural productivity, planning urban growth, ensuring sustainable development while controlling and reducing emissions intensity as a proportion of our GDP, reducing income inequalities, meeting the surge in education demand and ensuring that education access becomes a driver of equality, increasing power generation, and building infrastructure - roads, railways, airports and ports - better management of water resources, are all challenges we have to meet on the road ahead. We have to ensure that growth is inclusive, equitable and empowers the most disadvantaged sections of our population. This approach has shaped and defined India's role on the global stage today, as the policies we seek to articulate and endorse internationally are based on our own domestic experience.

Sixty years into India's life as a vibrant democracy, what is the transformation we see in India's global role? One of my distinguished predecessors, Shri M.K. Rasgotra put it succinctly when he said that the "transformation of India into one of the world's leading economies, a responsible nuclear weapon power with demonstrated scientific and technological competence, and a stable democracy is a truly phenomenal achievement of our time". What were the well-springs of India's foreign policy as we began life as an independent nation? Issues such as decolonization, the creation of an Afro-Asian community of like-minded countries, the emphasis on the principles of peaceful co-existence based on mutual respect between nations, striving for an equitable global system for socio-economic development, initiatives towards global disarmament and a robust participation in United Nations peacekeeping activities can be said to have shaped the initial imprint left by India on global affairs in the last five decades of the twentieth century. These issues are not irrelevant to our participation in global affairs today. Driving our foreign policy priorities and our desire for strategic autonomy are factors of external security, internal security, the need for sustained economic growth, our energy security, maritime security and access to technology and innovation. Further, India is too large a country to be dovetailed into alliance type of relationships. In order to modernize our country we need to, and we have succeeded in, forging well-rounded strategic partnerships with all major powers.

We have a keen sense of our potential to be a great power by virtue of our population, our resources and our strategic location. A fundamental goal of India's foreign policy is to create an external environment that promotes the fulfilment of our economic growth targets and ambitions. And, these include three dimensions - capital inflows, access to technology and innovation, as well as the promotion of a free, fair and open world trading system that recognizes the development imperatives of a country like India. This requires a peaceful and stable neighbourhood and external environment, a balanced relationship with the major powers and a durable and equitable multilateral global order.

Speaking to our Ambassadors from around the world recently, our Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh spoke of the critical need to remove mass poverty in India for which we need a fast expanding economy. Where our global role, and our foreign policy comes into this growth story is to ensure that we create an environment, an external environment that is conducive to an increased flow of capital into the country. We also need to make increasing use of modern science and technology to boost our development profile - the import of such technology therefore becomes an important constituent in our quest to accelerate the pace of our socio-economic development. In our search for energy security, we must look not only at West Asia, but farther afield, to Africa, and to Latin America so that we can develop hydrocarbon resources in these regions and also import such resources for the successful pursuit of our development goals.

Any visualization of India's global role must begin in our immediate neighbourhood because situational factors in that environment affect our internal security and therefore merit our greatest attention. The Indian economy with its rapid growth and the impact this exerts beyond our borders, is fast becoming an anchoring element in the region. We have articulated a policy in our neighbourhood that stresses the advantage of building networks of inter-connectivity, trade, and investment so that prosperity can be shared and that the region can benefit from India's rapid economic growth and rising prosperity. We want to create an economic environment with our neighbours so that we can work together to fulfil our common objectives of economic development. A peaceful neighbourhood is mandatory for the realization of our own vision of economic growth.

The close and contiguous geographies we share with our seven neighbours who together with us make up the South Asian Association of Regional Cooperation or SAARC, compel increasing acknowledgement and recognition of the common destiny we share when it comes to issues such as food security, health, poverty alleviation, climate change, disaster management, women’s empowerment, and economic development. Today, with sustained high economic growth rates over the past decade, India is in a better position to offer a significant stake to our neighbours in our own prosperity and growth. We have made unilateral gestures and extended economic concessions such as the facility of duty free access to Indian market for imports from Bangladesh, Nepal, Bhutan and Sri Lanka. We have put forward proposals multilaterally within the framework of the SAARC where we have assumed asymmetric responsibilities.

However, our vision of an enhanced South Asian cooperation for development is challenged by violent extremism and terrorism, which originates in our region and finds sustenance and sanctuary there. Terrorists have repeatedly sought to undermine our sovereignty, security and economic progress, aided and abetted by forces beyond our borders. Terrorist attacks on our embassy in Kabul and the horrendous Mumbai attacks of November 2008 once again demonstrated the barbaric face of terrorism. Terror groups implacably opposed to India continue to recruit, train and plot attacks from safe havens across our borders. There is increased infiltration from across the border. Open democratic societies such as India face particular challenges in combating the threat of terrorism. It is also clear that the threat from terrorism cannot be dealt with through national efforts alone. The global nature of the threat has been recognized widely. Global efforts to tackle the problem also need to be intensified. It is time that the international community works towards early adoption of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism that was tabled at the UN over a decade ago in 1996. We must act jointly and with determination to meet the challenges posed by terrorism and to defend the values of pluralism, freedom, peaceful co-existence and the rule of law.

Our relationship with Pakistan has been complicated by the issue of terrorism and the need for Pakistan to take ameliorative action to eradicate terrorism against India. Despite this threat, we understand well the Kautilyan advice that a great power loses stature if it remains bogged down in neighbourhood entanglements. We are determined to persevere in our dialogue with Pakistan in order to resolve outstanding issues so that our region will be stable, and so that the rationale of economic development in an atmosphere of peace, for all of South Asia remains our steadfast goal.

Let me briefly also speak about Afghanistan. We are supportive of the US efforts to fight terrorism in Afghanistan and to bring stability there. We have a direct interest in Afghanistan, not because we see it as a theatre of rivalry with Pakistan but because of the growing fusion of terrorist groups that operate from Afghanistan and Pakistan and their activities in India. Indeed, developments in Afghanistan over the past few years have demonstrated in ample measure that peace, security and prosperity in today's world is indivisible, and that therefore, the international community in Afghanistan must stay the course.

Indian assistance to Afghanistan amounting to over US$ 1.3 billion has helped build vital civil infrastructure, develop human resources and capacity in the areas of education, health, agriculture, rural development, etc. Our development partnership, which has received wide appreciation of the Afghan people, has been guided primarily by the needs of the Afghan government and people. We stand by this commitment despite the grave threat under which our personnel and people are working in Afghanistan to transform the lives of ordinary Afghan people.

China is our largest neighbor and the rise of China is a reality that faces the entire world, today. The question asked is whether our relationship with China will be one dominated by increasing competition for influence and for resources as our economic needs grow. I believe the proposition should not be exaggerated in a way that it overshadows all attempts to rationalize the relationship between India and China. The reality is that India and China have worked hard over the last two decades to deepen dialogue and bilateral relations in a number of fields. Peace and tranquility have prevailed in the India-China border areas, despite the unsettled boundary question. Our trade with China is growing faster than that with any other country. Therefore, we need not see our relations with China as being only competitive. The complicated history of the outstanding boundary question entails that discussions to resolve it cannot be of short duration with easy fixes. As our Prime Minister has said, India and China will continue to grow, simultaneously, and our policies will have to cater to this emerging reality. China's growing ability to project its military strength, its rapid military modernization, and its very visible economic capabilities, introduce a new calculus in the security situation in our region. We are also alert to the continuing and close security relationship between China and Pakistan. These factors serve to further underscore the complexity of the India-China equation, today.

This brings me to global and regional commons that surround us. India is an Indian Ocean country. The Indian Ocean has a palpable human dimension, as one Indian strategic analyst put it recently, given the fact that millions of people from Saudi Arabia to India to Indonesia, live in close proximity of the Ocean. The demography of its littoral States and the hydrocarbon energy index associated with it give the Indian Ocean a distinctive identity. The strategic relevance of this area derives from the vast hydrocarbon resources in West Asia, the connectivity provided by the Suez-Malacca route, and the geo-political imperatives flowing from this reality. Non-state threats to maritime security are also on the rise from piracy and smuggling. All major powers today have a vested interest in keeping the sea lanes open given the demands of trade, commerce and energy flows that will only increase in coming years. Dialogue and cooperation are thereby essential to evolve a stable transparent maritime security system so as to ensure that a cooperative framework is evolved for the management of the Indian Ocean and its resources.

It is a well-accepted fact that the world is witnessing a shift of economic and political power to Asia. We believe that there is a need to evolve a balanced, open and inclusive framework for Asian countries and major non-Asian players to interact and cooperate to address traditional and non-traditional security challenges. Our "Look East" policy, articulated in 1992, has enabled us over the past two decades to integrate our geo-economic space with our neighbours in South East Asia. The ASEAN Regional Forum has provided a useful model for such cooperation based on dialogue and consensus in diverse areas such as counter terrorism, trans-national crimes, maritime security, disaster relief, pandemics and nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament. Our participation in events such as the East Asia Summit has enhanced our role in our continent, which in turn influences our global role today. As the world witnesses the resurgence of China and India, and the balance of global political and economic power shifts to Asia, we are determined to ensure that there is more interaction between India and South East Asia and East Asia. The new, transnational dimensions of regional security also demand that we build an open, inclusive, plural and flexible architecture to deal with them.

Rules of the road are also required for managing the security of the global commons - which cover outer space, our oceans, cyberspace and global transport and communication networks. New dimensions of security like cyber security require to be addressed internationally especially since information technology has become critical to our needs in development, infrastructure, defence and security.

Coming to the central themes of India's global role today, the focus is naturally directed at India's participation in the architecture of global governance, as represented by the United Nations. Our priority in upholding the United Nations system has been a leitmotif of our foreign policy and our global role. However, the world today is a very different one from that at the end of the Second World War. In the United Nations system, there is today a majority view in favour of reform of the United Nations, and especially its major organs like the Security Council, which is responsible for collective peace and security. India has been at the forefront of this move, seeking an enhanced global role as a permanent member of the reformed Security Council, commensurate with its size, capabilities, contribution to UN peacekeeping operations and impeccable track record in upholding the UN system. On global economic issues, India has worked with our international partners to address the complex challenges to revive the global economy. The 2008 global economic and financial crisis triggered the further evolution of the G20, of which India is a key constituent. At the Pittsburgh Summit, the G-20 was designated as the premier forum for international economic cooperation. We see the G-20 process as a move towards a more representative mechanism to manage global economic and financial issues. The Group has taken some positive steps in this direction, for instance by committing a shift in IMF quota share to dynamic emerging markets and developing countries. Simultaneously, the new global realities require that we revisit and reorganize existing governance models which were put in place over six decades ago.

India is often mentioned in the context of the ongoing Doha Round of multilateral trade negotiations being conducted in the WTO. Our commitment to the WTO, which we joined as a founder-member in January 1995, is rooted in our global approach to international trade.
India was one of the 23 original members of the GATT, which preceded the WTO, and played an influential role in shaping the non-discriminatory, equitable, rule-based system that the WTO today represents. It is a measure of our commitment to this vision that in September 2009, India took the initiative to convene a mini-Ministerial meeting of WTO members in New Delhi to break the deadlock in the negotiating process, which has resumed in Geneva since last December. Even as we discuss the shape of the next era of integration of world markets, India is proactive in upholding the integrity of the WTO system, inspiring other countries to join her in implementing the objectives of the WTO Agreement.

A major issue facing the international community today is climate change.
The issue is critical for us as the steps we take will need to be intrinsically linked with the growth prospects and development aspirations for our people. Nationally, we have taken several steps to improve energy efficiency and ensure sustainable growth. It is important to note that despite our accounting for 17% of the global population, our own GHG emissions are currently only 4% of the global emissions. Even with 8-9% growth per annum, our energy use has been growing at less than 4% per annum. We are concerned that the developed countries often tend to ignore, implicitly, the huge adaptation challenge that we face with climate change. Today we spend 2% to 2.5% of our GDP on meeting adaptation needs, but this is not adequate. There is need for stable and predictable financing from the developed countries, and this we believe should not solely rely on market mechanisms but, rather, on assessed contributions. There is also need for a global mechanism whereby climate friendly technologies can be disseminated to the developing countries. We need to redouble efforts in these multilateral negotiations, especially after last year's Copenhagen Conference, to ensure full, effective and sustained implementation of the UN Framework Convention and its Kyoto Protocol, and to conclude these negotiations with a balanced, comprehensive and above all, an equitable outcome, with equal emphasis on all four pillars - mitigation, adaptation, finance and technology transfer.

Many of you here today have followed the debates swirling around the agreement on civilian nuclear energy cooperation between India and the United States signed in 2008. Some have sought to undermine this major initiative by calling into question India's policy on nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament. The constructive and forward-looking approach that was adopted towards India in September 2008 by the Nuclear Suppliers Group has enabled full international civil nuclear cooperation with India as also our nuclear energy cooperation agreements with major partners including the United States, Russia, France and the UK. These constitute not only a long overdue recognition of India’s standing as a country with advanced nuclear technology and responsible behaviour but have also opened up significant opportunities for technical collaboration. It is equally important to see the relevance of these developments in the context of India’s energy requirements and challenges of climate change.

I think it would be important to underline that India is fully cognizant of the safety and security implications arising from the expansion of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. We are working together with our partners to help reduce the risk of nuclear proliferation. We believe that the challenges of nuclear terrorism and nuclear security have to be addressed. We have been affected by clandestine nuclear proliferation in our neighbourhood. We are naturally concerned about the possibility of nuclear terrorism given the security situation in our neighbourhood. We have, therefore, taken the lead at the UN General Assembly on an effective law-based international response including on WMD terrorism. India has joined the Russia-U.S. led Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism. The first Nuclear Security Summit hosted by President Obama in April 2010 was an important milestone in our efforts.

You are well aware of India’s long-standing commitment to global, non-discriminatory and verifiable nuclear disarmament. We have identified some initiatives that I believe could be explored further as building blocks of a new global, verifiable nuclear disarmament framework. These include: a global agreement on ‘no-first-use’ of nuclear-weapons and non-use against non-nuclear weapon states; measures to reduce nuclear danger through de-alerting, reducing salience of nuclear weapons in security doctrines and preventing unintentional or accidental use; a Nuclear Weapons Convention prohibiting development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and on their destruction.

I also wish to briefly comment on our bilateral relations with the US. Despite being fellow democracies and sharing common values, we failed to realize the potential in our relations on account of differences during the cold war. That changed slowly in the nineties and gathered momentum in the first decade of this century. The conclusion of the bilateral civil nuclear agreement in 2008 was a major milestone. Today, the range and the depth of our bilateral relations and strategic global partnership is truly transformational in nature as described by Secretary Clinton. There are, as President Obama defines it, new wellsprings in our cooperation with each other. Today we are not only discussing issues such as strategic cooperation, counter terrorism, defence, high technology, civil nuclear and space sectors cooperation but also a broad range of development issues that directly and positively impact on the lives of our citizens including cooperation in education, health, agriculture, weather forecasting, innovation, etc. We are also engaging with each other and cooperating on most major global issues as also on capacity building in third countries. Ours is a defining and enduring partnership. This November, President Obama will visit India and we believe that this visit will enhance the depth of our understanding on a number of issues of vital importance, bilaterally, regionally, and globally.

I would not like to conclude without referring to the role of the growing Indian diaspora in the projection of India’s global, national and foreign policy interests. In countries like the United States, and the UK, the diaspora has increasingly demonstrated the effectiveness of its voice and its capability to advance the Indian interest. The projection of Indian power globally is in many ways energized by the demonstrable success and achievements of the diaspora.

Finally, India’s global role is also being articulated as it becomes an increasingly effective development and technical cooperation source for a number of countries in regions like Africa. Education, agriculture, capacity building in a number of areas, private sector investments, trade and communications outreach, define our relations with a number of African countries today. Apart from this, the unleashing of our managerial and entrepreneurial talent has also seen the expansion of Indian industry’s global horizons - with investment outflows from India to North America and Europe being around 14 billion US dollars in 2008 alone. The role of India’s soft power, the dynamism of its free and unfettered media, its entertainment industry, and the attraction that Indian culture exerts are also vehicles for enhancing India’s global influence today.

In sum, India’s global role today is determined by the calculus of our national interests, our interest in ensuring the flow of capital, technology and innovation to further accelerate our growth, our conviction that inclusive structures of dialogue and cooperation to address the new dimensions of security threats are necessary, that the institutions of global governance including the United Nations should reflect current realities, and that the dynamism and energy of the Indian economic growth story must be shared with our region, and that to sustain our growth trajectory we need an environment that is free from transnational threats like terrorism. India has consciously sought to engage and develop its partnerships with both its neighbours and also the major powers in this process, with the strategic aim of ensuring that the balance of interests thus created ensures that we are able to better deal with the challenges that confront us and that we derive tangible political, economic and security benefits as a result. In an Asia-centred century, we would naturally wish to ensure a role for India that is commensurate with its size, its growing economic strength, its democratic stability and proven capacity to manage its enormous diversity, its contributions to global peace and security, and its justified quest for a greater voice in a multilateral system that is balanced, equitable, and representative of new global realities.

Once again, I would like to thank Dr Sugata Bose and his colleagues at the South Asia Initiative at Harvard for having invited me to speak here this evening. Thank you.
It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity to address you today. The Asia Society has a well deserved reputation for bringing about a closer understanding between Americans and Asians. In recent years, with the advent of globalization, it is all the more important for organizations like the Asia Society to ensure a continuing dialogue between our two peoples. I am also happy to note that the Asia Society has a presence in Mumbai. This is reflective of the synergy which exists between the Society and India.

I referred to globalization. India is at the vortex of the changes which go with this phenomenon. What are the major drivers responsible for India's international dynamics today? First and foremost, we are the world's largest functioning democracy. You would have heard this on countless occasions. But this very fact is so fundamental to India's existence, progress and the role on the international stage that it is worth all the attention and reiteration. This year we are celebrating the sixtieth anniversary of our Constitution, which is the bedrock of our democratic system. The Indian Constitution is flexible enough to accommodate these changes, and our success in empowering women, in creating a grass-roots structure of political democracy through the village councils or panchayats, in providing equity for the most socially disadvantaged, through appropriate amendments to our Constitution illustrates this.

The second attribute of modern India is the success and sustainability of our economic reforms and growth. Initiated in 1991, these reforms have created the trillion-dollar Indian economy, which is today the second fastest growing major economy in the world. A corollary of our democratic, rule-of-law based system, and our rapid economic growth, is the fact that India has become an attractive investment destination, especially for investors.
from the United States. I have been personally privileged to have participated in this process when I was Chief Minister of Karnataka, which is today home to so many major investors, including from the US.

Today, the range and the depth of our bilateral relations and strategic global partnership with the United States is truly transformational in nature. We are not only discussing issues such as strategic cooperation, counter terrorism, defence, high technology, civil nuclear and space sectors cooperation but also a broad range of development issues that directly and positively impact on the lives of our citizens including cooperation in education, health, agriculture, weather forecasting, innovation, etc. We are also engaging with each other and cooperating on most major global issues as also on capacity building in third countries. Ours is a defining and enduring partnership. This November, President Obama will visit India and we believe that this visit will enhance the depth of our understanding on a number of issues of vital importance, bilaterally, regionally, and globally.

A third feature of India is its energetic and dynamic people, many of whom have distinguished themselves, both in India and abroad, on the wide canvas of human endeavour. It would not be out of place to recognize the special role played by the Indian diaspora in influencing the emergence of modern India. Here at the Asia Society, we see this fact in the persona of Dr Desai, and her other colleagues of Indian-origin. The Indian-American community is lauded as one of the most dynamic and influential groups in the United States, and not without reason.

While an ancient civilization, India today is a predominantly young country. Observers of India have referred to our “demographic dividend”, especially the fact that in coming decades of the 21st century, as the population of many major economies ages, this younger population of India would be expected to form the bulk of the global work-force.

Ladies and gentlemen,

The strategic imperatives for India in the 21st century flow naturally from these attributes. The foremost priority of our foreign policy is to provide a peaceful and secure environment for our continued growth. At the same time, we are committed to ensuring that the international institutions that are responsible for peace, security, and socio-economic development, in which we participate willingly and substantially, mirror democratic ethos.

Our Prime Minister, Dr Manmohan Singh, has often articulated his vision of a prosperous and stable India, at peace with herself and her neighbours. We have close linkages with our seven neighbours who, along with us, comprise the South Asian Association of Regional Cooperation or SAARC. We are also conscious of the common destiny of South Asia, especially when dealing with issues such as food security, health, poverty alleviation, climate change, disaster management, women’s empowerment, and economic development. India has undertaken major policy initiatives in her relations with other SAARC members. These include unilateral gestures such as the facility of duty free access to Indian market for imports from Bangladesh, Nepal, Bhutan and Sri Lanka. We have put forward proposals multilaterally within the framework of the SAARC where we have assumed asymmetric responsibilities.

We give special importance within SAARC to our bilateral programmes of assistance and cooperation with Afghanistan, which joined the SAARC at its New Delhi Summit in April 2007. Indian assistance to Afghanistan amounting to over US$ 1.3 billion has helped build vital civil infrastructure, develop human resources and capacity in the areas of education, health, agriculture, rural development, etc. Our partnership has been guided primarily by the needs of the Afghan government and people.

Beyond the South Asian region, we are engaged in developing broad-based relations with our largest neighbor, China. Despite our unsettled border issues, peace and tranquility have prevailed along the Sino-Indian border. Today, our trade with China is growing faster than with any other country. Our relations with Russia are a key pillar of our foreign policy, and we regard Russia as a trusted and reliable strategic partner. Ours is a relationship that not only stands independent of any other, but whose significance has grown over time. Our partnership covers areas such as defence, civil nuclear energy, space, science and technology, hydrocarbons, trade and investment.

Our objectives for peace and stability are challenged by violent extremism and terrorism which find sustenance and sanctuary in our region. Terrorists have repeatedly sought to undermine our sovereignty, security and economic progress, aided and abetted by forces beyond our borders. Terrorist attacks on our embassy in Kabul and the horrendous Mumbai attacks of November 2008 demonstrated the barbaric face of terrorism. Terror groups implacably opposed to India continue to recruit, train and plot attacks from safe havens across our borders. There is increased infiltration from across the border.

Our relationship with Pakistan has been complicated by the issue of terrorism and the need for Pakistan to take effective action to prevent the territory under its control from being used for terrorism directed against India. We are determined to persevere in our dialogue with Pakistan in order to resolve outstanding issues so that our region is stable, and so that the rationale of economic development in an atmosphere of peace, for all of South Asia remains our steadfast goal.

Open democratic societies such as India face particular challenges in combating the threat of terrorism. This is a challenge that requires greater regional and international cooperation, and at the United Nations we have proposed a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism as long ago as in 1996. We believe that this is an imperative for the international community, so that we act jointly and with determination to meet the challenges posed by terrorism, and to defend our shared values of pluralism, freedom, peaceful co-existence and the rule of law.

Our experience of working within the United Nations since its inception has shown that there is urgent need to reform the United Nations, especially its Security Council, which is responsible for international peace and security. The current composition of the Security Council does not, in the view of the majority of the member-countries of the United Nations, reflect the global realities of the 21st century. India aspires to become a permanent member of the reformed UN Security Council, so that it can contribute most effectively to our common objective of preserving international peace and security.

Achieving global disarmament, and securing our world against the threat of non-proliferation, is a linked strategic imperative for India. We believe that the challenges of nuclear terrorism and nuclear security have to be addressed. We have been affected by clandestine nuclear proliferation in our neighbourhood. The constructive and forward-looking approach that was adopted towards India in September 2008 by the Nuclear Suppliers Group has enabled full international civil nuclear cooperation with India as also our nuclear energy cooperation agreements with major partners including the United States, Russia, France and the UK. These constitute not only a long overdue recognition of India's standing as a country with advanced nuclear technology and responsible behaviour but have also opened up significant opportunities for technical collaboration. It is equally important to see the relevance of these developments in the context of India's energy requirements and challenges of climate change.

Many among you have followed the debates around "climate change", especially during last December's Copenhagen Conference of the United Nations. As a large, rapidly industrializing country, the issue of Climate Change is of core strategic interest to India. The issue is critical for us as the steps we take will need to be intrinsically linked with the growth prospects and development aspirations for our people. Nationally, we have taken several steps to improve energy efficiency and ensure sustainable growth. It is important to note that despite our accounting for 17% of the global population, our own GHG emissions are currently only 4% of the global emissions. Even with 8-9% growth per annum, our energy use has been growing at less than 4% per annum. It is an imperative for us, with our large and vulnerable population, to ensure full, effective and sustained implementation of the UN Framework Convention and its Kyoto Protocol, and to conclude these negotiations with a balanced, comprehensive and above all, an equitable outcome, with equal emphasis on all four pillars - mitigation, adaptation, finance and technology transfer.

Turning to India's strategic imperatives as a member of the global economic and trade architecture, I would refer to our constructive engagement with the Bretton Woods institutions, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, and our experience in using these financial institutions in our task of nation-building for over six decades. Today, as India participates as an equal partner in the G20, which has been designated as the main forum for dealing with international economic issues, our experience has proved very relevant in putting forward our vision of the future orientation of these institutions. It is with this perspective that India has called for a review of the existing structure of the Bretton Woods institutions, and we believe that in this century, this is an objective which we will be able to achieve, not least because the centre of gravity of the global economy has shifted to Asia.

Similarly, in the area of international trade, India has been at the centre of the current round of multilateral negotiations under the mandate of the Doha Development Agenda to ensure that the World Trade Organization continues to be relevant in creating an equitable, rule-based international trading system. We desire to make the most of the opportunities that globalization has thrown up through a process of negotiated sustainable liberalization, while ensuring that the rules of the international trading system that we have jointly agreed to under the WTO Agreement are respected and upheld. This becomes a strategic imperative for us in confronting protectionist sentiment among some of our major trading partners.

In parallel, we have joined hands with major emerging economies across the world in creating new, mutually beneficial economic structures that will serve our strategic interests in the decades ahead. The India, Brazil and South Africa Dialogue Forum (IBSA) has become a significant vehicle for comprehensive trilateral cooperation between three large democratic countries that share common values and are engaged in the development process to improve the lives of their peoples. It is significant that IBSA cooperation is not limited to governments, but engages the civil societies of the three countries. Similarly, we believe that the Brazil, Russia, India, China forum, known as BRIC, can contribute constructively towards sustainable global economic growth, given the fact that together, these countries span 25.9% of the world’s total geographic area, contain 40% of the world’s population and contribute 22% of the world’s GDP, measured in PPP terms.

Ladies and gentlemen,

Our ambitious "Look East" policy is already making India an integral part of the geo-economic landscape of South East and East Asia. With our immediate neighbour in ASEAN, Myanmar, we share civilizational bonds, geographical proximity, culture, history and religion. Apart from a boundary that stretches over more than 1640 kilometers and borders four North-Eastern states of India, there is a large population of persons of Indian origin in Myanmar. Bilateral relations are reflective of these multifarious and traditional linkages.
Our successful "pan-African e-Network Project", which is the biggest project in distance education and telemedicine ever undertaken in Africa, is creating new linkages between India and Africa. Our initiatives under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation or ITEC programme, with a special focus on human resource development, have enabled an Indian footprint in the societies of Central Asia, South East Asia, Africa and Latin America. India is thus truly engaged with the world.

I have touched upon some of the major strategic imperatives and directions for India in this century. Within this broad framework are the details of initiatives we have taken in the past few years, including our policy towards our immediate neighbours. In a century widely billed as "Asia's Century", India is moving steadily and surely to secure the imperatives of peace and development, of a shared destiny of mankind.

Thank you.

016. Address of Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee at the Woodrow Wilson Centre for Scholars.

"It is an honour for me to be here today in Washington at the famous Woodrow Wilson International Centre for Scholars. I would like to thank Mr. Hamilton, President and Director of the Centre, for inviting me to speak before this distinguished audience.

I understand that this Institute has a long and illustrious tradition of promoting informed dialogue for a better appreciation of international issues and developments and to anticipate emerging trends and contribute to formulation of new policies. I would like to take this opportunity to share with you some of my own thoughts on the emerging global economic architecture and about the relationship between our two countries - India and the United States.

Once in a few decades, it appears as if the world is at a cross-road, when the path that it chooses to tread becomes critical for progress in the well-being of its people and fundamental changes in international rules and ingratulations to guide the process become imperative. Neither the process of change nor its outcomes are linear. There are always concerns, uncertainties and choices to be exercised from competing alternatives and objectives. The process is indeed challenging. Today, we are at one such juncture in our lives.

Following the global financial crisis since late 2007 and one of the deepest downturns that the world has witnessed in recent times, we are compelled to rethink some of our traditional principles of economic and financial policy making. For the first time after the second World War, nations have been forced to come together to explore and discuss the need for collective action, the need to regulate finance in a globalized world and the need to reform the international economic architecture. When that happens there is hope!

As we meet here today, the world economy is showing visible signs of emerging from the global slowdown. The pace and shape of the recovery across countries, both in the developed and the emerging world, is however varied and perhaps uncertain in some instances. At home, we have done deeper than what was perhaps anticipated. While we have got certain things right, there are others that need our attention and follow-up, both at the international as well as the national levels.

Let me start by recollecting some of the lessons and issues that we need to keep in our mind as we collectively find solutions to address them and move towards a new international economic architecture.

Foremost, we have seen that markets with no regulatory supervision are prone to asset price or debt bubbles that lead to cyclical fluctuations in economic activity. Unlike in the past, in the present age of globalization such fluctuations are more likely to have serious cross-border social and economic implications. Governments and central banks therefore have to play a key role in supervising and regulating markets, collectively and individually in their respective economies.

Secondly, greater attention needs to be given to transmission channels of contagion, the herd behaviour of investors, excessive risk-taking during boom years and risk aversion during crisis. The effort to identify and strengthen institutions that are considered ‘too big to fail’ and ‘too interconnected to fail' is part of the effort to limit systemic fallout of contagion.

Thirdly, curbing speculative activities in the areas of credit and price derivatives, for example, requires pro-active domestic oversight and regulation, as well as global coordination.

Fourthly, unfettered growth of the financial sector can have dangerous implications for the real economy, as was seen during the recent crisis, when the financial sector crisis spilled into the real sector. Financial sector innovation should serve the objective of real sector development and promote financial stability.

Finally, for sustained growth and stability global structural imbalances have to be addressed, sooner rather than later. The huge build up of reserves in some countries and deficits elsewhere, massive trade surpluses in some and deep trade deficits in others are not sustainable. More nations need to come forward and share the responsibility to contribute to global prosperity. The critical gaps in international policy making and regulation, in risk management and international development cooperation need to be bridged.

There is a need for pursuing effective international cooperation and strengthening institutional mechanisms that support and sustain equitable global development. International financial institutions need to reflect in their functioning the realities on the ground. Indeed, if there is one lesson to be drawn from our recent experience, it is that we need to be vigilant in tracking economic developments at the global level as well as in our respective domestic constituencies.

Even as we make progress on several fronts, including on the issue of global economic monitoring and governance, the question is how much should we regulate and where do we draw the line?

If we do not regulate economic activity at all, we can have poor people getting trapped in debt and a repeat of the crisis of 2007. On the other hand, if we over regulate, we will kill innovation and harm economic growth. The solution to these dilemmas is not easy. The U.S. has tried to address some of these concerns with its new Dodd-Frank legislation. We, in India are also exploring new ideas in financial regulation that protect the vulnerable but allow markets to flourish. There is a lot that can be learnt from the best practices in one part of the world to guide policy response in the other.

At this point, I must draw your attention to a rather unique developmental approach by India in recent years. We are not waiting any more for the phenomenon of ‘trickle down’ to happen with our significant growth trajectory. Instead, India has embarked on one of the largest efforts in history for direct entitlement of the poor and massive asset creation in the rural sector. It is also rolling out 100,000 ‘IT kiosks’ with an eye on ‘e-governance’, ‘e-education’, ‘e-health’, telemedicine - as many as 83,635 have already been rolled out in rural India.

We have passed the ‘right to education’ bill, allocated $24.3 billion in the last three financial years for the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act and $10.7 billion on Bharat Nirman project for rural power, roads, drinking water, telecom, irrigation and housing. Our substantive GDP growth will be accompanied by direct inclusion of the underprivileged, who will in turn contribute to our rising growth trajectory.

The current phase of globalization has shrunk the world and made boundaries between countries irrelevant. At one level, it has reduced us to a single entity, such that developments in one part of this global entity have pronounced implications on the other part.

This crisis has shown us the pitfalls of an unquestioning dependence on the functioning of liberal markets to sustain and enhance human well-being. Yet we have also seen how these very markets have been the means to bring unprecedented prosperity to a large part of the world over an extended period of time. They have opened up real possibilities for many of us in the developing world to make genuine progress in addressing some of our persistent problems of poverty, livelihood, health, education and security.

I believe that globalization has the potential to benefit us all, through greater trade, more specialization and the flow of capital from where there is a glut and the returns to capital are low to where there is a shortage of capital and the returns to capital are high.

The U.S. more than any other country, has demonstrated to the world what can be achieved by having an open economy and keeping the channels of trade and business open. There is a lesson in this for all of us.
Indeed, we need to move on and have an early conclusion of the Doha trade round.

The designation of the G20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation has brought together advanced and emerging market economies at the same table on an equal footing. This has been a major step in the direction of improving global governance and shared responsibility for larger public good. We welcome this and commend the US and other developed nations in taking and supporting this step. Indeed, it is not surprising that the G20 could concert the decisive response to enable the world economy to move on the path to recovery.

The G20 spearheaded a commitment to implement coordinated macroeconomic policies, including fiscal expansion of US $ 5 trillion and the use of unconventional monetary policy instruments. It took the initiative to significantly enhance financial regulations, notably by the establishment of the Financial Stability Board and strengthened the International Financial Institutions, including the expansion of resources and the improvement of precautionary lending facilities. We need to persist with and strengthen this mechanism as we move forward to create a more dynamic and equitable economic architecture for global trade and sustained growth.

I believe that economics and economic relations are important, but it is essential to recognize that these relationships are embedded in a certain geo-political reality. We have to be realistic and manage global geo-politics to create the pre-conditions for economic prosperity. Nations working together both regionally and globally can become critical forces for geo-political peace in the world and for creating the social and political pre-conditions without which no nation can grow and prosper.

There are dangers and risks of disruption in the world that we have to be attentive to at all times. Consider the Straits of Malacca. More ships pass through this corridor carrying goods and freight, than any other comparable sea-corridor in the world. If a war or a terrorist attack disrupts this trade route, the entire global economy will be plunged into a crisis. This is an area of interest not only to the neighboring nations, such as India, Indonesia, Singapore and Malaysia but to the whole world.

Managing political tensions, creating multiple stake-holders with interest in peace are essential to prevent such disruptions and political turmoil.
Given our shared interest in peace and stability in Asia, India and the United States can work together to promote this objective.

The friendship between our nations is built on deep, shared values, and the commitment to democracy and secularism. We are both multi-racial and multi-cultural societies that have found strength in our diversity and in our convictions. In addition, we now have important economic interconnections, based on trade, investment and the movement of people. This has led to increasing warmth between our nations.

With gradual economic reforms, pursued through a broad based domestic political consensus, so essential in democracies, India is now an open, competitive market economy whose engagement and integration with the global economy has been growing rapidly. Trade between India and the United States has more than doubled between 2004 and 2008, with both trade in goods and services being broadly balanced. As Indian companies seek to position themselves better in the global market place, they have invested over $25 billion between 2004 and 2009 in the US, creating jobs and prosperity, just as US companies have been doing in India. India's growth is primarily domestic demand-driven and not export-led. With the Indian economy expected to grow between 8 to 10% over the coming decade, the opportunities for business engagement with India will multiply manifold. Sustained high growth will catapult India into one of the three largest economies in the coming decades. The Indian economy will be one of the nodes of global economic momentum and stability.

The nuclear agreement between our nations and what it can do to alleviate the demand for greater energy and electricity is a significant symbol of our collaboration. The 10th of October, 2008, when our two nations signed the Agreement for Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, must go down as an important date in history. In October 2009, the Indian Government announced its intention to set up Light Water Reactor (LWR)-based plants in cooperation with the US at Chhayamithi Virdi in western India and at Kovvada in southern India. While this has created further scope for business interaction between our two nations, it has also improved the possibility of lighting up more homes and bringing water and energy to the Indian farmers.

There is also a lot of scope for collaboration between India and the U.S. in the area of education. Both India and the United States have comparably large higher education systems. In India there are 15.6 million students; in the U.S. there 19.7 million students. There is also a lot of flow of students between the two nations though this is largely in one direction—from India to the U.S. In 2008 there were 3,146 American students in India and around 100,000 Indian students in the U.S.

Academic interaction between nations is a source of soft-power relations between nations. It builds the flow of knowledge and technology and contributes to peace. I am glad there is so much academic interaction between our nations but the scope for building up more is immense. I do want India to be a hub of global education and to have many more American students coming to India for education.

Indian students and their families are today hungry for more knowledge education. America is a world leader in terms of higher education and research and can contribute to our efforts. Cooperation between India and the United States in this sector will be mutually beneficial, building expanding and durable links between our peoples which will be the connecting tissue of our relationship.

We live today in a small world. There is need for greater international cooperation to manage global challenges. These can not be tackled by any single country alone. A strong partnership between India and the United States would be vital in this process. In this context let me mention how delighted I am at the prospect of welcoming President Obama to India next month. We recall his hospitality to India last November, when our Prime Minister was made the first state guest. President Obama had said that the US-India partnership would be one of the defining relationships of the 21st century. I share this sentiment and that our country is ready to take this friendship forward. I am sure that his visit will strengthen cooperation between India and the United States and lay out a vision for our strategic partnership based on our shared values and our shared interests.”

Address by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the inauguration of the Manekshaw Centre and Seminar on the "Role of Force in the Strategic Affairs" on the occasion of the Golden Jubilee of the National Defence College.

New Delhi, October 21, 2010.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am pleased to be here to inaugurate the Manekshaw Centre as well as the seminar on "Role of Force in Strategic Affairs", organized as a part of the Golden Jubilee Celebrations of the National Defence College. As NDC has been able to successfully foster a culture of strategic thinking and analysis, it has emerged as a premier institution of strategic studies in India. Its training courses attract the best and brightest. Its ability to engage not only the defence personnel, but also civilian officers, is a tribute to the multi-dimensional approach of its training. It can count among its alumni officers from various countries across the globe. Their participation has enriched the quality of NDC courses. Its alumni have risen to the highest positions in their careers and in their countries. We have amongst us His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck, the King of Bhutan and we are proud that he attended the 45th Course of the National Defence College and I warmly welcome him.

I would like to begin by congratulating the brave personnel of our Armed Forces, who risk their lives to defend our freedom. We have had a number of Officers, who throughout their careers showed the way, through their sterling qualities. One can never forget the leadership provided by the Late Field Marshall Sam Manekshaw, who led by example at a crucial time in the military history of our nation. It is a matter of immense pride to the nation that our Forces are professional, and have time and again displayed their dedication and valour. Many of them have even made the supreme sacrifice. They remind us that we cannot take our security for granted.

I understand that this Seminar will take a holistic look at various aspects of national security and strategic issues, including the changing nature of warfare, role of force, the existence of non-state actors, nuclear deterrence and international responses to war. I am confident the deliberations at this event will significantly contribute to our understanding of changing requirements of security in the 21st Century.

India is a peace loving nation. Historically, we have never coveted territory nor have we been an expansionist power. We have no aggressive intent. Our strategic doctrine is derived from our civilisational values of peace, tolerance and mutual co-existence. We wish to live in peace and harmony with our neighbours based on mutual respect, non-interference in each other’s affairs and in accordance with principles and Charter of the United Nations.

Our objective, as indeed that of other nations, is the progress and prosperity of the country. Our primary challenge is the eradication of poverty, disease and illiteracy that afflict millions of our people. However, no nation can prosper without its borders being secure and security remains the basic edifice on which developmental pursuits are built. We need to be adept at managing the constantly changing nature of warfare and threats to our national security. A strong defence and an effective deterrence are essential to preserve peace. Hence, we have to remain alert for any eventuality and provide our Armed Forces the necessary resources to deter any aggression or threat, even as we pursue the goal of creating an external environment that is conducive to our development process.

Given the size of our country and our economy, it is but natural that India should have global interests and a significant stake in ensuring that the international system is stable and conducive to peace and prosperity. We believe that greater international co-operation is the best way to secure this objective.

Our greatest strength is the moral force that we bring to bear on global stage. It is India’s commitment to democracy, rule of law, pluralism and our values that have enabled us to earn the world’s respect. The protection of the values that India stands for is a matter of national priority. Threats to these basic concepts need to be addressed. One of the foremost threats that the civilized world is confronted, with is from terrorism and India has been its victim. As the horrendous attacks in Mumbai demonstrated two years ago, terrorist groups have become more sophisticated and are able to use advanced technology and equipment in their objective of killing innocents. But, terrorism is a global challenge with a world wide network that threatens regional and global security. The world community has woken up to this challenge. India believes that terrorism has to be confronted with all the force at our command and in close co-operation with the international community.

There are other challenges to security, many of them far removed from the classical notions of inter-state conflict. As the world has globalized, so too have these challenges, no longer respecting national borders. Transnational crimes, piracy, drug trafficking and cyber attacks are all examples of these new threats, many of which are interlinked. All this requires that we must develop capabilities of adequately responding to not only the traditional threats, but also the new threats of the 21st Century. The tools available to us are no longer limited to military power alone. Other attributes of power, including soft power, economic strength and technological advances have an increasing role to play.

The justification of the use of force itself has always been subject of controversy. It is a measure of the progress that we have made as humans that we no longer treat wars as the first mode of resolving differences. The use of force in international relations must be resorted to as the last option. We must always be guided by the philosophy that preventing wars is better than waging them. Guided by this philosophy, India has been one of the largest contributors to the peacekeeping operations of the United Nations throughout the world. Our men and women in uniform serve in very difficult and dangerous trouble spots of the world to harness the use of force for the maintenance of peace and security.

We have also seen that force in the traditional sense has been deployed for humanitarian assistance and disaster management. By this, it has contributed to the common good and as in the case of the Tsunami or Cyclone Nargis led to greater regional co-operation and understanding.

In conclusion, I would like to say that India has been widely recognized as a factor of peace and stability not just for our region, but also for the entire world. India remains actively engaged with its global partners and will work together with them for the promotion of international peace and security and realize its rightful place in the world order.

With these words, I convey my greetings to all present here and I wish the Staff and the alumni of the National Defence College the very best for the future.
Rashtrapathiji,
Your Majesty, the King of Bhutan,
Raksha Mantri,
Chiefs of Staff of the Army, Navy and Air Force, Lt-Gen. Prakash Menon, Commandant NDC,
Distinguished guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

I am deeply honoured to have been asked to deliver the keynote address before the seminar on "The Role of Force in Strategic Affairs" to celebrate the golden jubilee of this prestigious institution. The NDC has made outstanding contributions to the spread of strategic thought and the integration of civil and military thinking in India. You have today assembled a galaxy of experts and authorities to discuss this important question. We await your deliberations with great expectations.

Rather than trying to anticipate what your seminar will throw up, I thought I would look at two issues that you will probably consider in much more detail. Is there in an Indian doctrine for the use of force in statecraft? And, how have recent changes in the world and strategic affairs affected the role of force in today's world?

Is there an Indian doctrine for the use of force in statecraft? This is not a question that one normally expects to ask about a power that is a declared nuclear weapon state with the world's second largest standing army. But India achieved independence in a unique manner; through a freedom movement dedicated to truth and non-violence, and has displayed both ambiguity and opposition to classical power politics. In the circumstances posing the question is understandable and legitimate.
To answer the question let us look at traditional Indian attitudes to force and the lessons India draws from its own history, and at Indian practice since independence in 1947.

Attitudes to Force and Lessons from History

While India may have achieved independence after a non-violent struggle it was a struggle that Gandhiji described as non-violence of the strong.

As far back as 1928 Gandhiji wrote, "If there was a national government, whilst I should not take any direct part in any war, I can conceive of occasions when it would be my duty to vote for the military training of those who wish to take it.... It is not possible to make a person or society non-violent by compulsion."

During the Partition riots at his prayer meeting on 26 September 1947 Gandhiji said that he had always been an opponent of all warfare, but that if there was no other way of securing justice war would be the only alternative left to the government.

Faced with the tribal raiders sent by Pakistan into Kashmir in October 1947, Gandhiji said that it was right for the Union Government to save the fair city by rushing troops to Srinagar. He added that he would rather that the defenders be wiped out to the last man in clearing Kashmir's soil of the raiders rather than submit.

In saying so, Gandhiji was entirely in keeping with a long Indian tradition which has regarded the use of force as legitimate in certain circumstances, namely, if there is no alternative way of securing justice. This is in essence a doctrine for the defensive use of force, when all other avenues are exhausted.

Our two greatest epics, the Mahabharata and Ramayana are about wars, and treat rivalries as natural and normal. And the two classical expositions on the use of force, the Geeta and Bhishma's death bed lecture on statecraft in the Mahabharata's Shantiparva are extended explanations of a unique point of view.

The clearest description of the uses of force in statecraft is in the Arthashastra by Chanakya, which deals with both internal and external uses of force.
The lesson that comes through very clearly in both the major Indian epics, which deal with wars of necessity, is also apparent in Kautilya, the original realist, and in Ashoka, the convert to idealism. Ashoka and Kautilya were both products of a highly evolved and intricate tradition of statecraft which must have preceded them for centuries. A simple reading of the Arthashastra suffices to prove how evolved Indian strategic culture was as early as the third century before Christ, and how the use of force was limited both by practical and moral considerations. This was not a doctrine of "God on our side", (though that helped, as Krishna proved in the Mahabharata). Nor is it about just wars. In the Indian tradition the use of force is legitimate not just if it is in a good cause and its results will be good. Instead, this was a doctrine that saw force as necessary in certain circumstances, to obtain justice, when all other means are exhausted, and which also recognised that force was not always the most effective or efficient means to this end.

The other lesson that Indian thinkers have consistently drawn from history is of the perils of weakness. The colonial narrative of India's history, stressing "outside" invasions and rulers had as its corollary the conviction that India must avoid weakness at all costs lest that history be repeated. The Indian quest after 1947 for strategic autonomy and for autonomy in the decision to use or threaten force has a long tradition behind it.

What I am trying to say is that Indian strategic culture has an indigenous construct on the role of force in statecraft, modified by our experience in the last two centuries. War and peace are continuing themes in Indian strategic culture. While not celebrating war the culture treats defensive war as acceptable when good fights evil to secure justice. Indian strategic culture has been comfortable with this contradiction. While Gandhiji shunned the use of force and opposed violence in politics he was politically steely and unyielding, and accepted violence as unavoidable and justified in certain circumstances.

As a result of this acceptance of contradictions, Indian strategic culture supports ethical views that dovetail easily with international norms of conduct, whether legal or on human rights. It is a culture that tends instinctively to pluralism, tolerance of different views and positions, and a reliance on argumentation, diplomacy and law before recourse to the use of force. It is therefore no surprise that it seeks a rule based international order to limit the anarchy among states that is sometimes evident.
This aspect of Indian strategic culture is common to what Kanti Bajpai described as the three streams of Indian strategic culture, namely, "Nehruvians", neo-liberals and hyper-realists. They might differ on the best means but not on India's strategic goals. To summarise Bajpai, all three streams agree on the centrality of the sovereign state in international relations and recognise no higher authority; see interests, power and violence as the staples of international relations that states cannot ignore; and think that power comprises both military and economic capabilities at a minimum. Beyond this they differ.

Interestingly all three streams, "Nehruvians", neoliberals and hyperrealists, believe that nuclear weapons are essential for India's security in a world that has shown no signs of moving to their abolition and elimination.

In other words, there is substantial agreement on values, on goals and even on means in our policies, despite marked and rapid changes in the external environment in which we have operated. That is why the core traits of our foreign and defence policies have persisted since independence, irrespective of the parties in power.

The Indian Practice since 1947

Let us look at this aspect of Indian strategic culture in action, in other words at Indian practice and policy since independence.

- The defence budget has only exceeded 3% of GDP in one year of the last sixty-three.
- There have been clear limits on the use of force internally. The use of military force for internal security functions has been severely circumscribed, limited to those cases where there is a strong correlation to inimical forces abroad such as Nagaland and J&K.
- The armed forces of the Union have only been used defensively against external aggression in the sixty-three years of the Republic.
- India has never sent troops abroad except for UNPKO or at the express request of the legitimate government of the country concerned. This was true in the Maldives in 1987, in Sri Lanka in 1987 and in Bangladesh in 1971.
India has also never retained territory taken by force in the wars that she has fought. This is so even for some Indian territory taken back from Pakistan in the Indian state of J&K which was returned to Pakistani control after the 1965 and 1971 wars.

India as a NWS

The Indian nuclear doctrine also reflects this strategic culture, with its emphasis on minimal deterrence, no first use against non-nuclear weapon states and its direct linkage to nuclear disarmament. We have made it clear that while we need nuclear weapons for our own security, it is our goal to work for a world free of nuclear weapons, and that we are ready to undertake the necessary obligations to achieve that goal in a time-bound programme agreed to and implemented by all nuclear weapon and other states.

In sum, there is an Indian way, an Indian view and an Indian practice in the use and role of force. We do not claim that it is better or worse than any other way that other nations adopt. It is a result of our own history and experience, and we feel it best suited to our goals and situation. And it too is evolving, both consciously and unconsciously, as is the world around us. It is time now to consciously build our own concepts and strategic thinking, adapted to today's realities and India's environment, including on the role of force.

Force in Today's World

The other issue that you will be considering is how changes in the world and in strategic affairs have affected the role of force.

It seems to me that the changes we see in world politics and the effects of technology are the two factors that have most affected the strategic calculus of those in the international system who might seek to use force for political purposes.

Consider the global political situation first.

With global and regional balances of power characterised by unequal distributions of power; the interdependence between major powers created by globalisation; the state losing its monopoly of violence in contested hegemonies both internally and externally; and the diversity of values espoused by states, world politics today is in an unprecedented state of flux. It does, however seem that the cost to the major powers of using force in their dealings with each other could prevent the emergence of direct conflict between them.

The effects of technology are harder to describe and predict. In the early fifties, there were those who hoped that the unprecedented power of the atom bomb had made war unthinkable and therefore abolished it! Unfortunately, we now know better. In fact we have seen technology place increasingly lethal power in the hands of non-state actors. Terrorism is technologically enabled and knows no boundaries today, even drawing on support from within state systems. After several centuries, once again the state is not the sole or always the predominant factor in the international system. In some cases, it is businesses and individuals who now determine our technological future and it is these units that a successful policy must now increasingly deal with.

We have also seen technology create new domains for contestation, such as cyber space, where the speed of manoeuvre, premium on offense, and the nature of the battle-space make us rethink traditional concepts of deterrence. As technology has expanded the spectrum, the line between conventional and non-conventional warfare has blurred. The definition of force, the classic marker of power, has now expanded, thus changing the utility of force as traditionally configured.

As we enter a world of multiple powers, with rapidly shifting balances, change alone is certain. Unfortunately, force is the hedge chosen by several powers against heightened uncertainty in the international system. The balance is shifting between force and the other instruments of statecraft. We therefore need to develop a new and different statecraft.

If change alone is certain, and if the utility of force in statecraft is itself changing in fundamental ways, it is all the more necessary that we return to the values in which the use of force must be embedded. Ultimately it is not just the logic of politics or technology but the values and purposes of the state and society that determine the choices that we make of the uses and nature of force.

What India seeks is a new security architecture, an open, balanced and inclusive architecture, to correspond to the new situation that is emerging.
The security challenges of the twenty-first century are radically different from those of the twentieth. Nuclear confrontation or war between major powers is not as likely as the threat from derivatives of nuclear deterrence, namely, terrorism and nuclear proliferation, which are being used to subvert the emergence of a plural, secular and democratic international order in the twenty-first century. The challenges of a globalised world cannot be handled by twentieth century military alliances or containment strategies.

Conclusion

So in effect my argument is that in India’s experience the use of force must be governed and circumscribed by the values of state and society. I have also tried to suggest that there may be value in studying the Indian way, the Indian view and Indian practice in the use and role of force in statecraft.

It also seems from recent experience that the utility of force, as traditionally configured and conceived, is of limited value in protecting a society or achieving some policy goals. But one can hardly jump to conclusions about the futility of force when limited war under nuclear conditions remains possible, and when adversaries need to be deterred. This debate will continue.

I wish you success in continuing the debate and in your deliberations.
I am very happy to have this privilege of participating in the Golden Jubilee celebrations of one of India’s premier institutions that the National Defence College is. The National Defence College has shaped the thought processes of many generations of officers of our Armed Forces and Civil Services and has fostered a culture of strategic thinking amongst our policy makers.

In many international exchange programmes it has contributed to strengthening understanding and friendship with key partners. The presence of His Majesty the King of Bhutan at the Golden Jubilee celebrations is a matter of great pride for the National Defence College.

When we look around us, we find that the world of today is not what it was when this illustrious College was established. A lot has changed, both within our country as well as in the global arena. The role of force, which is the topical subject of this seminar, itself has evolved with time - how we define it, the operating environment in which we use it and its place in our larger strategic calculus.

Firstly, the internal and external aspects of national security are getting increasingly inter-linked. Secondly, we must understand the concept of contemporary national security within a wider strategic and economic and social matrix. An enlightened national security policy should therefore be based on a holistic appreciation of the many inter-related aspects and concerns that impinge on a nation's overall wellbeing.

These imperatives have not, however, necessarily changed the importance and role of military power as an essential indispensable component of a nation's power and stability. Defence capabilities buttress the ability of a State to defend itself against armed aggression or insurgency. They act as a deterrence to the use of force by others.

Despite a complex regional and global environment, India's policies are marked by a sense of responsibility and restraint. India's military spending has been assessed to be below the world average as a percentage of GDP. Nevertheless, our Government of India will not hesitate in ensuring that all necessary resources are provided for meeting our essential national security needs.

India has always opposed the unilateral use of force in resolving disputes between States. We have worked consistently for a rule based international order, whether in the field of security, trade or climate change. We have worked to strengthen global security with collective thinking and collective action. Our troop contributions to the United Nations have been noteworthy and have received world wide acclaim. We have been working towards global, universal and non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament and we are for a world free of nuclear weapons. We have consistently advocated the adoption of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

Within our country, a new generation is taking charge of its destiny. The desire for change is much more palpable in every village, in every town and in every city. There is a growing sense of impatience with our working methods just as new impulses of growth and social justice are emerging in India's hinterland. The communications and information technology revolutions are upon us and their effects are visible in our daily lives. I am confident that all things being equal, with a predominantly young population we can expect our economic fundamentals to remain strong in the foreseeable future and we have to work to ensure that this outcome indeed becomes a reality.

The Indian economy has reverted to its higher growth path. This is important because it is only a rapidly growing economy that can create the wealth we need for redistributive measures and increased public spending on education, health, food security and environmental protection.

We have to bring all our resources to bear on tackling the problem of mass poverty in our country. But we also have to use our scarce resources efficiently and give due emphasis to conservation and the management of environment and our biodiversity. This is an area of potential conflict. We have already witnessed wars over oil. The injudicious and inequitable exploitation and distribution of scarce natural resources can sow the seeds of greater conflict among nations and communities in the future and we ought to be aware of these possibilities.
Our development ambitions need a favourable external environment. Global interdependence of nations is a growing economic and political reality. It is therefore essential for India to remain actively engaged with the rest of the world so that we can access capital, high technology, energy and knowledge to propel our growth process.

However, we have to be conscious that just as military power alone cannot assure national security, growth by itself is not the ultimate answer to the multiple challenges we face as a nation. Our ability to develop at the pace and in the direction that we wish to will depend on how well we are able to maintain the internal stability and cohesion of our country.

Naxalism and Left Wing Extremism today pose a great threat to our national security. We recognize that there is a development deficit in all parts of our country. But we should be equally clear that the Indian State cannot and will not allow its authority to be challenged.

Our country has been a victim of terrorism for the past more than two decades. Terrorism has been used as a means to destroy the values on which our nation is built. Terrorist groups enjoy patronage and sanctuaries and do not lack in resources. We therefore have to ensure that our capabilities to combat terrorism remain a step ahead of those of the terrorists. They should be left in no doubt whatsoever about our ability and resolve to defeat them.

We have to be prepared to deal with threats to our security from non-state actors and groups. The problem of piracy off the coast of Somalia in the Gulf of Aden is a case in point. Non-state actors are becoming increasingly fused and employing the best technologies to target open and democratic societies like ours. We have therefore to modernize our defence doctrines to respond to new and non-traditional threats to our national security.

Cyber warfare is an area of emerging concern. I am glad that our Armed Forces and our other agencies are paying increasing attention to building capabilities and expertise in this very essential area.

Assuring our energy security is another major challenge. We do not have the luxury of choosing between one source of energy and another. We must keep all options open, including that of the nuclear energy. Till such time as we are dependent on fossil fuels we must have the capability of safeguarding the security of the sea lanes of communication. The bulk of international oil cargoes pass through the Indian Ocean and this therefore happens to be a region of vital interest and concern to us.

The scale of social and economic transformation that we seek to achieve for our country is unprecedented. If we succeed in this ambitious enterprise within the framework of an open, democratic and pluralistic society we will I sincerely believe profoundly influence the history of nations in the 21st century. For this to happen, we need peace in our hinterland and in our neighbourhood. We need to strengthen our efforts to make the world a more level playing field. The reality of international relations is that power is unevenly distributed. We should not expect those who have power to willingly part with it. We have therefore to stand up on our own feet to defend the values that define us as a nation.

I would like to conclude by placing on record our country's deep appreciation to our gallant Armed Forces for their professionalism, valour and contributions to processes of nation building. The military preparedness and modernization of our Forces are matters of the highest priority for Government.

I end by wishing the National Defence College even greater glory in the next half century.

It is indeed a pleasure to be in the midst of this eminent gathering of security experts. The occasion immediately takes us back to 1960 - to the day when National Defence College was inaugurated by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. NDC must continue to evolve constantly in a natural way and not out of any necessity, or compulsion.

Over the last two days, a series of discussions on national security has been heard. The use of instruments such as threat and use of force has been central to nearly all the discussions. The use of force is perceived to bring about changes in the equations of power between nations - be it in the sphere of politics, security or economy.

India has emerged as an economic powerhouse on the world stage. Its democratic political foundations and economic progress have withstood the challenges of time, which has made India an object of admiration the world over.

Our relations with many of our neighbouring countries are dictated by compulsions of history. However, some nations are always on the lookout to provoke and encourage threats to our security and national integrity. India's strategic location gives rise to many of these crucial challenges in no small measure. Still, India has always desired and worked for peaceful relations with all nations and our neighbours.

Over the last two days, the issue of nuclear deterrence has also been discussed. The use of Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMDs) in general and nuclear weapons in particular, constitutes the gravest threat to peace and stability in the region and the world. Today, not just India, but the international community faces the dangerous possibility of nuclear materials and technologies falling into wrong hands. In such a scenario, autonomy in decision-making in strategic affairs and in the developmental process is an inalienable right of the Indian people.

On its part, India has always exercised self-restraint in proliferation of nuclear weapons, despite not being a signatory to NPT. Our avowed ‘No
First Use’ principle and active participation in disarmament initiatives are ample evidence. The proposed moves must ensure that there is no differentiation between India and the nuclear weapon states.

The potential of destruction has gone up manifold with increasing use of sophisticated technology. Space and cyber domains are being talked of as the next frontiers to be conquered. The next generation of threats will undoubtedly emerge out of cyber security. We need to make our cyber systems as secure and as non-porous as possible.

Global interdependence, multilateralism and destructive capabilities of modern weapons have virtually ruled out the use of direct force. The rise in low-intensity conflicts and irregular modes of warfare reflect this trend. On their part, our Armed Forces are in the process of modernising and evolving by sharpening their skills and capabilities.

At this point, let me draw your attention to a host of diverse issues in international relations - globalisation, state sovereignty, nationalism, global finance, economic development, ecological sustainability, nuclear proliferation, terrorism and other organised crimes, as well as human rights. Nations and regions act and are acted upon by the above-mentioned factors.

Economic growth and technological changes are the prime drivers of the shifts in the balance of power. The changing balance of power however, is accompanied by some avoidable risks. Today, terrorism poses a serious threat to all nations and no nation can today claim to be insulated from such activities. The increase in clandestine proliferation networks in our neighbourhood makes the fight against terror all the more complex.

Today, security has acquired many other dimensions. Nations today need to cooperate on diverse issues that can have a long-term impact on our overall security and well-being. Nations must avoid flashpoints that may escalate into full-blown confrontations. On its part, India has always advocated that all such issues must be negotiated and settled peacefully.

I hope that all the participants would have benefited immensely from the wide-ranging deliberations at the Seminar. I once again extend my heartiest congratulations and best wishes to the alumni and members of NDC for its Golden Jubilee.
Inaugural Address of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the 9th International Oil and Gas Conference and Exhibition (Petrotech-2010).

“I am happy to participate in the inaugural function of Petrotech 2010. This is the ninth conference in the series of Petrotech conferences and I am told that more than 4000 delegates from 50 countries are participating in this event. I extend a very warm welcome to all of them.

The Petrotech conferences provide a forum for discussion dialogue and exchange of views and ideas on a subject of very critical importance to the world community as a whole. Over the years, they have become a leading platform for interaction on issues and possible strategies in the global hydrocarbon industry. They have also served as a movement to unite India’s upstream, midstream and downstream sectors to work towards securing India’s energy needs and requirements. They have come up with several useful ideas and recommendations. To give an example, Petrotech 2001 resulted in the document “India Hydrocarbon Vision” a 20 year roadmap for the country in the area of hydrocarbons. I congratulate the Ministry of Petroleum, Petrotech Society, Oil & Natural Gas Commission and Indian Oil Corporation for organizing these conferences.

The theme of this year’s conference is both very important, challenging and interesting. The concept of a Global Energy Equilibrium suggests a matching of demand and supply of hydrocarbons in a manner which is optimum. But apart from the difficulty of defining what an optimum balance would exactly mean, there are many other factors which have a bearing on how different countries meet their hydrocarbon demand. Oil and gas today are not seen merely as commodities to be traded freely. They are often used by countries to meet their political objectives. More importantly, we have to take into account the changing pattern of growth in the demand for oil. In the last two decades or so, Asia’s share in the growth in demand for hydrocarbons has risen substantially while that of the OECD countries and the European Union has declined. This shift has been caused by high rates of economic growth and increasing populations in many Asian countries. There are supply-side uncertainties on the horizon. Many mature fields are declining in production. Some energy endowed countries have problems in augmenting production because of various reasons, including lack of the required technology and sometimes political uncertainty. Another challenge that faces all the countries of the world today is one arising out of the challenges of climate change. Because of this challenge, the demand on energy technologies goes beyond productivity and efficiency issues.
The emerging energy technologies have to be adequately equipped to manage carbon emissions. We also need a rethink on the traditional energy basket which is presently loaded in favour of fossil fuels. I am sure that such important issues will be considered in the deliberations in your conference to the benefit of the participants and their countries.

The challenges faced by most of the emerging economies today are similar.
Their domestic sources are often inadequate to meet their growing demand for energy. And developing domestic sources involves huge capital investment. Like other emerging economies, India needs adequate supplies of energy at affordable prices to meet the demand of its rapidly growing economy. Hydrocarbons will continue to be our major source of energy for quite sometime in the future. Most of our requirement of hydrocarbons is met through imports. In India, the demand over the next 10 years will increase by over 40 percent whereas the increase in the supply from the maturing oil-fields is expected to be around 12 per cent. The Indian Government is therefore encouraging national oil companies to pursue equity oil and gas opportunities overseas. For these reasons, we seek to build strong economic partnerships with other producing countries and their oil and gas industries to the mutual benefit of each other. We also seek to work together with other countries especially those which are active in the oil and gas space to tackle the problem of climate change. I would suggest the participants of Petrotech-2010 to explore the possibility of an association of oil and gas companies to deliberate upon such issues of shared interest.

I understand that Petrotech 2010 is being organized as a carbon neutral event. I compliment the organizers for setting an example on a contemporary issue of great global importance. I am also told that our national oil corporations have invested heavily in a number of Clean Development Mechanism (CDM) projects. This will help our Government's efforts to build a greener economy.

I am sure that diverse spectrum of knowledge and experience in the field of energy exploration and production which the participants bring to this conference will result in new ideas that would help in our collective pursuit of energy security. With these words, I wish the deliberations of Petrotech 2010 all success."

023. Inaugural Address by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the International Seminar titled "Indian Culture in a Globalised World" organised to commemorate the 60th Anniversary of the founding of Indian Council of Cultural Relations (ICCR) and 122nd Birth anniversary of Maulana Abul Kalam Azad.

New Delhi, November 11, 2010.

"This conference coincides, purposely, with the birth anniversary of a great Indian whose name is associated with this auditorium. I refer of course to Abul Kalam Azad whom Jawaharlal Nehru described as 'an extraordinarily interesting companion' at a time when they were incarcerated in adjoining cells in a British jail. Many years later, Nehru compared him to 'the great men of Renaissance, or, in a later period, of the Encyclopaedists who preceded the French Revolution, men of intellect, men of action.'

It has been rightly said that Maulana Azad's thought process transcended national boundaries and imbibed the best of different worlds - Indian, West Asian and Western. He was prone to question the fundamentals. In one of his early essays he urged his readers 'to break the chains forged by centuries of custom and habit, belief and practice, and adopt a new line of thought and action... to acquire a new body, a new mind, a new imagination, new senses...'. He was thus responding to the intellectual stirrings of the age and was perhaps an early proponent of culture unbound by territoriality.

Our subject today verges on the amorphous. It seeks elucidation and linkages of three concepts: globalization, culture, and Indian culture. While the first is commonly viewed solely as an economic phenomenon, the other two have been subjected to considerable philosophical and sociological analysis. All three tempt the uninitiated to wonder off in a speculative labyrinth. Hence the need, as Hegel would have put it, 'to see things with the eye of reason.'

Even in its economic sense, it is essential to be clear about the meaning of globalization. The concept is viewed in two distinct ways: in a positive sense to describe a process of integration into the world economy, and in a normative sense to prescribe a strategy of development based on a rapid integration with the world economy.

The economic aspect, critical though it is, does not cover the entire ambit of the phenomenon that has political, social and cultural dimensions. Much light on these was shed by the Report of the World Commission on the Social Dimensions of Globalisation published by the International Labour Organisation in 2004. The Report brings out the point that economic globalization has developed in 'an ethical vacuum' and has created 'global imbalances that are morally unacceptable and practically unsustainable.' It urges the need for basing it on 'universally shared values and respect for human rights and individual dignity'.

Other dimensions of globalisation are equally relevant. To the sociologist, it is associated with modernity, to international relations theorist with global governance, and to the men and women of science with a range of technologies and mediums that have qualitatively transformed human communications and connectivity.

The transformation in the processes and forms of connectivity has led, as in past ages, to a complex series of interaction between peoples and cultures. It has been suggested, and rightly so, that a culture is no longer a discreet world and is instead transformed ‘to accord with a world of ruptured boundaries’ that seek reciprocal recognition. The level and intensity of these interactions and the convergence of activities associated with them have been uneven rather than uniform and have depended on the totality of forces at work in specific cases. What is clear is that cultural hybridity, not cultural purity, is an unavoidable outcome. This goes hand in hand with the erosion of the traditional concepts of the nation-state, national economies and national culture and tends to produce new forms of global mass culture dominated or heavily influenced by new ways of expression and imagery.

Some definitional clarity is essential to this discussion. How, in the first place, do we define culture? For our purpose today, a working definition is available in UNESCO’s Universal Declaration on Cultural Diversity adopted in November 2001. It defines culture as ‘the set of distinctive spiritual, material, intellectual and emotional features of a society or social group, and that encompasses, in addition to art and literature, life styles, ways of living together, value systems, traditions and belief.’ Acknowledging that cultural diversity is as necessary for humankind as biodiversity is for nature, it notes that globalisation creates conditions for dialogue of cultures and civilisations. The relevance of cultural interaction is highlighted in the Declaration’s assertion that while creativity draws on the roots of cultural tradition it flourishes in contact with other cultures.

In our common parlance, culture has connotations to the idea of a fixed locality. Globalisation, and the complex connectivity that goes with it, thus threatens this understanding of culture and introduces the notion of mobility and a loosening of the linkage to specific area or territory. Nor do the latter remain uninfluenced by the process of this loosening and global cultural flows do invade the local space. To that extent, cultural practices remain at the heart of globalisation and shape it. By the same token these cultural flows, made inevitable through the complex connectivity unleashed, generate concerns because they bring about frequent confrontation with ‘the Other’ and induce debates about identity.
The Iranian philosopher Abdolkarim Soroush has addressed the question of cultural identity and cultural allegiance in terms relevant to our discourse. Identity, he asserts, is to be viewed as dynamic and evolving; he adds that 'what causes fear of other cultures is the lack of a strong cultural digestive system and also the misconception that each culture is an indivisible monolith, accepting one part of which equals accepting the whole.'

The problem of digestion, it must be admitted, is infinitely complex in a vast land like ours. Our preference has been for the salad bowl rather than for the melting pot. The question of striking a balance between globalisation and identity, between authenticity and modernisation, and between the desire to be oneself and the temptation to be like others, would thus remain a teasing one.

Before we consider the place of Indian culture in such a new world, perhaps not yet a brave one, an element of clarity is essential about it. Jawaharlal Nehru's precision of expression in the matter is noteworthy. Indian culture, he wrote, is 'the palimpsest on which the imprints of succeeding generations have unrecognisably merged.' Mahatma Gandhi expressed it differently. 'I want the cultures of all lands', he said, 'to be blown about my house as freely as possible but I refuse to be blown off my feet by any.' These ideas have been amplified by the historian K.N. Pannikar and I can do no better than to cite a few relevant passages from a lecture delivered by him at Bangalore in 2004:

'The political history of India is characterised by a continuous cyclical process, centrifugal on the one hand and centripetal on the other…The cultural make up of the nation is enmeshed in this political process…

'The dynamism of Indian culture is derived from this diversity which moulded the cultural practices of the people…the coming together of people of diverse cultural moorings and traditions had several cultural consequences. These have been variously conceived as synthesis, assimilation, acculturation, and eclecticism…The crucial question is whether Indian culture is conceived as a static phenomenon, tracing its identity to a single unchanging source, or a dynamic phenomenon, critically and creatively interrogating all that is new…

'The Indian Renaissance and the national movement recognised the positive significance of cultural plurality for national identity and sought to further the syncretic tendencies already present in social and religious life; hence the nationalist notion of unity in diversity.'

The participants in this seminar include a great many scholars of eminence who would dwell on different aspects of Indian culture and the interest displayed in it by the world beyond our borders. I would, therefore, like to confine my remarks to some aspects of public policy for which the ethos of Indian culture has some relevance. I refer to the notion of accommodation of diversity in modern societies.

The uniqueness of Indian experience is principally responsible for this. Our plural society is an existential reality; we have consciously adopted a democratic polity and a secular state structure. Our diversity emanates from the first characteristic, and is expressed through the second and the third. Diversity is an Indian passion: we live it, tolerate it, accommodate it, and relish it. Contestation is thus inherent, but it manifests itself most of the time in an agreed framework. A historian of modern India, Ramachandra Guha, has observed that 'at no other time or place have social conflicts been so richly diverse, so vigorously articulated, so eloquently manifested in art and literature, or addressed with such directness by the political system or the media.'

Accommodation of diversity is not an Indian preserve. In a world so full of variety, it must necessarily occur elsewhere too. It has been observed that 'homogenous national states are a pipedream.' Globalisation and its inherent connectivity and mobility have added to it in ample measure. The critical question then is of the manner in which individual societies respond to it.

A cursory survey of the past five decades reveals patterns of response ranging from rejection to accommodation in varying degrees. The progression of comprehension has not been uniform; in fact, in recent years and in many societies, regression is the dominant trend. The retreat has been both at the level of theory and of policy. In 1999 the Canadian scholar Will Kymlika proclaimed that 'multiculturalists have won the day' in making their case for difference-conscious notion of justice and concomitant laws and policies in the liberal state. Recent experience, however, indicates a 'tendency to take multiculturalism as a description of a diverse society rather than a prescription for state policy.'

This distinction between description and prescription is critical to the accommodation of diversity. Most states in the modern world would meet the first criterion; a far lesser number, however, qualify for the second. Furthermore, there are some who live up to the ideal in fair weather only and regress under stressful socio-economic conditions. Such regressions add to social tensions and aggravate matters. A good many contemporary instances of the latter are fresh in public memory.

It is suggested by some that the tidal wave of economic globalisation carries with it the imperative of cultural homogenisation. Empirical evidence does not sustain this argument. A competitive edge internationally necessitates quality and creativity; the latter is influenced by the cultural environment in which the local rather than international plays the dominant role. The appreciation and celebration of diversity thus becomes an economic strategy as well as a cultural and political one.

It is here that Indian culture has a relevance to the globalising world of today. Being the confluence of ideas, values and traditions it cannot but be inherently syncretic. While maintaining the purity of individual traditions, dance forms, music, literature and art, it accepts the authenticity of others and often synthesises them into newer and richer forms. The same holds good for manifestations of diversity in the daily life of the people, be it in language, cuisine, clothing, behaviour patterns. The imperative of a common market, and of a common political system, has induced intermingling. All of this finds reflection in popular culture and above all in films. The instinctive Indian impulse is to evade the either/or question and seek an approach that accommodates both. Fringe trends apart, assimilation and homogenisation are viewed neither as feasible nor desirable.
The richness of values secreted in the interstices of Indian culture was known and appreciated long before the era of present day globalisation. It left its imprint on the culture and civilisation of East Asian, South-east Asian, Central Asian and West Asian lands. The Western world too discovered some aspects of it in the colonial period. The new world now taking shape amplifies and magnifies them. Many factors contribute to it: the speed of connectivity, the number of Indians abroad, the popularity of commercial Hindi films and yoga and of the literary products of Indian writers in English, the projection and acceptance of the work of painters and sculptors etc in addition to philosophy and classical music, classical dances and other art forms. An overarching backdrop to these is provided by the emergence of India as a major economic and political factor on the global scene.

These traits of culture go beyond national experience in the political sense and are reflective of the genius of a civilisation. So long as Indians continue to imbibe and practice them, there is every reason to anticipate an expanding impact of Indian culture in the world of tomorrow.

I commenced this talk with Maulana Azad. Allow me to conclude with a Persian couplet recited by him urging receptivity to an audience:

Tafawut ast ma’ani shanidan man-o-tu

Tu bastan-e-dar, o man fateh-bab mi shawam

What you and I hear are different. You hear the sound

Of closing doors but I of doors that open

This openness of mind to ideas and practices is the principal ingredient of Indian culture. It is to be nurtured and cherished and must never be allowed to be tampered with for any reasons.

I thank Dr. Karan Singh ji for inviting me today. I am confident that the proceedings of this Seminar would contribute greatly to the compendium of perceptions on this very relevant subject."

Madam Speaker,

I rise to inform the House of Hon'ble Prime Ministers recent bilateral visits to Japan and Malaysia, and also to Vietnam and South Korea for attending the 8th India-ASEAN Summit & 5th East Asia Summit in Hanoi and the G-20 Summit in Seoul.

JAPAN

2. Prime Minister visited Japan from October 24-26, 2010 for the Annual Summit with the Prime Minister of Japan. Such summits have been institutionalized and held regularly since 2006. The desire to deepen relations with India came through in PM's all meetings in Tokyo with Prime Minister Kan and important members of his Cabinet, with leaders of opposition parties as well as captains of Japanese industry. PM also had the opportunity to call on and exchange views with Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Japan.

3. PM conveyed appreciation for Japan's generous Official Development Assistance to India over the years, especially in flagship infrastructure projects such as the Delhi Metro, Dedicated Freight Corridor Project and Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. To corporate Japan, PM underlined the attractiveness of India as an investment destination and the complementarities between our two countries in terms of technology and manpower. Both Prime Ministers announced the conclusion of negotiations on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) between our two countries. Japan is completing its internal procedures following which the CEPA will be signed and later implemented, leading to a quantum increase in our trade and investment with each other. The Japanese Prime Minister also proposed the establishment of a comprehensive Ministerial-level Economic Dialogue to drive our economic relations forward. PM has agreed with his suggestion.

4. PM complimented Prime Minister Kan for his bold decision in June this year to commence negotiations with India on an Agreement for Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy. Given Japanese sensitivities on this issue, such a decision is further indication of the strategic nature of India-Japan ties. Both Prime Ministers have urged our negotiators to conclude such an Agreement at an early date. PM also expressed the hope that Japanese firms will soon be able to contribute to civil nuclear power generation in India.

5. India and Japan have agreed to work together on several regional and international issues including the emerging East Asian architecture, for reform of the United Nations including its Security Council and on climate change.

6. I am confident that his visit to Japan and his interactions with Prime Minister Kan and other leaders will contribute substantially to enhanced engagement with Japan which is becoming one of our most vital and dynamic international partnerships.

MALAYSIA

7. Prime Minister's official visit to Malaysia from 26 to 28 October 2010 was at the invitation of the Malaysian PM Dato' Sri Mohd Najib Tun Abdul Razak. During the visit, PM had detailed discussions with his counterpart on all facets of bilateral relations, as well as regional and global issues of mutual interest.

8. Hon'ble Prime Minister delivered the Khazanah Global Lecture at the invitation of PM Najib in his capacity as Chairman of Khazana Nasional, which is the investment arm of the Malaysian Government.

9. Both the Prime Ministers endorsed the successful conclusion of negotiations for a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) covering goods, services and investment and an Agreement was signed for implementing CECA on 1 July 2011.

10. Other MoUs and Agreement were signed during the visit in the field of information technology, tourism, traditional systems of medicine, scientific research and culture.

11. India agreed to set up a Joint ICT Talent Development Consultative Committee involving the two governments, as well as, industry players, to make specific recommendations for enhancing collaboration in this field.
12. The two PMs launched the India-Malaysia CEOs Forum comprising of 18 business leaders from each side. The Forum will provide specific recommendations to the two Governments on improving business environment and enhancing investment and trade between the two countries.

13. Both the Prime Ministers identified various elements to develop Strategic Partnership between the two countries. These include maintaining regular dialogue and contact at the summit level; biennial meetings of the Joint Commission headed by the Foreign Ministers; enhancing defence exchanges, cooperation and joint collaboration on projects of mutual interest in the defence sector; enhancing cooperation in counter-terrorism, including through information sharing and the establishment of a bilateral Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism at an early date; further strengthening bilateral trade and investment cooperation; expanding cooperation in infrastructure development and exploring possibilities for development of cooperation in financial sector; studying the possibility of enhancing the scope and level of joint collaboration in the hydrocarbons sector between PETRONAS of Malaysia and ONGC Videsh Limited of India in third countries; and identifying possible collaborative projects in the new and renewable energy sector through the establishment of a Joint Working Group.

14. The two Prime Ministers agreed that a comprehensive reform of the United Nations remains a priority in order for the organization to effectively address today's global challenges. They agreed to work in partnership towards achieving a more representative, more efficient and more effective UN Security Council especially its expansion in both permanent and non-permanent categories;

15. Both the Prime Ministers jointly launched the 'Little India' project in Brickfields. Speaking on the occasion, Prime Minister stated that the decision of Malaysian Government to dedicate the area of Brickfields, which is one of the oldest Indian settlements in the country, as “Little India” is a tribute to the contribution to nation building of all Malaysians of Indian origin. PM also announced that India would be presenting a Torana Gate to the residents of Brickfields as a mark of India-Malaysia friendship.

16. Prime Minister visited Vietnam to attend 8th India-ASEAN Summit & 5th East Asia Summit.

17. The 8th India-ASEAN Summit on 30th October provided India with the opportunity to hold close consultations with our ASEAN colleagues on the progress of our relationship. Our ASEAN colleagues exuded warmth and friendship for India and expressed their desire to take our relationship to new heights.

18. As a rapidly growing economy, India offers to ASEAN the prospect of a productive economic relationship. An economically robust relationship between the two sides has enormous potential. Keeping this in view, a new and comprehensive India-ASEAN Plan of Action 2010-2015 was adopted at the Summit. The phenomenal growth of our trade during the last decade has inspired us to conclude a trade-in-goods agreement with ASEAN which has become operative from January 1, 2010. We hope to conclude the Trade-in-Services and Investment agreement soon to complete the ASEAN-India Free Trade Area, which will act as a catalyst to bring down the cost of production on both sides and further increase our trade.

19. The leaders recognized the importance of connectivity to ensure free flow of goods and people through the region. In this connection, progress of ongoing projects in promoting North-east of India as the bridge to ASEAN, such as Trilateral Highway and its extension to Lao PDR and Cambodia, was reviewed by the leaders. The leaders acknowledged India’s readiness to offer assistance in the forthcoming ASEAN ICT master plan to improve ICT connectivity. In addition to about 380 air-flights operating between India and ASEAN, the leaders encouraged the officials of both sides to conclude an India-ASEAN Air Transport Agreement at an early date.

20. Distinguished members of parliament would kindly recall that at the last Summit Prime Minister had proposed an India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit in India in 2012. I am happy to announce that the idea has met with a positive response from the ASEAN side. A series of events beginning with India-ASEAN Business Summit and Exhibition from March 2-6, 2010 are proposed to be held culminating in the Commemorative Summit. India and ASEAN have agreed to form an Eminent Persons Group, whose Terms of Reference were adopted at the Summit. The Eminent Persons Group will draft a new India-ASEAN vision 2020 document for presenting at the Commemorative Summit, taking into account the shift of global economic currents towards Asia in the 21st Century.

21. Prime Minister announced new initiatives in the field of people-to-people contacts, space cooperation, capacity building and Information and Communication Technology as a means to infuse more depth in our relationship. Specifically, the initiatives included extension of Visa-on-arrival facility to nationals of Cambodia, Vietnam, Philippines and Lao PDR from January 1, 2011, setting-up a Centre for Tracking and Data Reception and imaging facility in an ASEAN country, establishing Vocational Training Centres, and offer of 100 IT scholarships to each of the 10 ASEAN countries over the next 5 years. I am glad to say that these initiatives were welcomed and appreciated by the ASEAN countries.

22. Prime Minister also attended the 5th East Asia Summit on the same day. The East Asia Summit (EAS) mechanism provides India the forum to engage with a larger number of countries of the region in both strategic and economic spheres. This year marked the entry of US and Russia into the EAS process as ‘guest of the host’ with formal entry scheduled for 2011. We welcome their entry which, we believe, will add to peace and stability in the region and also enhance the ongoing cooperation. We appreciate ASEAN’s efforts in piloting the Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia.

23. PM took the opportunity to brief his EAS colleagues on the progress made by India on the Nalanda University Project, including the passage of Nalanda University Act by this august parliament. The unanimous passing of the Nalanda University Bill by both the houses reflected our desire to revive the historical legacy of this world center of learning and education.

24. Madam Speaker, we were able to drive our agenda of regional integration with success. We will work on all the potential ideas, which have been shared with us for implementation, with re-doubled effort and take our relationship with ASEAN and East Asia to new heights.
G-20 Summit

25. The G-20 Seoul Summit organised under the theme 'Shared Growth Beyond Crisis' was attended by G-20 members along with Ethiopia (chair of NEPAD or the New Partnership of Africa's Development), Malawi (chair of African Union), Vietnam (chair of ASEAN), Spain and Singapore. The United Nations, World Bank, IMF, ILO, WTO, FSB and OECD were also represented.

26. The Summit meeting was fruitful and it delivered the Seoul Action Plan based on a review of the global economic situation and the progress of the 'Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth' pertaining to country-specific mutual assessment process (MAP) or peer review. The Summit mandated further country-led work under the Framework Working Group (co-chaired by Canada and India) regarding 'indicative guidelines' in the context of global imbalances with technical support from IMF and other international organisations for consideration by the G-20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors.

27. The Summit endorsed international financial institutions (IFI) reforms, in particular the shift in IMF quota share of over 6% in favour of the emerging market and developing countries (EMDCs) by 2012. The Summit also endorsed the financial regulatory reforms by way of Basel-III agreements for implementation upto 2019.

28. Firmly putting development on the agenda of the G-20, the Summit approved the Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth which marked the launch of an ambitious G-20 development agenda. This G-20 development dimension is based on six principles, i.e. focus on economic growth, global development partnership, global or regional systemic issues, private sector participation, complementarity and outcome orientation. The G-20 Multi-Year Action Plan comprises nine development pillars, viz. Infrastructure (including a High-Level Panel on infrastructure financing), human resources development, trade, private investment and job creation, food security, growth with resilience, domestic resource mobilisation, knowledge sharing and financial inclusion.

30. The Summit reiterated the commitment against protectionism in all its forms. It sent a strong political impetus for completing WTO’s Doha Development Round of trade negotiations during 2011.

31. The Summit provided a political message for the success of climate change negotiations at the forthcoming UNFCCC COP-16 meeting in December 2010 in Cancun, Mexico.

32. The Summit addressed the issue of global imbalances. In this context, Prime Minister stated at the Summit that "Recycling surplus savings into investment in developing countries will not only address the immediate demand imbalance, it will also help to address developmental imbalances. In other words, we should leverage imbalances of one kind to redress imbalances of the other kind." Prime Minister’s statement was endorsed most positively by a number of Heads of State and Government attending the Summit including the leaders from Africa.

33. We view the outcome of the G-20 Seoul Summit as positive. Our efforts were successful in bringing the development issue into the very forefront of the sustainable, manageable growth process and we stressed the need to address the fundamental imbalance which is the development imbalance between rich and poor countries. We are committed to engaging proactively and constructively with our G-20 partners for implementing the decisions of the past G-20 Summits including the recent Seoul Summit, as we move forward to the next i.e. sixth G-20 Summit in Cannes, France in November 2011.

34. On the sidelines of the Seoul Summit, Prime Minister had bilateral meetings with the Leaders of Canada, Ethiopia, Mexico and UK as well as the Secretary-General of UN during which they discussed bilateral and international issues of mutual interest.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.
It is indeed a privilege for me to speak at the National Maritime Foundation which has made an invaluable contribution to raising maritime awareness and in promoting the concept of 'Maritime India'- a task that Sardar KM Pannikar, India's foremost naval historian, would have warmly applauded. I congratulate Admiral Arun Prakash and his team at the Foundation for their efforts. I thank them for the invitation to speak here today.

2. India and the Indian Ocean are inseparable. In the midst of the third largest ocean in the world, India's location is in many ways her destiny. That is not just a statement regarding a fact of geography but of deeper civilizational, historical, cultural, economic and political linkages that have been forged between India and the Ocean that bears its name. Throughout history, India's wellbeing and prosperity was linked to its access to the Indian Ocean region. It is no coincidence that the decolonization of the littoral countries of the Indian Ocean region was catalyzed by India's independence and emergence as a free nation. The Indian diaspora is a prominent presence in almost all countries of the region. Apart from the Monsoon, the India-link, in its broadest sense, is the single common thread that is visible in the Indian Ocean region.

3. The organic unity of the Indian Ocean was fractured during the colonial period. Now, the winds of globalization are bringing a fresh bond of unity in the Indian Ocean region. Globalization is inseparable from its maritime dimension, as 90% of global trade by weight and volume is carried by sea. India is a major stakeholder and beneficiary of globalization. As an emerging global economic and trading power, India has thus a vital stake in maritime security. India’s global mercantile trade has grown phenomenally and now constitutes 41% of our GDP. 77% of our trade by value, and over 90% by volume is carried by sea. India is now projected to become the fourth largest economy in the world by 2020, after China, Japan and the US. Our dependence on sea borne trade is expected to expand exponentially. The maritime dimension is also vital for our energy security. India’s oil consumption is expected to rise to 245 million tons annually by 2020, with the country likely to be the world’s single largest importer of oil by 2050. Our economic growth would continue to be critically depended upon the unhindered flow of oil. The Indian Ocean region is important for India in terms of trade and as a source of energy supplies. Trade with the littoral States of the Indian Ocean constitutes close to 40% of India’s total trade.

4. The Indian Ocean is virtually a land-locked ocean. It is distinguished by a land rim on three sides; Asia to its north, Africa to its west and SE Asia and Australia to its East. Access to the region is only possible through seven established gateways or choke points. To the East, the Straits of Malacca, Sunda and Lombok connect the South China Sea to the Indian Ocean. The congestion and the narrow width of these straits make them susceptible to possible terrorist attacks. The Malacca Straits are the primary route, through which more than 50,000 vessels transit annually. To the west, the world’s busiest shipping lanes pass through the Strait of Hormuz, which connects the Persian Gulf to the Indian Ocean. The Malacca Straits handle 40% of world trade; the Straits of Hormuz handle 40% of all traded crude oil. It is not hard to imagine the consequences to the global economy if these choke points are indeed choked. The Indian Ocean is also one of the world’s most important waterways, with 50% of the container traffic and more than 70% of crude and oil products being carried through it. The disruption of energy flows in particular is a considerable security concern for littoral states, as a majority of their energy lifelines are sea-based. The world thus has a vital stake in the stability of the archipelagic countries. It’s not just the use of waterways that is important, but access to them as well. Landlocked countries are now therefore gaining a new geopolitical significance, for transit roads and pipelines.
5. It is now a widely accepted truism that the geopolitics of the Indian Ocean region is a microcosm of global geopolitical trends. There are countries which are developing rapidly; on the other hand, there are those which are on the brink of collapse. In between there are those which are emerging from conflict and show promise of making rapid strides in the future. There are a large number of democracies in the region but it cannot be said that democracy is a universal norm for the region. A number of countries suffer from weak governance and regime instability, vulnerable to non-state actors driven by extremist ideologies. Threats to stability in the region abound, ranging from terrorism, piracy, war-lordism, proliferation, smuggling and drug trafficking. The situation off the Horn of Africa is a source of particular concern. The situation in land-locked Afghanistan also impacts on the Indian Ocean region, as a substantial portion of the international military presence there is dependent on support from maritime assets and capabilities. The impact of climate change is of concern to several island states that face a threat to their very survival. But, the bright side is that parts of the Indian Ocean littoral are witnessing an unprecedented economic boom, driven by positive economic and demographic factors. The overall picture is therefore mixed and complicated, not lending itself to easy categorization or solutions. What is certain is that India stands out both in what it has achieved and the untapped potential that still lies ahead. In short, the future of the Indian Ocean region is unthinkable without India.

6. By any objective criteria, India has very significant maritime stakes in the Indian Ocean. We have a coastline of over 7500 kms. Between the Lashwadeep and the Andaman and Nicobar chains we have over 600 islands, with the southernmost tip just 90 nautical miles from Indonesia and the northern most tip less than 10 nautical miles from Myanmar. In terms of maritime security terms these are significant assets. Our EEZ is more than 2.5 million square KMs. The mining areas of over 150,000 sq KMs allotted to India under UNCLOS are about 2000 kms from our southernmost tip. We have significant interests in Antarctica as well. For several decades, India was the only Asian country to possess an aircraft carrier. Our naval force posture in the coming years will require the necessary capabilities in terms of reach, sustaining power and sea control. Following the sea-borne terrorist attacks on 26/11 in Mumbai, concerted efforts have been undertaken for strengthening maritime and coastal security against threats from sea, with greater involvement of the Navy, the Coast Guard and all the coastal states.

7. As India’s development is predicated on a stable geo-strategic environment, as a mature and responsible nation, it is in our interest that we play an active role in the architecture of maritime security based on the twin principles of shared security and shared prosperity. India is well poised to play a leadership role in this regard. We have friendly and productive bilateral relations with almost all the states in the Indian Ocean region. Our bilateral relations with Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, Indonesia, Mauritius, Maldives, Seychelles, Oman, Madagascar, Kenya and others give us unprecedented access to a wide swathe of the Indian Ocean. Some of these are territorial neighbours but all are maritime neighbours. We have historical and civilisational ties with many of these countries. Some of these countries have large Indian communities. The broad spectrum of our ties with these countries has a strong economic and socio-cultural dimension. Maritime security thus gives us a new perspective to our bilateral relations with these countries. We are actively engaged with almost all regional bodies that are either based in or border the Indian Ocean region- ranging from SAARC, BIMSTEC, ARF, ASEAN, GCC, SADC to the AU. We are interested in building a web of cooperative relations that brings together all the stakeholders based on mutual interest and benefit. Our ‘soft power’ gives us advantages that few other countries can match in this region. There is almost universal acceptance of India’s credentials and recognition of the vital contribution that we can make for stability and prosperity of the entire region.

Our economic growth acts as a driver for growth across the entire region. Our bilateral and multilateral assistance programmes are crucial for the security and development requirements of a number of countries. Drawing on its human resources and scientific expertise, India has been assisting traditionally in areas such as agriculture, health, education and IT, as also in capacity building in areas such as hydrography, oceanography, dealing with climate change, etc. It is true that optimizing our economic and technical assistance programmes, even while integrating them with our larger security and strategic interests would yield even greater benefits. This will require leveraging India’s soft power and technological strengths as also ensuring greater synergy amongst the various instruments that we can deploy - diplomacy, trade and economic factors and military assistance.

8. We are proud of the fact that our Navy has emerged as a versatile and flexible diplomatic instrument to mark India’s presence in the region. The Ministry of External Affairs and the Navy have partnered together as maritime diplomats. There is hardly a port in the region where our ships are not welcome. We have the distinction of undertaking naval exercises in the Indian Ocean with all the major navies of the world. The prompt assistance provided by the Navy in the aftermath of the Indian Ocean Tsunami was an eye-opener with regard to our capabilities for providing timely disaster relief and humanitarian assistance. The Navy did a commendable job in helping in the evacuation of over 2280 people from strife torn Lebanon under Operation Sukoon. The Indian Ocean Naval Symposium (IONS) initiative, launched by Indian Navy has provided a forward looking framework for constructive engagement among the navies of the region. This initiative has tremendous potential as an inclusive forum for all stakeholders, which have legitimate interests in the region. Under the ARF, India has contributed to discussions on maritime security. India has also contributed to regional efforts for safe navigation in the Malacca straits.

9. While India is seen as a net security provider, we cannot carry the burden of regional security on our shoulders alone. There is no doubt that maintaining a favourable maritime balance will require development of a credible naval presence with adequate assets commensurate with our defence and security interests as well as those required to discharge the role and responsibility expected of India by the international community. The era of gun boat diplomacy is long over. A robust Indian naval presence is seen as a necessary contribution to a cooperative regional security order. The cooperative burden sharing of naval forces to fight piracy off the coast of Somalia is a case in point. Our navy has discharged its responsibilities with distinction and is viewed as an indispensable partner not just by regional states but by the UN, EU and NATO naval forces. India is engaged with other countries on capacity-building and consultations in the area of anti-piracy to devise measures for keeping open access points to avoid choking international trade. While we are addressing the immediate threats to maritime security, the international community must find ways of dealing with the failed or failing states where violence and institutional fragility are being exploited by non-State actors and others which have a presence of international terrorist groups on the Indian Ocean littoral which in fact radiate instability in the region as a whole. The recent global financial and economic crisis has aggravated the fragility of many littoral States, some of which are among LDCs.

10. While addressing the threats posed by non-state actors is important, we would also require states themselves to abide by “rules of the road.” Maintaining free access to the sea is very much part of defending the ‘Global Commons’. This will require a common vision of maritime security and freedom of navigation in accordance with universally agreed principles of international law and peaceful settlement of maritime territorial disputes. The maritime balance in the Indian Ocean region is linked to developments in South East Asia, the Pacific Rim and the Mediterranean. It is unrealistic to presume that we would be able to insulate our region from instability elsewhere. Maritime Security cannot be sustained if there is an exclusive focus on the military dimension alone, for it has economic, political and social dimensions as well. It is also unrealistic to expect that any single power can presume for itself the role of a “sea-based balancer”. Lastly, cooperation on maritime security issues could provide the necessary trust and confidence to build a flexible and adaptable Pan Asian Security Order.

11. A popular theme in the media is to project the Indian Ocean as the new theatre of big power conflict. A widely read analyst who has also published a book on the Indian Ocean recently spoke of India being a “global pivot state supreme”, in the so-called tussle between the United States and China. While this description is flattering, we do not make policy on the basis of ‘feel-good labels’. There is no inevitability of conflict. India views the emerging trends with realism-building a sustainable regional security will require a cooperative effort among all regional countries on the one hand and all users of the Indian Ocean. As the main resident power in the Indian Ocean region, we have a vital stake in the evolution of a stable, open, inclusive and balanced security and cooperation architecture in the region. By definition this would need to be a consensus based process, where all the stakeholders who have a legitimate presence in the region make their respective contributions to regional security. India stands for harnessing the forces of geo-politics for new forms of cooperation rather than it being used as an excuse for domination by any single country. That is the vision that we aspire to. And that is the vision we look forward to realizing our partnership with all countries of the Indian Ocean region.

12. Before I conclude, let me briefly speak about the Indian Ocean Rim - Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC) that came into existence in 1997. India was one of the 14 founding member States. Given the growing strategic significance of the Indian Ocean, this organisation is the only one which aims to create a web of cooperative relationships between the now 18 member countries spanning three continents and three water bodies: this provides the right balance in terms of developing the littoral countries, across the political and geo-political spectrum, in a direction where economic, trade, academic and cultural cooperation constitutes the core of these relationships. The political and the strategic subtext of this organisation’s activities is very relevant in the current times. Although the organization has not been able to fulfill its stated potential as yet, it does provide us with a useful platform to articulate our inclusive non-polarising vision of the future of the Indian Ocean and its littoral.

13. Let me conclude by commending the Maritime Foundation for their valuable contribution to the national discourse on maritime issues.

Thank you.
026. Address by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at National Defence College on 'Challenges in India's Foreign Policy'.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

Commandant NDC Lt. General Prakash Menon

Faculty members

Ladies and Gentlemen

A topic of the nature on which I speak today should I think focus on both the challenges and opportunities before our foreign policy today. In the sixty years since its inception, our foreign policy has evolved and adjusted to meet new challenges and unprecedented crisis situations, as well as risen to meet the needs of intensified economic engagement with the world - an engagement that is designed to meet the needs of an increased inflow of capital, technology, ideas and innovation for our development and our re-emergence as one of the world's leading economies. 63 years after her "tryst with destiny", India is now being seen as a major power. Our democratic system, which sustains our re-emergence after three centuries of depletion of our economic strength, is based on a visionary Constitution, whose 60th anniversary we celebrate this year. It is in our enlightened self-interest to propel the peaceful advancement of India as a nation by ensuring a trouble-free, peaceful environment as we participate on an equal footing with our global partners in the process of globalization in the 21st century.

2. Against this broad perspective, we can now examine the challenges in India's foreign policy. An article of steadfast faith in our foreign policy, has been to ensure a peaceful, secure and stable neighbourhood, so as to safeguard peace, security and development within our own borders, and it is with this perspective that India is developing a mutually beneficial relationship with her neighbours. We cannot be insulated from our neighbourhood; our growth and prosperity has a beneficial impact on the region, and increasingly, we will have to build closer connectivities in trade, communications and other networks of interaction between ourselves and our neighbours. At the same time, instability and centrifugal forces such as those arising from religious extremism and terrorism in our neighbourhood can and do threaten our own security and development.

3. I shall now focus on our relationship with our neighbours since this is the first, and perhaps the most intense, level of engagement in our foreign policy. Nepal is passing through a period of political uncertainty and the consensus required for concluding the constitution drafting is still elusive.
As a close neighbour and friend, developments in Nepal are of concern to us, more so as we share an open border of around 1750 kms. Even as we engage with political parties to resolve the outstanding issues, we are continuing and expanding our economic, commercial and infrastructural linkages with Nepal which contribute to economic and social development of Nepal. Our bilateral interaction and the two-way traffic of Indo-Nepal relations has proceeded in a relatively unhindered manner. The issue of security cooperation on the open border, tackling common threats like fake currency and arms smuggling and criminal elements who operate in the border areas taking advantage of the openness of the border are concerns shared by both our governments.

4. Our relations with Bhutan are based on trust, and mutual understanding and are an example of good neighbourliness. We attach high priority to our relations with Bhutan and are happy to assist Bhutan for its development, progress and prosperity. India and Bhutan are responsive to each other's security concerns and cooperate closely on border management. Bhutan's democratic transition, which began with the first elections in 2008, is progressing in an exemplary manner. On our part we have happily shared our experiences as a democracy with it through exchanges between our parliamentarians.

5. The January 2010 visit of Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina was a path-breaking one. We are committed to assisting Bangladesh in its developmental efforts in line with their priorities. An unprecedented US$ 1 billion Line of Credit has been extended by India to Bangladesh. But the challenge is to revive our old infrastructural links with Bangladesh as well as address more difficult issues like water sharing, land boundary demarcation, etc in an atmosphere of understanding and trust. The recent meeting of experts from our two countries on addressing outstanding issues related to the demarcation of our borders reflected the positive atmosphere in our relations.
6. So far as Sri Lanka is concerned, after the cessation of hostilities, our assistance to that country has been substantial, for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of northern and eastern parts, ravaged by the conflict. India has committed nearly US$ 1.5 billion in this direction. The challenge is to convert the cessation of hostilities in Sri Lanka into a durable peace where there would be genuine reconciliation between all the communities in Sri Lanka inclusive of the Tamil-speaking minority. In many senses, India is Sri Lanka's closest neighbour. Our defence and security dialogue with Sri Lanka, now that the conflict within the country is behind us, requires special focus in this connection. We also need to work out creative and innovative solutions to the problems facing fishermen of both countries who stray into each other's waters.

7. Our defence and security cooperation with Maldives has been strengthened and high-level interaction has ensured that India continues to play a prominent role in the developmental and economic activities of Maldives.

8. The State Visit of Senior General Than Shwe of Myanmar in July 2010, gave us an opportunity to further strengthen our ties with an important neighbour. Enhancing our connectivity as well as security cooperation is vital, particularly in the context of our north-eastern States and our Look East Policy. We have welcomed the release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi as a development that can contribute to the process of national reconciliation and inclusive political change in Myanmar.

9. With Afghanistan, we are in the forefront of assistance to that country and our attempt has always been to help Afghanistan in its reconstruction efforts as a means to establish stability and improve the lives of the Afghan people. Despite persistent attacks on Indians working in that country, India has reiterated its determination to fulfill its commitment to the Afghan people and government as they build, a peaceful, democratic and pluralistic Afghanistan. The future of Afghanistan as a natural trade and transit hub in Asia, free of terrorism and extremism, where the rights of women are ensured, and civil society is strong and enduring, and the institutions of governance including police and army have the capacity to deal with threats to peace and security within the country, must be ensured. The regional countries have a definite interest in this, and India has consistently advocated the need for close consultations with Afghanistan's neighbours as this process evolves.
10. There continue to be differences in perception between India and Pakistan on how to move forward on our bilateral relationship. We want a stable Pakistan which should act as a bulwark against terrorism and extremism, and this is in its own interest and also in the interest of the entire region. We are firmly against the use of terror-induced coercion by Pakistan as a means to force its unifocal agenda on relations with India.

11. Apart from maintaining close ties with our South Asian neighbours, we continue to substantially contribute to the strengthening of SAARC. India's profile in SAARC has changed considerably, in recent years. We have initiated almost all major proposals in SAARC. We see the SAARC process as contributing to our goal of building a peaceful and prosperous neighbourhood.

12. Given the unique historical legacy of our region, SAARC has come a long way in the 25 years of its existence. It can be said that SAARC has moved from a declaratory phase to one of implementation. With the SAARC Development Fund functional and two regional projects currently being implemented under its social window, SAARC is slowly metamorphosing into being a service provider for the development needs of the people of the region. In addition, a project like the South Asian University (SAU), envisaging the provision of world-class education opportunities and hopefully building the initial blocks of a South Asian identity, has also commenced.

13. The implementation of the South Asia Free Trade Agreement (SAFTA) in 2006 was a significant milestone. Intra-regional trade in South Asia has begun to grow and has doubled over the past 5 years to over $600 million in 2009. What is also significant is that intra-SAARC exports, as a proportion of total SAARC exports, have registered a steady growth. This reflects the growing importance of the region for the overall trade of its Member States. SAARC Member States have also appreciated India's gesture to give duty free access to LDCs from January 1, 2008, one year ahead of target date and unilateral reduction of its Sensitive List with respect to LDCs from 744 to 480.

14. However, SAARC inter-regional trade still remains well below its potential and the desired cooperation in the field of security also remains lower than desired. While, there has been a positive change in the attitude of some participating countries in areas like agriculture, S&T and the environment, the challenge for us is to take other members along with us as we strive towards greater integration in South Asia. At this stage, we also need to nurture and consolidate the newly created institutions and ensure that they develop firm foundations which would serve SAARC well into the future.

15. Iran is part of what has been defined as India’s “proximate neighbourhood”. We share a historical and civilizational relationship. People-to-people and cultural relations remain vibrant and alive today. It is a major source of our energy and hydrocarbon supplies, and is thus important for our energy security. Among areas of discussion with Iran have been regional issues such as the restoration of peace and stability in Afghanistan, trade and transit to Afghanistan, Central Asia and beyond, and the common threats we face from cross-border terrorism and extremism.

16. The Iran nuclear issue however poses a challenge, because of the impact of UNSC and more particularly unilateral sanctions imposed by US, EU, Japan, and other countries, which have challenged even normal trade transactions with Iran. India’s stand on the Iran nuclear issue has been consistent. We support the right of all States to peaceful use of nuclear energy, consistent with their international obligations. We believe that the IAEA should have a central role in resolution of the issue, and favour dialogue and peaceful negotiations for settlement of the dispute.

17. China is our largest neighbour and its rise is indeed a global opportunity as well as a challenge. Neither of us has the luxury of seeing each other in antagonistic terms. There is enough space in the world for the rise of both China and India. Our task will be to remain vigilant and manage the India-China relationship despite inherent complexities and challenges, embedding it in the matrix of dialogue and diplomacy.

18. Given its continental size and dimensions, India is also a South-east Asian country - consider the ethnicities of our North-east, and our close contiguity to Asean countries like Myanmar and to Indonesia which is a close maritime neighbour. Our Look East Policy, which was originally conceived as an economic initiative, has gained political, strategic, multilateral and regional dimensions. The scope of the policy has broadened to include the Far East and Pacific island nations.
19. Economically, the Asian region to the east of India has gained tremendous significance. As many as 6 countries (Australia, China, Japan, India, Indonesia, and South Korea) from the region are part of G-20, the world’s premier economic forum. The region accounts for about one-third of India’s trade. India signed its first multilateral trade agreement in the form of India - ASEAN FTA on August 13, 2009 in Bangkok. The East Asia region including ASEAN is our largest trading partner with two way trade between India and ASEAN being over USD 47 billion in 2008. With the coming into force of India - ASEAN FTA in goods, there is an expected increase of US$ 10 bn in the very first year. The next step is conclusion of negotiations in Trade in Services and Trade in Investment agreements, which will act as a catalyst to bring down the cost of production on both sides and further increase our trade. An economically robust relationship between the two sides has enormous potential. Keeping this in view, a new and comprehensive India-ASEAN Plan of Action 2010-2015 was adopted at the 8th India-ASEAN Summit on 30 October 2010.

20. The ongoing geo-political changes in Asia have been the subject of much comment in the strategic community. These changes would need to be monitored and analysed closely but it is equally important that our responses and reactions are not knee jerk or based on distorted or exaggerated threat perceptions. India supports the evolution of an open, transparent, inclusive and balanced security architecture in the Asia Pacific region. This will involve partnership and cooperation among all stakeholders working together in recognition that the inherent heterogeneity of the region will not allow any top-down approach or domination by any single country. All countries have an equal stake in promoting maritime security and in defending the ‘Global Commons’ by strict implementation of universally accepted principles of international law, allowing freedom of navigation and unimpeded commerce and peaceful settlement of maritime territorial disputes. India has been supporting these principles in the ARF for several years. Our Defence Minister represented India in the first ADMM Plus meeting which was held in Hanoi in 12-13 October 2010. This added a new dimension to international efforts to evolve cooperative security architecture in the region.

21. The East Asia Summit (EAS) mechanism provides India the forum to engage with a larger number of countries of the region in both strategic and economic spheres. This year marked the entry of US and Russia into the EAS process as 'guest of the host' with formal entry scheduled for 2011. We welcome their entry which, we believe, will add to peace and stability in the region and also enhance ongoing cooperation.

22. Recent years have witnessed a significant transformation of India's relationship with the United States. The post Cold War geopolitical environment, the shift in the centre of gravity of global opportunities and challenges to Asia and the growing challenges of terrorism and non-proliferation have created new opportunities for strategic engagement with the United States.

23. Our relationship with the United States is important for pursuing our national development goals, through trade, investment and new technology, and in seeking to build an open, rule-based and stable international order that is conducive to sustaining a high trajectory of economic growth over the next two to three decades. This relationship is also important for bringing about adjustments in the global political, security and economic architecture to pursue our interests and aspirations, and fulfill our global responsibility.

24. The United States was pivotal in re-integrating India into the global nuclear commerce. During his recent visit to India, President Obama announced his country's support for India as a permanent member of a reformed UN Security Council, as also for India's membership of the four international non-proliferation regimes - the NSG, MTCR, Australia Group and Wassenaar Arrangement. We have also begun to forge a new partnership in advancing our shared global non-proliferation interests.

25. Shared values provide a solid bedrock of our relationship with the United States that is now being increasingly invigorated by converging interests. At the same time, we are two independent democracies at different stages of economic development and facing varying circumstances. We will also have to deal with the inevitable divergence in our approaches on some issues, without losing sight of the broad, long-term strategic goals of this relationship and with sensitivity to each other's vital interests.

26. The EU is our largest trading partner, biggest source of FDI, an important source of technology, and home to a large and influential Indian Diaspora. We have concluded ten rounds of negotiations on a Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement and issues of concerns to both sides have been identified. India is keen for a successful and balanced outcome of the negotiations. Early conclusion of this agreement will also facilitate our stated goal of achieving Euro 100 billion in bilateral trade by 2013 from the present figure of Euro 60 billion. India looks at the EU for new partnerships in knowledge industries i.e. information technology, biotechnology, pharmaceutical, infrastructure development etc. and transfer of technologies particularly environment-friendly technologies and improved medical innovation. India also wants to see freer movement of its professionals and businessmen in the EU market.

27. Time tested and enduring ties with Russia form an important dimension of India's foreign policy. Bilateral relations with Russia are based on a strong national consensus in both countries that has cut across ideologies or political conditions. Russia has been an important partner in defence and nuclear energy cooperation. Our bilateral relationship was re-energized with the declaration of a Strategic Partnership between our two countries during the visit of the then President Putin in 2000. This is nevertheless a relationship that is constantly evolving and with a huge untapped potential for increasing our bilateral engagement, especially in the areas of defence, civil nuclear energy, space, science and technology, hydrocarbons, and trade and investment.

28. India shares old historical and strong cultural links with Central Asia, which forms part of our extended neighborhood. Post USSR dissolution, India has steadily developed friendly and cooperative relations with all five Central Asian countries. Three of the 5 Central Asian countries namely Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan share borders with Afghanistan. This region has grown in importance with the shift of the strategic theatre to Afghanistan. It is also important to counter the growth of fundamentalist, terrorist and secessionist tendencies which can affect us directly. The Central Asian Republics by virtue of their geographical location and the vast natural resources, including energy reserves in the Caspian Basin, form an area of geo-strategic and geo-economic interest to India. The aim of our diplomacy is to be seen as a benign, non-threatening regional player, involved in capacity building and development. India has to be seen as a friend and partner, tapping a reservoir of traditional goodwill and deploying its soft power through instruments such as IT, Bollywood, and south-south assistance.
29. India attaches great importance to Shanghai Cooperation Organisation, most of the members of which belong to our extended neighborhood. India has played a constructive and important role in SCO as an observer and has consistently articulated its desire to play an expanded and more meaningful role on the SCO platform. We value the role of the SCO in bringing security, stability and development to our region and stand ready to contribute more to the SCO. The SCO can play a critical role in countering terrorism through collaborative efforts and a greater profile in Afghanistan.

30. Turning to West Asia, India's consistent and unwavering record of support for the Palestinian cause since the days of our freedom struggle continues to guide our policy in the region. The Palestinian problem needs a solution which has been delayed for far too long. India supports a united, independent, viable, sovereign state of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital, living within secure and recognised borders side by side at peace with Israel. We are hopeful that direct talks between the Israelis and the Palestinians will resume and the talks and negotiations would lead to a comprehensive peace process for the final resolution of the conflict.

31. Africa has always been an important cornerstone of India's Foreign Policy. Our common struggle against colonialism provides the historical underpinning to our relations. This relationship was given a new impetus during the first India-Africa Forum Summit held in New Delhi in April 2008, which resulted in a structured programme of cooperation in areas including human resources, capacity building, agriculture, SMEs sector, S&T, IT, etc. Africa is also an important source of crude oil and other natural resources. India imports about 20% of its crude oil requirements from Africa. Over the next five years, an amount of US$ 5.4 billion has been earmarked for Africa to support infrastructure and development projects as prioritized by the African nations themselves. India's Pan-Africa e-Network Project based on satellite and optical fibre networks to share India's expertise in education and healthcare, being implemented in 47 African countries, has been recognised for its contribution in the field of sustainable development with "the Hermes Prize for Innovation 2010" by the European Institute for Creative Studies and Innovation.

32. An important dimension of our partnership is how to coordinate our positions that have seen increasing convergence on global issues such as reform of the United Nations, climate change, WTO, food security, etc. Given that the text based expansion negotiations on United Nations reform will start in UNGA, we need to work together to ensure the stronger presence of the developing countries in the UNSC. Both India and the African Union have advocated expansion of the Security Council in both its permanent and non-permanent categories. Similarly, India and Africa need to work together to ensure that ongoing negotiations in WTO secure a proper share for the developing countries, especially the least developed countries, in the growth of international trade which is commensurate with the needs of their economic development. We also need to evolve a coordinated response for tackling the menace of piracy in the Indian Ocean in order to safeguard our sea-routes and ensure uninterrupted movement of goods and people.

33. We have been elected as a non-permanent member of the United Nations Security Council for a two-year period beginning in January 2011 with an overwhelming majority of support from the member states of the UN. We are fully committed to the principles and purposes of the United Nations and believe that the UN should be at the core of global governance and efforts to meet the challenges of collective peace, security and development. The UN, however, needs urgent reform to reflect contemporary realities and to effectively meet emerging global challenges. The issue of reform of the Security Council is at the core of the UN reform process. At recent inter-governmental negotiations in the UN, a majority of the Member States expressed support for expansion of both permanent and non-permanent categories of the Security Council. Structural reform of the Security Council and an improvement in its working methods need to be pursued as a priority.

34. For couple of years now, the ongoing international financial and economic crisis has drawn the world's attention as it has impacted all of us. The crisis impacted our growth rates, slowed exports and affected investment. From a 9% growth over four years, the Indian economy slowed down to 6.7% in 2008-09. During the current financial year 2010-11, India hopes to achieve around 8.5% growth. GDP growth is expected to reach the 9% level in the next financial year 2011-12.

35. The global economic crisis of 2008 led the G-20 meetings, which were hitherto held at the level of Finance Minister and Central bank governors, to be held at Summit level. The G-20 has held an unprecedented five Summits with the last Summit held in Seoul last week. The G-20 has provided prompt and effective response in reversing recession and restarting recovery, but the global recovery remains fragile and uneven or multi-speed across countries and regions. India has been playing an important role in the G-20 deliberations.

36. The Seoul Summit outcome mandated macroeconomic policies to strengthen the ongoing recovery and stability of financial markets, in particular moving towards more market determined exchange rate systems, refraining from competitive devaluations, with reserve currency countries remaining vigilant against excessive volatility. It adopted the Seoul Action Plan including country-specific measures towards the shared objective of strong, sustainable and balanced growth.

37. An ambitious development agenda was adopted comprising Multi-Year Action Plans under nine pillars viz. Infrastructure, HRD, trade, private investment and job creation, food security, growth with resilience, domestic resource mobilization, knowledge sharing and financial inclusion. The Summit also discussed the issue of global imbalances. In this context, India has proposed leveraging imbalances of one kind to redress imbalances of the other kind. This can be done by recycling global savings through multilateral development banks into investment in developing countries to not only address the immediate demand imbalance, but to also address developmental imbalances. The Indian proposal was endorsed positively.

38. There is now very little doubt that Climate Change is taking place across the world and the cause is the cumulative accumulation of greenhouse gases (GHG) in the earth's atmosphere due to over two centuries of industrial activities and high consumption lifestyles in the developed world. Climate change requires a global response. However, such a response must be firmly based on the principles of equity and "common but differentiated responsibility and respective capability" and take into account the overriding imperative of poverty reduction and economic progress in developing countries, as recognized and endorsed by the international community under the UNFCCC. Any long-term goal would be meaningless without concomitant and mid-term targets and GHG reduction commitments by developed countries as committed under the Kyoto Protocol.
39. Energy Security has emerged as a new cornerstone of India's foreign policy. India has adopted a multi pronged approach to energy security, which includes import source diversification and acquisition of equity oil, the building of strategic petroleum reserves, increased domestic exploration, and production and fuel diversification. India aspires to a medium-to-long term strategy of implementing a strategic shift from fossil fuels to non-fossil fuels, from non-renewable to renewable sources of energy, and from conventional to non-conventional sources of energy. In order to meet the increased power requirement, India will need to pursue all available forms of energy. Our energy mix currently is 53% based on coal, 31% on oil, 9% on natural gas and only 6% from hydropower and 1% from nuclear energy. If this energy mix remains unchanged over the next 25 years then our dependence on imported fossil fuels will continue. It is estimated that by 2030-31, we would have to import 35-57% of our coal, 90-94% of our oil and 20-57% of our natural gas.

40. Security in the Indian Ocean region and its periphery is a key to our continuing economic growth, particularly as it is through the sea-lanes in this Ocean that most of our energy supplies reach us, and our exports are transported. The continuing security of our EEZ is also an important issue. The Indian Ocean region assumes importance because of its abundant human resources, technological capacities and harbouring of important trade routes. We have historical and civilisational ties with countries of the Indian Ocean region and there are large Indian communities in most of these countries. The broad-spectrum of our ties with these countries has a strong economic and socio-cultural dimension.

41. The maritime dimensions of our foreign policy have come to acquire increased relevance and intensive focus in recent years. Through our history, we have been a sea-faring nation, as the chronicles of our ties with South-east Asia, the Roman Empire, the East Coast of the African Continent, and the countries of the Arab Peninsula so graphically illustrate. The maritime dimension of our nation's history has moulded our identity as an outward-oriented nation rather than a country that is locked into a land-centered continental presence. After a hiatus brought about by the focus on our land borders in the initial phases of our development as an independent country, it is this dimension that we are called upon to increasingly keep in focus as our markets are increasingly integrated with the outside world, the safety of sea lanes of communication becomes a priority, in dealing with anti-piracy, ensuring coastal security, and putting in place a network of cooperation and dialogue that is open, inclusive, balanced stressing a dialogue oriented approach for security and development. The Indian Ocean is a key expanse of water that links both East and West, straddling major trading areas, centers of population, and sectors of concern from the point of view of our security. The growth of our naval capabilities enables us also to work out mechanisms of cooperation with other friendly navies to be net providers of security in the region, and also for emergency and disaster management as we saw during the Indian Ocean tsunami of 2004. This aspect, as also the emphasis on building close bilateral ties with the Indian Ocean countries, in capacity building, security ties, political and people-to-people contacts, is receiving increasing attention in the decision and policy making circles of Government.

42. The problem of international terrorism has been a core foreign policy concern for India for over two decades now. There was a time when terror groups were limited in their ideology, reach and lethality and strong internal security measures and deft political handling by national governments were sufficient in dealing with them. With the emergence of the information age, terrorism is today a truly borderless menace and a technology-intensive enterprise. Nations find it difficult, if not impossible to tackle this scourge in a time when recruiting, planning, financing, and training for terror operations can all be carried out outside their borders. Recent years have also seen operational coordination between terrorist groups based across different countries. In our neighbourhood, the Al Qaeda, the LeT and the Taliban have all been found to be operationally fused. There are also increasing concerns among the international community about the nexus between fundamentalism, terrorism and weapons of mass destruction. This global scourge requires a sustained global response.

43. India has been the victim of the most vicious kind of cross-border terrorism over the last two decades. This continues to find support within Pakistan and is used against us as a political and economic weapon. For some in the international community - political expediency, short term gains, geopolitical considerations, faulty analysis, double standards - all these and other reasons unfortunately have in the past blurred the clarity and focus on how terrorism should be dealt with.
44. India is working with the international community to counter the common challenge of terrorism. Our partners have increasingly come to realize that segmented approaches to the problem of terrorism have not worked; nor has the approach of differentiating between lesser and greater evils in this context. What hits us today could well turn itself towards another nation tomorrow. Over the past couple of years, we have seen an enhanced understanding of this fact. We endeavour to cooperate bilaterally with our partners in improving sharing of information, countering terror finance, building capacity in our anti-terror mechanisms, exchanging best practices, and strengthening our mutual legal assistance and extradition regimes.

45. Multilaterally, we piloted the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the UN, since we were convinced that existing sectoral conventions left wide gaps in the global anti-terror legal framework. We continue to work with our partners around the world to adopt this long overdue Convention. We have recently become members of the Financial Action Task Force, the world's premier inter-governmental organization that sets and monitors standards in anti-money laundering (AML) and counter-financing of terrorism (CFT).

46. Despite a complex regional and global environment, India's policies have been marked by a sense of responsibility and restraint. We have been one of the earliest proponents of nuclear disarmament. Even as a nuclear weapon state, India remains steadfast in its support for the global, universal and non-discriminatory elimination of all nuclear weapons. India has a policy of no first use of nuclear weapons and their non-use against non-nuclear weapon states and we support enshrining them into global legal arrangements. Terrorists gaining access to WMDs has emerged as a major threat for our national security as well as globally. We remain engaged with the international community through participation in initiatives like the Nuclear Security Summit and the Global Initiative in order to combat nuclear terrorism to address these challenges.

47. There is in some sense, a duality that India contends with -- one as a developing country working to sustain inclusive domestic growth with a view to eradicate poverty and enhance prosperity for its own citizens and the other as a re-emerging global power with the requisite intellectual acumen and economic weight to work out solutions to global problems in cooperation with the developed as well as the developing economies. This ability of India to literally hold the world in its hands, because of our pluralism, our diversity, and our relevance in terms of the developmental experience we have accumulated, and our responsible image in the world, has resulted in our increasingly being called upon to play an increasingly substantive role whether it is the G20 or the various fora of the United Nations, Trade deliberations or Climate Change negotiations.

48. In an increasingly complex and inter-dependent world, new challenges appear and have to be tackled. The challenge before our foreign policy is to ensure an effective management of our security challenges and dynamically evolve effective strategies to address them. For instance, there is growing realization of the importance of preserving the “Global Commons” - Space, Ocean, Air, and Cyber Space. With its size, technological capabilities, and standing as a responsible country, India is recognized as an important stakeholder and partner in these processes. We will continue to participate constructively in the furtherance and shaping of these efforts.

49. In the ultimate analysis, foreign policy is a reflection of the priorities that a nation defines for itself as it seeks to develop, to be secure, to withstand threats from across its borders, to ensure that its national and developmental interests are not diluted by actions by hostile players in the global arena, to guarantee a level playing field for its professionals and its business and industry as they increasingly access the global market, to ensure strategic autonomy, and to enable the flow of capital and technology that can build a modern nation in an inclusive, unimpeded manner. The challenges we face in the conduct of our foreign policy are dictated by the external environment and also by the dynamic created by public opinion and constituencies within the domestic arena. Foreign policy does not reside in some elite fastness but is moulded in the debates and discussion that come out of the arena of democracy. The practitioner of foreign policy therefore is networked constantly with other arms of government, particularly the security and defence apparatus, the economic ministries, and also those dealing with human development. Responses to the challenges we face are shaped and calibrated by the imperatives of the nation’s interest, first and last. At the same time, with power comes ever increasing responsibility - responsibility in weighing every move we make and positions we take with the realization that India is one of the key players on the global stage today and will be called upon increasingly to deploy its manifest strengths in the interest of global peace and development.
027. Address by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at the Inaugural Session of Conference on 'Public Diplomacy in the Information Age'.

New Delhi, December 10, 2010.

Dr. Shashi Tharoor,
Professor Nicholas Cull,
Dr. P.N. Vasanti,
Joint Secretary Navdeep Suri
Distinguished guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen

I am delighted to see such an enthusiastic response to our initiative to organise this conference on Public Diplomacy. The theme of our Conference fits very well in the environment in which we conduct our diplomacy today. Indeed, this is the first Conference on Public Diplomacy being conducted in India and the fact that this event is taking place is testimony to the fact that Public Diplomacy is relevant in both the external and internal contexts in which we work as foreign office professionals or diplomats in the current day and age. Our Public Diplomacy division in the Ministry of External Affairs is all of four years of age, but the tradition of public outreach, and interpretation of foreign policy positions to the people of India and the world beyond, is ingrained in our conditioning as diplomats who are citizens of a staunchly democratic nation. Public diplomacy is the vehicle for dissemination of the ideas, the interests, the concepts, and the approaches that define our foreign policy and the defence of our national interest as we further our bilateral relationships and our policies in multilateral forums. Its aim is to enable comprehension and understanding of the positions we adopt, the rationale that propels this, and to fulfil the need to inform, and enable growing transparency in the articulation of foreign policy given the fact that the constituencies we address are diverse, ranging from foreign and domestic audiences, to non-governmental agencies, educational institutions, experts and analysts in foreign affairs to generalist groups, and the media, print, electronic and net-based. In essence public diplomacy is a public good for the public good.
Public diplomacy relies as much on the spoken word as the written word, and by the very definition of this strand of diplomacy, it depends on clarity of presentation, the ability to persuade, to influence, and to mould opinions in a manner that is not propaganda but rather presents the case for any given aspect of foreign policy in a clear, cogent, factual, and communicative manner. We live in a communications environment and if our policies are to be well understood, we will have to interact on a real time and virtually constant basis with the media and audiences both at home and abroad. Public diplomacy is also a process of reinvention for many of us as bureaucrats - because of the value it places on communication skills, and the need to feel the popular pulse, the requirements of innovation, using the latest information and communication technologies, of moving beyond precedent-driven approaches, requires us to think out-of-the-box, be alert to countering negative information and stereotypes, and also to be ever-vigilant of information vacuums that will be filled by our adversaries.

It goes without saying that the contours of public diplomacy are being constantly expanded. As our foreign policy interests and strategic perspectives become more sharply honed, as our global presence becomes much more visible, as India's re-emergence grasps the world's attention, and as our economy becomes one of the international frontrunners in terms of its accelerated growth rate, India's voice must be heard in multiple situations, before diverse audiences, and the task to fulfil this will be that of its diplomats who must be ever active in the tasks of advocating and explaining the Indian "brand" as it were, because this is a compelling narrative surrounding the world's largest democracy, that must be heard.

Of course, the challenge we face today is that because there are a plethora indeed, a babel, of voices outside government that speak on foreign policy, it necessarily follows that we are not heard so easily. Our message simply may not get through. The way to address this is to provide higher definition to the debate by presenting the government's case as clearly and factually as possible, being quick to correct misrepresentation, bridging gaps in information, and to understand that by hesitating to speak we only compound the lack of understanding of a particular policy in the public domain. It is important to pay attention to feedback, and to engage with a broad spectrum of audiences. By listening and by engaging, we stand a better chance of being heard.
Public diplomacy, we all know, is no abstract term - it is a real world phenomenon, and, it overlaps with our cultural diplomacy, our outreach to academic institutions, the promotional work that our chambers of business and industry engage in to promote Brand India, and the work of the Information and Broadcasting Ministry, the Ministries of Culture and of Tourism. The projection of India's soft power is very much a part of the processes of public diplomacy. So too, the use of social media including Facebook and Twitter, YouTube and Web 2.0 platform. This is because we also need to understand the demographics of the audiences we address - the idiom must be tailored to cater also to the language that the younger sections of our population speak. The promotion and projection of India is furthered by our Public Diplomacy Division through our publications, documentary films and selections of popular and classical music that can be used by our diplomatic missions to project India. We are also increasingly aware of the need to emphasise our image as a country that embraces diversity, with its secular ethos, and vibrant democracy, as also our determination to resist terrorism and militancy, and the forces that threaten our sovereignty and territorial integrity. In this connection, our public diplomacy efforts must focus on the composite nature of our culture, our inter-religious harmony, our emphasis on inclusive, integrative growth, especially when it comes to outreach in our neighbourhood, in South-east Asia, in the Gulf countries and in Africa.

The face of Indian diplomacy is acquiring a new expression today with our growing capability to partner a number of countries in our neighbourhood, in Africa, in southeast Asia, and the Caribbean in socio-economic development. We see the need for audiences abroad particularly to be made more aware of our technical and economic cooperation programmes and our grant assistance and concessional Lines of Credit to a number of countries. The revival of an irrigation project that has doubled Senegal's rice output and made the country self sufficient in rice for the first time in a generation; a power transmission project that is helping take surplus electricity from Cote d'Ivoire to Mali; that Ghana has established a regional centre for excellence in IT and a state of the art Presidential complex, that Mauritius has an entire IT park....and dozens of other similar examples speak of our partnerships in development cooperation. We currently extend LoCs of over USD 10 billion in to countries in Africa and elsewhere but they hardly find a mention in either the Indian or the international media. Similarly, the excellent development work that we have done for the people of Afghanistan under constant threat from terrorist forces needs to be explained to the world.

We have traditionally tended to adopt a fairly conservative approach towards publicising our own work and this, almost by default, leaves the field open for negative stories of which there is never a dearth. From a public diplomacy standpoint, I think it is vital that we start building credible and engaging narratives about the positive work that we do. These would not only provide global audiences with a perspective of the geographical spread and impact of our development partnerships but also afford our own public and Parliament with an appreciation of our activities.

Yet another aspect on which public diplomacy needs to focus is crisis management in extraordinary situations - getting the government's message out and addressing public opinion directly with the purpose of informing, reassuring, and enabling sober and well-reasoned responses that are bereft of rumour and speculation. I cannot but emphasise this factor - as one that should constantly be in the viewfinder of every diplomat and practitioner of foreign policy. Careful planning, the capacity to anticipate situational requirements, the needs of the public to be informed in real time, to avoid critical delays in dissemination of information, the identification of both resources and resource persons, the choice of spokespersons, are all issues that require focus.

I also wish to focus on what I call the domestication of foreign policy and this is where public diplomacy, public affairs and public relations cross-fertilize each other. One of the key initiatives that we have taken in recent months focuses on creating a more informed discourse on foreign policy issues within our own country. We recognize that many of these issues are increasingly intertwined with domestic agendas and as a democracy, we cannot avoid the responsibility of communicating our position more effectively to key segments of public opinion. Since its start in February, our MEA Distinguished Lecture Series on India's Foreign Policy has touched 24 different university campuses, virtually all of them outside Delhi. The topics for the lectures are selected by the universities and the lectures are delivered by retired ambassadors with domain knowledge of the particular topic. The lively interactive sessions that accompany these lectures, the presence of local media and the participation of civil society have made this programme an important component of our public diplomacy efforts.
A related programme that has a strong domestic focus pertains to the seminars, conferences and workshops on foreign policy themes that we support and organise. Our conferences on Indo-Nepal relations in Patna and Varanasi and on India’s Look East policy in Shillong and Guwahati are examples of our conscious endeavour to take foreign policy discussions to places where they also resonate as issues that concern local populations and opinion makers.

The success of these initiatives clearly depends on the active participation and support of a range of other organisations that often have a better understanding of specific sectors and issues. We are fortunate in having partnerships with business chambers, think tanks, academic institutions, cultural organisations, members of the Indian diaspora and others with whom we collaborate in pursuit of our public diplomacy objectives.

I would be the first to acknowledge that these are no more than initial steps in a process that is bound to get increasingly complex as new media and communications technologies take us into uncharted territories. There is much that we must do to put in place a framework for strategic communications and for developing a lucid, encompassing vision of Brand India that goes even beyond the brilliantly successful Incredible India campaign.

That is why today’s conference, with its sessions on soft power, 24/7 media, Web 2.0 tools and the role of corporates in public diplomacy is so useful and relevant. I am particularly happy that the workshops tomorrow will provide the opportunity for a more detailed and interactive examination of some of these facets. I must convey our special thanks to Prof. Philip Seib, Prof. Eytan Gilboa, Prof. Nicholas Cull and to Nic Gowing for being here with us today for the conference and workshops. We know that you have extremely busy schedules and we appreciate the fact that you are here to share your experiences with us. I believe that we have a strong representation from Indian academic institutions with us today. I hope that this conference will galvanize at least a few of our institutions into offering courses on public diplomacy as part of their international relations or communications degree programmes.

I wish this conference and the workshops tomorrow every success.

Thank you.
I am pleased to participate in the inauguration of the International Conference of Jurists on International Terrorism and Human Rights. You have a packed schedule of wide ranging deliberations on key issues that impact critically on our daily lives. I commend this distinguished audience of jurists, academics and legal experts who have gathered here today to discuss these themes.

It is also topical to discuss human rights, yesterday being the 'Human Rights Day'. It was on this day in 1948 that the UN General Assembly adopted and proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It remains the universal and fundamental recognition of the fact that the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family are the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world. It is also appropriate that this year the Human Rights Day is dedicated to the Human Rights Defenders who play a vital role in protecting human rights of others, facing personal risks to them and their families.

It is perhaps a statement of our times that all nations and peoples have been affected by the global menace of terrorism. It is not only an assault on human decency and a negation of fundamental human values, but also knows no boundaries and poses serious threat to human rights. Terrorism has also come to represent a threat to international peace and security, especially when terrorists are armed, financed and backed, directly or indirectly, by governments or their agencies. International terrorism is an international crime, threatening the integrity and political and social fabric of states. Its sinister element is vastly magnified in its impact when it enmeshes with drug trafficking, arms proliferation, international financial crimes and generic forms of extremism, fundamentalism, separatism and intolerance.

Our globalised world is characterized by enhanced levels of resort to violence by state and non-state actors, within and across borders. Global threats to peace and security necessitate coordinated and global responses. We believe that the adoption of a Comprehensive Convention against International Terrorism would provide a solid legal basis for the fight against terrorism. However, we must also note that legal systems in many countries have resorted to doctrines of necessity to incorporate 'exceptional' and 'extraordinary' legislation to deal with this surge of violence. The challenge for governments and legal systems is to deal effectively with violence within the framework of 'normal' laws and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Ladies and Gentlemen

There is one other important aspect related to the subject matter of this Conference.

The enjoyment of human rights is closely related to the prevalence of good governance norms. In India we remain committed to democratic governance, inclusive development and the implementation of Rule of Law. This commitment has been challenged in practice by departures from norms of good governance, manifest through corruption and the deleterious influence of money power. Corruption has inhibited the enjoyment of human rights, has contributed to inequalities in income, status and opportunities and thus thwarted human development of our citizens. We must recognise that good governance without any trace of corruption is also a human right.

Friends

Human rights today are increasingly discussed in contexts of violence, use of force and terrorism. The idea that the central objective of human rights is to empower people through human development does not find adequate mention in contemporary debates. It is only when the capacities of citizens are fully developed, their choices widened and freedoms expanded that human rights would have achieved their objective.

I thank the organisers for inviting me to this function and wish you well in your deliberations.
029. Response of Official Spokesperson on allegations by Red Cross as per Wikileaks.

New Delhi, December 17, 2010.

In response to questions on the allegations* by the Red Cross appearing in Wikileaks, the Official Spokesperson said,

"India is an open and democratic nation which adheres to the rule of law. If and when an aberration occurs, it is promptly and firmly dealt with under existing legal mechanisms, in an effective and transparent manner. In India, there is a healthy tradition of democratic debate and freedom of expression on all issues that concern the welfare of our citizens anywhere in our country. Neither have we shied away from an open and candid discussion on such issues when raised by our international friends and partners."

030. Address by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at launch of Ministry of External Affairs & Public Diplomacy Division websites.

New Delhi, December 24, 2010.

I am pleased to formally launch the re-designed MEA website and the brand new PD website today.

Web is a tool of great empowerment. It has revolutionized the way in which information is collated, communicated and accessed. The challenge of the hour, especially for governments, is to comprehend the power of internet and avail of the unprecedented opportunities it offers, while being alive to its limitations and vulnerabilities.

That is the mandate I gave to XP and PD Divisions and that is what, in a small way, they have gone about doing.

* The spokesperson was responding to questions raised in the WikiLeak that the US Ambassador David Mufford had reported in Confidential Telegram to Washington that the Government of India had "condoned" the "widespread severe torture" of prisoners in Jammu and Kashmir, North-East and other parts of the country during 2002-2004.
The MEA website needed a complete re-do, both in terms of its look and feel, as well as, content. Even though it is still work in progress, I am pleased that the new website, which was launched recently, has met those criteria to a large extent. It aims to make available comprehensive and speedy information, on India's foreign relation activities, as well as, Ministry's views on salient Foreign Policy issues. Besides the media, academia, Indian and international governmental agencies, businesses and travellers, the new website is also meant to be a resource for youth and students.

Encouraged by the response, and I may mention that the website is currently receiving close to 300,000 hits daily, which is twice as much as the earlier website, we have started work on an more ambitious integrated MEA Portal. It is meant to introduce uniformity in the look, feel, content and navigational ease for all the websites of the Ministry and its Missions/Posts abroad.

An Inter-Ministerial Committee has been set up to oversee the development of the Portal. C-DAC has been appointed as consultants. Invitation to tender has already been issued and bids from web designers are expected to be received latest by 5th January 2011. We hope to launch the new Portal by the middle of next year.

Let me now turn to the PD website. Public Diplomacy Division was set up four years back with a mandate to project India and its foreign policy, both within India and overseas. This was in addition to traditional areas of work such as producing books and documentary films.

In our globalized world foreign policy issues, such as terrorism, climate change and civilian uses of nuclear energy are often intertwined with domestic ones. With a view to fostering a more informed discourse, we started the MEA Distinguished Lecture Series on India's Foreign Policy, this February, by some of our finest retired ambassadors. In the last 10 months, we have organized 22 lectures in universities and IIT campuses across India. The response has been truly outstanding.

We have also organized seminars, workshops and conferences in places like Varanasi, Patna, Kolkata, Shillong and Kochi on foreign policy themes that are particularly relevant to those regions. The seminars in Varanasi and Patna, for instance, focused on Indo-Nepal relations. There is an organic relationship between Nepal and the governments and people of these states. A similar logic applied to our conference in Shillong on India’s Look East policy. Sitting in Meghalaya, the view of our relationship with Bangladesh, Myanmar or even Thailand takes a dramatically different perspective.

At a very different level, we have partnered with SIS, JNU and with Jadhavpur University to put together a fairly comprehensive database of academics from around the country specializing in International Relations. We are now working to create an effective platform where IR specialists can not only network with each other but also have a better interface with MEA.

And of course, the traditional PD activities, aimed at overseas audiences, continue. The Division is bringing out the India Perspectives magazine in 17 languages, Coffee table books, documentary films on different facets of India, as well as, sets of classical, patriotic and Bollywood music.

PD Division has also expanded its in-coming visitors programme with a view to providing key decision-makers with a better understanding of India. Our guests this year are a fairly eclectic lot, including representatives of think tanks, ambassadors and permanent representatives of Pacific and Small Island States at the UN in New York, parliamentary delegations, film critics from the Asia-Pacific region, writers at a literature festival and even a group of journalists representing the Indian Diaspora in 16 separate countries.

Let me now turn to the Public Diplomacy website and the context in which it is situated. Emergence of Web 2.0 tools and social media sites offer us a unique two-way platform for exchange of information and interface with web users, including with a new generation that primarily obtains its information from the Internet.

I am happy to say that the PD website is the first GOI site to be based fully on a Web 2.0 platform. In addition, the Indiandiplomacy account on Twitter, started in July 2010, was the first by a Government of India department and has already gathered over 3500 followers. It was followed in quick succession by a Facebook page, a YouTube channel and a Blogspot page - all under the 'Indiandiplomacy' title.
We have converted some two dozen of our documentary films into shorter, 6-8 minute versions so that they can be accessed on YouTube. Information about our lectures and other events is put out on Twitter and Facebook and the text of the lectures goes to our blogspot page for comment and discussion. With these initiatives, we have achieved our initial objective of establishing a dynamic presence on the net.

We also want to use this platform for at least three additional things:

i) Highlight the reach of India's soft power around the globe, manifest not just in the popularity of Indian cinema, music, dance, cuisine, yoga but also in the following enjoyed by Mahatma Gandhi and Rabindranath Tagore

ii) Bring out real stories about India’s numerous development partnerships with countries in Africa, Southeast Asia, the Caribbean and elsewhere

iii) Talk about the diverse nature of activities of our diplomatic missions as they organize business conferences and cultural festivals, deliver public lectures, receive high-level delegations or engage with the Indian community

Our initial efforts are already being noticed and I am happy to convey that Public Diplomacy Division received the award for the most innovative use of social media in Government at the India e-Gov 2010 Awards on 28 October 2010.

I realize that this is a fairly ambitious agenda and we look forward to working with you and getting your feedback. I would now like JS XP and JS PD to make brief presentations on the new websites.
INDIA’S FOREIGN RELATIONS - 2010

SECTION - II

CLIMATE CHANGE
Inaugural address of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the 97th Indian Science Congress.

"I am delighted that my first important engagement in this New Year is the inauguration of the 97th Indian Science Congress. If India has to re-emerge as a knowledge power in the 21st Century, then it can only be through developing a strong capability in science and technology. It is particularly appropriate that this Congress is being held in Kerala which has led the way in education and human resource development. I recall it was in Thiruvananthapuram that we launched India into the era of space exploration. I wish the people of Kerala - this "God's Own Country" - a very happy and joyous year ahead.

In the past few years our Government has invested heavily in expanding and upgrading the science, technology and innovation system in our country as well as in supporting a more broad-based educational base. We have worked hard to do what is good for science. We are determined to ensure that what we have announced does get implemented. We also know that we need to do much more because scientific capability is what will determine our ability to overcome the challenges which lie ahead. We face new challenges of climate change and the management of our scarce water resources. We also face old challenges of food security and disease control. In all these areas, our success will depend critically on the quality of our institutions of science and technology.

Last month, world leaders came together at Copenhagen to grapple with the threat that climate change poses to our planet and to our way of life. It is a problem that is challenging the knowledge and wisdom of humankind. We were able to make only limited progress at the Copenhagen Summit and no one was satisfied with the outcome. And yet, there is no escaping the truth that the nations of the world have to move to a low greenhouse gas emissions and energy efficient development path.

All over the world, countries are chalking out strategies to achieve greater energy efficiency and a shift to renewable sources of energy. They are also chalking out strategies for adapting to such climate change as is inevitable. India must not lag behind in these areas. Indeed we should plan to be among the leaders in the development of science and technology related to mitigation and also adaptation to climate change. The market for such technologies is not just India. It is indeed the whole world.

As far as energy is concerned, renewable and clean energy supplies will need to pay a much bigger role than what they do currently. Nuclear and solar energy supplies will need to increase considerably. The agreement reached last year with the Nuclear Suppliers Group represents a landmark in lifting long standing restrictions on the transfer of nuclear fuel and technology to India. I am confident that we can now plan for an accelerated nuclear power development programme.

We have also decided to launch a Jawaharlal Nehru National Solar Mission for the establishment of 20,000 MW of solar generation capacity by the year 2020. The mission provides an opportunity to our indigenous scientific institutions to contribute in this important area. I am very happy that a PAN IIT programme for Solar Energy Research has been launched by our Ministry of Science and Technology to drive down the costs of solar energy technology options through R&D-led innovations. The Ministry has also launched joint development programmes with knowledge networks of EU and the United Kingdom on solar energy research with investments of 5 million Euro and 5 million UK pounds respectively on each side.

We live in an increasingly complex world with growing interdependence among different sectors of our economy. Every solution to a particular problem has consequences in other areas. Take forests for instance. When we thought of forests as an economic resource the focus of forest planning was almost exclusively on growing the stock of timber and other commercially valuable forest products. This led to decisions about the choice of tree species and planting practices that we now know were suboptimal because they did not pay sufficient regard to other functions of forests like controlling water run off or for the protection of bio-diversity.

A single-minded focus on carbon reduction could lead to a similar distortion if forestry choices are based solely on how good they are in sequestering carbon. Mitigation of greenhouse gas emissions is no doubt an important goal. But it must co-exist with other equally important goals.

Water resource management is a very important area for us given the fact that per capita availability of water is declining as our population increases.
The urgency of action in this area increases all the more because of the threat of climate change. The scientific input in evolving an adaptation strategy is therefore very important. I am happy that the Ministry of Science and Technology has initiated a Technology Mission for Winning, Augmentation and Renovation (WAR) of our water resources. Technology solutions for 25 different water related challenges are being found through pilot trials under real field conditions in about 60 locations covering all our 20 river basin systems. These solutions will then be applied to 100,000 population clusters to study their financial viability and location neutral applications. If the project completes successfully by 2011, it will have an important demonstration effect of the virtues of investment in scientific solutions to economic and social problems.

Strengthening food security is another important area of emphasis in our scientific and technological efforts. Better weather forecasting is critical for sound agricultural management. A Geo-spatial Technology Applications Mission to provide crop planning and monitoring as well as flood management has recently been mounted.

Developments in biotechnology present us the prospect of greatly improving yields in our major crops by increasing resistance to pests and also to moisture stress. BT Cotton has been well accepted in the country and has made a great difference to the production of cotton. The technology of genetic modification is also being extended to food crops though this raises legitimate questions of safety. These must be given full weightage, with appropriate regulatory control based on strictly scientific criteria. Subject to these caveats, we should pursue all possible leads that biotechnology provides that might increase our food security as we go through climate related stress.

Providing affordable health care and improving the quality of life of our elderly population is yet another major challenge facing us in the 21st century. It is a matter of pride that scientists of the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research have recently succeeded in mapping the genome of an Indian through a collaborative national research effort. I also commend the DRDO for developing a new and rapid diagnostic method for detecting the H1N1 virus. We need to build our scientific capabilities in a way that they can respond in real time to problems such as pandemics.
Scientific capability depends critically on our S&T education and research infrastructure. I am happy to say that our efforts to improve this base are progressing well. Since I last addressed this Congress, there has been progress on a number of initiatives.

Under the Innovation in Science Pursuit for Inspired Research or INSPIRE scheme, we will soon be announcing the name of at least one science awardee per school in the age group of 10-15 in the entire country.

Our Government is considering the revision of the value of doctoral and post-doctoral fellowships as well as the formulation of schemes that would cover all research scholars with some funding support.

We are keen to make our science education outreach inclusive and also affordable. Last year I had announced a special package for the North Eastern Region. We have since started implementing a similar package for the Science & Technology sector in Jammu and Kashmir. We are planning similar investments in other regions of our country like Bihar to bridge asymmetries.

One of the imbalances in our scientific resource pool is the under representation of our women. We should redouble our efforts to attract many more talented young women to take up careers in science. A step in this direction is a new scheme now available for women's universities named Consolidation of University Research, Innovation and Excellence (CURIE). This scheme provides financial help for complete upgradation of facilities in these universities.

I am happy to announce that the National Science and Engineering Research Board will start functioning before March 2010. A National Policy for Data Sharing and Accessibility has also been formulated. The Protection of Intellectual Property Bill, focusing on sharing revenue from intellectual properties with researchers will be taken up for discussion in parliament very soon.

All Indians felt proud that an Indian origin scientist, who earned his early spurs in India, was a recipient of this year's Nobel Prize in Chemistry. I salute Dr Venkatraman Ramakrishnan for his creativity, his talent and for his deep commitment to good science. I have also noted Dr Ramakrishnan's recent comment on the need for greater "autonomy from red tape and local politics" for Indian scientists.
It is unfortunately true that red tape, political interference and lack of proper recognition of good work have all contributed to a regression in Indian science in some sectors from the days of Dr. C V Raman, Meghnad Saha, J C Bose, Homi Bhabha, Vikram Sarabhai, Satish Dhawan and other great pioneers of Indian science.

I urge all our scientific institutions to introspect and to propose mechanisms for greater autonomy, including autonomy from the government, which could help to improve standards for research and development. We must make a special effort to encourage scientists of Indian origin currently working abroad to return to our country including coming to our universities or scientific institutions for a short period. In this way we can, convert the "brain drain" of the past into a "brain gain" for the future. This will require special incentives. We need to think creatively on how this can be done so that high quality minds are attracted to teaching and research in our country.

Much of what we have to do to improve science requires money but this is only one part of what is needed. It also requires a change in mindset, including, if I may say so, the mindset of senior faculty and university administration. Sometimes that is the hardest thing to do.

I invite you all to explore all these issues and engage with the Government so that we can do what is needed to liberate Indian science from the shackles and deadweight of bureaucratism and in-house favouritism. Only then we can unleash the latent talent and creative energies of our vast scientists and engineers too.

Our Government has declared 2010-2020 as the "Decade of Innovations". We need new solutions in many areas to achieve our goals of inclusive and sustainable growth - in healthcare, in energy, in urban infrastructure, in water management, in transportation, to name only a few. We cannot continue with business as usual. Solutions from developed countries available are also not applicable all the time. They are often too costly and at times not sustainable.

The country must develop an Innovation Eco-system to stimulate innovations. Innovators must be challenged to produce solutions our society needs. And innovative solutions with potential must be nurtured and rapidly applied.
Our scientific establishments must be central to the Innovation Eco-system. But this system must include industry, and providers of venture funds, as well as regulators who set high standards of performance for their products. We also need to think creatively on how to increase private investment in R&D. Some innovative policy readjustments may be required to build vibrant Public-Private Partnerships in the Science & Technology Sector.

Our elite institutions such as the IITs must do more to address the technological challenges of the 21st Century. Their research goals and the expectations of the industrial and social sectors must be better aligned.

The Planning Commission has recently set up an Expert Group to strengthen the Innovation Eco-system in the country and also to point to areas where innovations are required to meet our country’s goals of more rapid, more inclusive, and sustainable growth.

I have said the Indian scientific establishment is a vital component of the Innovation Eco-system. But to fulfill its role, it should have a strong outward orientation. It must work in partnership with industry. We need to concentrate on strengthening the linkages between academic institutions, research institutions and industry. Today each operates within its own silo. Unless we close those gaps, our research and development sector may report high performance in terms of published papers but our challenges of the 21st century may still remain unsolved.

Lastly, Indian science should have a strong outward orientation. Our science establishments should step up global alliances that will expose our scientists to the best in the world and enhance our competitiveness.

The time has come to give a new boost to science and technology in India. I hope the 97th Indian Science Congress will come forward with specific proposals to this end. I hope each one of you will return to your laboratories and class rooms re-energised to do good science, and do it for the good of our people, and for the good of humanity at large.

In conclusion, I wish you all a very happy, prosperous, purposive and peaceful New Year and I wish your proceedings all success.”

032. Statement issued at the end of the second meeting of the Ministers of the BASIC countries.

New Delhi, January 24, 2010.

The second meeting of Ministers of the four BASIC Group countries took place in New Delhi today. The Ministers who participated in the meeting were Mr Xie Zhenhua, Vice Chairman of the National Development and Reforms Commission from China, Mr Carlos Minc, Minister for Environment from Brazil, Ms Buyelwa Sonjica, Minister of Water and Environmental Affairs from South Africa and Sh Jairam Ramesh, Minister of State (Independent Charge), Environment and Forests. A joint statement was issued at the conclusion of this meeting of ministers of BASIC Group.

The Ministers recalled that the BASIC Countries functioning as a cohesive group, had made important and constructive contributions at the recently concluded COP-15 in Copenhagen. They re-emphasised their commitment to working together with all other countries to ensure an agreed outcome at COP-16 in Mexico later this year.

The Ministers underscored the centrality of the UNFCCC process and the decision of the Parties to carry forward the negotiations on the two tracks of Ad hoc Working Group on Long-term Cooperative Action (AWG-LCA) under the Convention and the Ad hoc Working Group on further emission reduction commitments for Annex I Parties under the Kyoto Protocol (AWG-KP) in 2010 leading up to COP-16 and COP/MOP6 at Mexico. The Ministers reiterated that all negotiations must be conducted in an inclusive and transparent manner.

The Ministers called upon the COP President (Denmark) to convene meetings of the two negotiating groups - (AWG-LCA and the AWG-KP) - in March 2010 and to ensure that the AWGs meet at least 5 times before the Mexico Conference. They emphasised that funding, logistics and other procedural issues should not be allowed to become a constraint in the convening of these meetings which are essential to make progress towards an agreed outcome at COP-16.
While underscoring their support to the Copenhagen Accord which is in the nature of a political agreement, the Ministers recalled the important contribution of the BASIC countries in its finalisation. They underlined the importance of the Accord as representing a high level political understanding among the participants on some of the contentious issues of the climate change negotiations. They expressed the hope that this would facilitate the two-track process of negotiation under the Bali Roadmap to lead to a successful conclusion of ongoing negotiations in Mexico.

The members of the BASIC Group have already announced a series of voluntary mitigation actions for 2020. The Ministers expressed their intention to communicate information on their voluntary mitigation actions to the UNFCCC by January 31, 2010.

The Ministers called for the early flow of the pledged $10 bn in 2010 with focus on the least developed countries, small island developing states and countries of Africa, as proof of their commitment to urgently address the global challenge of climate change. In this context, the Ministers welcomed the progress made on the proposal for financing and implementation of the REDD+ mechanism and decided to undertake close coordination to this end.

The Ministers agreed to meet at the Ministerial level every quarter, and welcomed the offer of South Africa to host the next meeting of the BASIC Ministerial Group in late-April, 2010. They agreed to coordinate their positions closely as part of climate change discussions in other forums. They emphasised the importance of working closely with other members of Group of -77 & China in order to ensure an ambitious and equitable outcomes in Mexico through a transparent process.

The Ministers also emphasised that BASIC is not just a forum for negotiation coordination, but also a forum for cooperative actions on mitigation and adaptation including exchange of information and collaboration in matters relating to climate science & climate-related technologies. The Ministers expressed their desire to enhance South-South cooperation with other countries on various issues including those relating to scientific cooperation and support for adaptation to vulnerable countries.*

Earlier Dr. Manmohan Singh met with the four Ministers yesterday evening. The current G-77 Chair - Yemen - had also been invited but could not attend because of other commitments.

* The meeting was convened by India to discuss the post Copenhagen scenario on Climate Change amongst BASIC countries and evolve a coordinated approach to climate change related issues in 2010 in the run up to Mexico (Dec. 2010).

The BASIC meeting followed the Copenhagen Climate Change Conference where it was decided to continue negotiations in two tracks relating to Bali Action Plan and Kyoto Protocol for another one year so as to have a final outcome at the sixteenth Conference of Parties in Mexico. At Copenhagen, the President of the COP i.e. the Prime Minister of Denmark also had discussion with select group of countries on the ‘Copenhagen Accord’ that was not adopted but noted by the Conference of Parties (COP).
I am sorry that I am unable to be present physically at the 6th meeting of MEF Leaders’ Representatives. Such are the vagaries of Mother Nature for which no legally-binding agreement with fool-proof MRV can be an effective antidote! Todd Stern had wanted me to initiate the discussion on MRV. Before I do so, I wish to make four broad points that have a vital bearing on reducing the huge "trust deficit" that prevails in the climate change negotiating community.

First, the Copenhagen Accord is undoubtedly an important step forward. But it cannot be a separate track for negotiation. I have repeatedly said that the areas of agreement reflected in the Accord must be used to bring consensus in the on-going two-track negotiating process which is the only process that has legitimacy. Gordian knot-cutting can well be plurilateral but ultimately negotiations must be multilateral and carried out in good faith.

Second, there must be some visible triggers that get activated very soon to ensure that Cancun does not repeat Copenhagen. One such trigger is the beginning of actual disbursement of the $ 10 billion promised by the developed countries for this year for vulnerable economies, small island states and LDCs. Another trigger could be an agreement on REDD/REDD+ provided it looks at all potential countries uniformly and does not limit itself only to forest-basin countries. Finalising the architecture of technology cooperation is yet another confidence-building measure. All these elements should be a part of a multilateral package in two tracks that should be delivered in Cancun. In the end, a balance in the outcomes on all elements of the LCA and KP tracks must be maintained with Annex I countries immediately taking on binding commitments for truly significant GHG reductions within their borders.

Third, equity is the cornerstone of any international agreement that will be accepted by developing countries. The Copenhagen Accord sets a global goal and this will determine a certain global carbon budget. The implications of this budget for the carbon budgets of individual countries need to be analysed in detail and it has to be guaranteed as part of any international agreement that development goals of economic growth are not jeopardised by such budgets. The global objective of restricting temperature rise to 2 degrees Celsius by 2050 from mid-19th century levels must be firmly embedded in a demonstrably equitable access to atmospheric space with adequate finance and technology available to all developing countries.

Fourth, we need to better understand this mantra of "internationally legally binding agreement" which some developed countries keep chanting. What does it mean in practice? What are the consequences of non-fulfilment? What are the extenuating circumstances which could allow for non-fulfilment of commitments made as part of such an agreement? What is the place for domestic accountability mechanisms in such an agreement?

Let me now turn to the MRV issue. For Annex I Parties, this is dealt with in Para 4 and for non-Annex I Parties it is contained in para 5 of the Copenhagen Accord. Para 4 of the Copenhagen Accord reads thus:

Delivery of (emission) reductions and financing by developed countries will be measured, reported and verified in accordance with existing and any further guidelines adopted by the Conference of the Parties, and will ensure that accounting of such targets and finance is rigorous, robust and transparent.

Thus, as can be seen Para 4 enjoins the COP to develop appropriate guidelines for MRV of both emission reductions and financing of Annex I Parties. This is important to recall and stress since the entire focus in the MRV debate over the past year has been on developing country mitigation actions.

Now, let me turn to Para 5 of the Copenhagen Accord which reads thus:

Non-Annex I Parties to the Convention will implement mitigation actions, including those to be submitted to the secretariat by non-Annex I Parties in the format given in Appendix II by 31 January 2010, for compilation in an INF document, consistent with Article 4.1 and Article 4.7 and in the context of sustainable development. Least developed countries and small island developing States may undertake actions voluntarily and on the basis of support. Mitigation actions subsequently taken and envisaged by Non-Annex I Parties, including national inventory reports, shall be communicated through national communications consistent with Article 12.1(b) every two years on the basis of guidelines to be adopted by the Conference of the Parties. Those mitigation actions in national communications or otherwise communicated to the Secretariat will be added to the list in Appendix II.

Mitigation actions taken by Non-Annex I Parties will be subject to their domestic measurement, reporting and verification the result of which will be reported through their national communications every two years. Non-Annex I Parties will communicate information on the implementation of their actions through National Communications, with provisions for international consultations and analysis under clearly defined guidelines that will ensure that national sovereignty is respected. Nationally appropriate mitigation actions seeking international support will be recorded in a registry along with relevant technology, finance and capacity building support. Those actions supported will be added to the list in Appendix II. These supported nationally appropriate mitigation actions will be subject to international measurement, reporting and verification in accordance with guidelines adopted by the Conference of the Parties."

Now, para 5 is very convoluted and needs to be "deconstructed" and simplified. This is what I have done as shown below. Four crucial action points are embedded in para 5.

1. Mitigation actions of non-Annex I Parties to be communicated to UNFCCC Secretariat through NATCOM consistent with Article 12.1(b), every two years, on the basis of guidelines to be adopted by COP.

2. Mitigation actions taken by Non-Annex I Parties will be subject to their domestic measurement, reporting and verification (DMRV), the result of which will be reported through their NATCOMs every two years.

3. Non-Annex I Parties will communicate information on the implementation of their actions (NAMAs) through NATCOMs, with provisions for international consultations and analysis under clearly defined guidelines that will ensure that national sovereignty is respected.

4. NAMAs seeking international support will be recorded in a registry along with relevant technology, finance and capacity building support. They will be subject to international measurement, reporting and verification in accordance with guidelines adopted by COP.
As will be observed COP has been given explicit responsibility for developing guidelines for putting into effect action point #1 and action point #4. The responsibility for developing guidelines for action point #3 has not been explicitly given to COP but it is reasonable to assume and expect that this too will be a task for COP. We need to discuss how we are going to execute these tasks in a purposive manner.

Reiterating that mitigation actions by developing countries are voluntary, I would make the following suggestions to put the action points into practice:

- International consultations and analysis as envisaged in action point #3 above must be based on country implementation reports (derived from the respective NATCOM) prepared by the individual countries themselves so as to fulfill the “respect for national sovereignty” promise contained within action point #3 itself. A chapter/issue format for such reports can be agreed to by the COP.

- The frequency of international consultations and analysis can be somewhat akin to the graded system adopted by the WTO for its trade policy reviews—some countries get reviewed once every two years, some others once every four years and most others once every six years or more depending on share of world trade.

- There has to be a multilateral anchor for the international consultations and analysis process. The Subsidiary Body on Implementation (SBI) of the UNFCCC should consider, sooner rather than later, how and where this anchor is to be set up.

I would stress that the voluntary actions of developing countries which are the subject of such international consultations and analysis should, under no circumstances, be seen as taking on internationally legally binding commitments by these countries. It also goes without saying that domestic GHG mitigation actions which are not supported by finance and technology under UNFCCC arrangements (“unsupported NAMAs”) as part of their NATCOM will be subject to a different protocol. These are some preliminary ideas to stimulate discussion. I am once again sorry that I am unable to be present.
The sixth Meeting at the Leaders’ representative level of the Major Economies Forum on Energy and Climate met in Washington, DC, April 19, 2010. It was attended by officials from the seventeen major economies, as well as the United Nations, with Colombia, Denmark, Grenada, and Yemen also participating in the session.

Participants agreed that smaller, informal discussions such as the Major Economies Forum contributed to success in Copenhagen and can facilitate and enrich the discussions under the UNFCCC, the multilateral forum for negotiating climate change. Parties also highlighted the importance of discussions being representative and transparent.

Participants generally felt that Copenhagen Accord represented an important step forward, and that it provided important political consensus that should be reflected regarding the key issues in the negotiations leading up to Cancun.

Participants discussed goals for Cancun and beyond. There was a discussion of the role of the Kyoto Protocol and the form of a legal outcome. There was also a discussion of the key issues that need to be addressed to have a successful outcome in Cancun, noting the importance of setting realistic expectations for Cancun. Recognizing the urgency of moving forward, participants felt that in Cancun countries should at a minimum agree on a balanced set of decisions informed by the Copenhagen Accord.

Participants discussed what work needs to be done in the year ahead, including the need to elaborate the measurement, reporting, and verification and other transparency provisions of the Accord. In this regard, they welcomed India’s presentation on practical approaches to MRV and international consultations and analysis. Various participants also spoke to equity, the role of markets, engaging smaller countries in the mitigation effort, how to ensure that the approach going forward reflects the dictates of science, domestic actions already underway to implement mitigation commitments under the Accord, and actions to reduce deforestation. Participants supported the Mexican Presidency’s efforts to prepare COP16.
Many countries noted the importance of moving forward promptly with the Accord’s Fast Start financing provisions in a transparent fashion. Several countries presented information on the actions they were already undertaking in response to their fast start financing commitment under the Copenhagen Accord.

The participants were briefed on the Clean Energy Ministerial to be held July 19-20, 2010 in Washington D.C. that aims to advance key activities in the Technology Action Plans of the Global Partnership launched by Leaders in L’Aquila July 2009.

035. Joint Statement issued on the conclusion of the Third Meeting of the Minister of the BASIC countries.

Cape Town, April 25, 2010.

The third meeting of BASIC Ministers on climate change took place in Cape Town from 25 to 26 April 2010. The Ministers who participated in the meeting were H.E. Xie Zhenhua, Vice Chairman of the National Development and Reforms Commission from China, H.E. Izabella Teixeira, Minister for Environment from Brazil, H.E. Jairam Ramesh, Minister of State (Independent Charge), Environment and Forests from India, and H.E. Minister Buyelwa Sonjica, Minister of Water and Environmental Affairs from South Africa.

Other South African Ministers present were HE Minister Trevor Manual, Minister in the Presidency, Deputy Minister Sue van der Merwe, of International Relations and Co-operation and HE Deputy Minister Rejoyce Mabudafhasi, of Environmental Affairs. During their deliberations, Ministers emphasised the following.

1. The BASIC Ministers expressed their determination to continue to show leadership in acting on climate change.

2. Developing countries strongly support international legally binding agreements, as the lack of such agreements hurts developing countries more than developed countries. They noted that internationally binding legal agreements already exists in the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and its Kyoto Protocol. In accordance with the Convention, Brazil, China, India and South Africa are taking ambitious nationally appropriate mitigation actions, as announced in Copenhagen.

3. The Ministers agreed that in accordance with the mandate of the Bali Roadmap, such agreements must follow two tracks and include an agreement on quantified emission reduction targets under a second commitment period for Annex I Parties under the Kyoto Protocol, as well as a legally binding agreement on long-term cooperative action under the Convention. Ministers felt that a legally binding outcome should be concluded at Cancun, Mexico in 2010, or at the latest in South Africa by 2011.

4. Negotiations should follow a two-pronged approach which:

a. develops a politically balanced comprehensive outcome in the formal negotiations under the two Ad hoc Working Groups, underpinned by the principles of equity and common but differentiated responsibility and respective capabilities; and

b. uses the 2010 $10 billion fast-start funding to develop, test and demonstrate practical implementation approaches to both adaptation and mitigation, which can be used to inform the comprehensive package.

5. Building on the discussion held in New Delhi (January 2010), Ministers elaborated areas in which progress could be made in the run-up to Cancun, including:

a. the early flow of fast-start finance of the $10 bn in 2010 pledged by developed countries;

b. implementation of the REDD+ mechanism;

c. architecture of technology development and transfer;

d. adaptation framework encompassing implementation programmes; and

e. A work programme on measurement, reporting and verification (MRV) of commitments to finance, technology and capacity building support by developed countries, starting with a common reporting format for financial contributions by developed countries.

6. Ministers noted news reports that domestic legislation in the USA had been postponed and indicated that the world could not wait indefinitely, as it hinders our ability to reach an internationally legally binding agreement. A step-change is required in negotiations, and incremental progress on its own will not raise the level of ambition to the extent needed to avoid dangerous climate change and impacts on poor countries and communities.

7. Equity will be a key issue for any agreement. Ministers noted that the Copenhagen Accord sets a global goal of keeping temperature increase below 2°C above pre-industrial levels, without jeopardising economic growth and poverty alleviation. This implies a certain global carbon budget. The implications of this budget for individual countries require careful analysis, and must be based on a multilateral agreement about equitable burden-sharing, including historical responsibility for climate change, the need to allow developing countries equitable space for development, and adequate finance, technology and capacity-building support provided by developed countries for all developing countries.

8. Ministers outlined their understanding of how the political agreements on contentious issues, as reflected in the Copenhagen Accord, should be translated into the official negotiating texts under the Ad hoc Working Group on Long-Term Cooperative Action (AWGLCA) and Ad hoc Working Group on further Commitments by Annex I Parties under the Kyoto Protocol (AWGKP). They reaffirmed that negotiations must be based on the official negotiating texts in the AWGLCA and AWGKP, and negotiations conducted in an inclusive manner.

9. The only legitimate forum for negotiation of climate change is the UNFCCC. Small groups can make a contribution in resolving conflicts, but they must be representative and their composition must be determined through fully inclusive and transparent negotiations, with a mechanism for reporting back to the multi-lateral forum.

10. Further elaborating on finance, a. Ministers noted that the Copenhagen Accord provides for the scale of finance in short and medium-term. The commitments to provide finance must be operationalised. Both the $ 30 billion (2010-2012) and the $100 billion annually (by 2020) should be provided by developed countries.

b. Finance must balance adaptation and mitigation, not only in the next three years, but also in the medium-term.

11. Ministers were of the view that it will not be possible to deal with mitigation actions by developing countries, without also dealing with support for those actions and the two-fold commitments by developed countries to both provide finance for developing countries and reduce their own emissions, with consequences of non-fulfillment. In this regard, Ministers urged all Annex I countries to raise their level of ambition.

12. Ministers affirmed that the BASIC countries will continue their consultations with other countries and groups, following the “BASICPlus” approach, in order to facilitate the resolution of contentious issues in the negotiations.

13. Ministers emphasised again that BASIC is more than a forum focused on negotiations. They supported collaboration among experts from BASIC countries and welcomed the creation of an on-going forum, including work on adaptation and mitigation action plans and scenarios.

14. Ministers of the BASIC countries agreed that, remaining anchored in the G77&China, they will continue to contribute constructively to the multilateral negotiations on climate change.

15. Ministers welcomed Brazil’s offer to host the next BASIC Ministerial at the end of July and China’s offer to host a meeting at the end of October 2010. The BASIC Ministerials will bring together analytical work done on several issues, including a focus on equity.

036. Thimphu Statement on Climate Change issued by the Heads of State/Government of the SAARC countries.

Thimphu, April 29, 2010.

Please see Document No.130
Excellencies, distinguished delegates and friends,

The Oslo Climate and Forestry Conference demonstrates the commitment of the global community to combat climate change. This follows up on our Paris meeting last March. I thank the Government of Norway for bringing us all together again.

The REDD plus concept promotes a holistic approach for incentivizing actions to reduce emissions worldwide from forests and promote the sustainable management of forests. The ideas are captured in a decision of the recent Conference of Parties at Copenhagen. Whether the partnership document, emanating from this conference, appropriately reflects this comprehensiveness, is a question.

Is the partnership document putting REDD in the foreground at the cost of the plus part. Are we operationalizing the REDD part only. Would financing be available for the plus part. India seeks the operationalization of the entire REDD plus. The approach should be all-embracing and inclusive. It should not exclude. The reduction of deforestation and enhancement of forest carbon stocks are the two sides of the same coin, where one cannot do without the other. Both are equally important. In fact, the REDD and the plus are seamless. The two dimensions need to be taken up in parallel. If the tilt in the partnership document is towards reducing deforestation, the balance needs to be set right. An obvious question is whether the document is in ‘synch’ with the AWG-LCA paper released last week, which is the basis of the UNFCCC negotiations.

The scope of the LCA document is wider, as it includes all the elements of forest mitigation in the Bali Action Plan, i.e., reducing deforestation, conservation, and sustainable management and enhancement of forest carbon stocks. All these elements should be on our canvas. We should maintain and preserve the integrity of the REDD plus concept as identified in the Bali Action Plan.

While some developing countries are acting to reduce deforestation, many others like India are preventing diversion of forests to non-forestry uses.
and are also ensuring large scale afforestation. 1997-2007 saw 3.13 million hectares of forests added in India. Now we seek REDD plus funds for our Green India Mission in the interest of global climate protection. Our forests, about seventy million hectares, sequestered about 177 million tonnes of CO2 in 2007. This carbon service will enhance with the Green India Mission.

We are establishing in India a national REDD plus coordinating agency. We have already set up a technical group to develop methodologies and procedures for assessment and monitoring of REDD plus actions. The Indian Network for Climate Change Assessment is studying the impact of climate change on our forests and the study will be released in November 2010. India's biodiversity mainly lives in its forests, so in this context we are examining the areas of convergence between the UNFCCC and the Convention on Biodiversity. And, also because India in 2012 will host the eleventh Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biodiversity.

The Paris-Oslo meetings have been constructive and timely, not as negotiation among UNFCCC parties, but as a clearinghouse of ideas where intergovernmental organizations and civil society also contributed. But, it should not be that our discourse takes place under the rubric of REDD plus with the outcomes restricted to REDD without the plus.

My observations emanate from my concern to ensure that the basic premises of the UNFCCC process are not lost sight of. The reduction of deforestation and conservation and enhancement of forest carbon stocks must be treated at par.

Fairness requires that a unit of carbon saved be treated the same as a unit of carbon added.

To conclude, we wish to be counted as a close friend of the Paris-Oslo initiative on REDD plus, indeed a very engaging dialogue. I do hope that our observations are duly addressed as this initiative unfolds. This will also be in the interest of the main process under the UNFCCC framework. With this understanding, we remain positive on constructively engaging with the REDD plus partnership and the outcomes of the Oslo conference.

We are ready to take this initiative forward in our collective efforts to address climate change.

Thank you.
New Delhi, May 28, 2010.

The Prime Minister's Council on Climate Change, which met today approved in principle the National Water Mission and suggested that its basic approach should be to make water conservation a peoples' movement in India. For this it is essential to make available all data on water in the public domain to be able to mobilise citizens, local and State Governments for focused action on water conservation and augmentation.

The Prime Minister chairing the Council highlighted the need to create a general consciousness of the need to use water in the most sustainable manner. Given the fact that there are multiple uses for water and an integrated approach based on basin development planning needs to be evolved, he said that political leadership at the local body level, state level and civil society organizations need to be involved in activities of the Water Mission.

Ministers and other members of the Council endorsed these views. It was stated that the first step in this direction would be to prepare a comprehensive water data base in the public domain and assessing the impact of climate change on water. Action needs to be focused on vulnerable areas, where ground water is overexploited. It was also decided that water use efficiency should be raised by 20% through the promotion of water- positive and water- neutral technologies.

Members felt that a structure of incentives should be created for using water in a sustainable manner. It was also felt that the Research and Development requirements of the Mission should be focused upon.

Many Members stressed the need to use the opportunities from the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act, which already prioritizes community-level water security as the first charge in MGNREGA which is being led by panchayats and offers an opportunity to convert water conservation into a peoples movement.

039. Statement by Minister of State for Environment and Forests Jairam Ramesh at the 7th MEF Meeting.

I am delighted to be able to attend this MEF meeting. I was able to participate in the previous meeting only by video conference and I hope the suggestions I had made on operationalising Paras 4 and 5 of the Copenhagen Accord relating to MRV for both developed and developing countries were found useful by MEF participants. I wish to reiterate the main points that I had made. Para 4 of the Accord enjoins the COP to develop appropriate guidelines for MRV of actions of developed country Parties. This is important to recall and stress since the entire focus in the MRV debate over the past year has been on developing country mitigation actions. It is also important that such an MRV regime includes not only MRV of emission reduction commitments but also MRV of the targets, timeframes and regimes related to the transfer of finance and technology to developing countries. The MRV on finance assumes urgent importance for all of us need to know very clearly how much of the additional $ 30 billion pledged by the developed countries during 2010, 2011 and 2012 has materialised so far, how precisely are disbursements to take place, what the mix between bilateral and multilateral assistance is and to which countries and for what purposes are the funds going to flow. The one area where there is some clarity is REDD+ where $4.5 billion has been pledged.

Four crucial action points are embedded in Para 5 of the Accord:

1. Mitigation actions of non-Annex I Parties to be communicated to UNFCCC Secretariat through NATCOM consistent with Article 12.1(b), every two years, on the basis of guidelines to be adopted by COP.

2. Mitigation actions taken by Non-Annex I Parties will be subject to their domestic measurement, reporting and verification (DMRV), the result of which will be reported through their NATCOMs every two years.

3. Non-Annex I Parties will communicate information on the implementation of their actions (NAMAs) through NATCOMs, with provisions for international consultations and analysis under clearly defined guidelines that will ensure that national sovereignty is respected.
4. NAMAs seeking international support will be recorded in a registry along with relevant technology, finance and capacity building support. They will be subject to international measurement, reporting and verification in accordance with guidelines adopted by COP.

I had made the following suggestions to put these four action points into practice:

• International consultations and analysis as envisaged in action point # 3. above must be based on country implementation reports (derived from the respective NATCOM) prepared by the individual countries themselves so as to fulfil the "respect for national sovereignty" promise contained within action point # 3. itself. A chapter/issue format for such reports can be agreed to by the COP.

• The frequency of international consultations and analysis can be somewhat akin to the graded system adopted by the WTO for its trade policy reviews- some countries get reviewed once every two years, some others once every four years and most others once every six years or more depending on share of world trade.

• There has to be a multilateral anchor for the international consultations and analysis process. The Subsidiary Body on Implementation (SBI) of the UNFCCC should consider, sooner rather than later, how this process should be set in motion. SBI functions under the Convention to perform this kind of work and has fairly well laid out procedures in respect of reports of both Annex I and Non Annex I countries. We should allow SBI to get on with this task and fulfill the expectations resulting from our current state of negotiations. It bears repetition that the regime for MRV for Non-Annex I countries cannot be more onerous than that for the Annex I countries either in form or content or the consideration of their actions. Non-Annex I countries should have a regime that is subject to consideration in terms of Article 10. 2 (a) of the UNFCCC.

[II] EQUITY

I want to emphasise that the issue of MRV cannot be seen in the absence of another critical issue in the climate change discussions - the issue of equity. Without a working paradigm of equitable access to carbon space, what exactly will be the role and nature of MRV is far from clear and cannot be agreed. Therefore I also want to take this opportunity to bring the issue of equity, equitable access to the carbon space / equitable burden sharing, which seems to be sliding out of the negotiating discourse, back into the mainstream.

MRV must include a determination of an allocative principle and an equitable allocation of carbon space. This is particularly relevant in the context of the adequacy of actions of developed countries. This is critical if we are to have an international agreement at Cancun.

The June 10, 2010 text of the AWG-LCA text, that was rejected by most Parties, had this to say in Para 2: Deep cuts in global emissions are required according to science, and as documented in the Fourth Assessment Report of the IPCC, with a view to reducing global emissions so as to maintain the increase in global temperature below [1.5][2] degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels, and that Parties should take action to meet this objective consistent with science and on the basis of equity, taking into account historical responsibilities and access to global atmospheric resources.

I have two observations on this formulation. First, this Para has no reference to the foundational principle of CBDR and respective capabilities, which is enshrined in UNFCCC. This is unacceptable. Incidentally, in this context, I must mention I have read Todd Stern's speech at Brookings some weeks back where he has given a completely new interpretation to CBDR-new to the rest of the world, that is. I think we need to understand this interpretation in some detail

Second, this Para omits the need for a paradigm for equitable access to precede any agreement. This is unacceptable. Any discussion on a global goal - whether for limiting temperature increase or emissions reduction - is incomplete, meaningless and impossible in the absence of such a paradigm. There is no substitute for the equitable access paradigm. Unilateral pledges, for example, do not and cannot substitute for this paradigm.

Equitable access has been an integral part of previous texts in the AWG-LCA, for example in the LCA Chair’s text in Copenhagen that was adopted in Copenhagen and was also in the present Chair’s May 2010 text. The previous text said in two places:
that a goal for emissions reduction as part of the shared vision must include “taking into account historical responsibilities and an equitable share in the atmospheric space” and (2) that Parties recognise the broad scientific view that the temperature increase should not exceed 2 or 1.5 or 1 degree, “preceded by a paradigm for equal access to global atmospheric resources. I therefore strongly propose that all of us agree to restore these texts in the relevant two places and send the message to our negotiators.

Moreover, it is vital that these principles be operationalised so that the equity paradigm in sharing atmospheric space is spelt out in practical terms. Carbon space is development space and therefore we must agree on an appropriate methodology to determine carbon space that has been used up and that can be used in future, the rights and allocations for this space between developed and developing countries, including the implications for finance and technology transfers to developing countries.

It is critical that we arrive at an operational set of formulae on equity based primarily on cumulative per capita emissions. Some scholars have also suggested that allocation of per capita emissions must be supplemented with the fact that the level of development of a country is important in determining what level of per capita emission may be appropriate. A country with low per capita income, with little infrastructure, few climate-friendly technologies and little organisational capacity requires a higher per capita emissions entitlement compared to a developed country with well developed infrastructure, technology and capacity. Thus the carbon space concept also means that poorer countries need more carbon space in order to achieve the same level of per capita income than richer countries.

The carbon budgets approach, made explicit by think tanks in Germany, UK, Brazil, China, India and other countries as well as the South Centre, Geneva, provides a useful basis for conceptualising and operationalising equity, and must be brought to the mainstream of our discussions and negotiations. I am just coming for attending an international conference on “Global Carbon Budgets and Equity in Climate Change” that India hosted. We had participants from Germany, UK, Brazil and Malaysia, and the proposals on equity and carbon budgets were discussed in great detail. The BASIC Group is meeting in Rio de Janeiro in late-July and we have set aside a day to have a technical workshop on equity related issues. These are important discussions and we must now bring these concrete proposals from the margins into the core of our negotiations. If only lip service continues to get paid to equity, and if we pay obeisance to it only in words and think we have addressed the issue, I am afraid that no international agreement will be possible. Therefore after the workshop in Rio, the BASIC and other developing countries would like to bring our concrete proposals to the other members in the UNFCCC. We hope that a workshop can be organised so that negotiators can discuss how to integrate these concepts and how to operationalise the equity principles into the negotiations and the negotiating text. India would be delighted to host a meeting before Cancun to enable this discussion.

Hopefully we can make tangible progress on this by Cancun and in Cancun. Let us work together collectively to ensure that Cancun becomes an equity based conference and not one that gives a burial to it.

040. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Environment and Forests on the inauguration of the Conference on 'Global Carbon Budgets and Equity in Climate Change'.

Mumbai, July 1, 2010.

Ensuring that climate change deliberations are based on the principles of equity and fairness is of prime importance to India, stated the Minister for Environment and Forests, Mr. Jairam Ramesh. He was inaugurating a conference on "Global Carbon Budgets and Equity in Climate Change" at the Tata Institute of Social Sciences (TISS), Mumbai. The conference was held on 28th and 29th June and was jointly organized by the Ministry of Environment and Forests and the Centre for Science, Technology and Society (School of Habitat Studies) at TISS. Academicians, negotiators and policy makers from around India, including participants from Brazil, England, Germany and Malaysia, attended the workshop.

In his opening remarks, the Minister set the tone for the workshop when he called for "an intensive scientific debate on defining and measuring equity principles of climate change as well as approaches on how to practically implement the suggestions that arise from this workshop”.

Dr. T. Jayaraman, professor at TISS, along with his colleagues authored the background paper for this workshop. This paper introduced a carbon-budget approach to defining equity, which takes into account the historical responsibility of developed countries towards climate change by quantifying the accumulated stock of their carbon emissions in the atmosphere. When benchmarked against an equitable distribution of the atmospheric carbon space, the developed countries are occupying far more than their fair share of this carbon space. Dr. Martin Khor, in his keynote address, said, “between 1850 and today, developed countries owe a carbon debt of 600 billion tonnes”. The paper also introduced an emissions model to study various mitigation proposals from the viewpoint of equity, which was introduced by Ms. Tejal Kanitkar, Program Officer at TISS.

The importance of equity was reiterated by the Minister in his statement to the Major Economies Forum in Rome, Italy, where he said, “if only lip service continues to get paid to equity, and if we pay obeisance to it only in words and think we have addressed the issue, I am afraid that no international agreement will be possible”.

On the second day of the meeting at the valedictory session, Mr. J. M. Mauskar, Addnl. Secy., MoEF, asked the organisers to convene an Implementation Task Force to further study how the carbon budget perspective could be taken forward. In the closing session of the first day, Mr. R. R. Rashmi, Joint Secy., MoEF, referred to the linkages between MRV and the carbon budget perspective.

The fourth meeting of BASIC country Ministers on climate change took place in Rio de Janeiro on the 25th and 26th of July 2010. H.E. Ambassador Antonio de Aguiar Patriota, Acting Minister of External Relations of Brazil, H.E. Izabella Teixeira, Minister for Environment of Brazil, H.E. Xie Zhenhua, Vice Chairman of the National Development and Reform Commission of China, H.E. Jairam Ramesh, Minister of State (Independent Charge), Environment and Forests of India, and H.E. Minister Buyelwa Sonjica, Minister of Water and Environmental Affairs of South Africa attended the meeting. In line with the "BASIC-plus" approach, additional participants were invited. The Special Envoy of Venezuela for Climate Change, Claudia Salerno Caldera, attended as an observer. Other invited countries were not able to attend.

Ministers reiterated the importance of the two pronged approach, which envisages, on one hand, an ambitious and comprehensive outcome for the negotiations under both the Ad Hoc Working Group on Long-Term Cooperative Action under the UNFCCC and the Ad Hoc Working Group on Further Commitments by Annex I Parties under the Kyoto Protocol, and, on the other hand, considers the elements for an equitable and balanced outcome in Cancun, covering, for example, different initiatives which could be supported by fast-start finance.

Ministers agreed that fast-start finance will be the key for an effective result in the climate change negotiations in Cancun. They expressed their concern with the lack of operational guidelines for the provision of such resources and the need for such financing to effectively be new and additional, as well as provided as grants on a concessional basis, respecting the definitions of the UNFCCC and the understandings achieved in Copenhagen. Ministers also stressed the need for detailed and comprehensive information on fast start financing flows provided by developed countries, to be made available officially. They also indicated the need for fast start financing to cover, in a balanced way, all the pillars of the Bali Action Plan, including adaptation and technology development and transfer.
Ministers reaffirmed their support for the G77 and China proposal regarding the financial mechanism of the UNFCCC and expressed their appreciation for the convergence within the negotiations on the creation of a new fund to fight climate change. They were of the view that public financing should play the major role as a predictable source of financing. In this sense, they stressed the importance that the work of the UN Secretary-General's High-level Advisory Group on Climate Change Financing fulfill the expectations of developing countries and be in accordance with the principles of the UNFCCC.

Ministers highlighted the importance of achieving a balanced outcome in Cancún. They noted the distinction between MRV of emission reduction commitments by developed countries, which is related to compliance and comparability, and MRV of nationally appropriate mitigation actions (NAMAs) by developing countries, which is related to transparency. Ministers emphasized that work on the MRV of international support must advance urgently, including through the development of common procedures for the reporting of finance. They underscored that only supported NAMAs should be subject to international MRV, in conjunction with the MRV of international support, while non-supported NAMAs will apply a domestic MRV. International consultations and analysis of information regarding non-supported actions would be useful to enhance transparency, through a multilateral technical exchange under the UNFCCC.

Ministers also underscored their support for the aspirational objective of keeping global temperature increase below 2°C with regard to pre-industrial levels, bearing in mind that social and economic development and poverty eradication are the first and overriding priorities of developing countries. A global goal for emission reductions should be preceded by the definition of a paradigm for equitable burden sharing. They emphasized that equitable access to carbon space must be considered in the context of sustainable development, the right to which is at the heart of the climate change regime, and which demands the implementation of ambitious financing, technological support and capacity building.

Following the guidance defined by Ministers at their Cape Town meeting, experts from BASIC countries met and exchanged views on issues of equity.
Ministers welcomed the results of these consultations. They underlined the need for further collaboration among BASIC experts on this issue, with a view to understanding the economic, social, scientific and technical implications of equitable access to carbon space and strengthening a common consideration of this matter. Ministers emphasized the issue of equitable access to carbon space as a central element in the building of a balanced and comprehensive outcome for the climate change negotiations.

Ministers emphasized the importance of the unity of the Group of 77 and China and its role in multilateral negotiations, including in the construction and strengthening of the climate change regime. They also highlighted the role of BASIC as part of the Group of 77 and China and the importance that the BASIC countries maintain their full participation in the discussions and activities of the Group. In thanking the representative of Venezuela for her presence and meaningful contribution, they decided to continue the "BASIC-plus" approach in order to foster transparency and benefit from a variety of views on climate change issues. They also agreed to broaden consultations with other groups of countries, with a view to actively contribute to a successful and ambitious outcome in Cancún and beyond.

Ministers welcomed the offer of China to host the Fifth Meeting of Ministers of the BASIC Group on the 10th and 11th of October and commented on the strategic nature of the meeting as preparation for the Sixteenth Conference of the Parties to the UNFCCC (COP-16) and the Sixth Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol (CMP-6). A meeting of experts would be held alongside this Ministerial meeting, in order to take forward the discussions on equitable access to carbon space and also address issues related to trade policy and climate change.
042. Intervention on Climate Change by Minister of State Smt. Preneet Kaur at the Post-Forum Dialogue Partners’ meeting.

Port Vila, Vanuata, August 6, 2010.

Climate change is an important issue on the global agenda today with significant implications for developing countries, for whom it is not merely an environmental issue, but directly impacts on their developmental aspirations and survival.

We in India are deeply conscious of the challenge faced by the Pacific Island Countries, since we too have large and vulnerable populations living on our island chains and in low lying coastal areas.

We need to redouble efforts in the multilateral negotiations to ensure full, effective and sustained implementation of the UN Framework Convention and its Kyoto Protocol, and to conclude these negotiations with a balanced, comprehensive and above all, an equitable outcome, with equal emphasis on all four pillars - mitigation, adaptation, finance and technology transfer.

We are sensitive to and fully appreciate the call by small islands developing states for a more ambitious global deal to address climate change. India believes that whatever global goal we may agree to, this must be preceded by a paradigm for equitable burden sharing that provides for an equal sharing of the resource of the atmosphere for all human beings. This is a core expectation we have from the ongoing negotiations.

India fully supports a firm demonstration of greater sensitivity and a more concrete response to the urgent adaptation needs of the small island developing countries, including the Pacific Island States, LDCs and countries of Africa as part of any emerging outcome of on-going multilateral negotiations.

We would urge the developed countries to disburse these funds without further delay, under the overall supervision of the UNFCCC to meet the urgent adaptation needs of those countries for whom climate change poses an existential threat.
As a responsible member of the international community, India, despite its own developmental challenges, is already doing whatever it can within the limitation of its own resources, to contribute to the global action on climate change.

Our recent announcement to take on a voluntary target of reducing the emissions intensity of India's GDP by 20-25% by 2020 in comparison to the 2005 level is a manifestation of the seriousness with which we seek to address climate change.

We are willing to help the Pacific Island Countries in whatever way we can within our resources to deal with the effects of climate change, including for capacity building. We are willing to share our experience and expertise in the fields of climate-friendly technologies and sustainable development programmes to supplement your own national programmes of action on climate change.

043. Joint Statement issued at the Conclusion of the Fifth BASIC Ministerial Meeting on Climate Change.

Tianjin, China, October 11, 2010.

The Fifth BASIC Ministerial meeting on climate change was held in Tianjin, China, on the 10th and 11th of October 2010. H.E. Mr. Xie Zhenhua, Vice Chairman of the National Development and Reform Commission of China, H.E. Mr. Jairam Ramesh, Minister of State (Independent Charge), Environment and Forests of India, H.E. Ms. Buyelwa Sonjica, Minister of Water and Environmental Affairs of South Africa, and H.E. Mr. Luiz Alberto Figueiredo Machado, Ambassador and Director General of the Department for the Environment and Special Affairs of Ministry of External Relations of Brazil, as well as H.E. Mr. Liu Zhenmin, Assistant Minister of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of China attended the meeting. In line with the "BASIC-plus" approach, representatives of Yemen, Chair of G77, Argentina, incoming Chair of G77, Ethiopia, Chair of the African Group, Grenada, Chair of AOSIS, and Egypt, Chair of the Arab Group were invited and attended the meeting as observers.
BASIC ministers focused their discussions on issues in relation to the Cancun Conference, and expressed their determination to facilitate a comprehensive and balanced outcome in Cancun in accordance with the mandate of the Bali Roadmap. Ministers highly appreciated the successful meeting of UN Climate Change Conference held in Tianjin from 4th to 9th of October 2010, which laid the solid ground for a good outcome in Cancun.

Ministers emphasised that the outcome of Cancun Conference should be based on the balance between and within the two negotiating tracks under Convention and KP, and that the Cancun Conference should be open, transparent, inclusive, party driven and based on consensus. Ministers supported the reflection of the elements of the Copenhagen Accord that contains the political understandings in the negotiating texts of the AWG-LCA and AWG-KP. Ministers reiterated the importance of the two tracks approach, which envisages, an ambitious and comprehensive outcome for the negotiations under both the AWG-LCA and AWG-KP in Cancun. Ministers emphasised that the outcome in Cancun should pave the way for a legally binding outcome next year in South Africa. The Cancun outcome should not in any way deviate from the mandate of the Bali Roadmap.

Ministers underscored that fast-start finance now and up to 2012 will be the key to enhance confidence in the multilateral process and enable success in Cancun. They emphasised that the $30 billion fast start finance should be made available as soon as possible in a transparent manner. They expressed their concern with the lack of transparency and the relevant information on fast start finance and reiterated that these resources must be new and additional to the existing ODA and bilateral funds.

Ministers agreed that mid- and long- term financial support provided by the developed countries are also an important part of the Cancun outcome. They affirmed their full support for the establishment of a new fund under the UNFCCC and agreed that the public funding provided by developed countries should be the primary source of this fund.

Ministers urged developed countries to commit to more ambitious emission reduction targets under the second commitment period of the Kyoto Protocol. Ministers called for developed countries that did not ratify the Kyoto Protocol to undertake comparable emission reduction targets under the Convention.
Ministers noted the significant distinction between the emission reduction commitments by developed countries and nationally appropriate mitigation actions by developing countries both in terms of their nature and content. Ministers emphasised that developing countries are the most affected by the impact of climate change and that developed countries have a obligation to provide finance and technology support to developing countries for adaptation. They reiterated the need to deal with adaptation as a matter of urgency in Cancun.

Ministers underscored the importance attached to developed countries fulfilling their obligations of technology transfer and agreed that intellectual property rights should not be allowed to become a barrier to technology transfer. They were of the view that positive progress should be made in Cancun for the establishment of effective mechanism for technology development and transfer.

Ministers reaffirmed their support for the aspirational objective of keeping global temperature increase well below 2ºC, bearing in mind that social and economic development and poverty eradication are the first and overriding priorities of developing countries. Ministers also recognised diversity of views on more ambitious aspirational objectives. Ministers believed that the resolution to this issue links directly to reaching a political understanding of equity. Ministers reaffirmed that equitable access to sustainable development will be the core of and foundation for any climate change agreement and that this will be the prerequisite for setting up any global emission reduction target. This must take into account historical responsibility of developed countries, the need for space and time to achieve sustainable development in developing countries, and the need for the provision of adequate finance, technology and capacity building support by developed countries to developing countries.

Following the guidance by Ministers at their meeting in Rio, BASIC experts met and exchanged views on issues of equity, and trade and climate change. Ministers welcomed the results of the follow-up to these consultations made here in Tianjin. They underlined the need for further collaboration among BASIC experts on these issues. Ministers emphasised the importance of the issue of equitable access to sustainable development as a central element in building a comprehensive and balanced outcome for climate change negotiations. Ministers requested their experts to continue discussions and to extend them to the equity dimensions of adaptation. Ministers rejected the notion of unilateral actions against products and services of developing countries on grounds of combating climate change, including tax and non-tax, or other fiscal and non-fiscal border or other measures, which are incompatible the principles and provisions of the UNFCCC and will seriously jeopardize international collaboration on climate change and international trade.

Ministers reiterated that the BASIC as part of the Group of 77 and China will continue to work and strengthen the unity of the Group, and play a constructive role in facilitating climate change negotiations. In thanking the representatives of Yemen, Argentina, Grenada, Ethiopia, and Egypt

The BASIC countries meeting in a pre-conference (October 10th), agreed to push for the introduction of a text to "reject the use of unilateral protectionist measures" by developed countries. Minister of Environment and Forests Jairam Ramesh speaking in Tianjin said: “We would like this text to be reflected in the final agreement. We believe that the trade issue is linked to the equity issue. You cannot delink the two.” This meeting of the BASIC countries was the last one before the final year-end negotiations, at Cancun climate conference. Tackling "trade protectionism", Mr. Ramesh said, would also be top of the agenda at this meeting. The meeting besides the BASIC countries was attended by officials from Yemen, Ethiopia, Venezuela, Argentina and Egypt.

It may be recalled that the United States and European countries had called for trade restrictions, known as border adjustments, on goods imported from countries such as India and China who were not agreeable to binding emissions reduction targets. The text, which India had first proposed in Bonn in August 2009, said developed countries "shall not resort to any form of unilateral measures including countervailing border measures, against goods and services imported from developing countries on grounds of protection and stabilisation of climate." Mr. Ramesh said moves to do so would violate the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. However, he expressed concern over reports that have argued that some of the measures were compatible with WTO rules, under carefully crafted conditions. "The report has come as somewhat of a shock to us," he said. "Our opinion is that it is not WTO and UNFCCC compatible." Following the modest progress made in the past week, which was dominated by disagreements between China and the U.S., Mr. Ramesh reiterated his view that "there is no light at the end of the tunnel", and a binding deal being reached in Cancun was out of the question. Even on climate finance from developed countries, where talks indicated some progress, Mr. Ramesh said there was "no clarity". While the West had pledged $30 billion in the next three years as "fast start" projects, no money had, as yet, been distributed. He said India and China had both voluntarily withdrawn their claims to climate finance, so that the money would benefit Small Island States, Less Developed Countries and African nations. "Frankly, the moral and political authority of the West has been eroded by their inability to put fast start finance on the fast track. If they haven't even been able to do this much, there is no credibility left."
Ministers and representatives from 35 countries, regional groupings and UN organisations met in New Delhi to discuss the creation and operationalisation of a Technology Mechanism under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [UNFCC]. They recalled the central role of technology development and transfer in addressing climate change, and the importance accorded to this issue in the Convention. They also recalled the mandate provided in the Bali Action Plan towards developing, "effective mechanisms and enhanced means for the removal of obstacles to, and provision of financial and other incentives for, scaling up the development and transfer of technology to developing country parties", as well as to "accelerate deployment, diffusion and transfer of affordable environmental technologies", and promote "cooperation on research and development of current, new and innovative technologies", while keeping in consideration the "effectiveness of mechanisms and tools for technology cooperation in specific sectors".

The participants took note of the ongoing discussions in the Ad-hoc Working Group on the Long-term Cooperative Agreement [AWG-LCA], and noted that there was considerable convergence amongst Parties, and that there was substantial agreement that the early operationalisation of a technology mechanism is important. It was felt that Parties should aim for this to be a key deliverable at COP-16 in Cancun as part of a comprehensive and balanced package.

for their presence and valuable contribution, the Ministers decided to continue this "BASICplus" approach.

Ministers welcomed the offer of India to host the Sixth BASIC Ministerial Meeting on Climate Change in February 2011.

044. Chair's Summary of the Delhi Ministerial Dialogue on "Climate Change: Technology Mechanism".

New Delhi, November 10, 2010.
The participants focused their discussion on three critical elements of the technology mechanism, namely: (a) Structure and governance; (b) Work programme and priority in activities; and (c) Financing of activities supported by or under the Technology Mechanism.

There was a general view that the mechanism should address both adaptation and mitigation. It was felt that the technology mechanism should promote international cooperation both for dissemination and deployment of currently available technologies as well as the development of newly emerging technologies, particularly those that address the adaptation and mitigation needs of developing countries.

Some participants expressed a strong view that the transfer and sharing of technologies had to be a key objective of the Mechanism, and that the mechanism should work to facilitate rapid diffusion of technologies in a cost-effective and affordable manner.

Some participants felt that the initial focus should be on technologies that are or could be in the public domain. The technologies for adaptation which are in the public domain could be one of the key activities undertaken by the technology mechanism in the early phase. The Technology Mechanism would also need to catalyze private-sector activities to meet the technology needs of developing countries to address climate change.

The participants agreed that the Technology Mechanism would consist of a Technology Executive Committee (TEC) and Climate Technology Centres and Networks (CTCN). There was general agreement that the TEC would be the main body providing advice on technology issues to the COP, and that the CTCN would be the operational arm of the Mechanism. Participants expressed a strong preference for a relatively small, nimble and efficient TEC, with professionals and experts as members, and with balanced representation. Some felt that the TEC could advise COP on activities eligible for financing, including on procedures for accelerated processing of proposals and disbursement of funding, while others felt that the TEC should function as a think-tank on technology issues for the COP. The TEC should capture the lessons on accelerated development and transfer of technologies in different contexts.

Participants felt that the CTCN should focus on strengthening appropriate organisations and national capacities across the world to provide a range of country driven services. These could include inter alia (a) support for the identification of technology needs and priorities, and preparation of projects and programmes; (b) facilitation of technology innovation to fulfill needs and priorities identified that are unable to be met by existing technologies; and (c) enabling human and institutional capacity-building for technology utilisation, support and outreach.

Several participants felt that the mandate of both these bodies would derive from guidance provided by the COP and that they would periodically report back to the Convention on their activities. Other participants saw the CTCN as being parallel and complementary to TEC.

A variety of views was expressed on the role of intellectual property in the negotiations. Several participants stressed that the intellectual property issue is an important issue that needs to be resolved. However, considering the current state of discussions on this issue, participants expressed the urgent need to find a way forward to operationalise the Technology Mechanism in the interim. Some participants felt that while it is important to reach an agreement on technology mechanism in Cancun, it is also important to continue the dialogue on resolving the intellectual property issue at Cancun and beyond.

Participants believe that the technology mechanism should address the needs for technology at various levels: local, national, regional, and global. The institutional structure of the mechanism should be designed to address these diverse needs. Participants felt that while "mitigation is global, adaptation is local". This implies that the mechanism should focus on building bottom-up absorptive capacity in developing countries to facilitate uptake of technologies which are in line with local needs and circumstances. The participants stressed the need to draw upon the successful examples of government-supported/funded initiatives (e.g., CGIAR) which have resulted in positive technological impacts. However, it was also emphasized that the mechanism should reflect current and future needs and circumstances. References were made to several government-funded technology initiatives which provided a publicly available platform on which further innovation could occur. References were also made to the necessity of harnessing the power of the private sector, both in technology and finance, to address the mitigation and adaptation challenges, especially in developing countries.

The participants emphasised the important role of finance in enabling the technology mechanism to achieve its objectives successfully. In this context, participants recalled the commitment of the Parties to generate resources of USD 100 billion per annum by 2020. In the discussion on the relationship between the Technology Mechanism and the Financial Mechanism, many participants felt that the COP should provide guidance to the Financial Mechanism for the provision of financial support to activities relating to technology development, transfer and its deployment. In developing this guidance, the COP would take into consideration advice provided by the TEC and the proposals developed by the CTCN. Some participants stressed that the Financial Mechanism would be responsible for, inter alia the processes related to the development and review of proposals, funding, implementation oversight and monitoring and verification relating to eligible technology development and transfer activities. Some participants also expressed the opinion that the Financial Mechanism should draw upon the expertise and skills of the Technology Mechanism when appropriate.

The participants looked forward to the discussions on technology development and transfer at the COP-16 in Cancun, Mexico in November-December 2010, and reiterated the importance of a positive result in form of an agreed decision on the Technology Mechanism, as part of a balanced package of outcomes.
045. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Environment and Forests on the press briefing by the Minister of State Jairam Ramesh at the end of the two-day Ministerial Meeting on Climate Change.

The Ministerial Meeting on Climate Change look forward to the discussions on technology development and transfer at the COP-16 in Cancun, Mexico and reiterated the importance of a positive result in form of an agreed decision on the Technology Mechanism, as part of a balanced package of outcomes. Briefing the media at the end of the two day conference here Shri Jairam ramesh, Minister of State for Environment and Forests said that we will play our positive role of a ‘Deal maker, not deal breaker’ as said by our Prime Minister. Shri Jairam Ramesh said, “Technology and finance are two essential pillars of any international climate change treaty. We discussed how a technology mechanism will function. We want Cancun conference to succeed and India is prepared to play a role to get constructive outcome at Cancun.”

Ministers and representatives from 35 countries, regional groupings and UN organisations participated in New Delhi to discuss the creation and operationalisation of a Technology Mechanism under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [UNFCC]. A statement issued at the conclusion of this meeting states that Ministers and representatives recalled the central role of technology development and transfer in addressing climate change, and the importance accorded to this issue in the Convention. This conference was jointly organized by the Government of India, the Government of Mexico, with active partnership of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

Mr. Juan Elvira Quesado, Minister of Environment and Natural Resources informed about discussions took place during last two days Vice Chairman (Minister), National Development Reform Commission, China and Under-Secretary General, UN Department of Social and Economic Affairs, Mr Sha Zukang appreciated Indian leadership and expressed hope that the complex issue of climate change will have some solution.

Shri Jairam Ramesh announced that India will host CoP11 of UN convention on Biodiversity in 2012 at New Delhi. In March 2011, India will hold the Ministerial dialogue in collaboration with UN on Sustainable development as part of preparation for coming Rio conference.
046. India reiterates its commitment to the Kyoto Protocol.

New Delhi, December 1, 2010.

In answering a question in the Lok Sabha the Minister of State Jairam Ramesh said:

"India is fully committed to the Kyoto Protocol. The talks for further emission reduction commitments of Annex-I Parties in the Second Commitment Period (Post 2012) are undergoing since 2005. India, along with South Africa and 35 other like minded countries had earlier submitted a proposal calling for Annex-I Parties to agree to at least 40% emission reduction commitment by 2020 as compared to their 1990 levels. India has been one of the major beneficiaries of the Clean Development Mechanism (CDM), a flexible mechanism under the Kyoto Protocol and would like that this mechanism to continue and be further strengthened. There has been no agreement till date and the negotiations on the targets of Annex-I Parties for the second commitment period and other relevant issues are ongoing for a possible decision at the sixteenth Conference of Parties (COP-16) to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and sixth Meeting of Parties (MOP-6) to the Kyoto Protocol presently being held at Cancun, Mexico."

047. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Environment and Forests at India's participation at the Cancun Conference on Climate Change.

Cancun, December 7, 2010.

Indian event at Cancun re-emphasises importance of equity India hosted a major event at the sidelines of the UN Climate Change Conference at Cancun, where the critical issue of equity and equitable access to carbon space was emphasised. Addressing the meeting, India’s Minister for Environment and Forests and Head of Delegation, Sh Jairam Ramesh noted: "Equity is key to the climate change negotiations. In the context of the 2 deg C global goal, the issue of equitable access becomes even more important. The phrase equitable access is not the right to pollute, but the right to sustainable development. We need to bring the excellent academic work on the subject into the mainstream of our negotiations."

Mr. Jairam Ramesh personally chaired the side event that had presentations by Prof. T. Jayaraman, Tata Inst. Of Social Sciences, India, Mr. Martin Khor, Executive Dir., South Centre, Geneva and Dr. Harald, ERC & Univ. Of Cape Town, South Africa. On the role of developing countries he noted that they have an imperative to develop rapidly and therefore cannot take on commitments that would impede their development.

The BASIC* Ministerial meetings since the Cape Town meeting in early 2010 have recognized the importance of the equitable access to atmospheric space that is implied by the acceptance of limits on global temperature rise. Most recently at Tianjin the Ministers of the BASIC countries reiterated that "equitable access to sustainable development will be the core of and foundation for any climate change agreement and that this will be the prerequisite site for setting up any global emission target."

*BASIC countries (Brazil, South Africa, India and China) meeting at Cancun outlined three issues that were non-negotiable and this included the necessity of a second commitment period to the Kyoto Protocol. The Environment Minister Jairam Ramesh stressed the other two issues were, need to accelerate disbursement under the fast-start finance programme in the form of new and additional resources through a multilaterally supervised mechanism and recognition of the importance of continued dialogue on Intellectual Property Rights (IPR) as part of the technology development and transfer issues. The BASIC had stated that they do not want funds under the fast-start finance programme; that it should go to smaller countries in dire straits. Mr. Ramesh said a successful global effort on climate change must have the United States on board as it was the single largest emitter of greenhouse gases and that was one of the challenges here.

After some initial hesitation, China fell in line with other BASIC countries on the question of International Consultation and Analysis (ICA) proposal made by India. Given that the ICA was voluntary, the frequency of reporting emissions should be on a par with what the Annexe 1 or (developed) countries would do as part of the Measurement Reporting and Verification (MRV), Mr. Ramesh said.
In his presentation Prof. T. Jayaraman noted that recent advances in climate science had made a clear scientific case for considering global GHG emission targets in terms of a global carbon budget. The developed nations had grossly overoccupied the available space, since their emissions since 1850 amounted to almost 74% of the total carbon stock due to fossil fuels in the atmosphere. In answer to a question he noted that even accounting for emissions only from 1970, the developed countries were still responsible for more than 65% of total carbon stock in the atmosphere. But since the future budget for the world was only 300 Gigatons of carbon from 2010 to 2050, most developing countries would not be able to attain even 50% of their fair share of carbon space in terms of per capita accumulated stock of emissions. Developed countries need to cut emissions immediately and sharply and compensate developing countries through finance and technology transfer for their deficit in carbon space.

In his presentation, Mr. Martin Khor, Director, South centre, Geneva, noted that equitable access was crucial because carbon space was development space. He recalled the offer at Copenhagen of the developing countries to reduce emissions by 2050 to 80% of 1990 levels within a global reduction of 50% and pointed out that it did not give enough development space to developing countries. He emphasized that any fair and successful deal has to be environmentally ambitious, equitable and economically fair.

Dr. Harald Winkler pointed out that equity was critical to giving the climate negotiations a sense of direction. However he emphasized that it was important to take into account equity in all aspects and not a reductionist view equity. He pointed out that the question of how critical carbon budgets are should be studied. In response to a question, Dr. Winkler agreed that the atmosphere was a global commons and that the climate question was one of finding the right means of commons resource management.
Madame President:

Over sixty years ago, the Green Revolution in wheat was launched from Mexico with the development of new high-yielding varieties at CIMMYT. Today, Madame President, the word Sonora still resonates in my country.

The time is now for us to launch an Ever Green Revolution from Mexico, a revolution that will trigger innovations in low-carbon technologies for energy, transport, agriculture and other areas. That is why yesterday, at the meeting chaired by the President of Mexico, I suggested that this Cancun meet take a decision to establish a CGIAR-like network of which CIMMYT is a part. I am pleased that the President warmly supported this idea which also received enthusiastic backing from Mexico’s Nobel Laureate in Chemistry Mario Molina.

Last year, at Copenhagen I had spoken about India’s profound vulnerabilities to climate change and had described the actions being taken by us domestically and voluntarily to respond to this challenge in a proactive manner. Let me give you a quick update on what we have done since then.

First, we have announced that we will reduce the emissions intensity of India’s GDP by 20-25% by the year 2020 on a 2005 reference level, through proactive policies. India’s Twelfth Five Year Plan, to be launched on April 1, 2012 will have, as one of its key pillars, a low-carbon growth strategy. Detailed work on this has already begun and is available in the public domain keeping in view our deepest commitment to transparency and accountability.

Second, we have taken firm steps to diversify our energy fuel mix. 20,000 Mw of solar power generating capacity will be set up by 2022 and the present share of nuclear power in our energy mix, which is 3% today, will be doubled over the next decade. A major market-based programme has been put in place to stimulate energy efficiency. We have imposed a clean energy cess on coal for funding R&D of clean energy technologies, even though coal will continue to play a key role in our future energy strategy. We have aggressively expanded the use of natural gas in our power production.

Third, we are pursuing aggressive strategies on forestry and coastal management. India’s 70 million hectares of forests have not only ecological, but also livelihood significance, as they support the livelihoods of 250 million people. We are launching an ambitious Green India Mission to increase the quality and quantity of forest cover in 10 million hectares of land. We have also launched a major new programme on coastal zone management to address the adaptation challenges facing over 300 million people in our country that live in vulnerable areas near our coast.

Fourth, we have set up an elaborate Indian Network for Comprehensive Climate Change Assessment—an Indian IPCC as it were. This network of some 250 scientists and 120 research institutions has already published India’s greenhouse gas inventory for the year 2007. It has recently released a 4x4 assessment of climate change-impacts on four key sectors and four key regions of the country for the 2030s, a time frame for which decisive interventions can be made now. This network is soon going to be putting in place a programme for measuring, monitoring and modelling the impact of black carbon which could have climate change and public health impacts.

Fifth, we are actively engaging in partnerships with our neighbours and other countries to deal with climate change.

India and Bangladesh will soon enter into an agreement to establish an Ecosystem Forum on the Sunderbans, which is the world’s largest riverine delta system. India, Nepal and China have started an ecosystem regeneration initiative in the holy Mount Kailash landscape. India has financed the establishment of a South Asian forestry centre in Bhutan and a coastal zone management centre in Maldives. We are talking to our AOSIS partners to launch a capacity building and technical assistance programme for scholars and experts from SIDS countries.

Madame President, India is constructively engaged in the process of international negotiations. You are aware that we have made detailed proposals on the MRV/ICA issue as well as on technology cooperation. I am happy that these proposals have evoked considerable support. These proposals have been made to stimulate discussion and arrive at a consensus on both these issues.

Ecological preservation and celebration of biodiversity is embedded in Indian culture in myriad ways. India will not only be amongst the fastest growing economies in the world as measured by GDP-Gross Domestic Product-but will also be amongst the most responsible in ensuring a high rate of growth of the real GDP-Green Domestic Product. That is my solemn assurance to the world community today on behalf of the Government of India. Environmental stewardship demands responsive leadership. That is India's calling. Thank you.

There was some adverse reaction to the Indian Minister's statement at Cancun since it was perceived to have somewhat deviated from the original stand of the Government of India against binding cuts. His statement now that all countries must take on binding commitments "in appropriate legal form," was considered a departure from earlier stand of GOI. Leaders from both the left and right sides of the political spectrum were critical of the Minister's stance as a "volte face" and a "sell-out," demanding that the government make clear whether it authorised his statement. The main opposition party the Bharatiya Janata Party leaders said that Mr. Ramesh's statement went against his assurance to Parliament a year ago that India would under no circumstances accept a legally binding emission reduction cut. "The stand that the Minister had taken now is contrary to the parliamentary mandate," Leader of the Opposition in the Rajya Sabha Arun Jaitley said, adding it did not represent India's aspirations. "His 'flexibility' has compromised India's interest. He has broken alliances [with China], which were formed after years of hard work... The Government of India must explain why this 'crawl' is being undertaken in the matter under the garb of flexibility," Communist Party of India's National Secretary D. Raja was equally scathing. "The government should clearly explain whether the Minister was given a mandate for such a departure from status quo, or whether he spoke on his own," he said. "It is clear that the government is under tremendous pressure from the U.S. and developed countries. The government should not be afraid of getting isolated. No one can isolate India, Shri Raja said." While still in Cancun, Mr. Ramesh defended himself, saying there was pressure from a number of countries, and his statement had given India room for manoeuvrability and flexibility. But Opposition leaders were unconvinced by his clarifications that he was working under a Cabinet mandate and that his statement did not mean that India would take on any legally binding commitment "at this stage." "This obvious contradiction is incomprehensible," Mr. Jaitley said.

SECTION - III

CIVIL NUCLEAR ENERGY

New Delhi, January 14, 2010.

2. As responsible States with advanced nuclear technologies, India and France intend to develop multifaceted civil nuclear cooperation covering a wide range of activities including nuclear power projects, fuel supply, R&D, nuclear safety, education and training. The entry into force of the Agreement gives a new impetus to the Indo-French partnership and will further strengthen the deep ties of friendship and longstanding cooperation between the two countries.

050. Speech of Special Envoy of Prime Minister Shyam Saran at the Global Zero Summit on: 'India and the Pursuit of Global Zero - A World without Nuclear Weapons'.

We welcome this historic summit on ‘Global Zero’ and the resounding reaffirmation it represents of the goal of a world free of nuclear weapons. When first proposed, ‘Global Zero' was indicative of the high hopes and aspirations the world-over for nuclear disarmament. This Summit comes at an opportune moment, when there are fresh doubts emerging whether this is indeed a credible goal. Even the four distinguished statesmen who, in 2007, played such a significant role in putting nuclear disarmament back on the international agenda, seem to be now lowering expectations in their most recent op-ed. It’s not that something new is being said by them. It seems to me, however, that the emphasis has unmistakably changed, back to the importance of maintaining a robust nuclear posture. We hope that this Summit will enable us to keep our eyes on the ball and not be deflected from the goal that we all seek.
Otherwise, there is likely to be confusion about our commitment to nuclear disarmament and a perception that this is more about further restricting and limiting the access of non-nuclear weapon states, in particular developing states, to civilian uses of nuclear energy, under the guise of strengthening non-proliferation.

Let me acquaint you with India's thinking on Global Zero, taking into account our own national and then the regional perspective, though it may be noted that it is difficult to confine the security interests of a country like India to arbitrarily defined regional settings. First, while India is a nuclear weapon state, it is the only such state to declare unequivocally that, in its perception, its security will be enhanced and not diminished in a world free of nuclear weapons. This is important because it lends credibility to our consistent advocacy of nuclear disarmament and our willingness to engage, without delay, in multilateral negotiations on a Nuclear Weapons Convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and the use of nuclear weapons and on their time-bound destruction, leading to the global, non-discriminatory and verifiable elimination of nuclear weapons.

Second, pending the realization of the above objective, India has taken steps to underscore its commitment to nuclear disarmament and contribute to confidence-building. India has publicly adhered to a policy of non-first use of nuclear weapons and to the non-use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear weapon States. Despite our well-known reservations on the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, India is committed to its voluntary unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. We are prepared to negotiate a verifiable FMCT in the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva.
We are not a Party to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and cannot respond to calls for universal adherence to that Treaty as a non-nuclear weapon State. Nevertheless, India has impeccable and universally acknowledged credentials on non-proliferation. It is in recognition of India’s unmatched non-proliferation record over the past more than half a century that it was possible to persuade the United States and the 45 member States of the Nuclear Suppliers Group to re-engage with India in international civil nuclear commerce under an India-specific Safeguards agreement with the IAEA. India will continue to conduct itself as a responsible and prudent member of the international community and make its own contribution to promoting non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament.

Let me now turn to the regional perspective. It should come as no surprise to this distinguished gathering that India’s perceptions are influenced by the current state and the history of developments in our neighborhood and the larger theatre of Asia-Pacific as they pertain to nuclear issues.

One, India’s security has been adversely impacted by the clandestine proliferation of nuclear weapons in its neighbourhood, often ignored and on occasion, encouraged by certain important countries. The activities of the so-called A.Q.Khan network is an ominous reminder of the threats India continues to face in this respect.

Two, India is deeply worried about the potential nexus between clandestine proliferation and terrorism and the ever-present danger of such weapons or vulnerable nuclear materials falling into the hands of Jehadi and non-State actors. While this is a specific threat to India, it also threatens the security of all States. India has welcomed the US initiative to host the Nuclear Security Summit in April this year. However, over the long term, it is also our view that it is only through the complete elimination of nuclear weapons and by putting in place universally applicable, non-discriminatory and fully transparent verification procedures, that we can fully prevent and deny nuclear materials from falling into dangerous hands.

Three, it is apparent that the centre of gravity of political and economic power is now shifting towards the Asia-Pacific region. With this shift, it is only to be expected that military capabilities and security assets, gain a higher profile in our region. While India welcomes the lead taken by the US and Russia in reducing their nuclear arsenals, we must remain mindful of security trends, including relating to the improvement, accretion and deployment of strategic armaments, in the Asia-Pacific region. This should be of concern to the international community as well, as we move with practical steps towards Global Zero.

India has welcomed President Obama’s speech in Prague re-dedicating the US to the goal of nuclear disarmament. We look forward to the implementation of the bold steps that President Obama outlined, including his commitment that the US would reduce the role of nuclear weapons in its national security strategy. We await steps the US & Russia intend to take in significantly reducing their nuclear arsenals. We also await the necessary steps that the other nuclear-weapon States, who are Party to the NPT and committed to the goal of nuclear disarmament, intend to take in this regard. India will be prepared to join in efforts to realize the goal of Global Zero in a manner consistent with its security interests as part of global, non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament. But, as I said earlier, India remains convinced that its security will be enhanced, not diminished in a world free of nuclear weapons, a vision that was so eloquently articulated by the late PM Rajiv Gandhi in his historic address to the UNGA in 1988.

In the context of Global Zero, the question of time-frame has been referred to and an appeal has been made to realism to argue for a gradual and phased approach. It has been stated that nuclear disarmament is a place on a high mountain which is not yet visible, and the journey to that place is going to be long and arduous.

I believe that this reality must be set against two other competing realities which compel a more urgent time frame. Firstly, we all recognize that as long as there are states which continue to possess nuclear weapons, there will be other states who will aspire to possess them as well. The Global Zero Action Plan has talked about the world being near a “proliferation tipping point” - beyond the capacity to rein it in. So how do we deal with this reality?
Secondly, there is the link between terrorism and proliferation - so starkly brought out in the excellent movie which we saw yesterday. This is an escalating danger and will not be put on hold, while we take our time to achieve Global Zero. In any case, nuclear weapons cannot credibly deter non-state actors or jehadi groups from using or threatening the use of clandestinely acquired nuclear weapons, even if it is a crude one.

Therefore, I think it would be useful if this movement highlighted these realities as well, in order to reinforce the argument for urgency.

I commend the hosts of this Meeting for bringing together this galaxy of leaders to focus international efforts for Global Zero. I am confident that the deliberations here will add to the international debate, mobilize and sustain political will and help in moving the international community towards the global elimination of nuclear weapons.

DR, S. BANNRJBE.\nCHAIRMAN, ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION\n& SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY

Sir Richard Stagg, BRITISH HIGH COMMISSIONER, NEW DELHI
052. Press Statement issued by the Department of Atomic Energy on the India-Russia agreement on construction of Reactors of Russian design in India.

India & Russia yesterday (March 12, 2010) agreed on a Roadmap for construction of reactors of Russian design in India. The road map outlines the timelines for steps to be taken for the construction of Kudankulam units 3 & 4, provides for construction of two more reactors at Kudankulam (Units 5&6) and two reactors at Haripur, West Bengal during 12th Five Year Plan. Construction of more reactors of Russian design will be considered during formulation of the 13th Five Year Plan. Besides, the road map calls for progressive indigenisation of supplies for the reactors to be constructed in collaboration with Russia beyond the level already envisaged in Kudankulam Units 3 & 4.

Tokyo, March 29, 2010.

Mr. Chairman, Hon'ble Mani Shankar Aiyar, Ambassador Hemant Krishan Singh, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen. I wish to thank FEC and its President for inviting me to address this august gathering on the subject of India-Japan Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy. Your kind invitation has enabled me to visit this great and happening city, a city where I spent three very rewarding and pleasant years from 1986 to 1989, when I was Deputy Chief of Mission in the Indian Embassy. Those were the years of Japan's emergence as a great world economic power and a key political player in Asia. As we head into the new millennium, there is no doubt that Japan will make a significant contribution to peace and prosperity in Asia. Today, India, too, is an emerging power in Asia, with a rapidly growing economy. We see Japan as a strategic partner, contributing, as it has for many decades, to India's economic and social development. We have a strong historical bond and deep cultural affinity due to our shared Buddhist heritage. In more recent times, India and Japan value their role as vibrant democracies with a common stake in peace and prosperity in Asia. It is against this background that we must explore the prospects for civil nuclear energy cooperation between our two friendly countries.

At the very outset, let me state categorically that we understand and respect Japan's principled stand on nuclear non-proliferation and its political sensitivities concerning nuclear weapons. As the only country to have suffered the tragedy of the use of nuclear weapons, Japan's anathema to nuclear weapons and its emphasis on the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty is well appreciated in India. People in Japan are aware that India has become a nuclear weapon state since 1998, but are not always familiar with India's stand on nuclear security issues. Before identifying areas where our two countries can forge a mutually beneficial partnership in civil nuclear energy, it may be worthwhile for me to acquaint you with India's nuclear security policy.

India, like Japan, has called for the total elimination of nuclear weapons, which are weapons of mass destruction. India is the only nuclear weapon state which has declared its conviction that its security will be enhanced not diminished, in a world free of nuclear weapons. We have called for the setting up of an Ad Hoc Working Group on Nuclear Disarmament at the Geneva Conference on Disarmament. We are prepared to engage in negotiations on nuclear disarmament in Conference as a responsible and serious stakeholder.

India is not a party to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, but its record in non-proliferation since the dawn of the nuclear age, has been impeccable. There has never ever been a case of India involved in any transfer of sensitive technology or equipment to third countries. In May 2005, we passed the W.M.D. Act, applying wide-ranging export controls on sensitive and dual use technologies and products. Subsequently, we announced that we were also harmonizing our own export control lists with those of the Nuclear Suppliers’ Group and the Missile Technology Control Regime despite being outside these arrangements. In the Indo-U.S. Joint Statement of 18 July, 2005, India also committed itself not to transfer any enrichment or reprocessing technology to third countries and to join global efforts to restrict such transfers in the future. While India has not signed the CTBT, it nevertheless continues to observe a unilateral and voluntary moratorium on testing. We are also prepared to take part in multilateral negotiations on an effectively verifiable and universally applicable Fissile Material Cut Off Treaty. The negotiations on a proposed treaty are currently held up at the Conference on Disarmament due to Pakistan’s opposition.

Distinguished guests, Japanese friends should also be aware that pending nuclear disarmament, India has proposed that all nuclear weapon states bind themselves legally, never to use nuclear weapons. India is committed, in any case, to never be the first to use nuclear weapons and never to use such weapons against non-nuclear weapon states. I am mentioning these long-standing positions taken by India, to reassure Japanese friends that India remains fully committed to a world free of nuclear weapons, a vision which was very eloquently articulated by our late Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi at the United Nations in 1988 and more recently embraced by President Obama of the U.S. We will be delighted if Japan joins hands with India in a common effort to rid our world of these most horrifying and destructive of weapons.

Let me now turn to the possibilities of civil nuclear energy cooperation between India and Japan. It should come as no surprise to this well-informed audience here that our two countries face a major challenge of ensuring energy security for our people. Japan's overall energy requirements are largely met by imported energy resources, with only 4% coming from domestic sources. Even if nuclear power is taken into account, over 80% of the country's energy needs are met from imports. India finds itself in a similar situation. Over 70% of our oil needs are met from imports. This figure is expected to rise to 90% by 2030. Even coal, which is the mainstay of our power industry, accounting for over 50% of generating capacity, will soon be insufficient for the projected increase in coal-based thermal power. It is estimated that by 2030, about two-thirds or three-quarters of our coal needs would have to be sourced from outside. Given India's rapidly growing economy, energy is likely to become a major constraint on our growth. Concern over climate change impacts of fossil fuel use, particularly the use of coal, will only add to this constraint. Therefore, like Japan, India, too, has put major emphasis on the rapid expansion of nuclear power, which is a clean source of energy and for which technology is proven and tested.

There are important similarities in the strategies adopted by India and Japan for the development of nuclear power. Japan has adopted a closed fuel cycle as its strategy, with a closed loop operation rather than a once through generation, resulting in toxic waste which will need to be managed. With reprocessing of spent fuel and setting up Fast Breeder Reactors, the problem of waste is minimized and dependence on imported fuel, such as uranium, is greatly reduced, if not eliminated. This is good for energy security.

India, too, has adopted a 3-stage nuclear energy development strategy, in which the first stage of uranium-fuelled reactors would generate reprocessed spent fuel for second generation Fast Breeder Reactors, enabling significant capacity expansion. India, of course, has a third stage where our vast resources of thorium could be used together with plutonium generated by FBR, to allow a very large expansion in capacity. To give you a sense of the capacities involved, India's Department of Atomic Energy estimates that India should be in a position to create around 500 gigawatts of power generating capacity based on plutonium, bred from indigenously available uranium. The third stage of thorium based reactors, would, conceptually, enable much larger generating capacities.

I wish to inform you that construction of a 500 MW FBR has already been launched in October 2008. We are aware that Japan's own prototype FBR at Monju, of 280 MW, has been shut down due to sodium leakage a couple of years ago. I understand that it may be revived soon.
Since both our countries have plans for the early commercialization of FBRs, it would be worthwhile if we could engage in a collaborative effort, drawing upon each country's talent and expertise and the experience we have gained so far in our national FBR programmes.

The other area where there are rich possibilities for working together is in the area of reprocessing. India, like Japan, has put in place a comprehensive fuel cycle, from mining to reprocessing. Reprocessing is critical for our FBR programme as well as for efficient and safe waste management. The Japanese Rokascho reprocessing plant, which began operation in 1992, has been constructed with indigenous technology, with built in IAEA monitoring equipment and other advanced design features. Under the Civil Nuclear agreement India has concluded with the U.S., a dedicated reprocessing facility, under IAEA safeguards, will be built by India, for reprocessing, exclusively, foreign origin spent fuel. This is an important confidence building measure, but also an opportunity to design a state of the art, modern reprocessing facility. Japan's experience in this area would be welcome.

Mr. Chairman, dear friends, ladies and gentlemen, with the decision taken by the Nuclear Suppliers' Group in September 2008, to resume full civil nuclear energy commerce with India, there have been a series of bilateral cooperation agreements concluded with a number of friendly countries.

In this regard, it may be worth mentioning that India and Russia are already collaborating on the setting up of two 1000 MW reactors at Kudan Kulam. On March 13 this year, the two sides agreed to an ambitious road map for setting up 4 additional reactors of Russian design at Kudan Kulam itself and two more at a site in Haripur in eastern India.

With the United States of America, we are close to concluding agreement on administrative arrangements for implementing India's upfront entitlement to reprocess spent fuel. This will pave the way for implementing the Letter of Intent already signed by the two countries, which will eventually result in 10,000 MW of additional nuclear power capacity being created.
Bilateral agreements have been concluded with France, Argentina, Kazakhstan, Namibia, and Mongolia, covering all aspects of civil nuclear cooperation, including nuclear fuel. Negotiations on a similar agreement with Canada have been concluded and await formalization. India and RoK have agreed to commence negotiations on a framework for civil nuclear cooperation.

Therefore, within a year and a half of the NSG decision, there has been keen interest in our partners to engage India both in nuclear energy commerce as well as in scientific and technical cooperation. This promising trend lends credibility to our plans to reach an installed capacity of 60,000 MW by 2030, both on account of international cooperation and expanded indigenous capabilities. We would welcome Japan participating in India nuclear energy development plans as a full and valued partner.

India's nuclear power capacity currently stands at a modest 4000 MW, while Japan already possesses 47,500 MW of installed capacity. We understand that currently, in Japan, 3 more reactors of 3300 MW capacity altogether, are under construction, while another 13 are planned, adding 17,915 MW eventually. India will, therefore, be adding a much larger capacity of nuclear power in the 3 decades ahead than Japan. Therefore, the opportunities in this particular sector are immense and could give Japanese nuclear industry a major boost. This would be welcome at a time when advanced economies like Japan are facing depressed economic conditions. Indo-Japan cooperation in this field would also add substance to our strategic partnership. India is already making a major contribution to the International Thermal Energy Research project or ITER in which Japan is a lead country. There is already a mutual familiarity with our respective strengths and expertise and there is no reason why we cannot expand our cooperation further in this field.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, with both India and China, two continental sized economies, growing at a rapid rate, there is bound to be a major impact on the energy security of these two countries if their growth continues to be based on fossil fuels. This will also impact on the energy security of other countries, particularly those that are heavily dependent upon imports, like Japan is. In addition, we have to consider the adverse climate consequences of increased emissions from expanded carbon-based industrialization in India and China. It is in the interest of these two countries as well as the international community, including Japan, that they are encouraged and helped to bring about an accelerated shift to nuclear power, which is a safe and clean source of energy. Japan is already doing so in the case of China. Isn't it time to consider the same for a fellow democracy and strategic partner as well?

Thank you for your attention.

054. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on India - U.S. Civil Nuclear Cooperation - Reprocessing Arrangement.

New Delhi, March 29, 2010.

India and the United States have taken an important step towards implementing the civil nuclear cooperation agreement, by completing negotiations on "arrangements and procedures" for reprocessing U.S.-obligated spent nuclear fuel. Both Parties confirm that the provisions of this Article or any subsequent Article of these Arrangements and Procedures shall not be used to secure any proprietary or commercially sensitive information about the Facility.

2. The Government of the United States of America shall provide an acknowledgement to the Government of India no later than thirty days after receipt of the notification. This acknowledgement shall be limited to a statement that the notification has been received.

3. It is understood that the phrase “the Facility” throughout these Arrangements and Procedures is intended to refer to two new national reprocessing facilities established by the Government of India to reprocess
US-obligated nuclear material and any other safeguarded nuclear material and dedicated to the reprocessing and, as required, other alteration in form or content of safeguarded nuclear material under IAEA safeguards, as well as any additional new national facilities established and agreed to in accordance with paragraph 4 of this Article.

ARTICLE 2 - IAEA SAFEGUARDS

1. Consistent with the provisions of the Agreement for Cooperation, the Government of India shall offer the Facility for the application of IAEA safeguards as per the provisions of the India-Specific Safeguards Agreement. For the timely detection of withdrawal of safeguarded nuclear material from civilian use, safeguards measures shall include, as specified by the India-Specific Safeguards Agreement, nuclear material accountancy, design review, verification, progress in construction, appropriate containment and surveillance systems, process monitoring and other measures as may be agreed with the IAEA.

2. The Government of India shall ensure that the following minimum requirements, consistent with paragraph 37 of the India-Specific Safeguards Agreement, for the implementation of IAEA safeguards at the Facility are fulfilled:
a. Facility Design

i. Early Provision of Design Information.

The operator of the Facility shall co-operate with the IAEA by providing design information at the earliest possible time as provided in Paragraph 40 of the India-Specific Safeguards Agreement.

ii. Effective Design Review.

India and the operator of the Facility, as appropriate, shall cooperate with the IAEA in allowing "design information verification" (DIV) activities.

iii. Incorporation of Design Features that Facilitate Safeguards.

As may be required by the IAEA, facility design and operational characteristics shall enable effective and efficient implementation of safeguards while precluding design features that would prevent the effective application of safeguards. Examples include, but are not limited to: installation of vessel calibration systems; effective methods of solution mixing and sampling; and installation of independent instruments as dictated by authentication concerns.

b. Safeguards System Design and Installation

i. Cooperation with the IAEA.

The Facility operator and the Safeguards Implementing Agency of the Government of India (hereinafter referred to as the Indian SIA) shall accommodate the installation and operation of IAEA instrumentation in the Facility, including data collection, authentication systems and tamper-indicating devices.

ii. System of Accounting and Control Capable of Providing Accurate, Timely Data.

The operator of the Facility and the Indian SIA shall maintain a comprehensive and accurate nuclear materials accountancy system that conforms to IAEA standards as per the provisions of the India-Specific Safeguards Agreement, so that reliable and timely declarations can be made to the IAEA. A system of inventory records and reports shall be maintained for each material balance area. An effective system for measurement control shall be utilized.

iii. In-Process Material Measurement.

The Facility operator and the Indian SIA shall cooperate with the IAEA to enable the IAEA to provide at the Facility measurement capabilities that the IAEA considers as necessary to cover all major in-process nuclear material inventories during plant operation.

If desired by the IAEA, the Facility operator shall provide to the IAEA access to safeguards relevant operator data, such as authenticated process control data as per the provisions of the India-Specific Safeguards Agreement and India's Additional Protocol when in force.

v. On-site Laboratory.

The Facility design shall incorporate an on-site laboratory, if IAEA so requests, to perform destructive analysis of process samples required by the IAEA safeguards approach at the Facility, and the IAEA shall be permitted to set up and operate that laboratory.

The Facility design shall take into account the use of containment and surveillance systems in accordance with the IAEA's practices and procedures, as required for the effective implementation of safeguards, and the IAEA shall be permitted to maintain such systems at the Facility.

c. Safeguards Implementation

i. Verification of Accountancy of Records.

The IAEA shall be permitted to carry out regular verification of nuclear material accountancy records and reports.

ii. Remote Data Transmissions.

The IAEA, if it considers it efficient for the purpose of safeguards implementation, may use remote transmission, in accordance with the provisions of India's Additional Protocol when in force, of authenticated data to enable more frequent data analysis.
iii. Data Authentication.

The Parties recognize the importance of reliable instrumentation for the purpose of timely and accurate safeguards related data, and of data authentication for safeguards implementation. The Facility operator shall cooperate with the IAEA to apply adequate authentication methods to data and samples collected for safeguards purposes.

iv. Access and Transparency.

The Facility operator and the Indian SIA shall provide sufficient access to IAEA Inspectors to install and maintain safeguards equipment, and to inspect the complete process activity of the operator (including sample-taking) to the extent required for safeguards implementation and maintain a complete understanding of plant operation.

v. Annual Cleanout Inventory.

Nuclear material shall be removed from process lines annually in order to make it available, to the extent practicable, for accurate physical inventory verification.

vi. Anomaly Resolution.

The operator of the Facility and the Indian SIA shall cooperate with IAEA inspectors to resolve anomalies, if any, including material accounting anomalies, in a timely fashion.

ARTICLE 3 - CONSULTATION

The Parties undertake to consult at the request of either Party regarding the implementation of these Arrangements and Procedures.

ARTICLE 4 - PHYSICAL PROTECTION AND STORAGE AT THE FACILITY

1. In implementing physical protection at the Facility, and to the spent fuel and separated special fissionable material at the Facility, the Government of India shall apply measures in accordance with (i) levels of physical protection at least equivalent to the recommendations published in the IAEA document INFCIRC/225 Rev. 4 entitled "The Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and Nuclear Facilities," and in any subsequent revisions of the document agreed to by the Parties, and (ii) the provisions of the 1980 Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and any amendments to the Convention that enter into force for both Parties.

2. The Parties agree to exchange information on the approach to implementation of the requirements of this Article. The Parties shall also hold consultations visits at the Facility with respect to U.S.-obligated nuclear material in accordance with paragraph 1 of the Agreed Minute.

3. Any information provided by the Government of India pursuant to this Article that is classified shall be protected in accordance with Article 8 of these Arrangements and Procedures.

ARTICLE 5 - ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

The Government of India shall follow best practices, as established in its national regulations, for minimizing the impact on the environment which may arise from the operation of the Facility.

ARTICLE 6 - MANAGEMENT OF SAFEGUARDED SEPARATED PLUTONIUM

India is committed to the management of separated safeguarded plutonium in ways that are consistent with its national decisions on the civil nuclear fuel cycle. The management of separated safeguarded plutonium subject to these Arrangements and Procedures by the Government of India shall take into account the need to avoid contributing to the risks of nuclear proliferation; the need to protect the environment, workers and the public; the potential of the material for further energy generation; and the importance of balancing supply and demand, including demand for reasonable working stocks for civil nuclear operations.

ARTICLE 7 - SUSPENSION OF ARRANGEMENTS AND PROCEDURES

1. The Parties note the significance of the full and continued implementation of these Arrangements and Procedures concluded pursuant to Article 6(iii) of the Agreement for Cooperation for implementing full civil nuclear cooperation as envisioned in the Joint Statement of the Parties of July 18, 2005. The Parties recognize that these Arrangements and Procedures should facilitate and ensure the development of further cooperation in the field of peaceful uses of nuclear energy on a stable, reliable and predictable basis. The Parties have also agreed to take into account the effects of suspension of these Arrangements and Procedures on other aspects of cooperation under the Agreement for Cooperation.

2. The Government of India may undertake a temporary pause of limited duration in operations at the Facility if in its view such an action is required on account of specific circumstances regarding the Facility which may have an impact on the safe and secure operation of the Facility, the continued application of IAEA safeguards or physical protection measures, or the safety of personnel working in it or of the population in surrounding areas. The Government of India has the right to resume operations at the Facility when it decides that the specific circumstances that led to the temporary pause in operations no longer exist.

3. The Parties agree that the sole grounds for seeking suspension, under Article 14(9) of the Agreement for Cooperation, are exceptional circumstances limited to:

i. Either Party's determination that continuance of reprocessing of U.S. obligated nuclear material at the Facility would result in a serious threat to that Party's national security, consistent with the Agreed Minute to these Arrangements and Procedures, or serious threat to the physical protection of the Facility or of the nuclear material at the Facility, and

ii. Either Party's determination that suspension is an unavoidable measure.

4. Recognizing the critical importance of a decision to seek suspension, such a decision shall only be taken at the highest level of Government. As provided in Article 14(9) of the Agreement for Cooperation, the Party seeking suspension shall take into account the effects of such suspension on other aspects of cooperation under the Agreement for Cooperation. The Party seeking suspension shall also consider the effects of such suspension in light of the commitments and objectives, including full civil nuclear cooperation, contained in the U.S.-India Joint Statement of July 18, 2005.

5. The two Parties recognize that any suspension of these Arrangements and Procedures would have profound implications for the Agreement for Cooperation and for their relations. As such the two Parties shall exercise due restraint and caution before seeking suspension of these Arrangements and Procedures and shall use the provisions for consultations provided in Article 13 of the Agreement for Cooperation and in this Article. Such consultations shall also give special consideration to the importance for India of uninterrupted operation of nuclear reactors that provide nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and potential loss to the Indian economy and impact on energy security caused by a suspension of these Arrangements and Procedures. Both Parties shall take into account any negative consequences of such suspension on cooperation under the Agreement for Cooperation, including on-going contracts and projects initiated under the Agreement of Cooperation.

6. Subsequent to the above consultations, if either Party determines that exceptional circumstances do exist and that these Arrangements and Procedures should be suspended pursuant to Article 14(9) of the Agreement for Cooperation, that Party shall notify the other Party in writing providing reasons for the suspension. The Parties confirm that, as of the time of entry into force of these Arrangements and Procedures, there exists no objective evidence of any of the concerns specified in paragraph 3 of this Article.

7. Any decision to invoke the provisions of Article 14(9) of the Agreement for Cooperation shall be applied to the relevant reprocessing facility related to the exceptional circumstances to the minimum extent and for the minimum period of time necessary to deal with the exceptional circumstances and for not longer than a three month period unless extended by the Party seeking suspension for specific reasons conveyed in writing to the other Party. Both Parties shall review at the highest levels of Government, within three months from the commencement of the suspension, measures taken by the Parties aimed at reaching mutually acceptable resolution of outstanding issues, and steps taken to promote the earliest possible revocation of suspension, taking into account the effects of continuation of suspension on other aspects of cooperation under the Agreement for Cooperation. In case the suspension extends beyond a period of six months, both Parties shall enter into consultations on compensation for the adverse impact on the Indian economy due to disruption in electricity generation and loss on account of disruption of contractual obligations. The suspending Party shall notify the other Party in writing of a decision to end the suspension.

8. In the event of suspension of these Arrangements and Procedures the rights and obligations of the Parties under Article 14 of the Agreement for Cooperation shall remain unaffected.

ARTICLE 8 - CONFIDENTIALITY

1. If the Government of India, in carrying out its obligations under Articles 1(1)(e) and 4 of these Arrangements and Procedures, provides to the Government of the United States of America classified information concerning the physical protection of the Facility or nuclear material at the Facility, the Government of the United States of America shall protect that classified information against unauthorized disclosure in accordance with the terms set forth below and in accordance with the laws and regulations of the Government of the United States of America.

2. For purposes of these Arrangements and Procedures, "classified information" shall mean information provided by the Government of India pursuant to Articles 1(1)(e) and 4: (i) concerning the physical protection of the Facility or nuclear material at the Facility, the unauthorized disclosure of which could jeopardize the physical protection of the Facility or the material; (ii) which requires protection against unauthorized disclosure in the security interest of the Government of India; and (iii) which bears a security classification assigned by the Government of India. Classified information provided by the Government of India to the Government of the United States of America under these Arrangements and Procedures shall be marked by the Government of India in English as RESTRICTED, CONFIDENTIAL or SECRET.

3. Equivalent classifications are as follows:

The Parties shall consult regarding the appropriate protection of such classified information.

ARTICLE 9 - INTERPRETATION

1. These Arrangements and Procedures are not intended to and shall not be interpreted to affect the terms of the Agreement for Cooperation, and in the case of any conflict between these Arrangements and Procedures and the Agreement for Cooperation, the terms of the Agreement for Cooperation shall prevail.

2. Terms used in these Arrangements and Procedures shall have the same meaning as given in the Agreement for Cooperation unless otherwise specified.

ARTICLE 10 - ENTRY INTO FORCE

With respect to U.S.-obligated nuclear material, the principle of proportionality as included in the Agreed Minute of the Agreement for Cooperation shall apply.

FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA:

********
Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and very good to see you in numbers. Foreign Secretary is here to brief you on Prime Minister's visit to Washington for the Nuclear Security Summit. She is joined by my colleague Joint Secretary (Disarmament) Mr. Gaddam Dharmendra. Ma'am, may I invite you to make your opening statement?

Foreign Secretary (Smt Nirupama Rao): Thank You Vishnu. Thank you for coming here on a Sunday. The Prime Minister will visit Washington on April 12 and 13 for a Summit on Nuclear Security. The Summit is an initiative of President Obama who has invited Prime Minister and 42 other leaders to attend. We have welcomed this initiative and have contributed substantively to the Summit preparations.

You are aware of our concerns on terrorism and the possible acquisition of nuclear devices and material by terrorist groups. Since 2002, we have been piloting a resolution at the UN on preventing terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction. We are also active in the works of IAEA on setting and enforcing standards on physical protection of nuclear material and facilities as well as on combating illicit trafficking in nuclear material. India is a party to the key instruments of the global architecture of nuclear security such as the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and its 2005 amendment. We are also participating in the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism of 2006.

As regards the Summit programme, PM will arrive in Washington in the afternoon of April 12. President Obama will host a dinner that evening for the visiting leaders. The discussion at the dinner will focus on the threat of nuclear terrorism, the primary reason why the Summit has been convened. There will be two plenary sessions on April 13, focused respectively on national measures and on international cooperation to enhance nuclear security. There will be a working lunch that would be addressed by the Director General of IAEA, which plays the primary role internationally in the promotion of peaceful uses of nuclear energy. The Summit will conclude with the issue of an outcome document on April 13. The outcome has been negotiated over the past six months by Sherpas from 44 countries. and representatives of the EU and the IAEA. I have led a team of DAE and MEA officials in discussions on the Summit outcome at meetings of the Sherpas in Tokyo and The Hague. The Sherpas will also meet in Washington on the eve of the Summit.

To sum up, nuclear terrorism is a global challenge and we see the Summit and its associated preparatory process as important elements in strengthening international resolve to cooperate on nuclear security and supporting the expanded use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. This will be to India’s benefit given our concerns on terrorism as well as our interest in the expansion of civil nuclear energy. I am happy to take your questions.

Question: Two quick developments have happened. One is the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty between Russia and the United States. And President Obama has recently said that he will reintroduce the CTBT in the Senate for ratification. Has the Obama Administration been in touch with you regarding CTBT and is India considering signing it?

Foreign Secretary: As partners, as close friends, India and the United States discuss a number of issues. As far as the CTBT is concerned, our position is very well-known. It has been reiterated on a number of occasions. We are committed to a voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. That remains our position. That has been very clearly articulated to all our friends and partners.

Question: Madam, this Summit is going to be on nuclear security and you just talked about nuclear terrorism. What are our apprehensions so far as Pakistan is concerned? It has been in the news for a long time that by this time the transfer of …(Inaudible)… there for over a lot of years. What are our apprehensions about Pakistan on this particular topic of nuclear terrorism?

Foreign Secretary: I am here to discuss the subject of the Nuclear Security Summit and I mentioned our concerns about nuclear terrorism. The Summit will focus on the issue of nuclear terrorism and nuclear security as a whole. We are not going to get into country-specific situations.

Question: What exactly is nuclear terrorism? Is it the yellowcake? Is it the material that comes out from processing? What exactly is it?

Foreign Secretary: The Summit, as we have prepared for it, focuses on the threat of nuclear terrorism rising from clandestine proliferation, from the illicit trafficking of nuclear weapons and diversion of nuclear materials. That is really the focus when you talk of nuclear terrorism.

Question: What are we taking to the Nuclear Security Summit in terms of ideas? There is also talk of India planning to set up an International Nuclear Security Centre. Basically what are the ideas we are taking to the Summit?

Foreign Secretary: The last issue that you have referred to is a good idea. We need to develop it further. You have to wait for the outcome of the Summit.

Question: I was going to ask the same question. What is our contribution to the outcome?

Foreign Secretary: You have to wait for the outcome of the Summit. I am not going to discuss it at the moment.

Question: Madam, how much focus do you expect the American Administration to give to Iran during the Summit?

Foreign Secretary: I told you this is not about country-specific situations. We are discussing the issue of nuclear security in the global context.

Question: Madam, you spoke about illicit trafficking. Are we ready for joining some kind of a PSI initiative?

Foreign Secretary: The Summit is not about the PSI, let me say that. And let me go back a little just to give you a little sense of the context in which we are meeting. President Obama made his speech at Prague in April 2009 when he described nuclear terrorism as the most immediate and extreme threat to global security. Now what the Summit focuses on, and what our discussions and the outcome document will in all likelihood focus on, is the national responsibility to secure nuclear materials while strengthening the international framework of such cooperation by adhering to multilateral instruments and norms. The multilateral instruments and norms, you are aware of. You have the Global Initiative to combat Nuclear Terrorism. You have UN Security Council Resolution 1540 of 2004, which we can share with you if you need copies of. These are some of the instruments, inter alia, already in place.

Question: Madam, this conference you are going to is not country-specific you say. And yet you say that nuclear terrorism is posing a very real danger.
Can you share with us what is the genesis of this fear? Can you explain to us how this nuclear terrorism is going to strike the world?

Foreign Secretary: I think that would be the subject of another press conference really. I am here to discuss the Nuclear Security Summit, our participation in the Nuclear Security Summit. I referred to the preparations that we have made. They have gone very smoothly and India has participated very positively and very substantively in these preparations. The discussions leading up to the drafting of the outcome document have been open, have been transparent. I referred to the fact that 43 countries are participating. So, I think you have to look at this as a very significant and substantive development. The outcomes you will be able to see within a week from now. I think you will be able to judge what the Summit has achieved when that happens.

Question: Madam Foreign Secretary, two countries that are not part of the 43 are Iran and DPRK.

Foreign Secretary: And Cuba and Venezuela.

Question: ...(Inaudible)... in terms of those which are in actual possession of fissile material or stuff that is meant to be addressed by the Conference. In the run up to the preparation for Washington, did India or any of the other 42 countries raise with the United States that this initiative would be more effective if every country which has material that requires physical protection takes part in the Summit? If not, why not?

Foreign Secretary: The issue did not really come up I must confess, during the preparations. But when we talk about nuclear security and the threat of nuclear terrorism, we are referring to it in a global context. All responsible members of the world community, international community, have a stake in ensuring that we have comprehensive nuclear security.

Question: One clarification. Since you speak of responsible members of the international community having a stake in nuclear security, does that by implication mean that Iran is not a responsible member?

Foreign Secretary: No, I never said that. Iran is a country with which we have bilateral relations which go back many many years. It is a substantive relationship. We regard Iran as a very important country in the region and a country with which we have had, as I said, extensive bilateral relations and dialogue and cooperation. It is a responsible country.
Question: Pakistan has written to Interpol regarding Kasab and declared him an absconder. Your comments on that please.

Foreign Secretary: Let me just say that we are trying those accused, Kasab and others, here in India following the Mumbai terrorist attacks. And the case against Kasab has proceeded, as you know, over the last few months. A verdict in the case is expected by the 3rd of May in all likelihood and justice is taking its course in India on this subject. I will not say anything more on this.

Question: Madam, CNN/IBN had broadcast a story about land-grabbers usurping temple property in Karachi. I am not sure if you have seen that. Do you have a comment to make on that?

Foreign Secretary: I have seen the story. We have asked for more details from our High Commission in Islamabad.

Question: Madam, Reprocessing Pact has been concluded between India the United States. When are we going to sign it? Are there any bilateral meetings planned on the sidelines of the Security Summit?

Foreign Secretary: As far as bilateral meetings are concerned, it would be too early to give you any details on that. You will have to wait for a little more time. As far as the agreement on Arrangements and Procedures is concerned, the discussions have been completed. You have seen the text of the agreement on the DAE website. The United States has to go through a process of internal consultations. Once that is over, and once we have also completed the formalities on our side, we will be ready to sign it.

Question: Madam, has the Government been allowed to question Mr. Headley?

Foreign Secretary: Not yet.

Question: Are you hoping to question him?

Foreign Secretary: We have a counter-terrorism initiative with the United States, you know, that was initialled during Prime Minister’s visit. We have extensive cooperation between the agencies on both sides on all issues relating to terrorism and including this particular case that you referred to. We have had good cooperation on this issue. The Ministry of Home Affairs and the related agencies are all in touch with their US counterparts on this subject. We are satisfied with the progress that these negotiations have made.
Question: You have just said that we have substantially contributed to the preparations of the Summit. What do you expect from this Summit, not the outcome?

Foreign Secretary: I thought that was what I spoke about, what we expect from the Summit. Let me go over this again. This is going to be an interactive Summit. You have seen the way the G20 discussions have progressed. It will be in that format. A lot of countries who are participating will obviously have views to express. Their leaders will be there. There will be, I am sure, very constructive exchanges of views on the subject. We already have a certain template. I referred to certain international conventions. Many countries have very strong national programmes also in nuclear security. I believe as a result of this Summit what you will see is this global initiative to strengthen, to safeguard nuclear security will be substantially enhanced. That in my view will be the most positive outcome of this Summit.

Question: The Prime Minister also goes to Brazil.

Foreign Secretary: You will be briefed on that separately.

Official Spokesperson: While on the subject, most probably on the 9th there will be a briefing on Prime Minister’s visit to Brazil. We will be issuing a separate advisory.

Question: I know you mentioned that it is not a country-specific situation. But when you talk of nuclear proliferation what comes to mind immediately is Pakistan and surrounding areas. Did we raise the specific issues? What does India expect when you say that there will be more global cooperation to curb nuclear proliferation? What would India expect from these countries?

Foreign Secretary: Please await the outcome of the Summit. I said very clearly this is not a Summit about country-specific situations.

Question: In the run up did we raise the issue any way?

Foreign Secretary: This is a discussion held in a global context. We are talking of the international framework to strengthen nuclear security to combat nuclear terrorism and about strengthening national measures also.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

New Delhi, April 9, 2010.

057. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh’s bilateral meetings in Washington on the sidelines of the Nuclear Security Conference.

Washington (D. C), April 12, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you all. I believe some of you went to the Convention Centre and I hope that you found the arrangements up to the mark.

Yesterday, Foreign Secretary had briefed you about Prime Minister's meeting with President Obama. The Prime Minister has since had a number of engagements. I would like to brief you about three of his bilaterals - with the President of Kazakhstan yesterday and the Prime Ministers of Morocco and Canada today.

Let me start with Kazakhstan. The meeting between our Prime Minister and President Nursultan Nazarbayev took place yesterday evening. It lasted about 45 minutes. Prime Minister was assisted by the National Security Advisor and other officials. The President of Kazakhstan was assisted by the Oil Minister and the Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan.

Kazakhstan is one of our key partners in Central Asia and also one of the most important countries in the region. You would recall that President Nazarbayev had visited India in January 2009 when he was also the Chief Guest at the Republic Day Celebrations. During his visit, a Joint Declaration on Strategic Partnership was adopted which foresees comprehensive cooperation in a variety of sectors. The two leaders met again on the sidelines of the SCO Summit in Yekaterinburg on 16th June 2009 and have also maintained telephonic contact.

Yesterday the two leaders reviewed the relationship, the agreements, the initiatives that had been agreed upon since President's visit to India. President Nazarbayev spoke very appreciatively of India's economic development and evinced interest in seeing Indian companies play a greater role, having an expanded presence in Kazakhstan. Both sides evinced an interest to enhance cooperation in a number of areas especially agriculture, civil construction, mining, fertilizers, pharmaceuticals, petrochemicals as well as other sectors. They particularly spoke of concretizing collaborations and having projects and initiatives which could be implemented on ground at the earliest.

President Nazarbayev mentioned to Prime Minister that they were planning 170 major projects in a variety of sectors, to speed up the industrialization of Kazakhstan, and invited Indian companies to participate in these projects. He also noted that there was a Customs Union between Kazakhstan, Belarus and Russia; and that Indian companies present in Kazakhstan could supply their goods, their services within the entire Customs Union.

As you are aware, there are interalia two pillars of our cooperation namely the hydrocarbons sector and the energy sector including the civil nuclear energy sector. During the visit of President Nazarbayev to India an agreement of cooperation was concluded between ONGC Videsh and KazMunaiGas in the Satpayev oil block which is a large oil block and said to be rich in hydrocarbon assets. Also, an MoU of cooperation had been concluded between NPCIL and Kazatomprom envisaging cooperation between the two sides, including for supply of uranium to India and other aspects.

During his meeting with Prime Minister, President Nazarbayev invited Indian companies to establish thermal power plants in Kazakhstan. Kazakhstan is hydrocarbon rich and they are keen on having more thermal power plants. He also told the Prime Minister that a framework for greater cooperation in the hydrocarbons sector would be approved soon by the Kazakh Government. As I mentioned, Indian companies have already evinced interest in E&P contracts in Kazakhstan. It was also agreed between the two leaders that an inter-governmental agreement on civil nuclear cooperation would be concluded soon.
Our External Affairs Minister is likely to pay a visit to Kazakhstan in May this year when a roadmap to implement the agreements and initiatives during the visit of President Nazarbayev is likely to be finalized.

I may add that the two leaders also discussed regional issues of interest including the situation in Kyrgyzstan and Afghanistan. The two leaders agreed on the need for stability, security and economic development of Afghanistan, and also evinced concern at production of narcotics and trafficking of narcotics. President Nazarbayev was very appreciative of India’s role in reconstruction and economic development in Afghanistan, and he remarked that once the situation in Afghanistan stabilizes, that would pave the way for a direct surface link between India and Kazakhstan.

The President invited Prime Minister to pay a visit to Kazakhstan which was accepted with pleasure. He also invited Prime Minister to participate in the third CICA Summit. CICA is the Conference on Interaction and Confidence Building Measures in Asia. You would recall that Prime Minister Vajpayee had represented India in the first CICA Summit in Kazakhstan, which was held in June 2002. That is what I have on Kazakhstan.

Let me then move forward to Prime Minister’s meeting with his Moroccan counterpart, Prime Minister Abbas el Fassi, which took place today at 10:30 a.m. The Prime Minister of Morocco was assisted by his Foreign Minister and Energy Minister. They had a very useful exchange of views on enhancing our historic links which date back to the 14th century and increasing all-round cooperation. The discussions lasted about forty minutes.

We have maintained a tradition of high level exchanges with Morocco. King Mohammed VI had last visited India in 2003. The Moroccan Prime Minister has visited India in recent years. The two sides agreed that the next Joint Commission meeting at the level of the Commerce Ministers would be held in New Delhi soon when the foreign office consultations will also take place.

I would like to note that Morocco is one of our most important suppliers of phosphate, which is an important component of our bilateral cooperation. A number of leading Indian companies are present in Morocco doing mining and also converting rock phosphate into phosphoric acid which is then exported to India. Our bilateral trade has grown steadily and already exceeded one billion dollars last year.
Recently, Morocco signed an agreement with TERI on enhancing cooperation in renewable energy sector, particularly in solar and wind energy where India has considerable strengths and Moroccan Prime Minister spoke about enhancing, deepening cooperation in this sector. The Moroccan Prime Minister also expressed support for India’s candidature of UN Security Council. Both sides reflected similar views on the menace of terrorism and evinced an interest in enhancing cooperation in counter-terrorism and intelligence sharing.

Today at about 6 p.m., Prime Minister had a very pleasant and fruitful exchange of views with his Canadian counterpart. You would recall that Prime Minister Harper had paid an official visit to India in November 2009 and the two Prime Ministers met within a couple of weeks thereafter again, at Port of Spain on the sidelines of the Commonwealth Summit. They discussed a number of bilateral, regional and global matters of mutual interest. They reviewed our cooperation in the trade and economic area. During the visit of Prime Minister Harper last year a target of 15 billion dollars in bilateral trade had been established. This is a target that we would like to achieve within a period of five years.

You would also recall that an MoU was signed on setting up a Joint Study Group to explore the possibilities of concluding a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) between India and Canada. The two Prime Ministers today expressed a hope that the report of the Joint Working Group would be available by May this year. During the visit of Prime Minister Harper to India in November 2009, an MoU of cooperation in the area of energy had also been concluded. Today the two Prime Ministers noted with satisfaction that the discussions on an intergovernmental agreement on civil nuclear cooperation had been concluded and hoped that the agreement could be finalized and signed soon.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh also noted that the 25th anniversary of the Kanishka bombing and crash fell in June this year. He remarked that there were continued concerns about the activities of extremist groups and hoped that their activities would be monitored by the Canadian side. Prime Minister Harper assured that they will do their best. The sides agreed that the officials would remain in touch.
Prime Minister Singh and Prime Minister Harper also exchanged views on the important issue of climate change and the prognosis of the next conference which would be held in Mexico towards the end of this year. They had a substantive exchange of views on the forthcoming G20 summit which would take place in Toronto in June this year. Our Prime Minister is expected to attend the summit.

Prime Minister Harper sought our Prime Minister’s views on the agenda of the forthcoming summit and what could be its focus. Prime Minister Singh observed that the G20 framework or mechanism had helped overcome the immediate financial crisis, but had now to move ahead to deal with the larger issue of global imbalances and reforms of the international financial institutions.

Prime Minister also outlined a need for a stable and predictable regime of capital flows especially for the developing countries. He spoke about the nature of the Indian economy, its strong fundamentals, the growth path that we have charted out for ourselves, the expectation that within a couple of years we will re-attain a growth rate of nine per cent or even get into a double-digit growth rate for which we needed a conducive and enabling international environment. Prime Minister particularly underlined that India was not contributing to global imbalances as we were not a mercantile economy.

Prime Minister Harper spoke about Canadian interest in using G20 to develop a framework to encourage balanced and sustainable growth internationally. Their meeting lasted more than half an hour. This was as far as the exchange of views between Prime Minister of India and Prime Minister of Canada is concerned.

That is the reading I have on three of the bilateral meetings of Prime Minister. I will be happy to answer your questions.

Question: We are given to understand that there was a brief exchange between Prime Minister Gilani and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. Can you fill us in on this?

Official Spokesperson: I understand that at the reception Prime Minister Gilani and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh shook hands with each other and exchanged pleasantries. That is what I know at the moment.
Question: How long did it last and where was it? Was it in the main area or in the corridor?

Official Spokesperson: It was at the reception that President Obama had hosted. And pleasantries last the usual time that the pleasantries last. So, it was an exchange of pleasantries.

Question: Was it just the two of them or were the delegations on their side?

Official Spokesperson: What I understand is that when the Prime Minister went to the Convention Centre he greeted and was greeted by a number of world leaders. He exchanged pleasantries with a number of world leaders. Also he shook hands with Prime Minister Gilani. Prime Minister Gilani and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh shook hands and exchanged pleasantries.

Question: I was wondering who took the initiative. Did they just bump into each other or somebody walked up to the other? Did Gilani walk up to Manmohan Singh and say hello?

Official Spokesperson: What I understand is that the two leaders shook hands with each others, they exchanged pleasantries.

Question: Were the pleasantries in Urdu and was there any poetry in that, some couplets?

Official Spokesperson: We will try to get you further details. At the moment what I know I have happily shared with you.

Question: Two questions. One is, did Gilani mention Balochistan? Second, this line that you said that India is not contributing to global imbalances he told Stephen Harper. What is the context in which he said it?

Official Spokesperson: On the first question, I have already shared the information I have on the subject. On the second question, as I said, Prime Minister Singh and Prime Minister Stephen Harper were talking about the G20 process. Prime Minister Singh mentioned that the G20 process had helped in overcoming the immediate financial crisis, that we required a stable regime, a transparent financial regime. He spoke of the need for reforms of international financial institutions and so on so forth. He also gave his Canadian counterpart a perspective on the Indian economy. He spoke about our growth aspirations, our developmental aspirations, spoke about the strong economic fundamentals of the Indian economy, the growth path that we are on, and the nature of the Indian economy. It is in this context that he mentioned that Indian economy is not contributing to global imbalances and that since we are inter alia not a mercantile economy.

Question: One question is about this meeting of the two Prime Ministers. From reliable sources we were told today there that it was a very well arranged in a flash of a second and both were informed that this was going to happen and they both agreed before hand and then they proceeded. Can you tell us who was the third party who arranged it? The second question is, with Kazakhstan the main theme that comes out is human rights and media freedom in Kazakhstan. Was it mentioned at all?

Official Spokesperson: On the first question, I have shared with you all the details that I have. On the second question, I have at length elaborated on the nature of discussions between President Nazarbayev and Prime Minister. I have taken you through all the salient aspects of their discussions. I have even shared with you the duration of the discussions, the participants at the discussion and so on. So, I have already shared with you all the salient details of the discussion.

Question: Is Prime Minister Manmohan Singh likely to announce the setting up of a Global Nuclear Security Centre to be funded by India?

Official Spokesperson: Very valid question. Let us both wait for the outcome of the Summit tomorrow and we will have the results.

Question: Is India watching carefully to see during the Summit or otherwise what China says to the US or in general about Pakistan civil nuclear deal? In the past there were Pakistani sources who said that China is supporting Pakistan's effort to have a civil nuclear deal with the US. Is this something that you are tracking? Is it something that you are hearing about? If they do do this, what is India's response to it?

Official Spokesperson: Let me remind you that the Nuclear Security Summit is not about specific countries. In the Nuclear Security Summit what the leaders are proposing to discuss is the issue of tackling, combating nuclear terrorism, the question of securing nuclear technologies, nuclear materials and so on. It is that is what being addressed. It is not a country-specific initiative.

Question: Mr. Shivshankar Menon was supposed to meet his counterpart today. Do you have any update on that?

Official Spokesperson: I wanted to give you a perspective on the meetings that Prime Minister of India had with three of the leaders. On the other questions, we will be happy to take them in due course.

Question: The US Vice-President today hosted a lunch for around ten leaders from Non-Aligned Movement countries saying that it is the US-NAM meeting. India is the founder member and the leading country in the NAM. Why was India not invited to this? Was India invited for this meeting?

Official Spokesperson: I need to check. I am not aware of that.

Question: Most of the think-tanks are saying, including the US, that this summit is about nuclear terrorism and Pakistan is the hub and it might fall in the hands of terrorists. Of course India is also worried. But what Pakistan is saying in these meeting is that Pakistan is not worried about nuclear terrorism or terrorists but it fears India. What is the fear from both sides and how this fear will go away and what India should do now?

Official Spokesperson: In response to Natasha’s question I have already answered that. I have already shared with you our perspective.

Question: You mentioned Canada, you mentioned Kanishka, and you mentioned that the Prime Minister wanted an assurance from his counterpart on monitoring. This has been going on for quite some time. There is no tangible result which has been achieved. Are they willing to share intelligence on this with India?

Official Spokesperson: As I mentioned, Prime Minister observed that in June 2010 would be the 25th anniversary. He mentioned about continuing concerns on the activities of terrorist organizations, groups. He requested the Canadian authorities to monitor their activities and Prime Minister Harper said that they will do their best. Also it was agreed that the officials on both sides would remain in regular touch.

Question: Prime Minister is meeting President of France tomorrow. Can you give a sense of what issues are likely to be discussed? Also, when you talk about Canada, that business of monitoring terrorist activity, did the Prime Minister mention the specific terrorist groups?

Official Spokesperson: Tomorrow, Prime Minister is likely to meet with the President of France. The meeting is at 11:30. Tomorrow, at 6:30 Prime Minister of India is going to have a media interaction. Either during that or before that we will share with you the outcome, or give you a sense of the discussions between Prime Minister of India and President Sarkozy. But I may add here that during their meeting all matters of bilateral interest and regional and international interest will be discussed. That was on the first question. On the second question about the Kanishka incident and Kanishka crash and the activities of the groups, I have already shared with you what had to be shared.

Question: Two questions. Are India and Canada planning a joint commemorative event as well for the 20th anniversary of Kanishka? Secondly, on the meeting with the Moroccan Prime Minister, I was just curious when was the last time that India met Morocco at the Prime Ministerial level or perhaps King Hassan? How many years after has such a meeting taken place?

Official Spokesperson: About a possible commemorative event I will check and come back to you. According to the details that I have Mohammed VI had visited India as the Crown Prince in the late 1990s. Again he visited India twice, in 2001 and 2003. The former Moroccan Prime Minister visited India in December 2004. Our Prime Minister Mr. Vajpayee, visited Rabat in 1999. This is at the summit level. But we have had Foreign Ministers visiting and so on. So, I did remark that we have had a regular high-level exchange in recent years in particular with Morocco. One of the important pillars of the relationship has been the trade and economic relations. Morocco is the largest rock phosphate and phosphoric acid supplier to India. We have leading Indian industrial houses including the Birlas, the Tatas, the Chambal Fertilisers group, and the others, were present in Morocco. So, that is broadly how the relationship has been evolving.

Question: Can you tell us whether Secretary Rao and Hillary Clinton will be meeting or have they already met?

Official Spokesperson: As far as I know, no such meeting has taken place today.
058. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Nuclear Security Summit.

President Barack Obama,

Excellencies,

Distinguished Heads of Delegations,

Nuclear security is one of the foremost challenges we face today. I therefore wish to commend President Barack Obama for his initiative in convening this Summit on Nuclear Security. We would like the Summit to lead to concrete outcomes which help make our world a safer place.

The developmental applications of nuclear science in areas such as medicine, agriculture, food preservation and availability of fresh water are by now well established. Today, nuclear energy has emerged as a viable source of energy to meet the growing needs of the world in a manner that is environmentally sustainable. There is a real prospect for nuclear technology to address the developmental challenges of our times.

In India we have ambitious plans for using nuclear energy to meet our growing energy needs. Our target is to increase our installed capacity more than seven fold to 35000 MWe by the year 2022, and to 60,000 MWe by 2032.

The nuclear industry’s safety record over the last few years has been encouraging. It has helped to restore public faith in nuclear power. Safety alone, however, is not enough. The challenge we face today is that of ensuring nuclear security.

The danger of nuclear explosives or fissile material and technical know-how falling in to the hands of non-state actors continues to haunt our world. India is deeply concerned about the danger it faces, as do other States, from this threat.

Since 2002, we have piloted a resolution at the United Nations General Assembly on measures to deny terrorists access to Weapons of Mass Destruction. We fully support the implementation of United Nations Security

The primary responsibility for ensuring nuclear security rests at the national level, but national responsibility must be accompanied by responsible behaviour by States. If not, it remains an empty slogan. All States should scrupulously abide by their international obligations. It is a matter of deep regret that the global non-proliferation regime has failed to prevent nuclear proliferation. Clandestine proliferation networks have flourished and led to insecurity for all, including and especially for India. We must learn from past mistakes and institute effective measures to prevent their recurrence.

The world community should join hands to eliminate the risk of sensitive and valuable materials and technologies falling into hands of terrorists and illicit traffickers. There should be zero tolerance for individuals and groups which engage in illegal trafficking in nuclear items.

Global non-proliferation, to be successful, should be universal, comprehensive and non-discriminatory and linked to the goal of complete nuclear disarmament.

We welcome the fact that the world is veering around to our view that the best guarantor of nuclear security is a world free from nuclear weapons.

Starting with Jawaharlal Nehru over five decades ago, India has been in the forefront of the call for global and complete nuclear disarmament. In 2006 India proposed the negotiation of a Nuclear Weapons Convention. We have also expressed our readiness to participate in the negotiation of an internationally verifiable Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty in the Conference on Disarmament.

Former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had put forward a concrete Action Plan in 1988 for the universal and non-discriminatory elimination of nuclear weapons leading to global nuclear disarmament in a time-bound framework.

Today, I once again reiterate India's call to the world community to work towards the realisation of this vision.

We welcome the agreement between the United States and Russia to cut their nuclear arsenals as a step in the right direction. I call upon all states with substantial nuclear arsenals to further accelerate this process by making deeper cuts that will lead to meaningful disarmament.

We are encouraged by the Nuclear Posture Review announced by President Obama. India supports the universalisation of the policy of No First Use. The salience of nuclear weapons in national defence and security doctrines must be reduced as a matter of priority.

The dangers of nuclear terrorism make the early elimination of nuclear weapons a matter of even greater urgency.

The Indian Atomic Energy Act provides the legal framework for securing nuclear materials and facilities, and the Atomic Energy Regulatory Board ensures independent oversight of nuclear safety and security. We are party to the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and its 2005 amendment.

India's three stage nuclear power programme which began sixty years ago is based on a closed nuclear fuel cycle. A direct benefit of this is that it ensures control over nuclear material that is generated as spent fuel. At the same time, we are continually upgrading technology to develop nuclear systems that are intrinsically safe, secure and proliferation resistant. We have recently developed an Advanced Heavy Water Reactor based on Low Enriched Uranium and thorium with new safety and proliferation-resistant features.

India has maintained an impeccable non-proliferation record, of which we are proud of. As a responsible nuclear power, India has and will not be the source of proliferation of sensitive technologies. We have a well-established and effective export control system which has worked without fail for over six decades. We have strengthened this system by harmonisation of our guidelines and lists with those of the Nuclear Suppliers Group and the Missile Technology Control Regime. Our commitment to not transfer nuclear weapons or related materials and technologies to non-nuclear weapon states or non-state actors is enshrined in domestic law through the enactment of the Weapons of Mass Destruction Act. We stand committed not to transfer reprocessing and enrichment technologies and equipment to countries that do not possess them.
As a founder member of the International Atomic Energy Agency, we have consistently supported the central role of the IAEA in facilitating national efforts to strengthen nuclear security and in fostering effective international cooperation. We have so far conducted nine Regional Training Courses on Nuclear Security in cooperation with the IAEA. We have entered into a Safeguards Agreement with the IAEA in 2008, and have decided to place all future civilian thermal power reactors and civilian breeder reactors under IAEA safeguards.

We will continue to work with the IAEA and our partners in the United Nations as well as other forums such as the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism to upgrade standards, share experiences and ensure effective implementation of international benchmarks on nuclear security.

I am happy to announce on this occasion that we have decided to set up a “Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership” in India. We visualize this to be a state of the art facility based on international participation from the IAEA and other interested foreign partners. The Centre will consist of four Schools dealing with Advanced Nuclear Energy System Studies, Nuclear Security, Radiation Safety, and the application of Radioisotopes and Radiation Technology in the areas of healthcare, agriculture and food. The Centre will conduct research and development of design systems that are intrinsically safe, secure, proliferation resistant and sustainable. We would welcome participation in this venture by your countries, the IAEA and the world to make this Centre’s work a success.

I thank you.
059. Press Conference of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the end of his stay in Washington to attend the Nuclear Security Conference.

Washington (D. C), April 13, 2010.

Opening statement by PM

I have concluded my visit to Washington DC for the Nuclear Security Summit.

As I said earlier, India welcomes the initiative taken by President Obama to focus the attention of the international community on nuclear security. This is an important issue for us because without ensuring security we will not be able to harness nuclear energy for our developmental purposes.

We are satisfied with the Communique and Work Plan that have been adopted by the Summit. India participated actively in the preparatory process.

I have announced that India will establish a Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership. This will be owned and managed by the Government, but will be open to international participation in terms of academic exchanges and R and D efforts. This initiative is the next logical step in India's engagement with the world after the opening of international civil nuclear cooperation with India.

India's statement at the Summit outlines our approach to the issues of nuclear security, nuclear terrorism, clandestine proliferation and global disarmament.

After listening to the world leaders at the Summit, I feel a sense of vindication of India's position. The intersection of international terrorism and clandestine proliferation affects our security directly. The concerns that we have been expressing for decades on the dangers of proliferation and risk of nuclear materials finding their way into the wrong hands are today finding widespread acceptance.

When India called for the total elimination of nuclear weapons in the 1950s our voice was not heeded. Today the world is veering around to the vision we had put forward of a world free from nuclear weapons. The world is beginning to see merit in pursuing universal, non-discriminatory and complete nuclear disarmament. We will continue to persevere in our efforts in this direction.

During my stay I had bilateral meetings with President Obama, President Nazarbaev, Prime Minister Abbas El Fassi, Prime Minister Stephen Harper, President Sarkozy and Chancellor Merkel.

I had fruitful discussions with President Obama on a host of issues relating to our bilateral relations, the regional situation, and the world economy. We look forward to hosting President Obama in India later this year.

My discussions with President Sarkozy, Chancellor Merkel and Prime Minister Harper focused largely on the future role of the G20 in the post-crisis phase of the global economic recovery. I will be visiting Canada for the next G20 Summit in June. I conveyed to President Sarkozy that we are looking forward to his visit later this year to India.

Question and Answer Session

Q-1. How satisfied are you about the outcome of your bilateral meetings?

Ans - As far as the nuclear security summit is concerned it outcome is satisfactory from our point of view. The concerns which we have been voicing about nuclear security, about proliferation, and about nuclear terrorism, they have been taken notice of by the international community and the communique reflects that. So form that angle we are satisfied with the outcome. As for the bilateral discussions are concerned they covered a wide range of issues, mostly relating to the future work programme of the group of 20. this was an exchange of views as to how the work of the G-20 should proceed in the months and years to come.

The world is now witnessing a recovery though the speed of recovery - there is still a question mark with regard to the working out of a framework for sustainable recovery and also the reform of international institutions including the security Council and the Bretton Woods institutions, the working of the financial system, the need for regulation, whether one size fits all or there should be allowance for different stages of development. These are the issues which have to be taken on-board and I expressed our concern about these issues.
Q 2. Why should India bring its complaints to US about Pakistan instead of using its own leverage to straighten it out. Do you agree with the broad sentiment of the analysts that you shared better relations with President Bush than Present Obama?

Ans. Well I have a very good relationship with President Obama. So I think there should no confusion on that point. There is no question of our taking our complaints against any country to another forum. Ultimately India has to tackle problems it faces on her own but international sentiment and international opinion does matter and if anyone asks about how is the bilateral relation between India and Pakistan working out, I explain our perspective and which is an open secret. I have said that on more than once that Pakistan if it takes credible steps to bring the perpetrators of the horrible crime of 26/11 to book and that's minimum that we expect from Pakistan and if Pakistan does that we would be very happy to begin talking once again about all our issues.

Q 3 & 4: Prime Minister Gilani told the media that he invited you to Pakistan and that you accepted the invitation and secondly the controversy about Shashi Tharoor and how do you react to that?

Ans : As far as the invitation from Prime Minister Gilani is concerned, I am hearing it for the first time. But I did run into him twice and we exchanged pleasantries and in fact I complemented the Prime Minister on the passage of the constitution amendment bill which makes the Prime Minister more powerful personality in Pakistan's political system but beyond that there was no serious discussion on any other issues.

And as far as what you have mentioned to me, I have heard about these things. I don't have all the facts before me and when I go back I will get all the facts and in the light of those if any action is necessary I think that would be the proper way to proceed. I cannot go by hearsay or what is in various columns of the news-papers.

Q -5. Problem of clandestine nuclear trade - no new measures.

Ans - We have been voicing our concern with regard to proliferation and the clandestine activities of nuclear trafficking. Well the world used to listen to us but this is the first time that the international community has sat together -47 countries to recognize that these are genuine concerns. So I think that's a matter of some satisfaction as far as India is concerned.
Q 6. President Lula is visiting Iran on May 15th, you also have been invited, do you plan to go to Tehran?

Ans - India has good relations with Iran. Iran is our neighbour and as far as going to Tehran is concerned, I have no plans. In any case I cannot make plans to travel at short notice and I have commitments in India but India will be represented at that conference.

Q 7. You and President Obama share a personal rapport. But does it really translate into concrete actions as far as the two administrations are concerned?

Ans: In matters relating to state craft I think one should not jump prematurely into conclusions which are not warranted by the facts on the ground.

Q 8. In your meeting with Obama, you forcefully expressed the issue of cross border terrorism. With US constraints in the War on terror in Afghanistan, how do you expect action?

Ans: Well I hope that what I said to President weighs considerably with the administration but I am not an astrologer. I cannot predict what will be final shape of things to come.

Q 9. US - Pak civil nuclear deal?

Ans - Who am I to interfere with what goes on between the United States and Pakistan. That's a matter for these two countries to consider.

Q 10. Meeting with President Obama - we have been told Iran figured and did the US sanctions resolution at the SC come up. And with president Sarkosy as well.

Ans. I said to the President that we do not favour Iran's nuclear weapon ambitions. I also said to him that as a signatory of NPT Iran is entitled to all the rights of members who have signed the treaty regarding to the peaceful use of atomic energy. On the issue of sanctions I said to him as far as we are concerned we don't think sanctions really achieve their objective. Very often the poor in the affected country suffer more. As far as the ruling establishment is concerned, they are not really affected by these sanctions in any meaningful way. Beyond that there was no discussions.
Q 11. What do you hope to achieve in Bhutan when you meet Gilani?

Ans. Well it is still time to think about meeting in Bhutan. I think when we reach there, we will cross that bridge.

Q: 12. After the bilateral between President Obama and you, are you confident of getting access to Headley?

Ans. I raised that matter with the President. He did mention to me that he is aware of the legal position and that we will get access to David Headley.

Q 13. What more action are we looking for from Pakistan?

Ans - We all know that there are still people who are named as part of the conspiracy. They are roaming around freely and I do not want to name any one individually but that’s the reality and these are facts which are borne out not by our investigations and our intelligence but by the intelligence of our friendly countries. We would like Pakistan to at least bring all these perpetrators of these horrible crimes to book and do so effectively.

Q 14. There is a perception that Indo-US relations are in drift? What direction did you give in the bilateral?

Ans.: We have a multi faceted relationship. The economic content of the relation is important. There are several other dimensions. We work together in many regional fora. So it is not a single track operation. The United States is a super power. It is a very important player in global affairs. We look forward to working with the United States to find practical, pragmatic solutions to the problems which the world faces.

I believe these issues in South Asia can be resolved and should be resolved by meaningful bilateral dialogue. I do not feel there is a role for any outside force to come in.

Q-15. Prime Minister has said that he needs more evidence against the Lashkar-e Tayeba.

Ans. First of all I don’t see there is any need for further evidence about the role of the Lashksar - e Tayeba. I think Prime Minister Gilani - I would hate to enter into an argument with him in a press conference. The American intelligence and American forces have themselves pointed out the role of the Lashksar-e Tayeba and their links to Al-Queda. So I do not think there is any need for me to produce additional evidence to Prime Minister Gilani about the role of the Lakshar-e-Tayeba, Hafeez Sayeed, Ilyas Kashmiri and Zakee Rehman are playing in fanning of terrorist acts directed against India.

Q 16. Issues to be taken with China in Brazil?

Ans: We have the border problem and that problem is to be resolved. We are working very hard to find practical, pragmatic solution to that problem. But we both recognize that it will take time. And both of us have agreed that pending the resolution of the border issue, peace and tranquility should be maintained along the line of control and by and large that is the situation that remains on the ground. As far as India’s relations with China are concerned, the economic content of the relationship has increased very significantly. China is today probably India's largest trading partner. There are large Chinese investments in our country. There are large investments in China. On the economic front the relationships is moving in the right direction and at the Copenhagen conference India and China worked very closely to organize their position and there is now a recognition in China that in multilateral issues there is a similarity of approach between India and China and that both countries can gain by working together.

Q.17. President Obama defended Pakistan saying their nuclear installations/ weapons are safe?

Ans: As far as our views are concerned you have to read my statement that gives our views on the matter.

Washington (D. C), April 13, 2010.

Nuclear terrorism is one of the most challenging threats to international security and strong nuclear security measures are the most effective means to prevent terrorists, criminals, or other unauthorized actors from acquiring nuclear materials.

In addition to our shared goals of nuclear disarmament, nuclear nonproliferation and peaceful uses of nuclear energy, we also all share the objective of nuclear security. Therefore those gathered here in Washington, D.C. on April 13, 2010, commit to strengthen nuclear security and reduce the threat of nuclear terrorism. Success will require responsible national actions and sustained and effective international cooperation.

We welcome and join President Obama’s call to secure all vulnerable nuclear material in four years, as we work together to enhance nuclear security.

Therefore, we:

1. Reaffirm the fundamental responsibility of States, consistent with their respective international obligations, to maintain effective security of all nuclear materials, which includes nuclear materials used in nuclear weapons, and nuclear facilities under their control; to prevent non-state actors from obtaining the information or technology required to use such material for malicious purposes; and emphasize the importance of robust national legislative and regulatory frameworks for nuclear security;

2. Call on States to work cooperatively as an International community to advance nuclear security, requesting and providing assistance as necessary;

3. Recognize that highly enriched uranium and separated plutonium require special precautions and agree to promote measures to secure, account for, and consolidate these materials, as appropriate; and encourage the conversion of reactors from highly enriched to low enriched uranium fuel and minimization of use of highly enriched uranium, where technically and economically feasible;

4. Endeavor to fully implement all existing nuclear security commitments and work toward acceding to those not yet joined, consistent with national laws, policies and procedures;

5. Support the objectives of international nuclear security instruments, including the convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, as amended, and the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism, as essential elements of the global nuclear security architecture;

6. Reaffirm the essential role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the international nuclear security framework and will work to ensure that it continues to have the appropriate structure, resources and expertise needed to carry out its mandated nuclear security activities in accordance with its Statute, relevant General Conference resolutions and its Nuclear Security Plans;

7. Recognize the role and contributions of the United Nations as well as the contributions of the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism and the G-8-led Global Partnership Against the Spread of Weapons and Materials of Mass Destruction within their respective mandates and memberships;

8. Acknowledge the need for capacity building for nuclear security and cooperation at bilateral, regional and multilateral levels for the promotion of nuclear security culture through technology development, human resource development, education, and training; and stress the importance of optimizing international cooperation and coordination of assistance;

9. Recognize the need for cooperation among States to effectively prevent and respond to incidents of illicit nuclear trafficking; and agree to share, subject to respective national laws and procedures, information and expertise through bilateral and multilateral mechanisms in relevant areas such as nuclear detection, forensics, law enforcement, and the development of new technologies;

10. Recognize the continuing role of nuclear industry, including the private sector, in nuclear security and will work with industry to ensure the necessary priority of physical protection, material accountancy, and security culture;

11. Support the implementation of strong nuclear security practices that will not infringe upon the rights of States to develop and utilize nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and technology and will facilitate international cooperation in the field of nuclear security; and

12. Recognize that measures contributing to nuclear material security have value in relation to the security of radioactive substances and encourage efforts to secure those materials as well.

Maintaining effective nuclear security will require continuous national efforts facilitated by international cooperation and undertaken on a voluntary basis by States. We will promote the strengthening of global nuclear security through dialogue and cooperation with all states.

Thus, we issue the Work Plan as guidance for national and international action including through cooperation within the context of relevant international fora and organizations. We will hold the next Nuclear Security Summit in the Republic of Korea in 2012.

This Work Plan supports the Comminique of the Washington Nuclear Security Summit. 1. Participating States will consider taking further steps, nationally, bilaterally or multilaterally, to enhance their technical capabilities, including the appropriate use of new and innovative technologies, to prevent and combat illicit nuclear trafficking;

2. Participating States will explore ways to work together to develop national capacities for nuclear forensics, such as the creation of national libraries and an international directory of points of contact, to facilitate and encourage cooperation between States in
3. Participating States will explore ways to enhance broader cooperation among local, national and international customs and law enforcement bodies to prevent illicit nuclear trafficking and acts of nuclear terrorism, including through joint exercises and sharing of best practices.

New Delhi, April 23, 2010.

I rise to inform this august House of Prime Minister's visit to Washington to attend the Nuclear Security Summit and to Brasilia for the 4th India, Brazil and South Africa (IBSA) Summit and the 2nd Brazil, India, Russia and China (BRIC) Summit from 10-16 April 2010.

At the invitation of U.S. President Obama, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh participated in the Nuclear Security Summit in Washington from April 12-13. In all forty-seven countries, the United Nations, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the European Union were represented at the Summit.

The Summit was a personal initiative of President Obama who in his Prague speech of April 2009 described nuclear terrorism as the most immediate and extreme threat to global security. The focus on combating nuclear terrorism is consistent with our concerns on terrorism and clandestine proliferation. Strengthening nuclear security is also consistent with India's interest in the safe and secure expansion of civil nuclear energy. We had therefore welcomed the initiative last year.
During the Summit discussions, Prime Minister referred to our intention to develop 35,000 MWe of nuclear energy by 2022 in the context of India’s three-stage programme as well as newly opened opportunities for civil nuclear cooperation with the international community. He also underlined our concerns on clandestine proliferation and the danger of nuclear material and technical know-how falling into hands of non-state actors. He welcomed the new Russia-US agreement to cut their nuclear arsenals as a step in the right direction and called on all states with substantial nuclear arsenals to further accelerate this process.

The Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan of 1988 remains the most comprehensive and elaborate proposal to move toward a nuclear weapon free world. The Prime Minister reiterated India’s call to the world community to work towards the realisation of this vision. The danger of nuclear terrorism makes early elimination of nuclear weapons a matter of even greater urgency.

At the Summit, Prime Minister announced the establishment of a Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership in India. This is a logical step after the opening up of international civil nuclear cooperation. The Centre, wholly owned and managed by the Government of India, will have four schools on Advanced Nuclear Energy System Studies, Nuclear Security, Radiation Safety and Radioisotope applications. The Centre will assist in safe, secure and proliferation-resistant promotion of nuclear energy, upgrading of standards and sharing of experience. We will develop it in partnership with IAEA and interested countries.

The Summit outcome contained in a Communique and a Work Plan is aimed at fostering political commitment on nuclear security and follow up action in forums such as the IAEA. We participated actively in shaping the outcome which is consistent with India’s interests. Our WMD Act of 2005 and our Atomic Energy Act already provide the legal basis to implement nuclear security measures.

The Republic of Korea will host the next Nuclear Security Summit in 2012 and Argentina will host the next preparatory meeting later this year. We hope that the Nuclear Security Summit process would help build pragmatic and purposeful frameworks for addressing nuclear danger.

Prime Minister also met US President Barack Obama on 11 April 2010. The two leaders expressed satisfaction with the progress in India-US relations since Prime Minister's bilateral visit to the USA in November 2009 and reiterated their strong commitment to continue to further strengthen the India-US strategic partnership.

The two leaders had an extensive discussion on the global economy and agreed to work together, in partnership with G 20 members, on further steps to sustain global economic recovery. They recognized that India-US economic partnership could be a catalyst for global economic development, including with respect to food security and clean energy. The two leaders shared their visions for a strong, stable and prosperous South Asia. The two leaders agreed to intensify India-US counter-terrorism cooperation. President Obama conveyed that he is looking forward to his visit to India this year, for which mutually convenient dates are being worked out.

As a next step in pursuing the vision laid out by the two leaders, I look forward to my strategic dialogue with Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on 3 June 2010 in Washington DC. It will give us an opportunity to once again review progress on and plan ahead for the full spectrum of our broad-based and multifaceted bilateral ties, and exchange views on the agenda of global and regional issues of mutual interest.

On the margins of the Summit, Prime Minister also met the Prime Minister of Canada, who will host the next G20 Summit in June, the Prime Minister of Morocco, the Presidents of France and Kazakhstan and the German Chancellor.

Prime Minister led the Indian delegation to the 4th Summit of Heads of State and Government of India, Brazil and South Africa Dialogue Forum (IBSA) on 15 April. The South African and Brazilian delegations were led by President Jacob Zuma and President Lula da Silva respectively. The last IBSA Summit was hosted by India in 2008.

IBSA has become a significant vehicle for comprehensive trilateral cooperation between three large democratic countries that share common values and are engaged in the development process to improve the lives of their peoples. It is significant that IBSA cooperation is not limited to governments, but engages the civil societies of the three countries. Indeed civil society involvement is a significant aspect of IBSA. IBSA also undertakes development projects in third countries.
The three leaders reviewed the activities of the 16 IBSA Working Groups including those on Science and Technology and Energy, which are undertaking promising projects. The leaders also decided that IBSA should develop micro satellites for space weather studies. Two MOUs on cooperation in Science & Technology and Innovation as well as Solar Energy were signed during the Summit.

As part of civil society engagement, meetings of separate people-to-people fora involving academics, editors, parliamentarians, women, small business and local governance were held on the sidelines of the Summit. Our Commerce and Industry Minister led the Indian delegation for a combined IBSA and BRIC Business Forum Meeting.

IBSA countries also take up projects in other developing countries under the IBSA Trust Fund. This is a novel initiative of IBSA for South - South cooperation. Currently such projects have been going on in seven countries. IBSA has committed more projects in Haiti in the wake of the recent earthquake there, and is considering more projects in Palestine.

During their discussions, the three leaders focused on UN reform, the impact of global economic and financial crisis and scourge of terrorism. They reiterated the need for urgent reform of the United Nations, including the Security Council, to make it more representative and democratic. Recognising the negative impact of the global economic and financial crisis on developing countries, the three leaders emphasized the importance of promoting sustainable development and called for a development-oriented, balanced and successful conclusion of the Doha Round of trade talks. The Leaders considered the scourge of terrorism as one of the most serious threats to international peace and security. President Lula and President Zuma condemned the terrorist attacks in India and offered condolences to our people. The Leaders emphasized the need for early finalisation of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

On the occasion of the Summit, Commerce and Industry Minister along with Ministers of Brazil and South Africa met with the Foreign Minister of Palestine. Following the meeting, India, Brazil and South Africa issued a statement calling for a comprehensive peace in the Middle East.

Prime Minister also attended the Second BRIC Summit on 15 April together with President Medvedev of Russia, President Hu Jintao of China and President Lula da Silva of Brazil. The first BRIC Summit was held in Yekaterinburg, Russia in June last year. Since then, BRIC Foreign Ministers, Finance Ministers, Agriculture Ministers, National Security Advisers and Governors of Central Banks have met.

The BRIC Summit in Brazil focussed on a range of issues including the international financial and economic crisis, reform of international financial institutions including its management structures, cooperation in G20, UN reforms, climate change and other issues. While welcoming signs of economic recovery, the BRIC Leaders recognized that there were continuing uncertainties. While calling for strong, sustainable and balanced growth, they reiterated the role of emerging economies in contributing to economic recovery. BRIC Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors would continue to meet and discuss modalities of cooperation in this context. A Joint Statement along with a Follow-up document was issued following the 2nd BRIC Summit. China has offered to host the 3rd BRIC Summit in 2011.

BRIC countries support a multi-polar, equitable, democratic and just world order, based on rule of law and with the United Nations having a central role in tackling global challenges.

With BRIC countries together commanding 25.9% of total geographic area, 40% of global population and 22% of global GDP (PPP), abundant natural resources, growing middle classes, and given their internal economic strengths, BRIC countries - as engines of economic growth - can contribute constructively towards sustainable global economic growth.

During his visit to Brasilia, Prime Minster also held a bilateral Summit meeting with President Lula. We attach high importance to our relations with Brazil. Prime Minister and President Lula discussed the growing importance of the multifaceted India-Brazil Strategic Partnership. Our engagement with Brazil is important for our energy security, food security, trade and commerce as well as cooperation in the area of high technologies.

The Prime Minister also held separate bilateral meetings with President Hu Jintao of China and President Dmitry Medvedev of Russia. These meetings were part of our tradition of regular high level meetings with these two important countries.
The visit by the Prime Minister to USA and Brazil reflects India’s growing role in world affairs, and served to advance our national interests on issues which have a direct bearing on our security and development.

[Note: The above statement was also made by Smt. Preneet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs, in the Rajya Sabha on April 28, 2010]

Toronto, June 27, 2010.

The India-Canada Agreement for Cooperation in Peaceful Uses of Nuclear-Energy which was signed today provides for cooperation in areas as design, construction, maintenance, sharing of operating experience and decommissioning of nuclear reactors, supply of uranium, projects in third countries, nuclear fuel cycle and nuclear waste management. The two countries may promote cooperation in the development and use of nuclear energy applications in the fields of agriculture, health care, industry and environment; and nuclear safety, radiation safety and environmental protection.

2. India and Canada are friendly States with comprehensive capabilities in advanced nuclear technologies. They recognize that nuclear energy is a safe, environment friendly and sustainable source of energy. Taking into account their respective strengths with regard to Pressurized Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs) and CANDU Reactors, there is considerable scope for joint work between the two countries.
064. Statement by Dr. S. Banerjee, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission & Leader of the Indian delegation at the 54th General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Vienna, September 22, 2010.

Mr. President,

It gives me great pleasure to congratulate you on your election as the President of the 54th General Conference. Under your able leadership and with support from the Agency's Secretariat, we are certain that the current General Conference will be able to accomplish all the tasks before it.

This is the first General Conference after H.E. Mr. Yukiya Amano has taken over as Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). I take this opportunity to convey our deep appreciation of his leadership of the Agency at a time when the world is looking towards nuclear energy with great expectations.

I welcome the entry of the Kingdom of Swaziland to the Membership of the IAEA. I take this opportunity to congratulate the Kingdom of Swaziland on this occasion of its joining the IAEA family.

Mr. President,

Limited fossil fuel reserves, environmental concerns and economic reasons have led to a resurgence in global interest in nuclear energy. Several countries are in various stages of taking decisions on setting up their first nuclear power plants. Other countries are engaged in expanding their existing nuclear power programmes or extending the life of their ageing plants.

On the basis of conservative projections, global nuclear power generation is expected to reach about 500 GWe by 2030. For large scale deployment of nuclear power generation, it is essential to develop technological solutions as well as institutional approaches to address issues of economics, safety, environment, waste management, infrastructure, proliferation resistance and sustainability. IAEA's activities are significantly contributing to addressing these issues.
INPRO is one such high impact programme associated with future generation reactors and their fuel cycles. India strongly feels that INPRO activities should become an integral part of the IAEA regular programme, and therefore, needs to be fully supported through the Agency’s regular budget. I am happy to reiterate that India will continue to support this programme.

The global nuclear renaissance has been, to a large extent, the result of major investments made by industry over the decades to enhance the safety aspects of nuclear energy. Recently the Indian Parliament has passed the Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage Bill, 2010 after extensive debate. This legislation will go a long way in increasing public confidence and in creating a predictable environment in which leading vendors can participate in India’s nuclear programme.

We are happy to note that the International Nuclear Radiological Event Scale (INES) is celebrating its 20th anniversary this year. INES is a very useful tool for communication of safety significance of different nuclear and radiological events to the general public in a consistent and simple manner. India has adopted INES, right from its inception and has participated very actively in its evolution.

Mr. President,

Nuclear power is important for a country like India where availability of electricity will act as an instrument of inclusive economic growth. A recent study has estimated that nuclear power must contribute about half of the Indian electricity generation capacity so as to nearly eliminate the dependence of our country on import of energy resources while achieving a developed status.

We remain committed to the 3-stage nuclear programme formulated under the visionary leadership of Dr. Homi Bhabha, founder of India’s nuclear programme. India attaches a high priority for adopting a closed fuel cycle and Thorium utilization on account of relatively limited domestic Uranium reserves while having large Thorium deposits. Water cooled reactors, fast breeder reactors and thorium based power generation remain the key elements of our sustainable nuclear programme.

The Indian nuclear power programme lays strong emphasis on safe and reliable operation of its power plants, reduction of gestation period of new projects and capacity addition. During the year the nuclear power sector has achieved over 322 reactor years of safe operation.

The total installed nuclear power capacity in the country is now 4560 MWe. The total number of operating reactors is 19 including the two new 220 MWe units at Rajasthan that were connected to the grid in the last year. En-masse replacement of coolant channels and feeders were completed in PHWRs at Kakarpar and Narora. Construction of the KAIGA - 4 PHWR has been completed and the unit is ready for fuel loading. Three of our reactors have registered uninterrupted runs of more than 400 days.

Construction of two 1,000 MWe light water reactors at Kudankulam in cooperation with the Russian Federation, is nearing completion. Work on two indigenous 700 MWe units each at Rawatbhat, Rajasthan and Kakrapar, Gujarat has started and the first pour of concrete is planned later this year.

The 500 MWe Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor (PFBR) is at an advanced stage of construction. The spent mixed carbide fuel from the Fast Breeder Test Reactor (FBTR) with a burn-up of 155 GWd/t was reprocessed in the Compact Reprocessing facility for Advanced fuels in Lead cells (CORAL). Thereafter, the fissile material was re-fabricated as fuel and loaded back into the reactor, thus ‘closing’ the fast reactor fuel cycle.

Based on the already established indigenous technology, India is expanding its uranium enrichment capacity which will meet a part of the requirements of light water reactors. Setting up adequate reprocessing capability has been an important element of our closed fuel cycle based programme. Recently, India has commenced engineering activities for setting up of an Integrated Nuclear Recycle Plant with facilities for both reprocessing of spent fuel and waste management.

In-principle approval has been accorded for energy parks at five coastal sites. Each park will be populated with a number of water cooled reactors to be constructed through international cooperation. Thus India is poised to expand its installed nuclear power capacity to about 60 GWe by 2032. International cooperation will not only provide an additionality to our own programme in meeting immediate requirements but also fill up the energy deficit in the coming decades through the operation of the closed fuel cycle.
Mr. President,

India is self-sufficient with regard to heavy water, zirconium alloy components and other related materials and supplies for PHWRs. A new zirconium complex has been commissioned for production of reactor grade zirconium sponge. The Nuclear Fuel Complex at Hyderabad manufactures fuel assemblies of different types of reactors, viz. PHWRs, boiling water reactors and fast breeder reactor. India has wide-ranging capabilities in uranium mining and mineral processing facilities. The Uranium deposit at Tumallapalle, where a new mine is recently opened, has a promise to yield about three times of what was originally estimated. In this context, I would like to inform that India is pursuing aggressively uranium prospecting using modern geo-physical techniques, some of which have been indigenously developed. India is also interested in joining with international partners in developing uranium mining opportunities abroad.

Indian PHWRs offer a basket of options for countries that are looking for cost competitive and proven technologies in the small and medium size reactors. Therefore today Nuclear Power Corporation of India is ready to offer Indian PHWRs of 220 MWe or 540 MWe capacity for export. Indian industry is not only poised to play a bigger contribution to India's own nuclear programme but also is on the way to becoming a competitive supplier in the global market with regard to special steels, large size forgings, control instruments, software, other nuclear components and services.

It is important for me to mention to you that our country is in the process of setting up the Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership which will provide a forum for joint work with our international partners in areas of topical interest.

Mr. President,

Non-power applications of nuclear energy, particularly in the areas of health care, agriculture and water-desalination and purification are rapidly expanding globally.

We are happy that the theme of the Scientific Forum of this General Conference is related to cancer and its mitigation. The application of nuclear techniques has an important role in both the detection and treatment of cancer. The Tata Memorial Centre at Mumbai which has a leading position in cancer treatment and research, conducts several training programmes in collaboration with the IAEA - RCA for various countries in the Asia Pacific region. A national cancer grid is being set up by connecting several hospitals with the Tata Memorial Centre. In addition, about 30 webcasts on continuing medical education are relayed every year.

The IAEA's Programme on Action for Cancer Therapy (PACT) enables the channeling of the resources and expertise to the needy and developing countries. An indigenously developed BHABHATRON Teletherapy unit donated by India to Vietnam under the PACT has been inaugurated in April this year. As part of our continuing support to this programme, I am happy to announce that India has taken the decision to donate two Bhabhatron Teletherapy machines, including one to Sri Lanka.

Our hybrid Nuclear Desalination Demonstration Plant (NDDP) at Kalpakkam, based on multistage flash evaporation and reverse osmosis processes, producing 6.3 million litres per day, is one of the largest such units in the world.

India continues to use nuclear science to achieve higher agricultural productivity. This year two new mutant lentil varieties ("Pairy mung" and "Trombay Jawahar Tur") were notified for commercial cultivation, taking the total number of mutant crop varieties developed by Bhabha Atomic Research (BARC), using nuclear techniques to 39.

Mr. President,

India’s nuclear programme attaches importance to R&D work and some recent achievements are as follows:

- Installation of Indian Real Time Online Decision Support (IRODOS) system at Narora Atomic Power Station for providing guidance to the emergency managers for making quick decisions based on projected impact of accidental releases from the plant.

- The synchrotron radiation source at Indore is now fully functional and several beam-lines have been set up for experiments.

- India's first industrial scale production facility for enriched boron based on exchange distillation has been commissioned at Talcher and a similar facility based on ion exchange chromatography is commissioned at Manuguru.
Mr. President,

While we reap the benefits today of the nuclear technology developed several decades ago, there is an urgent need to give a renewed thrust to take nuclear technology to greater heights for spreading its benefits to the entire humanity. In order to satisfy the growing energy needs of the world while caring for the environment, the Agency will need to further enhance its efforts towards new innovations and appropriate technology solutions.

Thank you.

065. Media Report on India signing the Convention on Supplementary Compensation for Nuclear Damage (CSC), and text of the Convention.

Vienna, October 27, 2010.

India signed the Convention on Supplementary Compensation for Nuclear Damage (CSC), thereby delivering on the last of its commitments stemming from the landmark 2005 nuclear agreement with the United States.

The international covenant - which provides a framework for channeling liability and providing speedy compensation in the event of a nuclear accident - was signed at the International Atomic Energy Agency offices in Vienna by Dinkar Khullar, India's Ambassador to Austria. The IAEA is the "depository" of the CSC, which has so far been signed by 14 countries and ratified by four, including the U.S.

[The CSC will enter into force only when at least five countries with a minimum of 4,00,000 units of installed nuclear capacity ratify the treaty. Even if India ratifies it - and Indian officials say this is unlikely to happen soon - the CSC will not enter into force unless at least one or two countries with a large civilian nuclear programme also do so.]

With India signing the CSC and the Obama administration issuing the requisite 'Part 810' licensing certifications, the stage is now set for the Nuclear Power Corporation of India Ltd. to begin full-fledged commercial negotiations with General Electric and Westinghouse for supply of two 1,000-MWe reactors. Three rounds of discussions have already been held, Indian officials say, but these have largely been exploratory in nature.

India promised the U.S. in 2008 that it would sign the CSC, a treaty that requires signatories to pass a domestic liability law in conformity with a model text. Washington's aim was to ensure that its companies were legally exempted from any liability burden in the event of an accident occurring in an American-supplied nuclear reactor.

[Though India passed its liability law last month, the U.S. has objected to Sections 17(b) and 46 of the Act which open the door for legal action against nuclear suppliers if an accident is caused by faulty or defective equipment. Washington says these provisions violate the CSC, a charge New Delhi rejects.]

"We have delivered on all our commitments. Now there is nothing which stands in the way of American companies having commercial negotiations for the sale of their reactors," a senior official was quoted by the media as having said.

[The CSC provides no forum for signatories to challenge each other's national laws. Article XVI allows for arbitration as well as adjudication by the International Court of Justice, in the event of a dispute. But the U.S. entered a reservation while ratifying the Convention in 2008 declaring "that it does not consider itself bound by [these] dispute settlement procedures." When it eventually ratifies the treaty, India is likely to make a similar declaration.]

[That would leave the Supreme Court of India as the only forum competent to rule on the compatibility of the Civil Liability for Nuclear Damages Act, 2010 with India's international obligations stemming from its accession to the CSC.]

[Adopted on 12 September 1997, the Convention on Compensation for Nuclear Damage was opened for signature at the IAEA's 41st General Conference at Vienna that same month. The CSC is consistent with] principles set forth in previous international agreements governing nuclear liability, including the Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage and the Paris Convention on Third Party Liability in the Field of Nuclear Energy. It provides a bridge between these two regimes, is open to States that are party to neither of these two regimes, and establishes an international fund to increase the amount available to compensate victims. The CSC also allows for compensating civil damage occurring within a State’s exclusive economic zone, including loss of tourism or fisheries related income. It also sets parameters on a nuclear operator’s financial liability, time limits governing possible legal action, requires that nuclear operators maintain insurance or other financial security measures and provides for a single competent court to hear claims.

At the present four States have signed and ratified the Convention - Argentina, Morocco, Romania and the United States. India’s signing brings a total of 14 States as current signatories to the Convention. The Convention is set to enter into force on the ninetieth day after date of ratification by at least five States who have a minimum of 400,000 units of installed nuclear capacity.

Constitution on Supplementary Compensation for Nuclear Damage

THE CONTRACTING PARTIES,

RECOGNIZING the importance of the measures provided in the Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage and the Paris Convention on Third Party Liability in the Field of Nuclear Energy as well as in national legislation on compensation for nuclear damage consistent with the principles of these Conventions;

DESIROUS of establishing a worldwide liability regime to supplement and enhance these measures with a view to increasing the amount of compensation for nuclear damage;

RECOGNIZING further that such a worldwide liability regime would encourage regional and global co-operation to promote a higher level of nuclear safety in accordance with the principles of international partnership and solidarity;
HAVE AGREED as follows:

CHAPTER I
GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article I
Definitions

For the purposes of this Convention:

a. "Vienna Convention" means the Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage of 21 May 1963 and any amendment thereto which is in force for a Contracting Party to this Convention.

ii. loss of or damage to property; and each of the following to the extent determined by the law of the competent court:

iii. economic loss arising from loss or damage referred to in sub-paragraph (i) or (ii), insofar as not included in those sub-paragraphs, if incurred by a person entitled to claim in respect of such loss or damage;

unless such impairment is insignificant, if such measures are actually taken or to be taken, and insofar as not included in sub-paragraph (ii);

suffered shall determine who is entitled to take such measures.

h. "Preventive measures" means any reasonable measures taken by

   i. the extent to which, at the time they are taken, such measures are likely to be effective; and

   ii. relevant scientific and technical expertise.

   Article II

   Purpose and Application

1. The purpose of this Convention is to supplement the system of compensation provided pursuant to national law which:

   a. implements one of the instruments referred to in Article I (a) and (b); or
b. complies with the provisions of the Annex to this Convention.

2. The system of this Convention shall apply to nuclear damage for which an operator of a nuclear installation used for peaceful purposes situated in the territory of a Contracting Party is liable under either one of the Conventions referred to in Article I or national law mentioned in paragraph 1(b) of this Article.

3. The Annex referred to in paragraph 1(b) shall constitute an integral part of this Convention.

CHAPTER II COMPENSATION
Article III

Undertaking

1. Compensation in respect of nuclear damage per nuclear incident shall be ensured by the following means:

a. i. the Installation State shall ensure the availability of 300 million SDRs or a greater amount that it may have specified to the Depositary at any time prior to the nuclear incident, or a transitional amount pursuant to sub-paragraph (ii);

ii. a Contracting Party may establish for the maximum of 10 years from the date of the opening for signature of this Convention, a transitional amount of at least 150 million SDRs in respect of a nuclear incident occurring within that period.

b. beyond the amount made available under sub-paragraph (a), the Contracting Parties shall make available public funds according to the formula specified in Article IV.

2. Compensation for nuclear damage in accordance with paragraph 1(a) shall be distributed equitably without discrimination on the basis of nationality, domicile or residence, provided that the law of the Installation State may, subject to obligations of that State under other conventions on nuclear liability, exclude nuclear damage suffered in a non-Contracting
a. Compensation for nuclear damage in accordance with paragraph 1(b), shall, subject to Articles V and XI.1(b), be distributed equitably without discrimination on the basis of nationality, domicile or residence.

3. If the nuclear damage to be compensated does not require the total amount under paragraph 1(b), the contributions shall be reduced proportionally.

4. The interest and costs awarded by a court in actions for compensation of nuclear damage are payable in addition to the amounts awarded pursuant to paragraphs 1(a) and (b) and shall be proportionate to the actual contributions made pursuant to paragraphs 1(a) and (b), respectively, by the operator liable, the Contracting Party in whose territory the nuclear installation of that operator is situated, and the Contracting Parties together.

Article IV
Calculation of Contributions

1. The formula for contributions according to which the Contracting Parties shall make available the public funds referred to in Article III.1(b) shall be determined as follows:

a. i. the amount which shall be the product of the installed nuclear capacity of that Contracting Party multiplied by 300 SDRs per unit of installed capacity; and

ii. the amount determined by applying the ratio between the United Nations rate of assessment for that Contracting Party as assessed for the year preceding the year in which the nuclear incident occurs, and the total of such rates for all Contracting Parties to 10% of the sum of the amounts calculated for all Contracting Parties under sub-paragraph (i).

b. Subject to sub-paragraph (c), the contribution of each Contracting Party shall be the sum of the amounts referred to in sub-paragraphs (a)(i) and (ii), provided that States on the minimum United Nations rate of assessment with no nuclear reactors shall not be required to make contributions.
c. The maximum contribution which may be charged per nuclear incident to any Contracting Party, other than the Installation State, pursuant to sub-paragraph (b) shall not exceed its specified percentage of the total of contributions of all Contracting Parties determined pursuant to sub-paragraph (b). For a particular Contracting Party, the specified percentage shall be its UN rate of assessment expressed as a percentage plus 8 percentage points. If, at the time an incident occurs, the total installed capacity represented by the Parties to this Convention is at or above a level of 625,000 units, this percentage shall be increased by one percentage point. It shall be increased by one additional percentage point for each increment of 75,000 units by which the capacity exceeds 625,000 units.

2. The formula is for each nuclear reactor situated in the territory of the Contracting Party, 1 unit for each MW of thermal power. The formula shall be calculated on the basis of the thermal power of the nuclear reactors shown at the date of the nuclear incident in the list established and kept up to date in accordance with Article VIII.

3. For the purpose of calculating the contributions, a nuclear reactor shall be taken into account from that date when nuclear fuel elements have been first loaded into the nuclear reactor. A nuclear reactor shall be excluded from the calculation when all fuel elements have been removed permanently from the reactor core and have been stored safely in accordance with approved procedures.

Article V

Geographical Scope

1. The funds provided for under Article III.1(b) shall apply to nuclear damage which is suffered:

   a. in the territory of a Contracting Party; or

   b. in or above maritime areas beyond the territorial sea of a Contracting Party:

      i. on board or by a ship flying the flag of a Contracting Party, or on board or by an aircraft registered in the territory of a Contracting Party, or on or by an artificial island, installation or structure under the jurisdiction of a Contracting Party; or

ii. by a national of a Contracting Party; excluding damage suffered in or above the territorial sea of a State not Party to this Convention; or

iii. in or above the exclusive economic zone of a Contracting Party or on the continental shelf of a Contracting Party in connection with the exploitation or the exploration of the natural resources of that exclusive economic zone or continental shelf; provided that the courts of a Contracting Party have jurisdiction pursuant to Article XIII.

2. Any signatory or acceding State may, at the time of signature of or accession to this Convention or on the deposit of its instrument of ratification, declare that for the purposes of the application of paragraph 1(b)(ii), individuals or certain categories thereof, considered under its law as having their habitual residence in its territory, are assimilated to its own nationals.

3. In this article, the expression “a national of a Contracting Party” shall include a Contracting Party or any of its constituent sub-divisions, or a partnership, or any public or private body whether corporate or not established in the territory of a Contracting Party.

CHAPTER III
ORGANIZATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY FUNDING

Article VI

Notification of Nuclear Damage

Without prejudice to obligations which Contracting Parties may have under other international agreements, the Contracting Party whose courts have jurisdiction shall inform the other Contracting Parties of a nuclear incident as soon as it appears that the damage caused by such incident exceeds, or is likely to exceed, the amount available under Article III.1(a) and that contributions under Article III.1(b) may be required. The Contracting Parties shall without delay make all the necessary arrangements to settle the procedure for their relations in this connection.
Article VII

Call for Funds

1. Following the notification referred to in Article VI, and subject to Article X.3, the Contracting Party whose courts have jurisdiction shall request the other Contracting Parties to make available the public funds required under Article III.1(b) to the extent and when they are actually required and shall have exclusive competence to disburse such funds.

2. Independently of existing or future regulations concerning currency or transfers, Contracting Parties shall authorize the transfer and payment of any contribution provided pursuant to Article III.1(b) without any restriction.

Article VIII

List of Nuclear Installations

1. Each Contracting State shall, at the time when it deposits its instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, communicate to the Depositary a complete listing of all nuclear installations referred to in Article IV.3. The listing shall contain the necessary particulars for the purpose of the calculation of contributions.

2. Each Contracting State shall promptly communicate to the Depositary all modifications to be made to the list. Where such modifications include the addition of a nuclear installation, the communication must be made at least three months before the expected date when nuclear material will be introduced into the installation.

3. If a Contracting Party is of the opinion that the particulars, or any modification to be made to the list communicated by a Contracting State pursuant to paragraphs 1 and 2, do not comply with the provisions, it may raise objections thereto by addressing them to the Depositary within three months from the date on which it has received notice pursuant to paragraph 5. The Depositary shall forthwith communicate this objection to the State to whose information the objection has been raised. Any unresolved differences shall be dealt with in accordance with the dispute settlement procedure laid down in Article XVI.
4. The Depositary shall maintain, update and annually circulate to all Contracting States the list of nuclear installations established in accordance with this Article. Such list shall consist of all the particulars and modifications referred to in this Article, it being understood that objections submitted under this Article shall have effect retrospective to the date on which they were raised, if they are sustained.

5. The Depositary shall give notice as soon as possible to each Contracting Party of the communications and objections which it has received pursuant to this Article.

Article IX
Rights of Recourse

1. Each Contracting Party shall enact legislation in order to enable both the Contracting Party in whose territory the nuclear installation of the operator liable is situated and the other Contracting Parties who have paid contributions referred to in Article III.1(b), to benefit from the operator's right of recourse to the extent that he has such a right under either one of the Conventions referred to in Article I or national legislation mentioned in Article II.1(b) and to the extent that contributions have been made by any of the Contracting Parties.

2. The legislation of the Contracting Party in whose territory the nuclear installation of the operator liable is situated may provide for the recovery of public funds made available under this Convention from such operator if the damage results from fault on his part.

3. The Contracting Party whose courts have jurisdiction may exercise the rights of recourse provided for in paragraphs 1 and 2 on behalf of the other Contracting Parties which have contributed.

Article X
Disbursements, Proceedings

1. The system of disbursements by which the funds required under Article III.1 are to be made available and the system of apportionment thereof shall be that of the Contracting Party whose courts have jurisdiction.

2. Each Contracting Party shall ensure that persons suffering damage may enforce their rights to compensation without having to bring separate proceedings according to the origin of the funds provided for such compensation and that Contracting Parties may intervene in the proceedings against the operator liable.

3. No Contracting Party shall be required to make available the public funds referred to in Article III.1(b) if claims for compensation can be satisfied out of the funds referred to in Article III.1(a).

Article XI

Allocation of Funds

The funds provided under Article III.1(b) shall be distributed as follows:

1. a. 50% of the funds shall be available to compensate claims for nuclear damage suffered in or outside the Installation State;

b. 50% of the funds shall be available to compensate claims for nuclear damage suffered outside the territory of the Installation State to the extent that such claims are uncompensated under sub-paragraph (a).

c. In the event the amount provided pursuant to Article III.1(a) is less than 300 million SDRs:

i. the amount in paragraph 1(a) shall be reduced by the same percentage as the percentage by which the amount provided pursuant to Article III.1(a) is less than 300 million SDRs; and

ii. the amount in paragraph 1(b) shall be increased by the amount of the reduction calculated pursuant to sub-paragraph (i).

2. If a Contracting Party, in accordance with Article III.1(a), has ensured the availability without discrimination of an amount not less than 600 million SDRs, which has been specified to the Depositary prior to the nuclear incident, all funds referred to in Article III.1(a) and (b) shall, notwithstanding paragraph 1, be made available to compensate nuclear damage suffered in and outside the Installation State.

CHAPTER IV
EXERCISE OF OPTIONS

Article XII

1. Except insofar as this Convention otherwise provides, each Contracting Party may exercise the powers vested in it by virtue of the Vienna Convention or the Paris Convention, and any provisions made thereunder may be invoked against the other Contracting Parties in order that the public funds referred to in Article III.1(b) be made available.

2. Nothing in this Convention shall prevent any Contracting Party from making provisions outside the scope of the Vienna or the Paris Convention and of this Convention, provided that such provision shall not involve any further obligation on the part of the other Contracting Parties, and provided that damage in a Contracting Party having no nuclear installations within its territory shall not be excluded from such further compensation on any grounds of lack of reciprocity.

3. a. Nothing in this Convention shall prevent Contracting Parties from entering into regional or other agreements with the purpose of implementing their obligations under Article III.1(a) or providing additional funds for the compensation of nuclear damage, provided that this shall not involve any further obligation under this Convention for the other Contracting Parties.

b. A Contracting Party intending to enter into any such agreement shall notify all other Contracting Parties of its intention. Agreements concluded shall be notified to the Depositary.

CHAPTER V
JURISDICTION AND APPLICABLE LAW

Article XIII

Jurisdiction

1. Except as otherwise provided in this article, jurisdiction over actions concerning nuclear damage from a nuclear incident shall lie only with the courts of the Contracting Party within which the nuclear incident occurs.

2. Where a nuclear incident occurs within the area of the exclusive economic zone of a Contracting Party or, if such a zone has not been established, in an area not exceeding the limits of an exclusive economic zone, were one to be established by that Party, jurisdiction over actions concerning nuclear damage from that nuclear incident shall, for the purposes of this Convention, lie only with the courts of that Party. The preceding sentence shall apply if that Contracting Party has notified the Depositary of such area prior to the nuclear incident. Nothing in this paragraph shall be interpreted as permitting the exercise of jurisdiction in a manner which is contrary to the international law of the sea, including the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. However, if the exercise of such jurisdiction is inconsistent with the obligations of that Party under Article XI of the Vienna Convention or Article 13 of the Paris Convention in relation to a State not Party to this Convention jurisdiction shall be determined according to those provisions.

3. Where a nuclear incident does not occur within the territory of any Contracting Party or within an area notified pursuant to paragraph 2, or where the place of a nuclear incident cannot be determined with certainty, jurisdiction over actions concerning nuclear damage from the nuclear incident shall lie only with the courts of the Installation State.

4. Where jurisdiction over actions concerning nuclear damage would lie with the courts of more than one Contracting Party, these Contracting Parties shall determine by agreement which Contracting Party's courts shall have jurisdiction.

5. A judgment that is no longer subject to ordinary forms of review entered by a court of a Contracting Party having jurisdiction shall be recognized except:

   a. where the judgment was obtained by fraud;

   b. where the party against whom the judgment was pronounced was not given a fair opportunity to present his case; or

   c. where the judgment is contrary to the public policy of the Contracting Party within the territory of which recognition is sought, or is not in accord with fundamental standards of justice.

6. A judgment which is recognized under paragraph 5 shall, upon being presented for enforcement in accordance with the formalities required by the law of the Contracting Party where enforcement is sought, be enforceable as if it were a judgment of a court of that Contracting Party. The merits of a claim on which the judgment has been given shall not be subject to further proceedings.

7. Settlements effected in respect of the payment of compensation out of the public funds referred to in Article III.1(b) in accordance with the conditions established by national legislation shall be recognized by the other Contracting Parties.

Article XIV
Applicable Law

1. Either the Vienna Convention or the Paris Convention or the Annex to this Convention, as appropriate, shall apply to a nuclear incident to the exclusion of the others.

2. Subject to the provisions of this Convention, the Vienna Convention or the Paris Convention, as appropriate, the applicable law shall be the law of the competent court.

Article XV
Public International Law

This Convention shall not affect the rights and obligations of a Contracting Party under the general rules of public international law.

CHAPTER VI
DISPUTE SETTLEMENT

Article XVI

1. In the event of a dispute between Contracting Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention, the parties to the dispute shall consult with a view to the settlement of the dispute by negotiation or by any other peaceful means of settling disputes acceptable to them.

2. If a dispute of this character referred to in paragraph 1 cannot be settled within six months from the request for consultation pursuant to paragraph 1, it shall, at the request of any party to such dispute, be submitted to arbitration or referred to the International Court of Justice for decision. Where a dispute is submitted to arbitration, if, within six months from the date of the request, the parties to the dispute are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, a party may request the President of the International Court of Justice or the Secretary-General of the United Nations to appoint one or more arbitrators. In cases of conflicting requests by the parties to the dispute, the request to the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall have priority.

3. When ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Convention, a State may declare that it does not consider itself bound by either or both of the dispute settlement procedures provided for in paragraph 2. The other Contracting Parties shall not be bound by a dispute settlement procedure provided for in paragraph 2 with respect to a Contracting Party for which such a declaration is in force.

4. A Contracting Party which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 3 may at any time withdraw it by notification to the Depositary.

Done at Vienna, this twelfth day of September, one thousand nine hundred ninety-seven.

ANNEX

A Contracting Party which is not a Party to any of the Conventions mentioned in Article I(a) or (b) of this Convention shall ensure that its national legislation is consistent with the provisions laid down in this Annex insofar as those provisions are not directly applicable within that Contracting Party. A Contracting Party having no nuclear installation on its territory is required to have only that legislation which is necessary to enable such a Party to give effect to its obligations under this Convention.

Definitions

1. In addition to the definitions in Article I of this Convention, the following definitions apply for the purposes of this Annex:

a. "Nuclear Fuel" means any material which is capable of producing energy by a self-sustaining chain process of nuclear fission.

b. "Nuclear Installation" means:

   i. any nuclear reactor other than one with which a means of sea or air transport is equipped for use as a source of power, whether for propulsion thereof or for any other purpose;

   ii. any factory using nuclear fuel for the production of nuclear material, or any factory for the processing of nuclear material, including any factory for the re-processing of irradiated nuclear fuel; and

   iii. any facility where nuclear material is stored, other than storage incidental to the carriage of such material; provided that the Installation State may determine that several nuclear installations of one operator which are located at the same site shall be considered as a single nuclear installation.

c. "Nuclear material" means:

   nuclear fuel, other than natural uranium and depleted uranium, capable of producing energy by a self-sustaining chain process of nuclear fission outside a nuclear reactor, either alone or in combination with some other material; and

i. radioactive products or waste.

d. "Operator", in relation to a nuclear installation, means the person designated or recognized by the Installation State as the operator of that installation.

e. "Radioactive products or waste" means any radioactive material produced in, or any material made radioactive by exposure to the radiation incidental to, the production or utilization of nuclear fuel, but does not include radioisotopes which have reached the final stage of fabrication so as to be usable for any scientific, medical, agricultural, commercial or industrial purpose.

2. An Installation State may, if the small extent of the risks involved so warrants, exclude any nuclear installation or small quantities of nuclear material from the application of this Convention, provided that:

   with respect to nuclear installations, criteria for such exclusion have been established by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency and any exclusion by an Installation State satisfies such criteria; and

   a. with respect to small quantities of nuclear material, maximum limits for the exclusion of such quantities have been established by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency and any exclusion by an Installation State is within such established limits.

The criteria for the exclusion of nuclear installations and the maximum limits for the exclusion of small quantities of nuclear material shall be reviewed periodically by the Board of Governors.

Article 2

Conformity of Legislation

1. The national law of a Contracting Party is deemed to be in conformity with the provisions of Articles 3, 4, 5 and 7 if it contained on 1 January 1995 and continues to contain provisions that:
a. provide for strict liability in the event of a nuclear incident where there is substantial nuclear damage off the site of the nuclear installation where the incident occurs;

b. require the indemnification of any person other than the operator liable for nuclear damage to the extent that person is legally liable to provide compensation; and

c. ensure the availability of at least 1000 million SDRs in respect of a civil nuclear power plant and at least 300 million SDRs in respect of other civil nuclear installations for such indemnification.

2. If in accordance with paragraph 1, the national law of a Contracting Party is deemed to be in conformity with the provision of Articles 3, 4, 5 and 7, then that Party:

. may apply a definition of nuclear damage that covers loss or damage set forth in Article I(f) of this Convention and any other loss or damage to the extent that the loss or damage arises out of or results from the radioactive properties, or a combination of radioactive properties with toxic, explosive or other hazardous properties of nuclear fuel or radioactive products or waste in, or of nuclear material coming from, originating in, or sent to, a nuclear installation; or other ionizing radiation emitted by any source of radiation inside a nuclear installation, provided that such application does not affect the undertaking by that Contracting Party pursuant to Article III of this Convention; and

a. may apply the definition of nuclear installation in paragraph 3 of this Article to the exclusion of the definition in Article 1.1(b) of this Annex.

3. For the purpose of paragraph 2 (b) of this Article, "nuclear installation" means:

any civil nuclear reactor other than one with which a means of sea or air transport is equipped for use as a source of power, whether for propulsion thereof or any other purpose; and

a. any civil facility for processing, reprocessing or storing:

i. irradiated nuclear fuel; or

ii. radioactive products or waste that:
1. result from the reprocessing of irradiated nuclear fuel and contain significant amounts of fission products; or

2. contain elements that have an atomic number greater than 92 in concentrations greater than 10 nano-curies per gram.

b. any other civil facility for processing, reprocessing or storing nuclear material unless the Contracting Party determines the small extent of the risks involved with such an installation warrants the exclusion of such a facility from this definition.

4. Where that national law of a Contracting Party which is in compliance with paragraph 1 of this Article does not apply to a nuclear incident which occurs outside the territory of that Contracting Party, but over which the courts of that Contracting Party have jurisdiction pursuant to Article XIII of this Convention, Articles 3 to 11 of the Annex shall apply and prevail over any inconsistent provisions of the applicable national law.

Article 3
Operator Liability

1. The operator of a nuclear installation shall be liable for nuclear damage upon proof that such damage has been caused by a nuclear incident:

a. in that nuclear installation; or

b. involving nuclear material coming from or originating in that nuclear installation, and occurring:

i. before liability with regard to nuclear incidents involving the nuclear material has been assumed, pursuant to the express terms of a contract in writing, by the operator of another nuclear installation;

ii. in the absence of such express terms, before the operator of another nuclear installation has taken charge of the nuclear material; or

iii. where the nuclear material is intended to be used in a nuclear reactor with which a means of transport is equipped for use as a source of power, whether for propulsion thereof or for any other purpose, before the person duly authorized to operate such reactor has taken charge of the nuclear material; but

iv. where the nuclear material has been sent to a person within the territory of a non-Contracting State, before it has been unloaded from the means of transport by which it has arrived in the territory of that non-Contracting State;

c. involving nuclear material sent to that nuclear installation, and occurring:

after liability with regard to nuclear incidents involving the nuclear material has been assumed by the operator pursuant to the express terms of a contract in writing, from the operator of another nuclear installation;

i. in the absence of such express terms, after the operator has taken charge of the nuclear material; or

ii. after the operator has taken charge of the nuclear material from a person operating a nuclear reactor with which a means of transport is equipped for use as a source of power, whether for propulsion thereof or for any other purpose; but

iii. where the nuclear material has, with the written consent of the operator, been sent from a person within the territory of a non-Contracting State, only after it has been loaded on the means of transport by which it is to be carried from the territory of that State; provided that, if nuclear damage is caused by a nuclear incident occurring in a nuclear installation and involving nuclear material stored therein incidentally to the carriage of such material, the provisions of sub-paragraph (a) shall not apply where another operator or person is solely liable pursuant to sub-paragraph (b) or (c).

2. The Installation State may provide by legislation that, in accordance with such terms as may be specified in that legislation, a carrier of nuclear material or a person handling radioactive waste may, at such carrier or such person’s request and with the consent of the operator concerned, be designated or recognized as operator in the place of that operator in respect of such nuclear material or radioactive waste respectively. In this case such carrier or such person shall be considered, for all the purposes of this Convention, as an operator of a nuclear installation situated within the territory of that State.

3. The liability of the operator for nuclear damage shall be absolute.

4. Whenever both nuclear damage and damage other than nuclear damage have been caused by a nuclear incident or jointly by a nuclear incident and one or more other occurrences, such other damage shall, to the extent that it is not reasonably separable from the nuclear damage, be deemed to be nuclear damage caused by that nuclear incident. Where, however, damage is caused jointly by a nuclear incident covered by the provisions of this Annex and by an emission of ionizing radiation not covered by it, nothing in this Annex shall limit or otherwise affect the liability, either as regards any person suffering nuclear damage or by way of recourse or contribution, of any person who may be held liable in connection with that emission of ionizing radiation.

5. No liability shall attach to an operator for nuclear damage caused by a nuclear incident directly due to an act of armed conflict, hostilities, civil war or insurrection.

a. Except insofar as the law of the Installation State may provide to the contrary, the operator shall not be liable for nuclear damage caused by a nuclear incident caused directly due to a grave natural disaster of an exceptional character.

6. National law may relieve an operator wholly or partly from the obligation to pay compensation for nuclear damage suffered by a person if the operator proves the nuclear damage resulted wholly or partly from the gross negligence of that person or an act or omission of that person done with the intent to cause damage.

7. The operator shall not be liable for nuclear damage:

   to the nuclear installation itself and any other nuclear installation, including a nuclear installation under construction, on the site where that installation is located; and

a. to any property on that same site which is used or to be used in connection with any such installation;
b. unless otherwise provided by national law, to the means of transport upon which the nuclear material involved was at the time of the nuclear incident. If national law provides that the operator is liable for such damage, compensation for that damage shall not have the effect of reducing the liability of the operator in respect of other damage to an amount less than either 150 million SDRs, or any higher amount established by the legislation of a Contracting Party.

8. Nothing in this Convention shall affect the liability outside this Convention of the operator for nuclear damage for which by virtue of paragraph 7(c) he is not liable under this Convention.

9. The right to compensation for nuclear damage may be exercised only against the operator liable, provided that national law may permit a direct right of action against any supplier of funds that are made available pursuant to provisions in national law to ensure compensation through the use of funds from sources other than the operator.

10. The operator shall incur no liability for damage caused by a nuclear incident outside the provisions of national law in accordance with this Convention.

Article 4

Liability Amounts

1. Subject to Article III.1(a)(ii), the liability of the operator may be limited by the Installation State for any one nuclear incident, either:

   a. to not less than 300 million SDRs; or

   b. to not less then 150 million SDRs provided that in excess of that amount and up to at least 300 million SDRs public funds shall be made available by that State to compensate nuclear damage.

2. Notwithstanding paragraph 1, the Installation State, having regard to the nature of the nuclear installation or the nuclear substances involved and to the likely consequences of an incident originating therefrom, may establish a lower amount of liability of the operator, provided that in no event shall any amount so established be less than 5 million SDRs, and provided that the Installation State ensures that public funds shall be made available up to the amount established pursuant to paragraph 1.
3. The amounts established by the Installation State of the liable operator in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2, as well as the provisions of any legislation of a Contracting Party pursuant to Article 3.7(c) shall apply wherever the nuclear incident occurs.

Financial Security

1. a. The operator shall be required to have and maintain insurance or other financial security covering his liability for nuclear damage in such amount, of such type and in such terms as the Installation State shall specify. The Installation State shall ensure the payment of claims for compensation for nuclear damage which have been established against the operator by providing the necessary funds to the extent that the yield of insurance or other financial security is inadequate to satisfy such claims, but not in excess of the limit, if any, established pursuant to Article 4. Where the liability of the operator is unlimited, the Installation State may establish a limit of the financial security of the operator liable provided that such limit is not lower than 300 million SDRs. The Installation State shall ensure the payment of claims for compensation for nuclear damage which have been established against the operator to the extent that yield of the financial security is inadequate to satisfy such claims, but not in excess of the amount of the financial security to be provided under this paragraph.

b. Notwithstanding sub-paragraph (a), the Installation State, having regard to the nature of the nuclear installation or the nuclear substances involved and to the likely consequences of an incident originating therefrom, may establish a lower amount of financial security of the operator, provided that in no event shall any amount so established be less than 5 million SDRs, and provided that the Installation State ensures the payment of claims for compensation for nuclear damage which have been established against the operator by providing necessary funds to the extent that the yield of insurance or other financial security is inadequate to satisfy such claims, and up to the limit provided in sub-paragraph (a).
2. Nothing in paragraph 1 shall require a Contracting Party or any of its constituent sub-divisions to maintain insurance or other financial security to cover their liability as operators.

3. The funds provided by insurance, by other financial security or by the Installation State pursuant to paragraph 1 or Article 4.1(b) shall be exclusively available for compensation due under this Annex.

4. No insurer or other financial guarantor shall suspend or cancel the insurance or other financial security provided pursuant to paragraph 1 without giving notice in writing of at least two months to the competent public authority or, in so far as such insurance or other financial security relates to the carriage of nuclear material, during the period of the carriage in question.

Carriage

1. With respect to a nuclear incident during carriage, the maximum amount of liability of the operator shall be governed by the national law of the Installation State.

2. A Contracting Party may subject carriage of nuclear material through its territory to the condition that the amount of liability of the operator be increased to an amount not to exceed the maximum amount of liability of the operator of a nuclear installation situated in its territory.

3. The provisions of paragraph 2 shall not apply to:
   a. carriage by sea where, under international law, there is a right of entry in cases of urgent distress into ports of a Contracting Party or a right of innocent passage through its territory;
   b. carriage by air where, by agreement or under international law, there is a right to fly over or land on the territory of a Contracting Party.

Article 7
Liability of More Than One Operator

1. Where nuclear damage engages the liability of more than one operator, the operators involved shall, in so far as the damage attributable to each operator is not reasonably separable, be jointly and severally liable. The Installation State may limit the amount of public funds made available per incident to the difference, if any, between the amounts hereby established and the amount established pursuant to Article 4.1.
2. Where a nuclear incident occurs in the course of carriage of nuclear material, either in one and the same means of transport, or, in the case of storage incidental to the carriage, in one and the same nuclear installation, and causes nuclear damage which engages the liability of more than one operator, the total liability shall not exceed the highest amount applicable with respect to any one of them pursuant to Article 4.

3. In neither of the cases referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 shall the liability of any one operator exceed the amount applicable with respect to him pursuant to Article 4.

4. Subject to the provisions of paragraphs 1 to 3, where several nuclear installations of one and the same operator are involved in one nuclear incident, such operator shall be liable in respect of each nuclear installation involved up to the amount applicable with respect to him pursuant to Article 4. The Installation State may limit the amount of public funds made available as provided for in paragraph 1.

Article 8
Compensation Under National Law

1. For purposes of this Convention, the amount of compensation shall be determined without regard to any interest or costs awarded in a proceeding for compensation of nuclear damage.

2. Compensation for damage suffered outside the Installation State shall be provided in a form freely transferable among Contracting Parties.

3. Where provisions of national or public health insurance, social insurance, social security, workmen's compensation or occupational disease compensation systems include compensation for nuclear damage, rights of beneficiaries of such systems and rights of recourse by virtue of such systems shall be determined by the national law of the Contracting Party in which such systems have been established or by the regulations of the intergovernmental organization which has established such systems.

Period of Extinction

1. Rights of compensation under this Convention shall be extinguished if an action is not brought within ten years from the date of the nuclear incident. If, however, under the law of the Installation State the liability of the operator is covered by insurance or other financial security or by State funds for a period longer than ten years, the law of the competent court may provide that rights of compensation against the operator shall only be extinguished after a period which may be longer than ten years, but shall not be longer than the period for which his liability is so covered under the law of the Installation State.

2. Where nuclear damage is caused by a nuclear incident involving nuclear material which at the time of the nuclear incident was stolen, lost, jettisoned or abandoned, the period established pursuant to paragraph 1 shall be computed from the date of that nuclear incident, but the period shall in no case, subject to legislation pursuant to paragraph 1, exceed a period of twenty years from the date of the theft, loss, jettison or abandonment.

3. The law of the competent court may establish a period of extinction or prescription of not less than three years from the date on which the person suffering nuclear damage had knowledge or should have had knowledge of the damage and of the operator liable for the damage, provided that the period established pursuant to paragraphs 1 and 2 shall not be exceeded.

4. If the national law of a Contracting Party provides for a period of extinction or prescription greater than ten years from the date of a nuclear incident, it shall contain provisions for the equitable and timely satisfaction of claims for loss of life or personal injury filed within ten years from the date of the nuclear incident.

Article 10

Right of Recourse

National law may provide that the operator shall have a right of recourse only:

a. if this is expressly provided for by a contract in writing; or

b. if the nuclear incident results from an act or omission done with intent to cause damage, against the individual who has acted or omitted to act with such intent.

Article 11

Applicable Law

Subject to the provisions of this Convention, the nature, form, extent and equitable distribution of compensation for nuclear damage caused by a nuclear incident shall be governed by the law of the competent court.
INDIA’S FOREIGN RELATIONS - 2010

SECTION - IV

MULTILATERAL COOPERATION
Multilateral Cooperation

ASEAN

066. Inaugural Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at Delhi Dialogue-II.

New Delhi, January 21, 2010.

Mr. Harsh Pati Singhania, President, FICCI,
Ms. Latha Reddy, Secretary (East), MEA,
Ambassador K. Kesavapany, Director, Institute of Southeast Asian Studies,
Dr. Amit Mitra, Secretary General, FICCI,

Excellencies, Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to share my thoughts at the second edition of the Delhi Dialogue. I see that several well known experts, senior business and industry representatives, from India and ASEAN are participating in this Dialogue on the theme of 'India and South East Asia in the Changing Regional Economic Dynamics of Asia: Shared Interests and Concerns'. I welcome His Excellency Dr. Nam Viyaketh, Minister of Commerce and Industry of Laos, and others who have travelled to Delhi to participate in this Dialogue.

2. India since the early 1990's has been closely pursuing closer relations with South East Asia and the Pacific region as envisioned in our 'Look East Policy'. It is our belief that expanding our dialogue and cooperation would greatly contribute to our common endeavour for inclusive socio-economic development of our peoples.

3. As a part of our Look East policy, we have evolved a multifaceted partnership with ASEAN in recent years. The India-ASEAN partnership saw a remarkable transformation from a sectoral dialogue partnership to a Summit-level interaction within the short span of a decade, with the first Summit level interaction in 2002. We would be privileged to be able to host the India - ASEAN Summit in 2012 to commemorate the tenth anniversary of our Summit level dialogue with ASEAN.

4. We have diversified and strengthened our relations with the ASEAN countries and stepped up our bilateral relations to the strategic level with some countries of the region. Regular exchanges of high level bilateral visits and close interaction at regional and multilateral fora characterise our growing engagement. Today's Delhi Dialogue is being held, even as a State visit by the Prime Minister of Malaysia to India is underway. India and ASEAN have also been engaged in developing a broader regional architecture in the Asia-Pacific region. The ASEAN Regional Forum and the East Asia Summit provide useful opportunities for productive interaction. We see ASEAN as a key element of an Asian economic community architecture that would help bring peace and prosperity to our region.

5. India-ASEAN cooperation is varied and functional. It includes cooperation in sectors such as Trade and Investment, Science & Technology, Human Resource Development, Health and Pharmaceuticals, Space Sciences, Agriculture, Information and Communication Technology, Transport and Infrastructure, Tourism, Culture, and Small and Medium enterprises.

6. India-ASEAN trade has grown rapidly in recent years. The India-ASEAN Trade-in-Goods Agreement under a Free Trade Agreement, which came into force on 1 January 2010, has opened new possibilities for the expansion of our trade with the region. We hope that agreements on Trade-in-Services and Investment would also be concluded as soon as possible. In addition to the India-ASEAN FTA, with several countries of the region, bilateral FTAs and Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) have been concluded or are being negotiated. With several ASEAN countries, including Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore, our bilateral trade turnover has crossed US$ 10 bn. each.

7. People-to-people contacts and cultural and academic exchanges between India and the countries of the region have continued to grow. The revival of the Nalanda University as an international institution of excellence has emerged as an important initiative that underlines our ancient linkages.

8. We strongly believe in sharing our developmental experiences with our fellow developing countries. We have been happy to participate in development cooperation programmes with ASEAN countries, and in the "Initiative for ASEAN Integration' Programme. We have given particular emphasis to human resource development through training, scholarships, establishment of entrepreneurship development centres and language training centres. The ASEAN - India S&T Fund, which has been operationalised, would promote joint collaborative research projects in Science and technology. The proposed India - ASEAN Green Fund, with a corpus of US$ 5 million, would promote adaptation and mitigation technologies in the area of climate change.

9. At the 7th India - ASEAN Summit, our Prime minister had announced several initiatives to further strengthen the links between India and ASEAN, including establishment of an India-ASEAN Round Table comprising think tanks, policy makers, scholars, media and business representatives that would provide policy inputs to the governments of India and the ASEAN countries on future areas of cooperation; intensification of negotiations on an open skies policy; further simplification of the visa regime to encourage business and tourist travel; more youth exchange programmes; enhanced cooperation in the agriculture sector to meet the challenges of food security; cooperation in the application of space technologies; holding an ASEAN trade and industrial exhibition in India; among others. As announced by Prime Minister, we are ready to allocate upto US $ 50 million to support these initiatives. We would continue to explore ways to further enhance our cooperation and benefit from our complementarities.

10. In the wake of the recent global financial and economic crisis, which was not of our making, it is imperative to develop greater cooperation among developing countries, so that we have an effective voice in the international financial architecture and a new global economic order.

11. Energy Security is an issue of great importance for the development, progress and well-being of our peoples. A regional approach on energy matters can accommodate competing demands and constraints while shifting the focus from competition to cooperation based on mutual interests. We look forward to continued engagement with ASEAN countries and our partners in the East Asia Summit on this issue.

12. The Economic Research Institute of ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA) is serving as an important platform for sharing of policy-related research and other experiences. The Government of India has always been supportive of the efforts made by ERIA. I am happy to know that the Executive director of ERIA is participating in this Dialogue.
13. I take this opportunity to thank and commend the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry for organising this event and hope that the Delhi Dialogue would see fruitful interaction that would contribute to the strengthening of our relationship with South East Asia.

14. I inaugurate this Delhi Dialogue with a sense of satisfaction, and also with a sense of expectation.

Thank you

067. Press Releases issued by the Embassy of India in Vietnam on the visit of Minister of State Shrimati Preneet Kaur to Hanoi for the 17th ASEAN Regional Forum Ministerial meeting.

Minister of State for External Affairs, Smt. Preneet Kaur (MOS (PK)) led the Indian delegation to the 17th ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) Ministerial meeting held in Hanoi today. The meeting was attended by Foreign Ministers and officials from all 27 ARF members.

The ARF Ministers discussed regional and international security issues. They reaffirmed the importance of ARF in the emerging regional architecture and supported ASEAN's role as the driving force in the ARF process. A highlight of the meeting was the adoption of the "Hanoi Plan of Action" for the implementation of ARF Vision Statement for 2020. The Vision Statement was adopted by the 2009 ARF Ministerial.

Canada and Turkey (not an ARF member) acceded to the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation (TAC) in Southeast Asia. The Third Protocol to amend the TAC was signed to enable EU's accession to the Treaty as a regional organization. MOS (PK) signed the Protocol from the Indian side.

In her interventions at the meeting, MOS (PK) said that ARF has provided a useful platform for interaction and cooperation to address traditional and non-traditional security challenges. She called on ARF members to reaffirm their resolve to decisively act against terrorism. She emphasized the importance of the early adoption of Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. MOS (PK) underlined India's commitment to a stable and peaceful Afghanistan as evidenced by India's developmental and humanitarian assistance of more than $1.3 billion to Afghanistan.

The ARF is a premier forum for dialogue, cooperation and confidence building on politico-security issues in the Asia-Pacific. India became a member of the ARF in 1996. India's participation in the Forum underscores our contribution to Asian security. India has organized several activities for ARF members. During the inter-sessional period 2009-10, India, alongwith Vietnam, co-chaired the ARF Inter-sessional Support Group on Confidence Building Measures and Preventive Diplomacy (ARF-ISG on CBMs and PD). A meeting of the ARF-ISG on CBMs and PD was held in New Delhi in November 2009.

068. Press Statement of the 8th ASEAN Economic Ministers Conference.

Da Nang (Vietnam), August 27, 2010.

1. The ASEAN Economic Ministers (AEM) and the Minister of Commerce and Industry of the Republic of India met at the Eighth AEM-India Consultations in Da Nang, Viet Nam on 27 August 2010. The Consultations was co-chaired by H.E. Vu Huy Hoang, Minister of Industry and Trade of Viet Nam and H.E. Anand Sharma, Minister of Commerce and Industry of India.

2. The Ministers exchanged views on the global economic environment, noting with satisfaction that emerging economies in Asia were leading the recovery in the global economy. India's economy is poised to expand by 9.4% in 2010, while ASEAN's real GDP is expected to be over 5%, much higher than the 1.5% recorded in 2009. In 2009, ASEAN's trade with India remained high and India remains ASEAN's seventh largest trading partner. Over the same period, ASEAN also witnessed an increase of 40.8% in India's foreign direct investment to ASEAN. This placed India as the sixth largest investor in ASEAN. The Ministers expressed confidence in the strengthening economic ties between the two sides, further boosted by the implementation of the ASEAN-India Trade in Goods Agreement in 2010. The Ministers encouraged the full implementation of the ASEAN-India Trade in Goods Agreement by all countries within 2010 so that the private sector could reap the full benefits offered by the Agreement.

3. The Ministers noted the progress in the negotiations on product specific rules of origin under the ASEAN-India Trade in Goods Agreement. The Ministers reiterated that PSRs should be liberal and trade facilitative. In this view, the Ministers encouraged officials to finalise an initial package of PSRs for possible endorsement in October 2010.

4. The Ministers noted the progress that has been made in the negotiations on services and investment. They urged both Parties to finalise the services text and concurrently complete negotiations on the schedules of commitments, noting the mandate of the Framework Agreement on Comprehensive Economic Cooperation between ASEAN and India for substantial sectoral coverage and GATS-plus commitment, as well as the need for ambitious and commercially meaningful offers. The Ministers also called for intensification of negotiation on core issues in investment.

5. In this respect, Ministers tasked the negotiators to step up their engagement for completion of these negotiations. The Ministers underscored the importance of trade in services and investment negotiations to complement the trade in goods agreement, in order to further enhance the economic integration of ASEAN and India.

6. In line with the transparency requirements of the WTO, ASEAN and India have notified the ASEAN-India FTA agreements to the WTO under the Enabling Clause. The Ministers also took the opportunity to review the progress of the WTO Doha negotiations, remaining convinced that a strong multilateral system based on mutually beneficial and balanced outcomes in agriculture, NAMA and services are key to a stable and progressive global trading system. The Ministers assured Lao PDR of their continued support in her accession to the WTO.

Mr Antony said Piracy remains a serious challenge for the world community and expressed India's commitment to work together with other countries to address piracy.

*The security of sea lanes of communication is vital in today's world. It is in the common interest of nations to keep sea lanes open, secure and free for navigation, trade and energy supplies. * It was the first ASEAN + Eight Defence Ministers' Meeting. The Meeting was attended by the Defence Ministers and Representatives of Defence Ministers from ten ASEAN Member States and eight ASEAN Dialogue Partners referred to as the "Plus Eight" countries, namely Australia, China, India, Japan, the Republic of Korea, New Zealand, the Russian Federation, and the United States. The Secretary-General of ASEAN was also in attendance. The Meeting recognised the positive contributions by the "Plus" countries in enhancing peace, stability and development in Southeast Asia. The Meeting also welcomed the interest of the "Plus" countries in promoting closer cooperation with ASEAN through the ADMM-Plus. The Meeting also affirmed that the ADMM-Plus is a key component of a robust, effective, open, and inclusive regional security architecture. The Meeting noted recent developments in implementing the ASEAN Charter and building an ASEAN Community by 2015 based on the three pillars of Political Security Community, Economic Community, and Social-Cultural Community. The Meeting also noted efforts by ASEAN in deepening relationship with its Dialogue Partners under the framework of ASEAN+1, ASEAN+3, East Asia Summit, ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) and ADMM-Plus to support the goal of building the ASEAN Community. years now. India is committed to working together with other countries in the efforts to address piracy.

The security of sea lanes is important for the Asia-Pacific region, which is now one of the most important drivers of global economic growth. Through the Regional Cooperation Agreement on Combating Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships in Asia (ReCAAP) and the Malacca Straits mechanisms, we are partnering with other countries in the region to improve the safety of navigation in the region. Cooperative approaches on maritime security would offer benefits for the region as a whole”, he said.

The ADMM Plus forum has for the first time brought together the defence establishments of all the key nations in the region with the objective of addressing non-traditional security challenges. Complimenting the ASEAN for bringing together the defence establishments of all the key nations in the region, Mr Antony said, Asia in general and South East Asia in particular, have learnt, through harsh experience, the various forms that such challenges take. He called for the development of synergy to counter such challenges.

“The growth of terrorism, the growing role of non-state actors, cyber threats etc are markers in the evolution of the global security construct during the last decade or so. Asia has been the theatre for the unfolding of many of these developments. Given the transnational nature of the challenges, it is important to develop synergy and build institutionalized cooperative arrangements”, he said.

Mr Antony welcomed the Hanoi Joint Declaration, saying, it provides a viable framework for multilateral defence and security dialogue and cooperation in the region. He extended New Delhi’s support for the five priority areas identified for cooperation and the idea of having expert groups to develop cooperation in these areas. “India looks forward to contributing to the deliberations and activities of each of these Groups”, he said.

Hanoi, October 29, 2010

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Very good morning and welcome to the media centre. You are aware the Prime Minister of India has had two very important meetings this morning, with Premier Wen Jiabao of China, and the President of Republic of Korea. The National Security Advisor Shri Shivshankar Menon is here to talk to you about the visit.

Sir, the floor is yours.

National Security Advisor (Shri Shivshankar Menon): We thought we would brief you about the two meetings that Prime Minister had this morning. He met first with the Premier of People’s Republic of China Premier Wen Jiabao, and then met with the President of the Republic of Korea thereafter.
The meeting with Premier Wen Jiabao was warm, friendly and covered the entire gamut of the relationship. This was their tenth meeting actually in the last six years. As you know, Premier Wen Jiabao has visited India before; Prime Minister also visited China as Premier Wen Jiabao's guest.

During their discussions on the bilateral relations both of them took a broader strategic view of the significance of India-China bilateral relations; expressed satisfaction at the development of that relationship; and also discussed specifics in the relationship. Premier Wen Jiabao recalled what Prime Minister had said before that there is enough space in the world for both India and China to realize their development aspirations. He actually added to it and he said that there is enough space for China and India to also have cooperation in all areas.

Premier Wen Jiabao indicated that he hopes to visit India in the course of this year. This is the 60th anniversary year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries. As you know, we have had a series of high-level visits. President has visited China earlier this year. Prime Minister also spoke of sensitivity to each other's core issues. Both spoke of their determination to carry their relationship forward.

In the meeting with the South Korean President, again they reviewed the bilateral relationship and the considerable progress that has been made in the relationship since President Lee visited India as the Chief Guest on Republic Day. Since then we have agreed the Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement; we have also finalized an agreement on cooperation in civil uses of nuclear energy which now awaits signature. We have made considerable progress in cooperation in civil aviation and space, and several areas. The economic relationship too is moving forward steadily.

They also discussed G20 issues, the stress that President Lee wishes to place on development as an outcome, and for the need for meeting not just to take decisions but to have a system of systematic implementation of those decisions so that they are carried forward over several years. They both agreed on that. Both agreed that they would work together in the G20 to that end.

I will leave it at that and maybe take questions from you.
Question: Sir, I would like to know about the India-China meeting. What were the specifics discussed with respect to climate change and the G20 Summit where China seems to be under pressure on the currency issue?

National Security Advisor: On the climate change issue they both recalled their work together in Copenhagen, and spoke of continuing to work together on a range of global issues - climate change, counter-terrorism, disaster management, energy security, food security - and that we would continue to work together. That is because these are issues where we have similar or identical positions. There was not a discussion on G20 issues during this meeting.

Question: Did the Prime Minister raise the issue of stapled visas?

National Security Advisor: The Prime Minister raised the issue of all difficult questions and showing sensitivity to each other. We were instructed, the SRs and the officials on both sides, to prepare for Prime Minister Wen Jiabao's visit and to work our way to solutions of all the issues that are difficult in our relationship including the boundary question. As I said, they covered the entire range of the relationship.

Question: Sir, you said that core issues were discussed and stressed the need to carry it forward.

National Security Advisor: No, I did not say that. I said that Prime Minister spoke of the need to show sensitivity to each other's core issues.

Question: Can you just elaborate on that, flesh it out for us?

National Security Advisor: No, I think that is what he said. I will give you what he said. I am not going to put a gloss on what he said.

Question: But when you say there are core issues or sensitivities on both sides, what are the core issues, and do we agree on the core issues of each other?

National Security Advisor: I think we have both indicated to each other and this is an ongoing conversation. It is not one conversation where we mention what concerns either of us. So, we will continue that discussion as we lead up to Premier Wen Jiabao's visit which we are sure will be a very successful and productive visit.
Question: Sir, how long did the meeting last between the two Prime Ministers?

National Security Advisor: About forty-five minutes.

Question: In the meeting with the South Korean President, did they talk about Posco because that is a project which has been held on for five years?

National Security Advisor: It did not come up.

Question: What are the dates of the visit? Has it been decided in the meeting?

National Security Advisor: No, we have not actually fixed the dates yet. We are consulting about dates which suit both sides.

Sorry, I forgot to mention also that President Lee also invited the Prime Minister to visit South Korea next year.

Question: Did the issue of defence exchanges come up?

National Security Advisor: As I said, they covered the entire range of relations. They did say that we have to work our way through all these issues.

Question: Can you elaborate on discussions on the boundary issue?

National Security Advisor: On the boundary issue I think both sides said that they look forward to an early resolution of the issue. Both mentioned the need to carry the process forward from the guiding principles and the political parameters which were agreed and signed in 2005. Both said they would ask the Special Representatives to do so with a sense of urgency. And they agreed that in the meantime, pending a settlement, we will maintain peace and tranquility along the boundary. The SRs are likely to be meeting towards the end of November.

Question: Will the Wen Jiabao visit be in this year or next year?

National Security Advisor: He said he hopes to visit during this year.

Question: Where are the SRs meeting?
National Security Advisor: In Beijing, before the end of November. I think the last meeting was in Delhi.

Question: Sir, this point about 'we have to work our way through difficult issues' was made by the Chinese Prime Minister right in the beginning. It was part of the opening statement.

National Security Advisor: By both sides. It is agreed. I think we both feel we need to. But as I said, both took a larger, strategic view of the significance of the relationship, and the importance of good India-China relations and of working towards that goal, as we have done over several years in the past.

Question: But after the opening statements, forty-minute conversation is a long time, were these issues discussed in detail?

National Security Advisor: I just told you, they covered all the issues in the relationship.

Question: Sir, the stapled visas was a sensitive issue. What was the response of the Chinese on that?

National Security Advisor: I have told you, they both discussed the entire range of the relationship, all the issues in the relationship, and then they spoke about asking their officials and so on to prepare for the visit and to deal with each of these issues. Question: So, everything will be decided by officials and during the visit.

National Security Advisor: No, what I am saying is that we will continue the process of engagement and continue to deal with the issues that concern each of us as we have done for several years and will continue to do.

Question: What was the significance of the meeting?

National Security Advisor: The significance of the meeting, as I told you is three things. (1) We had a high-level review where both sides reaffirmed their determination to carry this relationship forward along the positive track that we have maintained for several years; (2) that we will, during the 60th anniversary year of diplomatic relations, hope to have a very high-level visit from China as well. Premier Wen Jiabao himself said he hopes to come; (3) that they have given new impetus to the process which we have both between the SRs and between the officials of both countries to work our way through the issues and have given us a clear direction of how they want this handled.

Question: Did the Prime Minister raise the issue of trade imbalance? Secondly, will defence exchanges remain suspended?

National Security Advisor: Premier Wen Jiabao first said that we are very conscious of the trade imbalance and of the need to do something. He outlined some of the steps that the Chinese Government has taken to address this issue. As you know, we had a Joint Economic Group meeting. Commerce Ministers had met in the beginning of the year and they had taken several steps. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the fact that in the first nine months of the year we had achieved about 45 billion dollars worth of total two-way trade, and that we are on track to achieve the target of 60 billion dollars total two-way trade in 2010, which was the target which we had set in 2008. There is some diminution in the imbalance, but there is still an imbalance, and we will continue to work at those issues.

Question: What about defence exchanges?

National Security Advisor: On defence exchanges, we will continue to work the issue. As I said, some high-level defence exchanges for the present are paused.

Question: Sir, do you expect the visit of Mr. Zhou Yuo Kang's visit to be preparatory to that of Premier's?

National Security Advisor: We think it is a very important visit not only because he is such a senior Politburo Standing Committee Member, it is also a part of the party-to-party exchanges between the two countries. We are looking forward to that visit. They are holding a seminar on India-China relations. It will give us a chance to have a much freer, broader sort of exchange of views at a very high level with the Chinese side. And we are looking forward very much to that. He will also be calling on our state leaders.

Question: Was there any decision on both sides to avoid public statements that could create misunderstandings?

National Security Advisor: Do we ever make such statements? Never!

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.
I thank you, Mr. Prime Minister, for your warm welcome and generous hospitality. It is a pleasure for all of us to gather here on the auspicious occasion of the commemoration of 1000 years of the establishment of the city of Hanoi.

I deeply condole the loss of lives and property in the recent tsunami in Indonesia and floods in Vietnam. I wish the people of Indonesia and Vietnam an early recovery from the unfortunate tragedy.

I thank Cambodia, and especially Prime Minister Hun Sen, for his strong support to India as country Coordinator and look forward to our continuing close association with Cambodia.

For the past five years the achievement of the India-ASEAN partnership has been to initiate cooperation in a diverse range of sectors covering political and security ties, economic cooperation and the promotion of socio-cultural links.

I commend the officials of both sides for developing a Plan of Action to implement the ASEAN-India Partnership for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity for the years 2010-2015. It is an ambitious road map and the 82 Action Points reflect the vast potential and desire to develop a multi-faceted India-ASEAN relationship.

Our experience of implementation shows that we need to work very hard at all levels if we have to accelerate the pace of engagement as outlined in the Plan of Action. I recall that the theme of the ASEAN Summit this year is "Vision to Action". This theme is equally appropriate for our own partnership.

I invite the ASEAN Secretary General Dr. Surin Pitsuwan to visit India to review the mechanisms and procedures in place so that the pace of implementing agreed projects can be speeded up.
I would urge that the two sides make further efforts to identify concrete projects for cooperation under the India-ASEAN Science & Technology Fund, India-ASEAN Green Fund and the US $ 50 million India-ASEAN Fund announced last year.

Excellencies,

India believes that ASEAN is the core around which the process of economic integration of the Asia-Pacific region should be built. India’s economy has been growing rapidly for the past few years. This year we hope to achieve a growth rate of 8.5%. In the coming years, we hope to sustain a growth rate of 9-10% per year which will offer many opportunities for trade and investment. Our government has undertaken programmes for a massive transformation of rural India that is creating a huge and booming rural market for goods and services.

We hope that all formalities for implementing the India-ASEAN Trade in Goods Agreement by all ASEAN States are completed at an early date. The conclusion of a Services and Investment Agreement will be an important step in our goal of comprehensive economic cooperation.

In recent years, there has been a substantial increase in people to people exchanges as a result of better air connectivity between India and ASEAN. More than 3 million Indian tourists visit ASEAN every year and about 380 flights connect Indian and ASEAN cities every week. This is well below the potential.

Excellencies

We invite many more tourists from the ASEAN countries to visit India to see the splendor of its rich cultural heritage. I am happy that the text of the ASEAN-India MoU for cooperation in Tourism has been finalized. I am also pleased to note that ASEAN will soon establish an ASEAN Promotional Chapter for tourism in Mumbai.

As a concrete measure, I am happy to announce that we will extend our visa on arrival facility to nationals of Cambodia, Vietnam, Philippines and Laos with effect from 1st of January 2011.
We have always accorded high priority to the countries covered by the "Initiative for ASEAN integration". We hope to upgrade the level of youth exchanges as well as establish Vocational Training Centres in each of these countries.

Connectivity is another important area of our cooperation. As a further measure to support the ASEAN Master Plan on Connectivity, we will offer 100 IT scholarships to each of the 10 ASEAN countries over the next 5 years.

Science & Technology should be another focus area for our cooperation. We are ready to set up a Centre for Tracking and Data Reception and an Imaging facility for the ASEAN countries. This Centre would utilize data provided by Indian remote sensing satellites and harness it for multiple developmental applications. I propose a meeting of the heads of our space agencies in India which could work out exact details of cooperation.

Our cooperation in political and security matters is progressing well, including through expanded bilateral exchanges. These are important areas of our cooperation not only because of the common threats that we face but also because such cooperation helps to built mutual trust and understanding.

India looks forward to hosting the commemorative India-ASEAN Summit in India in the year 2012. This will be a land mark event and we must begin preparations early. The Eminent Persons Group should be set up quickly so that it can formulate a vision statement towards a long term strategic partnership between ASEAN and India that could be the theme of the Summit.

Thank you.

076. Press Release issued by the ASEAN Secretariat on the 8th ASEAN-India Summit.

Hanoi, October 30, 2010.

On 30 October, ASEAN Leaders and Prime Minister of India attended the 8th ASEAN-India Summit in Ha Noi, which was chaired by H.E Prime Minister Nguyen Tan Dung.

The Leaders of ASEAN and India noted with satisfaction the fruitful developments in ASEAN-India Dialogue relation, with positive outcome in various aspects, particularly on economic-trade, science and technology, environment, health, tourism, people-to-people exchange etc. ASEAN welcomed the "Look East" policy of India, in which the ASEAN-India relation is considered as the main pillar and the crucial foundation for cooperation and linkage in the Asia region.

ASEAN Leaders noted with appreciation India’s continued support for ASEAN in realising the goals of enhancing regional integration and narrowing the development gap through the implementation of important programs and plans, especially the Roadmap for an ASEAN Community, the Master Plan of ASEAN Connectivity and the Initiative of ASEAN Integration (IAI). ASEAN looks forwards to India's continued support for ASEAN's centrality in an evolving regional architecture, particularly in ASEAN-led fora.

On future direction, the two sides agreed to focus efforts and resources to effectively implement cooperation agreements, in particular, the ASEAN-India Plan of Action (POA) to implement the ASEAN-India Partnership for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity (2010-2015), focusing on such priority of areas as economic-trade, science and technology, information technology, biology, food, energy, health, pharmaceuticals, education and human resource development... Along with the implementation of ASEAN - India Trade in Goods Agreement, the two sides agreed to accelerate negotiation for the next Agreements of investments and services. India expressed continued support and assistance to ASEAN in its Community building narrowing development gap efforts as well as in building capacity for addressing global challenges and cooperation in the development of the Mekong sub-region... India shall also continue to support the operations of the ASEAN-India Entrepreneur Development Centres and English Language Training Centres in Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar and Viet Nam (CLMV countries).

On conclusion, the Leaders of ASEAN and India reaffirmed their commitment on uplifting the ASEAN-India dialogue relation to a new height, effectively implementing the agreed cooperation plans, as well as agreed to hold the ASEAN-India Commemorative Summit in 2012 to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the ASEAN-India Dialogue Partnership and establish the ASEAN-India Eminent Persons Group (EPG) to take stock of 20 years of ASEAN-India cooperation and chart future direction.
I reaffirm India's commitment to the East Asia Summit process. India's engagement with South East and East Asia has been a pillar of our foreign policy since the 1990s. We have participated in each of the Summits and in the many sectoral meetings. India believes in the centrality of ASEAN's role in the EAS process.

This is a special Summit, marking the 5th Anniversary of the East Asia Summit. The EAS has come a long way since its first meeting in Kuala Lumpur in December 2005. Today, it has become an integral part of the regional architecture and a purposeful vehicle for community building in the region.

The EAS process has over the years grappled with immediate challenges such as disaster management and pandemics and energy security in 2007, the global economic crisis in 2008 and the climate change negotiations in 2009. This is in addition to the ongoing task of creating structures and institutions which lead to the overall goal of forging a wider Asian community encompassing the economic, political, security, social, cultural and people-to-people spheres.

The economic weight is shifting in favour of Asia, and it is seen as the engine of global growth. It has weathered the global economic crisis well. The EAS process is creating prosperity in the region, and helping to bridge gaps between sub-regions and nations in Asia. We are on the right track.

The theme of the Summit - from vision to action - is most appropriate. We need to move from policy declarations to greater functional cooperation.

I welcome the entry of the United States and Russia as participants in the EAS process. The EAS will benefit from there experience while remaining an ASEAN-led process.

I would like to complement the Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA) for their work in promoting regional integration by providing useful research and practical policy recommendations on regional connectivity, trade, investment, energy and the environment. ERIA has submitted a report on the Comprehensive Asian Development Plan (CADP) and identified three corridors for building infrastructure, connectivity and industrial activity that will support the realization of a community in the region. One of these is for a Mekong - India Economic Corridor.

Thanks to the collective efforts of G-20, the world economy has gradually stabilized even though the recovery remains fragile. Growth in developing countries would be greatly helped if threats of new protectionist measures in industrialized countries are firmly resisted and existing barriers to trade are reduced. Towards this end, a successful completion of the Doha Development Round of trade negotiations is important.

India welcomes further progress on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement for East Asia (CEPEA) process. Till last year we had signed CEPA Agreements with Singapore and ROK and a Trade in Goods Agreement with the ASEAN. In the last one year we have completed negotiations on a CEPA with Japan and Malaysia. An Agreement on Trade in Services and Investment is under negotiation with the ASEAN.

Forthcoming G-20 Summit in Seoul should focus on development. I am happy that development has been included as an item for discussion.

Indian economy is expected to grow at the rate of 8.5% this year. We hope to achieve a growth rate of 9.10% next year. This will encourage two way trade between India and ASEAN Member States.

We welcome the first meeting of the ASEAN Defence Ministers Plus Eight in Hanoi earlier this month. India supports practical and pragmatic cooperation through this new forum by building trust and confidence among all countries. We believe that in a step by step process, at a pace comfortable to all, this forum can make a meaningful contribution to building open and transparent security architecture in the Asia-Pacific region.
Tackling the growing threats to security - non-State actors, security of sea-lanes, piracy, human trafficking, terrorism and protection of global commons - would require concerted response.

At the 4th East Asia Summit, EAS member countries had supported the establishment of the University as a non-state, non-profit, secular and self-governing international institution to bring together the brightest and the best in East Asia. I am happy to report that the Nalanda University Bill has been passed by both Houses of the Indian Parliament earlier this year. The Nalanda Mentor Group (headed by Nobel Laureate Dr. Amartya Sen) will act as the interim Governing Board of the University till such time as the members of the Governing Board have been nominated. The statutes of the University are being drafted. Land has been acquired for the University. We invite EAS member countries to participate in the Nalanda University project. I hope that Nalanda University will be an important element in the community that we hope to build in the East Asian region.

India supports a collaborative approach to energy issues. Our present energy policy involves adopting a multi-pronged strategy by broadening our energy mix, including nuclear energy.

We want positive outcome in Cancun at the 16th Conference of Parties. It should build upon the Copenhagen Accord. India is doing everything possible within the limitation of her own resources to contribute to the global action on climate change. Under our ambitious National Action Plan on Climate Change, we have embarked upon measures to improve energy efficiency, reduce energy intensity and enhance the share of renewable energy in the energy mix.

We listened with great interest to remarks of the President of the Asian Development Bank. In near future, we believe that Asia’s growth and intra-ASEAN trade can make an important contribution to global recovery.

Adopted on this 30th day of October 2010 in Hanoi.
Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Ladies and gentlemen, I believe you have been briefed by our officials about the three important visits that I have had, first to Japan, then to Malaysia and finally to Hanoi. If there are any questions that you would like to ask I will be happy to answer them.

Question: About engagement with Pakistan?

A- I cannot say how soon. It is our policy to engage with Pakistan. That does not mean we should surrender or give up our essential and vital interests. But Pakistan happens to be our neighbour and I have often said that you can choose your friends but you cannot choose your neighbours. And therefore we are obliged to engage Pakistan.

Question: Were certain measures suggested during the East Asia Summit to remove protectionist policies of the industrialized nations?

A- I do not think the conference went into the details of these matters. This is a general statement that protectionism is not a solution to the trade problems or the balance of payment problems that have arisen and that it is a principle with which all people have agreed.

Question: On meeting with Hillary Clinton and relationship with USA?

A - I will ask the NSA to brief you. I think the India-United States relationship has entered a new phase. There is cordiality, there is understanding and it is our common desire to bring about a qualitative change in our relationship. We have economic interaction, we have strategic interaction, we are strategic partners and therefore there are many areas where we have interest which we must explore with the United States to find out if there is any commonality of interests.

Question: Rare earth agreement with Japan?

A - Well there is a subsidiary of Toyota which had entered into some arrangement with Indian Rare Earths Ltd. I think that got caught in some difficulties. I have promised that when I return to India we will try to sort out the difficulties.

Question: On meeting with Premier Wen Jia Bao of China

A- Well in a general way we discussed the totality of our issues. We reaffirmed our two countries resolve to find practical, pragmatic, mutually satisfactory solutions to the border problem. And recognizing the complexity of the issues we agreed that meanwhile peace and tranquility should be maintained along the border.

* * * *

Question: on relations between India and China.

A- I do not want to get into ups and downs of relations. Whatever Premier Wen Jiabao has said, I agree with that. The relations between India and China should be strong; whatever misunderstanding is there, should be removed; for this I have invited him to India and he has accepted it also; he will come to India in the very near future.

* * * *

Question: The Kashmir interlocutors have made recommendations that go against the state of Kashmir

A- They have not made any recommendations that I am aware of. Comments in a democracy are free but they have not made any recommendations that I am aware off.

Question: Is India gearing up to integrate into the manufacturing supply chain of the global economy

A- If your question is whether we are integrating Indian economy into the evolving global economy, yes, at a measured pace we are making every effort to open up the Indian economy recognizing full well the opportunities that exist in a globalised economy and also the risks that are inherent in throwing our economy to greater competition from abroad. So, we have to have a balance of interest in order to integrate our economy in the evolving global economy.

National Security Advisor (Shri Shivshankar Menon): As you know, Prime Minister received a call by the US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton this afternoon. It lasted about 45 minutes. The main topic discussed was actually President Obama's visit. Both sides were looking forward to the visit and were sure that it would be a historic visit which would enable us to add content to the strategic partnership and would also explore various ways, as Prime Minister just told you, of expanding the relationship in the various areas in which we cooperate together - whether political, whether security, whether economic and trade, commercial relations and in other areas.

Both sides expressed satisfaction at the state of preparations and looked forward to the conversations that will take place during the visit. Apart from the exchange on the visit itself which took most of the meeting, they also had a discussion about the situation in the region. Secretary of State Clinton mentioned to Prime Minister about the strategic dialogue that the US has just conducted with Pakistan, and about US determination to continue with their goals that they are presently pursuing in Afghanistan. She welcomed the work that India is doing to contribute to the reconstruction of Afghanistan.

That about sums it up. I will be happy to take one or two questions.

Question: Was China discussed?
National Security Advisor: No

Question: Was sharing of information discussed?
National Security Advisor: They spoke in general terms about counter-terrorism cooperation.

Question: Were the concerns that the US still has on the Nuclear Liability Bill discussed?
National Security Advisor: One of the things that we are working on certainly is, how we will carry our civil nuclear initiative forward. That is one of the issues which I think is being discussed by the Department of Atomic Energy with the US firms concerned. But those are practical discussions.

Question: Sir, can you please explain what this effort is to reduce the list of high-tech items with the US, and what are those high-tech items and how do they help India?

National Security Advisor: The US has a double system of export controls which is built up over the years whether in terms of crime control, regional stability concerns, nonproliferation, some are related to missile proliferation. In effect they categorise countries, and depending on your category you are cleared for certain levels of exports of high-tech goods or dual use goods. They also have a list of entities to which US companies cannot supply to or can only supply with a licence, if they are on the entities list. We have been discussing with the US how to amend the system, and the US has been very positive. This actually has been going on for some time, since 2005 when we set up high-technology cooperation group under the Foreign Secretary which has been discussing what to change, how to change. You know India has adhered to the NSG guidelines. After all we have a very good nonproliferation record. We have passed our own export control laws which more than meet international standards and in fact, in some respects are even higher. So, we have been arguing that, therefore, the older restrictions need to be changed. And the US agreed with us that these restrictions need to be brought in line with present reality. That is the exercise we have been engaged in. I think we have made considerable progress in that.

Question: During talks with the American Secretary of State, this issue of Pakistan ...(Inaudible)... has come up again and again? ...(Inaudible)... said we will gradually taper off defence supplies to Pakistan and we will sort of gradually start giving them only economic assistance. Is this something Americans are seriously considering particularly in the light of ...(Inaudible)...

National Security Advisor: Ask the Americans! First you are informing us of a fact. Then you are telling us what the Americans think. Ask the Americans! Where is the question?

Question: Sir, they have given naval aircraft. Are we going to speak to them about it?
National Security Advisor: For us, US arms to Pakistan which are not related to counter-terrorism certainly are an issue which we have discussed. The US knows our view. We have consistently made clear what we think about them.

Question: Sir, Foreign Secretary said that we may ask the US for setting up a legal mechanism to make more accountability of the aid which is given to Pakistan. Are we considering anything?

National Security Advisor: I am not going to comment on what Foreign Secretary said. We all speak for the same Government. She speaks for India too.

Question: Can you elaborate on that, Sir?

National Security Advisor: No, that is not fair.

Question: Sir, I wanted to ask whether we are going to finalise any agreement on the entities issues with the US during Obama’s visit.

National Security Advisor: As I said, this is a matter of US law and practice and regulations. This is not something that we do by an agreement between India and the US. We will reflect the state of our discussions with the US in the announcements that we make during the visit. I do not want to anticipate outcomes now. But as said this is primarily their own regulations, their own system which is being adjusted to reflect today’s reality. That is something we will do.

Question: In your talks with the Chinese side did you get a feeling that they are trying to force decisions, or they are going to stress on resolving the boundary issue?

National Security Advisor: I think we are both agreed that what we would like is a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable settlement of boundary question. Both Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Premier Wen Jiabao said that during the meeting of yesterday. It was quite clear. So, I do not think it is a question of either side trying to somehow force their views. Both want a mutually acceptable settlement.

Question: But he said that he wants his visit to be productive in what sense?
National Security Advisor: We would also like the visit to be productive.

Question: Sir, I just wanted to ask whether the meetings with the Japanese Prime Minister and Malaysia came up with ...(Inaudible)... several very strong remarks from China in the last couple of days.

National Security Advisor: No, they did not come up. There was not enough time. This was basically about the visit and the immediate region

080. Extract relevant to India-ASEAN and East Asia Summits from the Suo Motu Statement in the Lok Sabha by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on Prime Minister's visits abroad.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

8th India-ASEAN Summit & 5th East Asia Summit

16. Prime Minister visited Vietnam to attend 8th India-ASEAN Summit & 5th East Asia Summit.

17. The 8th India-ASEAN Summit on 30th October provided India with the opportunity to hold close consultations with our ASEAN colleagues on the progress of our relationship. Our ASEAN colleagues exuded warmth and friendship for India and expressed their desire to take our relationship to new heights.

18. As a rapidly growing economy, India offers to ASEAN the prospect of a productive economic relationship. An economically robust relationship between the two sides has enormous potential. Keeping this in view, a new and comprehensive India-ASEAN Plan of Action 2010-2015 was adopted at the Summit. The phenomenal growth of our trade during the last decade has inspired us to conclude a trade-in-goods agreement with ASEAN which has become operative from January 1, 2010. We hope to conclude the Trade-in-Services and Investment agreement soon to complete the ASEAN-India Free Trade Area, which will act as a catalyst to bring down the cost of production on both sides and further increase our
19. The leaders recognized the importance of connectivity to ensure free flow of goods and people through the region. In this connection, progress of ongoing projects in promoting North-east of India as the bridge to ASEAN, such as Trilateral Highway and its extension to Lao PDR and Cambodia, was reviewed by the leaders. The leaders acknowledged India's readiness to offer assistance in the forthcoming ASEAN ICT master plan to improve ICT connectivity. In addition to about 380 air-flights operating between India and ASEAN, the leaders encouraged the officials of both sides to conclude an India-ASEAN Air Transport Agreement at an early date.

20. Distinguished members of parliament would kindly recall that at the last Summit Prime Minister had proposed an India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit in India in 2012. I am happy to announce that the idea has met with a positive response from the ASEAN side. A series of events beginning with India-ASEAN Business Summit and Exhibition from March 2-6, 2010 are proposed to be held culminating in the Commemorative Summit. India and ASEAN have agreed to form an Eminent Persons Group, whose Terms of Reference were adopted at the Summit. The Eminent Persons Group will draft a new India-ASEAN vision 2020 document for presenting at the Commemorative Summit, taking into account the shift of global economic currents towards Asia in the 21st Century.

21. Prime Minister announced new initiatives in the field of people-to-people contacts, space cooperation, capacity building and Information and Communication Technology as a means to infuse more depth in our relationship. Specifically, the initiatives included extension of Visa-on-arrival facility to nationals of Cambodia, Vietnam, Philippines and Lao PDR from January 1, 2011, setting-up a Centre for Tracking and Data Reception and imaging facility in an ASEAN country, establishing Vocational Training Centres, and offer of 100 IT scholarships to each of the 10 ASEAN countries over the next 5 years. I am glad to say that these initiatives were welcomed and appreciated by the ASEAN countries.

22. Prime Minister also attended the 5th East Asia Summit on the same day. The East Asia Summit (EAS) mechanism provides India the forum to engage with a larger number of countries of the region in both strategic and economic spheres. This year marked the entry of US and Russia into the EAS process as 'guest of the host' with formal entry scheduled for 2011. We welcome their entry which, we believe, will add to peace and stability in the region and also enhance the ongoing cooperation. We appreciate ASEAN's efforts in piloting the Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia.

23. PM took the opportunity to brief his EAS colleagues on the progress made by India on the Nalanda University Project, including the passage of Nalanda University Act by this august parliament. The unanimous passing of the Nalanda University Bill by both the houses reflected our desire to revive the historical legacy of this world center of learning and education.

24. Madam Speaker, we were able to drive our agenda of regional integration with success. We will work on all the potential ideas, which have been shared with us for implementation, with re-doubled effort and take our relationship with ASEAN and East Asia to new heights.

ASEM

081. Media Briefing by Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy on Vice-President M. Hamid Ansari’s visit for ASEM Summit.

New Delhi, October 1, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. As you are aware, Vice-President Hon. M. Hamid Ansari will be leaving for Brussels on the 3rd for the Eighth ASEM Summit. Secretary (East) Ms Latha Reddy is here to brief you about the visit. She is also joined by two of our colleagues. I would like introduce them. To my left is Mr. P. Harish, Joint Secretary to Vice-President. To the right of Secretary (East) is Mr. Suresh Reddy our Joint Secretary (MER).

Secretary (East) would be making an opening statement and thereafter would be happy to take a few questions pertaining to the visit of the Vice-President to Brussels for ASEM. May I invite Secretary (East) to make her opening remarks?

Secretary (East) (Ms Vijaya Latha Reddy): Thank you all friends for coming for this briefing.

As you all know, Hon. Vice-President is visiting Brussels from 3rd to 5th October to lead the Indian delegation to the Eighth Summit of the Asia-Europe Meeting more commonly known as ASEM. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Ansari. Official Delegation will include senior officials from the Ministry of External Affairs and the Vice-President's Office.

On the 4th October, the programme of the Summit will begin with the usual welcome ceremony and the opening ceremony followed by closed session for the leaders. There will be a working dinner on the 4th of October. The Financial and Economic Governance will be the theme of the first session as well as during the working dinner. Hon. Vice-President will address the first Plenary Session on 4th October itself on the subject - Financial and Economic Governance.

The following day, Tuesday the 5th October, we have three closed sessions and a working lunch where all leaders discuss the remaining themes which are: Sustainable Development, Global and Regional Issues, and People-to-People Visibility and the Future of ASEM. In other words there are three sessions - Sustainable Development, Global Issues, Regional Issues, and the last session would be People-to-People Visibility and Future of ASEM.

A reception will be hosted for all ASEM leaders by His Majesty King Albert II of Belgium on 5th October at lunch time at 12:30. On the evening of 5th October around 4:45 p.m. there will be the Closing Ceremony.

As is usual Hon. Vice-President will also have bilateral engagements on the sidelines of the Summit. He will certainly be meeting with the President of the European Council Mr. Herman Van Rompuy, and with the Prime Minister of Belgium Mr. Yves Leterme. We are also in the process of finalizing several bilaterals with the other leaders, which are in the process of being worked out. We will issue further updates on this in due course.
The overarching theme of the Summit itself is Achieving Greater Wellbeing and Dignity for all Citizens. The short theme is Quality of Life. To be specific, as mentioned, the four sub-themes or agendas we have already gone over - (1) Financial and Economic Governance; (2) Sustainable Development; (3) Global Issues; (4) Regional Issues; and (5) People-to-People Visibility and Future of ASEM. The Chair's Statement and a Statement on Effective Global Economic Governance are the two documents which are expected to be issued at the conclusion of the Summit.

This is the second summit level participation for India. The Summit will witness expansion of ASEM membership further and will welcome three new partners - Australia, New Zealand and Russia who will be attending the ASEM Summit for the first time. Our high-level participation at ASEM 8, as this meeting is known, will reaffirm the importance we attach to carrying forward ASEM process through its cooperation, discussions and activities.

ASEM brings together 27 European Union members and the European Commission from the European side, and from the Asian side it has ten ASEAN members and six other countries - China, India, Japan, Mongolia, Pakistan and South Korea. The six other countries are under a subgroup called NESA which stands for North, East and South Asia. Australia, New Zealand and Russia will now join ASEM at Brussels. With this combination of 27 European Union partners, the ten ASEAN, the six members of NESA, the three new members, the European Union, and the ASEAN Secretariat, the total number will now come to 48.

The ASEM process itself is underpinned by three pillars which are political, economic, and the social, cultural and intellectuals pillars. The dialogue under the political pillar is carried forward mainly through the biennial ASEM Foreign Ministers' meetings and the biennial summits. In other words, with a summit taking place once every two years and a Ministerial taking place once every two years, there is an annual high-level meeting of ASEM leaders.

These meetings focus on major global issues on the international agenda including terrorism, weapons of mass destruction, nonproliferation, climate change, migrations, dialogue of cultures and civilizations, and human rights. These are under the political pillar. Under the economic pillar we focus on issues relating to WTO, trade facilitation and trade security, trade and development, regionalism and multilateralism, information and communication technology, investment issues. The third pillar - the social, cultural, intellectual pillar - focuses on promoting closer people-to-people contacts through cultural, artistic, educational activities and exchanges involving particularly the young people and students from the two regions.

Other Ministerial meetings are held including Economic Ministers' meetings, Finance Ministers' meetings, Culture Ministers' meetings, Education Ministers' meetings, and Environment Ministers' meetings.

ASEM is a unique framework which brings Asia together with Europe on one platform for cross-continental dialogue and cross-fertilization of ideas on a wide range of topical issues. One of the objectives of ASEM is to focus on issues in which it can add value to ongoing processes in other multilateral frameworks.

ASEM not only offers a platform to the leaders for informal dialogue on topical issues but also helps to shape the international policy agenda. Given our growing stakes both in Asia and in Europe there are obvious advantages to India for being a member of ASEM particularly in terms of trade and investment facilitation.

It may be of interest to all of you to note that ASEM members together account for more than 40 per cent of the world's population; 50 per cent of global GDP; and 60 per cent of world trade. Twelve ASEM countries figure among the top 25 trading partners of India. We see this as a valuable forum for our bilateral and multilateral cooperation.

I also would like to simply touch on one subject. There have been some issues highlighted by the organizers of the conference, hosts Belgium, as well as the European Commission and the European Union. What they talk about is that priority number one would be moving towards more effective global financial and economic governance.

The last ASEM incidentally was held in Beijing in October 2008, which was attended by the Prime Minister. That was the first summit level meeting attended by India, as we were only just before that admitted as members of ASEM. ASEM initially started with just the EU and ASEAN and slowly went on to admit other countries.

Because they have identified as priority number one Effective Global Financial and Economic Governance, they also decided to adopt a separate declaration on this subject rather than to include it in the Chair’s Statement which is traditionally the only document that issues. The second in the order of priority has been subject of sustainable development. Again, they feel that this is important because of the Beijing meeting there was a declaration on sustainable development which needs to be reviewed and monitored.

In the third session they wish to concentrate on a number of global issues of great concern. These, as I have already mentioned, will include the fight against terrorism and organized crime, elimination of acts of piracy at sea, reversal of the proliferation of WMD and delivery system. And they will talk about disaster management and relief assistance.

The fourth topic in regional issues will concentrate on several regions or sub-regions of interest in both Europe and in Asia. I am sure that they would talk about political developments in countries or relationships between individual countries which have been problematic both in Asia as well as in Europe. Finally they wish to talk about fostering cooperation between civil societies in all our countries. That is where we would have the people-to-people segment which I mentioned as the fifth subject.

There will also be side by side a Parliamentary partnership meeting, a business forum, a people’s forum, and a civil society event put together by the Asia-Europe Foundation which is called ASEF. This is centred in Singapore and India is a also contributor to ASEF.

The main issue is that the draft statement will finally issue which I think will express the collective wisdom of all the 48 leaders who have gathered. There is also going to be a very impressive exhibition called A Passage to Asia which is at the Palais de Bozar in Brussels, which will be visited by all the leaders on the 5th evening. While the exhibition has several exhibits from India - India has a very visible presence there - it has many other contributions from other Asian countries as well.
I think that is the end of my presentation. If there are any questions, I will be happy to take them.

Question: Why the Vice-President and not the PM?

Secretary (East): I think the Prime Minister at the moment will have obligations in connection with the Commonwealth Games and his commitments here. And the timings were coinciding. That was the reason.

Question: Can you elaborate a bit on the elimination of acts of piracy at sea? What is India looking at?

Secretary (East): It is not just India. This would have to be a collective decision by all the European countries and all the Asian countries. Draft language is currently under discussion. In fact, at one stage there was an idea to have a separate document on piracy at sea. But it was also felt that a proliferation of documents may not really serve the purpose. So, we will be actually having senior officials’ meetings over Saturday and Sunday where some of the documents will be discussed and further negotiated. And that is where each country would raise its concerns and try to modify or renegotiate certain language. But there is no doubt that all Asian countries and all European countries at this meeting have been seriously affected by the piracy at sea question. So it remains a matter of concern.

Question: What was the motivation behind a grouping of this kind?

Secretary (East): The rationale for the establishment of ASEM itself was to balance relations between the three engines of the global economy which were seen as America, Europe and Asia. America and Europe have strong trans-Atlantic links. America has links with East Asia through APEC and now of course they also will become a part of the East Asia Summit in October. But there was no framework for linking all of Europe with major countries in Asia. This is the only sort of regional or multilateral forum that exists to link the two regions. I think thus ASEM was initially seen as an initiative to complete the missing part of this triangle. The formation of ASEM is also seen as motivated perhaps by some fears of a protectionist movement in Europe and the European reaction to APEC which they were not part of. So, this was seen as a forum that could eventually develop to include both regions.
Question: What is the format of this organization? Does it have a Secretariat anywhere? Secondly, there is a multiplicity of organizations like G74, G20, G8. Does this organization not undermine the authority of the United Nations? ...(Unclear)... And what are the regional issues which would be discussed in this?

Secretary (East): I think as far as ASEM is concerned it does not have a Secretariat. It is regarded as a much more informal forum where leaders can come together to discuss issues of importance. There are four Coordinators of ASEM. One each for the European Union and the European Commission - they do it jointly - on the European side; and ASEAN and NESA on the Asian side. So, you would have the EU Coordinator, you would have the EC Coordinator, you would have the ASEAN Coordinator, and you would have the NESA Coordinator.

Question: Who is the Coordinator for NESA?

Secretary (East): The Coordinator at the moment is Republic of Korea. The four Coordinators essentially hold regional meetings among their respective groups. Then the Coordinators hold a special meeting to put things together before the Summit. Therefore, the draft which we are discussing is already the combined wisdom of the four Coordinators who have in turn consulted all their members. But even so, individual countries would then be free to comment later. ASEM, therefore, works you can say through the European and the Asian sides coordinating among themselves through their respective Coordinators. So, we had a coordination meeting, for example, with the NESA. That was in Cambodia, which was attended by our side, and the NESA leader would then carry that to the coordination meeting which was later held.

The other question I think is a philosophical question. This could be asked of any multilateral or regional organization - does it take away from or does it enhance the UN? I think that each organization has its own place. I think people are very conscious of the fact that whatever we say in one organization should not be at odds with what we say overall in the umbrella organization which is the UN. In the UN because of the number of countries involved the articulation of certain common positions becomes I think harder than in certain regional groups. I think we have found some regional groups more active and more purposeful than others. But at the same time I think we have to participate in any major regional group where leaders from other major countries in Asia are participating. India cannot be seen as not participating in those groups. And where we see there is a value to India, where our voice will be heard, where what we say matters, I think we should participate in these regional groups, while we do not neglect either the bilateral relations with individual countries which is very important for us or the overall multilateral framework of the United Nations. I believe there is space for all these different mechanisms to function side by side.

Question: Ms Reddy, between the 2008 Beijing meeting and now what has been the progress on the declaration, the intent of the declaration which was there?

Secretary (East): I think this is partially what the meeting will be doing. They will review the progress over the last two years as to whether we have met the goals that were set at the Beijing meeting, and whether some of these goals need to be carried over for their forward planning as well. But I do not think there has been a systematic review yet of what have been the achievements between 2008 and 2010.

Question: Madam, you said that someone from Pakistan will be attending the Summit. Is there any possibility of having a meeting with the Pakistan's representative?

Secretary (East): We have no confirmation on those bilateral meetings yet.

Question: Are you prepared if Pakistan raises the Kashmir issue again as they have done in the UN?

Secretary (East): I think we will cross that bridge when we come to it.

Question: Who is the representative from Pakistan?

Secretary (East): Under their list of confirmed representatives as of date, it would be the Foreign Minister Mr. Qureshi. It was originally the Prime Minister Mr. Gilani. But I understand that because of the flood situation in Pakistan it will now be Mr. Qureshi.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.
I thank the Chair for this opportunity to address you. When we last met in Beijing in October 2008, we discussed the international financial and economic crisis and agreed on the imperative need to properly handle the relationship between financial innovation and regulation and to maintain sound macro-economic policy.

Today, we are faced with a new challenge - how to ensure global growth amidst debt sustainability concerns, especially in some of the Eurozone countries. Fragile economic recovery and weak private demand in developed economies has meant that while dealing with such sovereign debt problems we must give utmost priority to fiscal consolidation. Yet, a cookie-cutter would not work and a differentiated strategy would need to be crafted to take into account the special circumstances of each country.

International trade and investment thus offers an important route forward towards non-inflationary and sustainable global economic recovery. Developing economies are focusing on increasing domestic demand, especially through enhanced infrastructure investment. We therefore need to facilitate for this purpose enhanced multilateral and private capital flows to developing economies.

A recent OECD-WTO-UNCTAD Report on G-20 Trade and Investment Measures has noted that the potential for non-transparent and discriminatory application of emergency measures remains a serious challenge. It highlighted the need for governments to be vigilant in opposing protectionism, and devise and publicly announce exit strategies from emergency trade restrictive measures, to ward off protectionist pressures seeking to make them permanent.
Excellencies

Neither sustainable global economic recovery nor growth in developing economies would be possible if the new non-traditional methods of protection continue as part of stimulus and emergency support measures, mainly in the developed economies, for extended periods of time.

The fact that some of these measures are focused on services and manufacturing sectors where developing economies tend to have a comparative advantage, adds to the problem.

Needless to say, we believe a successful completion of the Doha Development Round would be a strong signal and provide a growth impetus to the global economy.

Excellencies

We in India have addressed the crisis through an effective fiscal and monetary stimulus and have contained its impact on our economy. We have had a real GDP growth of 8.8 per cent that was broad-based for the first quarter of 2010-11. Yet, this is lower than the average level of growth experienced earlier. We are gradually reversing the fiscal stimulus and propose to halve the fiscal deficit by 2013-14.

Our approach is thus in step with the overarching theme of ASEM 8 which is "Achieving greater well being and more dignity for all citizens". We are focused on an inclusive growth and development process that seeks to encompass all geographic and demographic segments, especially those who are marginalized, and we look forward to working in close consultation with our partners in ASEM.

Thank you.

084.  Briefing by Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy on Vice-President's Bilateral Meetings in Brussels.

Brussels, October 4, 2010.

Secretary (East) (Ms Vijaya Latha Reddy): Dear friends, thank you all for being here and I apologise for the delay in coming to speak to you. As you all know, the Hon'ble Vice-President arrived yesterday with most of you in Brussels. Today, the programme began at 9:50 a.m. with the meeting between Hon'ble Vice-President and the President of the European Council Mr. Herman Van Rompuy. They both reviewed the state of India-EU relations, which they described as strategically important. Mr. Van Rompuy said that they were looking forward to the India-EU Summit to be held in December in Brussels. As I said, they both said that it was a strategic partnership. Mr. Van Rompuy also said that he had met with our Prime Minister on the sidelines of the Nuclear Summit earlier this year in Washington and they had exchanged views.

Both Hon'ble Vice-President and the President of the European Council expressed happiness on the larger areas of convergence in EU-India positions on many important issues. One particular issue that was touched upon was our shared values on democracy and pluralism. There were discussions on the Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement. Both leaders expressed the hope that substantial progress can be made in the near future. Mr. Van Rompuy also explained the present economic situation in the different European States. Both leaders discussed the need for greater parliamentary exchanges to create bodies of positive public opinion on both sides.

Hon'ble Vice-President described the European Union as a unique achievement. Mr. Van Rompuy pointed out that the EU had gone very far in its task of uniting 27 countries of Europe. The introduction of the common currency in Eurozone countries was one of their big achievements. They are now concentrating on economic and budgetary issues. They are looking forward to engaging with emerging Asian powers including India. The European Union has 22 per cent of world GDP and over 500 million people, and remains an important global player.
I think these were the main issues that were discussed between both sides. I will ask the Ambassador Mr. Jaimini Bhagwati if he would like to add anything on India-EU relations as a background perhaps for all of you.

Indian Ambassador in Brussels (Mr. Jaimini Bhagwati): Maybe it makes more sense to do it in terms of response to questions. If you just finish the three bilaterals and in the course of questions if somebody wants elaboration I could do that.

Secretary (East): Certainly. I think that would be excellent. If we could go on to the Finnish Prime Minister's meeting with our Hon'ble Vice-President, the Finnish Prime Minister Mari Kiviniemi expressed her happiness at the state of India-Finland bilateral relations. Both leaders reviewed the bilateral relationship and particularly the notable presence of Finnish investment in India with several high profile companies operating there. The Finnish Prime Minister welcomed Indian investment in Finland. She outlined several areas where she felt there could be some cooperation, particularly in clean technology, renewable energy, ICT, forestry and education. Our Vice-President said that there was enormous scope for investment in India both from our own national sources as well as through foreign investment. They both reviewed the situation on the international financial crisis, and exchanged views on India and Finland's respective strategies which had dealt with the issues.

The Finnish Prime Minister acknowledged the positive role played in the global recovery by the relatively higher growth rates in Asian countries. Regarding the ASEM Summit, it was felt that the economic, trade and growth agenda were very important for this meeting. The Finnish Prime Minister referred to the need for more political exchanges between ASEM countries. Both leaders exchanged views on climate change.

Hon'ble Vice-President said that decisions have been taken already and we need to implement those decisions. These include the UNFCCC, the Kyoto Protocol, and the Bali process, which remain the basis for international negotiations. We see Copenhagen as a political message which does not detract from the ongoing negotiating process. We cannot sidestep obligations which have already been agreed to internationally. Commitments made at the Kyoto Protocol remain unimplemented. At the same time, the process of development in developing countries cannot be retarded. India has made national commitments on climate change to be implemented on a voluntary basis. On the international financial crisis both leaders agreed that economic recovery should not be at the risk of growing protectionism and that growth in trade was itself necessary for economic recovery. These were the main issues covered in the meeting between the Finnish Prime Minister and Hon. Vice-President.

The last bilateral held this morning was between the President of Latvia Dr. Valdis Zatlers and Hon'ble Vice-President. They reviewed the state of our bilateral relations which remain problem free. The President of Latvia informed Hon'ble Vice-President that Latvia would be celebrating special events for the 150th birth anniversary of Rabindranath Tagore next year. The Hon'ble Vice-President asked the Latvian President to brief him on the situation in Eastern Europe which he did. On the bilateral front the Latvian President suggested that food-processing, timber, pharmaceuticals and IT are possible areas for cooperation. He also invited more Indian students to come to Latvia for studies. Both leaders discussed the need for reform in the United Nations in various areas.

I think these were some of the main issues discussed in the bilateral meetings this morning. As you all know, in the afternoon there would be the ceremonial welcome by His Majesty the King for all the world leaders attending the Summit. Thereafter, there would be the formal opening ceremony which will then be followed by the first session which starts at five o'clock. The Session will be on economic and financial governance. Hon'ble Vice-President will be presenting a statement at that time.

This would be the programme for today. The first session would continue till seven o'clock. It is also expected that there would be a brief meeting with the Prime Minister of Malaysia during the break. Then they go straight into a working dinner where discussions continue on the same subject.

I hope to give you another briefing later tomorrow. We will try and work it out at a convenient time tomorrow afternoon where we will bring you up to date on what has happened in the intervening period. I hope this is satisfactory. Thank you. Should we take some questions? Any particular issues?

Question: I was just wondering on what basis were these bilaterals with the Finnish and the Latvian leaders chosen? Now the Malaysian leader is also going to meet the Vice-President. Was it because these were seen as somewhat strategically important? What was the reason that these out of the 40 Heads of State and Government are chosen?

Secretary (East): I think it is a question of what requests were received, how much time is available. As you can imagine, with 48 Heads of State here there are a lot of meetings going on. We also anticipate there will be a fair number of exchanges with other leaders in terms of pull-asides or informal interactions during the social events, the working dinners, lunches, coffee breaks and the reception to be hosted this evening as well as tomorrow afternoon. I think there would be opportunities to exchange views with many leaders. But these were the structured bilaterals that were set up. I think it was inevitable that there would be bilateral meetings with the President of the European Council and the President of the European Commission as also the host country Belgium. I think others would evolve as we go along.

Question: Is a meeting with President Barroso fixed?

Secretary (East): Again it would be a brief meeting tomorrow in one of the breaks but yes, there is one anticipated for tomorrow.

Question: You said that there were discussions with President Van Rompuy about the FTA. Was there any indication about when we might have an in principle agreement, in time for the Summit in December?

Secretary (East): Both sides said that we need to work hard at achieving agreement and I think there was a sense that the negotiations are progressing well, better than before. I think there is a spirit of optimism. That is as far as we can say at the moment.

Question: Any request from Pakistan for a bilateral?

Secretary (East): Nothing so far.

Question: We asked this yesterday also. Do you expect them to make any noise?
Secretary (East): We have finished the Senior Officials’ Meeting. The issues which were discussed were those on the agenda. No new issues were raised.

Question: Could you just give us a flavor of ASEM? Senior Officials I think have finalized the draft and all.

Secretary (East): Certainly. It is still at the draft stage, so the actual Chair’s statement would only be released at the time of the actual adoption. I think that in itself is a good indication. The document has been under negotiation for a long time. It is usually a Chair’s Statement, but it issues with some detailed consultations between members. A lot of it is online. We have had a preparatory officials’ meeting earlier this year also in Brussels. I am sure you would find a lot of material on the ASEM 8 website itself. I would direct you all there for some of the background on what were the main areas of interest. I can also inform you that there was a communication addressed jointly to the Hon’ble Vice-President of India as well as other leaders by Mr. Herman Van Rompuy the President of the Council; Mr. Yves Leterme, the Prime Minister of Belgium; and Mr. Jose Manuel Barroso, President of the European Commission on the eve of the Summit. This was sent to all the leaders, outlining what would be the main areas of interest. As I said also in my briefing in Delhi, they said their priority number one would be moving towards more effective global financial and economic governance.

They did say that they felt that ASEM 8, the present summit, should display the resolve and unity of Asia and Europe on pursuing the reform of financial regulation and supervision aimed at strengthening our financial institutions. They also said that we should send signals on the modernization of the international financial institutions taking account of the needs of today’s world economy and of the shifts that have taken place as a result of strong growth in dynamic emerging markets and in developing economies. This is why they also felt that apart from the Chair’s Statement there should be a separate declaration entitled ‘Towards More Effective Global Economic Governance’.

The other very important subject they outlined was that of sustainable development. This would be addressed in the second session on the second day, Tuesday on 5th October. Following up on the Beijing Declaration on Sustainable Development, they emphasized the need to agree to concrete actions that clearly express our resolve. They also talked about the need to promote non-distorting market policies and incentives leading to the adoption of more sustainable forms of goods and services production. I think they also mentioned that another area which would be important would be environmental protection with the aim to develop a message to move forward on negotiations on biodiversity and, of course, looking forward to the climate change negotiations in Cancun.

In the third session they were going to talk about global issues which we will be discussing. And this is the fight against terrorism and organized crime, the elimination of acts of piracy at sea, and the reversal of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and delivery systems. Again it was felt that this is an area where ASEM, considering its geographical scope and the flexibility of its mechanisms, could be instrumental in achieving better cooperation.

They are going to look at several regional issues which will be outlined in the final draft statement. I think you will have to await the release of that because some of these issues are still under discussion though a lot of progress was made in the Senior Officials' Meeting towards achieving an agreed text. As we all know, it is not over till it is over. I think it will be formally adopted at the last session on Tuesday. So, that would be formally released to the media and to the public only at the close of the session which would be on the 5th evening I believe at about five o'clock or so.

Finally, they want to boost exchanges among European and Asian civil country representatives and leaders. That is why they have the Parliamentary partnership meeting, the business forum, a peoples' forum and a civil society event, as well as the exhibition "Passage to Asia."

I think this give you in a very broad sense what are the areas of interest, what will we be talking about in the Chairman's Statement and what will we be saying in the Declaration Towards More Effective Global Economic Governance.
IBSA–BRIC–RIC

085. Media Briefing by Secretary (Economic Relations) and Secretary (West) on Prime Minister's Visit to Brazil for IBSA and BRIC Summits.

New Delhi, April 9, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to all of you. As you are aware, Prime Minister would be leaving tomorrow for Washington to attend the Nuclear Security Summit. Thereafter, on the 14th he would be reaching Brasilia to participate in the IBSA and BRIC Summits.

We have here Secretary (ER) Shrimati Parbati Sen Vyas to brief you on the Prime Minister's visit to Brasilia for the BRIC Summit. To her right is Secretary (West) Mr. Vivek Katju, who would be briefing you about Prime Minister's participation in the IBSA Summit. Let me introduce another colleague Joint Secretary (MER) Mr. Vinod Kumar, who is to the right of Secretary (West). First, Secretary (ER) would be making her opening remarks and next Secretary (West) would be making his opening remarks. May I request Secretary (ER) for her opening statement?

Secretary (ER) (Shrimati Parbati Sen Vyas): Thank you Vishnu and good afternoon to all of you. I would like to brief you on the Second BRIC Summit that will take place during Prime Minister's visit to Brasilia. Prime Minister is leading the delegation to the Summit in Brasilia on 16th April. He will be accompanied among others by Commerce Minister, Principal Secretary to Prime Minister, National Security Advisor and other senior officers from the Prime Minister's Office and the Ministry of External Affairs. The delegation is still a bit fluid and some more people may join.

You would be aware that the first standalone BRIC Summit was held in Russia in Yekaterinburg last year in June. Prime Minister of India and Presidents of Brazil, China and Russia had attended. The Second Summit in Brasilia begins on the 16th morning with a meeting of the leaders in a restricted session. This will be followed by a 45-minute long plenary session.

The agenda of the Second BRIC Summit includes discussions on the international financial and economic crisis, the G20 related matters, climate change, UN reform, regional issues including Iran, the Middle East and Haiti, and a general follow-up of the dialogue of BRIC countries. It is expected that a joint statement will be issued at the conclusion of the Summit. A BRIC statistical publication is also expected to be issued at the end of the Summit meeting. The plenary session will be followed by a press conference.

Prime Minister may also meet some of the other leaders on the sidelines of the Summit for bilateral discussions. As I mentioned, National Security Advisor is a part of the delegation. This will be the second meeting of the BRIC High Representatives of Security, the National Security Advisors. This will be on 15th April. It is expected that NSA may also hold bilateral strategic dialogues with Brazil and perhaps with some of his other counterparts, i.e., the Russian and Chinese NSAs. You might recall that the first meeting of BRIC NSAs was held in Moscow also in May 2009.

In addition to these government-to-government meetings there are several other outreach events planned on the sidelines of the second summit. Prime Minister of India had proposed setting up a BRIC Business Forum at the First Summit. Following that proposal a joint IBSA and BRIC Business Forum will be held in Rio on 14th April. From the Indian side, FICCI, CII and ASSOCHAM are participating. Commerce and Industry Minister Shri Anand Sharma will address the closing session of the Business Forum.

In addition to the Business Forum there will be meetings of commercial and development banks of the BRIC countries. The meeting of commercial banks is in Sao Paulo on 13th and 14th April. Chief Economists of the banks have been invited. Representatives of Bank of India and HDFC Bank among others are expected to participate. The meeting of development banks is also taking place in Rio. As of now the CMD of Exim Bank of India is attending the meeting. We hope, we expect other development banks will also participate. Brazil is also hosting a Track-II seminar of BRIC think-tanks. The participants from India are scholars from the ORF, RIS, ICRIER and IIM Ahmadabad.

I will conclude with some brief highlights regarding the background of BRIC. As you are aware, Foreign Ministers of the BRIC countries had first met on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in September 2006. Since then they have been meeting annually on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly. A standalone meeting of the Foreign Ministers was held in Yekaterinburg in May 2008. BRIC Finance and Economic Ministers have been meeting regularly. This has been found particularly useful especially in the context of the world economic and financial crisis. Finally, the first BRIC Agriculture Ministers meeting was held recently in Moscow on 26th March to discuss cooperation in the agricultural field. I think I will stop there and perhaps take some questions later. Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: May I invite Secretary (West) to please make his opening remarks?

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): The IBSA Summit would be held on the 15th afternoon. The Prime Minister will be leading our Delegation and he will be accompanied by, as for the BRIC Summit, the Commerce Minister, the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister, the National Security Advisor, and other officials. The Summit will be attended by President Lula da Silva of Brazil and President Jacob Zuma of South Africa. The format will be a restricted meeting and thereafter a plenary meeting.

Just to give you some background about IBSA, you might recall that the IBSA grouping was formalised as the IBSA Dialogue Forum at a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of India, Brazil and South Africa in June 2003. Thereafter, three Summits have been held. This would be the fourth Summit. The First IBSA Summit was held in Brazil in September 2006; the second in South Africa in October 2007; and the third in New Delhi in October 2008.

The IBSA Dialogue Forum has been conceived as a mechanism to promote intensive and comprehensive dialogue between the three countries that, as you know, occupy a significant place not only in their respective regions but also globally. Thus cooperation within IBSA was conceived as cooperation both at the governmental level and at the level of civil society. The structure of governmental level cooperation consists of, apart from the Summit, a trilateral Commission which meets at the level of the Foreign Ministers and meetings of the Trade Ministers. In addition, there are sixteen Working Groups covering the entire spectrum of the relationship. To give you an example, there are Working Groups in transport, in the filed of energy, in trade and investment, in health, in science and technology, information society, in public administration, in social development, etc. We have a list of these sixteen and to those of you who are interested, we will be happy to give these.
At the level of civil society there are dialogue forums for interaction between parliamentarians, academics, the media, business and women among others. The purpose of the dialogue at both governmental as well as civil society levels is to exchange ideas, adopt strategies and if possible common positions which are relevant not only to the three countries but to the developing world as a whole.

Prior to the IBSA Summit on the 15th, we will have the meeting of two working groups in Brasilia. These are the Working Groups on energy and science and technology. There will also be meetings of six civil society, or people-to-people fora. These are the Parliamentary Forum for which there will be Members of Parliament from India who would be taking part; the Academic Forum, the Business Forum. The Business Forum would meet along with the BRIC Forum. That will be the first exercise of its kind. This would be at Rio de Janeiro on the 14th. There will also be an Editors’ Forum, a Women's Forum, and a Round Table on Inter-governamental Relations and Local Governance. In addition there will be a meeting of the three nations on small business. You will observe that prior to the Summit there is a Comprehensive Dialogue which is going to take place.

The discussions that would take place in the different fora will be reported to the leaders during the plenary. The plenary will be followed by a press conference. On this occasion there may be the signing of a few trilateral MoUs. We expect that there will be an MoU on solar energy and on science and technology that will be signed on the occasion of the Summit. There are other MoUs under consideration. For example, an MoU for cooperation in the field of sports and cooperation among the diplomatic academies of the three countries. These MoUs at the moment represent work in progress.

The Women’s Forum has been working on a publication which is entitled Towards an Inclusive Macro Economic Framework - A South-South Feminist Approach. It is expected that this would be launched during a post-summit press conference.

There has been progress in cooperation since the last Summit, the Summit in Delhi. Exchange of ideas within the Working Groups has been taking place. Some of these have resulted in MoUs or in concrete projects. In other cases ideas continue to be discussed between the three countries. Workshops too have been held under the aegis of these sixteen Working Groups.
Finally, IBSA has been undertaking projects in other developing countries and this is part of the IBSA Trust Fund. These projects are managed by the UNDP. This is a novel initiative of IBSA in the spirit of South-South cooperation. Currently the IBSA Fund projects are going on in seven countries. In the wake of the recent earthquake in Haiti there had been an announcement to develop more projects in that country. The space agencies of the three countries have also been working for cooperation in the field of space sciences. A concept paper has been developed for a weather space satellite and discussions are in progress in this area.

The last point I wish to make is that these three countries are separated by fairly substantial distances and connectivity is important. We have been working for better connectivity, whether it be surface route or air connectivity. I will stop at this moment. Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: The Secretaries will be happy to take a few questions pertaining to Prime Minister's visit to Brasilia for the IBSA and BRIC Summits.

Question: My question is addressed to Secretary (ER). Madam, BRIC is possibly the only institution of its kind in the world in the sense that the idea was thrown up by something and the Heads of Government have been meeting regularly and so on. Is there any effort to institutionalise BRIC as such? Secondly, there have been suggestions that it should be expanded. Indonesia is the likely candidate and South Africa is known to have expressed an interest in joining BRIC. Is there any move to admit more members and expand BRIC?

Secretary (ER): On institutionalizing BRIC, as you said yourself, it started as an economic modeling exercise about the future economic trends and this acronym was picked up by actually the then Russian President who directed that the Foreign Ministers should meet. It has this economic basis. If you remember, the Goldman Sachs paper says the world needs more economic BRICs. So, these are the four emerging developing countries. It is still in a nascent stage, I would say. Unlike the IBSA which is an older grouping and has this pattern which is based on south-south cooperation, this is still in a nascent stage but has acquired its particular importance in view of the world economic and financial crisis. In this context the meeting of the BRIC Finance Ministers and the leaders has acquired a very special significant. Therefore, I should say over the years it has become well-known, even fairly popular let us say. As you rightly said, there are some countries wanting to join. The decision will naturally be taken by the leaders of the four countries themselves. Nothing has been decided yet about new members. It is still, as I said, in a nascent stage. It needs to have perhaps more of a substantive agenda before it can either be institutionalized, especially the Summit. This is just the Second Summit. I would say the Foreign Ministers’ meeting has become something of an institution, the one on the sidelines of the UNGA summit every year. That has been taking place since 2006. I hope that answers your question.

Question: Are the applications of new members under consideration? How many countries are exactly interested in joining?

Official Spokesperson: Secretary (ER) has already explained the position. She has just mentioned that this matter will evolve in the course of time. So, it is premature so to say, to address that question at this juncture.

Question: Are any bilateral meetings scheduled?

Secretary (West): There will be a bilateral meeting of the Prime Minister with the President of Brazil on the 15th morning. That will provide an occasion to the two leaders to go over the entire spectrum of the bilateral relationship which, as you know, is very substantial.

Question: Could you tell us which bilaterals are scheduled in Washington? The White House has already announced the Obama-Manmohan Singh meeting. If you could tell us, we can plan ahead.

Official Spokesperson: I believe that a few bilaterals are being contemplated and being worked out during Prime Minister’s stay at Washington. As the bilaterals are firmed up, we will be very happy to share the details with you.

Question: This question is addressed to Madam Secretary. ...(Inaudible)... about China’s currency valuation which India has been getting some ...(Inaudible)... Secondly, can you give us any detail about some of the non-financial, economic ...(Inaudible)...under discussion like climate change?
Secretary (ER): I just mentioned that there will be a general discussion of the world financial and economic situation. Apart from the non-governmental meetings, the BRIC and IBSA Business Forum would be an important Forum to work out synergies in the area of trade and investment. Apart from that if you actually see the four countries it is a very interesting mixture of two energy producers and two consumers who do not have so many natural resources in the field of energy. So, it is possible to work out partnerships for acquiring energy supplies. As I said, it is still at a nascent stage but the very anchor of this grouping is the economic grouping, the economic development issues. I had mentioned the agenda items. Of course there will be a discussion on climate change. It is on the agenda. In the economic side climate change is the most important agenda item.

Question: What about non-economic issues?

Secretary (ER): Part of the agenda will discuss regional issues which is Middle East, Haiti and Iran. Apart from that there is the UN reform. These are the main agenda items.

Question: China’s currency?

Secretary (ER): It is not on the agenda. It could come in, as I said, the international and financial crisis. But it is not on the BRIC agenda.

Question: Secretary, you mentioned that there could be an MoU in the field of sports. Could you elaborate and throw some light on it?

Secretary (West): All three countries are, as you know, going to host very significant sporting events. So, that will be one aspect of the MoU that is under discussion. The other aspect is coaching. I think all three countries have great strengths in different sports. There is a discussion going on of how we can complement each other when it comes to these sports. There is some discussion on sports facilities. It is a fairly wide-ranging MoU. Because it is under discussion, I think I will limit myself to these three points.

Question: My question is addressed to Mr. Vishnu. It is expected that an Indo-Pak bilateral will be held on the sidelines of the NSS in Washington. What may be the major ...(inaudible)... agenda has been prepared...
Official Spokesperson: Thank you for the question. As I said, Prime Minister is expected to have a number of bilateral engagements. We are in the process of finalising the arrangements, the meetings. We will be most happy to share with you the details as soon as the meetings and bilaterals are finalised.

Question: This is actually meant for Vivek. Ten-fifteen years ago before IBSA was born there was a study done by a banking institution that if we use South African ports to export our goods to South America, we will be able to save 40 per cent of the trade cost and all that. Now IBSA has come into existence. But you still have a problem getting to Brazil from here and flights to South Africa are not all that conveniently available and so on. Has any work been done on this?

Secretary (West): I think that is a very valid question. About fifteen years ago distance was a psychological impediment. But it is our experience that it is no longer so. Indian trade with the South American region as a whole has been expanding. There is still great potential. But if one takes the last decade for instance, it has gone up from about a billion and a half dollars to something like nine billion dollars today. Even more encouragingly, Indian investments are growing. Today, with the approach and the attitude that our business has South America is no longer a remote place. I think if there is an impediment it is in the minds of those who are not involved in business. For business people it is an area where they are very good which only brings me to this fact that connections are increasing. But as I mentioned in my opening remarks, there is need to enhance connectivity and that is a matter of special focus for the three countries.

Question: Madam, does the BRIC have a formal position on the way forward on the Iranian nuclear issue?

Secretary (ER): There are lot of similarities and commonalities, as you know, amongst the BRIC countries on various global issues. On Iran, I would say that this is the first time it has been a focused agenda item. Let us see how it evolves. Let us see what the discussions are about. Question: On the Middle East also is it the first time that BRIC will be talking about Middle East?
Secretary (ER): I think in general terms it has been referred to. But now it is an agenda item in the leaders' meetings.

Secretary (West): If I may add, I think within the IBSA format too there would be a focus on the situation in West Asia.

Question: On the issue of UN reform, is any consensus likely to emerge in the Summits?

Secretary (ER): Again this is interesting. There are two members who are already permanent members of the UN Security Council and two aspirants. But we do have a common formulation already extending support for the aspirations of India and Brazil. In other matters, in general terms that the international organisations in the world should be more democratic, more inclusive, the voting rights should be more inclusive, and more voting rights for the developing countries in view of the fact that the world has changed so much since 1947 when these institutions were set up, there is a great deal of commonality. In fact, I would say that the grouping is based on this common attitude towards the reform of the UN institutions including the international financial institutions.

Secretary (West): As far as IBSA is concerned there is consensus that the United Nations must reflect contemporary realities. Two of the three IBSA countries - India and Brazil - are part of the G4. South Africa is not part of this grouping. But there was great cooperation between the G4 and South Africa over the past few months in urging the facilitator at the United Nations in New York to come up with a negotiating text for inter-governmental negotiations to take place on UN Security Council reform in the informal plenary of the General Assembly. I think there is one more significant point on UN reform in the sense that it is the G4 position that there has to be expansion both in the permanent and the non-permanent categories in the UN Security Council. South Africa shares that view as part of the African position.

Question: I would like to direct this question to Secretary (West). Is the Prime Minister going to raise the issue of nuclear cooperation with both Brazil and South Africa? They are both members of the NSG and both have expressed willingness to supply us uranium. Is that going to be on the PM's agenda?
Secretary (West): There is no specific focus on civil nuclear cooperation. You are right, both countries have supported us in the past. But during this Summit there is no specific focus as yet. But when the leaders meet and discussions take place, who can predict what will emerge?

Question: Sir, in Brazil when NSA meets his Chinese counterpart will the boundary issue come up?

Secretary (ER): We cannot say yet about the agenda. In fact, I am not even sure that this particular bilateral with China on the sidelines of the Summit has been agreed to yet. But certainly we will keep you informed.

086. Statement by the Prime Minister prior to his departure for USA for the Nuclear Security Summit and Brazil for the IBSA and BRIC Summits.

New Delhi, April 9, 2010.

I am leaving tomorrow to attend the Nuclear Security Summit being hosted by President Barack Obama in Washington DC, and the India-Brazil-South Africa (IBSA) and Brazil-Russia-India-China (BRIC) Summits being hosted by President Lula da Silva in Brasilia.

India welcomes President Obama’s initiative to hold a Summit on Nuclear Security. Nuclear energy is poised to play a growing role in addressing the developmental challenges of our times. This will be possible only if we, as individual nations, and as a global community ensure the highest standards of security which reinforce public faith in the benefits of nuclear science. India is an important stakeholder in this global endeavour.

I expect the Summit to focus on nuclear terrorism and the security of sensitive nuclear materials and technologies. These are legitimate concerns which require firm responses. India has a well developed indigenous nuclear energy programme, which dates back six decades. We have an impeccable record of security, safety and non-proliferation which reflects our conduct as a responsible nuclear power.
India has been a consistent advocate of complete and universal global nuclear disarmament. We were among the first countries in the world to call for a world free of nuclear weapons. I am encouraged by the fact that this approach is finding greater resonance today. We will continue to call for more meaningful progress in this direction.

During my stay in Washington I look forward to having bilateral meetings with President Obama, President Nazarbaev of Kazakhstan, President Sarkozy of France, Prime Minister Harper of Canada and other world leaders.

From Washington, I will proceed to Brasilia to attend the fourth IBSA Summit and the second BRIC Summit. These groupings reflect the growing role of emerging economies in shaping the global economic order.

The IBSA process has come of age. Today, it encompasses a wide range of activities which supplement the excellent bilateral relations we enjoy with each of these countries. Our coordination on important international issues has expanded, and our trilateral cooperation is beginning to bear fruit in many sectors.

The BRIC countries are among the largest and fastest growing economies with rich human and material resources. They represent the future of the global economic landscape. We have a high stake in the revival of the global economy, an open trading system, energy security, combating climate change and addressing non-traditional threats to international security.

I will also hold separate bilateral discussions with President Lula da Silva. Relations with Brazil are an important pillar of our policy towards Latin America and have witnessed substantial expansion in recent years.

In Brasilia I will also have bilateral meetings with President Hu Jintao of China and President Dmitry Medvedev of Russia.
86-A. Press Statement of IBSA Forum on the occasion of the election of India, Brazil and South Africa as non-permanent members of UNSC.

New York, October 12, 2010.

The Permanent Representatives of India, H.E. Mr. Hardeep Singh Puri; Brazil, H.E. Ms. Maria Luiza Ribeiro Viotti; and South Africa, H.E. Mr. Bosi Sangqu have taken note of the historic occasion in 2011 in which all three IBSA countries will serve in the UN Security Council following the election of India and South Africa to the Security Council as non-permanent members on 12 October 2010, and the election of Brazil in 2009.

The Representatives noted that as countries from the global South, India, Brazil and South Africa will, as a highest priority, promote the principles and objectives of the South on the UN Security Council including to work to make the Security Council more transparent in its working methods.

The Permanent Representatives reiterated the statement issued by the Ministers of IBSA on 25 September 2010, during the General Debate of the 65th Session of the General Assembly, in which IBSA reaffirmed its commitment to multilateralism and to increased participation of developing countries in the decision-making bodies of multilateral organisations and institutions. In this regard, IBSA reiterated the urgent need for the UN to be reformed so as to become more representative and reflective of the needs and priorities of developing countries, specifically the UN Security Council.

In this context, the Permanent Representatives reiterated the call of the IBSA Ministers for the urgent need to expand the Security Council in both its permanent and non-permanent categories, in order to increase participation of developing countries. This will make the UNSC more broadly representative, efficient and transparent and would also enhance its effectiveness and legitimacy, as well as the implementation of its decisions.
The Permanent Representatives again stressed their firm commitment to collaborate in the Security Council with the aim of making the Council more responsive and transparent in the execution of its mandate. The Permanent Representatives committed themselves, and their delegations to enhance cooperation in the Security Council on all priority agenda items. One such priority area will be to promote and enhance the Security Council’s cooperation with regional organizations, particularly the African Union’s Peace and Security Council.

Brasilia, April 15, 2010.

President Lula, President Zuma and I have just concluded a very useful round of discussions on our multi-faceted cooperation under IBSA, and on several important global issues. I thank President Lula and the Government and people of Brazil for hosting the Summit and other meetings preceding the Summit.

The IBSA framework has become the embodiment of South-South Cooperation. In a period of seven years, when the idea of establishing IBSA was first discussed, IBSA has moved from strength to strength.

This is our fourth Summit, and marks the commencement of the second cycle of Summits. We have developed an institutional structure for enhancing our trilateral cooperation in areas such as agriculture, science and technology, energy, economic cooperation, transportation, ocean research and space science.

Promotion of people-to-people interaction and greater mutual awareness of each other is the hallmark of IBSA. The several forums and Working Groups that have met here for the past few days strengthen my belief that we are proceeding in the right direction of strengthening civil society interface among our countries. IBSA is largely a peoples project. The collaborative activities within the IBSA framework hold immense promise for our people.

IBSA countries have rich experience of consulting each other on global issues. We have worked together on trade, development and climate change issues. We share similar views with regard to the reform of global institutions of governance. We are united by the primacy we accord to development and issues such as food security, social inclusiveness and energy security.

IBSA has entered a phase of consolidation. In this Summit we have agreed to focus our efforts on the implementation of the various initiatives we have launched under the IBSA framework. We have issued a Joint Declaration that spells out our common approach on global issues confronting our societies.

I firmly believe that IBSA has developed into a vibrant organisation, and will continue to play an important role in global affairs.

Thank you.

088. Joint Communiqué issued by the Ministers of the IBSA countries on the Situation in the Middle East.

Brasilia, April 15, 2010.

On the occasion of the Fourth IBSA Summit, in Brasilia, on April 15th 2010, the Ministers of Brazil, India and South Africa met with the Palestinian Foreign Minister Riad Malki

2. The Ministers indicated that India, Brazil and South Africa, as members of the IBSA Forum, are convinced that a comprehensive peace in the Middle East is crucial, not only for the peoples and countries of the region, but also for the international peace and security.

3. In line with the relevant UN Resolutions, the Madrid principles, the Road Map and the Arab Peace Initiative, the IBSA countries call for the urgent resumption of negotiations that will lead to a two-state solution, with the creation of a sovereign, democratic, independent, united and viable Palestinian State, coexisting peacefully alongside Israel, within secure, pre-1967 borders, with East Jerusalem as its capital.

4. They note that a comprehensive Arab-Israeli peace process, including between Israel and Palestine, must reach concrete progress on all tracks and reiterate their support to efforts aimed at reactivating talks between Israel, Syria and Lebanon. An enlarged participation of the international community in this endeavour, including developing countries with good relations with all parties, could bring a fresh perspective to the peace process, and IBSA countries will actively support this process.

5. The IBSA countries strongly urge the Israeli government to freeze all settlement activity in the occupied Palestinian territories, including "natural growth", and to reverse its decision to advance planning for new housing units in East Jerusalem. Concerned by the continuing deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Gaza, they also call on Israel to alleviate circulation restrictions on the movement of people and goods, both in Gaza and in the West Bank. In addition, they expressed deep concern at the issuance by Israel of Military Order 1650.

6. Conflicts in the Middle East remain essentially political in nature and cannot be resolved by force. The IBSA countries therefore call upon all actors not to pursue policies, measures and actions that inflict damage and suffering, particularly to civilians.

7. They express support for mediation efforts with a view to reaching domestic Palestinian reconciliation and urge all interested parties to contribute to that purpose. They call on the international community to contribute, on a sustained, concrete and urgent basis, to the state-building efforts undertaken by the Palestinian National Authority, recalling the IBSA readiness to continue its commitments in this regard.

8. IBSA countries will continue consultations on the matter.

Brasilia, April 15, 2010.

The Prime Minister of the Republic of India, H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, the President of the Federative Republic of Brazil, H.E. Mr. Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva, and the President of the Republic of South Africa, H.E. Mr. Jacob Gedleyihlekisa Zuma (hereinafter referred to as “the Leaders”) met in Brasilia, Brazil, on 15 April 2010 for the 4th Summit of the India-Brazil-South Africa (IBSA) Dialogue Forum.

2. The Leaders highlighted that the three countries’ commitment to democratic values, inclusive social development and multilateralism constitutes the basis for their growing cooperation and close coordination on global issues. They noted that a first round of IBSA Summits of Heads of State/Government (Brasilia, 2006; Tshwane, 2007; New Delhi, 2008) has strengthened the three countries resolve to continue to work for enhancing the role of developing countries, increasing the interchanges amongst themselves with the participation of their peoples, and for implementing concrete projects in partnership with other developing countries.

3. Recalling the Declarations and Communiqués issued during the previous Summits, they took the opportunity to deliberate on the topics hereunder.

Global Governance

4. The Leaders reaffirmed their commitment to increase participation of developing countries in the decision-making bodies of multilateral institutions. They also reiterated the urgent need for the reform of the United Nations (UN) to render it more democratic and consistent with the priorities of developing countries. They particularly emphasized that no reform of the United Nations will be complete without a reform of the UN Security Council (UNSC), including an expansion in both permanent and nonpermanent categories of its membership, with increased participation of developing countries in both. Such reform is of the utmost importance for the UNSC to reflect geopolitical realities and to have the representativeness and legitimacy it needs to face contemporary challenges. They committed to keep close coordination amongst the three countries and the broader UN membership to achieve substantial progress in the intergovernmental negotiations on UNSC reform presently underway in New York. They recalled that an overwhelming majority of the UN member states agreed to proceed with a fifth round of intergovernmental negotiations based on a negotiating text.

5. The Leaders stressed the need to reform the Bretton Woods Institutions in order to increase their effectiveness and enhance their accountability, credibility and legitimacy. They stressed the importance of increasing the role of developing countries in these institutions.

The social dimensions of globalization

6. The Leaders reaffirmed that people must come first in the formulation and implementation of public policies, allowing for fair, equitable and sustainable development. They considered this issue a relevant priority in the context of an increasingly globalized world, in which the economic and financial crisis, and the restructuring of the international financial architecture that ensued, directly affect the welfare of people, particularly of vulnerable groups. In this regard, they stressed the need to strengthen social policies and to fight hunger and poverty, especially in times of global economic crisis.

7. The Leaders also reiterated the need to promote a job-intensive recovery from the downturn and create a framework for sustainable growth. In this context, they underlined their support for the global jobs pact, adopted by the 98th session of the international labour conference, which, while demonstrating the linkages between social progress, economic development and recovery from the crisis, offers policy options adaptable to national needs and circumstances. The Leaders also reaffirmed that their actions in response to the crisis are guided by the International Labour Organization (ILO) decent work agenda and the 2008 declaration on social justice for a fair globalization.

Gender

8. The Leaders stressed the importance of empowering women, increasing their participation in economic activities and addressing the negative impact of the international financial crisis on their situation. They received with satisfaction a letter from the IBSA Women's Forum and instructed all areas of government involved in IBSA cooperation to pay due attention to its recommendations. In addition, the Leaders reiterated their support for the full implementation of UN Resolution 1325 (2000). They also recalled the importance of formulating and implementing appropriate policies and programs in accordance with the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) and the Beijing Platform of Action.

Human Rights

9. The Leaders attached the highest priority to human rights issues and acknowledged the positive advance represented by the creation and functioning of the Human Rights Council. They noted the importance of their close collaboration therein. They expressed their hope that the 2011 review will result in a further strengthening of the Council.

10. They also emphasized the need to continue to strengthen international human rights law, norms and standards, particularly in the area of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in accordance with the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

11. The Leaders welcomed the adoption of an IBSA proposal in the Human Rights Council related to the importance of access to medicine (A/HRC/RES/12/24).

Intellectual Property Rights

12. The Leaders recognized that innovation plays a central role in addressing the key global challenges of our times such as food security, poverty eradication, health, access to knowledge and climate change. They emphasized, in this context, the need for a balanced international intellectual property system capable of meeting those challenges on a truly global scale and reducing the technological gap. To that effect, they called for the full implementation of the Development Agenda of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO).

13. They warned against attempts at developing new international rules on enforcement of intellectual property rights outside the appropriate fora of WTO and WIPO, that may give free rein to abuses in the protection of rights, the building of barriers against free trade and undermining fundamental civil rights.

14. They further expressed renewed concern about the continuous application of enforcement measures that allow seizures of generic medicines in transit to developing countries, in violation of World Trade Organization (WTO) rules and posing a serious threat to developing countries access to medicines.

Internet Governance

15. The Leaders reaffirmed their commitment to working together towards a people-centered, inclusive and development-oriented Information Society and their agreement to continue to coordinate positions for the World Summit on Information Society (WSIS) follow-up mechanisms, as well as in the other fora and organizations related to the Information Society and Information and Communication Technologies (ICTs).

16. The Leaders highlighted the importance of building a wide political concertation at international level for making the global internet governance regime as multilateral, democratic and transparent as provided by the WSIS. They recognized the advances reached by the multistakeholders participants in the international dialogue on internet governance in the last five years. They recalled, with satisfaction, the fruitful coordination amongst IBSA countries and the efforts of Brazil and India for hosting the second and third editions of the Internet Governance Forum, held in Rio 2007 and Hyderabad 2008, respectively.

Climate Change

17. The Leaders reiterated the importance of a positive result for the current climate change negotiations at the 16th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and the 6th Conference of the Parties serving as the meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, in Mexico. They stressed that the result should be reached in an inclusive and transparent manner, and should effectively address the challenge of climate change, in accordance with the principles of the UNFCCC, especially the principles of equity and common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. They urged developed countries to take ambitious action to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions, and to provide adequate international financing and transfer of technology to support the efforts of developing countries to mitigate and adapt the impacts of climate change.

Sustainable Development

18. The Leaders stressed the importance of promoting sustainable development. They welcomed the resolution of the UN General Assembly to convene a Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) in Rio de Janeiro, in 2012. They called for a comprehensive preparatory process, to ensure that the Rio+20 Conference can adequately address existing implementation deficits and emerging issues in sustainable development, with a view to further strengthening international cooperation in this field.

Trade

19. The Leaders stated that a positive outcome of the Doha Round of trade talks within the World Trade Organization would be instrumental in economic recovery, particularly in job creation, as international trade experiences its sharpest decline in many decades. A development oriented, balanced and successful conclusion of the Round at an early date would bolster the credibility of the multilateral trading system in the face of increased protectionist pressures. In this respect, they expressed their concern over the excessive demands made on some developing countries without any indication of adequate additional concessions in favour of developing countries.

20. They recalled, with satisfaction, the First Trilateral MERCOSUR-SACU-India Ministerial Meeting held in Geneva on November 30th, 2009 and expressed their confidence that trade agreements and ongoing negotiations between MERCOSUR and India, MERCOSUR and SACU and SACU and India will lead to a future Trilateral Trade Arrangement which would form the largest trade agreement in the developing world.

21. The Leaders welcomed signs of recovery from the global financial and economic crisis. They however remained concerned over the consequences of the crisis for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. They recalled the vital contribution made by developing countries to the global recovery. The Leaders underlined that developed and developing countries should continue to coordinate approaches and responses to the crisis in order to achieve sustainable and balanced recovery. They stressed that global economic efforts have to respond to the needs of developing and low income countries, particularly in Africa. The Leaders recognized that the impact of the crisis has been severe in many developing and low income countries. They welcomed pledges to increase IMF resources and Multilateral Development Bank (MDB) lending, and called for the urgent implementation of all commitments in meeting the needs of low income countries, including the Gleneagles commitment to double aid to Africa to $50 billion by 2010. They called for a substantial increase in the capital base of the World Bank, so that it could sustain enhanced levels of lending. They agreed to enhance cooperation between India, Brazil and South Africa in relevant international fora where recovery efforts are being considered.

Disarmament and Non-Proliferation

22. The Leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons in a comprehensive, universal, non-discriminatory and verifiable manner, and expressed concern over the lack of progress in the realization of that goal. They underlined the need for reducing the role of nuclear weapons in strategic doctrines and expressed their support for effective international agreements to assure non-nuclear weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. The Leaders expressed support for an International Convention Prohibiting the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Nuclear Weapons, leading to their destruction. They reiterated that nuclear disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation are mutually reinforcing processes, requiring continuous irreversible progress on both fronts.

Terrorism

23. The Leaders condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purposes, as it constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security. They regretted and condemned the recent attacks in India that resulted in the loss of innocent lives. The Leaders of Brazil and South Africa offered condolences to the government and the people of India. The three Leaders also encouraged cooperation among States and regional organizations. In this regard, they emphasized the urgent need to finalize the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism and called upon all states to cooperate in resolving outstanding issues with the objective of an expeditious conclusion of negotiations and adoption of this Convention. They note that the fight against international terrorism must be done with full respect to the UN Charter and International Law.

Peace-building Commission Review

24. The Leaders recognized the central role played by the United Nations Peacebuilding Commission (PBC) in the establishment of the foundations for sustainable peace in countries that are on the verge of or emerging from conflict and express their intention to join efforts and coordinate positions in the context of the PBC review process.

South-South Cooperation

25. Welcoming the outcome of the UN High-Level Conference on South-South Cooperation (Nairobi, December 2009), the Leaders concurred that South-South cooperation is a particular and essential instrument for development. Developing countries tend to share common views on national development strategies and priorities when faced with similar development challenges. In the three decades since the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, technical cooperation amongst developing countries has evolved to embrace all forms of development cooperation. In this context, developing countries have designed and implemented technical cooperation projects, based on their own capabilities, aimed at the promotion of effective actions and policies for social and economic progress. These include the sharing of knowledge and experiences, training, technology transfer, financial and monetary cooperation and in-kind contributions.

26. The Leaders recalled that South-South cooperation is a common endeavour of peoples and countries of the South, a partnership among equals, and must be guided by the principles of respect for national sovereignty, national ownership and independence, equality, non-conditionality, non-interference in domestic affairs and mutual benefit. Therefore South-South Cooperation should not be seen as aid, nor should developing countries engaged in South-South cooperation be perceived as donors and recipients. They expressed the view that the United Nations system needs to better adapt to support the growth of South-South cooperation.

The IBSA Facility Fund

27. They noted with appreciation that people and authorities of Haiti, Palestine, Guinea-Bissau, Cape Verde, Burundi and Cambodia are benefiting from projects being undertaken under the IBSA Facility Fund. They reiterated the continued commitment of India, Brazil and South Africa to each contribute with at least US$ 1 million per year to the Fund. They also concurred that cooperation through the IBSA Fund is a concrete gesture reflecting their political determination to contribute to the development of other developing countries in the spirit of South-South Cooperation.

Regional Issues

Haiti

28. They reaffirmed their solidarity with the Haitian people and with the Government of Haiti at these most trying times. They called upon international community to unite and coordinate, under the Leadership of the United Nations and of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), to align strong international support to the national priorities set forth by the Government of Haiti. They commended MINUSTAH for ensuring a secure and stable environment in Haiti and effectively coordinating international aid. They recognized that MINUSTAH has a critical role to play in the reconstruction phase and reaffirmed their full support for the Mission and the United Nations agencies. They also commended the UN Development Programme (UNDP) for the results achieved so far in implementing "cash for work" programs.

29. Leaders recalled the IBSA resolve to contribute additional US$ 2 million to the reconstruction of Haiti. They agreed that the solid waste management project in Carrefour Feuilles, a successful initiative supported by IBSA, in partnership with local authorities and UNDP, should be expanded to other areas in Haiti, deepening on the expertise accrued since 2006. They also noted with appreciation that the Haitians involved in the project got back to work soon after the tragedy, testifying that the dedication of the people of Haiti will be at the core of the reconstruction effort.

Chile

30. The Leaders expressed their condolences to the Government and people of Chile for the tragedy caused by the earthquake that struck South-Central Chile on February 27, 2010, and expressed their willingness to support the Chilean efforts for overcoming the effects of the tragedy.

Iran

31. The Leaders recognized the right of Iran to develop nuclear programs for peaceful purposes in keeping with its international obligations. They called upon Iran to fully cooperate with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and comply with the relevant UNSC resolutions. [They reiterated the need for a peaceful and diplomatic solution of the issue].

Afghanistan

32. The Leaders expressed concern at the continuing deterioration of the military and political situation in Afghanistan, the growth of terrorism, including cross-border terrorism promoted by Taliban and al Qaeda, and its links with international terrorism. They reiterated, in this context, that a coherent and a united international commitment, both in its developmental and security/military aspects, remained of paramount importance. In this context, they also emphasized the need to strengthen the Afghan National Security Forces. They agreed to continue to cooperate and coordinate their efforts to impart greater strength to the process. They reaffirmed their commitment to a democratic, pluralistic and stable Afghanistan. They underlined the centrality of the regional aspect in the reconstruction and development process in Afghanistan. The Leaders condemned the terrorist attack targeting Indian humanitarian and development workers in Kabul on February 26, 2010.

NEPAD/AU structure

33. The Leaders welcomed the 2010 decision of the AU Assembly to further integrate the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) into the AU structures and the re-naming of the NEPAD Secretariat to the NEPAD Planning and Coordinating Agency (NPCA). The Leaders took note that the NPCA will focus on taking further the programmes of the AU by translating decisions of the AU Assembly and the AU Executive Council into tangible projects and programmes for the Regional Economic Communities (RECs) to implement. They further took note that the NPCA’s mandate now includes the coordination and monitoring of such programmes and projects amongst the RECs and member states.

34. The Leaders recognized that the further integration of NEPAD as well as the augmented mandate of the NPCA will promote a more holistic and coordinated approach to infrastructural development and in the growth and development of Africa, which will benefit the attainment of NEPAD’s identified priorities in such sectors as ICT, energy, water and sanitation and transport.

Guinea-Bissau

35. The Leaders expressed their concern about the recent military incidents in Guinea-Bissau. They urge the military and political leadership to uphold the constitutional order and resolve differences through peaceful dialogue in order to ensure the progress recently achieved by Guinea-Bissau in the ongoing process of consolidation of peace and democracy. The Leaders hope that these events do not jeopardize the engagement of international partners in the International Donor Conference expected to take place in 2010. They highlighted the role of the United Nations Peacebuilding Commission, and confirmed their commitment to continue to support, through concrete actions of cooperation, the efforts of the Guinean Government to consolidate the political and institutional stability, building the basis for sustainable socio-economic development. In this context, they took note with satisfaction that the IBSA Project in Guinea-Bissau has entered its second phase, distributing tools for farmers and organizing literacy classes for women living in rural areas, in coordination with national authorities.

Republic of Guinea

36. The Leaders acknowledged progress made by the Republic of Guinea in its efforts towards normalisation of the political environment since the signing of the Ouagadougou Accord on 15 January 2010. They welcomed the appointment of the Transitional Authority led by a civilian Prime Minister. The Leaders encouraged the Transitional Authority to hold the Presidential elections, as stipulated in the Ouagadougou Accord, scheduled for 27 June 2010 to be followed by the second round of the Presidential elections on 18 July 2010.

Madagascar

37. They noted with concern the current stalemate in the negotiation process to return Madagascar to constitutionality and endorsed the continuance of the SADC Mediator in his efforts towards the restoration of constitutional order and good governance in Madagascar, through an inclusive, transparent and credible dialogue. The Leaders called for the establishment of a Transitional Government and the holding of all inclusive, transparent, free and fair elections as envisaged by the Maputo and Addis Ababa Agreements.

Sectoral cooperation and People-to-People Fora

38. The Leaders noted that besides promoting increased consultation and coordination on global issues among the three countries, IBSA also provides for important sectoral cooperation and promotion of people-to-people contacts. The Leaders welcomed the effective interaction among specialists from the three countries, within the working groups on Agriculture, Environment & Climate Change, Culture, Defence, Education, Energy, Health, Human Settlements, Information Society, Public Administration, Revenue Administration, Science & Technology, Social Issues, Tourism, Trade & Investment, and Transport. Their activities have already resulted in the signing of a number of Memoranda of Understanding. Furthermore, seminars and workshops have been regularly undertaken and proven beneficial.

39. The Leaders noted with appreciation the organization and the outcome of the Women's Forum, the Parliamentary Forum, the Business Forum, the Editor's Forum, the Academic Forum and the Round Table on Inter-governmental Relations and Local Government Dialogue, which lay roots in the three societies. The Leaders also noted the cooperation among the three countries in the format of the Tri-Nations Summit of Small, Micro and Medium Enterprises.

40. The Leaders welcomed the signing of the Memoranda of Understanding on Science and Technology and Solar Energy. They noted with appreciation the adoption of the "IBSA Social Development Strategies"[and of the "Future of Agriculture Cooperation in IBSA"].

IBSA Satellites

41. The Leaders decided to the early development of satellites in the areas of space weather, climate and earth observation. These satellites will address common challenges in climate studies, agriculture and food security. The IBSA micro satellites aim to promote and strengthen space programs amongst the three countries.

Final remarks

42. They affirmed the importance of encouraging the dialogue among civilizations, cultures, religions and peoples. In this respect, they supported the "Alliance of Civilizations", a United Nations’ initiative aimed at building bridges, mutual knowledge and understanding around the world. They commended the Brazilian decision to host, in Rio de Janeiro, on May 2010, the 3rd Global Forum and confirmed their intention to be represented at an appropriate high level.

43. The Leaders expressed confidence in the success of the FIFA 2010 World Cup in South Africa, of the 2010 Commonwealth Games in New Delhi, of the FIFA 2014 World Cup in Brazil and of the 2016 Olympic and Paralympic Games in Rio de Janeiro. They recognized that hosting these events reflects the positive momentum of developing countries, and of the three countries in particular, and that they are potentially a tool for their social and economic development.

44. They decided that the VII Trilateral Commission will be held in India by the end of 2010. They also decided that South Africa will host the VIII Trilateral Commission and the V IBSA Summit of Heads of State/Government towards the end of 2011.

45. The Prime Minister of India and the President of South Africa expressed their gratitude to the President and the people of Brazil for successfully convening the 4th IBSA Summit.

I am particularly happy that we have this opportunity to meet on the eve of the elections for the UN Security Council non-permanent seats (for the period 2011-2012) at which India and South Africa are the sole candidates from their respective Groups. In a unique and fortuitous development, all three of our countries may have the opportunity to serve together in the Security Council from 1st January 2011. I would like to wish South Africa the very best. We hope to join Brazil in the Council from next year.

It is no coincidence that all three of our countries are key drivers behind the demand for greater democratization and reform of the UN system. I think we all agree that our collaboration should focus foremost on reform of the UN Security Council to make the organization representative of contemporary global realities.

UN Security Council reforms

Excellencies, our meeting assumes added significance as it is being held following the renewed momentum imparted to the reform process by the start of text-based negotiations from July this year. This was made possible by the demand from more than 140 countries for the launch of text-based negotiations. Our Missions here in New York played a commendable leadership role in mobilizing support for this demand.

India, Brazil and South Africa are important constituents of the L.69 Group on Council reform, besides being part of the G4 and African Groups which have been extremely critical to the reform process and will remain so.

We are aware of the sensitivities within the African Group on the matter. We are willing to go by South Africa's advice both in respect of strategy and tactics to progress the reform process.

As my South African counterpart is aware, the G4 Foreign Ministers met yesterday and had very useful and substantive discussions. We also issued a press statement. This forward looking statement explicitly supports the central role of Africa and the need for African representation in the permanent membership in an enlarged Council.

As we discuss modalities for enhanced cooperation, I would like to reiterate the need for us to remain steadfast in our demand for expansion of the Security Council in both permanent and non-permanent categories of membership. Any dilution in our principled position would weaken the movement for UN reform and strengthen the hands of those who favour the status quo.

It is my delegation's sincere hope that reform of the Security Council will be achieved by the end of the 65th session of the UN General Assembly so that IBSA countries could convert their short-term presence in the Council into a more permanent one.

Collaboration at the UNSC in 2011

With our shared values and ideologies and common priorities, the IBSA countries should be in a position to collaborate closely on major issues before the agenda of the Security Council. I would propose that our PRs remain in close contact to exchange ideas and coordinate positions.
In January 2011, the international community will have to address important developments in the Sudan. This is likely to be among the major issues that the Security Council would have to address. We need to coordinate our positions on this. South Africa has been playing an important role and we look forward to your wise counsel on the matter.

The Iran nuclear issue is another important matter that our three countries would have to deal with. We know that Brazil has been playing an active role in the Council and outside. India has substantial interests in the region and traditional friendship with Iran. This applies in large measure also to South Africa. Clearly we have a great deal of shared interests. Our delegations should coordinate positions on the matter.

Our three countries are also major peacekeeping nations. We have built up a large reservoir of experience and tools. We hold a lot of common positions on the matter. We look forward to exchanging views on this important area as well.

I would also advocate the establishment of a formal mechanism for institutionalized exchanges between our Foreign Ministries on UN issues, particularly those involving the Security Council.

I am eager to listen to your views and suggestions.

Thank you

093. Opening Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Plenary Session of the BRIC Summit.

Brasilia, April 15, 2010.

Your Excellency President Lula da Silva,
Your Excellency President Dmitry Medvedev,
Your Excellency President Hu Jintao,
Distinguished delegates,

I wish to convey my deep gratitude to His Excellency President Lula for hosting the BRIC Summit and for the warm hospitality extended to me and my delegation.

The holding of the second stand alone BRIC Summit represents the growing multi-polarity in the world.

In the short period of 10 months since our last Summit in Yekaterinburg we have made good progress. Our Foreign Ministers, Finance Ministers, Agriculture Ministers, National Security Advisers and Governors of Central Banks have met. The first BRIC Business Forum was held a few days ago, and several other side events have taken place.

We are four large countries with abundant resources, large populations and diverse societies. We together account for almost one-fifth of the world’s GDP. We aspire for rapid growth for ourselves and for an external environment that is conducive to our development goals. The people of our countries expect us to work together so as to bring the benefits of inclusive social and economic development to them.

Brazil has taken impressive strides in social inclusion under President Lula’s leadership, from which we can all learn. We in India have put in place massive schemes for social intervention such as the enactment of the National Rural Employment Guarantee Act and the Right to Education Act. We can each benefit by sharing our experiences in the field of inclusive growth.
Energy and food security are two specific areas where we can work together. Our grouping includes two of the largest energy producers and two of the largest consumers in the world. We can cooperate in both upstream and downstream areas, and in the development of new fuels and clean energy technologies.

Similarly, BRIC countries are both large producers and consumers of agricultural products. The meeting of our Agriculture Ministers is a welcome initiative. We should consider putting in place an architecture of food security that focuses on increasing agricultural productivity, better land use, sustainable farming practices and agro-processing.

Besides this, there is vast potential for cooperation in areas such as science and technology, trade and investment, pharmaceuticals and infrastructure. Investments in human capital will create new sources of growth.

BRIC countries have an important role to play in shaping the pace, direction and sustainability of global economic growth. I am glad to note that our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors have been meeting regularly. At our last Summit we had decided to commission a BRIC Study on which way the world economy will move in the period ahead. India has circulated the draft terms of reference for the study and we would be happy to carry this idea forward.

While it appears that the immediate global economic and financial crisis is behind us, it is still early to say that we are on the path of long term recovery. A lot will depend on how the developed economies fare. Sustainable recovery will also depend on several factors such as enhanced investment for infrastructure development, stable capital flows to the developing markets, appropriate macroeconomic adjustments, and avoiding complacency in the area of financial sector reforms. Financial inclusion will be a major determinant of success.

We should prepare for the forthcoming G20 Summits in Toronto and Seoul. Their outcomes need to be supportive of the post crisis-phase of the recovery process. This requires the avoidance of protectionism in all its forms, commitment to a fair and rule-based trading system, reform of international financial institutions and better regulation and supervision. Capital adequacy of international institutions should be ensured to fund development needs. Our Finance Ministers should be in regular touch with each other.

BRIC nations represent an important voice in the global climate discourse. Despite its shortcomings, the Copenhagen Conference did generate a broad understanding on several contentious issues. Our approach to the Cancun Conference should be anchored within the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Kyoto Protocol and the Bali Roadmap.

Technology will be a key element in our strategy to meet the challenge of climate change. Each of us has our own strengths in climate-friendly technologies. If we pool our best scientific and technological resources, BRIC nations can set a fine example in promoting collaborative development, deployment and dissemination of clean energy and renewable technologies.

BRIC countries are uniquely placed to contribute to reforming the architecture of global governance. A genuine reform of the Security Council by expansion in its permanent membership as well as non-permanent membership and improvement in its working methods is essential to make the United Nations reflective of contemporary realities.

Terrorism poses a special challenge to our development efforts. We should unite in our efforts to combat this scourge. We should also step up our cooperation in addressing other non-traditional threats to security.

The Joint Statement we will be issuing today along with the Follow-up document BRIC contain many ideas for expanding our cooperation. I am particularly glad that the scope of our activities is expanding, with a focus on greater people-to-people contacts. We should simultaneously strive for greater convergence of views on key global challenges.

In conclusion I wish to thank President Lula for his most able guidance and leadership in making this Summit a success.

Thank you.
094. Opening Remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during Media Interaction following the BRIC Summit.

Brasilia, April 15, 2010.

Your Excellency President Lula da Silva,
Your Excellency President Dmitry Medvedev,
Your Excellency President Hu Jintao,
Distinguished delegates,
Members of the Media,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I would like to join President Hu Jintao and President Medvedev in thanking President Lula for the excellent arrangements made for the second BRIC Summit.

I also take this opportunity to extend, on behalf of the people and Government of India, our deepest condolence on the devastating earthquake in China. I also offer our deepest sympathies to the victims of the recent mudslides in Brazil.

We have had a very successful Summit under President Lula’s leadership.

This is the second stand-alone Summit of the BRIC countries in less than a year. Our countries have gathered here today because we stand to gain from cooperation with each other, and because we believe that greater cooperation among us is also good for the world.

The BRIC grouping was not borne out of a crisis. It was an act of long term faith in our people and in our economies. However, the global economic and financial crisis has created a new relevance for BRIC.

Sustaining global economic recovery and making it inclusive would be the major challenges before us in the near term. With their internal economic strengths, BRIC countries have the potential to play a constructive role in contributing to world economic growth and prosperity. We are all part of the G20 process.

We have also had useful discussions on other issues of common interest. These include climate change, sustainable development, food security, energy security and reform of international financial institutions and of the United Nations.

We support a multipolar, equitable, democratic and just world order with the United Nations playing a central role in tackling global challenges.

I once again thank President Lula for hosting this Summit and the leadership he has consistently given to the BRIC process.

Thank you.

095. Joint Statement issued at the end of the II BRIC Summit.

Brasilia, April 16, 2010

We, the leaders of the Federative Republic of Brazil, the Russian Federation, the Republic of India and the People’s Republic of China, met in Brasilia on 15 April 2010 to discuss major issues of the international agenda as well as concrete steps to move forward the cooperation and coordination within BRIC.

We have agreed on the following:

Common Vision and Global Governance

1. We share the perception that the world is undergoing major and swift changes that highlight the need for corresponding transformations in global governance in all relevant areas.

2. We underline our support for a multipolar, equitable and democratic world order, based on international law, equality, mutual respect, cooperation, coordinated action and collective decision-making of all States.
3. We stress the central role played by the G-20 in combating the crisis through unprecedented levels of coordinated action. We welcome the fact that the G-20 was confirmed as the premier forum for international economic coordination and cooperation of all its member states. Compared to previous arrangements, the G-20 is broader, more inclusive, diverse, representative and effective. We call upon all its member states to undertake further efforts to implement jointly the decisions adopted at the three G-20 Summits.

We advocate the need for the G-20 to be proactive and formulate a coherent strategy for the post-crisis period. We stand ready to make a joint contribution to this effort.

4. We express our strong commitment to multilateral diplomacy with the United Nations playing the central role in dealing with global challenges and threats. In this respect, we reaffirm the need for a comprehensive reform of the UN, with a view to making it more effective, efficient and representative, so that it can deal with today’s global challenges more effectively. We reiterate the importance we attach to the status of India and Brazil in international affairs, and understand and support their aspirations to play a greater role in the United Nations.

5. We believe the deepened and broadened dialogue and cooperation of the BRIC countries is conducive not only to serving common interests of emerging market economies and developing countries, but also to building a harmonious world of lasting peace and common prosperity. We have agreed upon steps to promote dialogue and cooperation among our countries in an incremental, proactive, pragmatic, open and transparent way.

International Economic and Financial Issues

6. The world economic situation has improved since our first meeting in June 2009, in Ekaterinburg. We welcome the resumption of economic growth, in which emerging market economies are playing a very important role. However, we recognize that the foundation of world economic recovery is not yet solid, with uncertainties remaining. We call upon all states to strengthen macroeconomic cooperation, jointly secure world economic recovery and achieve a strong, sustainable and balanced growth. We reiterate our determination to make positive efforts in maintaining domestic economic recovery and promoting development in our own countries and worldwide.

7. We underline the importance of maintaining relative stability of major reserve currencies and sustainability of fiscal policies in order to achieve a strong, long-term balanced economic growth.

8. We are convinced that emerging market economies and developing countries have the potential to play an even larger and active role as engines of economic growth and prosperity, while at the same time commit to work together with other countries towards reducing imbalances in global economic development and fostering social inclusion.

9. G-20 members, with a significant contribution from BRIC countries, have greatly increased resources available to the IMF. We support the increase of capital, under the principle of fair burden-sharing, of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and of the International Finance Corporation, in addition to more robust, flexible and agile client-driven support for developing economies from multilateral development banks.

10. Despite promising positive signs, much remains to be done. We believe that the world needs today a reformed and more stable financial architecture that will make the global economy less prone and more resilient to future crises, and that there is a greater need for a more stable, predictable and diversified international monetary system.

11. We will strive to achieve an ambitious conclusion to the ongoing and long overdue reforms of the Bretton Woods institutions. The IMF and the World Bank urgently need to address their legitimacy deficits. Reforming these institutions’ governance structures requires first and foremost a substantial shift in voting power in favor of emerging market economies and developing countries to bring their participation in decision making in line with their relative weight in the world economy. We call for the voting power reform of the World Bank to be fulfilled in the upcoming Spring Meetings, and expect the quota reform of the IMF to be concluded by the G-20 Summit in November this year. We do also agree on the need for an open and merit based selection method, irrespective of nationality, for the heading positions of the IMF and the World Bank. Moreover, staff of these institutions needs to better reflect the diversity of their membership. There is a special need to increase participation of developing countries. The international community must deliver a result worthy of the expectations we all share for these institutions within the agreed timeframe or run the risk of seeing them fade into obsolescence.

12. In the interest of promoting international economic stability, we have asked our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to look into regional monetary arrangements and discuss modalities of cooperation between our countries in this area. In order to facilitate trade and investment, we will study feasibilities of monetary cooperation, including local currency trade settlement arrangement between our countries.

13. Recent events have shattered the belief about the self-regulating nature of financial markets. Therefore, there is a pressing need to foster and strengthen cooperation regarding the regulation and supervision of all segments, institutions and instruments of financial markets. We remain committed to improve our own national regulations, to push for the reform of the international financial regulatory system and to work closely with international standard setting bodies, including the Financial Stability Board.

International Trade

14. We stress the importance of the multilateral trading system, embodied in the World Trade Organization, for providing an open, stable, equitable and non discriminatory environment for international trade. In this connection, we commit ourselves and urge all states to resist all forms of trade protectionism and fight disguised restrictions on trade. We concur in the need for a comprehensive and balanced outcome of the Doha Round of multilateral trade talks, in a manner that fulfills its mandate as a "development round", based on the progress already made, including with regard to modalities. We take note and strongly support Russia’s bid for accession to the WTO.

Development

15. We reiterate the importance of the UN Millennium Declaration and the need to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). We underscore the importance of preventing a potential setback to the efforts of poor countries aimed at achieving MDGs due to the effects of the economic and financial crisis. We should also make sustained efforts to achieve the MDGs by 2015, including through technical cooperation and financial support to poor countries in implementation of development policies and social protection for their populations. We expect the UN MDG Summit, in September 2010, to promote the implementation of MDGs through policy recommendations. We stress that sustainable development models and paths of developing countries should be fully respected and necessary policy space of developing countries should be guaranteed.

16. The poorest countries have been the hardest hit by the economic and financial crisis. The commitments regarding the aid to the developing states, especially those related to the MDGs, should be fulfilled, and there should be no reduction in development assistance. An inclusive process of growth for the world economy is not only a matter of solidarity but also an issue of strategic importance for global political and economic stability.

Agriculture

17. We express our satisfaction with the Meeting of Ministers of Agriculture and Agrarian Development in Moscow, where they discussed ways of promoting quadripartite cooperation, with particular attention to family farming. We are convinced that this will contribute towards global food production and food security. We welcome their decision to create an agricultural information base system of the BRIC countries, to develop a strategy for ensuring access to food for vulnerable population, to reduce the negative impact of climate change on food security, and to enhance agriculture technology cooperation and innovation.

Fight against poverty

18. We call upon the international community to make all the necessary efforts to fight poverty, social exclusion and inequality bearing in mind the special needs of developing countries, especially LDCs, small islands and African Countries. We support technical and financial cooperation as means to contribute to the achievement of sustainable social development, with social protection, full employment, and decent work policies and programmes, giving special attention to the most vulnerable groups, such as the poor, women, youth, migrants and persons with disabilities.
Energy

19. We recognize that energy is an essential resource for improving the standard of living of our peoples and that access to energy is of paramount importance to economic growth with equity and social inclusion. We will aim to develop cleaner, more affordable and sustainable energy systems, to promote access to energy and energy efficient technologies and practices in all sectors. We will aim to diversify our energy mix by increasing, where appropriate, the contribution of renewable energy sources, and will encourage the cleaner, more efficient use of fossil fuels and other fuels. In this regard, we reiterate our support to the international cooperation in the field of energy efficiency.

20. We recognize the potential of new, emerging, and environmentally friendly technologies for diversifying energy mix and the creation of jobs. In this regard we will encourage, as appropriate, the sustainable development, production and use of biofuels. In accordance with national priorities, we will work together to facilitate the use of renewable energy, through international cooperation and the sharing of experiences on renewable energy, including biofuels technologies and policies.

21. We believe that BRIC member countries can cooperate in training, R&D, Consultancy services and technology transfer, in the energy sector.

Climate Change

22. We acknowledge that climate change is a serious threat which requires strengthened global action. We commit ourselves to promote the 16th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the 6th Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, in Mexico, to achieve a comprehensive, balanced and binding result to strengthen the implementation of the Convention and the Protocol. We believe that the Convention and the Protocol provide the framework for international negotiations on climate change. The negotiations in Mexico should be more inclusive, transparent, and should result in outcomes that are fair and effective in addressing the challenge of climate change, while reflecting the principles of the Convention, especially the principle of equity and common but differentiated responsibilities.
Terrorism

23. We condemn terrorist acts in all forms and manifestations. We note that the fight against international terrorism must be undertaken with due respect to the UN Charter, existing international conventions and protocols, the UN General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relating to international terrorism, and that the prevention of terrorist acts is as important as the repression of terrorism and its financing. In this context, we urge early conclusion of negotiations in the UN General Assembly of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism and its adoption by all Member States.

24. Brazil and China express their sympathy and solidarity with the people and Governments of Russia and India which suffered from recent barbaric terrorist attacks. Terrorism cannot be justified by any reason.

Alliance of Civilizations

25. We affirm the importance of encouraging the dialogue among civilizations, cultures, religions and peoples. In this respect, we support the “Alliance of Civilizations”, a United Nations’ initiative aimed at building bridges, mutual knowledge and understanding around the world. We praise the Brazilian decision to host, in Rio de Janeiro, in May 2010, the 3rd Global Forum and confirm our intention to be present at the event, in appropriate high level.

Haiti

26. We reaffirm our solidarity towards the Haitian people, who have been struggling under dire circumstances since the earthquake of January 12th, and reiterate our commitment to gather efforts with the international community in order to help rebuilding the country, under the guidance of the Haitian government, and according to the priorities established by the Action Plan for National Recovery and Development of Haiti.

Cooperation

27. We welcome the following sectoral initiatives aimed at strengthening cooperation among our countries:

a) the first Meeting of Ministers of Agriculture and Agrarian Development;
b) the Meetings of Ministers of Finance and Governors of Central Banks;

c) the Meetings of High Representatives for Security Issues;

d) the I Exchange Program for Magistrates and Judges, of BRIC countries, held in March 2010 in Brazil following the signature in 2009 of the Protocol of Intent among the BRIC countries’ Supreme Courts;

e) the first Meeting of Development Banks;

f) the first Meeting of the Heads of the National Statistical Institutions;

g) the Conference of Competition Authorities;

h) the first Meeting of Cooperatives;

i) the first Business Forum;

j) the Conference of think tanks.

28. We also endorse other important manifestations of our desire to deepen our relationship, such as:

a) the joint publication by our respective national statistical institutions which is going to be released today;

b) a feasibility study for developing a joint BRIC encyclopedia.

29. We reaffirm our commitment to advance cooperation among BRIC countries in science, culture and sports.

30. We express our confidence in the success of the 2010 World Expo in Shanghai, the 2010 Commonwealth Games in New Delhi, the 2013 World Student Games in Kazan, the 2014 Winter Olympic and Paralympic Games in Sochi, the FIFA 2014 World Cup in Brazil and the 2016 Olympic and Paralympic Games in Rio de Janeiro.

31. We reaffirm the efforts to strengthen our cooperation and assistance for reduction of natural disasters. Russia and India express their condolences and solidarity with the people and Governments of Brazil and China, for the lives lost in the mudslide in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and in the earthquake in Yushu, China.
III BRIC Summit

32. Brazil, Russia and India appreciate the offer of China to host the III BRIC Summit in 2011.

33. Russia, India and China express their profound gratitude to the Government and people of Brazil for hosting the II BRIC Summit.

096. Suo Motu Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in the Lok Sabha on the Prime Minister's visits abroad to attend the Nuclear Security, IBSA and BRIC Summits.

New Delhi, April 23, 2010.

Please see Document No.62.

097. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (East Asia) on External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna's visit to Wuhan for RIC Ministerial meeting.

New Delhi, November 13, 2010

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and good to see you all even on a Saturday evening. My colleague Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia), and I would like to brief you about the forthcoming visit of the External affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna to Wuhan in the Hubei Province of China, for the 10th IRC or RIC -India, Russia, China - Ministerial meeting.

EAM leaves tomorrow. The meeting would take place over two days on the 14th and 15th of November. This is the tenth Ministerial meeting and the sixth standalone meeting.
The delegation of EAM will include Foreign Secretary, our Ambassador in Beijing, Advisor to External Affairs Minister, my colleague Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (ERS) Mr. Ajay Bisaria and me.

Briefly the programme includes a working dinner on the 14th November, that is tomorrow evening. Thereafter on the 15th there will be three Plenary Sessions followed by a Joint Press Conference around midday and a banquet which will be hosted by the Government of Hubei Province.

By way of background I may add that the first RIC Ministerial meeting took place on the sidelines of the UNGA in New York in 2002. The first standalone Foreign Ministers meeting took place in Vladivostok in June, 2005.

India has key multifaceted relationships with Russia and China. Both Russia and China are our strategic partners. Together we account for 40 per cent of the global population and over 20 per cent of the global land mass. We are among the fastest growing major emerging economies in the world. We also have influential voices which are heard beyond the region, beyond Asia.

The trilateral meeting of the Foreign Ministers broadly covers political issues which include UN reforms, terrorism, West Asia, Asia Pacific regional cooperation, Korean peninsula, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Iran, SCO and so on. Besides political issues it also focuses on trade and economic matters which would include the G20 process, global economic governance architecture, climate change, Doha Round and WTO, development cooperation, energy, to mention a few.

Three trilateral governmental Expert Groups have since been established to give RIC cooperation greater vigour and content. These three sectors are: agricultural cooperation, cooperation in health and medicine, and in disaster mitigation. Talking about agricultural cooperation, the first meeting was held in Beijing in April 2008, and the next meeting is likely to be held in New Delhi soon. I will be happy to touch upon further details if there is an interest.

On cooperation in health and medicine, the first meeting was again held in Delhi in September 2008, and the next meeting is expected in Russia soon. In the area of disaster mitigation, the first meeting was held in Sanya in China in November 2009, and the second meeting will be concluding later in the day today in New Delhi.

We also have now regular trilateral academic seminars which have become an important forum for exchange of ideas which feed into the Ministerial meetings. Three designated institutes from three countries are: the Institute of Chinese Studies in Delhi, the Institute of Far Eastern Studies in Moscow, and the Institute of International Studies in Beijing. Specialists and scholars have been meeting on an annual basis. The ninth meeting was held in New Delhi in December 2009. The tenth meeting was held from the 20th to 23rd of September 2010 in Moscow. The meetings dwell on subjects like counter-terrorism, energy security, trade, culture, science and technology, regional and global cooperation, to mention a few.

Economic and trade relationship is a very important component of our relations both with China and Russia. To provide greater impetus to the sector, a biennial Trilateral Business Forum has been taking place. It was first held in New Delhi on 15th of September 2007 and second in Changchun in China on 17th September 2009. Leading Business Chambers in the three countries spearhead the consultations. From the Indian side it is FICCI and CII. The CCPIT or China Council for Promotion of International Trade and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Russian Federation.

I may add that the third meeting of the Business Forum will take place in Russia, in 2011. But an important preparatory meeting will be held in New Delhi on the 30th of November this year.

The Tenth IRC Ministerial meeting would focus on - international and regional issues; the international situation; enhancing trilateral cooperation in the G20 framework and on enhancing India, China, Russia practical cooperation. A Joint Communiqué is expected to be released at the conclusion of the talks.

Also the External Affairs Minister will be having bilateral meetings with his Russian and Chinese counterparts when issues of bilateral interest are likely to be discussed. I will stop here. My colleague and I will be happy to take your questions.
Question: Can you say a little bit about counter-terrorism and agriculture? What kind of cooperation will it be in agriculture and terrorism?

Official Spokesperson: You can appreciate that agriculture is a very important sector for us with more than 60 per cent of India living in the rural areas. The sectors that have been identified in the sector of agricultural cooperation include: management of wasteland, watershed management, agricultural research, pest control, strengthening credit delivery systems, risk management in agriculture, exchange of experiences in institution-building, soil health management, storage, preservation, marketing and so on. So, you have a whole array of areas that have been identified. You would appreciate that the first meeting of experts in the sector of agricultural cooperation was held in April 2008, and the next meeting is likely to take place, as I said, in New Delhi shortly.

Question: Sir, what I am asking is, is it the officials sitting down and talking or is it a private initiative?

Official Spokesperson: These are the experts who meet. This is a governmental body. The recommendations of all these expert groups are then taken on board by the Ministers and they decide on which sectors in particular we ought to give greater focus. You mentioned terrorism and counter-terrorism. This is an area which all three countries - China, Russia and India - have been paying attention to, especially the challenge of international terrorism. This is one of the important areas of consultations both amongst the academics and among the Ministers in the two countries. I will invite your attention to the Joint Communiqué which was issued in Bangalore on 27th of October 2009. If you see para 12 of the Communiqué you will find that the Ministers have condemned terrorism, they have spoken in favour of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism, and they have touched upon various other aspects which are of interest to all the three countries.

Question: Sir, you said that as part of the agenda the issues include UN reforms, terror and Af-Pak. Since EAM is meeting Foreign Minister Yang I think on Sunday evening, can you tell us what is likely to be discussed as far as terror and Af-Pak are concerned? That is because China also is close by and there is a lot of Chinese involvement in this and especially in the light of what Secretary of State Clinton had said, as you are aware, that Pakistan has used terror as an instrument of state policy against India and Afghanistan.

Joint Secretary (East Asia) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): I think it will be difficult to prejudge what the External Affairs Minister and the Foreign Minister of China will discuss not merely in terms of issues and subjects and topics but also on a particular topic how the discussion will go. So, really I do not think we can at this point in time ahead of the meeting answer this question. But definitely after the meeting I think we will be able to answer this question, at least to the group of journalists who will be travelling with us and to the media as a whole. I do not want to prejudge what the discussions will be.

Official Spokesperson: Can I just add slightly to what my colleague has mentioned? You mentioned the bilateral meeting with Mr. Yang Jiechi. In my opening remarks I had referred to the fact that in the bilateral meetings the External Affairs Minister would be taking up issues of bilateral interest or bilateral subjects of interest, with both his counterparts. When I was talking of the IRC Ministerial meeting, I mentioned that one of the sessions, this is the session on international and regional issues which will be held tomorrow evening, will includes the three items that you have mentioned. Of course, as my colleague said, the details will be reflected in the Joint Communiqué which will be issued on the 15th.

Question: Sir, the second thing I asked about Secretary Clinton's remarks, can you just give us an Indian perspective on that?

Official Spokesperson: We have always very unequivocally spoken of the challenge of terrorism, especially terrorism that originates from our neighbourhood. And we have time and again called upon our neighbor to dismantle the terror infrastructure. It has also been mentioned, and I would here invite your attention to the meeting of the two Prime Ministers in Thimphu on the 29th of April when it was decided that India and Pakistan would be open to, would be willing to do everything possible to enhance mutual trust and to discuss all issues of interest or concerns to both sides. From our perspective the only aspect on which we hope to see movement on the part of our Pakistani friends is on the issue of terrorism.
Question: You said that the three Ministers will be discussing the new security architecture in the Asia Pacific region. Could you tell more about what they are planning to discuss on this topic?

Official Spokesperson: What they will discuss, at the moment obviously I am not in a position to share. But that will find a suitable reflection in the Joint Communiqué. I may add though that Russia, China and India are key members of the Asia Pacific community. Russia is also going to soon join the East Asia Summit process. And India has welcomed the decision or the invitation to Russia and USA to join the EAS. I also mentioned that India and Russia are strategic partners; it is a very important relationship for us. So, we are also looking forward to the very important second state visit of President Medvedev to India in December. On the bilateral side we have a very active and multifaceted programme of cooperation. I also mentioned that the cooperation in the Asia Pacific would figure as one of the items on the agenda of the RIC Ministerial meeting.

Question: Recently China has made a statement that it has a significant role to play in South Asia. As you said that you are going to discuss SCO, Shanghai Cooperation Organization, is there any Chinese proposal to discuss about SAARC also in that meeting?

Official Spokesperson: As you know, China has an Observer status in SAARC. China had participated as an Observer in the Thimphu SAARC Summit meeting that was held. India is also currently an Observer in the SCO process. At Tashkent in June, a decision was taken to lift the moratorium on the expansion of SCO. And India has since evinced an interest in continuing to play a constructive role, an important role and a greater role in the SCO process.

Question: But Chinese are eager to join SAARC as equal member.

Official Spokesperson: I have already mentioned the status. SAARC is a South Asian Association of Regional Cooperation. It is an association of South Asian countries as the name itself suggests. I did mention that China is an Observer in SAARC.

Question: Sir, how do you react to the statement made by the Pakistan Foreign Minister yesterday that there is unanimity between China and Pakistan that India should not be allowed to become a permanent member of UNSC?

Official Spokesperson: This briefing is about the forthcoming RIC Ministerial meeting that is going to take place, in Wuhan tomorrow. But on the subject of India’s permanent membership of the UN Security Council, suffice it to say that we believe that we have impeccable credentials for assuming the role and responsibilities as a permanent member of the UN Security Council.

Question: Sir, after Tashkent one had gathered or one was given to understand that India will soon become a member of SCO and the membership rules would be relaxed to accommodate India. What is taking so long? Is it that China is resistant to the idea of India becoming an SCO member? Second, what according to MEA have been the successes of RIC in the last eight years? Third, can we have a statement on Aung San Suu Kyi?

Official Spokesperson: Let me reiterate that this briefing is on the visit of the External Affairs Minister for IRC Ministerial meeting, and so my colleague and I will be very happy to take questions pertaining to the visit. As far as the SCO process is concerned, it was only in June this year - not that long time ago as you have mentioned - when the Tashkent Summit meeting had taken place. I already mentioned our position with respect to our involvement with the SCO. As an Observer since 2005 we have been playing an active and constructive role and we are willing to play a larger role in the process. Currently we are engaged, we are having consultations with the SCO members to get a better understanding of the modalities of proceeding further in the matter.

As far as the RIC Ministerial meetings or the process is concerned, I did allude to the fact that India, Russia and China are three of the most important countries in the region and beyond. We have a very important relationship with both these countries. RIC or IRC has become a very important forum for the Ministers to meet regularly and to consult, to exchange views on a host of issues of interest. The focus of RIC is on political matters, on trade and economic matters. I have touched upon already a number of items on the canvas. It is (a) a process and (b) I think it is a very efficacious process.
For example, when you said that what has come out of it or what are the achievements, let me again draw your attention to the Joint Communiqué of the Ninth Ministerial meeting which was issued on the 27th of October in Bangalore. If you see para 9, and this is just to cite an example, the Ministers have spoken about the international situation and particularly about the G20 process. They have emphasized the principle of transparency and equity. They have emphasized that the developed countries and the emerging markets and developing countries by rotation should be holding the Summits. They have spoken about the reforms in the international financial institutions, and the equitable distribution of voting power between developed and developing countries. And you have already, for example, seen movement on some of these, whether you are talking of the voting power, whether you are talking of the quotas. This is just one example. Basically it is a very important body where the three countries sit together and have an exchange of views.

Question: After President Obama's visit, China said it will be happy to have consultations with India on the issue of a permanent seat on the UN Security Council. So, would there be consultations in the bilateral meeting or at the Ministerial level?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I would just like to draw your attention to the meeting that took place on the 29th of October in Hanoi between Prime Minister Wen Jiabao of China and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh of India where it was announced that Premier Wen Jiabao will be visiting India before the end of this year. One of the points that both Prime Ministers agreed to was to prepare well for that visit. The bilateral meeting that will take place in Wuhan between the External Affairs Minister and his counterpart Foreign Minister Yang of China will be the first bilateral interaction since then. And I am pretty sure that the two Foreign Ministers will discuss how to approach the visit of Prime Minister Wen Jiabao of China to India. I also want to let you know that following this interaction in Wuhan, Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao will travel to Beijing for the fourth meeting of the India-China Strategic Dialogue which will take place in Beijing with her counterpart the Vice Foreign Minister of China, a person called Mr. Zhang on the 16th of November. That will be yet another opportunity for the two sides to discuss bilateral issues, as we have been saying, of mutual interest and mutual concern. I do not want to go into what issues will be discussed because I do not want to prejudge that point. But I am sure that both sides will discuss issues in these two meetings which are of interest to each other.

Question: Will Foreign Secretary’s visit be basically for preparing for Chinese Prime Minister's visit to India?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): It is actually for the fourth meeting of the India-China Strategic Dialogue. We have a dialogue where we talk about strategic issues, what the Americans called ‘over the horizon’ issues. But I have no doubt that this meeting will also be utilized for discussing bilateral issues, for preparing for Prime Minister Wen Jiabao’s visit too to India.

Question: Is NSA’s visit also going to take place simultaneously?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): NSA is expected to visit towards the end of this month. He is expected to be in Beijing towards the end of November. You are right, that will be yet another opportunity for the two sides to discuss various issues of mutual interest and mutual concern.

Question: Will the NSA’s visit also be a preparatory visit or will that be the next round of boundary talks?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): It will be the next round of the boundary talks. But it will afford an opportunity to discuss issues which will obviously go into preparation for the visit of Premier Wen Jiabao to India in December.

Question: Are we expecting any big ticket items from China?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I think you asked this question before the Obama visit and I saw how Foreign Secretary Mrs. Rao had answered it. But in diplomacy it is a series of small steps and very rarely are there big ticket items. But yes, sometimes there are. But I think you should approach it as a series of small steps which when you add up make a big step forward. So, I really do not have much more to say beyond that.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you.

together and step up macro-economic policy coordination. They called for global coordinated efforts to promote strong, sustainable and balanced world growth.

13. The Ministers reiterated their commitment to step up their cooperation to enable positive outcomes at the Cancun conference.

16. The Ministers expressed the view that global energy security is of great significance to advancing world economic recovery and development, and such security can be achieved through greater dialogue and cooperation between producing and consuming countries. The international community should work together to ensure stable energy supply, the security of international energy transportation and stable energy prices so that the energy demand of all countries, especially developing ones, are met. Efforts should be made to build an open and transparent energy market system and an advanced energy technology R&D and dissemination system for enhanced technological transfer and financial support to developing countries consistent with existing international non proliferation obligations and relevant national policy. The Ministers agreed to step up cooperation in the field of energy security, taking into account, inter alia, the initiative of President Medvedev to negotiate an international legal instrument in this area.

17. The Ministers reiterated the importance of the UN Millennium Declaration and the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals, welcomed the outcomes of the UN high-level meeting on the MDGs held in September 2010 and urged members of the OECD Development Assistance Committee to honor their commitment of devoting 0.7% of their Gross National Income to official development assistance as early as possible.

18. The Ministers commended the indispensable role played by the United Nations in international affairs. The Ministers reiterated the need for a comprehensive reform of the United Nations to make it more democratic, representative and efficient so that it can deal with today's global challenges more effectively. The Ministers of China and Russia appreciated the role played by India in international affairs and welcomed India's election to the UN Security Council for the 2011-2012 term, and looked forward to deepening cooperation with India within the Council.

19. The Ministers stressed that proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery as well as its association with international terrorism poses a grave threat to international peace and security and represents a cause for deep concern. The Ministers proceed from the understanding that dialogue over the problems of preventing risks and threats to the global non-proliferation regime must be built on the basis stipulated by the international obligations of states. The prospects for the non-proliferation regime to a large extent depend on ensuring the security of all states, as well as states' ability to establish an effective export control system and to secure sensitive materials.

20. The Ministers reiterated their strong condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and stressed that there could be no justification for any act of terrorism anywhere. They emphasized the need for full international cooperation in counter-terrorism efforts, particularly within the framework of the United Nations, to prevent terrorist attacks and to prosecute terrorists and their supporters. In this context, the Ministers urged all UN member states to urgently conclude and adopt the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. The Ministers emphasized the importance of joint efforts to counter the use of information and communication technologies for terrorist and criminal purposes. They also underscored the importance of joint efforts in countering the financing of terrorism.

21. The Ministers emphasized the imperative for the international community to maintain its commitment to render assistance to the Government and people of Afghanistan in ensuring security and development and to make concerted efforts to restore peace and stability in Afghanistan. The Ministers underlined the need to step up the coordinated fight of the international community against illegal trafficking of Afghan drugs.

22. The Ministers recognized that Iran is entitled to the right to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, and should at the same time restore international confidence to the exclusively peaceful nature of its nuclear activities. The Ministers emphasized that there is no alternative to the intensification of efforts to address the Iranian nuclear issue by peaceful means through dialogue and negotiation.

23. The Ministers reiterated the importance of maintaining peace and stability on the Korean Peninsula and in the region through dialogue, and

102. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) Vivek Katju and Commerce Secretary Rahul Khullar on India-European Union Summit

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon and apologies to keep you waiting for about ten minutes. There were other meetings that the Secretaries had to attend and they are coming straight from the meetings.

You know that the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh had participated in the India-EU Summit this morning. You were all there for the Joint Press Conference. Three documents have been adopted and I hope all of you have copies of the documents. These are the Joint Statement and the two Joint Declarations - one on Cooperation against International Terror and the other on Cultural Cooperation. Secretary (West) Shri Vivek Katju, along with Commerce Secretary Shri Rahul Khullar, Media Advisor Dr. Harish Khare, our Ambassador to Brussels Dr. Jaimini Bhagwati, my colleague Joint Secretary (Europe West) Mr. Seetharam are here to brief you about the very important Summit meeting today. Secretary (West) will make an opening statement which will be followed by a perspective from Commerce Secretary. Thereafter they would be happy to take a few questions.

I would invite Secretary (West) to make his opening statement.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): All of you have attended the press conference today of the Prime Minister and his EU counterparts. During that press conference the Prime Minister and the EU leaders read out detailed statements. What I will do is highlight a few points which perhaps may be of some interest.

This was, as you know, the first Summit which took place after the Lisbon Treaty came into force. The Lisbon Treaty, as the leaders of the EU emphasized, has given the Union a new dimension in its political and strategic personality. It has, therefore, opened up avenues for a greater engagement in political and strategic matters. It has also provided an opportunity for a greater level of cooperation on these issues. The Joint Declaration on International Terrorism is an outcome in a sense of the way the EU is evolving. You have no doubt gone through that Joint Declaration. You would see that it has identified a number of areas which have a great degree of potential for concretization of our cooperation in these identified areas. So, now we will be having an intensive engagement with the EU to identify programmes which we can undertake, and the concerned people in India and the EU counterparts, will be now involved in these exercises.

The second aspect that I wanted to mention was that the EU has been and will remain an important development partner of India. In that context the discussions that took place in the context of the ongoing negotiations and the bilateral on the Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement were of significance. I would request the Commerce Secretary to give you his perspective. But it would be appropriate for me to say that the leaders were quite clear, and this is reflected in the Joint Statement too, that the negotiations should be completed at the earliest. The time period mentioned is spring of 2011. This is an agreement, once it is negotiated and all the processes are complete, which will greatly benefit both India and the EU.

Discussions today between the leaders also focused on regional and global issues. They focused on areas in India's neighbourhood. They focused on developments which have been taking place in the international financial and monetary system. These discussions were comprehensive and were marked by a great spirit of friendship and candour.

I think I will stop here and request Rahul to give you his perspective of how the BTIA will now proceed.

Commerce Secretary (Shri Rahul Khullar): What I am going to do is actually give you a staccato - 1,2,3,4 - and leave it to you to ask any questions. First, cut to the chase. March-April, 2011, that is the date, the deal has got to be done by then, at least the negotiations have to be concluded and because of perhaps your questioning during pre-lunch period we got a pretty much a directive to get the job done by March 2011 or by Spring 2011 call it what you will. That is point number one. Point number two, what has not been done. I do not know if you have received, this is the joint report on the state of negotiations. I will just give it to Vishnu, and as far as I am concerned, it is in the public domain now. That will give you actually the state of play on the negotiations.

Now, let me put one caveat right up front. One of the agreed rules of any negotiation is we do not negotiate through the media and I will honour that principle. But this will give you an idea of the work that has been completed and it will also give you a clue of what lies ahead. So, in a sense it is a sneak preview of what is being discussed, where we have closed things up, and what lies ahead.

Three, I think Vishnu opened by telling you that we were delayed because we were in a meeting, and lest you think we were actually goofing off, we were not. There was a meeting because Jean-Luc Demarty, who is the DG Trade Designate, had come to see me. Ambassador Bhagwati and I were in the room with him. It is that discussion which went on for forty minutes that delayed our arrival here. What were we talking about? Pretty much how we were going to get this job done in the remaining period that lies ahead.

The only other thing, point number four, that needs to be said is that on the trade agreement there is now some understanding that Jean-Luc will come over to Delhi sometime in January. We will fix the date on a mutually convenient basis and that will push the negotiations forward. That is all the four points I wanted to make. Thank you.

Question: This is for Mr. Katju. This is regarding the Joint Declaration on International Terrorism. The European Union from time to time converted its formulation on terrorism. Do you think this time it is ...(inaudible)... in terms of views opposed to terrorism and where they mention about terror camps in Pakistan?

Secretary (West): I think it will be improper for me to go into the direction that you want me to go. Suffice it to say that India and the EU are serious partners in the fight against international terrorism. The Joint Statement is witness to that seriousness and there is now every intention, as I mentioned a few minutes earlier, of engaging in a purposeful manner to identify specific areas of cooperation, which will be to mutual benefit. You have seen what the Joint Statement says also on international terrorism as well as on certain acts of international terrorism.

Question: This is a question for Mr. Khullar. I think many of us here were very surprised that we did not hear any announcement on the solving of this dispute over generic drugs seizure. That was something that was supposed to be a big takeaway from today and we have heard absolutely nothing about it. If you could tell us a little about what is going on with that.

Commerce Secretary: That is why this stunned silence, is it!

No. The point of the matter is very simple. Discussions are still going on on how to actually come up with a workable solution. Please understand, and let me for those of you who have not been following this make it clear, there is an issue arising out of the seizure of drugs or drug consignments dating to 2009 in pursuance of directive 1383. That is what Pallavi is asking about. This is completely separate from the Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement, a completely separate issue altogether. The linkage is to a more touchy issue which is the production of generics through the exercise of rights under the TRIPS Agreement. There, as you know, there is a huge amount of emotion and energy being spent by NGOs and others on whether the BTIA will in any way compromise that. The reason I am trying to separate these two is to give you answers on both so that you know. And let me begin with what is not Pallavi's question first. On the question of the BTIA it is abundantly clear that there will be no compromise on that principle. Our ability to honour public health commitments, our ability to keep and preserve public policy space stays intact, and there is no intent to compromise that in the least bit whatsoever. I have said it publicly. I am repeating exactly that so that please get that settled and put aside. We do not want to revisit that issue.
That said, now let me rephrase Pallavi's question in that context. What she is saying is why have you not sorted out this 1383 Resolution? What has happened is this. Under the WTO law we are entitled to ask the EU for what is called a consultation. The consultation is part of a legal process, which means before I actually go to a court of law to adjudicate, can I prior to that work out an understanding which settles the matter? Now, all of you must understand that even as this consultation is proceeding, this is not a chit chat. This is hard legal argument on both sides on what is legally permissible, what is my legal right, what is your legal right, what you can enforce, what you cannot enforce.

Now, we have deliberately stayed out of the media for a long time on this because consultations on these matters are best dealt with confidentially till you arrive at a conclusion which both parties can live with. When both parties can live with the outcome of that consultation, then you have to decide how to proceed further without prejudicing each other's rights to further legal recourse. Which means, supposing I come to an understanding with the EU that you will do this, and EU says, "Well, we will do it", but it is unable to do it for whatever reason, then I must retain for myself the right that I can revisit the entire issue because my legal right cannot be extinguished by anything that I write away today. That is the problem. When you have issues like this, you cannot do a slam-bang job on it and say because the EU summit is on the 10th of December, please let us come to an agreement before the 9th of December.

I would only said that at this point of time we are very very close to resolving this matter. There is an understanding being built on both sides. And it shall be my endeavour, just as it is on the EU's side to satisfactorily resolve this consultation so that, first and foremost we achieve satisfaction and (b) this sort of problem does not recur. Once we receive the comfort we need on that, then let me assure you I will be the first one to come in front of you and tell you exactly what we are doing. But till that time is reached, these are legal consultations, please let us conclude those consultations. When we have a package ready I will gladly share it with you.
Question: My question is addressed to Mr. Katju. This Joint Declaration on International Terrorism, are you planning to make some Joint Working Groups or is this like a standard operating procedure?

Secretary (West): May I draw your attention to the last paragraph on page 1 where it says, "Within the following framework details of which will be worked out through designated authorities ..." So we will have designated authorities who will go into the specific areas to identify where we can cooperate.

Question: Any convergence of views on Afghanistan? Pallavi asked a question and that was not really answered. Are we seeing Afghanistan through the same prism or a completely different one?

Secretary (West): I think that the international community has to a very large extent seen Afghanistan through similar prisms. There is a problem of terrorism in Afghanistan. That problem needs to be addressed. There is a problem of assistance, of construction, of reconstruction, of rehabilitation. There is the issue of strengthening the central authority in Afghanistan and other authorities. Certainly, India and the EU have similar approaches on these matters.

Question: Till now we did not have similar views. We had divergent views, especially regarding Pakistan and ...(Inaudible)... in Afghanistan?

Secretary (West): May I again draw your attention to the Joint Statement? I can do no better than to draw your attention to the Joint Statement. If you please see the Joint Statement, the last sentence of paragraph 16 says, "The leaders agreed that terrorism must be combated firmly and expressed concern at the continuing existence of safe havens including in the cross-border dimension." This is quite eloquent.

Question: My question is addressed Mr. Katju. This Joint Statement on Terrorism and Innovations talks about extradition treaty with the EU and mutual legal assistance agreements in that. Is there any precedence existing. Does India or any other country have a common extradition treaty with a group of nations? And when will this discussion for this whole agreement on extradition treaty with the EU begin?
Secretary (West): You are right, as of now these mechanisms are generally of a bilateral nature between sovereign states. But this is an aspect which we will examine. We will naturally while examining this aspect take into account the competencies which the EU has, and thereafter proceed. I would like to think that the EU knows the mandates that it has. But again as I said, these are areas that we have specified which we will now examine in great detail. And through that examination we will concretise specific areas where we will proceed further.

Question: My question is addressed to Mr. Khullar. Point No.11 in the Joint Statement refers to the discussions to be held on migration. Does it mean that now we have given up our demand on the tightening of visa restrictions on Indians professionals wanting to move into the EU, whether it is software engineers, doctors, nurses, paramedical staff, and other categories of Indian professionals where country by country is restricting access to Indian professionals and will not be part of the FTA what is the …(Inaudible)...

Commerce Secretary: A very clever way to tell me to tell you about what is being negotiated. But I will evade any direct answer to that. Let me tell you what is going on though. Look, the temporary movement of natural persons, or what is called Mode-4, is the subject of discussion under the services negotiations. What will happen is that in January we will start receiving the first offers on that. When we get those offers, I will take stock of the extent to which it meets the requirements that we have. I think if you read the document that I have already circulated, which is State of Play, you will get a sense that there is still some work to be done on goods and there is still some work to be done on services. Now, the most important part of the work to be done on services in Mode 4 for us in terms of market access in Europe, and for Europe in terms of some parts of Mode 4 but more importantly on Mode 3 in terms of commercial presence which will require changes in FDI caps, legislation, etc. All this is the subject of negotiation and it is just simply, as I said, wrong for me to negotiate in public.

All I will assure you is that the migration and the temporary movement of natural persons (TMNP) issue will have to be satisfactorily resolved. When I say satisfactorily it means to my satisfaction. If there is no commercially meaningful access becoming available, then we have to take serious stock about what exactly we are gaining on services. I think to be fair to my European counterparts, we fully understand that. All of you - some of you live here, some of you do not - also have a good understanding of why the temporary movement of natural persons is a very sensitive political issue in many economies in Europe today. So, please bear with us. Let the negotiations take place through January.

Question: But it is also a sensitive issue in some of the Indian States?

Commerce Secretary: Oh, yes, indeed, in particular the State where you come from.

Question: My question is addressed to Secretary (West). I just wanted to know from you whether it is the first time that the European Union is using words like safe havens for terrorists and cross-border terrorism.

Secretary (West): I do not recollect seeing such terms in earlier documents.

Question: Can we say that 50 per cent of the work of the visit has been done or are we still at 25 per cent range?

Commerce Secretary: Remember, a deal is not done until it is all done. So, on that criterion nothing is done. I think more than half of it has actually been completed. What you are doing is, you are entering what are called last-mile or end-game negotiations. What happens in end-game negotiations is typically all the very very difficult stuff is left right to the end. Some very very difficult stuff is left right to the end, and those require very difficult decisions. But at the end of it what happens is when there is so much on the table, the incentive to deal with those difficult decisions is, 'are you really going to wish away all that you have settled, just because you cannot grapple with this difficult problem?' And that in a sense forces people to grapple and quickly come to a conclusion. I think that is the way to look at it. I do not want to use numbers. If you want to push the envelope, well more than fifty per cent is done. What needs to be done? Till it is all done, nothing is done.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you.

104. Joint Declaration issued on the conclusion of the Summit of the European Commission and the Government of India for cooperation and dialogue in the field of Culture.

Brussels, December 10, 2010

The European Commission and the Government of India hereinafter referred as “Sides” wish to reinforce cooperation and dialogue in the field of culture.

The European Commission and the Government of India, declare their wish to strengthen cooperation and dialogue between the European Commission and the Government of India in the field of culture.

The European Commission and the Government of India consider that cultural cooperation is instrumental in improving mutual understanding and in promoting genuine intercultural dialogue, and both the European Commission and the Government of India share a commitment to the preservation and promotion of cultural diversity.

Both sides furthermore recognize the importance of their cultural relations as underpinned by:

- the Cooperation Agreement signed on 20th December 1993, in particular its provisions regarding cultural cooperation (article 15),
- the EU-India Joint Declaration on Cultural Relations adopted on 3rd November, 2004 at the India-EU summit in The Hague
- the 2005 EU-India Joint Action Plan supporting the Strategic Partnership.
- the Joint Statement issued at the EU-India Summit in New Delhi on 30th November, 2007.

They further acknowledge the mutually acceptable framework being discussed under future EU-funded culture programme, which will further promote and strengthen the rich cultural cooperation between the two sides.

In this context The European Commission and the Government of India recognize the positive outcome of 2008 EU-India Summit in Marseille, and in particular the decision to develop a dialogue between the parties in the field of culture.

While building on past achievements, both sides intend to further exploit the potential for cooperation between both regions through the development of new policy-oriented activities.

The European Commission and the Government of India declare their common intentions as follows:

- Under the auspices of the 2005 UNESCO Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Diversity of Cultural Expressions 2005 to which both the European Community and the Government of India are parties, the Directorate General for Education and Culture on one side and the Ministry of Culture, Government of India, on the other side, will set up a sector policy dialogue covering issues of common interest in the field of culture that will help to protect and promote the diversity of cultural expressions.

- The sector policy dialogue and cooperation will consist of regular exchanges of best practices, achievements and challenges, and promotion of knowledge building and sharing in relation to commonly identified issues.

- The mutual dialogue may also include discussions on existing and future cooperation in the field of Culture. Specific events such as seminars, workshops, or expert meetings will be jointly organized for the purpose of those exchanges and discussions, with the participation of relevant stakeholders. These events could be held annually, alternately in Brussels and in New Delhi or in any other venue agreed to by both sides. In addition, special promotional events, with the participation of relevant stakeholders, could be organized.

- Both sides will jointly set up a rolling work programme which will be continually updated for conducting this dialogue. They will regularly review its implementation and avenues for future cooperation. To this end, senior officials from both sides will meet in principle once a year at alternating venues. Other occasional meetings may be held as necessary.
• Both sides will bear their own delegation’s costs of participation in such events and meetings. All other costs linked to the organization of these seminars, workshops and meetings will be borne by the side hosting the events, except if agreed otherwise.

The provisions of this Joint Declaration express political intent and are not designed to create legal rights or obligations under international law.

106. Joint Press Interaction of Prime Minster Dr. Manmohan Singh and President of the European Council Herman Van Rompuy after EU-India Summit.

President of the European Council (Mr. Herman Van Rompuy): I am delighted to welcome Prime Minister Singh and his delegation to the 11th EU India Summit, the first under the Lisbon Treaty, 1 year after its entry into force.

We have met several times this year - in Washington for the nuclear security summit, in Canada and Korea for the G20 Summits - but this first time (for me) in the Justus Lipsius - the European Council Headquarter - gives me particular pleasure.

President Barroso and I had a very intense and productive plenary session with the PM during which we reviewed the whole spectrum of bilateral, regional and global issues on our agenda. We will further focus on some of these issues during our working lunch.

I am also pleased that Lady Ashton attended this Summit. Let me express my satisfaction for both the substance and the quality of our discussions and decisions. And let me thank Premier Singh for his leadership and vision.

On bilateral issues. Today we have agreed to consider the enormous potential in our bilateral relations that is still to be unlocked, and the necessity to bring our strategic partnership launched in 2004 to a higher level.

I would resume this common objective in 2 adjectives: make it wider (in the areas to be unfolded), make it deeper (in those already launched). You can see our progress reflected in the Joint Statement of this Summit.

So, wider. I have explained to Premier Singh how the new institutional EU setting will make this objective easier to achieve. More continuity brings more coherence. And more coherence paves the way for more results.

Today, we have opened a brand new chapter of political cooperation in the defence and security fields. We have in particular agreed on the need to step up together in the fight against international terrorism. The London, Madrid and Mumbai attacks showed that terrorism knows no boundaries and that a common response is essential: the Joint Declaration on Counter Terrorism we have agreed today signals a clear commitment in this regard. This Declaration sets out a series of areas of concrete cooperation.

Deeper cooperation. As cooperation became wider, we have engaged to give new momentum to the key areas that already constitute the bulk of our cooperation, in particular in the trade and investments. The EU is the 1st India export destination; India is the 9th EU export destination. The overall trade in goods in 2009 amounted to around 52 billions euro. We believe it is not enough, particularly as in a still-difficult economic situation and where fiscal and budgetary policies are limited, free trade is a powerful engine in those circumstances to promote sustainable economic growth in two of the largest world economies, where more than one and half billion people live. President Barroso will elaborate further but I am pleased that we have created momentum in the Free Trade Agreement negotiations for an ambitious and balanced conclusion in the Spring of 2011. It would be the biggest agreement concluded by the EU and one of the biggest bilateral agreements ever.

Under this item we reiterated our common interest in a stable, peaceful and inclusive Afghanistan. I highlighted to the Prime Minister the great efforts undertaken by the EU and its Member States and the conclusion of the NATO summit in Lisbon. The aim of course is the "Afghanisation" of Afghanistan.

I have also underlined that a safe, secure, stable and prosperous Pakistan is equally in the interest of the EU. In this context I have recalled the measures decided by the European Council.

With PM Singh we have reviewed the key issues of the global agenda, starting from the response to the economic crisis. We have reaffirmed the commitment we made at the G20 Seoul Summit to contribute to address positively the issue of the "global imbalances" and to make rapid progress in 2011; we also welcomed the historic agreement on the IMF reform and the great efforts made by the European countries to make it possible, as we believe it will strengthen the legitimacy of the IMF, allowing India and the other emerging economies to increase their involvement and - I believe - responsibilities in the global economic governance. We both agreed on the need to move towards more market-determined exchange rates, as the G20 meeting said.

Bringing climate and trade negotiations to a positive outcome remain a common objective.

We have also stressed the importance of cooperation in the fields of disarmament and non-proliferation. In this regard I expressed to PM Singh EU concern over the Iranian nuclear and ballistic missiles program and the need to cooperate to ensure Iran meets its obligation to the AIEA of Viena and the UN Security Council.
India and the EU are natural partners. We share the same core values of democracy, rule of law, respect of human rights. The strategic partnership that binds EU and India will be instrumental in reaching the shared interests for freedom, peace and security in all parts of the world.

Prime Minister of India: Your Excellencies, President of the European Council Mr. Herman Van Rompuy, President of the European Commission Mr. Jose Manuel Barroso, Ministers, Distinguished Representatives of the Media.

I am delighted to be here in Brussels to attend the eleventh Summit between India and the European Union, and the first Summit since the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty.

I would like to thank the leadership of the European Union for the gracious hospitality extended to me and members of my delegation. India greatly values its relations with the European Union. We see it as a key strategic partner in meeting India's development needs. We welcome the enhanced role of the European Union on the world stage consequent to the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty. A strong and prosperous Europe, with whom India shares common values of democracy, pluralism and respect for human rights, is essential for stability and balance in the international order.

Over the years, the partnership between India and the European Union has matured tremendously. Today, it covers the entire gamut of areas ranging from the political and security to education and science. Its significance transcends the purely bilateral.

We have had extremely productive and useful discussions today. These are reflected in the Joint Statement that has been issued. We have also issued a Joint Declaration on Culture and another on International Terrorism. We reviewed the progress that has been made in the implementation of the Joint Action Plan, which is the template of our cooperation. Agreements on cooperation on peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and maritime transport are under negotiation.

Our two sides have done commendable work in negotiations of an India-EU Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement. We are at the last stages of this complex exercise. We have directed our officials to redouble their efforts to reach a conclusion by the spring of 2011. Finalisation of a balanced Agreement will bring enormous benefits to both sides.

India and Europe should take the lead in avoiding protectionist trends, keeping our markets open and encouraging the free flow and movement of people.

I conveyed to the European leadership the vast opportunities that exist for European investment in India in the areas of infrastructure, high technology, research and development, clean energy and innovation. We are particularly keen to benefit from Europe’s experience in the area of skill development, vocational training and small and medium enterprises.

We discussed opportunities for greater cooperation in the political and security spheres. We have agreed to enhance counter-terrorism cooperation. There is, in addition, scope for working together in combatting non-traditional threats to security such as piracy.

Europe has been a locomotive of the world’s economy. India, like the rest of the world, has a vital stake in Europe’s return to robust growth, innovation and the pre-crisis levels of high employment. As a member of the Group of 20, India will consult closely with the European Union and individual member States to ensure a balanced and sustained global economic recovery process.

We exchanged views on the situation in India’s neighbourhood and developments in Europe. We were united in our view that the success of the international community’s efforts in Afghanistan was critical for the people of Afghanistan as well as for the stability and security of India and Europe.

We also exchanged views on other global issues like sustainable development, climate change, reform of institutions of global governance including the United Nations Security Council and disarmament and non-proliferation.
I am fully satisfied with my talks today. They give me confidence that we are on the right track. Our partnership with the European Union is poised for further expansion, and we will work with the EU towards world peace, stability and prosperity.

Thank you.

Question (European Media): Dr. Singh, on the question of regional developments, in Pakistan one of the EU's recent initiatives has been to propose a WTO visa waiver for certain products from Pakistan. Does India support that initiative as a way of helping to restore the country to prosperity? And to EU President, I hear that in Geneva there are some countries which are questioning the impact and the rationale behind the EU's proposal on trade aid to Pakistan. What is your response to those countries?

Prime Minister of India: The EC officials are in touch with their Indian counterparts and we will satisfactorily resolve this matter. We support all international efforts to provide succor to the flood victims in Pakistan through direct aid and grant assistance. On our part we too had offered and remain willing to support the victims of natural calamity through relief assistance.

President of the European Union: As you know and you have said rightly, the European Union is strongly committed to help Pakistan after the devastating floods through short-term humanitarian assistance but also by mid-term trade measures. This was agreed by the Heads of State and Government in one of our European Council meetings. That is why the European Union proposed granting Pakistan targeted market access to alleviate economic problems and then that brings stability which we believe it is in everybody's interest, the stability of Pakistan. That is why we have already lodged a request for the WTO waiver in Geneva. We are of course aware that partners, including India, might have questions and concerns about those measures. We are discussing these issues with our partners.

Question (India Media): This question is for President Rompuy. This is regarding the bilateral trade agreement which has been described by you as path-breaking and ambitious. One key area in the implementation of this agreement is the movement of natural persons and service personnel from India to the EU and vice versa. However, given the present nature of the Schengen Visa regime which is seen as restrictive, there are fears that it may pose some hurdles. How does the European Union propose to address these concerns in India, especially from our domestic IT industry?

President of the European Union: We discussed this, not yet in detail, in our discussions we had this morning, but we will discuss the general theme of migration at lunch time. I think that in the Joint Declaration you received some passages on this theme. But we have to discuss it further in our meeting at noon.

Question (European Media): You have decided today to step up cooperation in the fight against terrorism. I do not know if you can give us more details if there are any proposals in this sense. The second question, if I may. Could you let us know once the free trade agreement with India is concluded how much money will this agreement be worth in exchange of goods for both sides?

President of the European Union: Just reminding you that we had published an India-EU Joint Declaration on International Terrorism with a lot of initiatives and concrete projects. So, if you have a closer look at the text of two and a half pages you would be assured that this cooperation is a real, concrete cooperation; and that we are both engaged in counter-terrorism. I also said in my opening statement and I said this also in my Declaration just a few minutes ago, that for European Union and for India, the fight against terrorism is really key because it is not only a problem of India, it is also a problem of the European Union. I have referred to what happened in London, I have referred to what happened in Madrid. So, it is a joint strategy and a joint attitude, and the Joint Declaration is really the clear signal we gave to the rest of the world that we will join efforts in the fight against terrorism.

Question (Indian Media): I have two quick questions, one for Prime Minister Singh and one for President Van Rompuy. If I could start with President Van Rompuy, Sir, Afghanistan figured in your talks today. Is the EU ready to seriously partner with India in the region or will the concerns of Pakistan, a crucial ally of NATO, prevent this? And my question for Prime Minister Singh is, if the FTA goes ahead, there will of course be winners but there will also be losers. In India we have substantial sections of the population that remain opposed to it from shopkeepers to small farmers. And yet you remain strongly committed to a speedy conclusion to the FTA? Why is this?

President of the European Union: On Afghanistan - I am speaking now on behalf of the European Union as a Union - we are as a Union permitted to helping with reconstruction and stabilization of Afghanistan, and we are in Afghanistan for the long haul. European Union and its member states as a whole are investing nearly one billion Euro every year. EU poll mandate has been prolonged by three years. So, we keep focusing on regional cooperation and border management indispensable to addressing cross-border issues such as drug-trafficking. So, as a Union we are engaged in the construction and stabilization for the long haul, and we are collaborating with all those who make the same efforts. We came back from the NATO Lisbon Summit just a few weeks ago, and there we decided to maintain the political momentum for gradual transfer of responsibility in the security and civilian sectors to Afghanistan. But as a Union you know we are not involved in the military operations. We are engaged in reconstruction and stabilization of the society and we are there for the long haul.

Prime Minister of India: With regard to the question addressed to me I have to say that it is my firm belief that a Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement between India and the European Union is in our mutual interest. There are, of course, concerns about what will happen to small farmers and small shopkeepers. I am convinced that we can build enough safeguards to protect their essential interests.

108. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao and Secretary (West) Vivek Katju on Prime Minister's Visit to Canada.

New Delhi, June 22, 2010.

Please See Document No.555.

109. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh prior to his departure for Toronto to attend the G-20 Summit Conference.

New Delhi, June 25, 2010.

I am leaving today to attend the G 20 Summit in Toronto at the invitation of Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

The theme of the Toronto Summit is "Recovery and the New Beginning". The coordinated policy actions taken by the G 20 since the first Summit in Washington in November 2008 have not only helped to prevent a crisis of the type the world saw in the 1930s but also contributed to global economic recovery. This is a sign of the G 20's success. At the same time, we have to be conscious that the recovery is still fragile and uneven. New worrying signs have emerged in the Euro zone.

The challenge of the Toronto Summit will be three fold - to ensure that global economic recovery is durable, balanced and sustainable; to calibrate exit strategies in the light of growing concerns over expansionary fiscal policies; and to focus on medium and long-term structural issues relating to governance issues. As the Indian economy grows and further integrates with the international system, we have an increasingly direct stake in all these matters. To meet our ambitious development targets it is necessary that the global economy continue to recover in a stable and predictable manner. We need investment and capital flows, as well as an open and rule based trading system that does not succumb to protectionist tendencies.

The Summit is expected to deliberate on a Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth. India will participate in this exercise and project our expectations from the global economic and financial system, and the kind of global growth processes that we seek. We will highlight the importance of development issues in the future work of the G20.

During my stay in Canada I will also hold bilateral talks with Prime Minister Stephen Harper. Our relations with Canada are becoming broad based and there is a mutual desire on both sides to impart fresh vigour and vitality to them. India and Canada share the same values and there are many opportunities for us to contribute to each other's welfare and prosperity.

I also look forward to having separate meetings with President Nicolas Sarkozy, President Barack Obama, Prime Minister David Cameron, Prime Minister Naoto Kan and to a meeting of the BRIC leaders.

Mr. Chairman,

The central problem we face today is how to ensure protect global growth in a situation where markets have become very nervous about debt sustainability, especially in some countries in the Eurozone. Concerns about debt sustainability normally suggest a need for fiscal contraction. But circumstances are not normal. The recovery is still fragile and private demand in the industrialized countries is likely to remain weak.
Contractionary policies, if followed by many industrialized countries simultaneously, could provoke a double dip recession. This would have very negative effects on developing countries, and on the prospects for achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

I recognize that there are uncertainties and it is difficult to strike the right balance. But on the whole, I feel the risks of destabilizing the recovery are too great. We have a much greater risk of deflation than inflation. We must, therefore, give primacy to consolidating the recovery, while also taking measured steps to deal with sovereign debt problems.

This calls for careful coordination of policies among the G-20. It is precisely for this purpose that we agreed in Pittsburgh to work on a Framework to deliver strong and sustainable growth. The outcome of Phase I of this process, which is now before us, sheds valuable light on the policy responses needed in different groups of countries.

Fiscal consolidation must obviously have high priority in those advanced deficit countries that are experiencing exceptional fiscal stress and where markets have signaled serious concern. However, other advanced countries should opt for a much more calibrated exit from stimulus. We should adopt a carefully differentiated approach, reflecting the circumstances of individual countries.

The time phasing of fiscal action is also important. Markets may well be reassured by credible steps by major industrialized countries, which impact the fiscal deficit significantly over time, even if the immediate impact is more limited.

Developing countries need to rebalance their strategies to rely less upon exports and more on domestic demand. In many developing countries, this is best done through increased investment directed to infrastructure. This will sustain growth in the short run by offsetting the contractionary effect of lower exports. It will also increase growth potential in the medium term, by addressing the supply side constraints.

Aiming at higher levels of investment despite lower export growth is likely to generate larger current account deficits. This will help rebalance global demand, but it requires an environment in which the higher current account deficits of developing countries can be financed. This requires an expansion in both multilateral and private capital flows.

Growth in developing countries would be greatly helped if threats of new protectionist measures in industrialized countries are firmly resisted and existing barriers to trade, especially those affecting developing countries, are reduced. In this context, a successful completion of the Doha Development Round is imperative.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, let me comment briefly on how we in India are handling the situation. Thanks to an effective fiscal and monetary stimulus, we were able to contain the effect of the global crisis on our economy. After growing at 9 percent for four years before the crisis, our economy averaged about 7 percent growth in last two years. We expect to grow by 8.5 percent in 2010-11 and we hope to go back to 9 percent by 2011-12.

This is an ambitious goal and we recognize that we have much to do to achieve it. We are taking steps to reverse the fiscal stimulus we had introduced to deal with the crisis. To this end we have outlined a medium term plan to halve the fiscal deficit by 2013-14.

We are giving a strong push to investment in infrastructure, relying on private public partnership as much as possible to reduce the burden on scarce public resources.

We have a sound and well regulated financial sector which was not affected by the crisis. We will persevere with implementing financial sector reforms to support rapid and inclusive growth in the real economy, and also to increase systemic stability in the financial sector.

Thank you.
Official Spokesperson: A very good evening to all of you, and thanks for waiting.

As you know, today Prime Minister has had a packed calendar of engagements. Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao is here to brief you about Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's meeting with President Obama. Finance Secretary Shri Ashok Chawla will talk to you about the G20 Summit, Prime Minister's intervention at and his vision of the G20 Summit. Secretary (West) Shri Vivek Katju will apprise you about the bilateral segment of Prime Minister's meetings and interactions with his Canadian counterpart. I would also like to introduce Dr. Harish Khare, who is to the left of Finance Secretary. He is Media Advisor to Prime Minister. May I invite Foreign Secretary to please make her remarks?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you, Vishnu.

I will just give you a heads up on the meeting between our Prime Minister and President Barack Obama of the United States. That meeting took place this evening and lasted for a little more than half an hour. It was a meeting marked by great warmth, goodwill, and cordiality between the two leaders. The focus was on the new thrust, the new areas and the new content of the strategic partnership between India and the United States. Both leaders expressed great satisfaction about the pace, about the momentum with which relations are currently developing. They spoke about the recently held strategic dialogue between the two Governments in Washington, the recently held meeting of the India-US CEO's Forum and also of the enormous opportunities that lie ahead for the development of this relationship.

They looked at areas of focus like export controls where President Obama said that both sides should think creatively on how to craft solutions to move forward. They looked at the potential for expanded commercial relations between the two sides, especially in the light of the recently held CEO’s Forum where a number of interesting ideas had been articulated. They also discussed the situation in the region and their common dedication and resolve to fight terrorism, to cooperate in countering the terrorism that affects both countries.

President Obama said that he looks forward greatly to his forthcoming visit to India in November. And Prime Minister Singh observed that intensive preparations were being made for this visit, that we wanted to make it a great success, and that President Obama, Mrs. Obama and their children would be received with great warmth, and we looked forward very much to their forthcoming visit in November. Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: May I invite Finance Secretary to make his opening remarks?

Finance Secretary (Shri Ashok Chawla): Thank you. The Summit in Toronto - just to put it in perspective, this is something which you all know, not anything new - this Summit was the Fourth Summit which the G20 leaders have had. The first one in Washington in November 2008 was when the financial crisis had just started and that Summit focused heavily on how to address the immediate problems of the financial sector. The Second Summit in London, April 2009, was the trillion dollar summit where the idea was that lot of money should be spent, the governments should come in in a big way where private sector does not have the resources, is feeling shy, so that growth is sustained.

The Third summit at Pittsburgh in September 2009 put many of these things on to formal tracks and also declared G20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation. I am mentioning this just to indicate that it is not as if what was expected here at the Toronto Summit was one off, something which was going to happen as a specific individual activity. It is a continuation of what has been decided by the leaders, what has been commended by them to their Finance Ministers and their Technical Advisors over this period of time. So, that is the context in which I think one has to look at the Summit. That is why the Canadians called it a summit which would take stock of what has happened so far and identify the next steps.
I have no doubt you would have had occasion to see the leaders’ statement, or the communiqué which has been issued. It would be on the site. You have a look at it. But I will just very briefly cover some of the important issues. Quite understandably, the main issue was on how to handle growth versus fiscal consolidation. Everybody is keen that the incipient growth impulses which are visible all around the world should not be stifled, they should not be cut off. But equally, the leaders in the G20 are conscious of the fact that it cannot go on like that for long, that you need to start the process of fiscal consolidation, and that unless you do that growth which is important is not going to be sustainable.

The overwhelming mood of the house, if I may say so, was that growth is still more important and that it should not be lost sight of. That was the predominant theme in the intervention which the Indian Prime Minister made this morning. The G20 in its Declaration has talked of the framework for sustainable, balanced growth. IMF has done some work on that. They will carry forward this work over the next few months and report the Phase-II progress which will identify individual countries and what countries need to do at the time of the Seoul Summit. But generally speaking, the G20 have declared that they should cut their fiscal deficits by half by the end of 2013. Most countries have committed to this and are sure that they will be able to do this. We have independently, even prior to the G20 coming to this understanding, a roadmap which is designed to cut our fiscal deficit, Indian fiscal deficit, to half by 2013-14.

On financial sector reforms, it is basically work in progress. The Financial Stability Board and the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision are working in the direction of regulation, how to make supervision more effective, how to handle systemically important institutions. One issue which engaged the attention of the G20 and the financial community has been the proposal to levy some kind of tax on financial institutions and banks so that the burden is not borne by the governments or the taxpayers if such crises occur in future. There were divergent views on this even prior to the Summit. What has come out in the Summit is that this is something which some countries will do, some will take other steps or continue with the kind of steps that they have which need not necessarily involve specific levies of taxes. That is recorded in the leaders' declaration. So, there is no unanimity on this. In fact, there need not be unanimity because the financial structures and the regulations are different in different countries.

On international financial institution reform, as you are aware, the World Bank change in terms of quotas moving to the developing countries has already happened. On the IMF side, the deadline is the Seoul Summit. So, that is work in progress. That will be carried forward, we are quite confident. That is what the G20 has again reiterated.

One specific intervention which has been made by the G20, and the host country Canada pushed it in a big way, is to set up a fund for small and medium enterprises after identifying the best practices and so on in this sector. The fund which will be a voluntary fund to which countries can contribute, multilateral development banks will contribute is called SME Finance Challenge. But what it basically means is that the best kind of ideas and innovative ideas which come from the SME sector will be funded through this instrumentality.

Trade and the Doha Round is something which the global community and the G20 feel it is essential to push through as soon as it is possible. But in any case there is a separate track for the WTO negotiations. What the G20 leaders meanwhile have declared is that for three years, to the end of 2013, no new trade barriers should be raised so that there are no continuation of or fresh protectionist tendencies, and that they look forward to the completion of the Doha Round as early as is possible.

There were one or two other issues, new aspects in the leaders' declaration which I thought I will highlight before you. One is that there is desired focus on issues relating to corruption, the UN Charter against corruption, its ratification and its full implementation. A call has been given by the leaders. There is also a proposal because some countries felt that the G20, now that it is moving on from issues relating to financial sector and the financial crisis, should focus on issues relating to development which concern not only the emerging market economies who are members of the G20 but the international community as a whole. So, the G20 has decided to set up a Working Group on Development.

This is broadly the contours of what the G20 deliberated upon and decided, and the intervention which the Prime Minister made. Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you, Sir. Can I now invite Secretary (West) to please make his opening remarks?

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Thank you, Vishnu. Good evening ladies and gentlemen. The hour is getting late. So, I will be very brief.

The Prime Minister met his Canadian counterpart Prime Minister Stephen Harper in a one-on-one format followed by delegation-level talks. Following the talks, as you know, the two Prime Minister's witnessed a signing ceremony and then interacted with you. Thereafter, the Prime Minister attended a dinner hosted by Prime Minister Stephen Harper. In fact, the dinner was hosted by Prime Minister Stephen Harper and Mrs. Harper for the Prime Minister and Shrimati Gursharan Kaur.

At the press interaction the Prime Minister had made an opening statement that will be no doubt with you or it would be with you shortly. It has been circulated already. There is also a Joint Statement that has been issued and that too is with you. The Prime Minister made a speech at the dinner. That text has been already given to you. So, taken together, there is a fair deal of information with you on what is actually a very brief but an official visit following the Prime Minister's participation in the G20 Summit. The media notes too have been given to you. So, I would not go over all that ground.

I will only highlight a couple of things. The first is that both the leaders are committed to the transformation of the relationship and the deepening of the dialogue between the two countries. You would have got a flavor of this in the remarks made by Prime Minister Harper during the press interaction when he said quite clearly that the 1970s were over and we were now in a different era, an era in which both countries can contribute a great deal to each other, and also contribute to peace and development in the world.

During the discussions there was a desire that the dialogue that I have mentioned should also include an exchange of perceptions on regional security issues, in particular about Afghanistan in which India of course has vital interest but Canada too has a significant troop presence for the last many years. There was also a recognition that the field of energy was a significant area where the two countries could make a contribution to each other. And finally, there was a proposal by the Canadian Prime Minister to set up an Eminent Persons Group between the two countries. Our Prime Minister responded positively and he said that yes, such a group could bring in the civil society into the dialogue in a meaningful way. And the two leaders decided that officials now would discuss modalities of how this Eminent Persons Group can be established.

I think I will stop here. If there are any questions, I will be happy to answer.

Question: First of all, I congratulate all of you, especially my media friends that we have got great success in G20 and India has come closer to the world powers. Madam, India always has been a supporter of the human rights. But is it not unfortunate that those people who made 90 per cent of the sacrifices of the total sacrifices made by Indians for the freedom of the country have to today demonstrate for their rights? I have gone through the list. There are so many people against whom there is not even a single case. Your list is with me. There are some children and some old people who want to visit India, their native land before death. Will you please tell why the genuine demands have been kept so long pending by the previous governments? India's stand is very much positive and we are playing our great role for the revival of global economy and we have been successful also. Will you please tell us that when this violation of human rights will end and people will get justice?

Foreign Secretary: Let me say that the matter is under the consideration of the Government. We are aware of the issues that have been raised by the group of people that you referred to. The Ministry of External Affairs has taken up the matter with the Ministry of Home Affairs. The whole matter is under review currently. We have begun a series of meetings to look at the issue in depth with a view to considering the requests that have been made by these people. I am confident that we will have an outcome before long and an outcome that will do its best to meet some of the points and the issues raised by this group of people.

Question: First a clarification from the Foreign Secretary. There have been some reports about a sense of expectation that India could use the US bilateral talk about Warren Anderson’s extradition. Was that at all on the agenda? Did it figure in the talks, Madam?

Question: A couple of questions on the G20. Clause No.30 essentially seems to hint that there will be a more transparent process of selecting the heads of international financial institutions. Does it, Sir, now work in favour of India? The second question really is in terms of what we have started out to achieve. Could you quantify or summarise what has India achieved in terms of its participation in the Summit because the sense that some of us get is that while the world was united during a crisis, it has sort of decided to go its own independent way in the aftermath?

Finance Secretary: On the first question about the heads of international financial institutions, this has generally been a demand all over the world that the process of selection of the Chiefs and the senior management should be more transparent, it should be merit based, it should not be confined to any specific countries or regions, as has somehow been in the past. So there is nothing in the book which says that. So, this is in a way a vindication of that position which has been acknowledged by the G20 nations who are the main shareholders in these institutions. So, the process of selection will help all countries including India.

On the second point of where the G20 is heading, what is happening, what does India get out of it, and so on, now this is, as you understand, a group of 20 countries which are certainly diverse in terms of their economic development, in terms of their regional backgrounds, in terms of what they produce and what commodities they have and so on. So, there are bound to be divergent interests even in the Group of 20. Having said that let me say that what the G20 has achieved in the aftermath of the crisis since 2008 is to really bring together the countries, the leaders, their Finance Ministers, their technicians, whether in the Government or in the Central banks, to sit and talk and think of coordinated policy strategies. And the proof of pudding is that it has helped. So, it is not as if today the feeling is that now the job is over, we need to get back to our own respective individual ways. Well, naturally every country will have its best economic interests at heart. But the spirit of cooperation, the spirit of working in coordination - coordination does not necessarily mean that they will align their policies with each other or with what the G20 would want to do - the spirit of coordination continues. It continues in the approach to fiscal consolidation where certain kind of countries will start consolidating first. In respect of surplus countries which need to follow policies where more domestic demand is generated in respect of advanced deficit economies which need to generate more local demand so that there is some kind of optimal balancing to the extent that is possible.

It is working together even in the area of regulation where, as they decided over the last few summits, there would be international benchmarks and regulations but to be enforced, to be implemented, and to be supervised nationally. So, the broad parameters and the broad framework continue. I think that is something very important which the G20 brings to the table, what the G20 sort of signals to the financial community and the markets.

Question: My first question is addressed to the Foreign Secretary. Madam, during the discussions between President Obama and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh you talked about the fact that they discussed about counter-terrorism. Is there any new area of cooperation that the two talked about?

The second question is addressed to Mr. Katju. Did the Prime Minister specifically raise the issue of some pro-Khalistan elements acting in Canada and did Prime Minister Harper given any specific assurance that the Canadian soil will not be used for any anti-India activity? Did he also raise the fact that there is some concern in India about injustice being given to Kanishka victims and is the Canadian Government going to do something about it?

Foreign Secretary: On your first question, when they spoke about counter-terrorism, in my opening remarks I referred to the fact that they discussed the situation in the region. And in that context the situation in Afghanistan came up, including the need to stabilize the situation in Afghanistan. That was the first point. The second point was of course relations with Pakistan. President Obama was very positive in his references to the efforts that we have initiated commencing with the meeting between our Prime Minister and Prime Minister Gilani at Thimphu to reengage with Pakistan and to view dialogue as the best way forward. That was the second point. In this context, Prime Minister referred of course to the fact that Pakistan is our neighbor and with neighbours the choice before us is really to strengthen dialogue, to resolve outstanding issues, but he added with Pakistan it is very important that Pakistan abides by its commitment not to allow its territory to be used by elements that engage in terrorism directed against India. And if that commitment was abided by and was strengthened in the future, then the relations between India and Pakistan would greatly benefit. Then they also spoke about the ongoing investigations into the activities of David Coleman Headley. Both India and the United States, have a mutual interest in ensuring that the information that is coming out of this interrogation is taken seriously by Pakistan and with a view to controlling and eliminating terrorist elements on its territory which affect the stability of the entire region. That was how it was discussed.

Secretary (West): On the questions that you had asked me, on Kanishka I think I can do no better than draw your attention to the opening statement of the Prime Minister at the press interaction where he does speak of the justice to the victims. You could have a look at that.

On the Khalistani issue, again if you recollect, at the press interaction the Prime Minister went into great detail on this and it would not really be proper for me to try to paraphrase that. That is on the record.

Question: Was there any specific assurance from the Canadian side?

Secretary (West): They do I think. If my recollection is correct, I think the Prime Minister said that the Canadian Prime Minister spoke to him about Canadian laws in this regard. But during the interaction at the delegation-level talks this matter had come up. And I think the feeling was that while laws and freedoms had to be respected, and there is freedom of expression in particular, but extremist activity itself cannot be accepted or is not acceptable if it converges into the kind of extremist activity which is now seen. So, there is a thin line between freedom of expression and extremism and that has to be monitored all the time.

Question: Madam, You just spoke about Pakistan. There is a statement of Pakistan’s Interior Minister Rehman Malik. He said that in India and Pakistan there are people, who always go on speaking about other countries. In India there are people who speak about Pakistan and people in Pakistan speak about India. You can’t do much about such people because there is the question of freedom of speech, of democracy. No much can be done of people like Hafiz Saeed.

Foreign Secretary: I just want to say in response to that that our Home Minister has just visited Pakistan and our concerns about Hafiz Saeed have been very effectively conveyed to the Pakistani Government and it continues to be our hope that Pakistan will pay close attention to what we are saying about individuals like Hafiz Saeed. And when Pakistan says that under their laws it is difficult to take action against such people, we still think it should still be possible for Pakistan to put some control on the activities of such persons who are not doing anything good for the relationship between the two countries.

Question: Sir, there is a clarification. Is there a dilution on the new capital framework where every country will be free to decide on the phasing of new capital structure?

Finance Secretary: The communiqué, from what I recall, refers to the fact that capital norms will be fixed, capital norms will indicate what can be included as capital, and that this will have to be implemented by the end of 2012 giving them some transition period. The basic objective is that the excess of which was the problem of the financial crisis, should be arrested and should not be allowed to become a problem or a malady again in the future. I do not think there is any, while there are views on that, but the process of regulation through the Financial Stability Board is proceeding at.

Question: Sir, two things. One is, besides the Final Declaration of the G20, how much of power Prime Minister’s vision on the economic policies for the world is reflected?

Secondly, specifically this is the paragraph 28 ...(Unclear)... where actually another five per cent has to go to the developing countries. What is holding it up? Last time I recall that in Pittsburgh there was an agreement that five per cent additional distribution will be done by next summit. Now you said that more work has to be done. Is there something holding out? Is the European Union still not reconciled? ...(Unclear)...

Finance Secretary: So far as India is concerned and so far as our Prime Minister is concerned, there are three main issues which we have been focusing on, not only in this summit but even in the previous discussions and the previous summits. One is that growth should not be stifled. It is still fragile. We should not get the impression that the world is out of the woods and therefore, start rolling back very fast. That is because 1) it is generally harmful for the entire group of countries, particularly harmful for developing countries. So, that is one issue which was pushed which has come through in the communiqué. In the nuancing between growth and fiscal consolidation where the tilt or the spectrum is slightly on the side of growth.

Number two, India and the other emerging economies have been pushing for reforms in international financial institutions. One part relating to the World Bank has been achieved. The other will be achieved in the next five, six months. Now let me say very honestly and clearly and this is something which we have to all appreciate, when you say five per cent quota shift from one part to the other side, there are countries who are going to lose. There are countries whose vote share is going to go down. So obviously there will be resistance from those countries. There will be attempts to delay the process; there will be attempts to bring in extraneous and other issues to try and build up what can be called composite packages that alright if you get quotas and we want these kinds of things and there should be certain governance reforms or certain changes in the way they fund, operate and so on and so forth. So, this is a process of discussion, of negotiation, if you call it, which is going at. But the mandate from the leaders is very clear. The timeline earlier was January 2011. It has been brought forward to November 2010 so that there is a concrete deliverable at the time of the Seoul Summit. We are hopeful that will happen.

The third thing which again is very important from our point of view and from the point of view of most countries is that we must get to a multilateral agreement on trade because a more efficient trading regime itself is the pill for many of the economic and financial problems. That has been in the works for some time. You would be aware, it is called the Doha Development Round. It is supposed to be more equitable, more in favour of the developing countries. The G20 is obviously not the main forum for that. But if the G20 keeps pushing and puts its weight behind it, we hope to get that. These are the three main things on which the Prime Minister has been concentrating, on which we have been concentrating. We see some progress in these areas. More will come in the months ahead.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

112. Declaration issued at the end of the Summit Conference of G-20 countries.

Toronto, June 27, 2010.

Preamble

1. In Toronto, we held our first Summit of the G-20 in its new capacity as the premier forum for our international economic cooperation.

2. Building on our achievements in addressing the global economic crisis, we have agreed on the next steps we should take to ensure a full return to growth with quality jobs, to reform and strengthen financial systems, and to create strong, sustainable and balanced global growth.

3. Our efforts to date have borne good results. Unprecedented and globally coordinated fiscal and monetary stimulus is playing a major role in helping to restore private demand and lending. We are taking strong steps toward increasing the stability and strength of our financial systems. Significantly increased resources for international financial institutions are helping stabilise and address the impact of the crisis on the world's most vulnerable. Ongoing governance and management reforms, which must be completed, will also enhance the effectiveness and relevance of these institutions. We have successfully maintained our strong commitment to resist protectionism.

4. But serious challenges remain. While growth is returning, the recovery is uneven and fragile, unemployment in many countries remains at unacceptable levels, and the social impact of the crisis is still widely felt. Strengthening the recovery is key. To sustain recovery, we need to follow through on delivering existing stimulus plans, while working to create the conditions for robust private demand. At the same time, recent events highlight the importance of sustainable public finances and the need for our countries to put in place credible, properly phased and growth-friendly plans to deliver fiscal sustainability, differentiated for and tailored to national circumstances. Those countries with serious fiscal challenges need to accelerate the pace of consolidation. This should be combined with efforts to rebalance global demand to help ensure global growth continues on a sustainable path. Further progress is also required on financial repair and reform to increase the transparency and strengthen the balance sheets of our financial institutions, and support credit availability and rapid growth, including in the real economy. We took new steps to build a better regulated and more resilient financial system that serves the needs of our citizens. There is also a pressing need to complete the reforms of the international financial institutions.

5. Recognizing the importance of achieving strong job growth and providing social protection to our citizens, particularly our most vulnerable, we welcome the recommendations of our Labour and Employment Ministers, who met in April 2010, and the training strategy prepared by the International Labour Organization (ILO) in collaboration with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD).

6. We are determined to be accountable for the commitments we have made, and have instructed our Ministers and officials to take all necessary steps to implement them fully within agreed timelines.

The Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth

7. The G-20’s highest priority is to safeguard and strengthen the recovery and lay the foundation for strong, sustainable and balanced growth, and strengthen our financial systems against risks. We therefore welcome the actions taken and commitments made by a number of G-20 countries to boost demand and rebalance growth, strengthen our public finances, and make our financial systems stronger and more transparent.
These measures represent substantial contributions to our collective well-being and build on previous actions. We will continue to co-operate and undertake appropriate actions to bolster economic growth and foster a strong and lasting recovery.

8. The Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth that we launched in Pittsburgh is the means to achieving our shared objectives, by assessing the collective consistency of policy actions and strengthening policy frameworks.

9. We have completed the first stage of our Mutual Assessment Process and we concluded that we can do much better. The IMF and World Bank estimate that if we choose a more ambitious path of reforms, over the medium term:
global output would be higher by almost $4 trillion;
- tens of millions more jobs would be created;
- even more people would be lifted out of poverty; and
- global imbalances would be significantly reduced.

Increasing global growth on a sustainable basis is the most important step we can take in improving the lives of all of our citizens, including those in the poorest countries.

10. We are committed to taking concerted actions to sustain the recovery, create jobs and to achieve stronger, more sustainable and more balanced growth. These will be differentiated and tailored to national circumstances. We agreed today on:

- Following through on fiscal stimulus and communicating "growth friendly" fiscal consolidation plans in advanced countries that will be implemented going forward. Sound fiscal finances are essential to sustain recovery, provide flexibility to respond to new shocks, ensure the capacity to meet the challenges of aging populations, and avoid leaving future generations with a legacy of deficits and debt. The path of adjustment must be carefully calibrated to sustain the recovery in private demand.

There is a risk that synchronized fiscal adjustment across several major economies could adversely impact the recovery. There is also a risk that the failure to implement consolidation where necessary would undermine confidence and hamper growth. Reflecting this balance, advanced economies have committed to fiscal plans that will at least halve deficits by 2013 and stabilize or reduce government debt-to-GDP ratios by 2016. Recognizing the circumstances of Japan, we welcome the Japanese government’s fiscal consolidation plan announced recently with their growth strategy.

Those with serious fiscal challenges need to accelerate the pace of consolidation. Fiscal consolidation plans will be credible, clearly communicated, differentiated to national circumstances, and focused on measures to foster economic growth.
• Strengthening social safety nets, enhancing corporate governance reform, financial market development, infrastructure spending, and greater exchange rate flexibility in some emerging markets;
• Pursuing structural reforms across the entire G-20 membership to increase and sustain our growth prospects; and
• Making more progress on rebalancing global demand.

Monetary policy will continue to be appropriate to achieve price stability and thereby contribute to the recovery.

11. Advanced deficit countries should take actions to boost national savings while maintaining open markets and enhancing export competitiveness.

12. Surplus economies will undertake reforms to reduce their reliance on external demand and focus more on domestic sources of growth.

13. We are committed to narrowing the development gap and that we must consider the impact of our policy actions on low-income countries. We will continue to support development financing, including through new approaches that encourage development financing from both public and private sources.

14. We recognize that these measures will need to be implemented at the national level and will need to be tailored to individual country circumstances. To facilitate this process, we have agreed that the second stage of our country-led and consultative mutual assessment will be conducted at the country and European level and that we will each identify additional measures, as necessary, that we will take toward achieving strong, sustainable, and balanced growth.

Financial Sector Reform

15. We are building a more resilient financial system that serves the needs of our economies, reduces moral hazard, limits the build up of systemic risk, and supports strong and stable economic growth. We have strengthened the global financial system by fortifying prudential oversight, improving risk management, promoting transparency, and reinforcing international cooperation. A great deal has been accomplished. We welcome the full implementation of the European Stabilization Mechanism and Facility, the EU decision to publicly release the results of ongoing tests on European banks, and the recent US financial reform bill.

16. But more work is required. Accordingly, we pledge to act together to achieve the commitments to reform the financial sector made at the Washington, London and Pittsburgh Summits by the agreed or accelerated timeframes. The transition to new standards will take into account the cumulative macroeconomic impact of the reforms in advanced and emerging economies. We are committed to international assessment and peer review to ensure that all our decisions are fully implemented.

17. Our reform agenda rests on four pillars.

18. The first pillar is a strong regulatory framework. We took stock of the progress of the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (BCBS) towards a new global regime for bank capital and liquidity and we welcome and support its work. Substantial progress has been made on reforms that will materially raise levels of resilience of our banking systems. The amount of capital will be significantly higher and the quality of capital will be significantly improved when the new reforms are fully implemented. This will enable banks to withstand - without extraordinary government support - stresses of a magnitude associated with the recent financial crisis. We support reaching agreement at the time of the Seoul Summit on the new capital framework. We agreed that all members will adopt the new standards and these will be phased in over a timeframe that is consistent with sustained recovery and limits market disruption, with the aim of implementation by end-2012, and a transition horizon informed by the macroeconomic impact assessment of the Financial Stability Board (FSB) and BCBS. Phase-in arrangements will reflect different national starting points and circumstances, with initial variance around the new standards narrowing over time as countries converge to the new global standard.

19. We agreed to strengthen financial market infrastructure by accelerating the implementation of strong measures to improve transparency and regulatory oversight of hedge funds, credit rating agencies and over-the-counter derivatives in an internationally consistent and nondiscriminatory way. We re-emphasized the importance of achieving a single set of high quality improved global accounting standards and the implementation of the FSB's standards for sound compensation.

20. The second pillar is effective supervision. We agreed that new, stronger rules must be complemented with more effective oversight and supervision. We tasked the FSB, in consultation with the IMF, to report to our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in October 2010 on recommendations to strengthen oversight and supervision, specifically relating to the mandate, capacity and resourcing of supervisors and specific powers which should be adopted to proactively identify and address risks, including early intervention.

21. The third pillar is resolution and addressing systemic institutions. We are committed to design and implement a system where we have the powers and tools to restructure or resolve all types of financial institutions in crisis, without taxpayers ultimately bearing the burden, and adopted principles that will guide implementation. We called upon the FSB to consider and develop concrete policy recommendations to effectively address problems associated with, and resolve, systemically important financial institutions by the Seoul Summit. To reduce moral hazard risks, there is a need to have a policy framework including effective resolution tools, strengthened prudential and supervisory requirements, and core financial market infrastructures. We agreed the financial sector should make a fair and substantial contribution towards paying for any burdens associated with government interventions, where they occur, to repair the financial system or fund resolution, and reduce risks from the financial system. We recognized that there are a range of policy approaches to this end. Some countries are pursuing a financial levy. Other countries are pursuing different approaches.

22. The fourth pillar is transparent international assessment and peer review. We have strengthened our commitment to the IMF/World Bank Financial Sector Assessment Program (FSAP) and pledge to support robust and transparent peer review through the FSB. We are addressing non-cooperative jurisdictions based on comprehensive, consistent, and transparent assessment with respect to tax havens, the fight against money laundering and terrorist financing and the adherence to prudential standards.
International Financial Institutions and Development

23. The International Financial Institutions (IFIs) have been a central part of the global response to the financial and economic crisis, mobilizing critical financing, including $750 billion by the IMF and $235 billion by the Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs). This has underscored the value of these institutions as platforms for our global cooperation.

24. We commit to strengthening the legitimacy, credibility and effectiveness of the IFIs to make them even stronger partners for us in the future.

25. Towards this end, we have fulfilled our Pittsburgh Summit commitment on the MDBs. This includes $350 billion in capital increases for the MDBs, allowing them to nearly double their lending. This new capital is joined to ongoing and important reforms to make these institutions more transparent, accountable and effective, and to strengthen their focus on lifting the lives of the poor, underwriting growth, and addressing climate change and food security.

26. We will fulfill our commitment to ensure an ambitious replenishment for the concessional lending facilities of the MDBs, especially the International Development Association and the African Development Fund.

27. We have endorsed the important voice reforms agreed by shareholders at the World Bank, which will increase the voting power of developing and transition countries by 4.59% since 2008.

28. We underscore our resolve to ensure ratification of the 2008 IMF Quota and Voice Reforms and expansion of the New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB).

29. We called for an acceleration of the substantial work still needed for the IMF to complete the quota reform by the Seoul Summit and in parallel deliver on other governance reforms, in line with commitments made in Pittsburgh.

30. Today we build on our earlier commitment to open, transparent and merit-based selection processes for the heads and senior leadership of all the IFIs. We will strengthen the selection processes in the lead up to the Seoul Summit in the context of broader reform.
31. We agreed to task our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to prepare policy options to strengthen global financial safety nets for our consideration at the Seoul Summit. Our goal is to build a more stable and resilient international monetary system.

32. We stand united with the people of Haiti and are providing much-needed reconstruction assistance, including the full cancellation of all of Haiti’s IFI debt. We welcome the launching of the Haiti Reconstruction Fund.

33. We have launched the SME Finance Challenge and commit to mobilizing funding for implementation of winning proposals, including through the strong support of the MDBs. We have developed a set of principles for innovative financial inclusion.

34. We welcome the launch of the Global Agriculture and Food Security Program in fulfillment of our Pittsburgh commitment on food security, an important step to further implement the Global Partnership for Agriculture and Food Security, and invite further contributions. Looking ahead, we commit to exploring innovative, results-based mechanisms to harness the private sector for agricultural innovation. We call for the full implementation of the L’Aquila Initiative and the application of its principles.

Fighting Protectionism and Promoting Trade and Investment

35. While the global economic crisis led to the sharpest decline of trade in more than seventy years, G-20 countries chose to keep markets open to the opportunities that trade and investment offer. It was the right choice.

36. As such, we renew for a further three years, until the end of 2013, our commitment to refrain from raising barriers or imposing new barriers to investment or trade in goods and services, imposing new export restrictions or implementing World Trade Organization (WTO)-inconsistent measures to stimulate exports, and commit to rectify such measures as they arise. We will minimize any negative impact on trade and investment of our domestic policy actions, including fiscal policy and action to support the financial sector. We ask the WTO, OECD and UNCTAD to continue to monitor the situation within their respective mandates, reporting publicly on these commitments on a quarterly basis.
37. Open markets play a pivotal role in supporting growth and job creation, and in achieving our goals under the G-20 Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth. We ask the OECD, the ILO, World Bank, and the WTO to report on the benefits of trade liberalization for employment and growth at the Seoul Summit.

38. We therefore reiterate our support for bringing the WTO Doha Development Round to a balanced and ambitious conclusion as soon as possible, consistent with its mandate and based on the progress already made. We direct our representatives, using all negotiating avenues, to pursue this objective, and to report on progress at our next meeting in Seoul, where we will discuss the status of the negotiations and the way forward.

39. We commit to maintain momentum for Aid for Trade. We also ask international agencies, including the World Bank and other Multilateral Development Banks to step up their capacity and support trade facilitation which will boost world trade.

Other Issues and Forward Agenda

40. We agree that corruption threatens the integrity of markets, undermines fair competition, distorts resource allocation, destroys public trust and undermines the rule of law. We call for the ratification and full implementation by all G-20 members of the United Nations Convention against Corruption (UNCAC) and encourage others to do the same. We will fully implement the reviews in accordance with the provisions of UNCAC. Building on the progress made since Pittsburgh to address corruption, we agree to establish a Working Group to make comprehensive recommendations for consideration by Leaders in Korea on how the G-20 could continue to make practical and valuable contributions to international efforts to combat corruption and lead by example, in key areas that include, but are not limited to, adopting and enforcing strong and effective anti-bribery rules, fighting corruption in the public and private sectors, preventing access of corrupt persons to global financial systems, cooperation in visa denial, extradition and asset recovery, and protecting whistleblowers who stand-up against corruption.

41. We reiterate our commitment to a green recovery and to sustainable global growth. Those of us who have associated with the Copenhagen Accord reaffirm our support for it and its implementation and call on others to associate with it. We are committed to engage in negotiations under the UNFCCC on the basis of its objective provisions and principles including common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities and are determined to ensure a successful outcome through an inclusive process at the Cancun Conferences. We thank Mexico for undertaking to host the sixteenth Conference of the Parties (COP 16) in Cancun from November 29 to December 20, 2010 and express our appreciation for its efforts to facilitate negotiations. We look forward to the outcome of the UN Secretary-General’s High-Level Advisory Group on Climate Change Financing which is, inter alia, exploring innovative finance.

42. We note with appreciation the report on energy subsidies from the International Energy Agency (IEA), Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), OECD and World Bank. We welcome the work of Finance and Energy Ministers in delivering implementation strategies and timeframes, based on national circumstances, for the rationalization and phase out over the medium term of inefficient fossil fuel subsidies that encourage wasteful consumption, taking into account vulnerable groups and their development needs. We also encourage continued and full implementation of country specific strategies and will continue to review progress towards this commitment at upcoming summits.

43. Following the recent oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico we recognize the need to share best practices to protect the marine environment, prevent accidents related to offshore exploration and development, as well as transportation, and deal with their consequences.

44. We recognize that 2010 marks an important year for development issues. The September 2010 Millennium Development Goals (MDG) High Level Plenary will be a crucial opportunity to reaffirm the global development agenda and global partnership, to agree on actions for all to achieve the MDGs by 2015, and to reaffirm our respective commitments to assist the poorest countries.

45. In this regard it is important to work with Least Developed Countries (LDCs) to make them active participants in and beneficiaries of the global economic system. Accordingly we thank Turkey for its decision to host the 4th United Nations Conference on the LDCs in June 2011.
46. We welcome the Global Pulse Initiative interim report and look forward to an update.

47. Narrowing the development gap and reducing poverty are integral to our broader objective of achieving strong, sustainable and balanced growth and ensuring a more robust and resilient global economy for all. In this regard, we agree to establish a Working Group on Development and mandate it to elaborate, consistent with the G-20’s focus on measures to promote economic growth and resilience, a development agenda and multi-year action plans to be adopted at the Seoul Summit.

48. We will meet next in Seoul, Korea, on November 11-12, 2010. We will convene in November 2011 under the Chairmanship of France and in 2012 under the Chairmanship of Mexico.

49. We thank Canada for hosting the successful Toronto Summit.

ANNEX - I

The Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth

1. As a result of the extraordinary and highly coordinated policy actions agreed to at the Washington, London and Pittsburgh G-20 Summits, the global economy is recovering faster than was expected. Our decisive and unprecedented actions over the past two years have limited the downturn and spurred recovery.

2. Yet risks remain. Unemployment remains unacceptably high in many G-20 economies. The recovery is uneven across G-20 members both across advanced economies and between advanced and emerging economies. This poses risks to the continued economic expansion. There is a risk that global current account imbalances will widen again, absent further policy action. While considerable progress has been made in moving ahead on our financial sector repair and reform agenda, financial markets remain fragile and credit flows restrained. Concerns over large fiscal deficits and rising debt levels in some countries have also become a source of uncertainty and financial market volatility.

3. The G-20’s highest priority is to safeguard and strengthen the recovery and lay the foundation for strong, sustainable and balanced growth, including strengthening our financial systems against risks. We therefore welcome the actions taken and commitments made by a number of G-20 countries. Among more recent measures, we particularly welcome the full implementation of the European Financial Stability Mechanism and Facility; the EU decision to publicly release the results of ongoing tests on European banks; and the recent announcements of fiscal consolidation plans and targets by a number of G-20 countries. These represent substantial contributions to our collective well-being and build on our previous actions. We will continue to cooperate and undertake appropriate actions to bolster economic growth and foster a strong and lasting recovery.

4. The Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth we launched in Pittsburgh is the means to achieving our shared objectives. G-20 members have a responsibility to the community of nations to assure the overall health of the global economy. We committed to assess the collective consistency of our policy actions and to strengthen our policy frameworks in order to meet our common objectives. Through our collective policy action, we will ensure growth is sustained, more balanced, shared across all countries and regions of the world, and consistent with our development goals.

5. We have completed the first stage of our Mutual Assessment Process. As we requested in Pittsburgh, G-20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors, with the support of the IMF, World Bank, OECD, ILO and other international organisations, have assessed the collective consistency of our individual policy frameworks and global prospects under alternative policy scenarios.

6. The assessment is that in the absence of a coordinated policy response: global output is likely to remain below its pre-crisis trend; unemployment remains above pre-crisis levels in most countries; fiscal deficits and debt in some advanced economies reach unacceptably high levels; and, global current account imbalances, which narrowed during the crisis, widen again. Moreover, this outlook is subject to considerable downside risks.

7. We concluded that we can do much better. The IMF and World Bank estimate that if we choose a more ambitious path of reforms, over the medium term, we could:
• raise global output by up to $4 trillion;
• create an estimated 52 million jobs;
• lift up to 90 million people out of poverty; and
• significantly reduce global current account balances.

If we act in a coordinated manner, all regions are better off, now and in the future. Moreover, increasing global growth on a sustainable basis is the most important step we can take in improving the lives of all, including those in the poorest countries. 8. We are committed to taking concerted actions to sustain the recovery, create jobs and to achieve stronger, more sustainable and more balanced growth. These will be differentiated and tailored to national circumstances. We agreed today on:

• Following through on fiscal stimulus and communicating "growth-friendly" fiscal consolidation plans in advanced countries and that will be implemented going forward;
• strengthening social safety nets, enhancing corporate governance reform, financial market development, infrastructure spending, and increasing exchange rate flexibility in some emerging markets;
• pursuing structural reforms across the entire G-20 membership to increase and sustain our growth prospects; and
• Making further progress on rebalancing global demand. Monetary policy will continue to be appropriate to achieve price stability and thereby contribute to the recovery.

9. We agreed to follow through on fiscal stimulus and communicating "growth friendly" fiscal consolidation plans in advanced countries that will be implemented going forward. Sound fiscal finances are essential to sustain recovery, provide flexibility to respond to new shocks, ensure the capacity to meet the challenges of aging populations, and avoid leaving future generations with a legacy of deficits and debt. The path of adjustment must be carefully calibrated to sustain the recovery in private demand. There is a risk that synchronized fiscal adjustment across several major economies could adversely impact the recovery. There is also a risk that the failure to implement consolidation where necessary would undermine confidence and hamper growth. Reflecting this balance, advanced economies have committed to fiscal plans that will at least halve deficits by 2013 and stabilize or reduce government debt-to-GDP ratios by 2016. Recognizing the circumstances of Japan, we welcome the Japanese government’s fiscal consolidation plan announced recently with their growth strategy. Those with serious fiscal challenges need to accelerate the pace of consolidation. Fiscal consolidation plans will be credible, clearly communicated, differentiated to national circumstances, and focused on measures to foster economic growth.

10. We have agreed on a set of principles to guide these fiscal consolidation plans by advanced economies:

- Fiscal consolidation plans will be credible. They will be based on prudent assumptions with respect to economic growth and our respective fiscal positions, and they will identify specific measures to achieve a target path that ensures fiscal sustainability. Strengthened budgetary frameworks and institutions can help underpin the credibility of consolidation strategies.

- The time to communicate our medium-term fiscal plans is now. We will elaborate clear and credible plans that put our fiscal finances on a sustainable footing. The speed and timing of withdrawing fiscal stimulus and reducing deficits and debt will be differentiated for and tailored to national circumstances, and the needs of the global economy. However, it is clear that consolidation will need to begin in advanced economies in 2011, and earlier for countries experiencing significant fiscal challenges at present.

- Fiscal consolidation will focus on measures that will foster economic growth. We will look at ways to use our fiscal resources more efficiently, to help reduce the overall cost of our interventions while targeting resources to where they are most needed. In addition, we will focus on structural reforms that will promote long-term growth.

11. Advanced deficit countries should take actions to boost national savings while maintaining open markets and enhancing export competitiveness.
12. Surplus economies will undertake reforms to reduce their reliance on the external demand and focus more on domestic sources of growth. This will help strengthen their resilience to external shocks and promote more stable growth. To do this, advanced surplus economies will focus on structural reforms that support increased domestic demand. Emerging surplus economies will undertake reforms tailored to country circumstances to:

- Strengthen social safety nets (such as public health care and pension plans), corporate governance and financial market development to help reduce precautionary savings and stimulate private spending;
- Increase infrastructure spending to help boost productive capacity and reduce supply bottlenecks; and
- Enhance exchange rate flexibility to reflect underlying economic fundamentals. Excess volatility and disorderly movements in exchange rates can have adverse implications for economic and financial stability. Market-oriented exchange rates that reflect underlying economic fundamentals contribute to global economic stability.

13. Across all G-20 members, we recognise that structural reforms can have a substantial impact on economic growth and global welfare. We will implement measures that will enhance the growth potential of our economies in a manner that pays particular attention to the most vulnerable. Reforms could support the broadly-shared expansion of demand if wages grow in line with productivity. It will be important to strike the right balance between policies that support greater market competition and economic growth and policies that preserve social safety nets consistent with national circumstances. Together these measures will also help unlock demand. These include:

- Product, service and labour market reforms in advanced economies, particularly those economies that may have lost some productive capacity during the crisis. Labour market reforms might include: better targeted unemployment benefits and more effective active labour market policies (such as job retraining, job search and skills development programs, and raising labour mobility). It might also include putting in place the right conditions for wage bargaining systems to support employment. Product and service market reforms might include strengthening competition in the service sector; reducing barriers to competition in network industries, professional services and retail sectors, encouraging innovation and further reducing the barriers to foreign competition.

- Reducing restrictions on labour mobility, enhancing foreign investment opportunities and simplifying product market regulation in emerging market economies.
- Avoiding new protectionist measures.
- Completing the Doha Round to accelerate global growth through trade flows. Open trade will yield significant benefits for all and can facilitate global rebalancing.
- Actions to accelerate financial repair and reform. Weaknesses in financial sector regulation and supervision in advanced economies led to the recent crisis. We will implement the G-20 financial reform agenda and ensure a stronger financial system serves the needs of the real economy. While not at the centre of the crisis, financial sectors in some emerging economies need to be developed further so that they can provide the depth and breadth of services required to promote and sustain high rates of economic growth and development. It is important that financial reforms in advanced economies take into account any adverse effects on financial flows to emerging and developing economies. Vigilance is also needed to ensure open capital markets and avoid financial protectionism.

14. We welcome the recommendations of our Labour and Employment Ministers, who met in April 2010, on the employment impacts of the global economic crisis. We reaffirm our commitment to achieving strong job growth and providing social protection to our most vulnerable citizens. An effective employment policy should place quality jobs at the heart of the recovery. We appreciate the work done by the International Labour Organization in collaboration with the OECD on a training strategy that will help equip the workforce with the skills required for the jobs of today and those of tomorrow.
15. We are committed to narrowing the development gap and that we must consider the impact of our policy actions on low-income countries. We will continue support development financing, including through new approaches that encourage development financing from both public and private sources. The crisis will have long lasting impact on the development trajectories of poor countries in every region of the world. Among these effects, developing countries are likely to face increased challenges in securing financing from both public and private sources. Many of us have already taken steps to help address this shortfall by implementing innovative approaches to financing, such as advance market commitments, the SME challenge and recent progress with respect to financial inclusion. Low-income countries have the potential to contribute to stronger and more balanced global growth, and should be viewed as markets for investment.

16. These measures need to be implemented at the national level and tailored to individual country circumstances. We welcome additional measures announced by some G-20 members aimed at meeting our shared objectives.

17. To facilitate this process, the second stage of our country-led, consultative mutual assessment will be conducted at the country and European level. Each G-20 member will identify the measures it is taking to implement the policies we have agreed upon today to ensure stronger, more sustainable and balanced growth. We ask our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to elaborate on these measures and report on them when we next meet. We will continue to draw on the expertise of the IMF, World Bank, OECD, ILO and other international organisations, as necessary. These measures will form the basis of our comprehensive action plan that will be announced in the Seoul Summit. As we pursue strong, sustainable and more balanced growth, we continue to encourage work on measurement methods to take into account social and environmental dimensions of economic development.

18. The policy commitments we are making today, along with the significant policy measures we have already taken, will allow us to reach our objective of strong, sustainable and balanced growth, the benefits of which will be felt both within the G-20 and across the globe.

ANNEX - II

Financial Sector Reform

1. The financial crisis has imposed huge costs. This must not be allowed to happen again. The recent financial volatility has strengthened our resolve to work together to complete financial repair and reform. We need to build a more resilient financial system that serves the needs of our economies, reduces moral hazard, limits the build-up of systemic risk and supports strong and stable economic growth.

2. Collectively we have made considerable progress toward strengthening the global financial system by fortifying prudential oversight, improving risk management, promoting transparency and continuously reinforcing international cooperation. We welcome the strong financial regulatory reform bill in the United States.

3. But there is more to be done. Further repair to the financial sector is critical to achieving sustainable global economic recovery. More work is required to restore the soundness and enhance the transparency of banks' balance sheets and markets; and improve the corporate governance and risk management of financial firms in order to strengthen the global financial system and restore the credit needed to fuel sustainable economic growth. We welcome the decision of EU leaders to publish the results of ongoing tests on European banks to reassure markets of the resilience and transparency of the European banking system.

4. We pledge to act together to achieve the commitments to reform the financial sector made at the Washington, London and Pittsburgh Summits by the agreed or accelerated timeframes. Transition horizons will take into account the cumulative macroeconomic impact of the reforms in advanced and emerging economies.

Capital and Liquidity

5. We agreed that the core of the financial sector reform agenda rests on improving the strength of capital and liquidity and discouraging excessive leverage. We agreed to increase the quality, quantity, and international consistency of capital, to strengthen liquidity standards, to discourage excessive leverage and risk taking, and reduce procyclicality.
6. We took stock of the progress of the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (BCBS) towards a new global regime for bank capital and liquidity and we welcome and support its work. Substantial progress has been made on reforms that will materially raise levels of resilience of our banking systems.

- The amount of capital will be significantly higher when the new reforms are fully implemented.
- The quality of capital will be significantly improved to reinforce banks' ability to absorb losses.

7. We support reaching agreement, at the time of the Seoul Summit, on a new capital framework that would raise capital requirements by:

- establishing a new requirement that each bank hold in Tier 1 capital, at a minimum, an increasing share of common equity, after deductions, measured as a percentage of risk-weighted assets, that enables them to withstand with going concern fully-lossabsorbing capital - without extraordinary government support - stresses of a magnitude associated with the recent financial crisis.
- moving to a globally consistent and transparent set of conservative deductions generally applied at the level of common equity, or its equivalent in the case of nonjoint stock companies, over a suitable globally-consistent transition period.

8. Based on our agreement at the Pittsburgh Summit that Basel II will be adopted in all major centers by 2011, we agreed that all members will adopt the new standards and these will be phased in over a timeframe that is consistent with sustained recovery and limits market disruption, with the aim of implementation by end-2012, and a transition horizon informed by the macroeconomic impact assessment of the Financial Stability Board (FSB) and BCBS.

9. Phase-in arrangements will reflect different national starting points and circumstances, with initial variance around the new standards narrowing over time as countries converge to the new global standard. Existing public sector capital injections will be grandfathered for the extent of the transition.
10. We reiterated support for the introduction of a leverage ratio as a supplementary measure to the Basel II risk-based framework with a view to migrating to Pillar I treatment after an appropriate transition period based on appropriate review and calibration. To ensure comparability, the details of the leverage ratio will be harmonized internationally, fully adjusting for differences in accounting.

11. We acknowledged the importance of the quantitative impact study currently being conducted by the BCBS that measures the potential impact of the new Basel standards and will ensure that the new capital and liquidity standards are of high quality and adequately calibrated. The BCBS- FSB macroeconomic impact study will inform the development of the phase-in period of the new standards.

12. We welcomed the BCBS agreement on a coordinated start date not later than 31 December 2011 for all elements of the revised trading book rules.

13. We support the BCBS' work to consider the role of contingent capital in strengthening market discipline and helping to bring about a financial system where the private sector fully bears the losses on their investments. Consideration of contingent capital should be included as part of the 2010 reform package.

14. We called upon the FSB and the BCBS to report on progress of the full package of reform measures by the Seoul Summit. We recognize the critical role of the financial sector in driving a robust economy. We are committed to design a financial system which is resilient, stable and ensures the continued availability of credit.

More Intensive Supervision

15. We agreed that new, stronger rules must be complemented with more effective oversight and supervision. We are committed to the Basel Committee's Core Principles for Effective Banking Supervision and tasked the FSB, in consultation with the International Monetary Fund (IMF), to report to our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in October 2010 on recommendations to strengthen oversight and supervision, specifically relating to the mandate, capacity and resourcing.
of supervisors and specific powers which should be adopted to proactively identify and address risks, including early intervention.

Resolution of Financial Institutions

16. We are following through on our commitment to reduce moral hazard in the financial system. We are committed to design and implement a system where we have the powers and tools to restructure or resolve all types of financial institutions in crisis, without taxpayers ultimately bearing the burden. These powers should facilitate "going concern" capital and liquidity restructuring as well as "gone concern" restructuring and wind-down measures. We endorsed and have committed to implement our domestic resolution powers and tools in a manner that preserves financial stability and are committed to implement the ten key recommendations on cross-border bank resolution issued by the BCBS in March 2010. In this regard, we support changes to national resolution and insolvency processes and laws where needed to provide the relevant national authorities with the capacity to cooperate and coordinate resolution actions across borders.

17. We agree that resolution regimes should provide for:

- Proper allocation of losses to reduce moral hazard and protect taxpayers;
- Continuity of critical financial services, including uninterrupted service for insured depositors;
- Credibility of the resolution regime in the market;
- Minimization of contagion;
- Advanced planning for orderly resolution and transfer of contractual relationships; and,
- Effective cooperation and information exchange domestically and among jurisdictions in the event of a failure of a cross-border institution.

Addressing Systemically Important Financial Institutions

18. We welcomed the FSB's interim report on reducing the moral hazard risks posed by systemically important financial institutions. We recognized that more must be done to address these risks. Prudential requirements for such firms should be commensurate with the cost of their failure. We called upon the FSB to consider and develop concrete policy recommendations to effectively address problems associated with and resolve systemically important financial institutions by the Seoul Summit. This should include more intensive supervision along with consideration of financial instruments and mechanisms to encourage market discipline, including contingent capital, bail-in options, surcharges, levies, structural constraints, and methods to haircut unsecured creditors.

19. We welcomed the substantial progress that has been made regarding the development of supervisory colleges and crisis management groups for the major complex financial institutions identified by the FSB.

20. We continue to work together to develop robust agreed-upon institution-specific recovery and rapid resolution plans for major cross-border institutions by the end of 2010. We further committed to continue working on ensuring cooperation among jurisdictions in financial institution resolution proceedings.

Financial Sector Responsibility

21. We agreed the financial sector should make a fair and substantial contribution towards paying for any burdens associated with government interventions, where they occur, to repair the financial system or fund resolution.

22. To that end, we recognized that there is a range of policy approaches. Some countries are pursuing a financial levy. Other countries are pursuing different approaches. We agreed the range of approaches would follow these principles:

- Protect taxpayers;
- Reduce risks from the financial system;
- Protect the flow of credit in good times and bad times;
- Take into account individual countries' circumstances and options; and,
- Help promote a level playing field.
23. We thanked the IMF for its work in this area.

Financial Market Infrastructure and Scope of Regulation

24. We agreed on the need to strengthen financial market infrastructure in order to reduce systemic risk, improve market efficiency, transparency and integrity. Global action is important to minimize regulatory arbitrage, promote a level playing field, and foster the widespread application of the principles of propriety, integrity, and transparency.

25. We pledged to work in a coordinated manner to accelerate the implementation of over-the-counter (OTC) derivatives regulation and supervision and to increase transparency and standardization. We reaffirm our commitment to trade all standardized OTC derivatives contracts on exchanges or electronic trading platforms, where appropriate, and clear through central counterparties (CCPs) by end-2012 at the latest. OTC derivative contracts should be reported to trade repositories (TRs). We will work towards the establishment of CCPs and TRs in line with global standards and ensure that national regulators and supervisors have access to all relevant information. In addition we agreed to pursue policy measures with respect to haircut-setting and margining practices for securities financing and OTC derivatives transactions that will reduce procyclicality and enhance financial market resilience. We recognized that much work has been done in this area. We will continue to support further progress in implementing these measures.

26. We committed to accelerate the implementation of strong measures to improve transparency and regulatory oversight of hedge funds, credit rating agencies and over-the-counter derivatives in an internationally consistent and non-discriminatory way. We also committed to improve the functioning and transparency of commodities markets. We call on credit rating agencies to increase transparency and improve quality and avoid conflicts of interest, and on national supervisors to continue to focus on these issues in conducting their oversight.

27. We committed to reduce reliance on external ratings in rules and regulations. We acknowledged the work underway at the BCBS to address adverse incentives arising from the use of external ratings in the regulatory capital framework, and at the FSB to develop general principles to reduce authorities' and financial institutions' reliance on external ratings. We called on them to report to our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in October 2010.

28. We acknowledged the significant work of the International Organization of Securities Commission (IOSCO) to facilitate the exchange of information amongst regulators and supervisors, as well as IOSCO's principles regarding the oversight of hedge funds aimed at addressing related regulatory and systemic risks.

29. We called on the FSB to review national and regional implementation of prior G-20 commitments in these areas and promote global policy cohesion and to assess and report to 20 our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in October 2010 if further work is required.

Accounting Standards

30. We re-emphasized the importance we place on achieving a single set of high quality improved global accounting standards. We urged the International Accounting Standards Board and the Financial Accounting Standards Board to increase their efforts to complete their convergence project by the end of 2011.

31. We encouraged the International Accounting Standards Board to further improve the involvement of stakeholders, including outreach to emerging market economies, within the framework of the independent accounting standard setting process.

Assessment and Peer Review

32. We pledged to support robust and transparent independent international assessment and peer review of our financial systems through the IMF and World Bank's Financial Sector Assessment Program and the FSB peer review process. The mutual dependence and integrated nature of our financial system requires that we all live up to our commitments. Weak financial systems in some countries pose a threat to the stability of the international financial system. International assessment and peer review are fundamental in making the financial sector safer for all.

33. We reaffirmed the FSB's principal role in the elaboration of international financial sector supervisory and regulatory policies and standards, co-ordination across various standardsetting bodies, and ensuring accountability for the reform agenda by conducting thematic and country peer reviews and fostering a level playing field through coherent implementation across sectors and jurisdictions. To that end, we encourage the FSB to look at ways to strengthen its capacity to keep pace with growing demands.

34. We called upon the FSB to expand upon and formalize its outreach activities beyond the membership of the G-20 to reflect the global nature of our financial system. We recognized the prominent role of the FSB, along with other important organizations including, the IMF and World Bank.
These organizations, along with other international standard setters and supervisory authorities, play a central role to the health and well-being of our financial system.

35. We fully support the FSB's thematic peer reviews as a means of fostering consistent cross country implementation of financial and regulatory policies and to assess their effectiveness in achieving their intended results.
We welcomed the FSB's first thematic peer review report on compensation, which showed progress in the implementation of the FSB's 21 standards for sound compensation, but full implementation is far from complete. We couraged all countries and financial institutions to fully implement the FSB principles and standards by year-end. We call on the FSB to undertake ongoing monitoring in this area and conduct a second thorough peer review in the second quarter of 2011. We also look forward to the results of the FSB’s thematic review of risk disclosures.

36. We acknowledged the significant progress in the FSB's country review program. These reviews are an important complement to the IMF/World Bank Financial Sector Assessment Program and provide a forum for peer learning and dialogue to address challenges. Three reviews will be completed this year.

Other International Standards and Non-cooperative Jurisdictions

37. We agreed to consider measures and mechanisms to address non-cooperative jurisdictions based on comprehensive, consistent and transparent assessment, and encourage adherence, including by providing technical support, with the support of the international financial institutions (IFIs).
38. We fully support the work of the Global Forum on Transparency and Exchange of Information for Tax Purposes, and welcomed progress on their peer review process, and the development of a multilateral mechanism for information exchange which will be open to all interested countries. Since our meeting in London in April 2009, the number of signed tax information agreements has increased by almost 500. We encourage the Global Forum to report to Leaders by November 2011 on progress countries have made in addressing the legal framework required to achieve an effective exchange of information. We also welcome progress on the Stolen Asset Recovery Program, and support its efforts to monitor progress to recover the proceeds of corruption. We stand ready to use countermeasures against tax havens.

39. We fully support the work of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) and FATF-Style Regional Bodies in their fight against money laundering and terrorist financing and regular updates of a public list on jurisdictions with strategic deficiencies. We also encourage the FATF to continue monitoring and enhancing global compliance with the anti-money laundering and counter-terrorism financing international standards.

40. We welcomed the implementation of the FSB’s evaluation process on the adherence to prudential information exchange and international cooperation standards in all jurisdictions.

ANNEX - III

Enhancing the Legitimacy, Credibility and Effectiveness of the IFIs and Further Supporting the Needs of the Most Vulnerable

1. The global economic and financial crisis has demonstrated the value of the International Financial Institutions (IFIs) as instruments for coordinating multilateral action. These institutions were on the front-line in responding to the crisis, mobilizing $985 billion in critical financing. In addition, the international community and the IFIs mobilized over $250 billion in trade finance.
2. The crisis also demonstrated the importance of delivering further reforms. As key platforms for our cooperation, we are committed to strengthening the legitimacy, credibility and effectiveness of the IFIs, to ensure that they are capable of helping us maintain global financial and economic stability and supporting the growth and development of all their members.

3. To enhance the legitimacy and effectiveness of the IFIs, we committed in London and Pittsburgh to support new open, transparent and merit-based selection processes for the heads and senior leadership of all International Financial Institutions. We will strengthen these processes in the lead up to the Seoul Summit in the context of broader reform.

MDB Financing

4. Since the start of the global financial crisis, the MDBs have been playing an important role in the global response by exceeding our London commitment, in providing $235 billion in lending, more than half of which has come from the World Bank Group. At a time when private sector sources of finance were diminished, this lending was critical to global stabilization. Now more than ever, the MDBs are key development partners for many countries.

5. We have fulfilled our commitment to ensure that the MDBs have appropriate resources through capital increases for the major MDBs, including the Asian Development Bank (AsDB), the African Development Bank (AfDB), the Inter-American Development Bank (IADB), the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD), the World Bank Group, notably the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC). As major shareholders at these institutions, we have worked together with other members to increase their capital base by 85%, or approximately $350 billion. Overall, their total lending to developing countries will grow from $37 billion per year to $71 billion per year. This will improve their ability to address the increasing demand in the short and medium terms and to have enough resources to support their members. We support efforts to implement these agreements as quickly as possible.

6. We recognize the acute development needs in Africa, the region the furthest behind on the Millennium Development Goals. For this reason, the African Development Bank will be capitalized for substantial growth, with a 200% increase in its capital and corresponding tripling of its annual lending levels, to strengthen capacity to support the region's long-term growth and development.

7. To ensure that the IFC has the resources necessary for its continued growth, we will consider a long-term hybrid instrument to shareholders and earnings retention, to complement the recent selective capital increase linked to voice reforms.

8. In order to support low income countries, given their need to borrow at more concessional terms, we will fulfill our commitment to ensure an ambitious replenishment for the concessional lending facilities of the MDBs, especially the International Development Association (IDA) and the African Development Fund, which are undergoing financial replenishments this year. We welcome the fact that many G-20 members have taken important steps to join as donors to these institutions. We reiterated our support for fairer and wider burden sharing.

MDB Reforms

9. We have also fulfilled our commitment to ensure that these capital increases are joined to ongoing and important institutional reforms to make the MDBs more effective, efficient and accountable. These include:

- Commitments to further support the poorest countries in a financially prudent way, including by transferring resources, where feasible, from MDB net income to their respective lending facilities for low income countries and increasing their investment activities in low income countries and frontier regions. This will ensure that the new capital resources benefit both low income and middle income countries.

- Specific actions for greater transparency, stronger accountability, improved institutional governance deeper country ownership, more decentralization and use of country systems where appropriate, and enhanced procurement guidelines, new ways of managing and tracking results and financial contributions, strengthen knowledge management, ensuring the right human resources with appropriate diversity, better implementing environmental and social safeguards, sound risk management, and ensuring financial sustainability with pricing linked to expenses, and a commitment to continue to reduce administrative expenses and make them more transparent.

- Deeper support for private sector development, including through more private sector operations and investment, as a vital component of sustainable and inclusive development.

- Recommitting to their core development mandates and taking up a greater role in the provision of global solutions to transnational problems, such as climate change and food security.

10. With these reform commitments, we are building not just bigger MDBs, but better MDBs, with more strategic focus on lifting the lives of the poor, underwriting growth, promoting security, and addressing the global challenges of climate change and food security. Implementation of these reforms has already begun, and we will continue to ensure that this work is completed and that further reforms are undertaken where necessary.

World Bank Group Voice Reforms

11. We welcomed the agreement on the World Bank's voice reform to increase the voting power of developing and transition countries by 3.13% consistent with the agreement at the Pittsburgh Summit. When combined with the 1.46% increase agreed in the previous phase of the reforms, this will provide a total shift of 4.59% to DTCs, bringing their overall voting power to 47.19%. We committed to continue moving over time towards equitable voting power, while protecting the smallest nations, by arriving at a dynamic formula which primarily reflects countries’ evolving economic weight and the World Bank’s development mission. We also endorsed voice reforms at the IFC which will provide a total shift of 6.07%, to bring DTC voting power to 39.48%.

Debt Relief for Haiti

12. We stand united with the people of Haiti as they struggle to recover from the devastation wrought by the earthquake in January, and we join other donors in providing assistance in 25 this difficult time, including through the Haiti Reconstruction Fund set up by the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank and the United Nations. To ensure that Haiti’s recovery efforts can focus on its reconstruction action plan, rather than the debt obligations of its past, our Finance Ministers agreed last April to support full cancellation of Haiti’s debts to all IFIs, including through burden sharing of the associated costs, where necessary. We are pleased that an agreement on a framework for cancelling such debt has been reached at the IMF; the World Bank, the International Fund for Agriculture Development, and soon at the Inter-American Development Bank. We will contribute our fair shares of the associated costs as soon as possible. We will report on progress at the Seoul Summit.

IMF Reforms

13. We are committed to strengthening the legitimacy, credibility and effectiveness of the IMF to ensure it succeeds in carrying out its mandate.
Important actions have been taken by the G-20 and the international community since the onset of the crisis, including the mobilization of $750 billion to support IMF members' needs for crisis financing. The IMF raised $250 billion in new resources through immediate bilateral loans and note purchase agreements, to be subsequently incorporated into a $500 billion expansion of the New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB). The IMF also implemented a $250 billion new general allocation of SDRs to bolster the foreign exchange reserves of all members. Along with important surveillance and lending reforms, including a new early-warning exercise and the creation of new precautionary instruments such as the Flexible Credit Line, these actions have significantly increased the IMF's crisis response capacity. However, important work remains to be completed to fully reform the IMF.

14. We called for an acceleration of the substantial work still needed for the IMF to complete the quota reform by the Seoul Summit and in parallel deliver on other governance reforms, in line with commitments made in Pittsburgh. Modernizing the IMF’s governance is a core element of our effort to improve the IMF’s credibility, legitimacy, and effectiveness. We recognize that the IMF should remain a quota-based organization and that the distribution of quotas should reflect the relative weights of its members in the world economy, which have changed substantially in view of the strong growth in dynamic emerging market and developing countries. To this end, we are committed to a shift in quota share to dynamic emerging market and developing countries of at least five percent from over-represented to under-represented countries using the current IMF quota formula as the basis to work from. We are also committed to protecting the voting share of the poorest in the IMF. As part of this process, we agree that a number of other critical issues will need to be addressed, including: the size of any increase in IMF quotas, which will have a bearing on the ability to facilitate change in quota shares; the size and composition of the Executive Board; ways of enhancing the Board’s effectiveness; and the Fund Governors’ involvement in the strategic oversight of the IMF. Staff diversity should be enhanced.

15. We underscored our resolve to ensure the IMF has the resources it needs so that it can play its important role in the world economy. The majority of G-20 members have ratified the 2008 IMF Quota and Voice Reforms, fulfilling an important commitment made in London. Those members who have yet to ratify commit to doing so by the Seoul Summit. This action will not just enhance the legitimacy of the IMF by increasing the voice and participation of developing countries, it will also provide the IMF with $30 billion in new quota resources. We call on all IMF members to ratify the agreement this year.

16. A number of G-20 members have already formally accepted the recently agreed reforms to the expanded NAB, which will provide a significant back-stop to IMF quota resources, consolidating over $500 billion for IMF lending to countries in crisis. Other participating G-20 members will complete the acceptance process by the next meeting of G-20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors. We call on all existing and new NAB participants to do the same.

17. G-20 members committed to ensure that the IMF’s concessional financing for the poorest countries be expanded by $6 billion through the proceeds from the agreed sale of IMF gold, consistent with the IMF’s new income model, and the employment of internal and other resources. We are delivering. Some G-20 members have supported this commitment with additional loan and subsidy resources for the Poverty Reduction and Growth Trust (PRGT) and some others plan to contribute in the coming months.

18. We acknowledged a need for national, regional and international efforts to deal with capital flow volatility, financial fragility, and prevent crisis contagion. We task our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to prepare policy options, based on sound incentives, to strengthen global financial safety nets for our consideration at the Seoul Summit. In line with these efforts, we also call on the IMF to make rapid progress in reviewing its lending instruments, with a view to further reforming them as appropriate. In parallel, IMF surveillance should be enhanced to focus on systemic risks and vulnerabilities wherever they may lie. Our goal is to build a more stable and resilient international monetary system.

Further Supporting the Needs of the Most Vulnerable

19. We have made significant progress in supporting the poorest countries during the crisis and must continue to take measures to assist the most vulnerable and must ensure that the poorest countries benefit from our efforts to restore global growth. We recognize the urgency of this, and are committed to meeting the Millennium Development Goals by 2015 and will reinforce our efforts to this end, including through the use of Official Development Assistance.

20. We have made concrete progress on our commitment to improving access to financial services for the poor and to increasing financing available to small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in developing countries.

21. Adequately financed small and medium-sized businesses are vital to job creation and a growing economy, particularly in emerging economies. We have launched the SME Finance Challenge aimed at finding the most promising models for public-private partnerships that catalyze finance for SMEs. We are committed to mobilizing the funding needed to implement winning proposals, including through the strong support of the MDBs. We welcome the strong support of the MDBs for scalable and sustainable SME financing proposals, including those from the Challenge in partnership with the private sector. We look forward to announcing the winning proposals of the SME Finance Challenge and to receiving recommendations to scale-up successful SME finance models at the Seoul Summit.

22. We have developed a set of principles for innovative financial inclusion, which will form the basis of a concrete and pragmatic action plan for improving access to financial services amongst the poor. This action plan will be released at the Seoul Summit.

23. At the Pittsburgh Summit, we recognised the importance of sustained funding and targeted investments to improve long-term food security in low income countries. We welcome the launch of the Global Agriculture and Food Security Program (GAFSP), which will provide predictable financing for low income countries to improve agricultural productivity, raise rural incomes, and build sustainable agricultural systems. We are particularly pleased that the fund has approved inaugural grants totalling $224 million for Bangladesh, Rwanda, Haiti, Togo, and Sierra Leone. We also support the development of the private sector window of the GAFSP, which will increase private sector investments to support small and medium sized agri-businesses and farmers in poor countries. We welcome the support already received, and encourage additional donor contributions to both the public and private sector windows of the GAFSP.
24. There is still an urgency to accelerate research and development to close agricultural productivity gaps, including through regional and South-South cooperation, amidst growing demands and mounting environmental stresses, particularly in Africa. The private sector will be critical in the development and deployment of innovative solutions that provide concrete results on the ground. We commit to exploring the potential of innovative, results-based mechanisms such as advance market commitments to harness the creativity and resources of the private sector in achieving breakthrough innovations in food security and agriculture development in poor countries. We will report on progress at the Seoul Summit.

113. Interaction of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with the media onboard his special flight from Toronto to New Delhi while returning from the G20 Summit.

Question: What were your expectations from G-20 Summit, especially when it is seen as a rich countries' forum against the less richer ones? Are you satisfied with the bilateral talks?

Answer: Well this meeting of the Group of was in some way the preparation for the summit meeting in Seoul this November. I think the Summit has helped in charting out the agenda and action points for the summit which will be firmed up in Seoul. As far as our immediate concern with regard to the situation in the Eurozone, the situation of the banking system in Europe and there was agreement that the recovery that has taken place in the last year is rather fragile. What is needed is a calibrated attempt at fiscal consolidation rather than a one size fits all sort of action. In that way there is progress, even those countries which want to go ahead with fiscal consolidation, I think the caveat is that this must be done in a growth-friendly manner and my impression is that even those European countries who came out with targets at fiscal consolidation they have been going about their business with due caution. In that way the Summit has played a useful role in clarifying what is the scope for fiscal consolidation and what manner the process of consolidation should be found. As far as India is concerned, our banking system remains well managed, our economy is growing at a rate of 8.5% per annum, our fiscal situation is a cause for concern but when we compare the fiscal deficit or the GDP debt ratio of the major developed countries, I think we come out much better.

Question: In your meeting with Sikh members of parliament of Canada, did they raise the terming of 1984 riots as genocide?

Answer: Well I met parliamentarians belonging to the Indian Diaspora. I complimented them, I praised them with regard to the achievements of the members of the Indian origin communities and the niche which they have carved out for themselves in Canadian public life, in Canadian economy, in services. So it was an attempt on my part to tell them that we in India take great pride in their achievements and that the community should remain united. It should not allow the divisive politics of our subcontinent to derail the cohesiveness that is necessary to ensure that the Indian communities continue to get their due share in the Canadian set up.

Question: Does the fuel price decontrol indicate you are ready for tougher reforms? Are we going to see further deregulations?

Answer: Well I can't tell you what we are going to do next. I think that when things get crystallized in the Government system you will know them. With regard to petroleum prices, the fact that petrol prices have been set free, the same is going to be done to the diesel prices, was much needed reforms. And the adjustment that has been made in the prices of Kerosene and LPG were also necessary, considering the very high amount of subsidy that is implicit in the pricing structure of Kerosene and LPG. We have taken due care to ensure that the poorer sections are affected to the least possible extent and that is why the attempt to keep under regulation the prices of kerosene and LPG.

Question: Has the decision to hike fuel prices been taken under some pressure?

Answer: There is no pressure on Government of India from any quarter. What we need is to do the right things by our country. The subsidies for the petroleum products have reached a level which is not connected to sound financial management of our economy. So it is taking that into account that this decision has been taken to put some burden on the common people, but I think it is manageable.

Question: In the G20 Communique issued this time around, has there been a situation wherein any country has been forced to go against its own national economic policy?

Answer: We are dealing with the affairs of sovereign nations. There is, I think a growing concern that the increasingly inter-dependent world in which we live in, there is need for macro policy coordination to a much greater degree than that has been feasible in the past. People have talked about macro economic co-ordination that the consolidation of the financial system, the fiscal consolidation must be undertaken in a manner that is growth friendly. The IMF has put forth some categories of the countries where approaches may be similar in tackling the problems macroeconomic co-ordination. But it is too early to assess the process. The IMF will come with its financial assessment of the financial imperatives of each of the 20 countries- and that would really be the time, I think people would be able to judge how far countries are willing to subordinate their sovereignty to the needs of managing an increasingly inter dependant world.

Question: You have been working hard on making peace with Pakistan. You discussed with President Obama as well. In case of another 26/11 attack happening from Pakistan against India, how do you propose to go?

Answer: The Home Minister has been in Pakistan earlier last week. You must have read what he has stated. I think there is some hope. As I have said in dealing with Pakistan our attitude has to be - trust - trust but verify. So only time will tell which way the animal will turn.

Question: What is your view on the Tobin tax?

Answer: There is now a lot of discussion on corporate governance. I think good corporate houses are looking at what they can do in the non traditional key in providing social services, education, health facilities for their employees. I think that it’s a corporate responsibility which has to be shouledered by the corporate sector on its own, we are not contemplating any legislation in that area.

Well the Tobin tax has merit in particular situations but as far as India is concerned we have not reached a stage where capital flows have become a problem. I think if capital inflows into our country both by way of direct investment and by way of portfolio investment have been at reasonable levels, we don't face situations of the kind which would require an imposition of Tobin Tax.

Question: What are your views on the proposed expansion of BRIC. My second question pertains to what is the relevance of G8 when G20 is the leading forum?

Answer: As far as BRIC is concerned we are members of the group. We would like the BRIC countries to consult with each other on all the issues which have bearing on the global economic management and as far as expansion of its membership is concerned that's a matter that is to be discussed by the members themselves. It is not proper for me to make any public comment.

As far as G8 is concerned, I think it is for G8 countries to decide. But as far as G20 is concerned it has been agreed that this will be the premier forum for discussion of the international economic issues and I talked to Canadian Prime Minister who said that here after the G8 will probably deal with security issues much more vigorously than it has been doing thus far in the past.

Question: What are the plans for President Obama's visit to India?

Answer: Our relations with the US are very good- as discussed with President Obama yesterday the preparations for his visit. We have a really ambitious agenda. He will be sending his National Security Adviser in the second week of July. He will meet our National Security Adviser Shiv Shankar Menon and they will chalk out the agenda for President Obama's visit. We look forward to a very successful visit of President Obama and so does the President.

Question: Opposition to fuel price hike is mounting in India and even your alliance partners are concerned. Your take on this issue?

Answer: Well I read about the intentions of the opposition in the Press. I have not talked to anyone myself, nor I have been briefed by our political establishment What I am considering is that what we have done by way of adjusting the petroleum prices is that people of India would appreciate the compulsions, which have compelled us to undertake this measure. And our people are wise enough to understand that excessive populism should not be allowed to derail the progress our country is making, and for which it is winning kudos internationally as well.
Question: In your talks with President Obama, did you take up the issue of supply of Chinese reactors to Pakistan? Would there be a cabinet expansion during the monsoon session?

Answer: About your first question on my discussions with President Obama, it was essentially a discussion to explore the agenda of President Obama’s visit to India later this year in the month of November. So I did not have the time to dwell on the issues that you have raised.

And as far as the monsoon session and cabinet reshuffle is concerned, I think that Press Conferences are not the appropriate places to announce Cabinet changes. When they are made, you will hear about it.

Question: Industrial disasters impacting on climate have also plagued US. Given the aftermath of the Bhopal tragedy, did you take up the issue of extradition of Warren Anderson with the US side?

Answer: Well, we are where we stand. We will try to ensure that US Government takes a more favourable attitude towards extradition. But we have not approached them yet. I did not raise this issue in my discussions with President Obama. We will cross the bridge when we come to it.

Question: On the Bhopal Gas tragedy issue, isn’t there a collective failure on all parts, the government, political establishment and the judiciary?

Answer: What we propose to do has been made clear by the GOM, whose report has been endorsed by the Cabinet. It is a fact, it is true that our judicial processes are time consuming, that it should have taken 25 years before the case could be decided is something that we have to reflect about and the inadequacies of our judicial system.

Question: Don’t you think that the Congress establishment should come clean on who was responsible for letting Anderson go? What is the reality of the issue?

Answer: What is the reality, we are not hiding anything. I think the GOM has looked at records. There is nothing that they have come across by way of the definite findings as to who took the decision. Those records are not available now.
114. Keynote Address by Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee at the international conference on "International Cooperation in Times of Global Crisis: Views from G-20 Countries".

New Delhi, September 17, 2010.

Mr. Chairman,

Distinguished participants,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

1. It is an honour to join all of you at this International Conference on "International Cooperation in Times of Global Crisis: Views from G20 Countries". I would like to congratulate the Indian Council for Research on International Economic Relations (ICRIER) for organising this Conference. It is a wonderful gathering of eminent academics and policymakers from G20 countries and international organisations.

2. From time to time in human history, some events occur that mark a turning point for the entire world. The global financial and economic crisis of 2007-09 is possibly one such event. This crisis has become one of the greatest assaults on global economic stability to have occurred in three quarters of a century. But it is also an assault on mankind's over-confidence about managing global systems. As we know from history, an assault on our over-confidence is, at times, a blessing in disguise. I like to believe that we will come out of this global financial crisis with stronger economies. The crisis has exposed the fragility of existing global financial and economic institutions, and the limitations of existing macroeconomic policy tools. Hence, it is an opportunity for new thinking in the world of finance and globalization.

3. In the wake of the global crisis, G20 countries were called upon to further strengthen international cooperation and bring together systemically important advanced and emerging economies to discuss key issues in the global economy. Since then, the concerted and decisive actions of the G20 helped the world deal effectively with the current financial and economic crisis. The G20 has already delivered a number of significant and concrete outcomes. Reflecting on these achievements and recognizing that more needs to be done to ensure a strong, sustained and balanced global recovery, the G20 Leaders at Pittsburgh Summit designated the G20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation.

Ladies and Gentlemen;

4. In an era of globalization, with almost all countries integrated into the global economy, complete decoupling is only a myth. As clearly indicated by the current crisis, no country is insulated and it is turning out to be much deeper and broader than expected. It is a crisis that spans several fronts: it began as financial crises, which then become a general economic crisis; it is also becoming an employment crisis; and has in many countries produced a social crisis. It is a crisis which is simultaneously individual, national and global. It is a crisis of both the developed and the developing world. Everything is so intricately intertwined that events in one country have a ripple effect across the world. Yet, an alternative to global integration is neither feasible nor desirable. Globalization is a bit like gravity. You may or may not like it, but you have no choice in the matter. It is also a bit like the wind and the waves. As John Stuart Mill had observed, a sea-going person may not like the wind and the waves, but he has no option. Instead of pretending that the wind and the waves do not exist, he should try to make the best of possible use of these forces. Similarly, with globalization.

5. Globalisation has brought several benefits and synergies in growth and development across the globe. Moreover, the world is now so far down the path of integration that turning back is no longer a viable option. However, credible international economic cooperation is necessary in today's world. An integrated world economy requires strong cooperation among major economic powers. Without determined cooperation among the principal powers, globalization is unlikely to survive the inevitable periodical shocks to which it is subjected. The G20 has laid a solid foundation for such cooperation.

6. Historical precedent is instructive. Since World War II, major countries have created and used formal international institutions and more informal forums to discuss and coordinate economic policies. As economic integration has increased over the past few decades, however, international economic policy coordination has become even more active and significant. Globalization may bring economic benefits, but it also means that a country's economy is increasingly affected by the economic policy decisions of other governments. Major crises have always been followed by the emergence of new international institutions. The Brettonwood system emerged after the Great Depression. The current crisis has heralded the rise of G20 as the premier forum for international cooperation.

Ladies and Gentlemen;

7. Given its crisis track record, expectations from the G20 forum are also growing, especially since its intervention is widely perceived to have prevented the current global crisis escalating into another Great Depression. However much of its success has been achieved in crisis situations, where consensus is much easier, and it remains to be seen whether it would be equally effective in resolving contentious issues in normal times.

8. As we recover from the crisis and prepare ourselves for a post crisis scenario, G20 Governments will have to work together to support well functioning international economy. They will need to coordinate policy actions in a manner that can ensure strong, sustainable and balanced growth. While doing so, Governments will have to build domestic political support for international policy coordination, wherein some national policies might have to be calibrated to ensure a more optimised global outcome. The immediate spheres of such coordination are (a) macroeconomic policies and exit strategies (b) pace of regulatory reforms to ensure financial stability, without affecting prospects of growth (c) reform in the governance of International Financial Institutions to reflect current economic realities (d) keeping international trade open and avoiding protectionism and (e) coordination on climate change and energy issues.

9. As part of this process of multi-country thinking, we in India are trying to produce studies to understand economic processes in the context of G-20 nations and also the BRIC countries. I am happy to inform you that India, and in particular the Ministry of Finance, is anchoring the writing and publication of an economic report on the four BRIC countries. This is being done to foster cooperation and one of the aims of this is to learn from best practices in different nations. All these developments point towards the inevitability and necessity for stronger and credible international cooperation in issues that you have taken up for discussion over these two days. The need for this is more than ever before. I am sure this conference will offer an opportunity to share ideas; ideas that can indeed lead to a better world.

10. I thank you for your kind attention and I wish you a most fruitful conference. Thank You 115. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister’s visit to Seoul for G20 Summit.

New Delhi, November 9, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening. Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh is leaving tomorrow for Seoul for the 5th G20 Summit meeting. Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao would like to brief you about the visit of the Prime Minister. I would also like to introduce my colleague Mr. Jawed Ashraf, Joint Secretary (Americas), who is to the right of Foreign Secretary. Foreign Secretary would be making an opening statement and thereafter will be taking a few questions on the visit of the Prime Minister to Seoul. Ma’am, the floor is yours.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you, Vishnu.

The fifth G-20 Summit is being held on November 11-12, 2010 in Seoul, Republic of Korea. This is an unprecedented fifth Summit for a multilateral grouping within a span of two years, starting with the Washington Summit (Nov. 2008) through London (April 2009), Pittsburgh (Sept. 2009) and Toronto (June 2010) to the Seoul Summit later this week. This is indicative of the importance, dynamism and credibility of the G-20 as a grouping, which since the Pittsburgh Summit has been designated as the ‘premier forum’ for international economic cooperation. We also value the G-20 as the principal platform for North-South dialogue with our developed country interlocutors.

As you are aware, the G-20 came into being in 1999 following the East Asian financial crisis. It is an informal forum comprising major developed countries and leading emerging market economies representing around 90% of global GDP, 85% of the world trade and two-thirds of humanity. It has achieved credibility for having been able to address the international financial and economic crisis or ‘the Great Recession’ of 2008 in a concerted, coordinated and effective manner. As the host, the President of the Republic of Korea will preside over the Summit. Leaders of G-20 member countries are expected to attend. RoK as host has also invited Leaders from Spain, Malawi (Chair of African Union), Ethiopia (Chair of NEPAD), Vietnam (Chair of ASEAN) and Singapore.
In addition, top officials from the United Nations, the World Bank, IMF, WTO, Financial Stability Board, etc. are likely to be present.

Prime Minister will be participating in the G-20 Seoul Summit. PM’s delegation will include Deputy Chairman Planning Commission, who is India’s ‘Sherpa’ for the G-20, the National Security Adviser and senior officials. PM will be arriving in Seoul late on November 10 and has a busy schedule over the next couple of days. The G-20 Summit starts on November 11 with a Welcome Reception followed by a Working Dinner by the President of the Republic of Korea. On November 12, the programme includes the Summit Opening Plenary Session, followed by Plenary Working Sessions in the morning and afternoon, a G-20 ‘Family Photograph’, a Leaders’ Working lunch and concludes in the afternoon with the Final Plenary Session. After the conclusion of the Summit, PM will return to India on the same day.

PM will interact with the Leaders of participating countries on a range of bilateral, regional and global issues of mutual interest. Some bilateral meetings are also envisaged on the sidelines of the Summit, most probably on Nov. 11, and we will keep you informed.

The forthcoming Seoul Summit’s theme is ‘Shared Growth Beyond Crisis’. The Leaders are expected to review the global economic situation, the status of the world recovery as well as the progress of implementation regarding the past G-20 Summit decisions. In the light of the above, the Leaders will decide on the future mandate and direction of G-20. Without trying to speculate about the deliberations at the Summit, broadly speaking some of the areas the Leaders can be expected to address are:

- Global Economy and Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth
- International Financial Institution (IFI) Reforms
- Financial Regulatory Reforms
- Trade and Protectionism
- Climate Change
Development, which is a new issue on the G-20 agenda mandated at the last Toronto Summit.

As per past practice, a Declaration or Communiqué of the Seoul Summit is envisaged. I would, however, refrain from trying to prejudge the outcome of the Summit or the contents of the Communiqué. But as I have mentioned, the Seoul Summit has a rich and diverse agenda for discussion by Leaders.

Host RoK is also organising a major Business Summit as a side-event in conjunction with the G-20 Summit. The Seoul G-20 Business Summit (SGBS) will be held on November 10-11, 2010 at which around a 100 CEOs from G-20 member countries and beyond are expected to attend. The SGBS theme is 'Role of Business in Sustainable and Balanced Growth'. The Business Summit will have Round Tables on (i) Revitalising trade and foreign direct investment, (ii) Enhancing financial stability and supporting economic activity, (iii) Harmonising green growth, and (iv) Delivering on the corporate social responsibility promise. The outcome of the Business Summit will also be presented to the G-20 Leaders.

Question: Madam, yesterday the Prime Minister actually spoke about a new kind of agenda being set with regard to the global economy with developed nations perhaps being asked to fund infrastructure development in the developing world. Is the Prime Minister's statement just sort of an offhand comment or is it indicative of something that India is likely to pursue at the Summit?

Foreign Secretary: The agenda for strong, sustainable and balanced growth, which is a theme which has been picked up by the G20 is definitely very high on the agenda. When India talks of this issue, need for strong, sustained and balanced growth, it is essentially representing the emerging economies, it is speaking as the voice of one of the leading emerging economies in the G20. Of course there will be consultations with the other G20 emerging economies. In fact one of the pull-asides, bilaterals that is envisaged is a meeting between PM and the Brazilian Head of delegation. What we were talking about when we speak of balanced growth is that there are multiple rates of growth today in the world economy. On the one hand there is need for fiscal consolidation in some countries, on the other hand we need to maintain that rate of growth that will enable the lifting of millions of our population out of poverty, enabling the flow of capital, of innovation and of technology into the country, the need to resist protectionism, to have a free multilateral global trading regime. So, all these are issues on which India would like to speak as a representative voice for the developing countries.

Question: A quick follow-up, Madam. Is there a possibility of India opting to host a G20 Summit in the future?

Foreign Secretary: I would not be able to answer that at the moment. I would not rule it out at some stage, but if you are asking me if there is a definite point on the agenda which would see India hosting a meeting in the near future, I would not be able to answer that in the affirmative for the moment.

Question: There has been a report in one of the papers saying that Prime Minister Manmohan Singh has a formula to save the global economy from its present crisis. Are you in a position to say anything about that? Does he plan to submit some proposals as to how to save the global economy?

Foreign Secretary: I think you should await the outcome of the deliberations at Seoul and the points that will be reflected in the Communiqué which will represent the consensus that is arrived at the meeting. I think the G20 as a grouping would continue to function as a very important forum to address global financial and economic issues for the future also. When the Pittsburgh Summit designated the G20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation, that is just the emphasis that we are seeking to give to the meetings and the development dimension in the G20 agenda. So, the development dimension is going to increase and also acquire much more salience than in the past.

Question: Madam, can you tell us which bilaterals the PM will have on the sidelines of the Summit?

Foreign Secretary: I think it is with UK, with Canada, with Mexico and Ethiopia. These are some of the confirmed meetings. There will be a pull-aside as I said, with Brazil. There could be more meetings but we will be able to tell you that as the situation develops.

Question: Foreign Secretary, Tim Geithner, the US Treasury Secretary, was speaking yesterday here about the early warning system that the G20 would be discussing to essentially police deficits and surpluses. He said there was an agreement around having hard and fast numbers for targets of deficits and surpluses. But ...(Inaudible)... India’s position on this ...(Inaudible)... these early warning system administered by the IMF?

Foreign Secretary: I think this is a theme that is still being developed in the discussions within the G20. Secretary Geithner did mention it. Obviously the focus as we see it is to consolidate growth and recovery within the world economy, the reform of the international financial institutions is very much a part of this agenda, and, as I said earlier, mandating work on development within the G20 and the commitment to fight protectionism. These are all issues in India’s point of view which should require equal attention.

Question: Madam, what is India’s position on this currency wars as they are calling it now? Where does India stand on this? Would India like Chinese to appreciate their currency or not?

Foreign Secretary: At the recent meeting of the G20 Finance Ministers also in the RoK a little over maybe two weeks ago, broad agreement was reached to move towards a more market determined exchange rate system or systems, and to refrain from competitive devaluation of currencies. That is the direction of the trend in which the discussion went. In line with the above, I think what the Seoul Summit can be expected to do is to help further suggest prescriptions to stabilize global financial and currency markets and to reduce volatility in the world financial markets.

Question: Is there an item on the agenda about a permanent Secretariat for the G20? If so, do you have any suggestions who might head it? ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: As far as I am aware that item is not on the agenda. I know it is being discussed among various countries informally but there has not emerged as yet any consensus view on this. Whichever country hosts the Summit has a Secretariat functioning at that point of time but not a permanent Secretariat. It does not seem to be on the agenda as yet.

Question: Outside of a broad statement supporting the development
...(Inaudible)... so the focus is on emerging economy like India, what would be a specific outcome India would be looking at?

Foreign Secretary: That is exactly what I said. You have to await the outcome of the discussions. India is one of the participating countries. I mentioned the issues - the development related issues, the protectionism related issues.

Question: In the past there have been discussions on capitalizing the World Bank, India being the largest borrower ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: The reform of the IFIs as I mentioned is an ongoing part of the activity that the G20 has been looking at. And we had some progress in that regard both with the World Bank and now with the IMF.
But it is a work in progress.

Question: Will India like the G20 to look at issues that go beyond terrorism, security and ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: I think the G20 is functioning as it should function as a premier forum for international economic cooperation. That is the focus that every member country wants to give to it at the moment.

Question: Madam, what is the difference in the nuances between our thinking on this currency war and American thinking on the currency war? Yesterday also that was asked in the press conference. Can you tell us where there is a major difference?

Foreign Secretary: It is not a question so much of difference. I think the China-US trade as you see it, and the volume, the magnitude of it, is far greater than what we have with either the US or with China. The trade imbalance that the United States has with China has been an issue for discussion between the two countries and the subject of a lot of public focus especially in America. So, it is in that context that the issue of devaluation of the Chinese Yuan or the need to devalue it and the issue of how China is going to handle the issue of currency valuation has come up. So, the US has a specific point of view about it and the issue of the trade surplus that China has with the US as they see it emanates in large part as from what is seen as this rate of the Chinese Yuan. So, that is the way the US is looking at it. In our case, as I said, we have talked about market forces and how currency rate valuation should come out of that. Of course we have a very large trade deficit with China. But we import a great deal of equipment at rather competitive prices from the Chinese market for our power sector, for our steel sector, for our infrastructure development. So, the picture is little different where the US and where India is concerned. But certainly in the context of the G20 I am sure that the whole issue of how to deal with currency valuation would be brought up certainly by some of the developed economies.

Question: Madam, sounds like both America and India believe that China is keeping its currency artificially low.

Foreign Secretary: I am not going to get into that. As I said, the situations are a little different for each of the countries concerned, whether it is the US or whether it is India.

Question: Yesterday there have been indications from China that their counter to the whole cap on current account imbalances is going to be quantitative eases in the US, which is something India is impacted by. What would our position be on that? Would we tend to take sides with China on that?

Foreign Secretary: On these issues which involve currency flows or currency rates it is not a question so much of taking sides with one country or the other as I mentioned to the earlier questioner. I think we have to study this further. I am not a specialist, I am not an economist. I think this is a question that is best answered by the economic Ministries concerned. So, I do not really want to get into a fruitless debate about this. And there will be ample opportunities during the Summit, of course. Our Finance Secretary is there; our Deputy-Chairman, Planning Commission is there. So, many of these questions can be answered then.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you.
Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh prior to his departure for Seoul for the G-20 Summit.

New Delhi, November 10, 2010

I leave today to attend the G-20 Summit in Seoul at the invitation of President Lee Myung-bak of Korea.

This is the second G-20 Summit this year. This reflects the high expectations the world has from the G-20 in moving beyond the immediate crisis that we faced in 2008 to ensuring a sustained and balanced economic recovery in the long term. The Seoul Summit is the first G-20 Summit outside a G-8 country, and the first in Asia.

The theme of the Seoul summit is “Shared Growth beyond the Crisis”. Given the vast development challenges we face it is in India’s interest to have an open, stable and rule-based international economic environment, whether in the field of trade, investment flows, technology transfers or open markets. We have to be particularly wary of protectionist sentiments. There are also developmental imbalances within and between countries, and rebalancing of the world economy is a major challenge. The success of the Mutual Assessment Process is important in this regard. India will actively participate in this process to strike the right balance between ensuring its credibility as well as the national interests of countries.

The Seoul Summit will focus on the G-20 framework for strong sustainable and balanced growth, including an ambitious outcome in the form of the Seoul Action Plan. We will work with the others towards this end, and also encourage the G-20 to focus on the development agenda which is being introduced for the first time in Seoul. We must also give thought to how we can leverage global imbalances to bridge the infrastructure gap between rich and poor nations.

In the financial sector, we should build upon the process of IMF reform on which good progress was made last month at the G-20 Finance Ministers meeting with an agreement on shifts in quota shares, including in favour of India, while protecting the voting share of the poorest. The Summit will also look at issues of regulatory reforms of the financial sector, and consider the new Basel-III norms. This is a key area of work, and we must guard against complacency in the pursuit of a strong financial regulatory framework and effective supervision.

The world economy is on the path of recovery but we should keep our focus on how to optimize global outcomes in an increasingly interdependent world. As the Indian economy moves to a higher growth path, and opens to the world, our stake in a stable, inclusive and representative global economic and financial system will only grow.

During my visit I look forward to separately meeting President Felipe Calderon, Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, Prime Minister David Cameron and Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

117. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on PM’s bilateral meetings on the sidelines of the G-20 Summit.

Seoul, November 11, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening. As you are aware, the Prime Minister of India, who arrived at Seoul yesterday to participate in the G20 Summit, had a number of important engagements and bilateral meetings today. His bilateral meetings include those with the Prime Minister of Ethiopia, the President of Mexico, and the Prime Minister of UK. I would endeavour to share with you some details of these three important bilateral meetings.

In the morning, he had a meeting with the Prime Minister of Ethiopia His Excellency Mr. Meles Zenawi. They had a very warm meeting, a very friendly meeting which is reflective of our excellent ties with Ethiopia. Prime Minister Zenawi was very appreciative of India's support to Ethiopia in its economic development, capacity-building. They are, as you know, beneficiaries of the ITEC programme. We are setting up a large vocational training centre in Ethiopia, and also offering a number of scholarships amongst other things.

He also spoke in glowing terms about India's developmental partnership with Africa and hailed it as a model of cooperation among developing countries. Ethiopia is the Chairman of NEPAD and also hosts the Headquarters of the African Union.

PM Meles first assumed office in 1995 and was recently re-elected. He is an old friend of India. He has been to India on several occasions including his last state visit to India in November 2007. He traveled in April 2008 to India to attend the First India-Africa Forum Summit. He visited Delhi in February in 2009 once more for the Delhi Sustainable Development Summit. He warmly invited our Prime Minister to visit Ethiopia. The invitation was gladly accepted.

We have historical ties with Ethiopia which go back two thousand years. In fact our trading links are as old as the sixth century AD when India supplied silk, spices, etc., to Ethiopia.

Ethiopia has always been very supportive of India’s positions on various global issues. I would like to note here that they supported, voted for the non-permanent UNSC seat of India recently. And the Prime Minister of India thanked him very warmly for the support of Ethiopia. The two leaders also discussed the African position on UN reforms.

We have good bilateral trade with Ethiopia which is close to 500 million dollars. Even more significantly, sizeable Indian investments have been flowing in. We have in all more than four billion dollars in investments, of which 1.5 billion was invested in Ethiopia in just 2009. Close to 500 Indian companies are operating in Ethiopia in diverse sectors including agriculture, textiles, engineering, plastics, water management, information and communication technology, human resource development, pharmaceuticals, floriculture which has become an important sector by the way, and so on.

The Prime Minister conveyed to his counterpart that the Exim Bank of India would soon set up a Rep Office in Addis. The Ethiopian Prime Minister sought India’s help to establish a railway line between Ethiopia and Djibouti. We have agreed to study that proposal.

During the visit of the External Affairs Minister to Ethiopia in July 2007, India had extended a line of credit worth 640 million dollars over a five year period to strengthen and expand the sugar industry in Ethiopia. A sizeable chunk of the line of credit has already been released. The funds have been transferred and they are being utilized very effectively.

The Pan-African e-Network Project was launched from Addis Ababa a year and a half ago. Seeing the efficacy, the efficiency of the e-network project, Ethiopia recently signed MOUs of Cooperation on commercial terms with IIT Delhi and IIT Kanpur to provide tele-education to twenty regional universities in Ethiopia.

I mentioned that the Prime Minister of Ethiopia had come to India in April 2008 for the first India-Africa Forum Summit. The Second India-Africa Forum Summit is likely to be held in Africa next year. The two leaders also exchanged views on holding the Summit. I mentioned that the Ethiopian Prime Minister warmly welcomed India's partnership with Africa and has also hailed it as a model of cooperation. So, the two sides discussed ways and means to take the India-AU partnership further.

He mentioned that the African Union was currently considering the proposal, and preparations will be initiated once a decision is taken about the date and venue of the Summit in Africa. They also briefly discussed Africa's priorities in G20.

Let me next turn to the meeting of our Prime Minister with the President of Mexico His Excellency Felipe Calderon. The two leaders have been meeting regularly on the sidelines of international fora. The leaders warmly recalled the very successful visit of President Calderon to India in September 2007 when, recognizing each other's strengths and complementarities the two countries had decided to elevate our relationship to the level of a privileged partnership.

We have historically enjoyed warm and friendly relations with Mexico. It is a trillion dollar economy and the second largest after Brazil in Latin America. Our diplomatic relations go back to 1950, and we are currently celebrating the 60th anniversary of establishment of our diplomatic relations.

The President of India had paid a significant visit to Mexico in April 2008. And recently in August, amongst other high-level and important visits, we had welcomed the Foreign Minister of Mexico Ms. Patricia Espinosa on her first official visit to India.
We have bilateral trade which ranges between two to three billion dollars, which is certainly below the potential, and a trade target of five billion dollars has been established which we hope to achieve soon. India is also an important investor in Mexico with our investments exceeding 1.5 billion dollars.

India and Mexico have a strong cultural affinity. Mexicans have traditionally shown a lot of interest in Indian art, dances, films, yoga, music and so on. Indian personalities like Mahatma Gandhi, Tagore, Mother Theresa are widely admired in the country. We have decided to have several cultural activities to commemorate and celebrate the 60th anniversary of establishment of our diplomatic relations.

You are aware that Mexico is also hosting the COP 16 Summit on climate change in Cancun between 29th November and 10th of December. Prime Minister and President exchanged notes on the discussions on climate change and the preparations for the forthcoming summit. Prime Minister was of the opinion that initiatives which have a fair chance of garnering consensus should be identified so that the outcome from the Summit is pragmatic, forward-looking and result oriented. They felt that efforts and preparations were moving in the right direction, and that particularly the concerns of the developing countries should be kept in mind, and that the outcome, the decisions, the discussion should conform to UNFCCC and the Kyoto Protocol.

Both with President Calderon and with Prime Minister Cameron - I will come to the other aspects of discussion with Prime Minister Cameron momentarily - Prime Minister had discussions on the G20 process. Both leaders sought our Prime Minister's views as an eminent economist, his assessment on G20. It was felt by all concerned that greater attention should be paid to global imbalances and to achieving economic stability.

They expressed happiness at initial steps to reform the IMF and the quota sharing arrangements. They also, exchanged views on the G20 post the economic crisis phase noting that the response immediately post crisis was magnificent and now the real challenge was take steps to consolidate the efforts that had been initiated. They also agreed that there was no universally agreed diagnosis as to what ails the world economy.
President Calderon invited the Prime Minister of India to visit Mexico and the invitation was accepted with pleasure.

Touching on some other aspects of Prime Minister’s meeting with Rt Hon. David Cameron of UK, both sides recalled the very successful state visit paid by Prime Minister Cameron to India on 27-29 July when he had led one of the most important delegations ever from UK to India, which included a number of Cabinet Ministers, a very large business delegation, a number of officials and so on.

The two Prime Ministers have been meeting regularly. Before his state visit to India they had met on the sidelines of the G20 Summit in Toronto on the 26th of June. I may recall that soon after his becoming the Leader of Opposition, David Cameron visited India in October 2006 when he had also met with Prime Minister and other leaders.

We had established a strategic partnership with the UK in 2004 which was elevated to the level of enhanced partnership for the future during the visit of Prime Minister David Cameron in July. Our President had paid a state visit to UK in October 2009. Recently, last month, the HRH the Prince of Whales, Prince Charles had visited India for the Commonwealth Games.

You are aware that UK is among our major trading partners. Our bilateral trade, excluding services, was about 11 billion dollars in 2009-10. With cumulative investments of over six billion, UK is the fourth largest investor in India. On the other hand, Indian companies have been investing very actively in UK having become the third largest investor in UK and the second largest investor in London. Currently close to 600 companies are based in UK of which half are in London.

One of the decisions taken during the visit of Prime Minister David Cameron to set up India-UK CEOs Forum has been activated and this forum has been set up. It is co-chaired by Mr. Ratan Tata from the Indian side and Mr. Peter Sands, Chairman of Standard Bank, from the British side.

UK has also been steadfast in its support for India’s permanent membership of the UN Security Council, and had extended valuable support for our nonpermanent seat for which elections were held last month. The two Prime Ministers, other than on G20 which I mentioned, also exchanged views on the Doha Round and other regional issues of mutual interest.
These are I thought some of the highlights of the three important bilateral meetings that our Prime Minister has had today with his counterparts.

Question: Do you have the composition of the India-UK CEOs Forum?

Official Spokesperson: That I can give you.

Question: And did you imply that the activation decision was a consequence of today’s meeting?

Official Spokesperson: No, not at all. I was giving you a little background because the visit of David Cameron was in July and amongst various decisions taken was this important decision, given the fact that the economic relationship and partnership is one of the bedrocks of our bilateral relationship. So, to give it a qualitative impulse one of these decisions was taken and which has been activated. That is what I was saying.

Question: Coming back to the G20 you referred to in terms of the discussions with Prime Minister Cameron...

Official Spokesperson: Both the Prime Minister and the President.

Question: Yes. You said that it was felt during the discussions that there is no universal diagnosis of what ails the world economy. Could you expand on that?

Official Spokesperson: That is the reading I have. I do not have further details on that.

Question: Would I be right in inferring that Prime Minister disagreed with the British and the Mexican position on the currency issue and the global...

Official Spokesperson: I am afraid since I was personally not there in the meeting - these were short meetings, each meeting was about thirty minutes or round abouts - I am going by the readout that I have. So, this is what I have to share on the matter.

Question: Would I be correct in inferring that?

Official Spokesperson: Inferences are yours.

Question: When is the PM going to Ethiopia and Mexico?
Official Spokesperson: These are the invitations which have been extended today and have been gladly accepted. Mutually convenient dates are always worked out through diplomatic channels.

Question: Today our Prime Minister has told the PM of Ethiopia that we Indians would be contributing a Vocational Training Centre which is going to open in Ethiopia and offer scholarships. Can you highlight on the areas in which scholarships will be given like in education or medical or engineering, and the vocational training centre which we have offered?

Official Spokesperson: Happily. Capacity-building and human resource development is one of the very important areas of cooperation between India and Africa. We have what we call the ITEC (Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation) programme which is as old as about 50 years now. If I remember offhand, it was initiated in 1962. Under that ITEC programme we have been offering about six thousand training slots every year, and the entire cost is borne by the Government of India, to about 155 of our partner countries worldwide. Out of six thousand, one/third have traditionally been going to Africa. But during the India-Africa Forum Summit it was decided to enhance the efforts of capacity-building significantly. We had offered 20,000 scholarships over a five-year period for Africa. These are in different areas including medical, high-technology, engineering, and there is Raman Fellowship which is at postgraduate level, and so on. We have also launched the Pan-African e-Network Project of which already the second phase has been initiated and over 35 countries have already become part of. Under that we are offering tele-medicine and tele-education programmes which also has been found very useful by our African partners.

Question: Sir, just a few minutes before I heard the Chinese Minister airing his view that if America catches cold, they should not ask for the Chinese medicines. As we enter the G20 Summit right now, it seems that it is more and more becoming like a G2 with America and China or to some extent G3 including Germany. So, by not taking positions on hard issues of trade imbalances and the currency war, do not you think India is going to get marginalized by doing rhetoric on infrastructure development and voicing concerns against protectionism?

Official Spokesperson: We see G20 as the premier forum to address economic issues. India as one of the largest economies in the world, as one of the fastest growing emerging economies, under the leadership of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh who is an eminent economist, has been participating in the G20 process right since the first Summit meeting was held in Washington. India and the Indian Prime Minister have been participating in that actively, constructively and positively and that is where it is. I have already shared with you some of the thoughts of the Prime Minister. We will continue to engage with the G20 process which I said is a premier economic forum representing almost 85 per cent of the global GDP, and it is important to India as it is to other countries in the world.

Question: Just a follow-up to this question. Yesterday, Sherpa had told us that the communiqué is a work in progress. Any progress today on the communiqué?

Official Spokesperson: Well, it is work in progress and soon, as the communiqué is finalized, we will share it with you.

Question: Can you tell us something about what has happened in G20 today?

Official Spokesperson: The meetings are taking place. I am not a part of the preparatory meetings. That is for the Sherpas and Sou-Sherpas who have been at it. At a suitable time, like we did yesterday, we will invite one of the participants to come and brief you.

Question: Sir, any idea when our Prime Minister is going to speak at the Summit?

Official Spokesperson: I believe it is going to be in the first half of the day tomorrow. As soon as we have a firm time and other details, we are more keen than you are to share it with you.

Thank you very much.
118. Remarks of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Plenary Session of the G-20 Summit.

Seoul, November 12, 2010

Mr. President

I join other colleagues in thanking you for the excellent arrangements made for the Summit and for the warmth of your hospitality.

The G-20 has only been in existence for two years yet it can claim several important successes in this short period which has led to its emergence as the premier forum for international economic cooperation.

We acted swiftly to respond to the crisis of 2008 with a massive and coordinated stimulus which almost certainly avoided what could have been a precipitous collapse of the world economy. We successfully initiated a process of reforms of the World Bank and the IMF which has already yielded good results. We have launched a much needed reform of financial regulation through a broad-based Financial Stability Board (FSB) and we are currently engaged in an ambitious process of coordinating policies in our countries to achieve a strong and sustainable recovery.

Efforts to achieve a strong recovery in the global economy are particularly important at present. Our discussion yesterday on the state of the world economy reveals a mixed picture. There is some good news. Industrialized countries have resumed growth in 2010, although output gaps remain large and unemployment is still at crisis levels.

Emerging market countries have done well on the whole, and especially so in Asia. I am happy to say that the Indian economy has rebounded fairly well from the crisis. We grew at 9% in the four years prior to the crisis, but slowed down to 6.7% in the 2008-09. The economy recovered to 7.4% growth in 2009-10 and is likely to grow at 8.5% in 2010-11. We hope to achieve 9% in 2011-12.

However, high unemployment in industrialized countries threatens a revivial of protectionist sentiment, especially since the use of conventional monetary and fiscal tools to revive the economy has been exhausted. Uncertainty about the prospects of industrialized countries affects the investment climate and dampens the medium-term growth prospects of emerging market countries. All this suggests that much remains to be done to bring our economies back to the path of strong, sustainable and balanced growth.

The problem facing us in rebalancing the global economy is well known. Major industrialized countries were running unsustainable current account deficits which have to be reduced to manageable levels. If this is not to have a contractionary impact on the world economy, it must be offset by reducing current account surpluses elsewhere. This rebalancing requires pursuit of appropriately coordinated policies in our countries.

The Mutual Assessment Process we adopted in Pittsburgh was a unique G20 initiative to achieve such coordination. We saw the outcome of the first stage in Toronto, at the level of country groupings. We had expected to move to the second stage of considering country-specific recommendations by the time of the Seoul Summit.

We are not there yet, and for good reasons. It is not easy to reach agreement on what are sustainable current account balances for individual countries given the structural differences across countries, the many uncertainties that prevail, and the multiple goals that each country has to balance. It is even more difficult to agree on a particular combination of policies to achieve these targets.

Despite these difficulties, we must persevere to develop a workable G20 mechanism for international coordination. I believe there is considerable agreement on some broad principals.

First, we must at all costs avoid competitive devaluation and resist any resurgence of protectionism.

Second, advanced deficit countries must follow policies of fiscal consolidation, consistent with their individual circumstances so as to ensure debt sustainability over the medium term. This means that fiscal correction need not be frontloaded everywhere.
Third, while structural reforms are necessary everywhere, these should increase efficiency and competitiveness in deficit countries, while expanding internal demand in surplus countries. This rebalancing will take time, but it must begin.

Fourth, exchange rates flexibility is an important instrument for achieving a sustainable current account position and our policies must reflect his consideration. At the same time, reserve currency countries have a special responsibility to ensure that their monetary policies do not lead to destabilizing capital flows, which can put pressure on emerging markets.

To these well known ingredients, I would add another that has not been sufficiently discussed. Even as we try to avoid a destabilizing surge of volatile capital flows to developing countries, there is a strong case for supporting long term flows to these countries to stimulate investment, especially in infrastructure. The economic performance of emerging markets, including many countries in sub-Saharan Africa, has improved greatly in recent years. These countries are now in a position to absorb capital flows aimed at an expansion in investment, which would inject much needed demand into the global economy. Multilateral Development Banks have an important role to play in this process through recycling of global savings. Many emerging market countries are also in a position to attract private investment, including into infrastructure.

Recycling surplus savings into investment in developing countries will not only address the immediate demand imbalance, it will also help to address developmental imbalances. In other words, we should leverage imbalances of one kind to redress imbalances of the other kind.

The G20 would convey a powerful signal to markets if we commit ourselves to a second stage MAP process aimed at coordinating policies in these areas. Our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors could be asked to develop these ideas further, with the assistance of the IMF and produce as quickly as possible, a credible approach to identifying sustainable trajectories for external balances for our countries and to assess the policies proposed by each country to achieve these.
I recognize this is not going to be easy and we must allow considerable flexibility to accommodate learning by doing. However, if we can actually do this, we will have made a lasting contribution to a new style of global governance.

I would like to compliment the Korean presidency for the initiative it took to include development as an accepted item in the agenda of the G20. The G20 was borne at the time of a crisis and as such it has been preoccupied with the short term agenda of crisis management and global rebalancing. However, one of the biggest imbalances facing us is the development imbalance and putting development on the G20 agenda fills an important gap.

I have already mentioned that developing countries performed well in the years before the crisis and have also done well in subsequent years. However, we need to ensure that the global economic environment, including especially the environment for trade, and investment flows remains strongly supportive of development.

The Seoul Development Consensus and the associated Multi Year Action Plans which are before us provide a comprehensive agenda with timelines which we should pursue in all relevant fora in the months ahead.

I am particularly happy to endorse the focus on facilitating investment in national and regional infrastructure projects and the call for establishing a High Level Panel to recommend measures to mobilize private, semi-public and public resources for infrastructure investment and to review MDB policy in this area. Infrastructure is a critical constraint to rapid and inclusive growth in most emerging markets and we need to find innovative ways of meeting the enormous costs of infrastructure development. This should be made a major focus of the MDB agenda.

The emphasis on development of employable skills is also extremely important. We in India are giving high priority to skill development in our effort to provide access to quality jobs to the large numbers of new entrants labour force.

The Seoul Summit is also delivering on the promise of reform of the IMF. We have agreed to a shift in quota shares of 6% to emerging market countries and the composition of Board is being changed to reduce the European representation. With the additional resources already provided to the IMF, we have not only provided the IMF with the firepower that it needs to perform its stabilization role, but also moves it in the direction of greater democratization. Further moves are necessary in this direction and we welcome the decision to comprehensively review the quota formula by 2013 to reflect the growing economic weight of the emerging market countries.

This should be fully reflected in the next quotas review due to be completed by 2014.

Finally, Mr. President, we must ensure that the Doha Development Round of multilateral trade negotiations is brought to a satisfactory conclusion. We have seen a resurgence of protectionist sentiment in the world in the wake of recessionary trends. It is commendable that actual protectionist action has been more limited. The only way to ensure that protectionism does not gain the upper hand is to restore momentum to the trade talks. I hope the G20 will land in their weight to this objective.

In the end, I would like to say that the G20 was an apt response to an adverse situation that the world faced. A few years down the line, the world will ask as to what else did G20 achieve other than averting a total breakdown due to the global financial crisis. Fortunately, through the dynamic leadership shown by the Korean Presidency the G20 has moved forward and arrived at a rich agenda of things to do. I would once again like to thank Korea for their tireless efforts. I am also confident that the G20 will be able to translate this agenda into tangible outcomes under the forthcoming presidency of France and I wish them success in our common endeavour.

The G - 20 Seoul Summit Leaders' Declaration.

Seoul, November 11-12, 2010.

1. We, the Leaders of the G20, are united in our conviction that by working together we can secure a more prosperous future for the citizens of all countries.

2. When we first gathered in November 2008 to address the most severe world recession our generation has ever confronted, we pledged to support and stabilize the global economy, and at the same time, to lay the foundation for reform, to ensure the world would never face such upheaval again.

3. Over the past four Summits, we have worked with unprecedented cooperation to break the dramatic fall in the global economy to establish the basis for recovery and renewed growth.

4. The concrete steps we have taken will help ensure we are better prepared to prevent and, if necessary, to withstand future crises. We pledge to continue our coordinated efforts and act together to generate strong, sustainable and balanced growth.

5. We recognize the importance of addressing the concerns of the most vulnerable. To this end, we are determined to put jobs at the heart of the recovery, to provide social protection, decent work and also to ensure accelerated growth in low income countries (LICs).

6. Our relentless and cooperative efforts over the last two years have delivered strong results. However, we must stay vigilant.

7. Risks remain. Some of us are experiencing strong growth, while others face high levels of unemployment and sluggish recovery. Uneven growth and widening imbalances are fueling the temptation to diverge from global solutions into uncoordinated actions. However, uncoordinated policy actions will only lead to worse outcomes for all.

8. Since 2008, a common view of the challenges of the world economy, the necessary responses and our determination to resist protectionism has enabled us to both address the root causes of the crisis and safeguard the recovery. We are agreed today to develop our common view to meet these new challenges and a path to strong, sustainable and balanced growth beyond the crisis.
9. Today, the Seoul Summit delivers:

—the Seoul Action Plan composed of comprehensive, cooperative and country-specific policy actions to move closer to our shared objective. The Plan includes our commitment to:

undertake macroeconomic policies, including fiscal consolidation where necessary, to ensure ongoing recovery and sustainable growth and enhance the stability of financial markets, in particular moving toward more market determined exchange rate systems, enhancing exchange rate flexibility to reflect underlying economic fundamentals, and refraining from competitive devaluation of currencies. Advanced economies, including those with reserve currencies, will be vigilant against excess volatility and disorderly movements in exchange rates. These actions will help mitigate the risk of excessive volatility in capital flows facing some emerging countries;

— implement a range of structural reforms that boost and sustain global demand, foster job creation, and increase the potential for growth; — enhance the Mutual Assessment Process (MAP) to promote external sustainability. We will strengthen multilateral cooperation to promote external sustainability and pursue the full range of policies conducive to reducing excessive imbalances and maintaining current account imbalances at sustainable levels. Persistently large imbalances, assessed against indicative guidelines to be agreed by our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors, warrant an assessment of their nature and the root causes of impediments to adjustment as part of the MAP, recognizing the need to take into account national or regional circumstances, including large commodity producers.

These indicative guidelines composed of a range of indicators would serve as a mechanism to facilitate timely identification of large imbalances that require preventive and corrective actions to be taken.
To support our efforts toward meeting these commitments, we call on our Framework Working Group, with technical support from the IMF and other international organizations, to develop these indicative guidelines, with progress to be discussed by our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in the first half of 2011; and, in Gyeongju, our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors called on the IMF to provide an assessment as part of the MAP on the progress toward external sustainability and the consistency of fiscal, monetary, financial sector, structural, exchange rate and other policies. In light of this, the first such assessment, to be based on the above mentioned indicative guidelines, will be initiated and undertaken in due course under the French Presidency.

— a modernized IMF that better reflects the changes in the world economy through greater representation of dynamic emerging markets and developing countries. These comprehensive quota and governance reforms, as outlined in the Seoul Summit Document, will enhance the IMF’s legitimacy, credibility and effectiveness, making it an even stronger institution for promoting global financial stability and growth.

— instruments to strengthen global financial safety nets, which help countries cope with financial volatility by providing them with practical tools to overcome sudden reversals of international capital flows.

— core elements of a new financial regulatory framework, including bank capital and liquidity standards, as well as measures to better regulate and effectively resolve systemically important financial institutions, complemented by more effective oversight and supervision. This new framework, complemented by other achievements as outlined in the Seoul Summit Document, will ensure a more resilient financial system by reining in the past excesses of the financial sector and better serving the needs of our economies.

— the Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth that sets out our commitment to work in partnership with other developing countries, and LICs in particular, to help them build the capacity to achieve and maximize their growth potential, thereby contributing to global rebalancing. The Seoul Consensus complements our commitment to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and focuses on concrete measures as summarized in our Multi-Year Action Plan on Development to make a tangible and significant difference in people’s lives, including in particular through the development of infrastructure in developing countries.

— the Financial Inclusion Action Plan, the Global Partnership for Financial Inclusion and a flexible SME Finance Framework, all of which will significantly contribute to improving access to financial services and expanding opportunities for poor households and small and medium enterprises.

— our strong commitment to direct our negotiators to engage in across-the-board negotiations to promptly bring the Doha Development Round to a successful, ambitious, comprehensive, and balanced conclusion consistent with the mandate of the Doha Development Round and built on the progress already achieved. We recognize that 2011 is a critical window of opportunity, albeit narrow, and that engagement among our representatives must intensify and expand. We now need to complete the end game. Once such an outcome is reached, we commit to seek ratification, where necessary, in our respective systems. We are also committed to resisting all forms of protectionist measures.

10. We will continue to monitor and assess ongoing implementation of the commitments made today and in the past in a transparent and objective way. We hold ourselves accountable. What we promise, we will deliver.

11. Building on our achievements to date, we have agreed to work further on macro prudential policy frameworks; better reflect the perspective of emerging market economies in financial regulatory reforms; strengthen regulation and oversight of shadow banking; further work on regulation and supervision of commodity derivatives markets; improve market integrity and efficiency; enhance consumer protection; pursue all outstanding governance reform issues at the IMF and World Bank; and build a more stable and resilient international monetary system, including by further strengthening global financial safety nets. We will also expand our MAP based on the indicative guidelines to be agreed.

12. To promote resilience, job creation and mitigate risks for development, we will prioritize action under the Seoul Consensus on addressing critical bottlenecks, including infrastructure deficits, food market volatility, and exclusion from financial services.
13. To provide broader, forward-looking leadership in the post-crisis economy, we will also continue our work to prevent and tackle corruption through our Anti-Corruption Action Plan; rationalize and phase-out over the medium term inefficient fossil fuel subsidies; mitigate excessive fossil fuel price volatility; safeguard the global marine environment; and combat the challenges of global climate change.

14. We reaffirm our resolute commitment to fight climate change, as reflected in the Leaders’ Seoul Summit Document. We appreciate President Felipe Calderón’s briefing on the status of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change negotiations, as well as Prime Minister Meles Zenawi’s briefing on the report of the High-Level Advisory Group on Climate Change Financing submitted to the UN Secretary-General. We will spare no effort to reach a balanced and successful outcome in Cancun.

15. We welcome the Fourth UN LDC Summit in Turkey and the Fourth High-Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness in Korea, both to be held in 2011.

16. Recognizing the importance of private sector-led growth and job creation, we welcome the Seoul G20 Business Summit and look forward to continuing the G20 Business Summit in upcoming Summits.

17. The actions agreed today will help to further strengthen the global economy, accelerate job creation, ensure more stable financial markets, narrow the development gap and promote broadly shared growth beyond crisis.

18. We look forward to our next meeting in 2011 in France, and subsequent meeting in 2012 in Mexico.

19. We thank Korea for its G20 Presidency and for hosting the successful Seoul Summit.

20. The Seoul Summit Document, which we have agreed, follows.

THE SEOUL SUMMIT DOCUMENT

Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth

1. Our unprecedented and highly coordinated fiscal and monetary stimulus worked to bring back the global economy from the edge of a depression. This has highlighted that the world would benefit from more effective international cooperation. In Pittsburgh, we launched the Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth and committed to work together to assess the collective implications of our national policies on global growth and development, identify potential risks to the global economy, and take additional actions to achieve our shared objectives.

2. Since then, we have made important progress through our country-led, consultative Mutual Assessment Process (MAP) of the Framework: Ÿ Supportive economic policies have been put in place to promote ongoing recovery and job creation;
   • Explicit commitments have been made to put public finances on a sustainable track;
   • Strong measures have been adopted and are being implemented to safeguard the stability of our financial system;
   • Important structural reforms have been launched and/or planned to boost global demand and potential growth; and
   • Significant steps have been taken to strengthen the capacity of international financial institutions (IFIs) in support of development.

3. Since we last met, the global recovery continues to advance, but downside risks remain. We are resolved to do more. Our strengthened collaborative and collective policy actions can further safeguard the recovery and lay a solid foundation for our shared objectives of strong, sustainable and balanced growth.

The Seoul Action Plan

4. Today we are launching the Seoul Action Plan. We shaped the Plan with unity of purpose to:
   • ensure an unwavering commitment to cooperation;
   • outline an action-oriented plan with each member’s concrete policy commitments; and
   • deliver on all three objectives of strong, sustainable and balanced growth.
5. Specifically, we commit to actions in five policy areas with details of specific commitments by G20 members set out in the Supporting Document.

6. Monetary and Exchange Rate Policies: We reaffirm the importance of central banks’ commitment to price stability, thereby contributing to the recovery and sustainable growth. We will move toward more market-determined exchange rate systems and enhance exchange rate flexibility to reflect underlying economic fundamentals and refrain from competitive devaluation of currencies. Advanced economies, including those with reserve currencies, will be vigilant against excess volatility and disorderly movements in exchange rates. Together these actions will help mitigate the risk of excessive volatility in capital flows facing some emerging market economies.

Nonetheless, in circumstances where countries are facing undue burden of adjustment, policy responses in emerging market economies with adequate reserves and increasingly overvalued flexible exchange rates may also include carefully designed macro-prudential measures. We will reinvigorate our efforts to promote a stable and well functioning international monetary system and call on the IMF to deepen its work in these areas.

7. Trade and Development Policies: We reaffirm our commitment to free trade and investment recognizing its central importance for the global recovery. We will refrain from introducing, and oppose protectionist trade actions in all forms and recognize the importance of a prompt conclusion of the Doha negotiations. We reaffirm our commitment to avoid financial protectionism and are mindful of the risks of proliferation of measures that would damage investment and harm prospects for the global recovery. With developing countries’ rising share in world output and trade, the goals of global growth, rebalancing and development are increasingly interlinked. We will focus efforts to resolve the most significant bottlenecks to inclusive, sustainable and resilient growth in developing countries, low-income countries (LICs) in particular: infrastructure, human resources development, trade, private investment and job creation, food security, growth with resilience, financial inclusion, domestic resource mobilization and knowledge sharing. In addition, we will take concrete actions to increase our financial and technical support, including fulfilling the Official Development Assistance (ODA) commitments by advanced countries.
8. Fiscal Policies: Advanced economies will formulate and implement clear, credible, ambitious and growth-friendly medium-term fiscal consolidation plans in line with the Toronto commitment, differentiated according to national circumstances. We are mindful of the risk of synchronized adjustment on the global recovery and of the risk that failure to implement consolidation, where immediately necessary, would undermine confidence and growth.

9. Financial Reforms: We are committed to take action at the national and international level to raise standards, and ensure that our national authorities implement global standards developed to date, consistently, in a way that ensures a level playing field, a race to the top and avoids fragmentation of markets, protectionism and regulatory arbitrage. In particular, we will implement fully the new bank capital and liquidity standards and address too-big-to-fail problems. We agreed to further work on financial regulatory reforms.

10. Structural Reforms: We will implement a range of structural reforms to boost and sustain global demand, foster job creation, contribute to global rebalancing, and increase our growth potential, and where needed undertake:

- Product market reforms to simplify regulation and reduce regulatory barriers in order to promote competition and enhance productivity in key sectors.

- Labor market and human resource development reforms, including better targeted benefits schemes to increase participation; education and training to increase employment in quality jobs, boost productivity and thereby enhance potential growth. Tax reform to enhance productivity by removing distortions and improving the incentives to work, invest and innovate.

- Green growth and innovation oriented policy measures to find new sources of growth and promote sustainable development.

- Reforms to reduce the reliance on external demand and focus more on domestic sources of growth in surplus countries while promoting higher national savings and enhancing export competitiveness in deficit countries.
• Reforms to strengthen social safety nets such as public health care and pension plans, corporate governance and financial market development to help reduce precautionary savings in emerging surplus countries.

• Investment in infrastructure to address bottlenecks and enhance growth potential. In pursuing these reforms, we will draw on the expertise of the OECD, IMF, World Bank, ILO and other international organizations.

11. MAP beyond the Seoul Summit: In addition, we will enhance the MAP to promote external sustainability. We will strengthen multilateral cooperation to promote external sustainability and pursue the full range of policies conducive to reducing excessive imbalances and maintaining current account imbalances at sustainable levels. Persistently large imbalances, assessed against indicative guidelines to be agreed by our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors, warrant an assessment of their nature and the root causes of impediments to adjustment as part of the MAP, recognizing the need to take into account national or regional circumstances, including large commodity producers. These indicative guidelines composed of a range of indicators would serve as a mechanism to facilitate timely identification of large imbalances that require preventive and corrective actions to be taken. To support our efforts toward meeting these commitments, we call on our Framework Working Group, with technical support from the IMF and other international organizations, to develop these indicative guidelines, with progress to be discussed by our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors in the first half of 2011; and, in Gyeongju, our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors called on the IMF to provide an assessment as part of the MAP on the progress toward external sustainability and the consistency of fiscal, monetary, financial sector, structural, exchange rate and other policies. In light of this, the first such assessment, to be based on the above mentioned indicative guidelines, will be initiated and undertaken in due course under the French Presidency.

12. We have a shared responsibility. Members with sustained, significant external deficits pledge to undertake policies to support private savings and where appropriate undertake fiscal consolidation while maintaining open markets and strengthening export sectors. Members with sustained, significant external surpluses pledge to strengthen domestic sources of growth.

13. Recognizing the benefits of the Framework, we agreed to expend and refine the country-led, consultative MAP by including monitoring of the implementation of our commitments and assessment of our progress toward achieving our shared objectives. This process will be adopted in 2011 under the French Presidency.

International Financial Institution Reforms

14. When the world was in the middle of the global financial crisis, we met and agreed to provide the IFIs with the resources they needed to support the global economy. With our agreements to increase their resources substantially and endorse new lending instruments, the IFIs mobilized critical financing, including more than $750 billion by the IMF and $235 billion by the Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs). Financial markets stabilized and the global economy started to recover. Even in the midst of the crisis, we knew that further reforms of the IFIs were required.

15. We committed to modernize the institutions fundamentally so that they better reflect changes in the world economy and can more effectively play their roles in promoting global financial stability, fostering development and improving the lives of the poorest. In June 2010, we welcomed the reforms to increase the voting power of developing and transition countries at the World Bank. We also remained committed to strengthening the legitimacy, credibility and effectiveness of the IMF through quota and governance reforms.

Modernized IMF governance

16. Today, we welcomed the ambitious achievements by the Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors at the Gyeongju meeting, and subsequent decision by the IMF, on a comprehensive package of IMF quota and governance reforms. The reforms are an important step toward a more legitimate, credible and effective IMF, by ensuring that quotas and Executive Board composition are more reflective of new global economic realities, and securing the IMF's status as a quota-based institution, with sufficient resources to support members' needs.
Consistent with our commitments at the Pittsburgh and Toronto Summits, and going even further in a number of areas, the reforms include:

- Shifts in quota shares to dynamic emerging market and developing countries and to under-represented countries of over 6%, while protecting the voting share of the poorest, which we commit to work to complete by the Annual Meetings in 2012.

- A doubling of quotas, with a corresponding rollback of the New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB) preserving relative shares, when the quota increase becomes effective.

- Continuing the dynamic process aimed at enhancing the voice and representation of emerging market and developing countries, including the poorest, through a comprehensive review of the quota formula by January 2013 to better reflect the economic weights; and through completion of the next general review of quotas by January 2014.

- Greater representation for emerging market and developing countries at the Executive Board through two fewer advanced European chairs, and the possibility of a second alternate for all multi-country constituencies.

- Moving to an all-elected Board, along with a commitment by the IMF’s membership to maintain the Board size at 24 chairs, and following the completion of the 14th General Review, a review of the Board’s composition every eight years.

17. We reiterate the urgency of promptly concluding the 2008 IMF Quota and Voice Reforms. We urge all G20 members participating in the expanded NAB to accelerate their procedures in completing the acceptance process. We ask the IMF to report on the progress, in accordance with agreed timelines, toward effective implementation of the 2010 quota and governance reforms to our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors at their periodic G20 meetings.

18. When combined with the already agreed voice reform of the World Bank, these represent significant achievements in modernizing our key IFIs. They will be even stronger players in promoting global financial stability and growth. We asked our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to continue to pursue all outstanding governance reform issues at the World Bank and the IMF.

Surveillance

19. We recognize the importance of continuing the work on reforming the IMF's mission and mandate, including strengthening surveillance.

20. IMF surveillance should be enhanced to focus on systemic risks and vulnerabilities wherever they may lie. To this extent, we welcome the decision made by the IMF to make financial stability assessments under the Financial Sector Assessment Program (FSAP) a regular and mandatory part of Article IV consultation for members with systemically important financial sectors. We call on the IMF to make further progress in modernizing the IMF's surveillance mandate and modalities. These should involve, in particular: strengthening bilateral and multilateral work on surveillance covering financial stability, macroeconomic, structural and exchange rate policies, with increased focus on systemic issues; enhancing synergies between surveillance tools; helping members to strengthen their surveillance capacity; and ensuring even-handedness, candor, and independence of surveillance. We welcome the IMF's work to conduct spillover assessments of the wider impact of systemic economies' policies.

Multilateral Development Banks

21. We reiterate our commitment to completing an ambitious replenishment for the concessional lending facilities of the MDBs, especially the International Development Association, to help ensure that LICs have access to sufficient concessional resources.

Strengthened global financial safety nets

22. As the global economy became more interconnected and integrated, the size and volatility of capital flows increased significantly. The increased volatility was a source of instability during the financial crisis. It even adversely affected countries with solid fundamentals and the effects were greater on those with more open economies. These problems persist. Current volatility of capital flows is reflecting the differing speed of recovery between advanced and emerging market economies. National, regional and multilateral responses are required. Strengthened global financial safety nets can help

- Moving to an all-elected Board, along with a commitment by the IMF’s membership to maintain the Board size at 24 chairs, and following the completion of the 14th General Review, a review of the Board’s composition every eight years.

23. Therefore, we asked our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to prepare policy options to strengthen global financial safety nets for our consideration at this Summit.

24. We welcome the following achievements from our mandate:

- The enhancement of the Flexible Credit Line (FCL) including the extension of its duration and removal of the access cap. Countries with strong fundamentals and policies will have access to a refined FCL with enhanced predictability and effectiveness.

- The creation of the Precautionary Credit Line (PCL) as a new preventative tool. The PCL allows countries with sound fundamentals and policies, but moderate vulnerabilities, to benefit from the IMF’s precautionary liquidity provision.

- The recent decision by the IMF to continue its work to further improve the global capacity to cope with shocks of a systemic nature, as well as the recent clarification of the procedures for synchronized approval of the FCLs for multiple countries, by which a number of countries affected by a common shock could concurrently seek access to FCL.

- The dialogue to enhance collaboration between Regional Financing Arrangements (RFAs) and the IMF, acknowledging the potential synergies from such collaboration.

25. Building on the achievements made to date on strengthening global financial safety nets, we need to do further work to improve our capacity to cope with future crises. Therefore, we asked our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors to explore, with input from the IMF:
• A structured approach to cope with shocks of a systemic nature.
• Ways to improve collaboration between RFAs and the IMF across all possible areas and enhance the capability of RFAs for crisis prevention, while recognizing region specific circumstances and characteristics of each RFA.

26. Our goal is to build a more stable and resilient international monetary system. While the international monetary system has proved resilient, tensions and vulnerabilities are clearly apparent. We agreed to explore ways to further improve the international monetary system to ensure systemic stability in the global economy. We asked the IMF to deepen its work on all aspects of the international monetary system, including capital flow volatility. We look forward to reviewing further analysis and proposals over the next year.

Financial Sector Reforms

27. The global financial system came to a sudden halt in 2008 as a result of reckless and irresponsible risk taking by banks and other financial institutions, combined with major failures of regulation and supervision. While our initial priority was to move quickly to stabilize financial markets and restore the global flow of capital, we never lost sight of the need to address the root causes of the crisis. We took our first step at the Washington Summit, where we developed the Action Plan to Implement Principles for Reform. Since then, we built on the progress made in London, Pittsburgh, and Toronto, and together, took major strides toward fixing the financial system with the support from the international organizations, particularly the Financial Stability Board (FSB) and the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (BCBS).

Transformed financial system to address the root causes of the crisis

28. Today, we have delivered core elements of the new financial regulatory framework to transform the global financial system.

29. We endorsed the landmark agreement reached by the BCBS on the new bank capital and liquidity framework, which increases the resilience of the global banking system by raising the quality, quantity and international consistency of bank capital and liquidity, constrains the build-up of leverage and maturity mismatches, and introduces capital buffers above the minimum requirements that can be drawn upon in bad times. The framework includes an internationally harmonized leverage ratio to serve as a backstop to the risk-based capital measures. With this, we have achieved far-reaching reform of the global banking system. The new standards will markedly reduce banks' incentive to take excessive risks, lower the likelihood and severity of future crises, and enable banks to withstand - without extraordinary government support - stresses of a magnitude associated with the recent financial crisis. This will result in a banking system that can better support stable economic growth. We are committed to adopt and implement fully these standards within the agreed timeframe that is consistent with economic recovery and financial stability. The new framework will be translated into our national laws and regulations, and will be implemented starting on January 1, 2013 and fully phased in by January 1, 2019.

30. We reaffirmed our view that no firm should be too big or too complicated to fail and that taxpayers should not bear the costs of resolution. We endorsed the policy framework, work processes, and timelines proposed by the FSB to reduce the moral hazard risks posed by systemically important financial institutions (SIFIs) and address the too-big-to-fail problem. This requires a multi-pronged framework combining: a resolution framework and other measures to ensure that all financial institutions can be resolved safely, quickly and without destabilizing the financial system and exposing the taxpayers to the risk of loss; a requirement that SIFIs and initially in particular financial institutions that are globally systemic (G-SIFIs) should have higher loss absorbency capacity to reflect the greater risk that the failure of these firms poses to the global financial system; more intensive supervisory oversight; robust core financial market infrastructure to reduce contagion risk from individual failures; and other supplementary prudential and other requirements as determined by the national authorities which may include, in some circumstances, liquidity surcharges, tighter large exposure restrictions, levies and structural measures. In the context of loss absorbency, we encourage further progress on the feasibility of contingent capital and other instruments. We encouraged the FSB, BCBS and other relevant bodies to complete their remaining work in accordance with the endorsed work processes and timelines in 2011 and 2012.

31. In addition, we agreed that G-SIFIs should be subject to a sustained process of mandatory international recovery and resolution planning. We agreed to conduct rigorous risk assessment on these firms through international supervisory colleges and negotiate institution-specific crisis cooperation agreements within crisis management groups. Regular peer reviews will be conducted by the FSB on the effectiveness and consistency of national policy measures for these firms.

32. We reaffirmed our Toronto commitment to national-level implementation of the BCBS's cross-border resolution recommendations. To support implementation at the national level, we welcomed the BCBS's planned stock taking exercise of these recommendations. We called on the FSB to build on this work and develop attributes of effective resolution regimes by 2011.

33. Delivering on our commitment in Toronto, we endorsed the policy recommendations prepared by the FSB in consultation with the IMF, on increasing supervisory intensity and effectiveness. We reaffirmed that the new financial regulatory framework must be complemented with more effective oversight and supervision. We agreed that supervisors should have strong and unambiguous mandates, sufficient independence to act, appropriate resources, and a full suite of tools and powers to proactively identify and address risks, including regular stress testing and early intervention.

Implementation and international assessment, including peer review

34. But our reform efforts are an ongoing process. It is essential that we fully implement the new standards and principles, in a way that ensures a level playing field, a race to the top and avoids fragmentation of markets, protectionism and regulatory arbitrage. We recognized different national starting points.
35. We reaffirmed today our full commitment to action and implementation.

36. At the national level, we will incorporate the new standards and principles into relevant legislation and policies. At the global level, international assessment and peer review processes should be substantially enhanced in order to ensure consistency in implementation across countries and identify areas for further improvement in standards and principles. In this regard, we recognized the value of the FSAP jointly undertaken by the IMF and the World Bank, and the FSB’s peer review as means of fostering consistent cross-country implementation of international standards.

37. We also firmly recommitted to work in an internationally consistent and nondiscriminatory manner to strengthen regulation and supervision on hedge funds, OTC derivatives and credit rating agencies. We reaffirmed the importance of fully implementing the FSB’s standards for sound compensation. We endorsed the FSB’s recommendations for implementing OTC derivatives market reforms, designed to fully implement our previous commitments in an internationally consistent manner, recognizing the importance of a level playing field. We asked the FSB to monitor the progress regularly. We welcomed ongoing work by the Committee on Payment and Settlement Systems and the International Organization of Securities Commissions (IOSCO) on central counterparty standards. We also endorsed the FSB’s principles on reducing reliance on external credit ratings. Standard setters, market participants, supervisors and central banks should not rely mechanistically on external credit ratings. International recovery and resolution planning. We agreed to conduct rigorous risk assessment on these firms through international supervisory colleges and negotiate institution-specific crisis cooperation agreements within crisis management groups. Regular peer reviews will be conducted by the FSB on the effectiveness and consistency of national policy measures for these firms.

38. We re-emphasized the importance we place on achieving a single set of improved high quality global accounting standards and called on the International Accounting Standards Board and the Financial Accounting Standards Board to complete their convergence project by the end of 2011. We also encouraged the International Accounting Standards Board to further improve the involvement of stakeholders, including outreach to, and membership of, emerging market economies, in the process of setting the global standards, within the framework of independent accounting standard setting process.

39. In addition, we reiterated our commitment to preventing non-cooperative jurisdictions from posing risks to the global financial system and welcomed the ongoing efforts by the FSB, Global Forum on Tax Transparency and Exchange of Information (Global Forum), and the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), based on comprehensive, consistent and transparent assessment. We reached agreement on:

- The FSB to determine by spring 2011 those jurisdictions that are not cooperating fully with the evaluation process or that show insufficient progress to address weak compliance with internationally agreed information exchange and cooperation standards, based on the recommended actions by the agreed timetable.

- The Global Forum to swiftly progress its Phase 1 and 2 reviews to achieve the objective agreed by Leaders in Toronto and report progress by November 2011. Reviewed jurisdictions identified as not having the elements in place to achieve an effective exchange of information should promptly address the weaknesses. We urge all jurisdictions to stand ready to conclude Tax Information Exchange Agreements where requested by a relevant partner.

- The FATF to pursue its successful work in identifying non-cooperative jurisdictions as well as regularly updating a public list on jurisdictions with strategic deficiencies, with next update being in February 2011.

40. We reaffirmed the FSB’s role in coordinating at the international level the work of national financial authorities and international standard setting bodies in developing and promoting the implementation of effective regulatory, supervisory and other financial sector policies in the interest of global financial stability. We asked the FSB to bring forward for review by Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors well before our next meeting in 2011 proposals to strengthen its capacity, resources and governance to keep pace with growing demands. We welcomed the FSB’s outreach. We endorsed the establishment of regional consultative groups. We welcomed the FSB report on progress in the implementation of G20 recommendations for strengthening financial stability and look forward to another progress report at our next meeting.

Future work: Issues that warrant more attention

41. While we have made significant progress in a number of areas, there still remain some issues that warrant more attention:

- Further work on macro-prudential policy frameworks: In order to deal with systemic risks in the financial sector in a comprehensive manner and on an ongoing basis, we called on the FSB, IMF and BIS to do further work on macro-prudential policy frameworks, including tools to mitigate the impact of excessive capital flows, and update our Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors at their next meeting. These frameworks should take into account national and regional arrangements. We look forward to a joint report which should elaborate on the progress achieved in identification of best practices, which will be the basis for establishing in the future international principles or guidelines on the design and implementation of the frameworks.

- Addressing regulatory reform issues pertaining specifically to emerging market and developing economies: We agreed to work on financial stability issues that are of particular interest to emerging market and developing economies, and called on the FSB, IMF and World Bank to develop and report before the next Summit. These issues could include: the management of foreign exchange risks by financial institutions, corporations and households; emerging market and developing economies’ regulatory and supervisory capacity where necessary, including with regard to local branches of foreign financial institutions which are systemic in their host country and development of deposit insurance schemes; financial inclusion; information sharing between home and host supervisory authorities on cross border financial institutions; and trade finance.

• Strengthening regulation and supervision of shadow banking: With the completion of the new standards for banks, there is a potential that regulatory gaps may emerge in the shadow banking system. Therefore, we called on the FSB to work in collaboration with other international standard setting bodies to develop recommendations to strengthen the regulation and oversight of the shadow banking system by mid-2011.

• Further work on regulation and supervision of commodity derivative markets: We called especially on IOSCO’s taskforce on commodity futures markets to report to the FSB for consideration of next steps in April 2011 on its important work.

• Improving market integrity and efficiency: We called on IOSCO to develop by June 2011 and report to the FSB recommendations to promote markets’ integrity and efficiency to mitigate the risks posed to the financial system by the latest technological developments.

• Enhancing consumer protection: We asked the FSB to work in collaboration with the OECD and other international organizations to explore, and report back by the next summit, on options to advance consumer finance protection through informed choice that includes disclosure, transparency and education; protection from fraud, abuse and errors; and recourse and advocacy.

Fighting Protectionism and Promoting Trade and Investment

42. Recognizing the importance of free trade and investment for global recovery, we are committed to keeping markets open and liberalizing trade and investment as a means to promote economic progress for all and narrow the development gap. The importance of free trade and open markets is illustrated by the joint report of the OECD, ILO, World Bank and WTO on the benefits of trade liberalization for employment and growth. These trade and investment liberalization measures will help achieve the G20 Framework objectives for strong, sustainable and balanced growth, and must be complemented by our unwavering commitment to resist protectionism in all its forms. We therefore reaffirm the extension of our standstill commitments until the end of 2013 as agreed in Toronto, commit to rollback any new protectionist measures that may have risen, including export restrictions and WTO-inconsistent measures to stimulate exports, and ask the WTO, OECD, and UNCTAD to continue monitoring the situation and to report publicly on a semi-annual basis.

43. With respect to the WTO Doha Development Round, we welcome the broader and more substantive engagement of the past four months among our representatives in Geneva. Bearing in mind that 2011 is a critical window of opportunity, albeit narrow, this engagement must intensify and expand. We now need to complete the end game. We direct our negotiators to engage in across-the-board negotiations to promptly bring the Doha Development Round to a successful, ambitious, comprehensive, and balanced conclusion consistent with the mandate of the Doha Development Round and built on the progress achieved. Once such an outcome is reached, we commit to seek ratification, where necessary, in our respective systems.

44. We strongly believe that trade can be an effective tool for reducing poverty and enhancing economic growth in developing countries, LICs in particular. To support LIC capacity to trade, we welcome the adoption of the Multi-Year Action Plan on Development. We note our commitment to at least maintain, beyond 2011, Aid for Trade levels that reflect the average of the last three years (2006 to 2008); to make progress toward duty-free quota-free market access for least developed country (LDC) products in line with our Hong Kong commitments, without prejudice to other negotiations, including as regards preferential rules of origin; to call on relevant international agencies to coordinate a collective multilateral response to support trade facilitation; and to support measures to increase the availability of trade finance in developing countries, particularly LICs. In this respect, we also agree to monitor and assess trade finance programs in support of developing countries, in particular their coverage and impact on LICs, and to evaluate the impact of regulatory regimes on trade finance.

45. We recognize the potential for faster growth in Africa, which could be unlocked by African plans for deeper regional economic integration. We therefore commit to support the regional integration efforts of African leaders, including by helping to realize their vision of a free trade area through the promotion of trade facilitation and regional infrastructure. We call on the MDBs and WTO to collaborate with us in supporting this endeavor.

Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth

46. The crisis disproportionately affected the most vulnerable in the poorest countries and slowed progress toward achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). As the premier economic forum, we recognize the need to strengthen and leverage our development efforts to address such challenges.

47. At the same time, narrowing the development gap and reducing poverty are integral to achieving our broader Framework objectives of strong, sustainable and balanced growth by generating new poles of growth and contributing to global rebalancing. We are therefore using our best efforts for a rapid increase in the share of global growth and prosperity for developing countries, LICs in particular. Our unwavering commitment to resist protectionism in all its forms. We therefore reaffirm the extension of our standstill commitments until the end of 2013 as agreed in Toronto, commit to rollback any new protectionist measures that may have risen, including export restrictions and WTO-inconsistent measures to stimulate exports, and ask the WTO, OECD, and UNCTAD to continue monitoring the situation and to report publicly on a semi-annual basis.

48. We commit to work in partnership with other developing countries, LICs in particular, to help them build the capacity to achieve and maintain their maximum economic growth potential. We have thus developed a consensus for the G20’s contribution to global development efforts in line with our Toronto mandate.
49. We endorse today the Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth (Annex I) and its Multi-Year Action Plan on Development (Annex II).

50. The Seoul Consensus and the Multi-Year Action Plan are based on six core principles:

- First, an enduring and meaningful reduction in poverty cannot be achieved without inclusive, sustainable and resilient growth, while the provision of ODA, as well as the mobilization of all other sources of financing, remain essential to the development of most LICs.

- Second, we recognize that while there are common factors, there is no single formula for development success. We must therefore engage other developing countries as partners, respecting national ownership of a country's policies as the most important determinant of its successful development, thereby helping to ensure strong, responsible, accountable and transparent development partnerships between the G20 and LICs.

- Third, our actions must prioritize global or regional systemic issues that call for collective action and have the potential for transformative impact.

- Fourth, we recognize the critical role of the private sector to create jobs and wealth, and the need for a policy environment that supports sustainable private sector-led investment and growth.

- Fifth, we will maximize our value-added and complement the development efforts of other key players by focusing on areas where the G20 has a comparative advantage or could add momentum.

- And finally, we will focus on tangible outcomes of significant impact that remove blockages to improving growth prospects in developing countries, especially LICs.

51. The Seoul Consensus also identifies nine key pillars where we believe actions are necessary to resolve the most significant bottlenecks to inclusive, sustainable and resilient growth in developing countries, LICs in particular: infrastructure, human resource development, trade, private investment and job creation, food security, growth with resilience, financial inclusion, domestic resource mobilization and knowledge sharing. The Multi-Year Action Plan then outlines the specific, detailed actions to which we commit in order to address these bottlenecks, including to:

a) Facilitate increased investment from public, semi-public and private sources and improve the implementation and maintenance of national and regional infrastructure projects in sectors where there are bottlenecks. We agree to establish a High-Level Panel (HLP) to recommend measures to mobilize infrastructure financing and review MDBs’ policy frameworks. We will announce the Chair of the HLP by December 2010;

b) Improve the development of employable skills matched to employer and labor market needs in order to enhance the ability to attract investment, create decent jobs and increase productivity. We will support the development of internationally comparable skills indicators and the enhancement of national strategies for skills development, building on the G20 Training Strategy;

c) Improve the access and availability to trade with advanced economies and between developing and LICs. Our action plans on trade are discussed in paragraphs 42 to 45 above;

d) Identify, enhance and promote responsible private investment in value chains and develop key indicators for measuring and maximizing the economic and employment impact of private sector investment;

e) Enhance food security policy coherence and coordination and increase agricultural productivity and food availability, including by advancing innovative results-based mechanisms, promoting responsible agriculture investment, fostering smallholder agriculture, and inviting relevant international organizations to develop, for our 2011 Summit in France, proposals to better manage and mitigate risks of food price volatility without distorting market behavior. We also welcome the progress of the Global Agriculture and Food Security Program, as well as that of other bilateral and multilateral channels, including the UN Committee on World Food Security, and invite further contributions;

f) Improve income security and resilience to adverse shocks by assisting developing countries enhance social protection programs, including through further implementation of the UN Global Pulse Initiative, and by facilitating implementation of initiatives aimed at a quantified reduction of the average cost of transferring remittances;

g) Increase access to finance for the poor and small and medium enterprises (SMEs). Our action plans for financial inclusion and associated implementation mechanisms are discussed in paragraphs 55 to 57 below;

h) Build sustainable revenue bases for inclusive growth and social equity by improving developing country tax administration systems and policies and highlighting the relationship between non-cooperative jurisdictions and development; and

i) Scale up and mainstream sharing of knowledge and experience, especially between developing countries, in order to improve their capacity and ensure that the broadest range of experiences are used to help tailor national policies.

52. We commit to and prioritize full, timely and effective implementation of the Multi-Year Action Plan, understanding its high potential to have a positive transformative impact on people’s lives, both through our individual and collective actions and in partnership with other global development stakeholders. We will continue to work closely with relevant international organizations to push these actions forward.

53. We reaffirm our commitment to achievement of the MDGs and will align our work in accordance with globally agreed development principles for sustainable economic, social and environmental development, to complement the outcomes of the UN High-Level Plenary Meeting on the MDGs held in September 2010 in New York, as well as with processes such as the Fourth UN LDC Summit in Turkey and the Fourth High-Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness in Korea, both to be held in 2011. We also reaffirm our respective ODA pledges and commitments to assist the poorest countries and mobilize domestic resources made following on from the Monterrey Consensus and other fora.

54. We further mandate the Development Working Group to monitor implementation of the Multi-Year Action Plan, so that we may review progress and consider the need for any further steps at the 2011 Summit in France. Development based on the Seoul Consensus will therefore be an enduring part of future G20 Summits. What we promise, we will deliver.

Financial Inclusion

55. We reiterate our strong commitment to financial inclusion and recognize the benefits of improved access to finance to lift the lives of the poor and to support the contribution of SMEs to economic development. We welcome the stock taking report on successful and scalable models of SME financing in developing economies. We have developed the Financial Inclusion Action Plan based on our Principles for Innovative Financial Inclusion as the work program for the coming year.

56. Working with the Alliance for Financial Inclusion, the Consultative Group to Assist the Poor and the International Finance Corporation, we commit to launch the Global Partnership for Financial Inclusion (GPFI) as an inclusive platform for all G20 countries, interested non-G20 countries and relevant stakeholders to carry forward our work on financial inclusion, including implementation of the Financial Inclusion Action Plan. The GPFI's efforts over the next year will include helping countries put into practice the Principles for Innovative Financial Inclusion, strengthening data for measuring financial inclusion, and developing methodologies for countries wishing to set targets. We agree that the GPFI should report to us on its progress at our 2011 Summit in France.

57. Recognizing the vital role of SMEs in employment and income generation, we welcome the strong response to the G20 SME Finance Challenge and the innovative models for scaling up private SME finance that have emerged from the competition and congratulate the winners. We have constructed a flexible SME Finance Framework to mobilize grant, risk capital and private financing by using existing funding mechanisms and the new SME Finance Innovation Fund to finance the winning proposals and other successful SME financing models. We welcome the commitment of Canada, Korea, the United States and the Inter-American Development Bank of $528 million to the Framework through grants and co-financing.

Energy

Fossil Fuel Subsidies

58. We reaffirm our commitment to rationalize and phase-out over the medium term inefficient fossil fuel subsidies that encourage wasteful consumption, with timing based on national circumstances, while providing targeted support for the poorest. We direct our Finance and Energy Ministers to report back on the progress made in implementing country-specific strategies and in achieving the goals to which we agreed in Pittsburgh and Toronto at the 2011 Summit in France.

59. We note the preliminary report of the IEA, World Bank and OECD and ask these organizations, together with OPEC, to further assess and review the progress made in implementing the Pittsburgh and Toronto commitments and report back to the 2011 Summit in France.

60. We recognize the value of the sharing of knowledge, expertise and capacity with respect to programs and policies that phase out inefficient fossil fuel subsidies.

Fossil Fuel Price Volatility

61. We recognize the importance of a well-functioning and transparent market in oil for world economic growth. We strongly support the Joint Oil Data Initiative (JODI) and ask the IEF, IEA and OPEC for a report suggesting specific steps in order to improve the quality, timeliness and reliability of the JODI Database. The report should include a proposed timeframe and implementation strategy, which will explore the ways to improve data availability on oil production, consumption, refining and stock levels, as appropriate. An intermediate report should be submitted to the February 2011 Finance Ministers’ meeting, with the final report submitted to the April 2011 Finance Ministers’ meeting. We also request the IEF, IEA, OPEC and IOSCO to produce a joint report, by the April 2011 Finance Ministers’ meeting, on how the oil spot market prices are assessed by oil price reporting agencies and how this affects the transparency and functioning of oil markets.

62. We support the establishment of the IEF charter to strengthen the producer-consumer dialogue, and welcome the IEF plan, developed in cooperation with the IEA and OPEC, to hold an annual symposium with major relevant institutions on energy market outlooks. We call on the IEF, IEA and OPEC to produce a joint report and common communiqué, highlighting their respective outlooks and their short, medium and long-term forecasts for oil market supply and demand. We welcome their ongoing work on the linkages between oil physical and financial markets.

63. Welcoming the June and November 2010 IOSCO reports, we ask IOSCO to further monitor developments in the oil OTC markets and report to the FSB for consideration of next steps, for improved regulation and enhanced transparency of the oil financial market in April 2011 by Finance Ministers and other relevant Ministers, informed by the work of the Energy Experts Group. We ask the Energy Experts Group to extend its work on volatility to other fossil fuels as a second step.

Global Marine Environment Protection

64. We welcome the progress achieved by the Global Marine Environment Protection (GMEP) initiative toward the goal of sharing best practices to protect the marine environment, to prevent accidents related to offshore exploration and development, as well as marine transportation, and to deal with their consequences. We recognize the work done by the GMEP Experts Sub-Group and take note of the progress made on reviewing international regulation of offshore oil and gas exploration, production and transport with respect to marine environmental protection as a first step to implement the Toronto mandate.
65. Future work on the GMEP initiative should benefit from relevant findings, as they become available, from the National Commission on the BP Deepwater Horizon Oil Spill in the United States and the Montara Commission of Inquiry in Australia. We ask the GMEP Experts Sub-Group to provide a further report, with the support of the IMO, OECD, IEA, OPEC, International Regulators Forum, and International Association of Drilling Contractors and, in consultation with relevant stakeholders, to continue work on the effective sharing of best practices at the 2011 Summit in France.

Climate Change and Green Growth

66. Addressing the threat of global climate change is an urgent priority for all nations. We reiterate our commitment to take strong and action-oriented measures and remain fully dedicated to UN climate change negotiations. We reaffirm the objective, provisions, and the principles of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), including common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. We thank Mexico for hosting the UNFCCC negotiations to be held in Cancun beginning at the end of November 2010. Those of us who have associated with the Copenhagen Accord reaffirm our support for it and its implementation. We all are committed to achieving a successful, balanced result that includes the core issues of mitigation, transparency, finance, technology, adaptation, and forest preservation. In this regard, we welcome the work of the High-Level Advisory Group on Climate Change Financing established by the UN Secretary-General and ask our Finance Ministers to consider its report. We also support and encourage the delivery of fast-start finance commitments.

67. The ongoing loss of biodiversity is a global environmental and economic challenge. Both climate change and loss of biodiversity are inextricably linked. We acknowledge the outcomes of the global study on the economics of ecosystems and biodiversity. We welcome the successful conclusion of COP10 in Nagoya.

68. We are committed to support country-led green growth policies that promote environmentally sustainable global growth along with employment creation while ensuring energy access for the poor. We recognize that sustainable green growth, as it is inherently a part of sustainable development, is a strategy of quality development, enabling countries to leapfrog old technologies in many sectors, including through the use of energy efficiency and clean technology. To that end, we will take steps to create, as appropriate, the enabling environments that are conducive to the development and deployment of energy efficiency and clean energy technologies, including policies and practices in our countries and beyond, including technical transfer and capacity building. We support the ongoing initiatives under the Clean Energy Ministerial and encourage further discussion on cooperation in R&D and regulatory measures, together with business leaders, and ask our Energy Experts Group to monitor and report back to us on progress at the 2011 Summit in France. We also commit to stimulate investment in clean energy technology, energy and resource efficiency, green transportation, and green cities by mobilizing finance, establishing clear and consistent standards, developing long-term energy policies, supporting education, enterprise and R&D, and continuing to promote cross-border collaboration and coordination of national legislative approaches.

Anti-Corruption

69. Recognizing that corruption is a severe impediment to economic growth and development, we endorse the G20 Anti-Corruption Action Plan (Annex III). Building on previous declarations, and cognizant of our role as leaders of major trading nations, we recognize a special responsibility to prevent and tackle corruption and commit to supporting a common approach to building an effective global anti-corruption regime.

70. In this regard, we will lead by example in key areas as detailed in the Anti-Corruption Action Plan, including: to accede or ratify and effectively implement the UN Convention against Corruption and promote a transparent and inclusive review process; adopt and enforce laws against the bribery of foreign public officials; prevent access of corrupt officials to the global financial system; consider a cooperative framework for the denial of entry to corrupt officials, extradition, and asset recovery; protect whistleblowers; safeguard anticorruption bodies. We are also committed to undertake a dedicated effort to encourage public-private partnerships to tackle corruption and to engage the private sector in the fight against corruption, with a view to promoting propriety, integrity and transparency in the conduct of business affairs, as well as in the public sector.

71. The G20 will hold itself accountable for its commitments. Beyond our participation in existing mechanisms of peer review for international anti-corruption standards, we mandate the Anti-Corruption Working Group to submit annual reports on the implementation of our commitments to future Summits for the duration of the Anti-Corruption Action Plan.

Business Summit

72. Recognizing the importance of private sector-led growth and job creation, we welcome the Seoul G20 Business Summit held on November 10 and 11 that convened global business leaders under the theme "The Role of Business for Sustainable and Balanced Growth". We look forward to continuing the G20 Business Summit in upcoming Summits.

Consultation

73. We recognize, given the broad impact of our decisions, the necessity to consult with the wider international community. We will increase our efforts to conduct G20 consultation activities in a more systematic way, building on constructive partnerships with international organizations, in particular the UN, regional bodies, civil society, trade unions and academia.

74. Bearing in mind the importance of the G20 being both representative and effective as the premier forum for our international economic cooperation, we reached a broad consensus on a set of principles for non-member invitations to Summits, including that we will invite no more than five non-member invitees, of which at least two will be countries in Africa.

Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth

—Toronto Declaration, June 26-27, 2010

In the wake of the most severe economic shock in recent history, the G20 has the opportunity to contribute to the reconstruction of the world economy in a form conducive to strong, sustainable, inclusive and resilient growth. Through the Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth, we seek to add value to and complement existing development commitments, particularly those made at the recent High-Level Plenary Meeting on the Millennium Development Goals, and in other fora.

Why Growth Must be Shared

At Pittsburgh we agreed to work together in an unprecedented process of mutual assessment to ensure our individual economic policies collectively achieved an outcome of strong, sustainable and balanced growth. This Framework was borne of a recognition that for the world to enjoy continuing levels of prosperity it must find new drivers of aggregate demand and more enduring sources of global growth. We recognize as a crucial part of this exercise that we need to enhance the role of developing countries and low income countries (LICs) in particular, for the following reasons:

• First, because for prosperity to be sustained it must be shared.

• Second, because we acknowledge that the impact of the recent crisis demonstrated a global interconnectedness that is disproportionately affecting the most vulnerable in the poorest countries. It has been estimated that, as a result of the recent crisis, an additional 64 million people will be living in extreme poverty (i.e., living on less than USD 1.25 a day) by the end of 2010. We therefore have a responsibility to fulfill.
• Third, as the premier forum for our international economic cooperation, because the G20 has a role to play, complementing the efforts of aid donors, the UN system, multilateral development banks (MDBs) and other agencies, in assisting developing countries, particularly LICs, achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Our role must relate to our mandate on global economic cooperation and recognize that consistently high levels of inclusive growth in developing countries, and LICs in particular, are critically necessary, if not sufficient, for the eradication of extreme poverty.

• Fourth, because the rest of the global economy, in its quest for diversifying the sources of global demand and destinations for investing surpluses, needs developing countries and LICs to become new poles of global growth - just as fast growing emerging markets have become in the recent past. Our overarching objective of helping LICs improve and maintain the levels and quality of growth, thereby reducing poverty, improving human rights and creating decent jobs, requires strengthening the relationships among high, middle and low income countries. This entails promoting sustainable economic, social and environmental development; honoring equity in the partnerships that exist; building stronger and more effective partnerships among advanced countries, emerging countries and LICs; engaging the private sector and civil society; and refocusing our priorities and efforts to remove the bottlenecks for LIC growth. We further believe there is no "one-size-fits-all" formula for development success and that developing countries must take the lead in designing and implementing development strategies tailored to their individual needs and circumstances.

G20 Development Principles

We therefore commit ourselves to a Multi-Year Action Plan to achieve these objectives. This Plan will be based on the following principles, intended to capture the key characteristics of our actions and policies:

1. Focus on economic growth. Be economic-growth oriented and consistent with the G20 Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth, which requires narrowing of the development gap. More robust and sustainable economic growth in LICs will also go hand-in-hand with their capacity to achieve the MDGs. Actions and policies should have the capacity to significantly improve the prospects for inclusive, sustainable and resilient growth above business as usual.

2. Global development partnership. Engage developing countries, particularly LICs, as equal partners, respecting their national ownership and recognizing that the most important determinant of successful development is a country’s own development policy. Ensure that actions foster strong, responsible, accountable and transparent development partnerships between the G20 and LICs.

3. Global or regional systemic issues. Prioritize actions that tackle global or regional systemic issues such as regional integration where the G20 can help to catalyze action by drawing attention to key challenges and calling on international institutions, such as MDBs, to respond. Focus on systemic issues where there is a need for collective and coordinated action, including through South-South and triangular cooperation, to create synergies for maximum development impact.

4. Private sector participation. Promote private sector involvement and innovation, recognizing the unique role of the private sector as a rich source of development knowledge, technology and job creation. Encourage specific ways to stimulate and leverage the flows of private capital for development, including by reducing risks and improving the investment climate and market size.

5. Complementarity. Differentiate, yet complement existing development efforts, avoiding duplication, and strategically focus on areas where the G20 has a comparative advantage and can add value focusing on its core mandate as the premier forum for international economic cooperation.

6. Outcome orientation. Focus on feasible, practical and accountable measures to address clearly articulated problems that are serious blockages to significantly improving growth prospects for developing countries. Such measures should have the potential to provide tangible outcomes and be significant in impact. Implementation of G20 action on development should be monitored through an adequate accountability framework.

In close consultation with our developing country and LIC partners, as well as relevant international and regional organizations with development expertise, we have also identified nine areas, or "key pillars," where we believe action and reform are most critical to ensure inclusive and sustainable economic growth and resilience in developing countries and LICs. These areas are: infrastructure, private investment and job creation, human resource development, trade, financial inclusion, growth with resilience, food security, domestic resource mobilization and knowledge sharing. Creating optimal conditions for strong, sustainable and resilient economic growth in developing countries will require reform and transformation across each of these interlinked and mutually reinforcing key pillars. Guided by our development principles and oriented around the key pillars, we have developed the following Multi-Year Action Plan on Development. We believe these action plans address some of the most critical bottlenecks to strong and sustainable economic growth and resilience in developing countries, in particular LICs, and have high potential for transformative, game-changing impact on people's lives, helping to narrow the development gap, improve human rights and promote gender equality. We commit to full, timely and effective implementation of these action plans and, to this end, will continue to closely monitor their progress, in synergy with other processes, including preparations for the Fourth High-Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness to be held in Korea in late 2011.

November 12, 2010.

Prime Minister: We have had a very fruitful G20 meeting. Much of the G20 is work in progress. But as I have said in my opening remarks, we have achieved quite a lot in two years since its inception. The Seoul meeting has delivered the following concrete things:

First, completion of the second stage of IMF quota reforms and re-structuring of the executive board of the fund, with new and more flexible credit lines.

Two, BASEL III, a key pillar of the global financial reforms. Much more remains to be done by the financial stability board which has now been democratised to include all G20 members.

Three, agreement on the macroeconomic mutual assessment process to be reviewed in the next G20 meeting. This is a complex process but it is the first step towards country led policy coordination.

Fourth, putting development on the agenda of the G20. A high level panel has been mandated to look at ways of financing infrastructure development in developing countries using private, public and semi public means. In addition, there was a discussion on the prospects for the Doha round of trade negotiations, and also the prospects for the Cancun Summit on environment related issues. So on the whole , the meeting did yield positive results, and as far as what I said my speech at the meeting is already made available to you. So I believe you have seen it.

Question: Financial sector development council, do you approve of such a measure and do you see India playing an interlocutory role in G20 between surplus and deficit countries?

Prime Minister: No there is no such possibility. Our reforms are well thought of. They were in response to the needs of the time. And our requirements will be the sole determinant of what type of reforms we wish to do. But we do want, I think, a reformed system, which is internationally accepted because that is the way in which an interdependent world can manage flows of capital from one country to the other.

We have a trade deficit of about 7-8% of our GDP. We have a current account deficit of about 2.5 to 3% of our GDP. We are not piling up reserves. So we are not creating any problems for the functioning of the global system. We are not a surplus country in that sense, we have a deficit, but our deficit will and has been managed within the limits of prudence.

Question: What do you envisage as the counters of the new financial order in the world? Will it supplement IMF?

Prime Minister: It is too early to speculate on the final shape of the new financial order. As I said, much of it is work in progress. I think, several ideas are under discussion. A dialogue is taking place at different forums. It is very difficult for me to predict where they will all go.

Question: On capital flows, China and Germany have taken on US. Can we afford to be sanguine about it, given the inflationary risks.

Prime Minister: Well, capital flows can create problems but we are not in that stage where capital flows can become a major problem. We will manage our affairs in such a manner that capital flows do not give rise to the type of inflationary problems that you have referred.

Question: Most of what you said in your speech at the plenary seems to have been included in the G20 final communiqué. Is it the victory of Dr. Manhoman Singh, that you influenced the final communiqué?

Prime Minister: Well I do not claim victory. These are ideas which are under discussion in various fora. The Sherpas have been discussing these ideas and it is a process of give and take. But I do claim some credit that in my speech, I brought the development issue into the very forefront of sustainable, manageable growth process, that you should not only look at mainly surpluses and deficits but you should also see that these imbalances become an opportunity to deal with a more fundamental imbalance which is the development gap between the rich and poor countries. And that point, after I made that in my opening speech, was caught up by several other speakers and they complimented that I focussed and brought development to the forefront of the international dialogue.
Question: BASEL III issue…. there were some concerns whether India even needs to adopt it, do we need to rush into it?

Prime Minister: Well there is no question of rushing into it. If I remember it correctly, even the BASEL draft has to be adopted by the year 2018-19. So I think there is a fair amount of time available for us to decide what to do on our own.

Question: Proposal to recycle surpluses for infrastructure development…is there a need to limiting inflows into infrastructure in developed countries?

Prime Minister: Infrastructure in one critical bottleneck which is hampering the development of large number of developing countries, both in Asia, Africa and Latin America. And you have a queer situation, in a more rational world, capital should flow from rich countries to poor countries. Here capital is flowing from developing countries to rich countries and there is I think some oddity in this whole process. What I was saying was that these imbalances should be invitations to bring about a new order, where surplus capital would become available to poor countries to accelerate the process of their development. If it comes about, I think then it would greatly accelerate the process of growth of poorer countries.

Question: In your speech you said there would be fiscal consolidation, does India plan to further stay on the fiscal stimulus path?

Prime Minister: I think, we have now moved to a stage that we cautiously are working toward financial consolidation. Monetary policy measures have been taken by the Reserve Bank and gradually, our fiscal system will also move in the direction of consolidation.

Question: Sir, The G-20 journey which starting from Toronto…. How would you describe the journey of the G20 so far….from Toronto to Seoul?

Prime Minister: As I told you just now, three or four issues which I mentioned, there has been progress. IMF quota reforms…new facilities in the IMF and the development issue brought explicitly on the agenda of the Group of 20, then the mutual adjustment process of determining what the surplus countries should do, what deficit countries should do. That is the process which has got the approval of the Group but it is a complicated process. It will require lot of effort to work out operational rules of the game for working of the mutual assessment process.

Question: How have the developed countries responded to your speech today?

Prime Minister: The very fact that development has been explicitly put on the agenda of the Group of 20, there is progress.

Question: Investment in infrastructure…. there are so many delays in projects...

Prime Minister: Well, these are our internal concerns. We have to ensure that projects, good projects come on the agenda for consideration, that project management is satisfactory, that people find these investments in these projects worthwhile. All that the money from abroad can do is, if a country is well managed, if it has projects which are well designed, if it has a domestic policy framework which is attractive enough for investors, then money will become available. It does not mean that money will flow freely regardless of what we do with the money.

Question: You shared a close relationship with President Bush and you seem to have struck personal chemistry with President Obama as well...how would you describe...

Prime Minister: Well I have answered that question several times before. I think President Bush, when the first time I met him, he introduced me to his wife and said, "Laura, do you know of any other country of 1.2 billion people committed to democracy, committed to respect for fundamental human freedom, committed to the rule of law and yet doing well in terms of the development agenda." So it was India's attractiveness, India is a unique country, that with all our diversity, with all the complexities of caste, of religion, that we remain a functioning democracy, that we can manage to grow at 8-9% growth rate. So it is really a tribute to India that attracted George Bush and same thing I find in President Obama. His speech to our Parliament, his idea of India that he talked about in his speeches, is a reflection of the uniqueness of India as a functioning democracy, committed to the rule of law, committed to respect for fundamental human freedoms and yet managing to grow at a respectable rate. So this is a tribute to India and not a tribute to me. What I am is because what India has made me.
Question: Many congratulations for the speech you delivered at the G-20, and it was endorsed by every one. Is there going to be any improvement in the life of the common man of India? What would be the benefits to the common man in India out of this G20 exercise?

Prime Minister: That development in India, the pace at which we should have progressed, we have to still do a lot for that internally; along side international environment has to be such in which trade flows should be encouraged, where capital can flow in, where technology transfer is easy and therefore India has a stake in the functioning of the international economic system. G20 is charged with the responsibility to deal with the imbalances that have now crippled the international financial system. India has a vested interest that the international financial system should be restructured, it should be well managed because that would mean accelerated growth in our country, that would mean our ability to create jobs for our people will improve.

Question: What is your view of the valuation of the Chinese currency?

Prime Minister: Well, Chinese have the surplus which is I think, no body can deny, but the relation between surplus countries and deficit countries is not a technical issue. If you go back to the Bretton Woods debate, there was at that very time, there was a Keynes plan, there was a White Plan, and Keynes was of the view that surplus countries have as much responsibility to take adjustment measures as the deficit countries, but the international financial mechanism is essentially a power mechanism, and the way the international financial system functions, so far creditors countries have always been able to have their way. Now, G20 wants to have a more balanced system, where both surplus and deficit countries would have to take corrective action. But what that corrective action should be, I think, that will be something which will emerge out of this MAP process that has got the approval of G20.

Question: You had meetings with UK and Mexico leadership in which, we learnt you felt that it is difficult to have consensus of what ails the global economy…

Prime Minister: Quite frankly, it will take a long time before I think, people agree upon the diagnosis for this malaise. I think some point to the Chinese, the Chinese say the real problems are in the United States because of easy money, loose money and if you ask the Americans, they will say that it is because some surplus countries are keeping their exchange rates deliberately undervalued. Now this is a situation which required corrective action, but who should take these corrective actions, surplus countries or deficit countries. This will emerge only if the MAP process is allowed to take shape.

Question: Do you feel that after the G20 Summit, the tension between China and US on their exchange rate issue has reduced?

Prime Minister: I think US & China have very intimate economic relations. I don't see, for example, the exchange rates controversy will affect very substantially, I think, the development of relations. Certainly the economic relations between China and the United States cannot, I think…be…(inaudible).. I do not think that their relationship will suffer.

121. Extract relevant to G-20 Summit from the Suo Motu Statement of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in the Lok Sabha on Prime Ministers visits abroad.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

G-20 Summit

25 The G-20 Seoul Summit organised under the theme ‘Shared Growth Beyond Crisis’ was attended by G-20 members alongwith Ethiopia (chair of NEPAD or the New Partnership of Africa's Development), Malawi (chair of African Union), Vietnam (chair of ASEAN), Spain and Singapore. The United Nations, World Bank, IMF, ILO, WTO, FSB and OECD were also represented.

26. The Summit meeting was fruitful and it delivered the Seoul Action Plan based on a review of the global economic situation and the progress of the ‘Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth’ pertaining to country specific mutual assessment process (MAP) or peer review. The Summit mandated further country-led work under the Framework Working Group (co-chaired by Canada and India) regarding ‘indicative guidelines’ in the context of global imbalances with technical support from IMF and other international organisations for consideration by the G-20 Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors.

27. The Summit endorsed international financial institutions (IFI) reforms, in particular the shift in IMF quota share of over 6% in favour of the emerging market and developing countries (EMDCs) by 2012. The Summit also endorsed the financial regulatory reforms by way of Basel-III agreements for implementation upto 2019.

28. Firmly putting development on the agenda of the G-20, the Summit approved the Seoul Development Consensus for Shared Growth which marked the launch of an ambitious G-20 development agenda. This G-20 development dimension is based on six principles, i.e. focus on economic growth, global development partnership, global or regional systemic issues, private sector participation, complementarity and outcome orientation. The G-20 Multi-Year Action Plan comprises nine development pillars, viz. Infrastructure (including a High-Level Panel on infrastructure financing), human resources development, trade, private investment and job creation, food security, growth with resilience, domestic resource mobilisation, knowledge sharing and financial inclusion.

30. The Summit reiterated the commitment against protectionism in all its forms. It sent a strong political impetus for completing WTO’s Doha Development Round of trade negotiations during 2011.

31. The Summit provided a political message for the success of climate change negotiations at the forthcoming UNFCCC COP-16 meeting in December 2010 in Cancun, Mexico.

32. The Summit addressed the issue of global imbalances. In this context, Prime Minister stated at the Summit that “Recycling surplus savings into investment in developing countries will not only address the immediate demand imbalance, it will also help to address developmental imbalances. In other words, we should leverage imbalances of one kind to redress imbalances of the other kind.” Prime Minister’s statement was endorsed most positively by a number of Heads of State and Government attending the Summit including the leaders from Africa.

33. We view the outcome of the G-20 Seoul Summit as positive. Our efforts were successful in bringing the development issue into the very forefront of the sustainable, manageable growth process and we stressed the need to address the fundamental imbalance which is the development imbalance between rich and poor countries. We are committed to engaging proactively and constructively with our G-20 partners for implementing the decisions of the past G-20 Summits including the recent Seoul Summit, as we move forward to the next i.e. sixth G-20 Summit in Cannes, France in November 2011.

34. On the sidelines of the Seoul Summit, Prime Minister had bilateral meetings with the Leaders of Canada, Ethiopia, Mexico and UK as well as the Secretary-General of UN during which they discussed bilateral and international issues of mutual interest.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

SAARC

122. Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister's visit to Thimphu for SAARC Summit.

New Delhi, April 22, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening to you and thanks for waiting. As you know Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh is leaving for Thimphu soon to attend the sixteenth SAARC Summit. Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao, is here to brief you about PM's visit. She would be making an opening statement and thereafter would be happy to take a few questions. Let me also introduce my colleague Joint Secretary (SAARC) Mr. Harsh Vardhan Shringla, who is sitting to the right of Foreign Secretary. Ma'am the floor is yours.

Foreign Secretary (Smt. Nirupama Rao): Thank you and a very good afternoon to all of you.

The 16th SAARC Summit, to be held in Thimphu, Bhutan on 28 & 29 April 2010, marks 25 years of the establishment of SAARC. The Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh will attend the Summit. Over the years, SAARC has emerged as a model of regional cooperation in dealing with the wide range of issues that impact directly on the lives and livelihoods of the people of the region. It has addressed issues of regional concern such as poverty, food security, trafficking in women and children, terrorism and drugs, etc. At the same time, the 25th anniversary milestone provides the Member States of SAARC with an opportunity to introspect not only on the experiences of the first 25 years and also on the course we need to chart in the future to maintain, and perhaps accelerate, the momentum that SAARC has achieved in recent years.

It is also important to note that this will be the first time that Bhutan will host a SAARC Summit. We have no doubt that SAARC will make impressive gains under Bhutan's able stewardship. Bhutan has chosen 'Climate Change' as the theme of the Summit. As one of the world's ecologically most diverse, and yet one of the most ecologically fragile regions, South Asia is highly vulnerable to the effects of climate change, with an urgent need of adaptive action. The Summit is expected to draw regional attention to this pressing issue. Bhutan has also proposed a Summit Declaration entitled "Towards a Green and Happy South Asia" and a separate Ministerial Declaration on Climate Change.

In the last few years, particularly since the 14th Summit in New Delhi in April 2007, SAARC has also begun to lay the institutional framework for regional cooperation. Regional institutions, in the form of the South Asian Regional Standards Organization (SARSO) in Dhaka, the SAARC Arbitration Council in Islamabad, the SAARC Development Fund (SDF) in Thimphu, the South Asian University (SAU) in New Delhi, among others, are the building blocks of regional development.

We are happy to note that two important SAARC Agreements, on Environment and Trade in Services, are to be signed during the Summit. The SAARC Agreement on Trade in Services will enable the realization of the region's immense potential in service areas such as Health, Hospitality, Communications, Computer and information Services and Air Transport and is expected to augment intra-regional trade in services in a mutually beneficial manner.

The SAARC Convention on Environment is expected to promote cooperation among the SAARC countries in the field of environment and sustainable development. The scope of cooperation under the Convention would extend to "exchange of best practices and knowledge, capacity building and transfer of eco-friendly technology" in a number of areas, including climate change, coastal zone management, wildlife conservation and environmental impact assessment studies.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to us that the SAARC Development Fund (SDF) Secretariat is being inaugurated in Thimphu during the forthcoming Summit. You will recall that the SDF had been proposed by India at the 15th SAARC Summit in Colombo in August 2008. Two projects on Women's Empowerment, being undertaken by SEWA, and Maternal and Health Care are already under implementation. We also expect the Summit to endorse the rules, regulations, academic and business plans of the South Asian University in New Delhi.

One of the successes of SAARC has been the recent steps taken to implement the South Asia Free Trade Agreement (SAFTA). Intra-SAARC trade touched US $ 529 million in 2009, a considerable jump from the previous two years since SAFTA was implemented. Under SAFTA, we agreed in principle to prune our sensitive lists by twenty per cent. SAARC Member States have also agreed to reduce tariffs on 30% of tariff lines outside the Sensitive Lists to Zero.

I am happy to convey that regional projects initiated by India in Telemedicine, Tele-education, Rain Water Harvesting, Seed Testing Laboratories and Solar Rural Electrification, are under implementation in most SAARC Member States. The thrust of most of these projects and activities is at grassroots levels where the results are less visible perhaps but far more significant and rewarding. We believe that in this Silver Jubilee year of SAARC, its members can take satisfaction from the fact that SAARC is taking on the role of service provider for the economic and development needs of the people of the region, who number almost 1.5 billion.

Our focus in SAARC would be on improving regional connectivity through the development of new trade, transport and telecommunication links; the setting of common standards and harmonization of customs procedures; increasing understanding by greater people-to-people contacts, particularly among the youth, civil society, cultural personalities, academics and parliamentarians.

We are confident that the forthcoming SAARC Summit will provide ample opportunity for the SAARC Member States to work together to chart a blueprint for regional development over the next few years.

Question: Madam, you would have noticed that America, Australia and the United Kingdom have come up with advisories which suggest that at least six markets in Delhi itself could be targeted in the future. Is the Government aware of this? Has the Government taken any precautions about it?

Foreign Secretary: We are aware of those advisories and I have seen that the media has been flooded with those reports. What I would like to say is that the Government of India takes all precautions necessary to safeguard the security of our citizens in cities like New Delhi. You referred to Delhi but I refer of course to the whole country. Obviously we are seized of these matters and all necessary precautions are put in place to ensure that such events or such risks are taken care of.
Question: Is there any proposal of a fresh entry of any country into SAARC? If so, are you going to discuss it in this Summit?

Foreign Secretary: A fresh entry into SAARC? No, I am afraid not. We have eight member countries in SAARC and that is the way it is.

Question: Is there no new proposal?

Foreign Secretary: We have Observer countries in SAARC and that number will reach nine as of this Summit, because Australia and Myanmar will be the two new Observer countries at this Summit.

Question: Has a meeting been set up between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Pakistani Prime Minister? If so, what is the agenda?

Foreign Secretary: The answer is no. As of now, there is no such meeting.

Question: Will there be any other bilaterals?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, there have been requests from our other South Asian partners for bilateral meetings. Yes, there will be bilateral meetings. These will be with Sri Lanka, with Bangladesh, with Nepal and with Maldives. I believe you have been informed about the transit visit of President Karzai through New Delhi on his way to the SAARC Summit. Of course, Bhutan being the Chair of the Summit, there will be in-depth bilateral meetings with Bhutan.

Question: Madam has there been any request from the Pakistani side for a bilateral with Dr. Manmohan Singh in Bhutan? Also, could you tell us a little bit more about Mr. Karzai’s visit? Is it something that was planned at the last minute or was this on the cards for some time?

Foreign Secretary: President Karzai is transiting through New Delhi. We thought it would be an excellent opportunity to request him to stay in New Delhi for the 26th and to have discussions on issues of mutual interest concerning the region as also our very strong and friendly development partnership, our time-tested relationship with Afghanistan. As far as the other question you asked, there has been no request from Pakistan for such a meeting, as I said, as of now.
Question: I wanted to ask you about the Pakistan meeting. Should we rule it out or is there a possibility?

Foreign Secretary: I do not believe in making forecasts about whether a meeting will take place or not. I would say that you should wait and let us see how the situation develops.

Question: Madam, the US Ambassador said a couple of days ago that the US is looking for new ways to partner with India in Afghanistan. Has there been any concrete proposal in that respect? You are not saying that a meeting has been set up between Indian and Pakistani Prime Ministers. But what is the message as of now on the talks front? How are you looking at this likely visit?

Foreign Secretary: You are asking me if I have a message?

Question: What is the message to Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: If there is a message I would not be talking about it in this forum. In any case since you have asked me that, I have always said, and you are aware of the Government's position, that dialogue represents a concrete method to move forward in our relationship. That has always been our position. That was the approach we took during the recent Foreign Secretary level talks with Pakistan. There has been no change in that position. As for the subject of Afghanistan and our discussions with the United States on the issue, let me say that the situation in our region, the relations that the United States has with Afghanistan, the relations that India has with Afghanistan, of course do figure in these discussions. I think you are aware, when I addressed the media in Washington the other day, we spoke about how President Obama had expressed his deep appreciation for our role in Afghanistan and the development activities that we have carried forward there, and how we have helped stabilize the situation in Afghanistan. So, we constantly exchange ideas on this issue. This is a subject that remains under discussion with the Government of the United States and indeed with all our other friends and partners.

Question: Has China admitted that they are going ahead with the dam on the Brahmaputra? Earlier they had said, no, run of the river, this and that.

Foreign Secretary: Let me clarify that. Again, when I briefed some of you after EAM's discussions in Beijing, I had mentioned that the Chinese side spoke about the fact that there is a run of the river project that they are doing for generation of hydroelectricity in the upper reaches of the Yarlung Zangbo, on the Brahmaputra river, in the Tibet Autonomous Region. What they said to us was that this is not a project that would divert water in any way, in other words affect downstream flow of water. This was said to us in the context of the discussions that the External Affairs Minister had with his counterpart the Chinese Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi. As you know, we have an expert level mechanism with China to discuss hydrological data and flood control data in the Brahmaputra and Sutlej rivers. The fourth meeting of the expert level mechanism will take place in a few days from now in New Delhi.

Question: So, they are not building dams. It is just run of the river.

Foreign Secretary: A run of the river project involves certain work on the river but it is not a storage dam for irrigation purposes. That is what they said.

Question: Madam, one question regarding Afghanistan. There are intelligence reports that Indians could be fresh targets of attacks that could be taking place. The Haqqani group is very active and they are enquiring about employees of the Punjab National Bank and also residential complexes of Indians in Afghanistan. Does the Ministry have knowledge about this and would this be taken up with President Karzai when he would be visiting India?

Foreign Secretary: I am not going to discuss what measures we take to safeguard the lives and the security of our nationals in Afghanistan. This is a sensitive issue. So, obviously I will not discuss it in an open forum. But I want to tell you that we are constantly vigilant and seized of these matters, and take all steps necessary to deal with the situation.

Question: Madam, as you said, the XVI SAARC Summit marks 25 years of SAARC cooperation. But it is only 529 million dollars of intra-SAARC trade which seems very low and especially ...(Unclear)...... in the subcontinent. Then why is it that India is not doing enough to push this economic integration?

Foreign Secretary: I think you have to look at this in two parts. One is the trade among South Asian nations. This is apart from SAFTA. We have bilateral trade. We have preferential or free trade agreements with many of our South Asian neighbours, with some we do not. But intra-South Asian trade that we have is far more than the figure that you have quoted. I think it is almost 11 billion US dollars. So, this is quite apart from the trade figures that we cite under SAFTA. SAFTA started being implemented from 2006 onwards. If you look at the figures for 2006, I think it is about 16 million US dollars. From that to now, it is half a billion US dollars as of last year. So, that is the progress under SAFTA. But there is a larger picture here involved which is bilateral trade between all the South Asian countries of which the total volume is almost 11 billion US dollars. India is obviously promoting open connectivity, better trade relations with all our neighbours. There has been a great synergy that we are trying to develop and have developed in this field over the last few years.

Question: China is a fulltime Observer at SAARC already?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, since 2007.

Question: Apart from Pakistan, where you do not have the MFN arrangement between our country and Pakistan, with all the other countries there are these preferential trading arrangements that you talked about. We have these with every other country.

Foreign Secretary: You look at Sri Lanka, and Bhutan, and with Nepal of course we have a very open trading regime. Bangladesh has been able to take a lot of advantage of the opening up of trade controls under SAFTA. So, a large proportion of the increase in the volume of trade under SAFTA is accounted for by Bangladesh-India trade.

Question: But two years ago there was this Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement with Sri Lanka.

Foreign Secretary: That is still being discussed with Sri Lanka.
Question: What happened? Why has that not taken off?

Foreign Secretary: The Sri Lankan Government wanted a little more time to consider what the implications of CEPA would be. We are prepared to move at the pace that they want in this particular context. But we have a Free Trade Agreement with Sri Lanka that has worked very well from 2000 onwards, and it has completely changed the situation in terms of bilateral trade.

Question: Madam, last time when the Indian Prime Minister and Pakistan Prime Minister came face to face in Washington, a newspaper carried a headline, "Hands met but hearts did not." Do you think that when they come face to face again there will be any change of hearts this time?

Foreign Secretary: I do not really want to forecast what is going to happen. But let me say that dialogue is always useful. It helps clear the atmosphere and especially between neighbours, such as India and Pakistan. Dialogue is really the way forward.

Question: At the February 25 Foreign Secretary level talks you said that situation was not ripe yet for resuming Composite Dialogue. The talks ended with the two sides agreeing to remain in touch. My question is, is the situation ripe now? Secondly, have you been in touch with your counterpart following February 25 in the last one month or so? And has Pakistan got back to India on those dossiers?

Foreign Secretary: Pakistan has not got back to us on those dossiers that we handed over during the February 25 meeting. No, I have not heard from the Pakistan Foreign Secretary after we met on February 25. Is the situation ripe for the resumption of composite dialogue? The situation has not really changed in that regard because we need action in terms of movement on the Mumbai terror trials that are taking place in Pakistan. The levels of infiltration have been a cause for concern in the last few months. The infrastructure, the activities of terrorist groups on territory controlled by Pakistan is still a cause for serious concern.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.
123. Opening Remarks by Foreign Secretary at SAARC Standing Committee Meeting on the SAARC Secretary General's Report.

Thimphu, April 25, 2010.

Thank you Mr. Chairperson

Let me begin by congratulating you on your election as Chairperson of the 37th Session of the Standing Committee. I have no doubt that SAARC will be greatly benefited by your able leadership. I also wish to express, on behalf of my delegation and my own behalf, grateful thanks to the Royal Government of Bhutan for the warm hospitality accorded to us and the excellent arrangements for the Meeting. It is indeed a pleasure to be here in this beautiful city of Thimphu.

I also wish to place on record our appreciation of the stewardship of the former Chair, Sri Lanka, of our Association. We have seen significant forward movement during their tenure.

I would like to thank the Secretary General of SAARC, H.E. Dr. Sheel Kant Sharma, and his very able team of officers and staff, for the valuable preparatory work that has gone into making a success out of the Summit and its preceding meetings.

In considering the Periodic Analytical Report before us, I wish to, at the outset, commend the Secretary General for presenting a very comprehensive assessment of the progress achieved in SAARC on various issues of regional cooperation since the last session of the Standing Committee.

As several issues raised in the report would be revisited under specific agenda items, I would like to restrict our intervention, at this stage, to general comments on some of the key issues raised in the Report. Our specific comments would be made against individual agenda items.

In perusing the report it becomes evident that valuable progress has been achieved in developing a regional framework of cooperation in areas such as environment, energy, agriculture and rural development, food security, health, trade and transportation. SAARC has also facilitated slow but sure steps towards greater cooperation in the security sector and in the prevention of trafficking of women and child development. Increased people-to-people interaction has been facilitated by greater cultural and social exchanges under the auspices of SAARC.

The thrust of most of these regional projects and activities is at grassroots levels where the results are less visible but far more significant and rewarding. Each of the areas of cooperation under SAARC has a direct bearing on the lives and livelihoods of the people of our region. Our leaders have correctly identified the focus of SAARC as being development oriented.

In the last few years, SAARC has also been laying the institutional framework for greater regional cooperation. For the first time, regional institutions are being created in the form of the South Asian Regional Standards Organization (SARSO) in Dhaka, the SAARC Arbitration Council in Islamabad, the SAARC Development Fund (SDF) in Thimphu and the South Asian University in New Delhi.

In this 25th year of SAARC, we can take satisfaction from the fact that SAARC has evolved into a service provider for the economic and development needs of the people of the region.

At the same time, this milestone also provides us with an opportunity to introspect on the experience of the last 25 years and the course we need to chart in the future not only to maintain, but to accelerate, the momentum SAARC has achieved in the recent past.

Let me say that we deeply appreciate the very substantive contributions made by the Chair, Bhutan, in the conceptualization of the main theme of our current Summit: i.e. towards a green and happy South Asia. Bhutan has led the way among all of us in enshrining respect and sensitivity for environmental concerns and the preservation of our precious environmental space. The inspiration and the initiative of Bhutan in this area, and indeed, in all the preparations undertaken to make this Summit possible, are genuinely appreciated. Let us derive impetus from this to work towards a Summit Declaration that is focused, incisive, visionary, and future-oriented as a lasting outcome of our Summit.
In concluding my opening remarks I wish to acknowledge the contribution of the Secretary General and the Secretariat in steering SAARC through the extensive range of its programmes and activities with the professional skill and expertise we have come to expect. To have achieved this with a "zero growth budget", that has rendered our regional enterprise cost effective and productive, is indeed creditable.

Thank You.

124. Remarks by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao to media after the meeting of 37th Session of the Standing Committee of the SAARC.

Thimphu, April 25, 2010.

This is a very special year for SAARC. It represents the silver jubilee of the organization. SAARC has come a very long way indeed since its establishment in 1985 and I think all of us are in agreement that the organization has made visible strides over the past few years and achieved many milestones.

The Standing Committee headed by Foreign Secretaries of eight SAARC member states began its deliberations here in Thimpu today and our initial engagements has been very constructive and we are indeed hopeful that the Summit will come up with the robust programme of cooperation for the association over the next 12 months of Bhutan's stewardship.

In my opening remarks today, I expressed our deep appreciation for the very substantive contributions made by the Chair Bhutan in conceptualization of the main theme of our current Summit which is towards green and happy South Asia. Bhutan has indeed led the way among all of us South Asian countries in enshrining respect and sensitivity for the environment and preservation of our precious environmental space. Inspiration and initiative of Bhutan in this area and indeed in all the preparations undertaken to make the Summit possible were genuinely appreciated during our deliberations today and we felt that we could derive impetus from this to work towards the Summit outcome and a declaration that will be focused, incisive, visionary and future oriented so as to become a lasting outcome for our Summit.

125. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on arrival at Thimphu for the SAARC Summit.

Thimphu, April 26, 2010.

My visit to Thimphu, Bhutan to attend the Sixteenth SAARC Summit comes at a very special juncture. This year marks the 25th anniversary of SAARC. This is also the first time that Bhutan will be hosting a SAARC summit.

The Sixteenth Summit will give Member States an opportunity to introspect on the past and chart a course for the future. Bhutan has chosen ‘Climate Change’ as the theme of the Summit. The ‘Thimphu Silver Jubilee Declaration’ has been entitled ‘Towards a Green and Happy South Asia’. The theme is expected to be reinforced by the signing of a SAARC Convention on Cooperation in Environment by the Foreign Ministers in the presence of the Heads of State and Governments of SAARC Member States. An Agreement on Trade in Services will also be signed during the Summit, thereby opening up new vistas of economic cooperation among SAARC countries.

Over the years, SAARC has made visible strides and achieved many milestones. It has created the institutional and legal framework for regional cooperation through agreements and programmes covering almost every area of importance to the region, ranging from Poverty Alleviation and Food Security to Terrorism and Women’s Empowerment. Its focus on grassroots development is designed to cater to “the welfare of the people of South Asia” and to bring about an improvement “in their quality of life.”
With the depth of challenges facing the region, the transformation of SAARC within a quarter of a century to a dynamic vehicle of regional economic cooperation is indeed remarkable. The asymmetric and non-reciprocal participation by India has been an important factor in this process. This has inspired other SAARC Member States to take similar initiative on regional projects.

SAARC Member States have committed themselves to strengthening regional economic cooperation through SAARC, particularly over the three years since the New Delhi Summit in April 2007. It is to the credit of SAARC, that despite the global financial recession, trade under SAFTA since its implementation in 2006 amounted to USD 689 million. Moreover, the basket of tradeable items is also quite diverse from manufacturing to agriculture products. All Member States have also reiterated their resolve to facilitate greater trade liberalization measures and greater tariff reductions.

As we head for the 16th SAARC Summit in Thimphu, we are imbued with a sense of confidence and optimism in SAARC as a vehicle for regional development.

126. Opening remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the 32nd Session of SAARC Council of Ministers meeting.

Thimphu, April 27, 2010.

Your Excellency, Chairperson of the Council of Ministers

Your Excellencies, Ministers of Foreign Affairs of SAARC Member States,

Distinguished delegates

It gives me a great pleasure to be in Thimphu for the 32nd Session of the SAARC Council of Ministers. My delegation and I are deeply touched by the warm hospitality accorded to us, and take this opportunity to thank the Royal Government of Bhutan for the excellent arrangements made for the visiting delegations. I wish to congratulate Your Excellency on your election as Chairperson of the Council of Ministers, and to assure you of my delegation's fullest support to you in the fulfillment of your responsibilities and objectives. We have no doubt that SAARC will record visible gains under your able stewardship.

I wish to also record our appreciation to Sri Lanka, the outgoing Chair, for their very able leadership. I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the Secretary General, His Excellency Dr. Sheel Kant Sharma, for most ably guiding and steering SAARC over the last two years. I thank him and his able staff for the excellent preparatory work undertaken for the 16th SAARC Summit and its preceding meetings.

The 16th SAARC Summit is a very special event as Summits go for two important reasons. This year marks 25 years of the establishment of SAARC. This is also the first SAARC Summit hosted by Bhutan. We have no doubt that these unique circumstances will contribute to taking SAARC to new heights.

It is a matter of satisfaction that starting from a modest level in 1985, our Association has emerged as a model of regional cooperation in dealing with the wide range of issues that impact directly on the lives and livelihoods of the people of our region. As the reports under consideration indicate, SAARC has made impressive gains in addressing issues of regional concern such as poverty, unemployment, illiteracy, trafficking in women and children, terrorism and drugs, etc.

We, as Member States of SAARC, have an abiding obligation to address the pressing problems that beset our region, which we should set about achieving through well-defined goals based on mutual cooperation and understanding. Our effort will be to infuse a fresh dynamism into the regional processes and to strive to channelise the fruits of our collective efforts to the most vulnerable sections of our societies.

As we emerge out of a period of unprecedented global recession into expectations of relative economic growth and stability, we should seize the opportunity to advance our collective efforts to enhance trade, open borders and facilitate economic integration in our region. Our focus should be on improving regional connectivity through upgrading trade, transport and telecommunication links; addressing issues relating to trade facilitation such as harmonization of customs procedures and standards; increasing understanding through greater people-to-people contacts, particularly among the youth, civil society, cultural personalities, academics and parliamentarians.

In the last few years, SAARC has also begun to lay the institutional framework for regional cooperation. Regional institutions, in the form of the South Asian Regional Standards Organization (SARSO) in Dhaka, the SAARC Arbitration Council in Islamabad, the SAARC Development Fund (SDF) in Thimphu, the South Asian University in New Delhi, among others, are the building blocks of regional development.

These and other SAARC initiatives were formalized through instruments that were signed by our Heads of State and Government during the Fourteenth and Fifteenth SAARC Summits to advance intra-SAARC cooperation in these crucial areas. The relevant Agreements pertain to the Establishment of SARSO, the South Asian University, Afghanistan’s Accession to SAFTA and Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters. While we would urge Member States to expedite the process of ratification, we may also direct the Secretariat and relevant SAARC mechanisms to simultaneously operationalise the provisions of these agreements while awaiting conclusion of the legal processes. Distinguished delegates will recall that we had undertaken similar measures in the case of the SAARC Food Bank Board and the SDF.

I am pleased to note that progress has been achieved in the last few months in facilitating trade in South Asia. Intra-SAARC trade under SAFTA touched US $ 529 million in 2009, a considerable jump from the previous two years. Under SAFTA, we agreed in principle to prune our sensitive lists by twenty per cent. SAARC Member States have also agreed to reduce tariffs on 30% of tariff lines outside the Sensitive Lists to Zero.

We are happy to note that two SAARC Agreements, on Environment and Trade in Services, are to be signed during the Summit. We are also hopeful that the SAARC Agreements on Motor Vehicles, Railways, Rapid Response to Natural Disasters, Multilateral Arrangement of Conformity Assessment Activities of Goods and Services and Regional MRA on Product Certification will also be finalized at the earliest.
It is a matter of great satisfaction that the SAARC Development Fund (SDF) Secretariat is being inaugurated in Thimphu during the Summit. I wish to convey my best wishes to the CEO of the SDF on his appointment. We would urge Member States to take full advantage of the mechanism of SDF through expeditious clearance and implementation of projects and programmes to promote the welfare of the people of the SAARC region, to improve their quality of life and to accelerate economic growth, social progress and poverty alleviation in the region.

We are fully committed to working within SAARC to contribute to the development of the region through social development and regional economic integration. In this context, I am happy to report that regional projects initiated by the Government of India in Telemedicine, Tele-education, Rain Water Harvesting, Seed Testing Laboratories and Solar Rural Electrification, are under implementation in most SAARC Member States.

The "Climate Change" theme of the Summit is very apt. We are happy to support the proposal of the Chair for a Special SAARC Declaration on the theme of Climate Change to be issued by the Heads of State / Government. We also support a fresh SAARC position on Climate Change for COP 16 in accordance with the UNFCCC principles and Bali Action Plan. It is my sincere wish that the dialogue on Climate Change is carried in a meaningful manner at this Summit.

Terrorism poses a serious danger to the economic stability of any civilized society. The South Asian region is particularly afflicted by this menace. The time has come for us to rally against the forces of terrorism that seek to divide and weaken our societies. I extend a call to my fellow leaders to join hands to fight and defeat terrorism, including through the early ratification of regional instruments such as the Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, signed at the last Summit in 2008, and early conclusion of the proposed UN Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism (CCIT), as directed by our leaders at the 15th SAARC Summit. India, in cooperation with Sri Lanka, is involved in the strengthening of the SAARC Terrorists Offences Monitoring Desk and the SAARC Drug Offences Monitoring Desk for sharing of information amongst our security forces.
Our member countries have made positive progress towards establishment of the South Asian University. I am happy to note that the SAU will start classes in August 2010.

SAARC belongs to the people of South Asia who have ensured that its focus is delivery oriented and intended for the larger benefit. It is also an important reason to ensure that that parallel strands of culture and trade are inter-twined for greater regional synergy and for economic prosperity. We in India have always attached importance to facilitating people-to-people contact in our region through exchanges in the fields of culture, tourism, literature, youth etc. I am also happy to inform the Council that permanent premises for the SAARC Museum of Textiles and Handicrafts have been acquired in New Delhi and work on developing the Museum is progressing as per plan.

I am grateful to all SAARC Member States for ensuring their participation in the training programmes that has resulted, not only in the exchange of knowledge and know how, but also in the cementing of bonds of friendship among officials, academics, students, and representatives of civil society. Experiences shared by Member States at the 30th Session of the Council of Ministers resulted in the development of ‘Model Villages’ in each of our countries. I am pleased to inform you that our experience with the model village cluster has been extremely satisfactory. There have been calls from the grassroots levels for an expansion of this programme. I look forward to hearing your experiences on the model village scheme.

I wish to conclude by once again thanking our host for the excellent arrangements and assuring Your Excellency of India’s consistent support.

Thank You
Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the eve of his departure for Bhutan to attend the SAARC Summit.

New Delhi, April 27, 2010.

I will be leaving tomorrow for Bhutan to attend the 16th SAARC Summit being hosted by Bhutan.

This Summit has special significance as it takes place on the twenty-fifth anniversary of SAARC. This is also the first time that Bhutan will be hosting a SAARC Summit.

The establishment of SAARC in 1985 was a visionary step for the South Asian region. During this period, the region has witnessed major transformation, and the idea of regional economic cooperation has taken firm roots. We have established a robust institutional framework for cooperation in diverse areas such as food security, poverty alleviation, terrorism, communication links, trade and economic, and a range of social issues impacting lives of our people. The South Asian Free Trade Agreement, the SAARC Development Fund and the South Asian University are some concrete examples of regional projects that will enable greater economic inter-linkages, and promote people to people contacts within the region.

The Summit will provide the countries of this region an opportunity to collectively reflect on where we are, what more we can do together to meet the developmental aspirations of our people, and how South Asia can play its rightful role in the international arena.

The winds of change are blowing across the world. South Asia cannot be immune to the trend of greater integration, both at the regional and global levels. If we as South Asians work together, there is nothing that we will not be able to achieve. India will play its part in the resurgence of South Asia.

The theme of this year’s Summit is "Climate Change". I look forward to discussing regional cooperation and strategies for tackling the effects of global warming in our region. Ours is a particularly vulnerable region, which demands a coordinated and well thought out response cutting across sectors. We all stand to benefit by learning from each other’s experiences and strengths.

India enjoys close relations with Bhutan which are based on complete mutual trust and understanding. I look forward to holding bilateral discussions with the Prime Minister of Bhutan H.E. Jigmi Y. Thinley to build upon these solid foundations. I also look forward to my meetings with leaders of other SAARC countries.

128. Opening Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the 16th SAARC Summit.

Thimphu, April 28, 2010.

At the outset, I wish to congratulate His Excellency the Prime Minister of Bhutan Lyonchhen Jigmi Thinley for his election as Chairperson of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation. I assure him of India’s fullest support.

I also take this opportunity to convey our deepest appreciation to His Majesty Jigme Khesar Namgyel Wangchuck and the Royal Government of Bhutan for the excellent arrangements made for the Summit.

It is a singular pleasure for me to visit Bhutan once again and to experience its pristine beauty and the warmth of its people.

I wish to welcome the two new Observer countries, Australia and Myanmar, to the SAARC fraternity.

Excellencies,

This is a historic Summit. This year we mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of our organization. This is also the first time that we meet in Bhutan.

In the last few years Bhutan has witnessed momentous changes, and I take this opportunity to wish its people even greater prosperity, peace and progress.
Speaking at the first SAARC Summit in Dhaka in 1985, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi described the establishment of SAARC as an act of faith. Based on our experience so far we can affirm that this was also an act of great foresight and statesmanship.

In these two and a half decades our sub-continent has been witness to much progress. Yet, each one of our countries, and our region as a whole, has a long way to go in fulfilling the aspirations of our people.

In looking back at these two and a half decades we can claim the glass is half full, and compliment ourselves, or, we can admit the glass is half empty and challenge ourselves.

I believe we should challenge ourselves by acknowledging that the glass of regional cooperation, regional development and regional integration is half empty. Intra-regional trade flows have grown and transport and telecommunication links have expanded. Yet, the share of intra-regional trade and investment flows in total trade and investment flows in South Asia is far below what we see in East and South-east Asia. It is also well below the potential.

We have created institutions for regional cooperation, but we have not yet empowered them adequately to enable them to be more pro-active.

Excellencies,

We have opened new windows of cooperation. The SAARC Development Fund, the Food Bank, the South Asian Free Trade Agreement and the South Asian University are examples of new institutions that will knit our region more closely together.

The challenge before us is to translate institutions into activities, conventions into programmes, official statements into popular sentiments. Declarations at summits and official level meetings do not amount to regional cooperation or integration. Regional cooperation should enable freer movement of people, of goods, of services and of ideas. It should help us re-discover our shared heritage and build our common future.

Excellencies,
We must ask ourselves what kind of South Asia we wish to create for our present and future generations? At this anniversary Summit we should renew our compact to build a region that is better connected, better empowered, better fed and better educated.

By rising to this challenge we will not only help ourselves but also become a net contributor to global economic prosperity. We can once again become part of global trading routes and networks. We can influence the global discourse on issues of concern to us. If we do not, we run the risk of marginalization and stagnation.

We are able to cooperate individually as members in various international fora. But it is unfortunate that, together, the people of South Asia do not have the voice they should and could have in the global polity. The 21st century cannot be an Asian century unless South Asia marches together.

Excellencies,

There is perhaps no region more vulnerable to the effects of climate change than ours. Bhutan has led by example in combining development with conservation of the environment. It is therefore most appropriate that our Summit focuses on this issue.

Regional cooperation can be a significant multiplier in improving the quality of governance in managing our natural resources, in preventing land and water degradation and in strengthening our food, water and energy security.

We welcome the conclusion of the SAARC Convention on Cooperation on Environment. I am happy to announce the setting up of an 'India Endowment for Climate Change in South Asia' to help Member States in meeting urgent adaptation and capacity building needs. I would also propose the setting up of Climate Innovation Centres in South Asia to develop sustainable energy technologies based on indigenous resource endowments.

India has recently launched a National Mission on Sustaining the Himalayan Ecosystem. The National Institute of Himalayan Glaciology under development at Dehradun in India could serve as a nucleus for regional cooperation in this vital area.

Excellencies,
I have a vision of inclusive growth in South Asia both within our countries and for the region of South Asia as a whole. Regional and sub-regional imbalances in growth affect all of us in varying degrees, and have led to social unrest.

This will require much greater attention in the future, with an emphasis on development at the grassroots level. We will have to institute the right policies in the areas of agriculture, forestry, appropriate technologies and disaster management.

South Asia is emerging as the hub of technological innovation. The manner in which we are able to harness technology for development will be crucial. Initiatives such as tele-medicine and tele-education are already having a profound effect on our societies. There is much that we can do together and learn from one another in all these areas.

Health and human resource development are perhaps the most compelling of the areas that impact on the dignity and wellbeing of our people. We need to bring on the agenda issues relating to basic education, skill development, the creation of a scientific temper among youth, women’s empowerment and nutrition.

I am happy that we are ready to begin the first academic session of the South Asian University in August 2010. India will provide 50 ‘SAARC Silver Jubilee Scholarships’ for meritorious students from SAARC LDC countries for the South Asian University.

Excellencies,

Mutual respect and tolerance are part of our civilisational heritage. So is the abhorrence of extremism, radicalism and terrorism. Let us pledge to revive the South Asia of our dreams that is once again a source of new ideas, new knowledge and new opportunities.

Let us make SAARC a dynamic organization that can realize this collective vision for all our people.

I thank you for your attention.

129.  Press Briefing by Foreign Secretary on Prime Minister's engagements at Thimphu.

Thimphu, April 29, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and thank you for waiting. As you are aware, Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh arrived at Thimphu yesterday to attend the Sixteenth SAARC Summit. On the sidelines of the Summit he has had a number of interactions. Foreign Secretary is here to brief you about some of the interactions that the Prime Minister had. She is joined by the Media Advisor to Prime Minister Dr. Harish Khare, who is sitting to the left of Foreign Secretary. Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao would be making an opening statement and thereafter be happy to take a few questions. Ma'am, the floor is yours.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you, Vishnu. I will give you an update on the meetings that the Prime Minister had today. He began the day with a meeting with Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal of Nepal. This was followed by a meeting with His Majesty the King of Bhutan. Thereafter he met Sheikh Hasina the Prime Minister of Bangladesh. He also attended the Retreat of the SAARC Heads of State and Government. Thereafter he held a bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Gilani of Pakistan.

In the meeting with Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal, Prime Minister stressed our support for multiparty democracy in Nepal, our support for democratic forces in that country, and our belief in forward movement of the Constitutional process in Nepal, our support for strong purposeful Government in Nepal which Prime Minister said he believed that Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal and his Government could provide for the country at this moment. They spoke of follow-up to agreements and understandings reached during Prime Minister Nepal's visit to Delhi in August last year, about the implementation of the various agreements concerned. Both sides expressed their satisfaction at the progress that had been recorded in regard to implementation of these understandings.

Prime Minister Nepal also briefed Prime Minister about the internal political situation in Nepal, the Constitution-making process, the issues concerning the reintegration of Maoist combatants. In all, they had a very cordial and useful meeting.
With His Majesty the King of Bhutan - as you know India and Bhutan share a very special and unique relationship. Both His Majesty the King and our Prime Minister expressed their deepest satisfaction over the state of relations, about the excellent nature of cooperation between India and Bhutan. His Majesty the King recalled his very successful visit to Delhi last December. Of course, they spoke about developments in Bhutan, the progress of the building of democratic institutions. His Majesty spoke about his contact with the people of Bhutan, his extensive travels into the interior of the countryside, and the fact that he is in touch with his people. The Prime Minister expressed his great admiration for the manner in which His Majesty the King was engaged in building these very strong bonds of understanding with his people.

With Her Excellency Sheikh Hasina, the Prime Minister of Bangladesh, again the Bangladesh Prime Minister referred to her very successful visit to India early this year. She said this visit had caught the imagination not only of the two countries or the region but the entire world. They spoke again about the implementation of agreements reached during that visit. They were happy at the fact that much progress has been recorded in this regard. The one billion dollar credit agreement, the extension of credit that India has agreed vis-à-vis Bangladesh is moving forward, and projects are being identified in this regard. The Joint Rivers Commission has met. The two sides are building closer understanding on the issue of water resources. The officials of the two sides will continue to meet in regard to implementation. Next week there will be a high-level delegation from Bangladesh led by the two Advisers to the Prime Minister of Bangladesh who will visit Delhi to continue the discussions in this regard.

After the Retreat that Prime Minister attended with the other Heads of State and Government, the bilateral meeting between our Prime Minister and the Prime Minister of Pakistan was held at Bhutan House. Prime Minister and Prime Minister Gilani had very good talks. They discussed all issues in a free and frank manner. They agreed that India-Pakistan cooperation is vital, if the people of South Asia are to realize their destiny and if SAARC is to become an effective and powerful instrument of regional cooperation. They agreed that relations between the two countries should be normalized, and channels of contact should work effectively to enlarge the constituency of peace in both countries.

Prime Minister emphasized to Prime Minister Gilani the various issues that cause concern to India, issues relating to terrorism, the rise in infiltration, and the slow progress in the trial of the Mumbai perpetrators. He told Prime Minister Gilani that India is willing to discuss all issues of concern with Pakistan and to resolve all outstanding issues through dialogue, but that the issue of terrorism is holding back progress.

Prime Minister Gilani on his part shared his perceptions on these issues in a candid manner. He said Pakistan is serious about prosecuting the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks and that all efforts were being made to bring the trial of these individuals to a speedy conclusion. Prime Minister Gilani said that Pakistan would not allow Pakistan territory to be used for terrorist activity directed against India.

The meeting was an exercise in mutual comprehension because there is a lack of mutual trust in the relationship impeding the process of normalization. The two sides have agreed on the need to assess the reasons underlying the current state of relations, or current state of affairs of the relationship and to think afresh on the way forward.

They have agreed that the Foreign Ministers and the Foreign Secretaries will be charged with the responsibility of working out the modalities of restoring trust and confidence in the relationship and thus paving the way for a substantive dialogue on all issues of mutual concern. Thank you.

Question: The statement that you have just read out seems to indicate that there has been a decision to move forward and reopen some channels of communication but not maybe a full Composite Dialogue process. How would you categorize what you are saying that the Foreign Secretaries and Foreign Ministers are now to be charged with taking this forward? What would you call this process now?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think we have to get stuck with nomenclature here. I think what you have to focus on is the fact that both sides are agreed that dialogue is the only way forward, that it is essential to open channels of communication, that there is a need to restore trust and build mutual confidence and that we should discuss all issues of mutual concern.
Question: When you say that we are ready to think afresh, could it lead to Composite Dialogue in times to come? And, was the case of Hafiz Saeed specifically taken up?

Foreign Secretary: Prime Minister did mention our very deep and continuing concerns about Hafiz Saeed, the fact that he has been allowed to go free and engage in language and in communications that are certainly not conducive to building an atmosphere of peace and stability. Yes, we did mention it. And I believe our concerns were registered with the Pakistan side. They did mention that they have some difficulties as far as their judicial system is concerned about tackling such issues. We expressed the hope that their laws to deal with such issues could be strengthened in times to come. As I said in my answer in response to Maya’s question, we are not getting stuck with nomenclature here. I am not going to answer that question in the way you have framed it. I said both sides have agreed that the Foreign Ministers and the Foreign Secretaries will take this process forward now, this process of trying to build more trust and confidence in the relationship and to address all issues of concern, thereby ensuring better communication between the two countries.

Question: After Sharm el-Sheikh there was a dialogue between the two prime ministers. Now when is the next meeting? Have any modalities been settled about it?

Foreign Secretary: No modalities have been worked out about it. Let me put it this way. The two sides have agreed to meet as soon as possible. We have not yet fixed a date. Obviously it would be unrealistic for me to tell you here and now that we fixed a date. The Prime Ministers have just met. But the instructions of the Prime Ministers are that the Foreign Ministers and the Foreign Secretaries should meet as soon as possible.

Question: Post-Sharm el-Sheikh there was this entire debate that there was a de-linking from terror as far as talks were concerned but we do seem to have gone back to the old position when we asked Pakistan to act especially on terrorism and track down terrorists. Could you throw some light on that? Secondly, were water disputes and the issue of Kasab brought up by the Pakistani side?

Foreign Secretary: The focus is on charting a course forward. That definitely I think is the message from today’s meeting. So, the searchlight is really on the future, not on the past. Our concerns about terrorism remain very much on the agenda. Prime Minister was very clear that public opinion in India particularly is most concerned about this issue, the issue of the terror machine that operates from Pakistan and that it would be essential for Pakistan to address this issue comprehensively. I believe that Prime Minister Gilani understood the concerns that we expressed in this regard. For instance, on the Mumbai trials he said that their intention is to complete the trial as soon as possible to see that the perpetrators are brought to effective justice. When I say issues of concern will be discussed between the two countries, obviously they will encompass all issues of mutual concern.

Question: What about the water issue?

Foreign Secretary: I have answered that question. All issues of mutual concern would be focused on in the dialogue.

Question: But did the Pakistan Prime Minister raise this issue in particular?

Foreign Secretary: No, the idea was on the renewal of dialogue to understand the state of affairs in the relationship, what is it that is holding both sides back at the moment, how do we address the state of affairs? So, I think there was a lot of soul-searching here. I think you must regard this meeting in that light, a meeting that resulted in an understanding between the two sides that we should honestly attempt now to take this process forward because it is good for our two countries, it is good for the region, and it is good for the destiny of our two peoples.

Question: Madam, during the time of discussion with Sheikh Hasina, was there any particular reference to trade through Bangladesh via Agartala?

Foreign Secretary: We did discuss trade and transit issues, the issue of better facilitation of such trade, improvement of the facilities at the integrated check posts, the Customs Stations. Both sides were completely on the same page about improving these facilities so as to facilitate better movement of trade in goods and indeed of people between the two sides.

Question: Madam, I was wondering what has really changed during the last two years? Pakistan has not given any assurance about attacking the terror and the same assurances came today. What has really changed the Government’s mind to reopen the dialogue process?
Foreign Secretary: It is not just a question of one-side agreeing to reopen the dialogue process. I think there was a certain, shall I say, confluence of thought here of basically both sides agreeing that dialogue is the only way forward and that we must attempt to take this process forward, that we should discuss all issues of concern, we should try and understand what are the problems that affect the relationship, and that eventual normalization of relations is good for the people of the two countries and good for the growth of our economies. For instance, one terrorist attack sets back economic well-being by so many percentage points. So, I think both sides want to focus on development, want to focus on taking their economies forward, and improving the living standards of their people in generally bringing peace to the region.

Question: Madam, did the Pakistani side raise the issue of Baluchistan?

Foreign Secretary: The issue was not raised specifically. To the best of my knowledge it was not raised. On this issue, the Pakistan side is well aware of the fact that India does not seek to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries, in the affairs of its neighbours, and Pakistan is our neighbour, and there has been no evidence at all to suggest that there has been any interference by us in the internal affairs of Pakistan.

Question: Madam, you said there was a lot of soul-searching.

Foreign Secretary: Well, that is my phrase.

Question: Okay. My question is about terrorism. Did the Pakistan Prime Minister give a commitment to our Prime Minister that there would be no use of Pakistani territory. Anyway, you did say something to this effect that any commitments on the end of terrorism vis-a-vis India? Do you think that there is any linkage between the end of terrorism and the beginning of dialogue?

Foreign Secretary: Prime Minister was very emphatic in mentioning that Pakistan has to act on the issue of terrorism, that the terror machine, as he termed it, that operates from Pakistan needs to be controlled, needs to be eliminated. That was very clearly said. Prime Minister Gilani on his part said that Pakistan was equally seized of these concerns, that terrorism has affected Pakistan's well-being also, and that they want to address this issue comprehensively and effectively.
Question: Madam, before this bilateral meeting, the Pakistan Foreign Office had said that Sharm el-Sheikh should be the foundation of whatever future dialogue takes place. Did any such matter come up at this meeting? Is that a position that can ever be acceptable to India?

Foreign Secretary: No, the issue did not come up.

Question: From your briefing we understand that the resumption of the dialogue between India and Pakistan is the biggest outcome of this meeting today.

Foreign Secretary: Dialogue was never broken off. From our side when did we ever say that dialogue was closed? When the Foreign Secretaries met in February we said at that time also that dialogue was the only way forward.

Question: I should say Composite Dialogue. How is it different from the Composite Dialogue? What would you be doing?

Foreign Secretary: I really do not want to get into that kind of debate. I think it does the relationship no good to get stuck with names like that. I think the idea is to discuss all issues of concern. I am not going to get stuck with nomenclature, I said that very clearly. So, you are not going to get an answer from me on that.

Question: Madam, how long was the one-to-one dialogue between the two prime ministers? Was the Kasab question raised and did Pakistan again ask for his custody?

Foreign Secretary: One-to-one dialogue was about a little longer than an hour. As far as the issue of Kasab is concerned, I was not present during the one-to-one discussion, let me say. I am not able to tell you whether that issue was discussed during the one-to-one meeting.

Question: You have just said that both sides have agreed to mutually get down analyzing why things have gone wrong between the two countries. Why this sudden realization? Do you think you want to disown the past and all the rhetoric that you have been engaging in about terror from Pak? What is the reason for this sudden change in attitude?
Foreign Secretary: I do not think literal interpretations can help this relationship. I do not believe the past can be abandoned. I do not believe in any relationship you forget the past and then build anew. You have to understand from the past and then build the future accordingly. I think that was what came through.

Question: Madam, there is frustration among the other countries that SAARC Summit has always been overshadowed by the bilateral problems between India and Pakistan. Apart from the bilateral issues, what is your view in terms of trade in services bringing about more economic cooperation between SAARC countries?

Foreign Secretary: Let me say to you that India attaches the utmost importance to its participation in SAARC, to the strengthening of regional cooperation within SAARC, to speed up the process of implementation of the various understandings and the projects that we have agreed to implement within the ambit of SAARC. And that came through very clearly in our meetings at the Standing Committee of the Foreign Secretaries, at the Council of Ministers, and at the Summit meeting yesterday. SAARC at 25 years, the Silver Jubilee 16th SAARC Summit I think focused on these issues very effectively. Of course, bilateral meetings are always held on the sidelines of such summit meetings. The relationship between India and Pakistan I think receives the focus of all South Asian neighbours also. So, I know that there is a lot of interest when India and Pakistan meet. But I do not think the word overshadow should be used in this context. I think that SAARC, its cooperation among all eight neighbours in South Asia, has a vision for the future. In fact, the Vision Statement that the Summit Declaration hopes to speak of, you will see it once it is released, talks about a number of ideas that we could institutionalize to take this common vision of SAARC forward. Trade in services helps us to build more cooperation in the hospitality industry, in civil aviation, in health, in education. So, again it is a visible sign of SAARC coming of age, the new maturity in our cooperation.

Question: Just to go back to what you were saying that you do not want to get bogged down by nomenclature and that India and Pakistan will discuss all issues of concern, apart from terrorism what are the other issues of concern?
Foreign Secretary: Maya, I need not educate you on the relationship. You know exactly what is meant by that. So, I am not going into details, but all issues of concern.

Question: Okay. Just an aside. On the Madhuri Gupta case there is plenty of attention in Delhi. I am sure you all have been following the developments on that. Your reaction please?

Foreign Secretary: Our Minister of State for External Affairs has made a statement in Parliament today on the subject. I would ask you to refer to that.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

Thimphu, April 29, 2010.

The President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan, His Excellency Mr. Hamid Karzai; the Prime Minister of the People's Republic of Bangladesh, Her Excellency Sheikh Hasina; the Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Bhutan, His Excellency Lyonchhen Jigmi Yoeser Thinley; the Prime Minister of the Republic of India, His Excellency Dr. Manmohan Singh; the President of the Republic of Maldives, His Excellency Mr. Mohamed Nasheed; the Prime Minister of Nepal, His Excellency Mr. Madhav Kumar Nepal; the Prime Minister of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, His Excellency Syed Yusuf Raza Gilani; and the President of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, His Excellency Mr. Mahinda Rajapaksa, met in Thimphu, Bhutan, on 28-29 April 2010 for the Sixteenth Summit of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC).

2. The Leaders expressed satisfaction that SAARC had achieved a number of important milestones with the completion of twenty five years of its establishment. The Leaders underscored the relevance and importance of the Association in providing a platform for regional cooperation to accomplish the Charter objectives.

3. In this Silver Jubilee Year of SAARC, the Leaders emphasized the need to develop a 'Vision Statement'. They agreed to form a 'South Asia Forum' for the generation of debate, discussion and the exchange of ideas on South Asia and its future development. The Forum will consist of eminent personalities of diverse background including from all SAARC Member States. The Forum would provide inputs, based on a comprehensive understanding, for charting out the future course of SAARC in the medium and long run and recommend, if required, the necessary improvements required in the existing mechanisms. Such a forum could function on public-private partnership lines, and allow for multiple inputs beyond governments into the consideration of the future of SAARC.

4. In order to commemorate the 25th anniversary, the Leaders laid emphasis on effective communications and public diplomacy. They drew attention in this regard to the need to reach out to different sections of the South Asian community, particularly its students and youth, private media, private sector, think tanks, civil society, and institutions of economic development.

5. The Leaders agreed that the scope and substance of cooperation had expanded to diverse fields, providing a firm basis for genuine partnership. However, a number of these had not translated into meaningful and tangible benefits to the people. They, therefore, highlighted the need for more efficient, focused, time-bound and people-centric activities and called for appropriate reflection of all the SAARC decisions into the national policies and programmes of Member States. They resolved that the Silver Jubilee Year should be commemorated by making SAARC truly action oriented by fulfilling commitments, implementing declarations and decisions and operationalizing instruments and living up to the hopes and aspirations of one-fifth of humanity.

6. The Leaders, while appreciating that all the Member States had evolved into multi-party democracies, underlined the challenges faced by them in ensuring effective, efficient, transparent and accountable governments. In this regard, they emphasized the need for regional cooperation to strengthen good governance through sharing of experiences, best-practices and establishing institutional linkages. 11. The Leaders noted that while climate change impacted every country, the SAARC Member States as developing countries were shouldering a major burden, in spite of having contributed least to the problem. They emphasized that global negotiations on climate change should be guided by the principles of equity, and common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities as enshrined in the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change, and should be conducted in an open, transparent and inclusive manner.

12. The Leaders, underscored the need to initiate the process to formulate a common SAARC position for COP16 and thereafter, including on issues such as separate financing for adaptation and mitigation as well as technology transfer. 37. The Leaders welcomed the offer of the Government of Maldives to host the Seventeenth Summit of the Heads of State or Government of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) in 2011.
Hon'ble Speaker,

Hon'ble Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh returned from Bhutan on 30th April where he participated in the 16th SAARC Summit. This was a historic summit as it marked the 25th anniversary of the Organization. This was also the first gathering of the SAARC leaders in Bhutan.

As Honourable members are aware, we have a historically close relationship with Bhutan. We would like to compliment the Royal Government of Bhutan and its enlightened leadership on the excellent manner in which they organized the Summit, and ensured productive outcomes.

Prime Minister had very fruitful discussions with Prime Minister Jigmi Thinley and an audience with Their Majesties the King of Bhutan and the Fourth King of Bhutan. These discussions have reinforced my conviction that India-Bhutan relations remain strong, deep-rooted and steeped in mutual trust and understanding. Prime Minister and Prime Minister Thinley launched two new large hydropower projects as part of our commitment to jointly develop 10,000 MWs of hydro-power capacity in Bhutan by the year 2020. They also laid the foundation stone of the Bhutan Institute of Medical Sciences and initiated an e-governance and IT project in Bhutan.

At the SAARC Summit, Prime Minister recalled what Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had said at the first SAARC Summit in Dhaka in 1985, that the establishment of the organization was an act of faith. The Summit provided an opportunity to reflect on what we have achieved in these two and half decades, what more needs to be done, and on the kind of a South Asia we wish to create for our present and future generations.

Prime Minister stressed that regional cooperation should enable freer movement of people, of ideas, and of goods and services. It is not sufficient to merely conclude agreements and conventions. The challenge before us is to translate these agreements into practical activities and programmes, which touch the lives of our people. Prime Minister emphasized the need for greater regional cooperation in areas such as agriculture, forestry, education, healthcare, women’s empowerment, skill development and technological innovations. The Summit concluded an Agreement on Trade in Services.

The 21st century cannot be an Asian century unless South Asia marches together. Prime Minister shared our vision of a prosperous and vibrant South Asia playing its rightful role in shaping the global discourse on issues facing the world. There was a convergence of views on the need to transform SAARC into a truly action-oriented, people-centric and dynamic regional organization. There was unanimous condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.

The theme of the Summit was “Climate Change”. The leaders of the SAARC countries exchanged views on deepening regional cooperation for tackling the effects of global warming in our region, and how we can benefit from each other’s experiences and strengths. A Summit Declaration on Climate Change as well as a Convention on Cooperation on Environment was concluded.

There was widespread appreciation for India's initiatives and role in contributing to the region's stability and prosperity. We will continue to persevere in our efforts to create a climate of constructive cooperation in South Asia based on mutual respect and mutual benefit.

Prime Minister had the opportunity of having bilateral meetings with the Presidents of Maldives and Sri Lanka, and the Prime Ministers of Bangladesh, Nepal and Pakistan. There was a common desire among all our neighbours to further strengthen their relations with India.

During Prime Minister's meeting with President Nasheed of Maldives, the two sides reviewed our close and friendly relations, based on mutual trust and understanding and shared interests. Prime Minister reiterated India's commitment to deepen our partnership with Maldives across all areas.

President Rajapaksa of Sri Lanka informed Prime Minister of their efforts for political reconciliation and for bringing lasting peace in the country.
Prime Minister congratulated the President on the recent election victory in Presidential and Parliamentary elections, and reiterated India's commitment to assist Sri Lanka in its relief and rehabilitation efforts, and to strengthen our bilateral relations in diverse areas.

With Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina of Bangladesh, Prime Minister reaffirmed our commitment to expeditiously implement the various decisions taken during her landmark visit to India in January 2010.

Prime Minister conveyed to Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal, India's support for the ongoing efforts of the people of Nepal for the consolidation of multi-party democracy in Nepal. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the progress made in our cooperation since the visits of Prime Minister Nepal to India in August 2009 and the President of Nepal in February 2010.

Prime Minister had a cordial and frank discussion with Prime Minister Gilani of Pakistan. He told him that if the trust deficit between India and Pakistan can be eliminated all issues can be resolved through dialogue. Good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan were in the interest of both our countries as well as in the interest of the peace, stability and development in the region. He reiterated our serious concerns on terrorism emanating from Pakistan, and urged the Pakistani Prime Minister to expedite action against the perpetrators of the Mumbai terrorist attack. He was assured that Pakistan was serious about bringing these perpetrators to book. The Foreign Ministers and Foreign Secretaries have been entrusted with the responsibility to work out mechanisms on how the trust deficit can be removed.

President Hamid Karzai of Afghanistan visited India on April 26-27, 2010, before proceeding to Thimphu for the SAARC Summit. Prime Minister met President Karzai and discussed a broad range of bilateral and regional issues of mutual interest, and the two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the strategic partnership between the two countries. Prime Minister reiterated our commitment to assist the Government and people of Afghanistan in their efforts towards the reconstruction and development of their country.
133. Inaugural Address of External Affairs Minister at the International Conference on SAARC @ 25.

New Delhi, September 16, 2010.

Smt. Kapila Vatsyanji,
Shri Shyam Saran,
Secretary General of SAARC, Dr. Sheel Kant Sharma,
Dr. Bsiwajit Dhar,
Distinguished Delegates,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to deliver the inaugural address at this international conference marking the 25th anniversary of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, or SAARC, as it is widely known. On December 8, 1985, when the Charter of SAARC was adopted by seven leaders of this region in Dhaka it was indeed an ‘act of faith’ as the then Indian Prime Minister, Shri Rajiv Gandhi, termed it. It was also ‘an act of great foresight and statesmanship’ as Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh has affirmed more recently. In a quarter century of its existence SAARC has come a long way in shaping regional economic cooperation and development in the face of multi-faceted challenges.

SAARC as an organization has been working quietly to touch the lives of people in South Asia in many different ways. The most visible aspect of this cooperation has been in the area of trade. At the same time, increasing regional engagement in core areas of development including education, health, agriculture, energy and infrastructure have also contributed significantly in delivering the fruits of development to South Asians at the grass roots level. There has also been a significant increase in intra-regional tourism, people-to-people exchanges through cultural and social activities and the exchange of ideas.

As per the SAARC Charter of 1985, a fundamental objective of SAARC is "to promote the welfare of the peoples of South Asia and to improve their quality of life". To achieve this objective a key strategy adopted has been to work towards enabling freer movement of goods and services. The implementation of the South Asia Free Trade Agreement (SAFTA) in 2006 was a significant milestone in this effort. Intra-regional trade in South Asia has begun to grow and has doubled over the past 5 years. While estimates of intra-SAARC trade vary, it is fair to assume that this figure touched close to $ 550 million in 2009, increasing from just $ 10 million in 2006 when SAFTA came into force. What is also significant is that intra-SAARC exports, as a proportion of total SAARC exports, have more than doubled in these last 25 years. This reflects the growing importance of the region for the overall trade of its Member States.

Besides tariff reduction commitments, SAARC countries have also advanced by taking a number of initiatives which, inter alia, include reducing lists of sensitive products, tackling non-tariff and para tariff barriers, enhancing customs cooperation, harmonising of standards and granting special and differential treatment to the LDCs. However, there is considerably greater potential to increase the share of intra-regional trade and investment flows as has been witnessed in East and South East Asia. It is time that the South Asian region takes adequate cognisance of the economies of the neighbourhood just as different regions across the world have adopted the strategy of regional economic integration to exploit the synergies for mutual benefit in a balanced and equitable manner.

The signing of the SAARC Agreement on Trade and Services earlier this year should strengthen economic cooperation in the region further by expanding intra-regional investment and production opportunities. I am glad to inform you that India has very recently ratified this Agreement and I hope that the early ratification of this Agreement by other member states will give a boost to realising the full potential of trade in services in the region.

It is widely acknowledged that the lack of adequate transport connectivity and infrastructure are the main reasons for high transaction costs of trade. It is, therefore, not surprising that the decade 2010-2020 has been declared the "Decade of Intra-Regional Connectivity in SAARC". While projects and corridors for increasing physical connectivity in the region have been prioritised on the basis of the SAARC Regional Multi-modal Transport Study, we are yet to see implementation of these projects on the ground. Efforts to negotiate regional Agreements on Motor Vehicles and Railways have also not yet succeeded. Progress in these areas is critical for taking forward intra-regional economic cooperation.

Climate change is another challenge facing our region, which is rich in natural resources and includes diverse ecosystems. The SAARC Convention on Cooperation on Environment signed in the Thimphu Summit provides a strong basis for taking forward cooperation in this field. I am glad that SAARC countries are working together to present a common position to the 16th Conference of Parties Meeting in Cancun later this year. However, there are more pressing needs of adaptation and capacity building for our member countries in the region. To meet those urgent needs, India has announced an initiative to create an 'India Endowment for Climate Change'. We hope to soon develop a concept paper to take this initiative forward.

In a region afflicted by continuing natural disasters, the creation of the SAARC Disaster Management Centre (SDMC) in New Delhi in 2006 was certainly a step in the right direction. However, the Agreement to develop a Natural Disaster Rapid Response Mechanism under the auspices of the SDMC has not yet been finalised. This is unfortunate as it is hampering the ability of the Centre to respond to urgent needs of members including during disasters.

South Asia continues to be primarily agrarian even after these 25 years. The enormity of challenges facing South Asian agriculture are widely known, as is the nexus between food insecurity, poverty and climate change. Efforts have been made, through the creation of a SAARC Food Bank, to help meet the urgent requirements of shortfall in foodgrains in member countries. I am glad that the quantum of foodgrains in this Bank has now been doubled to four hundred and eighty six thousand metric tonnes. The last Summit in Thimphu also agreed on establishing a Regional Seed Bank to improve the quality of seeds available to farmers in our countries.

Within the broad framework of social development initiatives, issues relating to Women's Empowerment, Gender Equality, Youth and Children have been undertaken. The SAARC Social Charter lays out the broad, long-term basis for such cooperation. More recently, the creation and operationalisation of the SAARC Development Fund (SDF) has given renewed hope to the development of projects that should directly benefit the livelihoods of people at the grass roots level. Presently there are only a few projects that have been undertaken by the SDF. However, it is my sincere hope that with the full operationalisation of the SDF Secretariat in April and new funding contributions, many other projects in the social, economic and infrastructure sectors would soon be developed.

I am particularly pleased at the progress achieved in the establishment of a South Asian University (SAU) here in Delhi. The academic session of the SAU has just begun on 26 August with two initial courses having participation of 50 students from all across the region. I am optimistic that the University, once fully operational, will provide world class education opportunities to the youth of South Asia. This $ 300 million undertaking, co-shared by SAARC Member States, should establish itself as a centre of excellence producing generations of scholars and professionals in disciplines of developmental relevance to the region. It should also help to create a genuine South Asian identity for the youth of the region, which itself should go a long way in furthering the objectives of SAARC.

One measure of success of SAARC is the interest shown in the organisation by non-Members. The fact that an organisation of eight members has nine Observers from all across the world is a testimony to the potential the organization holds. Whether we fully achieve the potential is, of course, in the hands of Member States.

As we mark this 25th Anniversary of the organisation, we should take stock of the progress achieved in a sober and realistic manner and seek to drawn lessons from the past. At all times, we should bear in mind the original objective of SAARC to promote the welfare of the peoples of South Asia and improve their quality of life.

We need to look to an inter-related South Asian future where trade and cross-border links flourish and bring prosperity to all our people. As a region blessed with an abundance of natural and human resources, a youthful population and a unique spirit of enterprise, this should surely be an achievable goal.

You may be aware that at the Thimphu Summit the Indian proposal to form a South Asia Forum for the generation of debate, discussion and exchange of ideas on South Asia and its future was accepted. The Forum is intended to function on public-private partnership lines and allow for multiple inputs beyond governments to chart out the future course of SAARC in the medium and long run. We are currently in the process of preparing a concept paper to develop this idea further and look forward to your participation in the Forum in due course.

The Government of India on its part remains fully committed to working within SAARC to contribute to the development of the region through social development and economic integration. We also remain committed to pursuing these objectives in a non-reciprocal manner.

Distinguished friends, as you spend the next two days deliberating over these and other issues, I urge you to think boldly but realistically and to come out with concrete suggestions for the enhanced dynamism of the South Asian region in the near future.

I am very thankful to the organizers for giving me the opportunity to speak to you at this Conference in the 25th year of SAARC. I do hope that SAARC will grow from strength to strength and contribute to the well being of the peoples of the region.

Thank you.

SCO

134. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on External Affairs S. M. Krishna’s visit to Tashkent for SCO Summit.

New Delhi, June 9, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening, and good to see you again. Let me introduce my colleague Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary (Eurasia), who inter alia handles matters pertaining to SCO and Uzbekistan. You are aware that the External Affairs Minister (EAM) Shri S.M. Krishna, will be leaving for Tashkent tomorrow to participate in the SCO Summit. He would be accompanied by Foreign Secretary, Shrimati Nirupama Rao; Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary (ERS) and other senior officials.
The engagements pertaining to the Summit would take place on the 10th and 11th June. Tomorrow there is an informal dinner for the Heads of Delegations which will also give them an opportunity to interact. On Friday, the 11th of June, EAM will participate in the meeting of the Heads of the State Council of the SCO Summit. There is also an official reception later in the honour of the participants. In the second half of 11th of June he would be calling on His Excellency Islam Karimov, the President of Uzbekistan. This is briefly the programme.

Let me touch upon the SCO process. You are aware that SCO is the successor to the Shanghai 5 Grouping and was launched in Shanghai in June 2001. It has six member States, which are China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Russia, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan. SCO Secretariat was established in Beijing in January 2004. In the same year, Mongolia joined SCO as an Observer. A year later in 2005 at Astana, India, Pakistan and Iran joined as Observers. So, SCO has four partner countries which have an Observer status. Later in 2005, the Dushanbe Summit introduced the Dialogue Partner status for countries and organizations. Sri Lanka and Belarus became the Dialogue Partner countries in SCO in the Yekaterinburg Summit in June 2009.

Then they have Special Invitees and Afghanistan has been a Special Invitee since 2005 as Afghanistan is a major area of interest for SCO. SCO has also formed an Afghanistan Contact Group which has held several meetings. Russia organized a meeting on Afghanistan in Moscow in March 2009, in which members and observers participated including India. Another Special Invitee is Turkmenistan which has a neutral status.

The Council of Heads of States constitutes the supreme decision-making body and meets annually. Also, the Council of Heads of Governments meets annually. India, since becoming an observer in 2005, has regularly participated in the Council of Heads of States meetings as well as Council of Heads of Governments meetings. During the Summit in 2008 at Dushanbe, SCO took a decision to raise the level of involvement of the observer countries. You know that four member countries in SCO are Central Asian countries. Central Asia is a part of our extended neighbourhood and we have the best of relations with each SCO country.
Speaking at Yekaterinburg SCO Summit in June 2009, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh said and I quote, “The Shanghai Cooperation Organisation represents a vast landmass rich in cultural diversity, creativity and resources. India has the privilege of having excellent bilateral relations with each of the members of the organisation. Our relations with them go back in time. They rest on solid, civilisational, cultural and economic linkages that have flourished over the centuries”.

Ladies and gentlemen, India would like to see greater connectivity with SCO countries. We wish to strengthen people-to-people contacts, exchanges of business persons and scholars, as well as trade, investment and technology flows between India and SCO. India also welcomes closer cooperation in the field of energy and food security as well as infrastructure development. We wish to see peace, prosperity and stability in the region that SCO represents. As such we have been and would like to further enhance our cooperation in counter-terrorism with SCO. Terrorism is an issue which concerns every country in the region and for that matter the entire mankind. It is a common challenge which we have and are taking up jointly. That sums up our approach to SCO. We have been playing an active and constructive role and are willing, are open to playing a larger role at SCO.

I would also like to briefly touch upon our excellent bilateral relations with Uzbekistan. I mentioned that the EAM will be taking the opportunity of calling on His Excellency the President of Uzbekistan Mr. Karimov. We enjoy historical linkages spanning millennia with Uzbekistan. There is a great deal of mutual respect and goodwill between our countries. Hindi is taught in several schools in Uzbekistan. In fact, a number of streets in Tashkent are named after Indian leaders such as Mahatma Gandhi, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Prime Minister Shastri and so on. ICCR is planning to hold a festival of India in Uzbekistan soon.

There is a Jawaharlal Nehru Centre for Information Technology that was inaugurated by the Prime Minister of India when he visited Tashkent in April 2006, and the Centre is doing well. We are interested in enhancing all-round cooperation with Uzbekistan including in areas like energy, mining, trade and investments, information technology, human resource development, health, agriculture, culture, tourism and so on. Indian investors have signaled their interest to invest in diverse sectors like construction, infrastructure-building including roads, railways and airports, the hydrocarbons sector, tourism, agro-chemicals, education, and IT.

We have a very happy tradition of regular high-level exchanges. I would like to recall here that EAM Shri S.M. Krishna had paid an official visit to Uzbekistan on 22nd and 23rd of October 2009 when he called on President Karimov and had detailed discussions with his counterpart. Uzbekistan has been supportive of India’s candidature for permanent membership of the UN Security Council. We greatly value our ties with Uzbekistan and would like to see them enhanced further.

Thank you.

135. Remarks by External Affair Minister S. M. Krishna at the plenary session of Tashkent Summit of SCO.

Tashkent, June 11, 2010.

Your Excellency, President Karimov, Chairman of the Summit, Distinguished Heads of State and leaders of delegations,
Secretary General of the SCO,
Excellencies, Ladies & Gentlemen,

It is a great honour for me to be here in Tashkent at this august gathering of world leaders for the Annual Meeting of the Council of Heads of State of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization.

India has been associated with the SCO since 2005 as an Observer. We attach great importance to this Organization and value our partnership with its members. Indeed, we see most SCO member countries as belonging to our ‘extended neighbourhood’, bound to us by strong ties of history and culture. Within the parameters of participation open to Observers, India has demonstrated its strong commitment to SCO, by engaging with the Organization in several different areas and by participating actively at several of the Ministerial meetings.
With the Presidency last year of Russia and the current Presidency of Uzbekistan, Observer states have been given an expanded role and India has shown its commitment to the ideals of the Organization through constructive engagement in diverse areas. Earlier this year in January, India participated in Moscow at an informal SCO meeting, to prepare for the London Conference on Afghanistan. In March 2010, our Deputy Minister for Culture led the Indian delegation to the meeting of the SCO Culture Ministers at Sanya, China. Under the Russian Presidency, we were invited to and we attended several of the Ministerial meetings.

SCO has played a constructive and forward-looking role over the past few months in the international deliberations on the future of Afghanistan. We commend this and believe that the SCO is uniquely fitted to provide positive contributions to the global discourse on Afghanistan. SCO can certainly add a critical regional perspective and play a constructive role in ensuring a peaceful and stable Afghanistan. We in India stand committed to the social and economic development of Afghanistan. We see Afghanistan as a hub for transit, trade and energy, connecting Central Asia and South Asia.

The Yekaterinburg SCO declaration rightly recognized the dangers posed by illicit drug trafficking, terrorism and transnational organized crime. Terrorism and extremism, along with narco-trafficking, are key challenges facing all countries of our region. India, as a victim of terrorism, understands the threat posed by this menace to economic and social development. Regional cooperation to counter terrorism can play a key role in supporting action taken by individual countries. SCO has been pro-active and has taken major initiatives to pool the resources of its member countries for the joint struggle against this scourge. The Regional Anti-Terrorism Structure (RATS) under the auspices of SCO is based in this city- Tashkent- and India is ready to cooperate fully with this important organization for exchanging information and working out a common strategy for combating terrorism.

Economic development and the fair distribution of the fruits of economic growth require connectivity between our peoples. We are ready to work with the SCO for the economic development of the region and feel the SCO can make a valuable contribution to common initiatives to set up viable transport links between the countries of Central and South Asia.
India has consistently articulated its desire to play a more constructive and meaningful role as an Observer at the SCO. We deeply value the role of the SCO in bringing security, stability and development to our region and stand ready to step up our engagement to contribute more meaningfully to the SCO for the common good of the people of our region. We believe that our historically friendly ties with all the member States, our close political relations and equally, our burgeoning trade and investment relations, as well as our expertise, developed over the decades, in diverse sectors, ranging from rural development to high technology - all equip us to fulfill greater responsibilities in this forum.

I would like to congratulate Your Excellency, President Karimov and the Government of Uzbekistan for the excellent arrangements made for the Tashkent Summit and to thank you for the gracious hospitality extended to me and my delegation. I felicitate the Uzbek Presidency for the effective stewardship of the Organization and wish all success to the Kazakh Presidency. I hope that the deliberations of this Summit Meeting are fruitful and end in all round success.

135A. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of SCO Director, Executive Committee of the Regional Anti-Terrorist Structure.

New Delhi, September 10, 2010.

At the invitation of the Government of India, H.E. Mr. Jenisbek M. Jumanbekov, Director, Executive Committee of the Regional Anti-Terrorist Structure of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO), visited India from 7-9 September 2010. This was the first interaction between India and the RATS.

India became an Observer of the SCO at its 2005 Summit in Kazakhstan. The Prime Minister of India, DrManmohan Singh participated in the 2009 SCO Summit held in the Russian Federation, while External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna represented India at the 2010 SCO Summit held in Uzbekistan.
During his visit, H.E. Mr. Jenisbek M. Jumanbekov called on the National Security Advisor Shri Shivshankar Menon and Secretary (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs Ms. Vijayalatha Reddy. He held delegation level talks with the Indian side, led by Additional Secretary (Political) in the Ministry of External Affairs, Shri Asoke Kumar Mukerji.

The two sides exchanged views on the current situation in Afghanistan and in the region. Both sides expressed concern at the volatile security situation in this area, which seriously threatened peace and stability, and had an adverse impact on the socio-economic development of the people of this region. The sides expressed their resolve to strengthen their dialogue and cooperation in tackling the threats emanating from terrorism.

The two sides agreed to exchange information on issues of mutual interest, and to draw up a programme of future cooperation on the basis of the relevant decisions taken by the SCO.

136. Statement by Minister of Power Sushil Shinde at SCO meeting.

Dushanbe, November 25, 2010.

Your Excellency, Prime Minister of Tajikistan Mr. Akil Akilov, Distinguished Heads of Government of the Members and Observers of SCO,

Secretary General of the SCO,

Excellencies, Ladies & Gentlemen,

2. It is indeed a proud privilege for me to be in Dushanbe at this august gathering of world leaders for the meeting of the Council of the Heads of Government of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation. I had the honour to represent India in the Heads of Government meeting in Astana in October 2008 and I am delighted to be at this forum again. I would like to begin by thanking the Government and people of Tajikistan for their gracious hospitality.

3. India has been associated with the SCO since 2005 as an observer. In these five years, we have witnessed several tumultuous developments affecting us globally and within the region which SCO represents. We are yet to come out of a continuing global financial crisis. Till now, global recovery efforts have had only mixed results. This is why we support the important theme of this Council Meeting which is to examine ways and means of further deepening cooperation amongst us in overcoming the long term consequences of this crisis.

4. SCO member states and observers constitute half of humanity. Our region is rich not only in resources but also in human capacity and endeavours. Therefore, developments affecting our common SCO region are of significant consequence to the welfare of a greater part of the world.

5. We attach great importance to our association with the SCO, which has steadily emerged as an active and dynamic regional body. Within the existing participatory mechanism open to the observer countries, India has demonstrated its strong commitment to the SCO by engaging with the organisation in several different areas and by participating actively at several of the Ministerial meetings. Most SCO member countries belong to our extended neighbourhood, with strong historical and cultural ties binding us together. India values the endeavours of the SCO for bringing peace and stability and for the collective prosperity of our peoples. On our part, we stand ready to contribute towards the economic development of countries in the SCO space.

6. We congratulate the people of Kyrgyzstan on their recent Parliamentary elections, and hope that this democratic process will bring stability and development to the people.

7. SCO has played a constructive and forward-looking role in contributing towards peace in Afghanistan. We recognize the role of SCO member states in contributing to peace and stability in Afghanistan. India is doing its utmost for the social and economic development of Afghanistan, even at the cost of the lives of our people. India stands committed to the development of Afghanistan and to prosperity for the Afghan people.

8. Terrorism and extremism coupled with narco-trafficking are grave challenges facing all our countries. India as a victim of terrorism, understands the threat posed by this menace to economic and social development. Regional cooperation can play an important role in supporting action taken by individual countries. SCO has been proactive in taking major initiatives to pool the resources of its member countries for the joint struggle against this scourge to mankind. The Regional Anti Terrorist Structure (RATS) can become a very important vehicle for a regional answer to the terrorism challenge. We look forward to be more engaged with RATS and in counter-terrorism exercises in the region.

9. Excellencies and Distinguished guests, India had travelled a long way in recent years. Our economic growth has averaged 8% and we have weathered the global financial crisis through prudent regulatory steps. Despite the global recession, we recovered to a growth rate of 7.4% and are projected to grow at 8.5% in 2010-11 and 9% thereafter. India realises that prosperity in our region will come through growth and development in all our countries. As we come out of a short term policy agenda of crisis management and global re-balancing, we would like to see a strong development agenda adopted in various international fora, to correct the development imbalance that our world and our region face. In this regard, we consider cooperation within SCO membership as important. Specifically, we consider cooperation in Energy, infrastructure and human resource development as critical to progress.

10. We are happy to see that the Tashkent Summit of the SCO in June 2010 has decided to open the doors of the organization to new members. India has consistently articulated its desire to play a more constructive and meaningful role at the SCO platform. We deeply value the role of SCO in bringing security, stability and development to our region and stand ready to contribute more to the SCO for the common good of the people of our region. India’s friendly ties with all the member states, our close political relations and equally, our increasing trade and economic relations as well as our expertise, economic size and technological advancement- all equip us to fulfill greater responsibilities in this forum.

11. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like once again to thank the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan for the wonderful arrangements and for having us all over to your beautiful capital, Dushanbe. For us, Tajikistan is a neighbour with which we share a common heritage and close bonds stretching back to ancient times. These bonds will continue to remain strong in the generations to come. I take this opportunity to wish the people of Tajikistan continued peace and prosperity in the coming years, and congratulate Your Excellency for successfully organizing this important Summit.

Thank you!

ASIA-MIDDLE DIALOGUE

137. Address by Minister of State Smt Preneet Kaur at the 3rd Asia - Middle East Dialogue Meeting.

Mr. Chairman,
Honourable Ministers,
Heads of Delegations,
Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Sawadee Kha, and Namaskar

I am delighted to be here today in Krung Thep, the city of Angels, with friends from Asia and the Middle East, or West Asia as we call it. It is interesting to look at geographical terms given to our region like Middle East or Far East, which perhaps reflect the world view of those who coined such terms. Perhaps, some day we might find terms like Middle West or Far West coming in vogue!! However, in spite of use of such terms, the fact remains that we remain united by rich tapestry of our common history, culture and heritage.

2. I thank Hon. Minister of Foreign Affairs H.E. Mr. Kasit Piromya and the Government of Thailand for the warm welcome accorded to us, and for the hospitality that has made Thailand a leader in the field of Tourism and hospitality. AMED's journey, from our previous host Egypt to Bangkok, marks the continuing experience in gracious hospitality that is a hallmark of our shared culture. I would like to convey our warm greetings and felicitations to His Majesty the King of Thailand, whose 83rd birthday anniversary we celebrated with great enthusiasm recently.

3. It is good to be among fellow Asians. AMED symbolizes the confluence of ideas and thoughts, and we are happy to see this process gathering strength since the first meeting in Singapore in 2005.

4. Issues we discuss in this session relate to our interdependent economic world. This is an apt time to do so, given the upheavals in the world economy. The global economic slowdown affected us all. While recovery is advancing, the path to sustainable medium term growth remains somewhat shaky, as evident in the latest financial problems affecting some European countries.

5. Our economic interdependence is not a recent phenomenon. For a few thousand years now, India has been situated on the crossroads of world's major trading pathways. Be it the ancient silk route, or the sea routes in the Indian Ocean, straddling both eastern and western coasts of India, people plying their trade through centuries have not only carried with them goods, but also ideas, thoughts, traditions and knowledge of each other. I recall the well known Moroccan Ibn Batuta, one of the greatest travelers the world has known, who came to India in the 14th century to be a guest in the court of Sultan Mohammad-bin-Tughlaq for several years. He was later sent as Sultan's envoy to China, and visited many countries in South East Asia in the process. His epic voyages are just one example of the dialogue that has been going on within Asia for thousands of years now, and we are proud of the part India has played in it.
6. These close historical links and connectivity are also mirrored in modern day partnerships and close ties between India and countries of West Asia. The Gulf Cooperation Countries (GCC) alone are host to more than 5.5 million Indians, who constitute a significant proportion of the expatriate population in these countries. They remit more than US$30 billion annually out of a total of around USD 50 billion annual remittances to India - the largest inward remittance flow in the world. Trade with GCC countries in 2009-10 was of the order of US$93 billion making the GCC India’s largest trading partner.

7. In our contemporary world, this interdependence has grown manifold thanks to amazing leaps in technology, enabling faster means of transporting people and goods, lightning speed of communications, the internet, and the omnipresent media. We have all been brought together like never before. Among other things, this has also meant a rapid integration of global supply and delivery chains, as nations and enterprises find the more efficient and cost-effective ways of generating products and services, and building upon their own core competencies and resources. As a result, our connectivity has become synonymous with our interdependence.

8. Our connectivity is not limited to domain of economics alone. A Complex web of causes and effects of major challenges like climate change binds us all. We recognize our common and profound vulnerabilities to climate change, and the consequent common but differentiated responsibilities to combat together its perils. Environmental stewardship demands responsive leadership. As we conveyed at Cancun, India will not only be among the fastest growing economies in the world as measured by GDP-Gross Domestic Product-but will also be amongst the most responsible in ensuring a high rate of growth of the real GDP-Green Domestic Product.

9. The enhanced connectivity is a key force behind globalization, and to put it starkly - represents demise of distance. If a small bank fails in some part of the world, or there is a crop failure in some region, one can be sure its effects are going to be felt across the world.

10. In the economic arena, this connectivity is nowhere visible more than world financial markets, where average daily turnover in foreign exchange markets alone is estimated at about US$ 4 trillion. Needless to say, this complex, super fast connectivity has its downfalls too. At times, such huge volumes of capital chasing high returns in short term can magnify minor local uncertainties into extensive, prolonged and highly destabilizing crises, as this region witnessed in the Asian financial crisis of 1997.

11. The powerful nature of global interdependence was amply demonstrated in the recent Global financial crisis. Excessive credit expansion and asset price inflation, both fuelled by so-called "financial innovations" of dubious value, and a lax regulatory environment, led to an accumulation of risk that was not adequately understood and ultimately produced a severe crisis, which even though it began in the developed world, spread rapidly across the world. The most important fallout of the crisis was the large-scale unemployment generated in many developing countries, threatening many people's livelihood.

12. India was able to weather the storm in a relatively better manner, largely due to action taken by our central bank the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) well before the crisis to tighten bank credit to the real estate sector and to limit bank exposure on this account.

13. It is a matter of satisfaction that many emerging market countries have been able to withstand the meltdown and are able to rebound. I am happy to note that the Indian economy has recovered fairly well from the crisis. The economy, which had grown at 9% in the four years prior to the crisis, had slowed down to 6.7% in the 2008-09. It recovered to 7.4% growth in 2009-10 and is likely to grow at 8.5% in 2010-11. We hope to achieve 9% growth in 2011-12.

14. Challenges demonstrated by the Global Financial Crisis also represent new opportunities. It is said that 'a crisis is a terrible thing to waste'. A global response to it swiftly coalesced together, of which the G20 action is but one example. Reforms of the World Bank and the IMF have since been successfully initiated, as is a much needed reform of financial regulation through a broad based Financial Stability Board (FSB). As a member of G-20, India has striven to ensure that the process fully takes on board the views of our fellow developing countries.
15. While coordinated response to the crisis has helped avoid further collapse of the world economy, the crisis has by no means blown over. High unemployment in developed economies threatens a revival of protectionist sentiment, given that use of conventional monetary and fiscal tools to revive the economy has been yielding limited results. We must, however, at all costs resist any resurgence of protectionism and avoid competitive devaluation.

16. A crucial dimension of connectivity is the flow of people. As I mentioned earlier, people-to-people contacts have constituted the dialogue between our societies for centuries. Tourism is for many countries, and our host Thailand is one example, an engine of growth today. To give an example, more than 3 million Indian tourists visit ASEAN countries every year and about 380 flights connect Indian and ASEAN cities every week. They foster our understanding, appreciation and respect for each other, so important for our peaceful and harmonious co-existence, besides generating employment and sustaining traditional arts, heritage and communities. The same goes for professionals and service providers, who I can say have taken the most advantage of the interconnectivity to convert our economies into knowledge-based ones. As a member of ASEAN + 6 and the East Asia Summit process, we welcome initiatives in our Asian region to build such enhanced connectivity. Following successful implementation of the India ASEAN Agreement on Trade in Goods, we now look forward to the early conclusion of comprehensive India-ASEAN Agreement on Services and Investment. We will continue to work with our partners in SAARC and BIMSTEC to foster and encourage greater trade and connectivity.

17. At the same time, we also have to be on guard against those who are out to exploit our connectivity for their own nefarious and unacceptable ends. Terrorists and their backers, those behind illegal financial flows, and traffickers of drugs, arms and humans are some of them. In recent past alone, we have been witness to several incidents of terrorists trying to cause chaos and mayhem by creating disruptions in global connectivity networks. While India has seen first hand such attacks, they pose a significant challenge to all of us, and the international community needs to act in concert to defeat this common threat.
18. Our multi-dimensional interdependence would not be possible without physical connectivity. Development of connectivity infrastructure is, in my views, a key objective for us. Some salutary proposals, such as the nearly 1,41,000 km long Asian Highway network, have been under development for a while. Implementation of such projects has not been commensurate with our expectations. Thrust on multi-dimensional connectivity is also the theme of the ASEAN Master-plan on Connectivity unveiled at Hanoi recently. India is working closely with its ASEAN partners in this endeavour.

19. Our collective experience has shown that in order to be sustainable, global economic growth has to be inclusive, and its fruits be shared equitably. I would suggest that just as global connectivity ensures flow of inputs and resources that go into producing wealth; it has to also ensure a balanced distribution of wealth thus generated across the regions and countries. A fair and equitable trading system, as enshrined in the objectives of the Doha Development Round, is the sustaining force behind the web of connectivity we’ve built today, and it is therefore imperative that we work together to bring the Doha Development Round to a satisfactory conclusion at the earliest.

20. Finally, our interdependence provides both challenges and opportunities. It makes all of us joint stakeholders for the Global Good. It brings us together and places a great responsibility on people, governments and leaders to act in concert. I am sure deliberations in the meeting would help lead us further down the path we have chosen to traverse together.

I thank you for your attention. Khop Khun Kha.
G-15

Your Excellency President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad,
Excellencies,
Distinguished delegates,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am honoured to represent India at the fourteenth summit of the Group of Fifteen in this beautiful city of Tehran. At the outset, I would like to express our deep appreciation to His Excellency the President of Iran for the warm hospitality and the excellent arrangements made for this meeting. I would also like to express our profound appreciation for the efforts of Iran during its chairmanship to reinvigorate the G-15.

Since the establishment of the G-15, we have made collective efforts to inject issues of interest to developing countries into the global agenda, and to seek outcomes that address our concerns. Some among us are engaged in addressing these issues in the G-20 forum.

While it may appear that the immediate global economic and financial crisis is behind us, it would be early to say that we are on the path of long term recovery. Sustainable recovery of the global economy will depend on several factors, including how the developed economies fare, enhanced investment for infrastructure development, stable capital flows to the developing markets, appropriate macro-economic adjustments, and avoiding complacency in the area of financial sector reforms. We need to continue our efforts for a comprehensive reform of the international financial institutions to make them more inclusive. We also must work for ensuring a balanced outcome of the Doha Round which addresses the concerns of the developing countries.

The 14th Summit, coming after over two decades of our Group's founding, affords us an opportunity to review the progress and revitalize the grouping. We should make it an effective platform, not only for South-South cooperation but, equally importantly, for policy articulation in the global discourse in the areas of trade, money and finance, equitable development, food and energy security, climate change and other issues of concern to our peoples.

We need to collectively look at ways and means to promote South-South cooperation. India has been happy to share its developmental experiences with fellow developing countries, and has implemented some developmental projects in the G-15 framework. India stands ready to cooperate with other members of the group to undertake new projects for deepening and expanding our cooperation.

We need to consolidate ourselves as partners in development, willing to work towards creating a global environment of enhanced understanding and cooperation that is conducive to inclusive and sustainable development. We need to work on greater involvement of our business community and civil society in the G15 process.

I would like to congratulate the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka for assuming the chairmanship of the Group in succession to the Islamic Republic of Iran and assure them of our full support and cooperation.

Thank you.

139. Intervention by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the meeting of G-15 Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Chairman,

I am pleased to participate in the Ministerial meeting of the Group of Fifteen (G-15) and would like to begin by expressing our deep appreciation for your leadership of the Group. We commend your efforts in undertaking a frank and thorough review of the working of the Group with the help of the High-Level Task Force. We welcome the recommendations of the Task Force. We hope that the implementation of the recommendations will help to revitalize and reposition the Group.
Mr. Chairman,

The continuing global economic crisis points towards the urgent need for the creation of a more effective and responsive governance architecture for the global economy, including through bringing about appropriate reforms in the international financial institutions. Only equitable and inclusive solutions that provide a due place for developing countries, can redress existing systemic challenges and help avert future crises.

Developing countries continue to face a range of challenges in various multilateral fora. In order to counter these challenges and optimize the outcomes for developing countries, the need for sustained interaction and coordination among our countries in multilateral processes becomes paramount. We, therefore, welcome the recommendations of the Task Force to promote thematic consultations and articulation of common positions, where possible, on key international issues of interest to member countries.

Mr. Chairman,

While global economic recovery is still fragile and private demand in the industrialized countries is likely to remain weak for some time, South-South cooperation acquires particular salience. The Group's membership has varied capabilities in diverse areas which can be harnessed for the common good of developing countries. G-15 collaborative projects can serve as vehicles to share national competencies and exemplify concrete and credible partnerships between our countries. With the youthful demographic profile in our countries, G-15 projects can focus on human resource development and help translate this advantage into empowering economic assets.

In this context, the Revised Guidelines proposed by the Task Force for monitoring and successful implementation of the projects are timely and welcome. With the new guidelines and monitoring mechanisms in place, we hope that there will be a renewed zeal to initiate projects based on contemporary priorities of the member states. India has, in the past, actively participated in G-15 projects and has coordinated a number of them. We assure you of India's continued support and active collaboration in G-15 projects. On our part, we stand ready to share our developmental experience and partner interested member countries in capacity building, training, technical assistance and other sectoral cooperation projects.
Mr. Chairman,

In order to respond to the challenges of today's fast changing and interconnected world, G-15 must improve its internal working methods and streamline its institutional mechanisms. India, therefore, welcomes the recommendations of the Task Force for the establishment of the working groups on Sectoral Cooperation and Institutional Mechanisms. We hope that these working groups will be operational soon and contribute to a revitalized and energized Group. The institution of the Personal Representatives is central to the successful functioning of the Group. We look forward to their more regular and frequent meetings to provide effective supervision of the Group's activities.

Mr. Chairman,

In conclusion, we hope the new set of reforms will revitalize the Group and enable it to play a more significant role in the international arena, commensurate with the potential and capabilities of its member countries, both in contributing to the bridging of the North-South divide and in enhancing South-South Co-operation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Nursultan Nazarbayev, President of Kazakhstan, on 5th October 1992, at the 47th Session of the UNGA, the Charter of CICA was adopted at the 1st Summit Meeting held in Almaty on 4th June 2002.

Sixteen Asian states joined the CICA at the time of its inception. Presently CICA has twenty Member States. These are; Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, China, Egypt, India, Iran, Israel, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Pakistan, Palestine, Republic of Korea, Russia, Tajikistan, Thailand, Turkey, United Arab Emirates and Uzbekistan. The CICA Secretariat, the administrative body of the CICA is located in Almaty, Kazakhstan.

A founding member, India has actively participated in the CICA process since its inception. Prime Minister Shri Atal Behari Vajpayee attended the 1st Summit in June 2002. Shri Murli Deora, Minister of Petroleum & Natural Gas represented Prime Minister at the 2nd Summit in June 2006.
Mr. Chairman,

Thank you for your leadership, guidance and support for the cause of the Small Island Developing States (SIDS).

The international community has expressed solidarity with the SIDS since the Barbados Programme of Action and subsequently through the Agenda 21 and the Mauritius International Meeting on Sustainable Development of SIDS. Unfortunately, the declared commitments have not been supported by commensurate global efforts.

The Mauritius Strategy for Implementation of the Barbados Action Plan to strengthen and advance sustainable development in the SIDS has made limited progress in spite of the best efforts by these countries.

The structural deficiencies in SIDS economy arising out of lack of diversification, excessive dependence on tourism and commodities, higher production and transportation costs, small domestic market and vulnerability to external shocks have placed these countries at a clear disadvantage.

The impact of the global financial, food and energy crises has further exacerbated their vulnerabilities and reversed their socio-economic development.

Building resilience in the SIDS to address their structural vulnerabilities must, therefore, continue to be the central plank of the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation.

Mr. Chairman,

India fully recognizes the significant threats posed by climate change to the SIDS and the urgency to address the need for adaptation, mitigation, financial and technological support to these countries to develop an effective response.

Our consciousness of the situation is particularly deep since we too have large and vulnerable populations living on our island chains and in low lying coastal areas.

India fully supports a firm demonstration of greater sensitivity and a more concrete response to the urgent adaptation needs of the Small Island Developing States as part of any emerging outcome of the ongoing multilateral negotiations.

The financial pledges made at Copenhagen including the Fast Start Funds must be fulfilled at the earliest. We would urge the developed countries to disburse these funds without further delay, under the overall supervision of the UNFCCC, to meet the urgent adaptation needs of the SIDS for whom climate change poses an existential threat.

The strategies adopted by the SIDS to build their renewable energy capabilities in wind and solar power, and waste to energy systems are steps in the right direction to lessen dependence on fossil fuel imports.

Food production is vital to sustainable development and we appreciate and support the steps taken by the SIDS in developing aquaculture systems to enhance food availability. The international community must address the specific concerns of the sea fishing industries in these countries and ensure that food security is given primacy over short-term market needs.

Mr. Chairman,

SIDS urgently need adequate financial resources - access to ODA, FDI and other forms of external capital flows- capacity building, market access, and technology transfer to address their special needs.

I take this opportunity to urge our developed country partners to fulfill their promise made and extend 0.7% of their GNI to global development agenda.

Addressing debt sustainability amongst the SIDS remains a leading challenge. India supports policies that provide safer debt instruments and limit destabilizing capital flows.
The international community needs to pay particular attention to assisting the SIDS through strengthening national disaggregated data and information systems and developing strategies to enhance disaster management capabilities in them.

Mr. Chairman,

We believe that capacity building in the SIDS holds the key to sustainable development. We are willing to help the SIDS in whatever way we can - within our resources and as part of our South-South cooperation, to share our experience and expertise in the fields of climate-friendly technologies and sustainable development to supplement their national programmes.

Our cooperation has been in diverse sectors, and has included climate change adaptation, information and communication technology, waste management systems, remote sensing, hydrographic survey, telemedicine, public transport, education, irrigation systems, fisheries, and agriculture and food security.

Permit me, however, to stress that efforts by fellow developing countries cannot be a substitute for the efforts required from our developed partners.

India remains steadfast in its effort for the holistic and sustainable development of the Small Island Developing States.

Thank You.
SICA

New York, September 27, 2010.

I am glad to meet Your Excellencies and continue this important India-SICA dialogue. At the outset, I would like to thank Belize, as President of SICA, for taking this initiative of organizing India-SICA Dialogue. SICA has evolved into an important regional organization. It is increasingly playing an active role not only on regional issues but also on global issues of concern. India values its relations with SICA member countries and is interested to strengthen and deepen our relationship for mutual benefit.

There had been two rounds of India-SICA Ministerial Dialogue so far. The last dialogue took place in New Delhi in June 2008 and my predecessor had led our side. I am happy to note that there has been substantial progress on the last agenda. In addition to exchange of number of ministerial and official level visits, there have been a few initiatives on the economic front too.

We would like to express our sincere appreciation to Costa Rica for opening its Mission in New Delhi this year. Panama, El Salvador and Dominican Republic have Missions in New Delhi for quite some time. We would welcome other SICA member countries to also consider opening their Diplomatic Missions in India. We had opened our Diplomatic Mission in Guatemala last December. We also have a Mission in Panama since long. We are keen to expand our presence in the Latin American Region and will open new Missions in the region in a phased manner.

2. Cooperation in the UN

I would like to express our sincere appreciation to all the SICA member countries for their support to India in the UN and other multilateral fora. We value your support for India’s candidature for the non-permanent membership of the UNSC for 2011-12. We wish to work with you on UN reforms. Given the present realities, we believe that India should be given its due place in the UN Security Council. Similarly India strongly believes that a reformed UN should address the problems of small states and give due recognition to their aspirations.

3. Cooperation in disaster management

Excellencies, India is aware of the vulnerabilities of small states to natural disasters such as hurricanes, landslides, flooding, earthquakes, drought etc. As an expression of solidarity, in a modest way, India has been reaching out to SICA countries whenever they are struck by natural disasters. I wish to underline here the importance of setting up a well coordinated permanent disaster management mechanism for all SICA countries especially since natural disasters in this part of the world are recurring. India would be pleased to share its experiences in disaster management with SICA and assist it to respond to such calamities by way of training, rescue operations, sharing of technology and infrastructure creation.

4. Climate Change

India strongly believes that the global dialogue on Climate Change should give due recognition to the concerns of the Small States. We wish to work closely with SICA member countries on this important issue at the forthcoming COP-16 meeting in Cancun in November 2010.

5. Trade & Investment

It is indeed satisfying that trade and economic relations between India and SICA have increased considerably in recent times. It has risen from US$ 517 million in 2005-06 to US$ 843 million in 2009-10. I am sure you all agree that even this substantial increase in our trade is not commensurate with the existing potential. It is important to build awareness on the available opportunities in our two regions through participation in each other's trade fairs and business conclaves. Earlier this year two business conclaves on Latin America & Caribbean were held in New Delhi and I must say the response of the businesses on either side was highly enthusiastic.
I would also like to seek your support for setting up an India-SICA Business forum which would facilitate greater engagement between our two businesses. This was one of the agenda items at the last meeting in New Delhi and needs to be pursued. We should encourage our Chambers of commerce on both sides to work towards this objective.

Indian companies are now actively looking at opportunities in the SICA region. SICA region is strategically located and provides a gateway to markets in North America and South America.

We appreciate the measures taken by some of your countries to relax visa restrictions for Indian nationals. This is an encouraging development. Such measures will, no doubt, go a long way in encouraging our entrepreneurs to visit the region and explore investment opportunities.

6. Lines of Credit

Another way of enhancing our trade and investment engagement is through utilization of Lines of Credit, both official and commercial. In this regard I would like to draw your kind attention to India’s offer of Lines of Credit of US$ 10 million to all member countries of SICA at the last meeting in New Delhi in June 2008. Recently Belize and Nicaragua have sent their project proposals. These are being studied and processed in consultation with the concerned ministries of Government of India. We will welcome proposals from all our SICA partners.

At the last dialogue in New Delhi our two sides agreed to constitute a Joint Technical Committee to lend assistance on technical cooperation issues. So far this has not happened. May I suggest that we constitute this committee in an agreed time-frame.

As a matter of informing you we are streamlining our internal procedures in order to expedite clearance of proposals for Lines of Credit. May I urge you to consider making viable proposals of interest to you. I would welcome any suggestions from you in this regard.

7. ITEC Programme

As part of our commitment to south-south cooperation, India has been providing technical assistance to developing countries to assist them in their capacity building initiatives. Our ITEC programme and IT centres are highly popular in developing countries. In Latin American region, in particular in SICA countries, our IT centres are running successfully, creating employment opportunities for the youth. On your request we have extended these programmes for one more year after completion of their two years programme.

I would also like to mention that several SICA countries are being offered ITEC slots every year for training of experts. However, I am given to understand that the utilization of these slots is modest. May I urge you all to avail our ITEC slots to the full. I welcome any suggestions in this regard.

Thank you.

NAM
143. Intervention by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Ministerial Meeting of the NAM Committee on Palestine.

New York, September 25, 2010

Mr. Chairman,

Thank you for the opportunity to address this important committee. I recall the last meeting of the committee at Sharm el-Sheikh in July 2009, where India renewed its commitment to the just cause of the Palestinian people and, to seeking progress in the peace process.

2. In line with our support for UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, India renews its support for a negotiated solution resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders, side by side at peace with Israel as endorsed in the Quartet Roadmap and UNSC Resolutions 1397 & 1515. We have also supported the Arab Peace Plan, which calls for withdrawal of Israel to pre-1967 borders, along with recognition of Israel and the establishment of the State of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital.

3. We have also called for an end to illegal Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories and for an early and significant easing of restrictions on the free movement of persons and goods within Palestine. On the events of 31 May 2010, India deplored the tragic loss of life and the reports of killings and injuries to people on the boats carrying supplies for Gaza. There can be no justification for such indiscriminate use of force, which we condemned. We extended our sympathies to the families of the dead and wounded. It is our firm conviction that lasting peace and security in the region can be achieved only through peaceful dialogue and not through use of force.

4. We welcome the ‘direct talks’ between the Israelis and the Palestinians, which have resumed after a hiatus of almost 2 years. We are hopeful that the talks and negotiations would continue, leading to a comprehensive peace process for final resolution of the Middle East conflict.

5. Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to bring to your attention, India’s continued developmental support to Palestine. Last year, we enhanced our annual contribution to United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East [UNRWA] to $ 1 million, besides, making a special contribution of US $ 1 million to UNRWA in response to UNWRA’s flash appeal. Last year and this year, India contributed US$ 10 million annually as untied budget support to the Palestinian National Authority. This year’s budget support followed from discussions between His Excellency, President Mahmoud Abbas and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in New Delhi in February this year. These exemplify India’s continuing commitment to Palestine.

6. Mr. Chairman, I avail myself of this opportunity to renew India’s commitment to the work of this committee, confident that under your guidance, we would continue to contribute to the work of the Movement in support of the Palestinian people.

Thank you.
Mr. Chairman,

Excellencies,

Distinguished delegates,

At the outset, I would like to express my sincere thanks and appreciation to you, Mr. Chairman, for convening this meeting.

As we celebrate half a century of the founding of our Movement next year, the theme of today's debate is significant and timely.

Mr. Chairman,

The Nonaligned Movement, as it stands today, owes a great deal to the inspiration and foresight of its founding fathers like Prime Minister Pandit Nehru, President Nasser, President Tito, and President Sukarno. They shared the vision of the Non-Aligned Movement as an assertion of freedom of judgement and freedom of action, in international relations built upon the basic principles of solidarity, peace, justice and equity.

As early as in 1946, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, India's first Prime Minister, stated, "We propose, as far as possible, to keep away from the power politics of groups, aligned against one another, which have led in the past two world wars and which may again lead to disasters on an even vaster scale. We seek no domination over others and we claim no privileged position over other people. But we do claim equal and honourable treatment for our people wherever they may go, and we cannot accept any discrimination against them. We believe that peace and freedom are indivisible and the denial of freedom anywhere must endanger freedom elsewhere and lead to conflict and war".

As a force representing the newly-independent former colonies emerging from variety of national liberation struggles, our Movement helped close a long and painful chapter of colonialism, imperialism and institutionalized racism- an achievement of which we can be justifiably proud and draw inspiration. However, the expectations that the political emancipation would lead to rapid socio-economic development and give the developing countries a greater say in shaping the world order are still far from being realized.

Mr. Chairman,

Today, our Movement stands at the crossroads. The challenges confronting us are much more complex, multidimensional and transnational in nature. In today's increasingly, inter-connected and inter-dependent world, the vision of our founding fathers is more relevant than ever before and must continue to guide our perspective as we move forward.

The central challenges of our times relate to management of global economy and finance, securing stable food and energy supplies, poverty alleviation, eradicating hunger and deprivation, tackling pandemics, raising literacy levels and coping up with climate change. Equally serious challenges are posed by terrorism, drug-traffickers and organized crime syndicates, and other challenges to international peace and security.

These challenges are heightened by persistent structural infirmities and democracy deficit in the architecture of international institutions of global governance. The apparent failings of our global political, economic and fiscal institutions limit our collective ability to respond to these challenges.

Mr. Chairman,

Our Movement remains well-positioned to address such challenges. We need to discover strengths of our past and there must be sharper focus on issues that unite rather than divide the members. Without solidarity of purpose and commitment, without a measured, result-oriented approach, we cannot address systematic challenges that transcend individual national capacities.

Moving forward, we need to reinvigorate our efforts towards a more democratic, equitable, and legitimized international architecture that reflects the contemporary realities. The world's international institutions, in particular, the UN and its Security Council and the Bretton Woods Institutions require fundamental changes which only developing countries can promote. The continuing democracy deficit in the UN, the parliament of nations, is unsustainable. Genuine reform is essential, in particular of the Security Council. It must encompass expansion in both permanent and non-permanent categories of membership and improvement of its working methods.

Terrorism is one of the greatest scourges of our times. The Movement cannot afford to equivocate on this vital issue and must be at the forefront of combating this menace. The Movement should ensure that terrorism is not condoned or justified on any ground whatsoever: political, religious, ethnic or any other. The fight against terrorism must be directed not only against the terrorists, but also against those who sponsor, abet or support them. We need to enhance the international cooperation against terrorism and plug gaps in the legal framework. This requires that the negotiations on a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism (CCIT) in the UN, which have been going on for over a decade, are finalised and the convention is concluded at the earliest.

India attaches the highest priority to the goal of nuclear disarmament which is also enshrined in the Rajiv Gandhi Action Plan of 1988. During the 63rd UNGA session, our Prime Minister reiterated the proposal for a Nuclear Weapons Convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and providing for their complete elimination within a specified time frame. The Movement needs to play a more active and advocating role in efforts towards achieving universal and non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament and a world free of all nuclear weapons.

Members of the Non-Aligned Movement are the largest troop providers to the UN peacekeeping operations. They are also host to most of the UN peacekeeping operations and peacebuilding efforts. It is therefore critical that the Movement must spearhead efforts towards ensuring a meaningful engagement in the substantive discussions on these issues.

As we have just undertaken a comprehensive review of the progress towards the realization of MDGs, Mr. Chairman, we are reminded of the long and arduous journey that lies ahead in realization of these goals.
The developing and the developed countries need to work together to effectively tackle the challenges of food security, energy security, health, education and environment and climate change. Accelerated and sustained efforts are needed towards eradication of poverty and lasting improvements in nutrition, health and education.

African countries form the largest single grouping in NAM. Nowhere are the challenges humankind faces more pressing than in the African continent. The Movement must continue to work towards ensuring Africa’s pre-eminence in the global development agenda.

In this stocktaking, naturally, our thoughts also turn to the people of Palestine, who have endured great suffering and hardship. With the latest renewed impetus to the peace process in the Middle East, we hope that this would lead to a comprehensive, just, lasting and peaceful settlement of the Palestinian issue.

Mr. Chairman,

Today we are at the cusp of an opportunity. Our overall approach while addressing the overarching challenges that we face must be guided by a new, forward-looking and focused Agenda for our Movement, which brings conviction to our positions.

This will require consolidation of our Movement by building areas of commonality. We must strive to build unity and solidarity, recognizing that amongst 118 members, there will be diversity.

The imperative for a new agenda and discourse in our Movement has never been greater.

COMMONWEALTH

145. Address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Conference of Speakers and Presiding Officers of Commonwealth Countries.

New Delhi, January 5, 2010.

It is indeed a matter of great honour for India to host once again the prestigious Conference of Speakers and Presiding Officers of Commonwealth Countries for the third time. I extend a warm welcome to each one of the distinguished participants. I am very happy that this Conference will carry forward the multifaceted high-level engagement that is now part of the established Commonwealth tradition. India is also looking forward to welcoming thousands of sportsmen and women later this year when we celebrate the great sporting traditions of the Commonwealth countries during the Commonwealth Games.

This Conference gives us an occasion to reflect on one of the fundamental values of the Commonwealth - that of adherence to democratic principles. The past few decades have undoubtedly seen the triumph of the will of the people. Democracy is taking roots in every corner of the world. Why this has come to be was perhaps most appropriately summed up by India’s first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru. He said and I quote, “Democracy is good; I say this because other systems are worse”.

Democracy, in precept and practice, will never wear the mantle of perfection. Consensus building takes time. But in the end, the decisions that emerge from such processes are durable. They have the support of the majority and they take into account the legitimate concerns of the minority.

India's own tryst with democracy drew its inspiration from our freedom struggle. And so, at a time when most developing countries opted for authoritarian models of government, India chose to be a multi-party democracy. This journey has not always been smooth. There have been stresses and strains. This is inevitable in a diverse and plural society that India is. Despite these often noisy political contestations, India has remained as a functioning multi-party democracy. Democracy has strengthened our polity and our institutions.
I believe that India's experiment in trying to achieve economic salvation within the framework of a pluralistic, democratic polity that respects individual freedom and the rule of law has profound implications for the world at large. If our way of governing can succeed and if we are able to banish poverty from our land in a generation, it will convincingly answer the question of whether democracy can sustain rapid development and growth.

Each society and each democracy has to come to terms in its own way with the competing demands of freedom and development and of respecting diversity while maintaining unity. There is no "one-size-fits-all" democratic system. Democracy cannot be imposed from outside. It has to evolve from the native genius of each society and absorb local political and cultural traditions.

Under the Commonwealth umbrella, our effort should be to recognize each attempt at democratization, however incipient, and encourage it to blossom. There is great diversity and a wealth of experience among the Commonwealth countries. We should pool our experiences and expertise and extend a helping hand particularly to small states and countries that are trying to consolidate their democracies.

India is making a modest contribution in this regard and our effort has been to offer our experience of running the organs of democracy such as parliament, the judiciary and the election commission. Our large aid programmes in Africa and elsewhere have strong components for the development of capacity and human resources.

At the recently held meeting of the Heads of Government of the Commonwealth at Port of Spain, we issued a Declaration on Climate Change that affirmed that a global climate change solution is central to the survival of people and to the promotion of development.

The leaders of the Commonwealth agreed to implement the Commonwealth Climate Change Action Plan in particular by contributing to the efforts of member states in transforming their economies and strengthening the capacity and voice of vulnerable groups. It is the small states and indeed the developing world in general that is bearing the brunt of a problem they did little to create. Issues relating to climate change require undoubtedly a collective and cooperative approach.
based on the principles of common but differentiated responsibility. I call for a greater sense of fairness and justice in global approaches to dealing with the problem of climate change.

In recent times, democratic representation has deepened as more and more sections of the electorate are gaining a political voice. In India, this has become manifest in the growing number of regional and sub-regional parties and a concomitant rise in coalition politics. This has not only presented a challenge for governance but also for the conduct of the system of parliamentary democracy, as the voices of the smaller parties have found greater resonance within the political structure. The role of presiding officers has come into sharer focus. The task of running parliament smoothly, giving due representation and voice to all sections, has become more complex and challenging. The aspirations of the smaller parties may often be anchored in narrower considerations but they carry great weight for their constituents. In the end, democracy must respond to these everyday concerns of the common man and parliament should be the forum to articulate and address them.

I am pleased that the Speaker facing these challenges in our own Parliament is a very distinguished woman, Mrs. Meira Kumar, who sheathes the proverbial iron fist beneath a velvet voice.

Throughout the world, there is now a generational shift in politics as there is in business and other fields of human endeavour. In India, seventy percent of the population is below the age of 35, and they are voting in large numbers. We must act to meet their expectations.

It is also imperative that women are given a more meaningful voice in our political and developmental processes. In India, I am proud to say that, with reservation in our local bodies, we have today more than a million elected representatives who are women. They are deepening our democracy and enriching our development processes.

Our representative bodies should think of ways to marshal the energy and the impatience of the young and the vast latent capabilities of our women. I hope that the deliberations today will address these valuable issues constructively.

The growth of extremist ideologies is threatening civilized existence everywhere. The proponents of such ideologies are challenging the tenets of democracy and representational politics by resorting to intimidation, terror and other manifestations of intolerance. We should not and we cannot give any quarter to such forces. At the same time we should look at ways and means by which such forces can be eliminated without undermining our democratic foundations. This will require sustained international effort and cooperation and I am sure that your deliberations will give new insights on how we can tackle this grave menace.

This Conference is an important forum of the Commonwealth. Over the years, the Conference has begun to address issues that have gone beyond the conventional issues that concern presiding officers. I look forward to the outcome of your deliberations.

With these words, let me say once again what a pleasure it is for India to have you here in our midst, and to wish you all success in your deliberations.

146. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at Commonwealth Foreign Ministers’ Meeting.

New York, September 27, 2010.

Excellencies Foreign Ministers of Commonwealth Member States, Secretary General of the Commonwealth,
Distinguished Delegates,

Ladies and Gentlemen

Let me begin by applauding the manner in which the Government of Trinidad & Tobago has chaired the Commonwealth in the past year, in particular the successful hosting of the CHOGM in Port of Spain in November 2009. I would also like to take this opportunity to convey the support of my government to Australia as the chair of the next Summit to be held in 2011 in Perth.
With its unique membership structure, substantive orientation and style of functioning based on consensus-building, informality and goodwill, the Commonwealth provides its members with a strong sense of purpose and utility. The Commonwealth has also devoted much of its activities to the needs and interests of its larger developing country membership, including 32 Small Island Developing States and the Least Developed Countries. India, on its part, also has a strong and abiding interest in promoting, maintaining and strengthening healthy democratic institutions and the rule of law, which are the primary objectives of the Commonwealth.

At the CHOGM 2009, the Prime Minister of India had announced several new initiatives in support of the Commonwealth. I am happy to share with you that all of these initiatives have already been implemented or are in the final stages of implementation. These pertain to training of diplomats, the Commonwealth Partnership Platform Portal (CP3) portal doubling our contribution to the Commonwealth Media Development Fund, creation of 250 additional slots for training civilians from Commonwealth countries under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) Programme, and in addition, providing on a bilateral basis 1,564 training slots to ITEC partner countries in the Commonwealth.

I am happy to learn that 2009 CHOGM mandates are successfully being implemented. During 2009 CHOGM, the need to conclude negotiations on a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism on a priority basis was emphasised. It is important that this happens early, preferably during the current Session of the UN General Assembly.

Like other Member States of the Commonwealth, India believes that the future successes of the Commonwealth rest with young people. India is, therefore, supportive of developing a new assessed scale of contributions for the Commonwealth Youth Programme (CYP) on a consensus basis as early as possible.

I am convinced that the Commonwealth Secretariat will continue its proactive role in other areas as mandated by 2009 CHOGM such as education, health, energy security, food security, migration, human rights, combating corruption, human trafficking, reform of international institutions, trade and investment, and assisting the small states to implement crisis-resilient strategies. It is also our hope that the 'Commonwealth Connects' would promote strategic partnerships and help member states build ICT capacity.

This year the Secretary General and our Permanent Representatives have interacted to bring to the UN the unique perspective of the Commonwealth on current issues in the global discourse. This interaction could be facilitated by regular contact of the Commonwealth Office in New York with the UN Missions of Commonwealth countries on matters of interest.

Before I conclude, I would like to mention that India eagerly looks forward to welcoming sportspersons and officials from Commonwealth countries to the Delhi Commonwealth Games, due to begin the coming Sunday.

Thank you.

BIMSTEC

147. Keynote address by Minister of State Dr Shashi Tharoor

   on "India's North-East and BIMSTEC- A Retrospect".

   Shillong, April 9, 2010.

I am delighted to be here in Shillong today in such a splendid setting, the abode of clouds. It is my first visit to the beautiful North-East of our country since becoming a Minister and I am very happy that an event closely linked to my Ministry has brought me here. As many of you are aware, the Ministry of External Affairs has over the past couple of years embarked on a vigorous outreach programme as part of its Public Diplomacy efforts. In this context, I recollect that in June 2007, for the first time, a Seminar was organized by the Public Diplomacy Division of the MEA here on India’s Look East Policy. It is a matter of satisfaction, that the general direction set then has been followed and we are back again in Shillong for discussion on a very timely and important topic that focuses on the role of BIMSTEC in unlocking the potential of the North-East of India.

The North-East of India is the bridge between two sub-regions of Asia - South Asia and South-East Asia. Both regions are in the midst of tremendous positive change, spurred by economic growth and development. For various reasons, the details of which you are well aware, we in India have so far to a large extent not been able to leverage the various opportunities that this sub-region of India offers for the well-being and prosperity of the people who live here. Amongst the opportunities we should seize are not only the geographical factor of being a bridgehead between South-Asia and South-East Asia, but also the natural and human resources of the Seven Sisters of the North-East. Today's challenge is to harness these opportunities to ensure that growth and development does not bypass this region but passes by this region. It is encouraging to note in this context the role BIMSTEC is attempting to play in truly linking this region not only to other parts of India but beyond India.

The defining feature of India is 'Unity in Diversity' and 'Diversity in Unity'. Each and every region of India exhibits this feature along with a strong underlying sense of national unity and Indianness at the heart of this diversity. This rich mosaic of diversity and variety can be more prominently seen in the North-Eastern states of the Indian Union. Nature has endowed this entire region bountifully in many respects. It has rich bio-diversity; its hydro-potential is unparalleled; it has petroleum and natural gas along with other minerals and it also has great forest wealth. But more than these rich natural endowments, it is the great human resource wealth of the region which is a unique endowment, being a result of the confluence of diverse ethnic, linguistic, religious, cultural and educational currents.

Although industrialisation was brought to this region by the British East India Company in the early 19th-century with the cultivation and first export of tea way back in 1839, the rapid development of industry has not taken place here. Even coal was found here soon thereafter and exploited which led to the development of private and Government railways. The first oil refinery of Asia was set up in 1901 in Digboi following the discovery of oil in Upper Assam. It is also important to remember that in the past, during the times of acute foreign exchange scarcity, Assam's tea and jute exports were sources of much-needed foreign exchange. So it is all the more ironic and disheartening that today this region is yet to take full advantage of the industrialization and economic development of our country, and that significant differences in terms of some development indicators have emerged with other parts of India. Happily various initiatives are in place to correct the discrepancies and I am happy to observe that even my Ministry is playing a leadership role in one such initiative, which is to contribute towards BIMSTEC's efforts to bring economic development to this strategic region of India.

With the paradigm shift from a state-centred approach to one of interdependence and global and regional cooperation, we have become all the more aware of the geo-economic potential of the North-Eastern region as a gateway to East and South-East Asia. I am convinced that by gradually integrating this region through cross-border market access, the North-Eastern states can become the bridge between the Indian economy and what is arguably the fastest growing and most dynamic region in the world. While we live with the geographic fact that our North-Eastern region is landlocked, the geographical location of the North-East makes it the doorway to South-East and East-Asia and vice versa, a doorway for these economies into India.

Let us consider some basic facts. A glance at the map of the North Eastern region reveals that the region is almost entirely surrounded by foreign States and the seven sisters of the region are internally locked with concomitant locational disadvantages, despite the fact that each of these States shares at least one international border. The North-Eastern region is cradled by five Asian States - China, Nepal, Bhutan, Myanmar and Bangladesh. Arunachal Pradesh, Manipur, Mizoram and Nagaland share a 1643 km long border with Myanmar; Assam Meghalaya, Tripura and Mizoram share a 1880 km border with Bangladesh; Arunachal Pradesh, Assam and Sikkim share a 468 km border with Bhutan; Arunachal Pradesh and Sikkim share a 1325 km border with the Tibet Autonomous Region of the People’s Republic of China. The region's difficulties following from the loss of connectivity and market access as a result of Partition in 1947 are well known. Traditional transportation routes - rail, road and river, linking the Chittagong and Calcutta ports, suddenly became unavailable and alternative routes were prohibitively costly. To cite an example, the distance between Agartala and Calcutta port is 1,700 km, whereas, earlier, it was just about 375 km through the territory of what became East Pakistan, now Bangladesh. The result, therefore, was massive market and logistical disruption, from which the North-East of India still suffers.

The UPA government under Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh has taken a number of initiatives, which will have a long-term economic impact on the region. The important initiatives include the launching of the North-Eastern Region Vision 2020 by the Hon'ble Prime Minister in July, 2008. This vision is a historic path-breaking document which spells out the challenges that need to be addressed in a collaborative manner over the next ten years. In pursuance of this Vision, seventeen Thematic Groups, headed by the line Ministries or Departments in specific areas, have been set up. The Ministry of DoNER has assumed the responsibility for monitoring the Prime Minister's economic packages announced during the visits of the Prime Minister from time to time to the North-Eastern States. These packages contain important infrastructure projects, such as rail and road development and power projects.

Since the services industry is not very well-developed in the region, incentives have also been provided to some specified sectors like hotels, adventure and leisure sports, nursing homes and vocational training institutes. Considering the rich biodiversity of the region, biotechnology has been brought under the purview of the new Policy.

This may sound like an internally-focused approach, but it is part of a larger picture. India's 'Look East' Policy, which was enunciated in the early nineties, was not merely a matter of external policy; it was also a strategic shift in India's vision of the world and India's place in the evolving global economy. Most of all, it was about reaching out to our civilizational neighbours in the region, and availing of the economic opportunities presented by these countries.

India's engagement with BIMSTEC is a key component of our Look-East Policy. I am glad to see my friend the Ambassador of Thailand here [check?], because in a sense, BIMSTEC is a forum where our Look East Policy meets Bangkok's Look West Policy. BIMSTEC is a unique link between South-Asia and South-East Asia. From the very beginning, it has been considered a powerful mechanism to promote opportunities for trade, investment and tourism between these two regions. Societies within BIMSTEC are pluralistic; our languages are rich and diverse and we have a shared cultural heritage.

Since its inception in 1997, BIMSTEC is playing a role in connecting South-Asia and South-East Asia. BIMSTEC started in 1997 for regional cooperation with only four member-countries. Today, the combined Gross Domestic Product (GDP) of BIMSTEC partners has increased two and a half times to reach 1.7 trillion US dollars. At present, connectivity among the members is far more than it was in 1997, and intra-BIMSTEC trade turnover and investment and people to people exchanges have multiplied.

Starting with six sectors, the BIMSTEC agenda of cooperation has expanded to fourteen sectors: (i) Trade & Investment (ii) Technology (iii) Energy (iv) Transportation & Communication (v) Tourism (vi) Fisheries (vii) Agriculture (viii) Cultural Cooperation (ix) Environment and Disaster Management (x) Public Health (xi) People-to-People Contact (xii) Poverty Alleviation, (xiii) Counter-Terrorism and Transnational Crime and (xiv) Climate Change.

India is the lead country in important areas such as Transportation & Communication, Tourism, Environment and Disaster Management and Counter-Terrorism and Transnational Crime.

A Free Trade Agreement (FTA) within the BIMSTEC framework is being discussed. A BIMSTEC Energy Centre and a Weather and Climate Centre are proposed to be established in India. We have also offered 330 annual training slots to BIMSTEC countries under our Technical economic co-operation programme.

If we take advantage of the experiences of member-countries in a concerted way, it is possible to have a far-reaching impact on poverty reduction and on the overall development of the region. For this to happen, tremendous effort and investment will have to be made in the North-Eastern states to benefit from the doors that are being opened. There needs to be greater focus on capacity building, especially in building up human resources capacity, by preparing them for the opportunities that will open up in the commerce, tourism and services sectors.

The overlap between the internal and the international makes it also essential that we dovetail the development strategies of the North-Eastern region with the BIMSTEC initiative. Pursuance of the Look East Policy for over 15 years has put in place certain diplomatic and political structures. There is now need to make these structures work for the North-Eastern Region. Diplomatic initiatives urgently need to be converted into commercial, touristic and investment opportunities. For this purpose, MEA has to closely work in close cooperation with the Ministry for the Development of the North-Eastern Region, the Planning Commission, all economic ministries and the State governments.

Bilateral relationships are also vital in strengthening our collective efforts. I am particularly pleased to see the High Commissioner of Bangladesh here, because we have recently had an excellent visit from his Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to New Delhi. The increased momentum of the strengthening of our relations inevitably contribute to our effective cooperation within BIMSTEC as well.

Development of transportation and communication linkages and greater connectivity would play a key role in ensuring more effective regional development and cooperation. In this regard, the Asian Development Bank (ADB) has conducted a study on transport infrastructure and logistics that has identified the bottlenecks in this area among BIMSTEC countries and suggested ways to overcome them. Tackling constraints and bottlenecks in transportation and communication holds the key to enhancing overall cooperation as connectivity in the areas of transport and communication is the basic building block to obtain any form of cooperation.

It is heartening to note that the last Ministerial meeting of BIMSTEC in Nay Pyi Taw, Myanmar, in December 2009, endorsed the BIMSTEC Transport Infrastructure and Logistics Study (BTILS) conducted by ADB. This paves the way for further steps to strengthen transportation and communication among BIMSTEC countries.

As part of the Look East Policy, India strongly supports the various initiatives taken to improve comprehensive physical connectivity between countries in the region. These include the Asian Highway Network which is being coordinated through the United Nations ESCAP office in Bangkok, which envisages a comprehensive network of roads connecting the countries in Asia. There is separately an East-West Highway Project running from Vietnam through to Myanmar, through which India could get access to all mainland South East Asian countries i.e. Myanmar, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, Vietnam, Malaysia and Singapore.

From our perspective, the most critical link would be to create road connectivity from the North-East of India through Myanmar into South East Asia. In this connection, there is a Trilateral Highway Project between India, Myanmar and Thailand, under construction. Thailand and India in fact have completed construction of the link roads on either side. Some portions of the internal road connectivity in Myanmar remain to be completed, and Myanmar has made requests for grants and funding to enable this project to be completed, which are under consideration by both India and Thailand. Once this road is completed, it would conveniently link us with the East-West Highway as well as the Asian Highway Network.

We are involved in a variety of cross-border development projects with Myanmar in diverse fields such as roads, railways, telecommunications, IT, science and technology and power. These initiatives are aimed at improving connectivity between North-Eastern India and Western Myanmar and are expected to give an impetus to the local economies as well as bilateral trade. Probably among the most important is the Kaladan Multi-Modal Transit Transport Facility, which envisages connectivity between Indian ports on the eastern seaboard and Sittwe Port in Myanmar and then through riverine transport and by road to Mizoram, thereby providing an alternate route for transport of goods to the North-East of India. In fact, given the importance that Government of India attaches to this project, we have decided to fund it completely on our own. The up-gradation of the 160 km Tamu-Kalewa-Kalemno Road in Myanmar across Manipur has already been completed. Discussions are also on to start work on the Triilateral Highway Project, which proposes to connect Moreh in Manipur to Mae Sot in Thailand via Bagan in Myanmar. Efforts are also underway to improve infrastructure, particularly road links, at the second India-Myanmar border trade point at Rhi-Zowkhathar in Mizoram sector by up-gradation of the Rhi-Tidim and Rhi-Falam road segments in Myanmar. Apart from developing road links, efforts are underway to have a rail link from Jiribham in Assam to Hanoi in Vietnam passing through Myanmar.

So the theme "Land locked to land linked" is appropriate. But land locked is a geographical concept. In today’s IT age you can be linked without land. That is why we are also working on enhancing digital connectivity with this region, in particular through an optical fibre cable link between Moreh in Manipur and Mandalay in Myanmar.

Similarly, India’s excellent relations with Bhutan and its involvement in the development and growth of Bhutan’s economy also translate into direct benefits for the North-Eastern states. Recent increases in the export of raw material and agricultural produce from this region to Bhutan have meant better opportunities for agriculturists and industries in the North-East. In fact, Jaigaon on the Indian side of the border across from Phuntsoling on the Bhutan side, has grown and become prosperous with its position as the nodal point for trade with Bhutan. Mutually beneficial development of water resources between India and Bhutan is another characteristic of this relationship and most of the hydro-electric power that is being generated as a result from projects like Chukha, Kurichu and Tala is for the use of the Eastern and North-Eastern states of India.

Ladies and Gentlemen

The BIMSTEC process has made steady progress over the brief years of its existence. Our hosting of the second Summit in New Delhi last year and two Ministerial Meetings during the last three years of our Chairmanship has helped the process move forward. Important milestones achieved during India’s Chairmanship of BIMSTEC have been the finalisation of the Convention on Combating International Terrorism and the Memorandum of Association for the Establishment of Cultural Industries Commission and Observatory, the Energy Centre and Centre for Weather and Climate.

BIMSTEC cooperation should also be accelerated in the other agreed priority areas such as energy, fisheries, agriculture, public health, poverty alleviation, counter-terrorism and transnational crime, environment and natural disaster management.

We see BIMSTEC as an important vehicle to promote regional cooperation and economic integration in a range of areas in our region. We would like to see BIMSTEC develop as a vibrant organization effectively making the North-East our country's gateway to South-East Asia. Our Governor is widely read man, and he is aware that I have often argued that in today's globalized world the distinction between the national and the foreign is increasingly irrelevant. Standing here in Shillong today, I see an opportunity for India to advance its national priorities in this region and its foreign policy interests in the wider region in one seamless approach. I am sure this will offer much ground for rich discussion and I wish you a rewarding and fruitful seminar today.

Thank you and Jai Hind.
PACIFIC ISLAND-FORUM DIALOGUE

148. Opening Statement by Minister of State Smt. Preneet Kaur at the plenary of the Post-Forum Dialogue Partners' meeting.

Port Vila, Vanuatu, August 6, 2010.

Mr. Chairman, Excellencies, distinguished guests, Ladies and Gentlemen

It is an honour to be here amongst you today on the occasion of the Post-Forum Dialogue Partners Meeting. I would like to compliment the Government of Vanuatu for the excellent arrangements made for the Forum meetings, as also thank our hosts for their warm and gracious hospitality.

India's "Regional Assistance Initiative" for Pacific Island Forum countries is based on the priorities identified by the leaders of Pacific Island Forum countries in the Pacific Plan. In keeping with its desire to develop closer engagement with the Pacific region, India has increased its annual Grant-in-Aid to US$125,000 to each of the Pacific Island Countries for their economic development.

The assistance offered by India covers a wide spectrum of economic and social needs as felt by the Pacific countries. This includes supply of equipment and materials for social and economic programmes and for sustainable development initiatives; capacity building courses on Small and Medium Enterprise promotion, training courses for diplomats by Foreign Service Institute of India and scholarships for higher studies in different centres of academic excellence in India. This year we have provided assistance for computerization of ministries to Palau and Tsunami Warning System to Tonga.

India also offers wide ranging technical expertise in non-conventional energy sources, especially wind and solar energy, software and telecommunications. India's own experience with meeting ever increasing energy demands has helped to accumulate considerable expertise in the area of harnessing new and renewable energy sources. We stand to ready to share this knowledge and experience with our partners from the Small Island Developing countries.
We keenly follow and appreciate the steady progress made by Pacific Island Countries Forum towards regional integration. This Forum provides an excellent opportunity to identify common areas of cooperation in different sectors for sustainable development. India has always stood for the cause of the developing countries at multinational forums such as the UN and the WTO and has been at the forefront of South-South cooperation.

Last year India offered additional assistance to PIF countries in the IT sector. Under this, Government of India offered assistance for setting up Learning stations in all the PIF countries and IT Center of Excellence in Fiji and Papua New Guinea. This is on the lines of an initiative to provide computer education in India to children in rural areas and urban low income areas. Many PIF countries have shown interest in getting these learning stations installed.

Finally, I would like to reiterate India's commitment for the economic development of the Pacific Island Countries and its greater integration with Indian economy. I would also like to mention that those countries which did not utilize the grant-in-aid of US$1,25,000 offered in previous years may avail of the same along with the offer made this year.

Thank you.

The External Affairs Minister himself had taken up the issue with the Australian leaders when he had visited Australia in 2009 and also when the Australian Prime Minister and Foreign Minister had visited New Delhi. In a manner of speaking the incidents in January were in continuation of the ones that had taken place in 2009. A the series of new incidents indicated there was not much of an improvement in the situation and New Delhi remained concerned and seized of the matter as the statements below would indicate.]

Telephonic conversation of External Affairs Minister with Australian Foreign Minister

January 11, 2010

Australian Foreign Minister Stephen Smith telephoned External Affairs Minister, Shri S.M. Krishna, today afternoon. The Australian FM conveyed his condolences on the tragic deaths of Indian citizens in Australia in recent attacks, and said that the Prime Minister and Deputy Prime Minister of Australia had already condemned these attacks.

EAM conveyed his deep concern at the recent series of attacks especially in the last 10 days, which seem to have recurred after a period of relative calm of a few months. He reiterated the need for immediate corrective measures, pointing out that the issue had consistently figured in our Parliament.

Foreign Minister Stephen Smith conveyed that he was conscious of the need for an early breakthrough in the ongoing investigations concerning these incidents, and that his Government attached the highest priority to ensure the continued well-being of Indian students. He was also appreciative of the concern in our Parliament following these unfortunate incidents. He conveyed his understanding of the spirit in which EAM had underlined GOI’s grave concerns.

EAM recalled that Australian leaders had time and again, reassured India that the Australian authorities were treating the incidents of assaults with utmost seriousness. However, the incidents seem to be continuing. He emphasized to the Australian Foreign Minister that non-redressal of this vital issue will cast a shadow on our otherwise excellent bilateral relations, and urged that the Australian government should immediately ensure that the concerned State police authorities deal with ongoing investigations with sensitivity and a sense of urgency.

IMPORTANT ADVISORY FOR INDIAN STUDENTS STUDYING IN AUSTRALIA

The Ministry of External Affairs cautions Indian students who are planning to study in Australia that there have been several incidents of robbery and assault on Indians in Australia, particularly in Melbourne, which has seen an increase in violence on its streets in recent years, with the offenders suspected to be mainly young people in their teens and early 20s.
The most recent incident of this kind has been the fatal stabbing of a young Indian, aged 21 years old, in Melbourne on 2 January, as he was walking to his place of work late at night from a train station through a public park.

These incidents are continuing to occur despite efforts by the local police to step up anti-crime measures, and are occurring all over Melbourne without any discernable pattern or rationale behind them. Increasingly also, the acts of violence, are often accompanied by verbal abuse, fuelled by alcohol and drugs.

While, the majority of Indian students studying in Australia, especially those enrolled in Universities and reputable institutions, have a positive experience of living and studying in Australia, the number of such incidents of assault as well as of robbery has been on the rise in recent months, which has affected not only Indian students but also members of the larger Indian community in Australia.

Keeping these factors in view, the Government of India advises Indian students studying in Australia as well as those planning to study there, that they should take certain basic precautions in being alert to their own security while moving around:

• Do not travel alone late at night.
• If you are travelling alone, make sure that you have checked out your route carefully and that you keep to well-lit, populated areas as far as possible.
• Make sure that someone knows where you are going and at what time you are expected to return.
• Don’t carry more cash with you than what is required.
• Do not make it obvious that you are in possession of expensive items, such as ipods or laptops.
• Always carry some identification with you as well as details of who should be contacted in an emergency.
• If in danger, dial 000 to get police help.
• In case you have a complaint, get in touch with the officer responsible for students welfare in the High Commission or the Consulate nearest to you.

The Members of the Council appreciated the initiative of Prime Minister for setting up the Council, and providing a platform for overseas Indian community to share their experience and knowledge for the socio-economic development of India. 153. Inaugural Speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the inauguration of the 8th Pravasi Bharatiya Divas.

New Delhi, January 8, 2010.

It gives me very great pleasure to join you at the inauguration of the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas 2010. Every year on this day we celebrate and honour the contribution of the overseas Indians is making for the development of their spiritual and ancestral home. We are immensely proud of the achievements of our diaspora. Your achievements have made a great contribution in changing the image of India to the world at large. Let me therefore join Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs and the Chief Minister of Delhi to welcome you to New Delhi and wish you a very happy New Year.

This year we have the great honour and privilege of having the distinguished Lord Khalid Hameed as our Chief Guest. Lord Khalid Hameed epitomizes the spirit of the global Indian. He is not only a very distinguished professional and entrepreneur in the field of medicine and healthcare but he is also an active leader in community services, including most importantly those that promote inter-faith harmony. It is our privilege Sir to have you as the Chief Guest this year. I extend a very warm welcome to you Sir and I thank you for immense thought provoking address on inter-faith harmony.

Yesterday, we held the first meeting of the Prime Minister’s Global Advisory Council of Overseas Indians. Some of the best and brightest men and women working in different parts of the world in various fields happen to be people of Indian origin. This is a tremendous knowledge pool and we would like the Council to reflect on where India should be heading in the next 20 years and what we should do in government, in business, in education and in arts and culture and in promoting inter-faith harmony to get where we ought to be 20 years from now. I would like to acknowledge the presence of the Members of this Council and I thank them for their time and effort in a very valuable cause.

The year gone by was an eventful year for India. We undertook the largest democratic exercise in the world during the general elections that were held in May, 2009. These elections reinforced the values of pluralism, tolerance and secularism that are a defining ethic of Indians, whether living in India or abroad.

I recognize the legitimate desire of Indians living abroad to exercise their franchise and to have a say in who governs India. We are working on this issue and I sincerely hope that they will get a chance to vote by the time of the next regular general elections. In fact, I would go a step further and ask why more overseas Indians should not return home to join politics and public life as they are increasingly doing in business and academia.

We are all legitimately proud of India's vibrant democracy. But I cannot say that we have delivered in full measure on the enormous promise and potential of our country. I recognize the frustration well wishers feel when they lament why things don't work faster or why well formulated plans and policies don't get implemented as well as they should be.

It is probably true that we are a slow moving elephant but it is equally true that with each step forward we leave behind a deep imprint. There is a price that we pay in trying to carry all sections of our people along in national development. It is perhaps a price worth paying. Each citizen should feel that his or her voice is heard and have a sense of participation in national development. This is the only way we know to accommodate the enormous diversity of opinions and interests in our country. It is also this characteristic that makes our democracy so vibrant.

But underlying our system is an inherent political and economic resilience that gives our country and its institutions great strength and buoyancy. During the year gone by, the world faced an unprecedented economic and financial crisis. But the Indian economy weathered the crisis quite well.
We were affected but no so much as many other countries. We hope to achieve this year a growth rate of around 7%, which is one of the fastest in the world. We are equally optimistic that we can return to and sustain an annual growth rate of 9-10% in a couple of years.

The rapid growth of India’s economy in the last few years has helped lift millions of people out of poverty. We have been able to expand access to education, healthcare and economic opportunities to a vast majority of our population. This is, however, a work in progress and much more remains to be done. I solicit your assistance to achieve those goals. We wish to accelerate the efforts to effectively address the key constraints in the areas of infrastructure, agriculture, health and education. These are the key priorities for the second term of our government.

We seek the active involvement of the overseas Indian communities in accelerating the pace of our economic and social development. In this context, it is important that we make efforts to connect the second generation of overseas Indians with their ancestral heritage and involve them actively in India’s march forward.

India is today one of the top investment destinations. Economic opportunities are expanding everywhere. Overseas Indians however, while being good savers tend to be somewhat conservative investors. Most remittances are placed in bank deposits. Foreign Direct Investment in India by overseas Indians is low and far short of potential. I would urge overseas Indians to take a careful look at long-term investment opportunities now on the horizon in our country.

Indian industry is rapidly developing a global orientation. Many Indian companies are transforming themselves into multinational corporations with global brand names. As Indian industry steps outward, the Indian diaspora could do more to inter-link Indian industry with global markets. They could reinforce the improving brand image of India. I sincerely hope that the newly established Overseas Indian Facilitation Centre will become an effective hub for promoting two-way interaction between the overseas Indian community and our institutions.

About forty percent of the total remittances of over 50 billion US dollars in 2007-2008 came from skilled and semi-skilled overseas Indian workers. The security of our overseas workers and students is a top priority of my... government. Many of them have been badly affected by the economic crisis. We are conscious of the need to structure an appropriate 'Return and Resettlement Fund' and we are working on a project to provide a social security safety net for the returning workers.

We have been negotiating with the governments of countries with large emigrant Indian populations to improve the welfare and protection offered to our workers. Over the last year, we have signed labour agreements with Malaysia, Bahrain and Qatar that create institutional frameworks to look into issues such as recruitment, terms of employment and workers' welfare. We also signed social security agreements last year with Switzerland, Luxembourg and the Netherlands and are now negotiating such agreements with a number of other countries.

The Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs has also established the 'Indian Community Welfare Fund' in 18 countries in which there is a significant overseas Indian workforce. These funds support 'on-site' welfare measures including food, shelter, repatriation assistance and emergency relief to overseas Indians in distress.

In the coming years, India will need to invest much more in building physical, social and human capital. We must together position India as a supplier of skilled and trained manpower across a wide spectrum of skill sets and sectors. The Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs is already collaborating with Indian Industry and the state governments in this effort. We would like to benefit from the services of overseas Indian professionals and volunteers to help Indian workers upgrade skills in specific trade where there is growing demand. At the meeting of the Council yesterday some very valuable suggestions were made to upgrade the quality of higher education system in our country.

We are now working to enhance work opportunities for our skilled manpower particularly in the west. We are trying to build labour mobility partnerships with key countries in the European Union and have finalized one such partnership with Denmark. These agreements will help to maximize benefits from labour mobility while addressing host country concerns such as irregular migration and integration problems.

We live in an increasingly integrated world; a very fast changing world. In our lifetime we have seen India walk with greater confidence and ability. In the lifetime of our children we would want them to see the India of our and their dreams - an India that lives up to the expectations of those who struggled to make it free and those who toil to take it forward and an India that wishes to live in peace, as it seeks prosperity for all.

As India seeks to realize its destiny in the 21st century, our engagement with the world draws its spiritual motivations from the values of our freedom struggle and our cultural and spiritual heritage. I end with a thought from Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore who once observed:

‘For us the highest purpose of this world is not merely living in it, knowing it and making use of it, but realizing ourselves in it through expansion of sympathy; not alienating ourselves from it and dominating it, but comprehending and uniting it with ourselves in perfect union’.

154. Speech by Minister of External Affairs S.M. Krishna at the Plenary Session of PIO Ministers and dignitaries from the overseas Indian community.

New Delhi, January 8, 2010.

Dato Seri S Samy Vellu, President, Malaysian National Congress, Hon’ble Ministers and dignitaries of Indian origin from Canada, Trinidad
& Tobago, Malaysia, Singapore, Fiji, Mauritius and South Africa,

My esteemed colleague Shri Anand Sharma, Minister of Commerce and Industry,

Your Excellencies, Ladies and gentlemen,

It is a great privilege for me to have the opportunity today to address this remarkable group of individuals, all of Indian ancestry and each having attained distinction in a particular field of endeavour in the country that you have made your home. Together, you form a formidable brain trust of the great Indian Diaspora - local in its commitment and global in its outlook.

As we meet here this afternoon, I can say with pride that our ancient nation stands on the cusp of a truly monumental transformation. Our economy has not just weathered the worst global recession since the Great Depression but has come out with flying colours. During a period when many of the world's industrialised countries faced an economic contraction, our GDP grew by a respectable 6.75% last year and should hit a robust 7.75% growth this year. This should put us back on track for a sustainable trajectory of about 9% a year that we were trying to maintain before the global economy was buffeted by the greed and irresponsibility of financial institutions whose pursuit of short term profits at the expense of all else has laid open both the shallowness and the obsolescence of the post Bretton Woods international economic order. The resilience demonstrated by the Indian economy is eloquent testimony to the skilful architecture of the stimulus package crafted by our government, to the wisdom of putting in place ambitious programmes for rural development and employment generation well before the onset of the recession, to the early recognition of the imperatives of fostering inclusive growth in a country like ours, and of course to the dynamism and enterprise of our businesses as they adapted rapidly to a changed global environment. Together, these represent a forceful validation of the case that we have consistently put forth over the last two decades in favour of a more balanced, equitable and contemporary global order.

Equally remarkable, ladies and gentlemen, is the fact we are able to accomplish this within the context of a democratic polity that saw us conduct the world’s largest electoral exercise last April. Since the last Pravasi Bharatiya Divas conference, we have seen the UPA government complete a full five year term in office despite the challenges of coalition politics, we have seen Dr. Manmohan Singh become the first Prime Minister to be re-elected in over three decades, we have seen an Indian space ship make the landmark discovery of water molecules on the Moon and we have seen our cricket team gain the number one position amongst Test playing nations! No. My government will not take credit for the cricket! But there is much else that we have done for which we can legitimately take credit as we strive towards inclusive economic growth and development; empowerment of the weaker sections of society; poverty alleviation; investment in social and physical infrastructure; strengthening of our science and technology infrastructure; employment and skills generation; food security; health care; energy security; the defence of our borders; ensuring the well-being of our farmers; protection of the environment and effective and transparent governance, including through the greater involvement of our youth. The re-election of the UPA government is a mandate to pursue this ambitious agenda and to constantly remind ourselves of the challenges ahead and warn ourselves against any kind of complacency.

As India's Minister for External Affairs, it is my duty to share with you our perceptions of some of these challenges that we face in our foreign policy environment and also outline our vision for addressing these challenges.

The over arching objective of our foreign policy is to work towards a stable and peaceful environment, globally and also in our immediate neighbourhood so that we can attain our national objectives of comprehensive socio-economic development. In doing so, we are often required to strike a creative balance between our bilateral relations with major global powers and our national interests on complex issues ranging from world trade and nuclear non proliferation to climate change and the environment.

In our immediate neighbourhood, we have exceptionally close and friendly ties with Bhutan. We have strongly supported Nepal's transition to a democratic polity and we have been encouraging all political parties to extend their cooperation to the government in working towards an early conclusion of a durable peace process. In Sri Lanka, the conclusion of the military operations culminating in the defeat of the LTTE provides an opportunity to chart out a future free from terrorism and conflict. We have been providing humanitarian assistance to Sri Lanka and hope that the process of rehabilitation of internally displaced persons would be completed at an early date. We look forward to a lasting political settlement in Sri Lanka that meets the political aspirations of all communities through an effective devolution of power. In Bangladesh, the return of multiparty democratic politics is a positive development. We have been assured that Bangladesh's territory will not be allowed to be used by elements inimical to India, as we pursue mutually beneficial cooperation in many other areas.

We support a stable Pakistan at peace with itself and the region. We wish to address our differences with Pakistan through dialogue. At the same time, we have made it clear that a meaningful dialogue will be possible only in an environment free of terrorism. After the Mumbai attacks of 26
November 2008, Pakistan has taken some halting measures to address the evidence presented to them. However, we are still to see Pakistan take effective steps to end infiltration and dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism. As the Prime Minister has said - should Pakistan show the statesmanship and vision to act resolutely against terrorists, India would be willing to meet it more than half-way.

India and China have together been prosperous and powerful before and could be so again in the future. There is space for both of us to grow and meet our people's aspirations. The relationship we have with China is complex but increasingly diverse both in texture and substance. China is now India's largest trading partner and there is convergence in our views on many global issues including the emerging architecture on world trade and on climate change. There are, however, important bilateral issues that cannot be wished away. We seek to resolve these peacefully, through dialogue. The maintenance of peace and tranquility in the border areas will receive close and continuing attention in this scenario.

Further afield, we have vital interests in the regions of West Asia, South East Asia, North East Asia, Latin America, Africa and Europe, not least due to the presence of significant populations of the Indian Diaspora in several countries in these regions. West Asia is critical to our energy security and economic well-being due to the significant volume of remittances from the region and our increasing trade with the countries of the region. We have an important stake in the stability of the Gulf and the peaceful resolution of the situation around Iran.

With ASEAN, we have signed a Free Trade Agreement - another milestone in our "Look East" policy. Our relationship with Japan has entered a new phase in the last few years. A new South-South partnership is being built with South Africa and Brazil under the IBSA framework.

This brings me to the major powers - Russia and the United States. Our relations with Russia are time tested and we are giving a fresh impetus to bilateral cooperation with them in areas such as nuclear energy, space technology and defence. With the United States, we are building on the positive momentum achieved in the last few years. Our new dialogue mechanism reflects the increasingly global dimensions of our bilateral discourse. India's established capabilities in high technology and our impeccable record of using these technologies in a responsible and transparent manner are creating opportunities for upgrading our access to high technology. The Indian community in the United States has played a particularly active role in fostering our growing bilateral relationship and I want to place on record our appreciation of their contribution.

Turning to the international environment, I have already referred to our perceptions about the anachronistic character of the prevailing economic order, particularly at a time when we are witnessing an accelerated shift of global economic power to emerging economies like India, Brazil and China. On the Doha Round of trade negotiations, we are aware of the agenda of those who have tried to blame developing nations like India for standing in the way of its successful conclusion. This is a dangerous canard that deserves to be exposed. India has always stressed upon the importance of an early and successful conclusion of the Doha Round. But this must happen on the basis of the development mandate that is intrinsic to the Doha Round, recognizing and addressing the legitimate demands of developing countries. We must also carefully guard against emerging protectionist tendencies.

Let me now touch upon the critical issue of climate change. At the recent Copenhagen summit, we put forth our view that since the industrialized countries are primarily responsible for the accumulation of green house gases over the last two hundred years, they should bear the bulk of the cost of mitigation and enable the transfer of necessary technology for this purpose. Compared to the affluent societies, the carbon footprint of the majority of our people is negligible. We cannot accept legally binding emission caps when we have one of the lowest per capita emissions in the world. This is not to say that we are unaware of the disastrous consequences of climate change. As a responsible member of the global community, and for the sake of our own environment, we have taken several major initiatives towards limiting our carbon footprint. We are today among the largest producers of wind and solar energy. Our biogas utilisation programmes have been path-breaking. We have adopted an ambitious National Action Plan for Climate Change, providing inter alia for afforestation, energy efficiency and monitoring of Himalayan glaciers. Our efforts would get a boost if we have access of some of the clean technologies from developed countries. It is disappointing to see that the same countries that readily pledged a trillion dollars to fight the global financial crisis, offered barely a hundredth of that amount to enable developing countries fight the environmental crisis.

Ladies and Gentlemen, I have gone into some of the important foreign policy issues in detail because I believe that it is important for all of you to have a clear understanding of India's position. I hope that this will also enable you to develop a better appreciation of our concerns in your own countries, even as we strive to better understand your concerns and to put in place policies and practices that will build a much closer relationship between us.

Let me now outline our broad policy towards the Indian Diaspora. We recognize that we cannot view the Indian Diaspora as a single, monolithic bloc and adopt a one size fits all kind of approach. First, there is the large PIO community that is spread across the globe, has lived in host countries for several generations and is typically quite well-integrated into local society. Second, we have the NRI community that largely emigrated after India's independence. This group typically comprises of professionals that often occupy a high standing in countries like the US, UK and Canada. The third category, which is a predominantly post 1970 phenomenon, is the Overseas Indian Worker or OIW community that we see around the Gulf and increasingly in a number of other countries. We recognize, too, that there are significant inter se differences even within each of these categories and we try to take these into account wherever possible.

Within the ambit of this general approach, we have already taken a number of important steps. At the institutional level, the establishment of the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs headed by a senior cabinet minister is itself a very clear signal of the importance that we attach to the Indian Diaspora. Other major elements of our strategic institutional framework include the Prime Minister's Global Advisory Council, the Overseas Indian Facilitation Centre (OIFC), the India Development Foundation (IDF), the Indian Council of Overseas Employment (ICOE), and the Global Indian Network of Knowledge (Global-INK).

Institutional structures like these have enabled us to craft policies aimed at addressing a range of specific issues. For the PIO community, the introduction of the OCI card has been well-received and has been followed by innovative schemes like the Know Your India or KYI programme and a scholarships scheme for the youth. Working through the Indian Council of Cultural Relations, we are expanding the network of Indian Cultural Centres abroad. We have also embarked on an ambitious programme to create Chairs of Indian Culture at a number of prestigious universities around the world. The project of 'tracing of roots' in collaboration with States such as UP and Bihar from where bulk of indentured labour migration had taken place is also attracting a lot of interest. The setting up of the Pravasi Bharatiya Kendra (PBK) in Delhi as a repository of Diaspora history and resources as well as to showcase the Diaspora's strengths and networks will be another milestone in this direction.

We are aware of the problems caused by the numerous cases of breakdown of marriages between NRIs and Indian nationals. In States like Punjab, Haryana, Delhi and to some extent Andhra Pradesh, these are being viewed as a serious social problem. Our government has taken a number of steps to address the problem requiring compulsory registration of marriages, by publishing a Guidance booklet on NRI marriages.

For our Overseas Workers, we have taken a number of major initiatives to ameliorate their tough working conditions. These include a unique skills development programme for emigrating workers, refresher programmes for potential emigrants, an ambitious e-governance project to improve management of the emigration process and much else. We are also similarly trying to address the problems faced by Indian housemaids in the Gulf where we have received a number of complaints of harassment and mistreatment. We have also taken the initiative to formalize bilateral labour agreements with key host countries. Such agreements formalise government-to-government engagement and facilitate better management of international migration so that both sending and receiving countries benefit from it. They also provide a platform for implementing best practices. The Pravasi Bharatiya Bima Yojana (PBBY) has been upgraded to provide broader insurance coverage to emigrant workers.
We recognize that this remains work in progress. My ministry has been receiving a number of valuable suggestions from our missions across the globe about additional steps that are required to realize the fullest potential of our engagement with overseas Indians, not just from the economic, cultural or scientific perspective but in particular in terms of our human interaction. We realize that our people still face problems when they are trying to invest in India or even when they want to set up charitable organizations. The single window system does not always work the way it is intended and there is also room for improvement in the functioning of the Overseas Indian Facilitation Cell.

But there is a bigger picture that should not be missed. As I conclude, allow me to say that we have come a long way from those days not so long ago when the emigration of talented professionals was labeled Brain Drain and NRIs were viewed from a somewhat jaundiced perspective. Today, the same pool of overseas Indians is recognized as a Brain Bank. We seek to establish a genuine, mutually beneficial partnership with overseas Indians of every hue - PIOs, NRIs and OWIs. We want to accomplish this through a process of dialogue and understanding and I am delighted that the Pravasi Bhartiya Divas gives us abundant opportunity through platforms like this one.

Thank you for coming to India, for joining us and for the passion that you nurture for India and for all matters Indian. I look forward to our continued interaction for the good both of India and of all of you.

Thank you.
The Government has taken several initiatives to build strong partnership with Overseas Indian Community. Efforts are being made to develop an inclusive agenda for engaging them to provide wide range roles and fulfill expectations of the NRIs. This was stated by Shri Vayalar Ravi, Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs while addressing the inaugural session of 8th Pravasi Bharatiya Diwas here today. He said that the meet has been organized to provide effective platform for interaction with NRIs and offer them opportunities for collaborations and partnerships on a wide variety of initiatives taken by the Indian Government.

Highlighting the initiatives taken in the recent years to strengthen India's engagements with its overseas community, the Minister said that over 500 thousand OCI cards (overseas citizenship of India) have been issued since 2006 and the Government is working on conferring benefits on OCI card holders to enable them to live and work in India. An Overseas Indian Facilitation Centre to provide a single window for overseas Indian investors has also been established. He expressed the hope that some similar opportunity provided by the country would facilitate the NRIs to partner with the country in their chosen area of work.

Appraising the delegates about the detailed agenda of the meet, the Minister said that the various sessions spread over two days would provide the opportunity to PIOs to articulate their region specific interests and concerns. That would help the government to understand better the needs of NRIs and to develop appropriate policies and programmes to meet their requirements and expectations, he added. Shri Ravi also said that the meet would help NRIs to understand the important steps being taken by the various state governments in India for their benefit.

Over 1500 delegates from about 55 countries are participating in the two day's meet. It will have six parallel sessions dealing with economic, social and cultural dimensions of relationship with NRIs. Union Ministers of all important infrastructure ministries and social sectors will address the meet to appraise of the government's programmes and policies.
I am indeed privileged to address this session of the Pravasi Bhartiya Diwas (PBD) 2010 on the “Gulf”. At the outset I would like to complement MOIA for their initiative in scheduling a discussion forum on the Gulf. I am confident that this will permit a broader and deeper reflection into not only one of India’s most important and enduring relationships but one with tremendous potential for development, diversification and enrichment.

2. A few years ago the notion of a “Look East” policy was all the rage. Of course we must look East, but we must look West too, and I don’t mean at the western hemisphere but closer to home, at the Gulf. In keeping with our desire to strengthen our relations with the countries of the Gulf we are putting in place a structure of multifaceted cooperation covering all sectors. It is a matter of satisfaction that our efforts are being matched with enthusiasm by the countries of the Gulf. During my short tenure I have interacted with several members of the leadership of the Gulf countries and our own Diaspora. These interactions enhance my confidence that we will realize the potential of our relationship.

3. The Gulf region has historical, political, economic, strategic and cultural significance for India and offers tremendous potential for cooperation in areas such as trade, investment, energy and manpower. Our engagement with the Gulf countries predates our and their emergence as modern nation states; our forefathers have been dealing with each other much before our countries even had Foreign Ministries! So what we are doing these days is carrying this timeless relationship forward. The Gulf region is part of our extended neighbourhood, it is home to 4.5 million Indians and is the source of some $22 billion in remittances and 70% of our energy imports. No wonder it is an area of special focus for India’s foreign policy.

4. It is not at all surprising to see that the Gulf region has emerged as a major trading partner for India with annual two-way trade nearing US$ 100 billion. But our engagement needs to go beyond trade pure and simple. Our attempt is to create institutional linkages in the areas of investment, energy cooperation, and security cooperation. We are also seeking bilateral arrangements to look after the welfare of the large Indian community and those working in the Gulf. We are striving to enhance cultural, scientific and educational contacts and bridge the information gap through the projection of India in the Gulf and vice-versa. We wish to multiply such arrangements and projects. Negotiations to conclude a Free Trade Agreement (FTA) with the GCC are already under way and there is a strong desire on both sides to conclude this and make it an "FTA++" by including both services and investment in its ambit.

5. Nearly 75% of our crude oil requirement is met from this region. In 2008-09 India has imported more than 92 million metric tonnes of crude from the Gulf against our total requirement of about 128 million metric tonnes. As the Gulf region provides India with an overwhelming share of our oil and gas requirements, the region by implication plays a crucial role in our energy security and fuels the Indian growth story. In India we are very conscious of this critical relationship and we are investing more energy in strengthening our energy diplomacy. India has successfully bid for oil blocks in Yemen, Qatar and Oman. Efforts are ongoing to setup joint ventures in downstream petrochemicals, fertilizer and energy intensive industries in the Gulf countries and with the participation of the Gulf countries in India as well. The OMIFCO fertilizer plant in Oman and the Essar steel plant in Qatar are good examples. We are working to replicate OMIFCO models or its variants with some other countries.

6. India itself has invested its capital and labour in the Gulf and is sharing its considerable strengths in IT, education, health and other sectors with it. India welcomes Gulf countries' participation and investment in our vigorous growth process. New avenues for enhancing such cooperation are being explored through the exchange of visits of high-level investment and business delegations and the holding of seminars and business summits. Foreign Office consultations and Joint Commission Meetings are being regularly held with all the countries of the region to identify areas of cooperation and put in place institutional arrangements to promote it, such as Agreements on the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement (BIPPA). These arrangements create greater confidence for investment promotion and today Indian investment in the Gulf perhaps exceeds Gulf investment in India! To give an example, Indian investment in Saudi Arabia alone is of the order of US$ 2 billion. However, when I saw the figures for investment from the Gulf in India up to October 2009, I saw a figure of about US$1.59 billion, representing only 1.58% of the total FDI in India. This is contrary to expectations as one would imagine greater investments might come to India from the resource-rich Gulf region, particularly at a time when rewards elsewhere in the world are not very great. However, I am happy to note we are working on changing this scenario. Recently in November 2009 India and Qatar have signed an investment agreement to the tune of USD 5 Billion and we are working on developing more such understandings.

7. As I have mentioned, the Gulf countries collectively host the largest expatriate Indian community in the world, exceeding 4.5 million. Given the large Indian population in the region, a number of issues come up in our relations with these countries, which relate to our people-to-people contacts. We don't treat these as routine consular matters. Active steps are being taken in cooperation with the countries of the region to promote the welfare of the Indian community, especially expatriate workers. MOIA has been proactive in concluding MOUs with most Gulf countries and today we have MOUs with all the countries in the Gulf except with Saudi Arabia. These and similar arrangements will enable us to jointly deal with issues relating to the welfare of the expatriate Indian communities in the region. Both the Ministry of External Affairs and MOIA are working closely and will work together for the benefit and welfare of our diaspora abroad.

8. It is a matter of considerable satisfaction that over the last few years there has been significantly enhanced high level contacts and other exchanges between India and the Gulf. Our relations are getting revitalized with the realization on both sides that the need of the hour in the rapidly globalizing world of today is to leverage each other's strengths in order to maximize the shared benefits for our economies and our peoples. On our side our Honourable PM's visit in 2008 to Qatar and Oman and that of our Honourable Vice-President to Kuwait in 2009 further underscored the strength of our relationship with this vital region. Ministerial level visits have maintained the momentum, and it is no accident that my own first visit abroad as Minister was to the Gulf.

9. The first-ever GCC-India Industrial Conference that was held in Mumbai in February 2004 with the participation of Ministers from all the six GCC countries was another important milestone. We have maintained and developed this forum and the fourth GCC-India Industrial Conference is scheduled to be held in Jeddah soon in 2010.

10. From the strategic point of view, India and the GCC share a need for continued political stability and security in the region. Our common political and security concerns of should translate into compatible efforts for peace, security and stability in the region. Emerging threat perceptions in today’s world create fresh challenges and opportunities for enhancing GCC-India cooperation. This could involve joint efforts to meet emerging domestic and regional challenges, foremost among them being the common threat of terrorism. In this framework, the India-GCC Political Dialogue being held on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly constitutes a clear political commitment by the two sides to engage pro-actively with each other, on a regular basis, through an institutional mechanism, to exchange views and address issues of mutual concern. (In September 2009 we have held the 5th such dialogue.) In addition to policy-makers and practitioners, I also value exchanges amongst scholars and academics studying our two regions, and was pleased to welcome an impressive group from the Gulf Research Centre last week for a stimulating discussion. There is a great deal here that we can build upon.

11. I have spoken for longer than I intended to and would like to leave time for further discussion. Let me just underline that precisely because there are no major problems between us, we are anxious that the relationship should not slip into complacency. India will not take the Gulf countries for granted. We have very consciously built up a framework for cooperation, which is constantly deepening and widening. While the pace of growth could indeed be faster, nevertheless a critical mass is being created that will take us into a qualitatively upgraded relationship. I am sure that the elements and the initiatives I have described would not only enlarge the scope of our relationship but also provide more diverse and durable opportunities for our diaspora in the Gulf.

Thank You and Jai Hind!
I am glad to be here this evening in the midst of a wide cross section of ‘Global Indians’ from across the world. Let me begin by wishing all of you a very happy New Year and congratulating all those who have been conferred the Pravasi Bharatiya Samman Awards.

Every year we celebrate the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas on 9th January to commemorate the return of Mahatma Gandhi to India on this day in the year 1915. That a large number of delegates from over 50 countries are attending the Pravasi Bharatiya Divas is an encouraging sign. Each of you by the dint of hard work and determination overcame many a difficulty in far away lands, to carve out a niche for yourself in your chosen fields. We are proud of your achievements.

The story of overseas Indians across the world is best captured in the words of Vishwamitra Ganga Aashutosh, the renowned poet from Mauritius:-

"No gold did they find,
Underneath any stone
They touched and turned,
Yet, every stone they touched,
Into solid gold they turned."

I am confident that with your calibre, creativity and enterprise you will continue to contribute to the advancement of human civilization, particularly as your roots lie in this, one of the most ancient civilizations of the world, in which acquisition of knowledge and universal welfare have been laudable objectives.

As we turn the corner of the first decade of the 21st Century, it is in fact, becoming more and more evident that we live in an increasingly interconnected world. Such a world requires that each one of you must play the responsible role of a global citizen. Moreover, it is now clear that we are living in a knowledge based society in which knowledge is the resource and knowledge workers the dominant work force. One of the driving forces of change has been the globalization process - the movement of people, business, industry and skills in the global market place. This process itself has been made possible by the spectacular advances in information, communication and technology. What then are the challenges to human progress in the 21st Century, which has all these characteristics?

In this century, human society faces the daunting yet inspiring task of forging "sustainability," in all its activities, so that while meeting current human needs, the requirements of future generations are also safeguarded. Poverty, hunger and disease still exist in significant parts of the world. Global trends of increased threats from terrorism, economic disparities and environmental degradation are among issues of growing concern. How do we work to promote development that is just, humane and inclusive? How can the vast reservoirs of knowledge be utilized to improve human conditions?

Overseas Indians estimated at over 25 million and spread across the world, have come to be recognized as the 'Knowledge Diaspora'. The knowledge, expertise, skills and resources of this vast and diverse Indian community can be an important input in India's march to becoming a developed country.

In the social infrastructure sector as also physical infrastructure development, India is looking at investment increasingly in the public-private partnership model. Our infrastructure financing needs are estimated to be over US Dollars 500 billion in the next five years. We are focusing on improving the quality and quantity of education at all levels of the education pyramid. The expenditure on healthcare infrastructure in the country is projected to grow at 5.8 per cent annually. This presents an unprecedented opportunity, including for our overseas community to participate and benefit in India's unfolding growth story.

The Indian growth story is an absorbing, exciting and a continuing one. We are a big and a growing market. We have a strong capital market regulator and a strong Central Bank. Our banks and financial institutions are based on 'best practices' in fiduciary responsibility and are well-regulated. All this enabled us to cope with one of the worst economic downturns in recent history, better than many other countries and it has also meant a quicker recovery. India posted a growth of 6.7 percent in 2008-09 and we will achieve over 7 percent this year. In the post-crisis world, India is increasingly perceived as one of the principal engines of growth, a safe destination for investment and an emerging educational and technological hub.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

There is immense capacity that you have both in talent and in financial terms, that can be invested in India. We hope to see your greater participation in the coming years in the development of India. Of course, India's remittances from overseas Indians, estimated at over US Dollars 50 billion last year, were the highest in the world. What is less known, though, is the fact that nearly forty percent of these remittances - about US Dollars 20 billion annually - come from overseas Indian workers in the Gulf consisting of temporary contractual skilled and semi-skilled workers. They often face harsh living and working conditions and are separated from their families for long periods of time. I take this opportunity to salute Indian workers in the Gulf.

I would also like to congratulate Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs, Shri Vayalar Ravi and his Ministry, for taking welfare measures for Indians living abroad. The Indian Community Welfare Funds established in 18 countries will provide timely succour to overseas Indians in distress. The bilateral Social Security Agreements as well as the Labour Welfare and Protection Agreements that have been concluded will be useful in getting the cooperation of the host governments on issues impacting the Indian community. Similarly, the Government is strongly taking up concerns about the protection and security of Indians, particularly students, with Governments of countries in which they live.

Since the last Pravasi Bharatiya Divas, the most significant development in India was the general elections. With an over 700 million electorate, this exercise in democracy is unmatched in its scale. The verdict of the people reinforced to the world, the idea of India - of a nation that upholds democratic values and seeks to build an inclusive and progressive society. In this paradigm, we have made considerable efforts to reach out to overseas Indians. This is a time to forge strong partnerships. I have no doubt that together we can walk the path of progress and make India a strong nation.

I wish you success in your endeavours.

Thank you,
Pravasi Bharatiya Divas-2010 concluded here today with the resolve to develop strong bond between Indian community abroad and their motherland by better understanding the needs of the community and providing them all possible opportunities.

Expressing satisfaction over the two day's deliberations, Shri Vayalar Ravi said that the Eighth Pravasi Bharatiya Divas marks a watershed, in the relationship, between India and its Diaspora. For the first time, we sought to define an 'inclusive agenda' to enhance reciprocal engagement between India and its overseas community. He said that the theme, this year has gone beyond the narrow confines, of asking what the overseas Indians can do for India to include and what India can do for overseas Indians. The focus of this PBD has been on developing innovative avenues by which overseas Indians can benefit from the myriad opportunities that India offers, the Minister observed.

Highlighting the significance of some of the issues raised during the PBD-2010, the Minister said that several potential modes for engaging the Diaspora - the proposal for issue of 'India Infrastructure Bonds', collaborating in Skill Development and building Business to Business Partnerships have been discussed. Shri Ravi said that this year's PBD also signals, a paradigm shift, in the level, the range and the pace, of our mutual engagement. It is our conviction, that we must now expand our engagement and reach out to the vast majority, of the average middle class overseas Indians. We must also make our mutual engagement strategic over the medium to long term.

Shri Vayalar Ravi said that there is a need to redefine the role, relations and partnerships of NRIs with the country in view of the fact that over the next decade India will be well on its way to join the ranks of developed countries and become an important player in global development. There is also a need to give deep thought to the role of youth, especially the role of scientists, technologists and academics of Indian origin to address global issues like climate change. He stressed that it is time that ‘gender’ is acknowledged as an important dimension of the diaspora. They should be provided the opportunities to discover India - it’s glorious past, exciting present and promising future.

Reiterating government's commitment to forge strong bond with Indian community abroad, Shri Ravi said 'in particular, we wish to reach out to the younger generation of the overseas community - the children and grand children of overseas Indians who were born and raised abroad - and help them discover their roots'.

He said that the government is enthused by the response and the large number of delegates from across the world and assured all possible steps to implement the decisions taken and address the concerns raised during the meet.

On the conclusion of the meet, fourteen eminent overseas Indians from different walks of life were awarded the Pravasi Bharatiya Samman - 2010 by the President of India, Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil. The Awards are conferred on a Non-Resident Indian or an organization/institution, who have made significant contribution towards better understanding abroad of India and support to India's causes and concerns in a tangible way.

The Awardees are, Mr. Mohinder Singh Bhullar from Brunei, Darussalam;
Mr. Yanktesh Permal Reddy from Fiji; Mr. Ryuko Hira from Japan; (Mrs)
Dr. Ruby Umesh Pawankar from Japan; Mr. Suresh Kumar Virmani from

160. Excerpts relevant to treatment of Indians in Australia from the Interview of Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao under the programme 'Devil's Advocate' at the CNN-IBN TV with Karan Thapar.

New Delhi, January 17, 2010.

Interviewer: Foreign Secretary, let us start this part with the increasing spate of attacks on Indians in Australia. Are you satisfied with the response of the Australian Government?

Foreign Secretary: We have been in close touch with the Australian Government since these attacks began. And unfortunately there has been a spate of these attacks, violence directed against innocent and hapless, young Indians who have been the target of such violence. But the Australian Government has been sensitised to our concerns and we have impressed upon them that they need to do more to address the cause of this violence and to bring the perpetrators to book because you need to restore the climate of confidence and security among Indians living in Australia.

Interviewer: So, when you say you have impressed upon them the need to do more, that clearly suggests that they were not doing enough.

Foreign Secretary: I would say that the Australian Government has engaged with us closely in the wake of the attacks and there has been a continuing dialogue and communication. As you know, we have a good relationship with Australia. From the Australian side it is often defined as excellent, and we have shared that assessment. But we must not let these events cast a shadow on the relationship.

Interviewer: Let me quote to you the Indian Minister for Overseas Affairs Vayalar Ravi speaking on the 9th of this month. He says, "Why can't they arrest them and put them behind bars and prosecute them? It is very unfortunate that things are not moving as they promised. It is very disturbing for all of us in the Government". Clearly, Mr. Ravi feels that the Australians are not doing enough.

Foreign Secretary: I think there is legitimate concern and the Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs has expressed that legitimate sense of concern that we feel.

Interviewer: The MEA shares that concern?

Foreign Secretary: Obviously we share the concern in regard to a situation where our citizens are being attacked.

Interviewer: The Indian press are particularly concerned that the Australian Government is reluctant to accept that racism could be a substantive motive or cause behind these attacks. What is your assessment? What is the Government’s view? Is racism a factor?

Foreign Secretary: Let us look at the situation. You have had one community targeted. You have had persons belonging to one community targeted. And these attacks have kept occurring. There has been a certain pattern of these attacks. What the Australians tell us is that you could attribute this to urban violence, opportunistic violence, but that racism could also be an element in this. So, let us see. The investigations are going on. But we are concerned that it is just this one community that has been targeted.

Interviewer: Twice or thrice you have said that there is just one community that has been targeted and the attacks keep happening. Yet, your Ministry has advised the Indian press to exercise restraint. Do you believe that their coverage has been exaggerated or unbalanced?

Foreign Secretary: Let me say that the media feels the pulse of the people definitely and the people of India are concerned about the attacks that have happened in Australia. Having said that, I would also like to add that you have to place every reaction you make in the larger context. And there is a very large number of Indians who live in Australia, who have made Australia their home over the decades. And you must ensure that while you must report without fear or favour, your responses, your assessments have to be calibrated and measured to the extent possible.

Interviewer: In other words, the press should keep things in context.

Foreign Secretary: In context, yes.

Interviewer: Foreign Secretary, a pleasure talking to you.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you so much.

161. Speech by External Affairs Minister at the Reception hosed by the High Commissioner TCA Raghavan for the Indian Community in Singapore.

Singapore, March 26, 2010.

Members of Singapore-Indian Community

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be here today with you all. I bring you greetings and good wishes from the people and the Government of India. Every overseas Indian is a representative of India. As an overseas community you have made a distinctive contribution by virtue of your dedication, hard work and success. Your achievements and attainments reflect positively on India and you both brand a new India as also add cement to the India-Singapore bilateral relationship. What is most gratifying is that your diversity reflects the full range of our pluralistic society.

2. My visit to Singapore concludes shortly hereafter. During my stay here I have had occasion to meet with a number of Singapore’s leaders and exchange views with them on our bilateral relations as also on the regional and international situation. As you are aware we have exemplary and excellent bilateral relations with Singapore. Consultations between us are frequent and Senior Minister Goh Chok Tong was in Delhi only last week as was Minister Mentor Lee Kuan Yew in December.

3. Our bilateral relations are civilizational but also modern and contemporary covering areas such as investment, trade, financial services, etc. at the leadership level we have a consensus that the potential to develop our relations to even greater heights is immense in all fields of bilateral relations.

4. India is fortunate to have in Singapore a representative and gifted cross section of its own society. You are our true brand ambassadors in whatever field you are in. By contributing to Singapore's own economy and society you make at the same time a distinctive contribution to India's own evolution as a major economy. More than ever before we are poised for a growth spurt which over the next decade and a half will qualitatively transform our economy and society.

5. The fiscal year 2009-10 was a challenging year for the Indian economy. The significant deceleration in the second half of 2008-09 on account of global financial crisis and economic recession brought the real GDP growth down to 6.7 per cent, from an average of over 9 per cent in the preceding three years. It was also a year of reckoning for the policymakers, who had taken a calculated risk in providing substantial fiscal expansion to counter the negative fallout of the global slowdown. A delayed and severely subnormal monsoon added to the overall uncertainty. Yet, over the span of the year, the economy posted a remarkable recovery, not only in terms of overall growth figures, with the advance estimates placing the likely growth for 2009-10 at 7.2 per cent, but, more importantly, in terms of certain fundamentals, which justify optimism for the Indian economy in the medium to long term.

6. It is a matter of equal gratification for me to see the cultural and scholarly effervescence which is characteristic of the Indian community in Singapore. There is scarcely a field left untouched by your endeavours and truly your efforts add richness and depth to our cultural and literary heritage. I am sure that just as your contribution to Singapore, as it established itself as a financial and trading hub, was immense, so will it be in the case of Singapore's establishment as a cultural and educational centre.

7. I am also glad to find that social exchanges and tourism traffic between India and Singapore are growing steadily. I believe that visa on arrival scheme for Singapore nationals coming to India for tourism will prove popular. I believe that air connectivity between different cities in India and Singapore has expanded dramatically. These are all signs of so much more proximity between the two countries. I hope, indeed I expect, that your connectivity and contacts with India will grow and flower and thereby your contribution to both countries and to the further expansion of bilateral relations between them will continue as it has so far.

164. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs on the successful conclusion of Pravasi Bharatiya Divas in Durban, South Africa.

New Delhi, October 7, 2010.

The Pravasi Bhartiya Divas (PBD) Africa was held from 1-2 October, 2010 at the International Convention Centre (ICC), Durban, South Africa. The event was inaugurated on 1st October, 2010 by the Minister for Overseas Indian Affairs Shri Vayalar Ravi. The President of South Africa Mr. Jacob Zuma graced the closing session on 2nd October 2010. The theme of the Conference was on 'India-Africa: Building Bridges.'

This was the 4th regional PBD Convention organized by Government of India outside India. The first such event was held on 24th September, 2007 in New York, the second on 10-11 October, 2008 in Singapore and the third on 19 September, 2009 at The Hague. PBD Africa marked the 150th anniversary of the arrivals of Indians in South Africa and coincided with the birth anniversary of Mahatma Gandhi.

The PBD Conventions are organized by the Government of India to engage with the overseas Indian community across the globe to build bridges with them and their host countries. The Convention in Durban focused on the Indian diaspora in the Africa and especially focused on South Africa which has a population of over 1.2 million of Indian origin.

The two-day Convention was attended by more than 400 delegates from the Africa. It was co-hosted by the Government of the Province of KwaZulu-Natal.

The Convention opened on 1st October, 2010 with a formal inauguration and dinner hosted by Shri Vayalar Ravi. The inaugural dinner was attended by Ms. Lulama Xingwana, Arts and Culture Minister of South Africa, Dr. Z.L. Mkhize, Premier of the Province of KwaZulu-Natal, Members of the National Assembly of South Africa, Members of Parliament of KwaZulu-Natal, Mayors and several other dignitaries.

Two Pre-Conference events were held on October 1st: A Business Roundtable and an Academic Seminar on Diaspora.
The Business Roundtable on 'Opportunity Africa' at ICC Durban was attended by over 100 prominent business leaders and professionals from India and Africa. The possibility of enhancing economic and trade relations between India and Africa and particularly South Africa were discussed in the meeting focusing on four crucial sectors: IT, skill enhancement and education; pharmaceuticals; mining and minerals and infrastructure. The recommendations of the Business Roundtable were placed at the business plenary session on 2nd October.

The Seminar 'Diaspora: Heritage in the context of Globalization' was held at Durban University of Technology. Prominent academics from India and Africa participated in the event. The recommendations of the seminar were placed before the plenary session on Diaspora on October 2nd.

On 2nd October, 5 plenary sessions were held on 'The relevance of Mahatma Gandhi in the 20th century', 'Business: Opportunity Africa', 'Youth and Gender: the Knowledge Economy and Social Development', 'Diaspora: Heritage in the Context of Globalization' and a Valedictory session.

The first session on the 'Relevance of Mahatma Gandhi in the 21st century' was addressed by Shri Vayalar Ravi, Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs, Ms. Ela Gandhi, Justice Moosa Ebrahim, ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Zimbabwe and Mr. Ahmed Kathrada, legendary freedom fighter and anti-apartheid activist of South Africa. All speakers highlighted the relevance of Mahatma Gandhi in the context of his principles of non-violence, non-cooperation and truth-based resistance for addressing challenges around the world. Shri Vayalar Ravi, exhorted the Indian diaspora in Africa to be a cultural bridge that continued to interpret and convey Mahatma Gandhi's message to their home countries in Africa.

The second session on 'Business: Opportunity Africa' was addressed by Mr. Pravin Jamnadas Gordhan, Minister of Finance of South Africa. He recognized the increasingly important role of Africa and India in the emerging world economic order. The panelists discussed the vast opportunities for business, especially for small and medium enterprises, between India and Africa.

The third session on 'Youth and Gender' focused on the Knowledge Economy and Social Development. Ms. D. Purandeshwari, Minister of State for Human Resource Development, Government of India, in her keynote address highlighted India's success as a multi-ethnic, multi-linguistic democracy, and its great strides in education, skill development and emancipation of women. She exhorted young Indians overseas to participate in the growth of India and of Africa, to build a better future.

The fourth session on 'Diaspora' focused on 'Heritage in the context of globalization', and recommended greater cooperation in research and studies of the diaspora of both India and Africa across the world. This will emerge as a new area of cooperation in the already extensive India-Africa relationship.

Shri Vayalar Ravi, urged the participants to attend the 9th PBD Convention being held in India on 7-9 January, 2011 in New Delhi. This event will be inaugurated by the Prime Minister of India on 8th January, 2010. The President of India will give the Pravasi Bhartiya Samman Awards to selected overseas Indians on 9th January, 2010.

165. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs on the signing of Social Security Agreement with the Republic of Korea.

New Delhi, October 19, 2010.

India and Republic of Korea signed Social Security Agreement (SSA) in Seoul today. The Agreement was signed by Shri Vayalar Ravi, Minister for Overseas Indian Affairs and Mr. Kim Jong-hoon, Minister for Trade of the Republic of Korea. The SSA would enhance movement of professionals between the two countries and strengthen the trade and investment. The Agreement provides, on a reciprocal basis, for the following benefits to Indian nationals working in the Republic of Korea:

a) For short term contract up to five years no social security contribution would need to be paid under the Korean law by the detached workers provided they continue to make social security payment in India.
b) The above benefits shall be available even when the Indian company sends its employees to the Republic of Korea from a third country.

c) Indian workers shall be entitled to the export of the social security benefit if they relocate to India or a third country after the completion of their service in the Republic of Korea.

d) The self-employed Indians in the Republic of Korea would also be entitled to export of social security benefit on their relocation to India, or a third country.

e) In case of Independent Professionals, provisions of paragraph 3 of Article 8.3 of the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) signed between India and Republic of Korea shall apply and in case of any other category of workers, the SSA shall apply.

f) The scope of bilateral cooperation in social security under SSA and under paragraph 3 of Article 8.3 of CEPA covers only the old age, survivors and disability pension under the legislations and regulations of both countries.

g) The period of contribution in one contracting state will be added to the period of contribution in the second contracting state for determining the eligibility for social security benefits in order to avoid loss of contributions.

A number of professionals and self-employed Indians are working in the Republic of Korea. There is a huge potential for employment of Indian professionals and workers. India is likely to become a major source of migrant professionals due to its vast reservoir of technically qualified manpower in sectors like Information Technology, Engineering, Health, Finance and Management.

167. Briefing by Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy and Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs Dr. A. Didar Singh on the Indian Workers Resource Centre.

Consul General of India, Dubai (Shri Sanjay Verma): Welcome to the media traveling with the Hon. President, the Indian media based in Dubai, Abu Dhabi and the other Northern Emirates. The briefing today will be by Secretary (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy; Dr. Didar Singh, Ambassador Lokesh, and Dr. Ellangovan.

The focus, if I may emphasise, of this briefing is the Indian Workers Resource Centre which was launched this evening by the Hon. President. Questions about the other elements of the visit will be taken up tomorrow by Secretary (East) in a separate briefing. We will take advantage of the presence of Dr. Didar Singh who has come in especially for the launch of the Workers Resource Centre. I begin by inviting Ambassador to say a few words and then Secretary (East).

Indian Ambassador to UAE (Mr. M.K. Lokesh): Dear friends, I have already spoken but I just want to tell you that this is a very important initiative given the fact that the Indian community is the largest expatriate community in UAE and a significant number of them belong to the workers category. Many of them have many problems. Redressal of these problems has been one of our major concerns especially in the light of the recent economic downturn with the incidence of workers being exploited, workers being distressed, radically increased. Therefore, it was felt that it is not possible for the Embassy or the Consulate to tackle these problems alone. We already have some initiatives like Indian Medical Welfare Centre. All of them virtually are NGOs. They are doing good work. But we needed to do this job in a professional manner. And this is one of the initiatives taken by the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs which the Embassy is implementing.

I think already you have seen the film which told you about the outline of the Centre, what it will do and how it will function. It has already started functioning. Of course, a Centre of this nature will have some teething problems but we will address them as and when they arise.

I thank you very much for coming here in good numbers and for giving your support. But without speaking any more, I will pass this mic on to Latha Reddy, Secretary (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs in charge of this area. She will tell you more about this.

Secretary (East) (Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy): Dear friends, thank you for turning up in such large numbers to attend this press briefing. I would just like to begin by putting into context the whole question of interaction of the leaders of our country with the Indian community when they travel overseas. A visit of our leaders from India to any country would not be complete without the very important element of interaction with our Indian community in those countries.

During this visit, our Hon. President has in fact already undertaken several activities for interacting with the Indian community in the United Arab Emirates. On the 22nd she visited the Indian Social Centre in Abu Dhabi and met with the Indian community leaders there. Earlier today on the 23rd she has visited the Abu Dhabi Indian School and addressed a very large gathering. She also had a more informal interaction with some of the students in the school there who were in a position to ask a question and to hear her reply.

There was also the function to inaugurate the new building of the Indian Islamic Centre in Abu Dhabi. Of course, the grand finale has been today's function at the India Club of Dubai which all of you have attended.
Of course with a population of 1.5 million, which is the estimated figure of Indians in the United Arab Emirates, this remains a very important element of our bilateral relationship. We have a number of success stories which we are all familiar with.

But in our happiness over those success stories we must not forget those who are less fortunate. A large proportion of the Indian community who work in this country fall into the semiskilled and skilled category of workers and face some rather distressing problems. We are indeed grateful to the authorities of the UAE, particularly the Ministry of Labour and the political leaders who have reached out positively to try to resolve many of these issues in cooperation with our Government. But it was felt that we needed to do something more.

This is where the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs - and we are privileged to have with us Dr. Didar Singh, Secretary from the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs - decided to take the initiative under the leadership of the Hon. Shri Vayalar Ravi our Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs, and to take this unique initiative to set up an Indian Workers Resource Centre which we have just inaugurated at the hands of our Hon. President here in Dubai today.

As this is an initiative of the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs, I think no one could be better suited to tell us some details about this which would in any case also be distributed to you. But I would like to request my colleague and friend Dr. Didar Singh to please give us some highlights of this programme and perhaps some background as to how this was set up.

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs (Dr. A. Didar Singh):

As my colleague Madam Reddy has just said, it is very good to see this kind of interaction and this kind of interest from your side which emphasizes for us all over again that Dubai, UAE, the Gulf are very special places for us where interaction is so important and the interest is so high both at the local level and in India.

As some of you are aware, the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs is a special initiative of the Government of India. We are only the tenth such country in the world which actually has a diaspora Ministry. This is being done because we all know we count over 25 million overseas Indians across the world in something like a 190 countries. Of these overseas Indians, as you know, we say about 15 million are Persons of Indian Origin. That means non-Indian Passport holders, persons who went through various waves of economic migration. And we count about 10 million as the Non Resident Indians (NRIs) that is Indian Passport holders in different parts of the world.

We are very proud that of those the majority is in the Gulf. 5.5 million is what is estimated to be in the Gulf itself. That is a very large figure. UAE itself, as you have just heard, has 1.7 million. It is a very large figure. Of that large figure, 65 per cent to 70 per cent is actually workers. So, they are by far the single most important component of the NRIs outside India in this region. It is the mandate of our Ministry and the responsibility of the Government of India to ensure that the workers are looked after in every manner.

We have from the Ministry established labour relations in the context of Memorandums of Understanding (MoUs) with seven countries now through which we have bilateral interaction with the Governments to ensure the welfare of our workers here. We started another very major initiative four years ago in India called the Overseas Workers Resource Centre (OWRC) which is in fact the parent of what you have seen inaugurated today.

The OWRC is a Government of India helpline and a resource centre based out of Delhi available for the whole country. It also has walk-in centres in Kerala, Andhra Pradesh, Haryana and Punjab. We have extended that context of interaction and assisting the Indian workers. We have extended it now by this first establishment of the Indian Workers Resource Centre in Dubai.

The idea is that we provide a seamless service to the Indian worker starting from when he first thinks about going outside for economic migration back home in India, to when he comes here, and the issues that come up here, and then also whenever he goes back to India and has issues that need to be addressed there. This is the seamless interaction that we try to do to ensure that welfare of workers is the top of the priorities.
We have of course chosen Dubai to be the first place to launch it because we believe the demand here is the highest. This is something which I must compliment the Consul General, the Ambassador, our Missions here, who have worked at this. We have our Counsellor who is specially posted for Community Affairs in Abu Dhabi, Dr. Ellangovan, here. We have worked to start this year with the objective, but we will now extend it to other countries where the majority of NRIs are actually workers. This experiment for us is just a beginning. It is a beginning through which we will be able to extend these services to other places also.

Details of this Centre are available to you in this Press Release which has been given out. It has been established in one of the most prominent parts of Dubai. We have outsourced this to a private company that has a lot of experience in dealing with counselor type of issues, visas, passports, and now Workers Resource Centre. We will be seamlessly offering services in terms of addressing grievances, addressing problems, addressing issues that need to be taken up whether back home in India or with the Government here, or with individual employers through which these issues may arise.

Let me only finish by saying that this is not something new. Our Embassies are already doing this. Our Missions all over the Gulf are already interacting with the Indian community and particularly with the Indian workers. They have been doing it over the years. We are just trying to consolidate this very same initiative to make it more professional and to make it better to work in a manner which people can know about. And for that, your role is very important because this message has to go out. We can have all these nice meetings and meet all the prominent people of the Gulf in these kinds of occasions. But, as my colleague was just mentioning, the unsung heroes are those who are working in the labour camps. They need to get the message and that can only come through you.

We hope, therefore, that you will carry the news of this initiative now and in the future also to assist us in carrying this message so that people know they can come to this Centre, that there is a 24x7 helpline available to them which is manned by people who speak in seven different languages, so that any issue that comes up can be addressed right there.

Thank you very much.
Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs: It is written here in your note also. Once a week it is already there. We already have at the Indian Mission, with the Ambassador, we have Dr. Ellangovan who is Counsellor (Community Affairs) who is already addressing these issues. This initiative of the Workers Centre here incidentally is for the entire UAE. It is not just for Dubai, it is for the whole of UAE. It is a free helpline available that can be rung up from any part of UAE.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs: All recruiting agents are established in India through the Emigration Act which is an Act of Parliament and through which agents register in India. We have about 1400 agents who are registered in India. Of that, operational are about 600. It is not only through the Workers Resource Centre that the complaints come. Complaints come to us through the Indian Missions and directly also to us on an ongoing basis. We enquire into every single complaint. For your information, over a hundred agents have been put under suspension and in some cases removed. This is an ongoing activity. Whenever we get information that there is so-called unscrupulous agents operating, action is taken but as per law.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary, Overseas Indian Affairs: Every Indian is free to travel anywhere and is also free to travel back to his country. We do not stop anybody from either going or coming back. There are arrangements available in Indian Missions all over the world, not just in the Gulf. Whenever somebody does not have the facility to pay for his own travel, there are facilities available through the Counsellor Services to make this available in an emergency situation. Same situation will apply here also.

Question: Sir, I am a journalist. I know so many cases ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs: Just for your information, in the last year itself about 800 such workers have been sent back, paid for through the Indian Community Welfare Fund which has been set up. You also know that this Ministry with the Ministry of External Affairs set up something called the Indian Community Welfare Fund. This is also available and it is now available in 42 countries around the world including in the Gulf. People can use this facility when they have an emergency issue that needs to be addressed.

Question: Sir, eight hundred workers from UAE or around the world?

Secretary, Overseas Indian Affairs: UAE.

Question: Mr. Didar Singh, a large number of Indian workers may complain here against their employers, and if not settlement is arrived at, (some portion of the question was inaudible) what else can you do in such cases?

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs: Every worker comes here under a contract; we have something called model contract. Those who come on contract under the Emigration Act, they are already aware what is to be given them and what is not to be given; if he does not get according to the agreed contract, first thing is to proceed against the agent in India; as far as the overseas employer is concerned, there is a referral list, it is a black type situation, we check that list to find out what can he be done, and our missions talk to the employer and if he is ready to sort out, then it get sorted out. If he is not ready to settle, he is put in the negative list.

Question: A mere reply is not enough; how to remove his problem is the real issue.

Question: On the paper he comes on 1000 Dharam, but here he get 600 rupees, what is done in such cases?

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs: When e get that complaint directly, and a lot of them come, and used to come earlier also.

Question: You showed that in the film..

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs: In the film, we showed one example, We showed in the film that such problems arise, and we look into them, talk to them, and try to settle them.
Question: ...(Inaudible)... website, all these complaints received should be updated. Will it be updated?

Secretary, Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs: Yes, that is the idea.

Secretary (East): I would like to answer that question. I think firstly Governments are not in the business of forcing other Governments. We talk to each other. We can negotiate solutions. We talk about setting up agreements or arrangements. Our Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs has talks with the Ministry of Labour of those countries. The Memorandum of Understanding is there. We set up mechanisms to address certain problems. There are Joint Working Groups who would get together. Secondly, when it comes to legal cases there is a legal system that applies in each country and I think we as foreign guests in that country have to respect the legal system of each country. However, we do provide whatever assistance we can under our Consular laws. We provide legal assistance where required. We try to facilitate visits by the family. Where all legal resources have been exhausted, we then can also consider requesting for a special clemency on compassionate grounds in certain specific cases. There are different methods that can be followed. In the particular case you have mentioned in Sharjah, the legal process is still continuing. The legal resources have not been exhausted. That is the point.

Question: I have a question. The maximum number of people who come to work here are a the labour class; not much educated, how to make him aware, he can neither go to the (inter) net, nor can wait too long, he only works through the media (part of the question was inaudible) ...............will you try that they get all the information .inaudible...............

Secretary, Overseas Indian Affairs: An Overseas Workers Resource Centre is already functioning in India for the last four years. They get all this information before hand, where they can go, what you can talk, this system is not only operational through web site, all worker have telephones, and they can acces us through the toll-free help line. The free call cnetre will function here also twenty-four hours. Any one can talks on this line twenty four hours in any language, whether he want to talk in Hindi, or in Malayalam, or in Kanada, or in English, there will be some one to talk to him on this line. The complaints can be sent to India also, and we get them, please do not think, that we do not get these complaints, we do get these complaints and we take action on them, every case is processed.

Question: What is the strength of staff?

Secretary, Overseas Indian Affairs: It is not a question of strength of the staff but the question is of the services being offered. The services are 24x7, and the services range from the Call In Centre which is a call centre like a BPO centre, there is counseling facilities where there are already all the workers who come here, come under compulsory contract, he has to take compulsory insurance at the beginning itself. That insurance already provides for emergency health care and if he is faced with any life-threatening situation, it is also covered in the insurance, health insurance is also available through the employers, over and above that he can have any other insurance too. This facility is provided in India itself, which is called PVSY, he starts with that from India. We, as I mentioned to you, plan to extend this to all countries where majority of workers go. At the moment we refer to them in India as Emigration Clearance Required. As per the Emigration Act, we have seventeen countries which are designated as Emigration Clearance Required and this is essentially required for those workers who are of educational qualification less than class 10. So, basically it is taking care of only the semiskilled and low-skilled category of workers of whom …

SECTION - VI

ASIA
(i) SOUTH ASIA-COUNTRIES OF THE SAARC
(ii) SOUTH EAST- EAST ASIA AND PACIFIC
(iii) WEST AND CENTRAL ASIA
(i) SOUTH ASIA—COUNTRIES OF THE SAARC
I am deeply honoured today to deliver the 17th Lal Bahadur Shastri Memorial Lecture. We recall with sadness this day 44 years earlier when Shastri left us in faraway Tashkent. I was not quite ten years old then, but I still remember the day when I heard the news. It was heart-rending to learn that our doughty Prime Minister, the man who had earned the respect and love of the nation just a few months earlier as he led our nation to triumph in a war we did not seek, had given up his own life in the cause of peace.

2. It seems all the more appropriate, therefore, that our theme today should focus on peace in our subcontinent, the cause for which Lal Bahadur Shastri made his last journey. But before I embark on my own views on the subject, let me recall Shastriji’s first broadcast to the nation as Prime Minister on 11 June 1964, when he said, and I quote: “There comes a time in the life of every nation when it stands at the cross-roads of history and must choose which way to go. But for us there need be no difficulty or hesitation, no looking to right or left. Our way is straight and clear - the building up of a socialist democracy at home with freedom and prosperity for all, and the maintenance of world peace and friendship with all nations.” (Unquote). There could not be a clearer and firmer articulation of India’s national objectives at the time, both for achieving domestic goals and as well as conducting an effective foreign policy.

3. In the course of his political career, Shastriji became known as a man of great personal integrity, renowned as well for his resoluteness of spirit and firmness of action. Till 1965, though, few would have credited him with the genuine interest he did have in peaceful coexistence with our neighbours and for building cooperative and constructive relations with our brother countries. On 23 September 1965, even on the day the India-Pakistan war ended with victory for the Indian forces, Shastriji was in a far from triumphant mood. He said in his address to the nation, and I quote: “While the conflict between the armed forces of the two countries has come to an end, the more important thing for the United Nations and all those who stand for peace is to bring to an end the deeper conflict... How can this be brought about? In our view, the only answer lies in peaceful coexistence. India has stood for the principle of coexistence and championed it all over the world. Peaceful coexistence is possible among nations no matter how deep the differences between them, how far apart they are in their political and economic systems, no matter how intense the issues that divide them." (Unquote)

4. Shastriji's words encapsulate, with conviction and decency, qualities for which he was rightly known, his vision for relations with our neighbours. I would argue today that nearly 45 years later, they continue to offer us an invaluable insight into the fundamental verities underpinning our relationships on the subcontinent. The question that all of us, who belong to this ancient land, need to ask ourselves is whether we desire peaceful coexistence and cooperation or are reconciled to being irrevocably mired in conflict and confrontation. A subcontinent at peace benefits all who live in it; one troubled by hostility, destructive rivalry, conflict and terror drags us all down.

5. I am conscious of saying these words today on the day that we are hosting here in India, Sheikh Hasina, the Prime Minister of Bangladesh and the latest winner of the Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development. Sheikh Hasina is a great leader of her country and I find joy in the topicality of today's talk when we in India are looking forward to a transformation in our relationship with Bangladesh. Both our countries - India and Bangladesh- share the same desire to make this a relationship that fulfils our vision of a future that ensures the well-being of both our peoples.

6. Just about two years ago, the picture in South Asia was bleak: Pakistan in turmoil, with the assassination of Benazir Bhutto and chaos in the streets; Bangladesh under military rule; Nepal and Sri Lanka convulsed by civil war; Bhutan managing a delicate transition from absolute monarchy to constitutional democracy; Afghanistan battling the forces of a resurgent Taliban; and even the Maldives facing mass disturbances in the lead-up to elections. When others say that India lives in a tough neighbourhood, we could not have disagreed. And yet, in the last year and a half, there has been significant progress in many of these nations, and while much remains to be done, there are grounds for hope that our relations can improve, almost across the board.

7. The challenge before us in South Asia is to work relentlessly to promote peace, security and development. Yet, there are a number of challenges that continue to beset the region, that hold back the true potential of our countries, individually as well as collectively. These include terrorism and extremism, and the use of these as instruments of state policy; and the daily challenge of hunger, unemployment, illiteracy, disease, and the effects of climate change. There is still much work to be done to promote freer trade and better connectivity. These are among the factors that drag our people back from the path of sustained peace, development and prosperity.

8. We need to look to the future, to an interrelated South Asian future where geography becomes an instrument of opportunity in our mutual growth story, where history binds rather than divides, where trade and cross-border links flourish and bring prosperity to all our peoples. Some will say these are merely dreams; yet there few worthwhile achievements in the world that have not been preceded by ambitious aspirations. But dreams will only turn into reality if we take action to accomplish this brighter future together. One thing is clear. Our destinies are inextricably linked and we have to work together to build a better future for our region.

9. Our region has been blessed with an abundance of natural and human resources, a rich spiritual and civilizational heritage, a demography where youth is preponderant and a creative zeal manifest in all spheres of human endeavour. Our collective identity may be rooted in a turbulent history but the challenge is to translate the many factors that bind us into a self-sustaining, mutually beneficial and cooperative partnership that transcends the vicissitudes of the recent past. The people of South Asia have already made their choice and the spirit of an organization like SAARC embodies their aspirations. It is imperative that all nations of SAARC work collectively to realize their vision.

10. The Government of India, led by our Prime Minister, has a strategic vision of a peaceful subcontinent. We genuinely believe that the peace, prosperity and security of our neighbours are in our interest. Unlike some, India has never believed in undermining or destabilizing other countries; we believe that each of us deserves an equal chance to attend to the needs of our people without being distracted by hostility from any of our neighbours. Where we have disagreements, we will never abandon the path of dialogue and reconciliation. We are resolute in our commitment for peace as we are firm in defending our country.

11. India desires friendly, good neighbourly and cooperative relations with all its neighbours. As by far the biggest country in the subcontinent (in size, population and GDP terms), we are often wrongly perceived as throwing our weight around and rightly expected to show magnanimity in our dealings with our smaller neighbours. This we have done in the past and will continue to do in the future. However, while it is not our expectation that our neighbours display an equal measure of reciprocity, we certainly expect that they remain sensitive to our concerns regarding our security. We do not think this is an unreasonable expectation. Within this framework a great deal can be achieved to our mutual benefit. People to people contacts, intra and inter-regional connectivity, cultural exchanges, trade, investment flows and integrated approaches to issues such as food, health, education and climate change will define any future architecture for the region.

12. It is also true that a cooperative future is not guaranteed unless we all work together on this unique project of a South Asia looking confidently to the future, each country secure in its own identity and putting development and the interests of its people above perceived fears and antagonistic posturing. No one country can do this alone. It must be a shared project.

13. The scourge of terrorism has cast its malevolent influence across the region and remains a major threat to all of us. It is a global menace, the epicentre of which is unfortunately located in our region. This threat needs to be addressed purposively and with determination. Terrorism must be repudiated, and terrorists and those who provide them succour and sustenance must be tackled resolutely. There are no ‘good terrorists’, and those who strike Faustian bargains with such elements are often left to rue the consequences for their own countries. Countries and organizations need to eschew the temptation to use terrorism as an instrument of state policy or to selectively target only those terrorist entities that are at present perceived to be a threat to them. This is a short-sighted and self-destructive strategy as those elements that profess an ideology of hatred, intolerance and terror often bite the hand that feeds them. The famous fable of Dr Frankenstein offers a salutary and timeless reminder that those who create monsters must not assume they will always remain under their creator's control.

14. A climate of peace can only be built on a foundation of trust, unhindered by the use or the threat to use terror as a means to achieving narrow ends. The Mumbai terrorist attack in November last year was a great setback on the path of our relations with Pakistan. It will take concerted and credible action by Pakistan on two fronts to set things right: action to bring the conspirators and perpetrators of this dastardly attack to justice, and action to begin dismantling the infrastructure of terrorism, the platform from which so many attacks have been launched against our country in the last two decades. If these are done, a climate conducive for dialogue becomes possible; as our PM has said in Parliament, if Pakistan takes the first step, we will meet them more than half way. But only credible action by Islamabad will instil a modicum of confidence in the people of India that dialogue is worthwhile and that our neighbours are as determined as us to give peace a chance.

15. The Mumbai terror attacks and the overwhelming evidence of the involvement of elements in Pakistan in executing the Mumbai terror attack of November 2008, and in the conspiracy that planned, funded and launched it were a serious setback to the process of dialogue with Pakistan. Besides, an increase in ceasefire violations, continued infiltration across the LOC and the attacks on the Indian Embassy in Kabul in July 2008 and October 2009 have also placed immense strain on India-Pakistan relations in general and on the dialogue process in particular. Pakistan's evasive responses and denials in response to our requests for cooperation in exposing the conspiracy behind the Mumbai terror attack and bringing all its perpetrators to justice have not helped our bilateral relations. That is why, in the wake of the Mumbai terror attack, there has been a pause in the Composite Dialogue Process.

16. In recent weeks there have been high-level statements from Pakistan seeking the resumption of the dialogue process and about terrorism being an issue which both India and Pakistan must jointly address. Our position, articulated by our PM in Parliament on July 29, 2009, is that we can have a meaningful dialogue with Pakistan only if they fulfil their commitment, in letter and spirit, not to allow their territory to be used in any manner for terrorist activities against India. The inability or unwillingness of the Pakistani government to prevent its soil from being used to mount attacks on another state is a sad commentary that raises questions about whether it is at all serious about seeking a dialogue in order to improve relations with India.

17. As good neighbours, we are saddened by the continuing incidents of violence in Pakistan and we wish the authorities well in their efforts to repel militancy and fanaticism within their own borders. We would welcome indications that Islamabad shares our view that the forces of terrorism emanating from Pakistani soil are foes that must be overcome and that those plotting attacks on India from Pakistani territory are as much the enemies of Pakistan as they are of India.

18. India remains committed to long-term peace with Pakistan. And I state it unequivocally: there is no Indian threat to Pakistan on any grounds whatsoever. The need is for concerted action against terrorists wherever they operate.

19. Indeed Afghanistan, the newest member of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, or SAARC, provides an example of how much we can achieve if we work together. It represents, for the countries of South Asia, the gateway to Central Asia and beyond, and to West Asia. Historically, it has formed the natural frontier in the north-west of the South Asian landmass. Given its geographic location, Afghanistan has an immense potential to develop as a hub of trade, energy and transport corridors, which would help the long-term sustainability of development efforts in the region. This is something that we would like to see happening, and that is why we were very happy to support the admission of Afghanistan to SAARC. India's solid development partnership and cooperation with Afghanistan is truly appreciated by the Afghan people. Our friendship with Afghanistan is a long-standing one, and our developmental presence in that country is there solely to assist the Afghan government and people in their quest for progress and prosperity.

20. As a significant bilateral donor, India has already spent $1.2 billion undertaking projects virtually in all parts of Afghanistan, in a wide range of sectors, including hydro-electricity, power transmission lines, road construction, agriculture and industry, telecommunications, information and broadcasting, education and health, fields which have been identified by the Afghan government as priority areas for reconstruction and development. We have lit up Kabul, since the first time Kabul has 24 hours of electricity a day since 1982 is because of Indian engineers. We have welcomed students and civil servants from Afghanistan to our educational and training institutions as part of our contribution towards helping stabilize the country and the region, increase capacity and human resource development and build upon the solid foundation of our historical and civilizational ties.

21. We are currently engaged in the construction of the Salma Dam in Herat, and we are constructing the Afghan Parliament building, a visible and evocative symbol of democracy. Work on these projects is moving briskly, and should be completed by the end of 2011. Our education and training programmes for Afghans are the largest such programmes that India has for any country in the world, and India’s is the largest skill and capacity development programme offered to Afghanistan by any country in the world.

22. In all this our endeavour is to help Afghanistan stand on its own feet. We have no other agenda there. Afghanistan should not be seen as a battleground for competing spheres of influence. We have an abiding interest in the stability of Afghanistan, in ensuring social and economic progress for its people, and getting them on the track of self-sustaining growth, and enabling them to take their own decisions without outside interference.

23. The myriad problems that confront the country can only be resolved in a peaceful environment, devoid of violence and terror. The international community needs to come together to overcome this grave challenge. A sense of defeatism has been pervading some sections of international opinion. We feel that needs to be guarded against, because it runs the risk of encouraging insurgent groups into thinking they might actually triumph. We believe, therefore, that Afghanistan needs a long-term commitment, even while remaining mindful of the challenges. The Afghan people have displayed great courage and resilience, and a survival instinct even against the greatest odds. We must do our utmost to support them.
24. There really are only two choices confronting the international community - to invest and endure, or to improve conditions to a point that we can exit. India has already made up its mind - invest and endure is the way forward, because we believe in the cause of peace, democracy and development in Afghanistan. We trust that the friends of Afghanistan will do likewise.

25. Let me now turn to some of our other relationships in our neighbourhood. India and Nepal share a unique relationship of friendship and cooperation underpinned by linguistic, cultural and civilizational links, wide-ranging commercial and economic ties, and extensive people-to-people contacts. Few countries have a relationship as wide-ranging and multifaceted as that between India and Nepal. Our bilateral relations have to be based on common economic prosperity. It is in this backdrop that during the visit of PM Madhav Kumar Nepal to India, an economic package for developing a skill base for industrial development and an ambitious programme to upgrade the infrastructure along our borders with Nepal and improve transport connectivity was announced.

26. Increased bilateral trade and investments with Nepal would contribute to economic development and prosperity for both countries. The 1996 Trade Treaty marked a turning point in trade relations between the two countries. It resulted in phenomenal growth of bilateral trade, which witnessed a seven fold increase. Nepal’s exports to India increased eleven times and Indian exports to Nepal increased six times. In addition, Indian investments into Nepal increased by seven times. The 2009 Revised Trade Treaty, which was signed in October 2009, has retained the positive features of the previous treaty and built on it to further enhance and expand bilateral trade between the two countries.

27. Nepal is going through a historic transition and India has consistently maintained that the political process - the peace process and the drafting of the new Constitution by a duly elected Constituent Assembly - has to be both Nepali owned and Nepali driven. We are with the people of Nepal in this period of historic transition and in their quest for a multi-party democracy.

28. The developments in our neighbourhood with respect to Bhutan, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, and Maldives have been remarkably positive. They have pointed towards greater understanding, co-operation and partnership rather than towards disagreement, let alone conflict.

29. Staying in the Himalayas, our relations with Bhutan are an outstanding and truly exceptional example of good neighbourly relations and are characterised by profound friendship, mutual understanding, trust and cooperation. 2009 was a momentous year in India-Bhutan relations. It marked the celebrations of the Golden Jubilee of the visit of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to Bhutan in 1958, the coronation of the Fifth King of Bhutan and the 100th anniversary of the Wangchuck dynasty. India welcomed Bhutan’s historic transition to democracy. The India-Bhutan Friendship Treaty updated in 2007 not only reflects the contemporary nature of our relationship but also lays the foundation for our future development in the 21st century.

30. India is the largest development partner of Bhutan. It has been providing assistance to Bhutan ever since the latter initiated planned development efforts in the early 1960s. During the recent visit of the King of Bhutan, our Prime Minister reiterated India’s commitment to the revised target of exporting hydropower from Bhutan to India from 5,000 MW to 10,000 MW by 2020. Hydropower exports to India have already overtaken tourism as the single largest contributor to the impressive recent growth in Bhutan’s GDP. From 2006, Bhutan’s exports to India have exceeded its imports from India due to growing exports of hydropower. In 2008, exports from India were Rs.1734 crores and constituted 73.8% of Bhutan’s total imports. Bhutan’s exports to India in 2008 amounted to Rs. 2148 crores and constituted 99.4% of its total exports. India is also committed to the construction of the first rail link between our countries and to assisting Bhutan in Information Technology development and dissemination.

31. The end of the conflict with the LTTE has brought about a greater possibility for peace and stability in Sri Lanka and our neighbourhood. It has presented Sri Lanka with an opportunity to heal the wounds created by decades of protracted conflict, to make a new beginning and to build a better future for its people. It has also opened up greater options for India and Sri Lanka to cooperate bilaterally and enlarge our areas of engagement. India had emphasized to the Sri Lankan Government the importance of focusing on issues of relief, rehabilitation, resettlement and reconciliation. India is now working actively in assisting in the rehabilitation of the people of Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka. We have provided humanitarian relief for the displaced people, agricultural starter packs, shelter material, seven demining teams, and the services of a field hospital which treated more than 50,000 patients.

32. We hope the elections later this month will accelerate the process and reinforce a political consensus that ensures the welfare and wellbeing of the Tamil people of Sri Lanka, within the framework of a united Sri Lanka. We are staying engaged with Sri Lanka in the fraternal spirit that characterizes our friendship.

33. The recent elections in Bangladesh and the ushering in of a democratic Government led by the Awami League has opened up a window of opportunity for both sides to address issues of genuine mutual concern in a purposeful and focused manner that builds on our commonalities. It may be a cliché to speak of the multifaceted nature of relations between the two countries and the historical and traditional bonds of friendship we share, but there is no doubt that the cliché is a cliché because it is true. Issues of road and rail connectivity are on the table; trade is being given a new impetus; we fully understand the need to seek a mutually satisfactory solution regarding the sharing of water resources; and both nations are co-operating on combating terrorism. The current visit of Sheikh Hasina will, I am confident, open a new chapter in our engagement by reaffirming and reviving old links and solidifying new areas of cooperation.

34. India welcomed the results of the first multi-party democratic Presidential and Parliamentary elections in Maldives. We are moving to enhance our cooperation in a range of areas, including maritime and coastal security, where we share common concerns. The India - Maldives relationship has been nurtured through regular high level exchanges and by developing mutually identified infrastructure facilities in Maldives through economic and technical assistance provided by India. At the people-to-people level, as the MP from Thiruvananthapuram I am conscious of the close bonds we have to the people of Maldives, many of whom can be seen in the Kerala capital on any given day. We are committed to strengthening and enhancing our bonds of friendship with these close cousins.
35. Our engagement with our neighbours is, as I am sure you realize, multi-pronged. It is at the same time conducted bilaterally, regionally under the ambit of SAARC, and through what one might call sub-regional or even trans-regional mechanisms such as BIMSTEC, which includes some SAARC members and some ASEAN ones, or IOR-ARC, which pulls together 18 countries whose shores are washed by the Indian Ocean, including some South Asian nations and several on other continents. Since I have already touched upon the bilateral relationships, let me delve a little bit now into our cooperation within the framework of SAARC.

36. SAARC is an organization which has been quietly working to touch the lives of the people in South Asia without many of us knowing much about it. I would like to stress that what some have termed the asymmetric participation by India, as SAARC’s largest member, has also been the most important factor in strengthening intra-regional cooperation. Not only has our manner of discharging our commitment to this grouping inspired other SAARC Member States to take initiatives on regional projects, but it has helped transform SAARC from a declaratory phase to an implementation phase. India has contributed US $ 189.89 million for the SAARC Development Fund and enabled its operationalization. Many of you may not know that a world class university is coming up fast very near you as a direct SAARC project -- the South Asia University in South Delhi. India is the largest contributor to the development of this University, chipping in US $ 229.11 million out of a total cost of US $ 308.91 million. Within a couple of years, students from India and the SAARC member countries will get a world class education at an affordable cost here in India.

37. With increasing regional engagement on core areas of development, namely in health, education, energy, agriculture and infrastructure, awareness about the effectiveness of SAARC in delivering the fruits of development to South Asians at the grass roots has increased. Consequently, there has been an exponential increase in intra-regional tourism, people-to-people exchanges through cultural and social activities and programmes. These regional activities have enabled a large constituency of South Asians to be connected and benefit from basic infrastructure in health, education, food and infrastructure, hitherto unavailable to them.
38. SAARC’s transformation from declarations to actions has also generated interest amongst non-SAARC States, with nine Observers formally expressing their intent to engage with SAARC. Intra-regional cooperation has strengthened physical connectivity, helped overcome the challenges of the global economic crisis and the food crisis, and is encouraging greater cooperation in articulating a common SAARC position at many international forums.

39. I would like to believe that SAARC’s evolutionary path towards economic prosperity in South Asia is irreversible. Of course we are all conscious that political setbacks can derail, or slow down, economic progress. But with increasing economic inter-dependence amongst Member States, heading in the future towards a SAARC Customs Union or even a single SAARC currency no longer appears to be completely unrealistic.

40. Winds of change are blowing in South Asia. There is a definite consolidation of democracy in all the countries of the region, every one of which has held elections within the last two years. Some of our neighbours have made significant strides in surmounting internal conflict and others are in the process of doing so. A subcontinent committed to democracy, economic cooperation and improved regional integration is no longer a pipe-dream.

41. I believe that Lal Bahadur Shastriji would have welcomed this development and that he would have shared my enthusiasm at the hopeful prospects for enhanced cooperation in South Asia. He went to Tashkent to strive for a subcontinent not bedevilled by mutual suspicion and distrust. That is the vision and the commitment of the UPA government today. We firmly believe that, if India has to fulfil its potential in the world, we have to live in peace with our neighbours, in mutual security, harmony and cooperation.

42. I have been told that just as Nehruji kept Robert Frost’s immortal lines -- ‘Miles to go before I sleep’ -- on his bedside table, Shastriji kept some lines of Guru Nanak in Gurmukhi on his desk. When translated into English they read: ‘O Nanak! Be tiny like the grass, for other plants will wither away, but grass will remain ever green.’ These immortal lines epitomize Shastriji’s humility of demeanour, his grasp of life’s true meaning, and his indomitable spirit. His vision of peace in our region remains alive and evergreen in our hearts.

Thank you and Jai Hind.

169. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in the Lok Sabha on India's Policy towards Afghanistan.

New Delhi, February 24, 2010.

The London Conference had three broad agenda items: security; development and governance; and regional cooperation. The Conference was co-hosted by Afghan President Hamid Karzai, UN Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon and British Prime Minister Gordon Brown. Over 60 countries, along with representatives of certain international organizations, were invited to the Conference. EAM led the Indian delegation to the Conference.

In the Communiqué issued after the Conference, the international community underlined its support for the Government of Afghanistan and its security, development and governance, and pledged to maintain its long-term commitment to Afghanistan. India's stand was to ensure an emphasis on the international community's long-term engagement in Afghanistan, the central and coordinating role of the UN, a focus on the resolve to combat terrorism, condemnation of terrorist groups, and the importance of the Afghan National Security Forces assuming a leading role in ensuring security. While supporting the Afghan Government's efforts to reintegrate those individuals who abjure violence, give up the armed struggle, accept the values of democracy, human rights and pluralism as enshrined in the Afghan constitution and do not have ties with terrorist groups, India stressed on the need to ensure that the Afghan led peace and reintegration process should be inclusive and transparent.

The participants in the London Conference, which included major countries and was co-hosted by the United Nations, reiterated their resolve to combat terrorism and condemned in the strongest terms all attacks by the Taliban and their extremist allies. The London Conference did not endorse reintegration with the Taliban as a whole, but welcomed the plans of the Government of Afghanistan to offer an honourable place in society to those willing to renounce violence, participate in the free and open society and respect the principles that are enshrined in the Afghan Constitution, cut ties with Al-Qaeda and other terrorist groups, and pursue their political goals peacefully.
India is actively engaged in assisting the efforts of the Government of Afghanistan in the reconstruction and development of that country as a means to bringing about stability in Afghanistan. As a neighbour of Afghanistan, India cannot remain immune from developments there. It is committed to supporting the Government and the people of Afghanistan as they build a democratic, pluralistic and prosperous country. India believes that in this period of transition in Afghanistan it is imperative to strengthen the Government of Afghanistan and its capacities at various levels. India will continue to consult with countries in the region and beyond in support of peace and stability in Afghanistan. India will continue to press the international community to act effectively to ensure that terrorist and extremist groups targeting Afghanistan from beyond its borders are denied safe havens.

170. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the bomb blasts in Kabul.

New Delhi, February 26, 2010.

I am deeply saddened and grieved at the loss of lives of Indian nationals in the bomb attack in Kabul, which has also claimed the lives of several innocent Afghan civilians. I condemn in the strongest possible terms this senseless act of violence and barbarism which strikes at the core of everything a civilized society holds dear.

The Indians who have lost their lives were on a mission of goodwill and friendship, helping to construct the peaceful, democratic Afghanistan that our Afghan friends desire. I convey my heartfelt condolences to their families and near and dear ones, and assure them that we stand with them in this hour of grief, and will render all possible support to them.

In the aftermath of the terrorist attack targeting the IMM in Kabul, in which one doctor was killed and others injured, the work of the IMM has been temporarily suspended. The Embassy of India and its other offices in Afghanistan continue to function normally in the face of extremely demanding and difficult circumstances.
Joint Statement issued at the end of the visit of Afghan President Hamid Karzai.

New Delhi, April 26, 2010.

His Excellency Mr. Hamid Karzai, President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan paid an official visit to India on 26 April 2010 at the invitation of Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India. During his visit, President Karzai met President Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil, and held discussions with Prime Minister Singh.

This was President Karzai's first visit to India after his re-election as the President of Afghanistan in 2009. The visit marked the continuation of high level exchanges between the two countries, and was a manifestation of the tradition of regular consultations between India and Afghanistan.

During the discussions between President Karzai and Prime Minister Singh the two sides reiterated their commitment to the strategic partnership between the two countries, and expressed satisfaction at the progress in their relations. They noted that these relations were rooted in historical and civilisation links, and served not only the interests and welfare of the two countries, but also contributed to peace, stability and prosperity in the region.

Prime Minister Singh stated that India desired to see a strong, stable and prosperous Afghanistan, at peace. India remained committed to assisting Afghanistan in its development efforts in accordance with the wishes and priorities of the people of Afghanistan. India's development partnership is focussed on areas of infrastructure development, human resource development and capacity building, food assistance and small development projects that bring immediate benefit to the people at the grass-roots level. The two leaders, in particular, took note of the Zaranj-Delaram road project, the Pul-e-Kumri to Kabul transmission line project and scholarship programmes which had brought direct benefit to the Afghan people. They welcomed the progress being made in the construction of the building for the Afghan Parliament. President Karzai expressed appreciation for India's assistance to the reconstruction and development efforts of the Government and people of Afghanistan.
President Karzai outlined to Prime Minister Singh recent developments with regard to Afghanistan. Prime Minister Singh lauded the progress that had been made in national reconstruction efforts under President Karzai and the sacrifices made by the people of Afghanistan in their quest for building a democratic and peaceful society.

The two leaders reiterated their conviction that the national rebuilding process in Afghanistan should be led by the people of Afghanistan in keeping with the principles of national sovereignty, independence and non-interference in internal affairs. They expressed their grave concern over the threat posed by terrorism to Afghanistan's national development efforts. They expressed their determination to work with the international community to combat the forces of terrorism which pose a particular threat to the region.

President Karzai conveyed his outrage and deep condolences over the terrorist attacks on Indian nationals in Afghanistan, and assured the Indian side that the Government of Afghanistan is committed to providing full security to them. The Indian side welcomed these assurances.

The two leaders expressed their intention to continue to consult each other with a view to consolidating their partnership and contributing to peace and stability in the region.

174. Statements to the Press by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Afghan President Hamid Karzai.

New Delhi, April 26, 2010.

Prime Minister: It is a great honour for me to welcome His Excellency President Hamid Karzai to India on his first visit to India after his re-election as President.

I have had extremely productive discussions with President Karzai. We discussed a broad range of bilateral and regional issues of mutual interest. We exchanged views on regional cooperation in the context of forthcoming SAARC Summit and our common vision of freer and more unfettered regional trade and transit. Greater economic integration has the potential of transforming our region.

India and Afghanistan enjoy a strategic partnership based on unique historical and civilizational bonds and shared goals. I conveyed to President Karzai our deep admiration for his courageous leadership in difficult times, and our support to the Government and people of Afghanistan as they build a strong, peaceful, democratic and prosperous Afghanistan. India believes that this process should be led and owned by the Afghan people.

We reviewed the development partnership between our two countries. India remains committed to assisting the Government and people of Afghanistan in their efforts towards the reconstruction and development of their country. I conveyed to the President that India is ready to augment its assistance for capacity building and for skills and human resources development to help strengthen public institutions in Afghanistan.

We discussed the issue of terrorism, which threatens our region. President Karzai assured me that the Government of Afghanistan will take all possible measures for the security of Indians in Afghanistan. We were of the view that the attacks of February 26, 2010 in Kabul were the handiwork of those who do not wish to see the emergence of a strong, independent and pluralistic Afghanistan. I conveyed to President Karzai that the perpetrators of such attacks will not succeed in undermining India’s commitment to assist the Afghan people.

I look forward to continuing to work together with President Karzai for further enhancing our close cooperation. This is in the interest of our two peoples and peace and stability in the region and beyond.

Thank you.

President of Afghanistan: Mr. Prime Minister, Ladies and Gentlemen, I am honoured to be visiting India on my seventh-eighth visit here this time, at the particularly kind invitation of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and I discussed the relation between the two countries in which I expressed at the outset the sympathy and condolence of the Afghan people at the cowardly attacks against Indian reconstruction workers and medical staff and their Embassy in Kabul.
I also expressed to the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh the gratitude of the Afghan people especially, particularly in the past eight years, for the tremendous reconstruction assistance given to the Afghan people by the people of India. Of significance in part there, Ladies and Gentlemen, was the construction of a road from Zaranj to Delaram and the extension of power lines from North to Central Afghanistan and to the Capital of the country. Also very important, for which I repeatedly thanked Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, was the granting of scholarships to over 1200 Afghan students, boys and girls, to come and learn in India. India has shown to be a strong partner of Afghanistan, for which, again we express our gratitude.

The Prime Minister and I discussed the situation in Afghanistan, the situation in the region and our common struggle against terrorism and extremism. We discussed the upcoming Afghanistan peace consultative Jirga which will comprise all the people of Afghanistan from all walks of life to advise the Afghan Government on how to move forward towards reintegration and reconciling of those elements of the Taliban and others who have accepted the Afghan Constitution, who are not part of Al Qaeda, and who would not be part of any terrorist network. I have also requested the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh to kindly send representatives to the follow-up of the London Conference which will be held in Kabul, in the name of a Kabul Conference so India can participate once again in Afghanistan's reconstruction and the provision of support to the Afghan people.

We discussed a number of other issues of mutual significance that corresponds to the two countries. I express once again Mr. Prime Minister, my gratitude and thanks to you and to the people of India for all that India has done for Afghanistan in the past eight years, in keeping with the relation of friendship between the two countries, as it ever was in our two histories.

Thank you.
175. Speech by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Afghanistan-India-Pakistan Triadogue organised by Delhi Policy Group.

New Delhi, June 13, 2010.

I am privileged to speak to such an eminent gathering from India, Pakistan and Afghanistan assembled here. I would also like convey my appreciation to Delhi Policy Group and Prof. Radha Kumar for organising this triadogue. I looked at the summarized report of the Triadogue for 2009 and was struck by the forward-looking ideas delineated there.

2. I think it is a truth universally acknowledged that India, Pakistan and Afghanistan share bonds and linkages that transcend the immediacy of the present. Often, we are also treated to the refrain that India-Pakistan issues have impeded the collective progress of the region. There are those who maintain that for peace and stability in Afghanistan, India and Pakistan should resolve all their differences. The complexities in such equations are not resolvable through the application of simple formulae, although it can be conceded that peace between the two largest countries in South Asia would have a salutary impact on the destiny of the entire region. Of course, the issue of peace and stability in Afghanistan needs to be addressed separately and comprehensively and not within the matrix of India-Pakistan relations.

3. I believe that the issue of peace and stability in Afghanistan has facets to it which concern governance, which concern issues of grass-roots level administration and deliverance of public goods like transport, trade, health, education and women's empowerment, the mitigation of the culture of the gun, the eradication of terrorism, the creation of a strong Afghan National Army and Police and, structuring the role of regional countries in ensuring that long term peace and security in Afghanistan cannot be a bridge too far. A good outcome, and the realization of these goals, in Afghanistan can change the current of history in our region.

4. When the searchlight is turned on what we - as India - do in Afghanistan, the vista is clear. India is engaged in developmental and humanitarian work to assist the Afghan people as they build a peaceful, stable, inclusive, democratic and pluralistic Afghanistan. The landscape of destruction must change. India neither sees Afghanistan as a battleground for competing national interests nor assistance to Afghan reconstruction and development as a zero sum game. (Indeed, may I venture the proposition that development and security in the entire region of South Asia should not be a zero sum game. We must be creative and flexible in our thinking on such issues). Our $ 1.3 billion assistance programme is aimed at building infrastructure, capacity building in critical areas of governance, health, education, agriculture etc. and generating employment. We have paid a heavy price in terms of the lives lost of our citizens who work in Afghanistan, as we are targeted by those whose agendas conflict with the emergence of a strong and stable Afghanistan. Last year, over 300,000 Afghans- mainly women and children- trekked long distances to avail of free medical treatment from the Indian Medical Missions in Kabul, Jalalabad, Kandahar, Herat and Mazar-e-Sharif. The economy of battle-scarred Nimroz province was transformed with the building of the Zaranj-Delaram highway and the homes of the people of Kabul have been lit after more than a decade by the Pul-e-Khumri transmission line from the Uzbek border. These are by no definition, activities that are inimical to the interest of the people of Afghanistan or its neighbours. We have sought to assist Afghanistan within our means. In fact, the international community as a whole has made great contributions in terms of diplomacy and development, in assisting Afghanistan to stand on its feet. We welcome these efforts and are fully supportive of them.

5. The security of Afghanistan and what happens there impacts us, as a country in the region, as a close neighbor whose ties with the Afghan people stretch into antiquity. A stable and settled Afghanistan, where the rank and file of the Taliban has given up violence against the government, and the people, cut all links with terrorism, subscribe to the values of the Afghan Constitution and its laws, and where development is the hard rationale, is what we seek and quest for. It is important also that for such a structure to be durable and enduring, Afghanistan's neighbours, and regional partners, will need to be in the picture - both by consultation and by adherence to the principle of non-interference in the country's affairs, ensuring that it thrives as a trade and transit hub for the region, and by eradicating transnational terrorism.
6. I will now focus on the dynamics of our relationship with Pakistan, particularly following the meeting of the two Prime Ministers in Thimphu in April. India-Pakistan relations are, by virtue of a complexity that has grown, rather than diminished over the years, literally, a class apart. Theories about why such distances separate us, abound. Geographical contiguity and shared history, ethnic and linguistic affinities, and similar developmental challenges have not induced an inevitable congruity between our interests. That is the tragedy of our relationship. The last sixty years have had more than their share of bitterness, recrimination, mistrust, misunderstanding and miscommunication. There is a trust deficit. Some also refer to a vision deficit, especially since India has over the years sought to spell out a broader vision of our relationship while a similar definition has not been easy for Pakistan to enunciate. Therefore, there is need for articulating a common definition of what kind of relationship we want for the future. The welfare of our millions should be the common denominator of our efforts.

7. So, what has gone wrong so far? While some would trace the current state of India-Pakistan relations to the circumstances that led to the birth of the two countries, others would blame events thereafter, but what is important for us today is to try and assess the reasons underlying the existing state of this relationship and to think afresh on the way forward. It is only through such an analysis that we can overcome the difficulties in our relationship. This is the spirit of Thimphu.

8. And, as we commence this exercise, it is important to reiterate a few points. We seek a stable, peaceful, economically progressing Pakistan. Secondly, we sincerely desire peace with Pakistan. Thirdly, we have to learn to live with the asymmetries in our sizes and capabilities. Such differences of scale should not deter us from working with each other. Pakistan should shed its insecurity on these counts. Fourthly, India is a neighbor which has exhibited true restraint despite misguided and serious provocations. Fifthly, the entry of radical ideology into the domain of religion, and, the consequent implications for peace and security between India and Pakistan, making differences over Kashmir even more difficult, must be prevented. Radical, terrorist forces are also increasingly battling for larger space in a deathly struggle that seeks to overwhelm moderate, democratic forces in Pakistani civil society. The writing on the wall must be seen.
9. There is agreement today on both sides that dialogue is the only way forward. Consequently, our Prime Ministers have charged the Foreign Ministers and Foreign Secretaries with the responsibility of working out the modalities of restoring trust and confidence in the relationship and thus paving the way for a substantive dialogue on all issues of mutual concern.

10. For bridging what is called the "trust deficit" between the two countries, we are ready to address all issues of mutual concern through dialogue and peaceful negotiations. Let me however, pose a question, here. The progress in our Composite Dialogue especially from 2004-2008, and the frequent references to the deliberations of the back channel during the same period, do not diminish the import of one dilemma. How do we deal with the persistent threat of terrorism? It is a given, that this dialogue can best progress in an atmosphere free from terrorism, which has been the bane of our region. Most terrorist attacks in India and elsewhere have their origin in our region. Every terrorist attack, including the one in Mumbai, hardens Indian public opinion, making our task more difficult. Terrorism as a continuation of war by other means, and the use of terrorist groups selectively, as strategic assets against India, cannot and must not, continue. As an intrinsic part of the long-term vision of relations it desires with India, Pakistan must act effectively against those terrorist groups that seek to nullify and, to destroy the prospects of peace and cooperation between our two countries.

11. We often hear about Pakistan's apprehension about India's conventional defence superiority and growing strategic capabilities after the civil nuclear deal with the United States. Suggestions have been made for a strategic restraint regime in South Asia. I would like to reiterate that India's defence posture and capabilities are not of an offensive nature, and not targeted against any country, including Pakistan. We want to see a peaceful, stable, energy-secure and prosperous Pakistan that acts as a bulwark against terrorism for its own sake and for the good of the region. Asymmetries in size and development, should not prevent us from working together, building complementarities, and realizing a vision of friendly, bilateral relations. In my opinion, there can be no better strategic restraint regime than greater economic and commercial integration; more and more people to people contacts and cultural exchanges, which lead to mutual understanding of each other’s views. Here rests the key to bridging the trust and vision deficit.

12. In recent times, we have also seen unprecedented focus on the “water issue” between India and Pakistan. Breast-beating propaganda and baseless charges alleging stealing of water and illegal construction of dams have been spread and poisoned the atmosphere of our relations further. The myth of water theft does not stand the test of rational scrutiny or reason. India has never sought to deny Pakistan its fair and stipulated share of the Indus waters. We firmly believe that the Indus Water Treaty is an example of mutually beneficial cooperation between India and Pakistan. For fifty years now, it has been a very successful and useful mechanism for discussing water-related issues between the two countries. India has always adhered to its Treaty obligations, even during the Indo-Pak wars of 1965 and 1971, and will continue to do so. We are committed to resolving whatever differences that exist in this regard under the mechanism that is provided by the Treaty. This apart, as developing countries, India and Pakistan also stand to benefit from consultations in the context of multilateral processes dealing with environmental issues, including water. In future, India could consider, under a suitable bilateral intergovernmental mechanism, co-operation, such as sharing best practices in water utilization and irrigation.

13. India Pakistan relations have been discussed under the Composite Dialogue process. The Composite Dialogue, which was resumed in June 2004, was predicated on the solemn commitment given by Pakistan that it would not allow any territory under its control to be used for terrorism directed against India. Four Rounds of the Composite Dialogue were completed. During the 5th round, the dialogue process was paused after the terrorist attack on Mumbai. We appreciate the relevance and achievements of the Composite Dialogue, particularly in the period 2004-2008. During this phase, all issues of mutual concern, including Jammu & Kashmir, were discussed. Amongst the achievements, we can cite a number of Confidence Building Measures related to peace and security, such as agreements on pre-notification of flight testing of ballistic missiles and reduction of the risk from Accidents relating to Nuclear Weapons, hotlines between various officials on both sides; enhanced people to people contacts through bus/truck and train services; revival of the Bilateral Joint Commission after 16 years; setting up of the Judicial Committee to look into the humanitarian issue of civilian prisoners/fishermen held in each others jails and growth in bilateral trade by 550% between year 2003-04 and 2007-08 from US$ 344.59 million to US$ 2.23 billion.

14. On Jammu & Kashmir, progress was made based on the common understanding that boundaries could not be redrawn but we could work towards making them irrelevant; and people on both sides of the LoC should be able to move freely and trade with one another. Towards this goal, a number of cross-LoC CBMs were put in place, which included the opening of five crossing points on the LOC; introduction of triple entry permits; increase in frequency of Srinagar-Muzaffarabad and Poonch-Rawalkot bus services; starting of cross-LOC trade on Srinagar-Muzaffarabad and Poonch-Rawalakote routes through movement of trucks, etc.

15. On the way forward, we have to build on these achievements. We also have to reaffirm the progress made through complex negotiations and dialogue through patient and unsung effort whether in the composite dialogue or back channel diplomacy, during this period. We must seek creative solutions.

16. India's rise should not be seen in subjective or negative terms by our neighbours. In fact, our fast growing economy and large market should be seen as a growth opportunity: a reliable source for investments, technology and entrepreneurial resources, besides being a rapidly expanding market for our neighbours' exports. Unfortunately, economic and commercial integration within SAARC has been stymied by political considerations at the cost of economic benefits. Intra-SAARC exports are a mere 5% of the total SAARC exports.

17. Pakistan has nothing to fear from Indian commerce and industry. This has been said by its own Panel of Economists, appointed by Pakistan's Planning Commission. The Panel in its report on Medium Term Development Imperatives and Strategy for Pakistan has assessed that bilateral trade between our two countries, can grow from the current around US $2 billion per annum to a range of $3 to $10 billion. The report enumerates several advantages for Pakistan if trade is normalized with India, which includes geographical proximity and cheaper transportation costs. It concludes that shorter distances will render it unnecessary for Pakistani industry to carry high levels of inventories of raw material. We hope that Pakistan implements the recommendations of its own economists to give India MFN status and shift from a positive list to a negative list regime. Growing economic integration will not only contribute positively to our common developmental imperatives but will also facilitate in building trust and confidence. Moreover, Pakistan could benefit from trade and permitting transit through its territory between India and Afghanistan, thereby creating a win-win situation for all three countries.

18. In conclusion, I would like to echo what Prime Minister Manmohan Singh said on the 7th June at the Convocation of the Sher-e-Kashmir University in Srinagar:

"Our issues with Pakistan are well known. Good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan are in the interest of both the countries. At the same time they are necessary for peace and harmony, stability and development in our region. The relations between the two countries over the past one and a half years have been under the shadow of the terror attacks in Mumbai on November 26, 2008. As you are aware, I met the Prime Minister of Pakistan in Thimphu last month. Both the countries accepted that there is a trust deficit between us. We also agreed that this distance between the two countries must be reduced.

Prime Minister Gilani Saheb has assured me that Pakistan will not allow its soil to be used for terrorist activities against India. Meaningful talks between the two countries, which can lead to a resolution of old issues, are possible only when Pakistan does not let its territory be used for acts of terror against India.

The destiny of our people is linked to each other. Therefore both the countries should adopt effective ways of co-operation to the benefit of the people of the two countries. A strong, stable and prosperous Pakistan is in the interest of our whole region".

The road ahead is a long and winding one. But as fellow travelers, India and Pakistan must tackle the challenges of this rocky road with the belief that a secure and prosperous future vitally and crucially depends on our ability to do so.

Permanent Representative at the UN on the situation in Afghanistan at the UN Security Council.

Hon'ble Co-Chairman,

I am privileged to address this august gathering, assembled today at a crucial stage of Afghanistan's contemporary history to demonstrate solidarity with the Government of Afghanistan for its long-term stability and reconstruction. We congratulate the Government of Afghanistan in holding this first-ever International Conference on Afghanistan in Kabul since 2001 with grace and efficiency.

India and Afghanistan are historic friends. Our two countries enjoy a relationship based on history, civilization, trade and cultural exchanges and shared values and interests stretching back thousands of years.
India is committed to the unity, integrity and independence of Afghanistan underpinned by democracy and cohesive pluralism and free from external interference. India has contributed to these goals through our Development Partnership which is implemented entirely in accordance with the priorities of the Afghan Government and people. Our Assistance programmes are spread all over Afghanistan and cover all sectors of development: humanitarian, infrastructural, institution and capacity building, small-scale quick gestation projects, and agriculture. The ultimate aim of our assistance is to strengthen the capacity of the Afghan state and people to stand on their own feet in the areas of governance and services for the Afghan people. This Conference, with Afghan Government's determination to take full responsibility for Afghanistan's own development, security and governance, and the international community's willingness to realign international assistance in accordance with Afghan priorities and action plans, is a big step in that direction.

Afghanistan's stability and economic development depend a lot on its neighbours and the region as a whole. Afghanistan's greatest economic potential perhaps resides in its immense potential as a trade, transport and energy hub, and as a bridge linking Central, West, South Asia and the Gulf. Its prosperity also depends on the consumer market of nearly 1.5 billion people in the South-Asian sub-continent. The recent reports of Afghanistan's great mineral wealth also open up possibilities for mining and investment. But for Afghanistan to realize its full potential in these areas, Afghanistan's neighbours need to come together to forge greater regional cooperation and facilitate trade and transit. Growing economic inter-dependence will also help in weaning disaffected youth away from insurgency and militancy and in creating a zone of co-prosperity in the region. We support the wishes of the Government of Afghanistan to take the lead in this direction.

India also supports Afghanistan's efforts towards peace and reintegration. But, for such an effort to succeed, it must be fully Afghan-led and Afghan-owned and carry all sections of Afghanistan's population together as well as abide by the redlines agreed to at the London Conference, i.e., giving up violence, cutting off all links with terrorism - whether jehadi or state-sponsored - and accepting the democratic and pluralistic values of the Afghan Constitution, including women's rights. The international community must learn lessons from past experiences at negotiating with fundamentalist and extremist organizations and ensure that any peace process is conducted in an inclusive and transparent manner. Adequate capacity of the Afghan security forces and other Afghan institutions is a sine qua non for protecting Afghanistan's sovereignty, plurality and democracy. Gains of the last nine years stand to be squandered if this aspect does not receive the attention that it deserves as the international community ponders its next steps regarding Afghanistan. The international community should also ensure that there is no selectivity in dealing with terrorism. Terrorism cannot be compartmentalised. As President Karzai said today, it is the vicious common enemy we face. Today, one cannot distinguish between Al Qaeda and plethora of terrorist organisations which have imbibed the goals and techniques of Al Qaeda. It is, therefore, essential to ensure that support, sustenance and sanctuaries for terrorist organisations from outside Afghanistan are ended forthwith.

Hon'ble Co-Chairman,

The determination exhibited by the Afghan Government to take charge of its own destiny and future for Afghan ownership and leadership and the solidarity demonstrated by the international community in supporting this process politically, economically and in the sphere of security, augurs well for the future. My country reiterates its commitment to stability, development and prosperity of the Afghan people and looks forward to working together closely with the Government of Afghanistan and the international community in realising these objectives.

Thank you, Mr. Co-Chairman for your patient hearing.

Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Afghan Foreign Minister Zalmay Rassoul.

New Delhi, August 24, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon.

Foreign Minister Zalmay Rassoul arrived this morning in New Delhi for the first standalone official visit at the invitation of his counterpart External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna. Foreign Minister Rassoul is no stranger to India. As the National Security Advisor earlier, he had been to India. But as the Foreign Minister this is his first visit except that in April 2010 he did transit through New Delhi on his way to Thimphu for the SAARC Summit. EAM and Foreign Minister Rassoul have met several times including on the 20th of July when EAM had gone to Kabul for the Kabul Conference.

Briefly, the programme. The Foreign Minister arrived at noon today. He would be meeting with the National Security Advisor. He will be calling on the Prime Minister. He would hold delegation-level talks with the External Affairs Minister. He would have a number of other engagements. He leaves for Kabul on Thursday, 26th of August.

He would be assisted by Ambassador Tarzi of Afghanistan, DG Foreign Affairs Farman, and other officials. EAM would be assisted by the Foreign Secretary, our Ambassador in Kabul, Joint Secretary (PAI) Mr. Yash Sinha, and other officials.

You are aware of our very close and historical relationship with Afghanistan which both sides have nurtured over the centuries. People in both countries have strong bonds of affinity and friendship which have remained unaffected by political vicissitudes. India and Afghanistan are committed to deepen and strengthen our strategic partnership and the multifaceted ties which are not only of mutual interest but have been a factor for peace, stability and progress in the region.

In 2007, during the SAARC Summit in New Delhi, Afghanistan became a member of SAARC. It has also been a practice for both sides to have regular consultations at high levels to review and give our ties greater momentum.
President Karzai after his re-election was on an official visit to New Delhi on the 26th of April, 2010. He has been to India several times. He and Prime Minister have also been meeting on the sidelines of international conferences. Similarly our Foreign Ministers, our National Security Advisors, our Foreign Secretaries, other leaders, officials have been engaging each other regularly.

You are aware, but let me also highlight, that since the Bonn Conference in 2001, in accordance with the wishes, preferences and priorities of the Government and people of Afghanistan, India has been extending unstinted support for the reconstruction and development of Afghanistan. We are already the sixth largest donor. Our bilateral assistance is close to 1.3 billion dollars. Our projects, which I think an important feature, reach out to the common man in all parts of Afghanistan.

Broadly, the Indian assistance can be divided into four segments. One is humanitarian, in which I would include medical assistance and food assistance. You are aware that the Indian Medical Missions have been doing very well in Afghanistan. Last year, in 2009, they treated more than 310,000 people, mostly women and children, free of cost.

We have been contributing to development of infrastructure including the 218 kilometre Zaranj-Delaram Road that was jointly inaugurated by President Karzai and the External Affairs Minister in January, 2009. The Pul-e-Khumri to Kabul transmission line was inaugurated by President Karzai in May 2009. Presently the Salma Dam in Herat, and the Parliament in Kabul are under construction.

Another unique feature of our assistance has been the small development projects which we have been undertaking. These are quick-gestation, social projects which are identified and executed by local officials across Afghanistan. Some 50 of them have already been undertaken. A similar number are in the pipeline.

We are playing an important role in capacity-building. Presently, 1350 scholarships, 675 each by ICCR and under the ITEC programme, are being made available annually in different disciplines to Afghanistan for capacity-building.
Post London Conference, given the fact that the agricultural and related sectors are very important to Afghanistan, India has decided for a period of five years, to provide 100 fellowships annually to enable Afghans to pursue Masters and Ph.D. programmes and to 200 fresh graduates for Degree programmes.

As significantly, despite the heinous attacks by forces inimical to India-Afghanistan friendship on our Embassy in Kabul in July 2008 and again in October 2009 and on Indian interests in February 2010, India remains committed to assisting the people and Government of Afghanistan, in their quest for a peaceful, pluralistic, democratic, and prosperous Afghanistan. This approach of India, this assistance of India that is being provided in Afghanistan, is positively reflected in a number of opinion polls conducted by independent agencies where the people of Afghanistan have spoken in very warm terms about what India has been doing.

This is the background in which the visit of Foreign Minister Rassoul is taking place. 2010 has seen a number of fast-paced developments aimed at bringing about peace, stability and development in Afghanistan, including the London Conference in January, the Peace Jirga held in Kabul in June, and the Kabul Conference for which the External Affairs Minister had gone in July. Also on the 18 September, elections for the 249 member Parliament are scheduled to take place.

These are some of the important elements that I wanted to flag.. During the visit the Foreign Minister of Afghanistan would hold extensive discussions with External Affairs Minister on bilateral matters and other issues of common interest.

Thank you.
180. Joint Statement issued during the visit of Foreign Minister of Afghanistan Zalmai Rassoul.

Krishna, Minister of External Affairs, Republic of India. Minister of External Affairs congratulated Afghanistan on successfully hosting this very important Conference, and expressed the support of the Government of India for the outcomes of the Kabul Conference.

5. The two Ministers shared their vision of Afghanistan as a hub linking Central and South Asia through easier trade and transit links and people-to-people exchanges. They agreed that terrorism is the main threat undermining peace and stability in the region and reiterated their resolve to effectively combating and defeating it. Statement by Minister of State Shrimati Preneet Kaur at the Afghanistan International Investment Conference.

Dubai, November 30, 2010.

H.E. Dr Zalmai Rassoul, Foreign Minister of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan, H.E. Dr. Anwar Gargash, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of the United Arab Emirates, Excellencies, Ministers, Ladies and Gentlemen.

On behalf of the Government and people of India, I would like to thank the Governments of the United Arab Emirates and the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan, for inviting India to this important conference. I, and my entire delegation, express our appreciation for the warm and generous hospitality that has been extended to us, and for the excellent arrangements made for this Conference.

Excellencies, over the past ten years, the brave people of Afghanistan have fought hard to emerge from a troubled phase of their history. Their determination and fortitude, despite continuing military and social strife, have been exemplary and inspiring. Events such as the present Conference are as much opportunities for the international community to salute the Afghan spirit, as occasions to reiterate our commitment towards peace and prosperity in Afghanistan.

It was in acknowledgment of this enduring spirit of the Afghan people that the international community came together, nearly a decade back, to assist the Government of Afghanistan in rebuilding their glorious nation. This united effort has led to significant achievements, both in terms of institutional development and infrastructural reconstruction, and the leadership of Afghanistan deserves our appreciation for their hard-fought accomplishments and successes. The contribution of the international community has been critical to these successes.

Excellencies, the people of India have also contributed generously to this international effort, willingly sharing the fruits of their own development experience with their Afghan brothers and sisters. India's development partnership with Afghanistan, which covers the entire country and straddles all sectors of development, aims to build indigenous Afghan capacities and institutions for an effective state system that is able to deliver goods and services required by the Afghan people. Our scholarships programme for Afghan students, training courses aimed at skill development and the new programmes on capacity building in the agricultural sector announced by India during the London Conference reaffirm our renewed focus on capacity building and human resource development in Afghanistan. India has also underlined its strong support and commitment to the National Institutional Building Project (NIBP) which aims at promoting and supporting Afghan leadership in the area of governance and development.

The Indian contribution to Afghan reconstruction and development has continued, and even expanded, despite repeated and targeted attacks against Indian individuals and interests in Afghanistan. I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate the commitment and determination of the Government of India to continue to partner the people of Afghanistan in developing capacity and infrastructure in their country.

Excellencies, we must acknowledge that the commitment of the international community towards Afghanistan can not, in perpetuity, continue to remain an assistance-based relationship. It is now time for the international community to see how we can enable Afghanistan to tap into the native genius of its own people, and to forge and strengthen the normal economic, cultural and civil-society energies that bind nations together and provide sustainable bases for their stability and prosperity. In this context, the present event presents a timely and valuable opportunity for us to reflect on the steps and measures needed to improve the investment climate of Afghanistan.

Excellencies, the weight of history suggests that the economic future of Afghanistan is inextricably tied to that of the South Asian and Central Asian regions. Afghanistan has always been a land bridge between the Indian sub-continent, the Central Asian countries and Iran. Centuries of civilisational, economic, social and cultural bonds tie Afghanistan to this part of the world. Over these centuries, the armies, preachers and trade caravans of the world have continually been drawn to Afghanistan, since it provided a door into the fertile plains of the Indus and Ganges, and to the vast economic opportunities represented by the Indian sub-continent. These very same economic opportunities, which have long been a magnet for the external world, today present the most viable strategy for the development of Afghanistan, and imply that such a strategy must inevitably be focussed on South and Central Asia. Ours is an economically vibrant neighbourhood that not only provides a fast-growing market of over 1.5 billion people, but can also be a source of all the technologies and competencies that Afghanistan needs to develop its own industrial, agricultural and service capacities. More relevantly, it offers these investments and technologies from a familiar socio-cultural context, which can facilitate their quicker absorption and adoption in Afghanistan’s economic structure. No serious strategy for Afghanistan’s development can afford to ignore this fundamental regional reality.

India is fully committed to unleashing and developing the economic complementarities that bind the nations of South Asia together, for the common benefit of all our peoples. This commitment has been repeatedly exemplified by the bold and asymmetrical initiatives India has taken under the SAARC forum. Afghanistan, like the other countries of the region, will benefit substantially from the ongoing efforts under the SAARC banner, to improve connectivity and to augment trade flows within South Asia.

Excellencies, Indian industry is keenly aware of the economic complementarities that exist between Afghanistan and India, and is eager to expand its presence in all sectors of the Afghan economy. Needless to say, collaborations between Indian and Afghan economic actors can contribute significantly to developing the industrial capacity of Afghanistan, not only in the three key areas being considered by this Conference, but across the entire gamut of primary, secondary and tertiary economic activities. Such collaborations would also decrease unemployment among the Afghan workforce and infuse Afghan industry with technologies and management practices that have already proven successful in the region. In view of the above, the Government of India would actively welcome such investments by Indian companies in Afghanistan. However, overcoming the challenges of insecurity in Afghanistan require serious and sustained efforts not only by the Afghan leadership, but also a sincere commitment by external powers to abjure the temptation to foster and sponsor disruptive forces within Afghanistan.

I would like to end, Excellencies, by once again congratulating the two host nations for organising this timely and useful forum, and by renewing the best wishes of the Indian Government and people for lasting peace and prosperity in Afghanistan.

Relations with Bangladesh are of the highest priority for India. India stands ready to be a full and equal partner in the realisation of your vision of social change and economic development for Bangladesh.

India seeks to build a new future with Bangladesh. The time has come to chart a new path. We are ready to pursue a bold vision for our relations, based on mutual respect and mutual benefit. Address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh while presenting Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development - 2009 to Prime Minister of Bangladesh Sheikh Hasina.

New Delhi, January 12, 2010.

"It is a great privilege for me to be present on the occasion of the award of the Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development to Her Excellency Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina.

Smt. Indira Gandhi was not only a great national leader but also a great internationalist. She spent her lifetime championing the cause of developing countries and fighting for justice and equality in international affairs. She had a deeply held belief in India's destiny and her place in the world.

Yet no cause was dearer to Indiraji than the emergence of a strong and prosperous South Asia on the world scene. She was an ardent advocate of peace and development in the region. Her empathy and unwavering support for justice and what is right defined her attitude to the people of Bangladesh.

It is therefore befitting that this year's Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development is being awarded to an outstanding political figure of South Asia. Prime Minister Hasina has worked tirelessly through her political career for the welfare and socio-economic development of the people of Bangladesh; but she has been an equally tireless proponent of regional peace, security and progress.

Ever since her return to Bangladesh in 1981, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has played a catalytic role in the emergence of Bangladesh as a dynamic and strong nation. Her journey has not been smooth, yet every challenge has spurred her on to even greater heights. She has earned the love and affection of the people of Bangladesh for her selfless service to a great nation and its great people.

Bangladesh's return to democracy owes a great deal to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's courage, sacrifice and unshakeable belief in the will of the people. As a democracy ourselves, we know that it is a form of governance which is not easy. It requires constant nurturing. It needs wisdom and forbearance. It requires the capacity to manage differences and the willingness to respect them. By championing the cause of democracy and pluralism, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has given the people of Bangladesh the means to realize their true potential and strengthen peace and harmony in the country.

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina led her Party, the Awami League, to a resounding victory in the parliamentary elections in 2008. This is her second term as Prime Minister. In the short period that she has been in office, she has already outlined an ambitious vision for her country and for her people. Her "Vision 2021" seeks to transform Bangladesh by reducing poverty, ensuring access to basic needs and undertaking developmental activities in the agricultural and rural sectors.

As part of achieving the Millennium Development Goals, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has paid particular attention to building on Bangladesh's success in removing gender disparity in enrollment of boys and girls in primary and secondary schools. She herself manifests the emancipation of women in Bangladesh and their determination to be equal partners in shaping their country's future.

One of the Prime Minister's primary concerns has been food security. She has sought a global agreement for development of agriculture, and attainment of food self-sufficiency in developing countries, particularly the Least Developed Countries. She has spoken passionately on behalf of developing countries threatened by climate change and worked to build global consensus on the need to tackle this problem.

Bangladesh has earned international recognition for its successful efforts at improving the social indicators of development and empowering the poor through a mix of well targeted policy initiatives.

Today, Bangladesh's voice is heard with respect in international forums. Speaking at the United Nations General Assembly last year, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina said, and I quote: "At present we are witnessing a rapidly changing world whether be it in the form of climate change, economic turmoil, or terrorism. It is crystal clear to those who wish to open their eyes that we all belong to a global village where we must live and work together. Indeed, our lives and our world are intertwined. I, therefore, call upon all to discard short-sighted discords, and adopt a common resolve in facing today's grim challenges."

This grand vision of international cooperation would have been very dear to Indiraji's heart and she would have heartily endorsed the honour being conferred today on Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina.

Today we honour not just a great daughter of Bangladesh but a distinguished world leader. On behalf of the Government and people of India, I congratulate Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on receiving this prestigious award. I reiterate our commitment to work together with the Government and people of Bangladesh to shape a brighter future for our people and to enhance their common prosperity and development."

measures including dredging of Ichhamati river, Tipaimukh Dam Project and river inter-linking project in India.

On the question of sharing of Teesta waters, India presented a draft Statement on Principles of Sharing of Teesta Waters during dry season.
Both sides agreed to mandate the respective Secretaries of Water Resources to examine the drafts presented by both sides towards an expeditious conclusion of an interim agreement on Teesta. This is a significant movement forward on this issue.

Both sides expressed satisfaction at the bank protection and embankments repair works being undertaken by mutual agreement on several sites in both countries. In addition to the 66 sites already agreed, both sides finalized 12 new Indian sites and 22 new Bangladesh sites. They also expressed satisfaction at the on-going dredging activities on the Ichhamati river.

190. Remarks by Finance Minister to media on the occasion of the signing of US$ One Billion Line of Credit Agreement between EXIM Bank and Government of Bangladesh.

Dhaka, August 7, 2010.

It is always a pleasure to be in Dhaka. I bring you warm greetings from the people and the Government of India.

2. We have had a landmark visit to India of H.E. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina in January, 2010. The Joint communiqué issued during the visit is comprehensive, forward-looking and path-breaking. We are firmly committed to implementing the vision, which the two leaders have set out for India-Bangladesh relations.

3. The historic bonds between India and Bangladesh run deep and are nurtured by fraternal, linguistic and cultural ties. The peoples of our two countries desire closer ties and interaction in all spheres. To realise their hopes, it is incumbent on us to open new vistas and widen further our multi-dimensional ties.

4. I congratulate and laud H.E. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina for her steadfast pursuit of democracy, social justice and greater economic development for Bangladesh and to promote peace and understanding in the region. We are committed to assisting each other in addressing their priorities for development and in their immediate requirements for people of both the countries. It is in that spirit that we have just agreed to export of 3 lakh tones of rice and 2 lakh tones of wheat, in spite of a ban in India on exports of these essential commodities.

5. During the visit of the Prime Minister of Bangladesh, we have embarked on several new initiatives. India has readily provided transit for Bangladesh to Nepal and Bhutan. We will soon have in place arrangements to allow trucks from Nepal to enter the Bangladesh side of the land custom station and Banglabanda. We have also agreed to contribute to alleviating your power requirements and to undertake joint ventures to build thermal power plants. These are significant developments.

6. We have agreed to revive Land Customs Stations along the Tripura and Mizoram border, build a bridge over river Feni at Sabroom-Ramgarh and strengthen other border infrastructure. We have already identified two areas on the Meghalaya border to set up Border Haats. We have trained your experts and will send ours this month to assist in upgrading the Standards and Certification procedures. After a gap of several years, the Joint Rivers Commission was convened as agreed in March this year and both sides have already exchanged drafts on Teesta water sharing. Works on 50 river embankments on both sides have started. The electrification cables for Dahagram and Angarpota have been laid. Both countries need to ensure that we remain focused on implementing these initiatives. It is a matter of satisfaction that we have made significant strides in the path of their realisation, given the fact that many of them require longer gestation period for implementation.

7. Security cooperation is an area which has engaged the attention of both our countries, given our common desire to root out the forces of extremism and terrorism from our midst. Insurgents and insurgent groups have the potential to affect our relations. We deeply appreciate the efforts of the Government of Bangladesh to tackle this menace and we will continue to be closely engaged.

8. I am indeed delighted to witness the signing of the Agreement on Line of Credit between Government of Bangladesh and EXIM Bank of India. The US$ One Billion Line of Credit is the largest ever given by India to any country. The terms of this Line of Credit are extremely favourable. I am confident. That this Line of Credit will be the stepping stone for a shared destiny and will transform our bilateral engagement. India will do whatever possible to assist Bangladesh to implement the various projects envisaged under this Line of Credit, including in the areas of railway infrastructure, supply of coaches, locomotives, busses and dredging.

9. India and Bangladesh are both developing countries aiming to achieve a higher trajectory of growth. It is by coming together that we can realise this objective and we need to encourage collaborative ventures and investments be it in the private or public sector.

10. I have just met with H.E. Mr. Abdul Maal Abdul Muhith, Finance Minister and H.E. Dr. Dipu Moni, Foreign Minister. I shall soon be calling on H.E. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and very much look forward to meeting her.

11. I thank you for your presence.

Hon'ble Speaker,

Hon'ble Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh returned from Bhutan on 30th April where he participated in the 16th SAARC Summit. This was a historic summit as it marked the 25th anniversary of the Organization. This was also the first gathering of the SAARC leaders in Bhutan.

As Honourable members are aware, we have a historically close relationship with Bhutan. We would like to compliment the Royal Government of Bhutan and its enlightened leadership on the excellent manner in which they organized the Summit, and ensured productive outcomes.

Prime Minister had very fruitful discussions with Prime Minister Jigmi Thinley and an audience with Their Majesties the King of Bhutan and the Fourth King of Bhutan. These discussions have reinforced my conviction that India-Bhutan relations remain strong, deep-rooted and steeped in mutual trust and understanding. Prime Minister and Prime Minister Thinley launched two new large hydropower projects as part of our commitment to jointly develop 10,000 MWs of hydro-power capacity in Bhutan by the year 2020. They also laid the foundation stone of the Bhutan Institute of Medical Sciences and initiated an e-governance and IT project in Bhutan.

At the SAARC Summit, Prime Minister recalled what Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had said at the first SAARC Summit in Dhaka in 1985, that the establishment of the organization was an act of faith. The Summit provided an opportunity to reflect on what we have achieved in these two and half decades, what more needs to be done, and on the kind of a South Asia we wish to create for our present and future generations.

Prime Minister stressed that regional cooperation should enable freer movement of people, of ideas, and of goods and services. It is not sufficient to merely conclude agreements and conventions. The challenge before us is to translate these agreements into practical activities and programmes, which touch the lives of our people. Prime Minister emphasized the need for greater regional cooperation in areas such as agriculture, forestry, education, healthcare, women’s empowerment, skill development and technological innovations. The Summit concluded an Agreement on Trade in Services.

The 21st century cannot be an Asian century unless South Asia marches together. Prime Minister shared our vision of a prosperous and vibrant South Asia playing its rightful role in shaping the global discourse on issues facing the world. There was a convergence of views on the need to transform SAARC into a truly action-oriented, people-centric and dynamic regional organization. There was unanimous condemnation of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.

The theme of the Summit was “Climate Change”. The leaders of the SAARC countries exchanged views on deepening regional cooperation for tackling the effects of global warming in our region, and how we can benefit from each other’s experiences and strengths. A Summit Declaration on Climate Change as well as a Convention on Cooperation on Environment was concluded.

There was widespread appreciation for India’s initiatives and role in contributing to the region’s stability and prosperity. We will continue to persevere in our efforts to create a climate of constructive cooperation in South Asia based on mutual respect and mutual benefit.

Prime Minister had the opportunity of having bilateral meetings with the Presidents of Maldives and Sri Lanka, and the Prime Ministers of Bangladesh, Nepal and Pakistan. There was a common desire among all our neighbours to further strengthen their relations with India.

During Prime Minister’s meeting with President Nasheed of Maldives, the two sides reviewed our close and friendly relations, based on mutual trust and understanding and shared interests. Prime Minister reiterated India’s commitment to deepen our partnership with Maldives across all areas.

President Rajapaksa of Sri Lanka informed Prime Minister of their efforts for political reconciliation and for bringing lasting peace in the country. Prime Minister congratulated the President on the recent election victory in Presidential and Parliamentary elections, and reiterated India's commitment to assist Sri Lanka in its relief and rehabilitation efforts, and to strengthen our bilateral relations in diverse areas.

With Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina of Bangladesh, Prime Minister reaffirmed our commitment to expeditiously implement the various decisions taken during her landmark visit to India in January 2010.

Prime Minister conveyed to Prime Minister Madhav Kumar Nepal, India's support for the ongoing efforts of the people of Nepal for the consolidation of multi-party democracy in Nepal. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the progress made in our cooperation since the visits of Prime Minister Nepal to India in August 2009 and the President of Nepal in February 2010.

Prime Minister had a cordial and frank discussion with Prime Minister Gilani of Pakistan. He told him that if the trust deficit between India and Pakistan can be eliminated all issues can be resolved through dialogue. Good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan were in the interest of both our countries as well as in the interest of the peace, stability and development in the region. He reiterated our serious concerns on terrorism emanating from Pakistan, and urged the Pakistani Prime Minister to expedite action against the perpetrators of the Mumbai terrorist attack. He was assured that Pakistan was serious about bringing these perpetrators to book. The Foreign Ministers and Foreign Secretaries have been entrusted with the responsibility to work out mechanisms on how the trust deficit can be removed.

President Hamid Karzai of Afghanistan visited India on April 26-27, 2010, before proceeding to Thimphu for the SAARC Summit. Prime Minister met President Karzai and discussed a broad range of bilateral and regional issues of mutual interest, and the two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the strategic partnership between the two countries. Prime Minister reiterated our commitment to assist the Government and people of Afghanistan in their efforts towards the reconstruction and development of their country.

During their meeting EAM stressed the importance of rebuilding consensus among political parties in Nepal to conclude the peace process and to draft the new Constitution within the stipulated timeframe. He urged that the Unified Communist Party of Nepal [Maoist] should fulfill their peace process commitments, which would enable Nepal to complete its historic transition to a multi-party and inclusive democracy.

EAM also conveyed his deep disappointment at the baseless attacks on India by the Maoist leadership which vitiate the age-old and time-tested friendly relations between India and Nepal and the people of the two countries. He emphasized that such baseless propaganda has a negative impact on Indian public opinion.

197. Speech by President Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Banquet hosted by her in honour of the Nepalese President Dr. Ram Baran Yadav.

New Delhi, February 16, 2010.

Your Excellency Dr. Ram Baran Yadav, President of Nepal,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is a great pleasure for me to warmly welcome Your Excellency, the first President of Nepal, to India.

Since time immemorial, the peoples of our two countries have shared the legacy of history, geography and civilization. Innumerable threads of myths and legends, cultures and customs, languages and literatures, triumphs and tribulations, aspirations and goals - in short, threads weaving the entire tapestry of life - have bonded our peoples together. It is a relationship which is unique and special in every sense.

Excellency,

You are no stranger to India. Your links with India go back to the days of your medical education in Kolkata and Chandigarh. We are very proud to see you guide the destiny of your country, and are honoured that you have chosen India, for your first visit abroad as the President of Nepal. Your visit is a testimony to the close bonds between our two countries and peoples.

Over the years, India has transformed itself into one of the leading economies of the world. Our economic growth has opened exciting opportunities not just for our people, but also for co-operation and collaboration with other nations. India has been sharing its resources, infrastructure and institutional capabilities with countries in the region. There is much scope for further promoting and expanding bilateral cooperation with Nepal in hydropower, tourism and agriculture, to name a few sectors that hold much untapped potential. We believe that Nepal's peace, progress and prosperity is not only beneficial for its people, but also for India and our region.
Driven and supported by the indomitable courage, determination and wisdom of its people, Nepal has crossed several important milestones on its journey to a stable and inclusive multi-party democracy. We hope that the remaining tasks would be completed expeditiously, so that the new constitution of Nepal is adopted. It would be a glorious and historic moment for the people of Nepal. We eagerly look forward to rejoicing with Nepal, when the new era dawns on your beautiful country.

As the first President of Nepal, you shoulder immense responsibilities, especially during this period of transition. Right from your days as a student leader, you have cherished democracy and valued freedom of choice. You have stood for the establishment of multi-party democracy and for the well being of the Nepalese people. Your sagacity and wisdom will be called upon on numerous occasions, in the months ahead, to guide the democratic institutions of Nepal. We are confident that, in the years to come, you will look back with satisfaction and cherish the historic role that you played in your country's destiny.

Before I conclude, I would like to say that India attaches the highest priority to its relations and cooperation with Nepal. It would render all possible support for economic development and peace in Nepal, in accordance with the wishes and priorities of the people of Nepal.

Excellencies, Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in a toast to:-

— the health and happiness of His Excellency Dr. Ram Baran Yadav, President of Nepal, — the peace, progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Nepal, and;

— the everlasting and ever growing friendship between India and Nepal.

199. Response of Official Spokesperson on comments made by the so-called Chief Minister of Gilgit-Baltistan.

New Delhi, January 1, 2010.

In response to a question on certain remarks by the so-called Chief Minister of Gilgit-Baltistan the Official Spokesperson said,

“We have seen media reports regarding remarks of the so-called Chief Minister of Gilgit-Baltistan in which he said that Gilgit-Baltistan had become the ‘fifth province’ of Pakistan and henceforth had no connection to Kashmir.

The entire state of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India by virtue of its accession to India in 1947. Any action to alter the status of any part of the territory under the illegal occupation of Pakistan has no legal basis whatsoever, and is completely unacceptable.

Pakistan's actions regarding Gilgit-Baltistan in the past few months cannot camouflage its illegal occupation of part of the state of Jammu and Kashmir, nor can they hide the denial of basic rights to the people in that part for the past six decades.”

Last September, India had lodged a protest with Pakistan over its package for the Northern Areas through the "Gilgit-Baltistan Empowerment and Self Governance Order, 2009." Pakistan Deputy High Commissioner was then summoned to the Ministry of External Affairs and handed over the diplomatic letter of protest. In a statement last September, the Ministry emphasised that the "entire State of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India by virtue of its accession in 1947. The so-called 'Gilgit-Baltistan Empowerment and Self Governance Order, 2009' was yet another cosmetic exercise intended to camouflage Pakistan's illegal occupation." Pakistan, as usual, reacting to the Indian statement, rejected it.
200. Excerpts relevant to Pakistan from the Interview of Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao under the programme 'Devil's Advocate' at the CNN-IBN TV with Karan Thapar.

New Delhi, January 17, 2010.

Interviewer (Mr. Karan Thapar): Hello and welcome to Devil's Advocate and the first television interview with the new Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao.

Foreign Secretary, let us start with Pakistan. Two fidayeen attacks in Kashmir within 24 hours; rocket attacks at Attari and Poonch; frequent firing across the international border; and all of this within the space of a week. How do you view these developments?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): With great concern, Karan. Terrorism, and the whole phenomenon of cross-border terrorism, as it affects us today has not diminished in any manner. All the events you have seen over the last few days basically point to the basic and undeniable fact that the infrastructure of terrorism which operates out of Pakistan and territory under Pakistan control has not been dismantled and it continues to be directed against the Indian people. It affects ordinary people. Terrorism affects people like you and me.

Interviewer: The recent terrorist attack at Lal Chowk in Srinagar was clearly masterminded by handlers in Pakistan. Do you have any idea who they are? Are they the Harkat-ul-Mujahideen as the press suggests? Or could they be the Lashkar-e-Tayyiba who are responsible for 26/11 in Mumbai?

Foreign Secretary: All I would like to say, Karan, is that whichever group they may belong to they are essentially part of the same species. These are terrorism-spewing, violence-generating people who have an agenda, an agenda of violence and mayhem to pursue.

Interviewer: And these are clearly, therefore, people operating out of Pakistan.

Foreign Secretary: Obviously.

Interviewer: Do you believe that they have some form of assistance or support from the Pakistani establishment or state?
Foreign Secretary: Let me put it this way. I think the experience over the last two decades would make it very clear to us that this has been an instrument of state policy which has been pursued by agencies within Pakistan.

Interviewer: And that is clearly the case in what happened in Kashmir the other day as well.

Foreign Secretary: We have very little or no evidence to suggest otherwise.

Interviewer: The telephone intercepts have the Pakistani handlers making it absolutely clear that they are seeking to revive violence and militancy in Kashmir. This happened days after President Zardari committed his own Government to fulfilling his father-in-law Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's pledge for a thousand-year war to liberate Kashmir. Are the two linked?

Foreign Secretary: Militancy and violence in Kashmir is a longstanding phenomenon. We have seen it happen over and over again for many many years now. And this has been accompanied by rhetoric, rhetoric directed against India, all forms and means of propaganda that comes across from the Pakistan side. So, rhetoric, militancy and violence, together they make a very combustible combination.

Interviewer: And President Zardari's rhetoric is a facilitating or encouraging factor behind the sort of terrorism we have witnessed.

Foreign Secretary: Let me say that rhetoric hardly helps the situation. It poisons peoples' minds.

Interviewer: And clearly President Zardari's rhetoric has been unhelpful, has been poisonous.

Foreign Secretary: Rhetoric is always unhelpful in situations such as these.

Interviewer: Many analysts believe that as President Obama's Af-Pak strategy starts to put pressure on the Taliban and Al Qaeda in the West, they will seek to deflect attention by carrying out terrorist attacks on India in the East. Is that now starting to happen?

Foreign Secretary: The Af-Pak strategy announced by President Obama in December, the details of it that is, is directed against terrorism in our region. It seeks to eliminate the sources of terrorism in Afghanistan. It is also focused on the sources of terrorism which operate out of areas contiguous to Afghanistan. Having said that, I would also say that the United States has been sensitised to our concerns about terrorism that operates from areas contiguous to our border with Pakistan, against our people. And I believe the US is sensitive to these concerns.

Interviewer: Absolutely. But let us leave the US sensitivity aside. We can come to that later. Do you also think that as US pressure on the Taliban and Al Qaeda increases they might be tempted to deflect attention by carrying out terrorist attacks on India in the East?

Foreign Secretary: Karan, I would respond to that by saying that eternal vigilance is the price that we have to pay in all these situations, and we have to be constantly alert to this possibility.

Interviewer: Let us broaden our discussion a little. Amidst persistent political turmoil and relentless terror, how worried are you about the internal political situation in Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: Terrorism and violence within Pakistan, and you have seen a rise in levels of both terrorism and violence within Pakistan, clearly reverberate beyond Pakistan’s borders. We have said over and over again that we would like a secure, a stable, a peaceful Pakistan. Obviously violence and terrorism in Pakistan and manifestations of what you referred to as instability, concern all of us.

Interviewer: So, as Pakistan begins to appear to collapse under its internal problems, India becomes threatened as well.

Foreign Secretary: I am not going to make any prognosis on that. That is really not a part of my brief. But, as I said, obviously we are close neighbours of Pakistan.

Interviewer: And we are affected.

Foreign Secretary: We would naturally be concerned about instability or rise in levels of terrorism and increased violence within that country.

Interviewer: In November in Washington the Prime Minister said I quote, "I do not know who to deal with in Pakistan". This was in the interview he gave CNN. Does this mean that you do not believe that President Zardari's civilian Government are the right people to talk to?

Foreign Secretary: We deal with the Government of Pakistan. Obviously we have a diplomatic relationship with Pakistan. We are in touch with representatives of the Pakistan Government. For whatever reason, over and over again we are in contact. There are issues, humanitarian issues that exist between the two countries. So, that relationship continues to be transacted. The levels of dialogue obviously are much diminished after the Mumbai attacks.

Interviewer: Before I come to the question of dialogue and the level of dialogue, how stable do you think President Zardari is?

Foreign Secretary: Again, I do not want to pronounce a judgment on the stability or otherwise of the leadership in Pakistan. We, as I said, would advocate and have advocated always the need for a stable, secure, a peaceful Pakistan because that helps the Pakistan people, it helps relations with India, it helps the neighbourhood.

Interviewer: The press, both in the West and in India, are beginning to speculate about possibility of another military takeover in Pakistan. Does the Government of India believe that that now looks more likely than it did, say, earlier on?

Foreign Secretary: Let me say that we consistently and closely monitor developments in Pakistan. It is our neighbour. It is a country that is next door to us. And as I said, events, developments in Pakistan are of relevance to the entire region. And obviously the growth of civil society, the strengthening of democratic institutions in Pakistan is good for our future.

Interviewer: So, clearly India would not favour a military takeover. You would not welcome one.

Foreign Secretary: Really, to speak out on Pakistan's internal affairs I think would not be advisable.

Interviewer: On the other hand, the Pakistan High Commissioner in Delhi has said that it is unfortunate there is no dialogue between Delhi and Islamabad. Given that India at Sharm el-Sheikh committed itself to action on terrorism should not be linked to the Composite Dialogue process, and secondly that dialogue is the only way forward, is there a possibility that in this New Year 2010 we could see the resumption of dialogue?

Foreign Secretary: Dialogue between India and Pakistan is obviously the way forward for normalisation of relations and to resolve outstanding issues between the two countries. We in India have never turned our back on dialogue with Pakistan. But let me also add that terrorism is a standalone phenomenon, and terrorism affects the climate of dialogue. It affects the progress of this dialogue. And when Pakistan refers to the need to resume Composite Dialogue, we say you have to create the right atmosphere for that dialogue to move forward.

Interviewer: Can I put this to you? How much credit do you give Islamabad for the fact that there has been no major terrorist attack or strike since 26/11?

Foreign Secretary: I think it is too early to give credit or otherwise to Pakistan for what has or has not happened. Terrorism directed against India continues from territory under Pakistan control and from Pakistan. Look at what has been happening in Srinagar over the last few weeks. Look at the incidents of infiltration that have gone up despite the fact that this is cold weather. In winter traditionally we have not had so many incidents of infiltration, but those continue. They clearly point to the continuation of efforts directed against our territory, directed in order to foment violence in Kashmir and terrorist incidents.

Interviewer: So, clearly Pakistan needs to do more before India is convinced that it is effectively responding to the terror India faces which emanates out of Pakistani soil.

Foreign Secretary: Karan, let me say Pakistan can do more.

Interviewer: And you are waiting for that before any talks resume.

Foreign Secretary: We wait and we hope Pakistan can do more.

Interviewer: What about the opinion expressed by some analysts that if India were to resume the dialogue process, it might strengthen Islamabad’s hand in delivering on terror?

Foreign Secretary: I know the school of thought and it I think has gained some currency in Pakistan in recent months. But let us look at it this way. Terrorism is not a tap you turn on and off because of the absence of or prevalence of dialogue. Dialogue does not flow from the barrel of the gun, Karan.

Interviewer: There is another problem which seems to be also occurring which is that the Indian Government's refusal to talk seems to have hardened attitudes in Pakistan. The popular mood has turned to resentment. Some even say there is a simmering anger towards India. Does that worry you?

Foreign Secretary: It is a matter of concern that the people of Pakistan are being fed with slanted and biased accounts of what India's attitude may be. India's attitude is for dialogue and to promote a peaceful resolution of problems with Pakistan. But, Karan, for all of us who have grown up against the background of what has happened in this relationship, I think there is a sense of déjà vu. And I feel a sense of sadness also that people, ordinary people in Pakistan, are being misled by propaganda of this sort.

Interviewer: So, your position remains that we want further proof of Pakistan's action on terror before the dialogue process resumes.

Foreign Secretary: As I said, Pakistan can do much more to deliver on this subject.

Interviewer: And must do much more.

Foreign Secretary: And must do much more.

*                             *                           *                       *

Interviewer: Let us turn briefly to the United States of America. You mentioned America in Part-I. I want to pick up on something that you spoke about. As the Obama Administration's Af-Pak strategy begins to work, now it is clear to everyone that its success is critically dependent upon the cooperation President Obama gets from Pakistan. Does that mean that there could be a time when President Obama becomes sensitive to Pakistan's view that the terror India faces is linked to Kashmir? Does that possibility worry you?

Foreign Secretary: I am not worried about that because the United States is fully sensitised to our concerns on these issues. They consulted us closely in the run up to the Af-Pak strategy’s formulation and we continue to remain in close touch with our American interlocutors on this. America is well aware of India’s approach to these issues, our concerns about terrorism emanating from Pakistan, our desire to see a secure and stable Afghanistan; and that will involve tackling the sources of terrorism in our region. And America understands that Pakistan continues to provide safe haven to a number of terrorists operating in our region.

Interviewer: I suppose the key issue here is the following. Is President Obama looking to play a more assertive role in sorting out Kashmir and India would be willing to accept it?

Foreign Secretary: Karan, President Obama and the American Administration have told us over and over again that they have no desire to play a mediatory role on issues concerning India and Pakistan.

Interviewer: Even though he says different things in the letters he sends to President Zardari in November, just before his December Af-Pak speech; even though in his original Af-Pak speech of March he spoke about constructive diplomacy? Despite those contradictory statements or commitments, you still believe that he does not want to play a role?

Foreign Secretary: I do not believe there is contradiction here. The relationship between India and the United States is a strategic, global partnership. There is confidence, there is trust in this communication that India and the United States have. And the United States is well aware of our position on this.

Interviewer: My last question to you. Is there a danger that India and Pakistan could be re-hyphenated either because of the way the Obama Administration views South Asia or because of the way events are playing out?

Foreign Secretary: Karan, the logic of the relationship and the logic of the times defies your assessment. There is no question of this relationship being re-hyphenated, as you say. Our relationship with the United States is a mature relationship. It is one of the defining partnerships of the times as President Obama said so eloquently during our Prime Minister’s visit.
201. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Participation of Pakistani Cricketers in Indian Premier League Cricket, 2010.

New Delhi, January 21, 2010.

Government has seen reports* attributing the absence of Pakistani cricketers from IPL 2010, to be held in India, to apprehension about the players getting necessary Indian visas. Such apprehension is completely misplaced.

Seventeen Pakistani cricketers were issued requisite Indian visas at very short notice in December 2009 and January 2010 to participate in IPL 2010. Two visas were issued in Islamabad, while three were issued in Wellington (New Zealand) and twelve in Sydney (Australia), where the concerned Pakistani cricketers had applied while touring New Zealand and Australia, respectively. Based on a request from the Pakistan Cricket Board to High Commission of India in Islamabad, the Ministry of External Affairs facilitated necessary clearances from other Ministries of the Government of India.

Cricketers from Pakistan had participated in the first edition of IPL in 2008 but not in the second edition in 2009, which was held in South Africa. One Pakistani cricketer participated in the Champions League T20 tournament held in India in October 2009. The participation or absence of Pakistani cricketers in a commercial event of the nature of IPL is, thus, a matter not within the purview of the Government.

Blaming the Government for the absence of Pakistani players from the next edition of IPL is unfortunate. Pakistan should introspect on the reasons which have put a strain on relations between India and Pakistan, and have adversely impacted on peace, stability and prosperity in the region.

* The reports came in the wake of IPL teams failing to pick up even a single Pakistani player in the auction held for the players for the League.*
202. Response of Official Spokesperson to a query regarding recent ceasefire violations by Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 22, 2010.

Responding to a query regarding recent increase in incidents of ceasefire violations by Pakistan, including at the International Border, the Official Spokesperson said that the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan was called to the Ministry of External Affairs today and a strong protest was conveyed over incidents of grave and unprovoked firing across the International Border by Pakistan, including the firing of rockets in the Amritsar Sector of the International Border in the night of January 8-9, 2010. Government has asked Pakistan to take all necessary steps to prevent recurrence of such incidents.

204. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on Reports relating to unresolved humanitarian issues between India and Pakistan pertaining to prisoners and fishermen in each other's custody.

New Delhi, March 6, 2010.

We have seen reports in the Pakistani media on unresolved humanitarian issues between India and Pakistan pertaining to prisoners and fishermen in each other's custody. India had requested Pakistan in January this year, and again during the talks between Foreign Secretaries last month, to convey dates for the next meeting of India-Pakistan Judicial Committee, which is to be held in Pakistan. This proposal was made so that these humanitarian issues are addressed expeditiously. Pakistan's response is still awaited. After the release of 100 Indian fishermen by Pakistan in December 2009, there are more than 550 Indian fishermen and 400 Indian fishing boats in Pakistan's custody, besides 220 Indian prisoners.

205. Response of Official Spokesperson to a reported statement on Hafiz Saeed.

New Delhi, March 7, 2010.

In response to queries regarding a reported statement by the Pakistan Foreign Minister that India has not demanded the arrest of Hafiz Saeed and that the issue did not even figure in the recently concluded Foreign Secretary- level talks with Pakistan, the Official Spokesperson, while expressing surprise, stated that India has been demanding action against Saeed, one of the masterminds of the Mumbai terrorist attack, since the barbaric and dastardly attack took place.

A dossier containing a compilation of evidence on the involvement of Hafiz Saeed in the terrorist attack was handed over to Pakistan on August 21, 2009 and his name featured prominently in yet another dossier handed over to the Pakistan Foreign Secretary during the talks on February 25, 2010. Saeed’s activities including his recent vitriolic and venomous statements aimed at fomenting further acts of terrorism against India and the unhindered public space and freedom he enjoys in Pakistan was raised strongly by India during the Foreign Secretary-level talks.

206. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs condemning the terrorist attacks in Lahore on March 12, 2010 and rejecting Pakistan’s allegation of Indian hand in these attacks.

New Delhi, March 13, 2010.

Government of India unequivocally condemns the series of bomb blasts in Lahore* on March 12, 2010 which claimed the lives of scores of people, including innocent civilians, and injured many more, among them women and children. Our condolences go out to the families of those killed by these acts of terrorism.

At the same time, Government is deeply disappointed by statements emanating from Pakistan alleging an Indian hand in yesterday’s attacks in Lahore, and other terrorist acts and disturbances elsewhere in Pakistan. We categorically reject, once again, the allegations of India’s involvement in such acts or activities. Government has reiterated on several occasions, and at the highest level, that India has no interest in destabilizing Pakistan. It is unfortunate that by repeating such unfounded and unsubstantiated allegations, officials in responsible positions in the Government of Pakistan put a strain on our bilateral relationship, instead of concentrating on dismantling the infrastructure of terrorism directed against India and adversely impacting on Pakistan itself.

In a Taliban terrorist attack in Lahore on March 12, (with two near-simultaneous suicide attacks) targeting the Army in the cantonment area, 45 people were killed including 10 soldiers, and injuring 100 others. In the second major attack in the city within a week, the bombers, who were on foot, hit vehicles of the Garrison Security Force patrolling the cantonment.
Global water resources, taken for granted by mankind, are getting increasingly scarce and coming under added stress because of growing population. Water supplies are getting adversely affected by factors such as climate change. Because water is a precious resource, its depletion is a matter of serious concern and arouses public anxiety. But precisely because water is precious, public discourse on its growing scarcity ought to be well informed, so that it leads us to the right approach in ensuring the water security of our own and coming generations.

Ladies and Gentlemen, the issue of water sharing that arose between our countries in 1947, was settled with the coming into force of The Indus Waters Treaty in 1960. This treaty was the result of 8 years of painstaking negotiations carried out by India and Pakistan with the good offices of the World Bank. The Treaty was voluntarily accepted by the two sides as fair and equitable. The thoroughness with which it deals with various aspects of water sharing is a testimony to the hard work put in by the negotiators of both sides to produce an enduring framework. It laid down the rights and obligations of both sides in relation to the use of waters of the Indus system of rivers. It also laid down a framework for resolution, in a co-operative spirit, of the questions, differences or disputes that might arise in implementation of the Treaty, through bilateral means or use, if necessary, of the services of a neutral expert or a Court of Arbitration.

Those who question the fairness of the Indus Waters Treaty to Pakistan need to note that it assigned 80% share of water of the Indus system of rivers to Pakistan. The Treaty gave the use of Eastern Rivers (Sutlej, Beas and Ravi) - with a mean flow of 33 MAF - to India, while giving the use of the Western Rivers, viz. Indus, Jhelum and Chenab - with a mean flow of 136 MAF - to Pakistan. Since Pakistan was dependent on water supplies from the Eastern Rivers until the 15th of August 1947, India also agreed to pay a sum of 62 million Pounds Sterling to Pakistan to build replacement canals from the Western Rivers and other sources. These were clearly not the gestures of an upper riparian bent upon depriving the lower riparian of water, as is alleged by some today. The Treaty also permitted limited use of water of Western Rivers by India as follows:

a) Domestic use: - This includes use for drinking, washing, bathing and sanitation etc.

b) Non consumptive use: - This covers any control or use of water for navigation, floating of timber or other property, flood control and fishing etc.

c) Agricultural use: - India can draw water from the Western Rivers in terms of maximum permissible Irrigated Crop Area. The total area permitted to be irrigated by India is 1.34 million acres.

d) Generation of Hydroelectric Power: - India can use water from the Western Rivers for run-of-the-river hydroelectric projects as well as for hydroelectric projects incorporated in a storage work, but only to the extent permitted in the provisions regulating storage of water by India from the Western Rivers.

e) Storage of water by India on the Western Rivers: - The Indus Waters Treaty allows India storage capacity on Western Rivers to the tune of 3.6 MAF, in addition to the storage that already existed on these rivers before the coming into force of the Treaty. Out of this, 1.25 MAF is general storage. The remaining quantity is split between 1.6 MAF for generation of hydroelectricity and 0.75 MAF for flood control. In terms of rivers, 0.4 MAF storage is allowed on the Indus, 1.5 on Jhelum and 1.7 on Chenab.

This limited use of water from Western Rivers by India is subject to the conditions laid down in the Treaty to protect the interests of both countries. However, India is yet to use fully its entitlement to the waters of Western Rivers. As against its storage entitlement of 3.6 MAF, India has built no storage so far. Out of the area of 1.34 million acres, permitted for irrigation, we are currently irrigating only 0.792 million acres. We have exploited only a fraction of the hydroelectric potential available to us on these rivers. Out of a total potential of 18,653 MW, projects worth 2324 MW have been commissioned and those for 659 MW are under construction. In any case, even after India starts using its full entitlement of water from the Western Rivers under the Treaty, it will amount to no more than 3% of the mean flow in these rivers.

In order to ensure that implementation of the Treaty received constant attention, a Permanent Indus Commission was created, with a senior and widely experienced Commissioner for Indus Waters from each side. The Commission is charged with the responsibility to establish and maintain co-operative arrangements for implementation of the Treaty, to promote co-operation between the Parties in the development of the waters of the Rivers and to settle promptly any questions arising between the Parties. Each Commissioner for Indus Waters serves as a regular channel of communication in all matters relating to implementation of the Treaty. The Commission undertakes a general tour of inspection of the rivers once in five years and special tours in the interim. The Commission meets regularly at least once a year and in the interim as required. It has so far undertaken a total of 111 tours, both in India and Pakistan, and has held 104 meetings. The Commission has shown tremendous potential in ensuring smooth functioning of the Treaty. In the 50 years of the Treaty, only once was an issue, viz. Baglihar, referred to a neutral expert. We believe that the potential of the Permanent Indus Commission can and ought to be used more effectively. In fact, we could even have the Commission sit in the nature of a consultative dispute avoidance body and take the views of experts - national and international - with a view to bringing up-to-date technology to the notice of the Commission to help it reach correct and acceptable solutions.

Ladies and Gentlemen, public discourse in Pakistan has of late increasingly focused on certain alleged acts of omission and commission on the part of India as being responsible for water scarcity in Pakistan. "Water issue" between India and Pakistan is spoken of as an issue whose resolution is essential to build peace between our two countries. Preposterous and completely unwarranted allegations of "stealing water" and waging a "water war" are being made against India. It is alleged that we are hindering water flows into Pakistan and developing the infrastructure to stop and divert these flows to serve our own needs. Such accusations bear no relation whatsoever to the reality on the ground. The fact is that India has been scrupulously providing Pakistan its share of water in keeping with the Indus Waters Treaty. We have never hindered water flows to which Pakistan is entitled, not even during the wars of 1965 and 1971 as well as other periods of tense relations and we have no intention of doing so. Those, who allege that India is acquiring the capacity to withhold Pakistan's share of water, completely ignore the fact that this would require a storage and diversion canals network on a large scale. Such a network simply does not exist and figures nowhere in our plans.

I shall now deal with the apprehensions, misconceptions, misinformation and allegations pertaining to India that characterize the debate on water scarcity in Pakistan.

The Indus Waters Treaty does not require India to deliver any stipulated quantities of water to Pakistan in the Western Rivers. Instead, it requires us to let flow to Pakistan the water available in these rivers, excluding the limited use permitted to India by the Treaty, for which we do not need prior agreement of Pakistan. Reduced flows into Pakistan from time to time are not the result of violation of Indus Waters Treaty by India or any action on our part to divert such flows or to use more than our assigned share of water from Western Rivers. Water flows in rivers depend, inter alia, on melting of snow and quantum of rainfall. India itself suffered serious draught conditions in 2009, with around 250 districts bearing the brunt of draught. Rainfall during the monsoon season was 20% less than normal countrywide, with many states in the North experiencing a much higher percentage of shortfall. Even winter rains have fallen far short of normal. The quantum of water flow in Western Rivers, as indeed in any other river, varies from year to year, dipping in certain years and recovering in some subsequent years. Permit me to illustrate this point by using the flows data in respect of the three rivers.

Let us start with the river Chenab by using the average flows data for the month of September over a period of ten years since 1999 at six recording points, beginning deep on the Indian side at Udaipur and moving westwards to Marala, where Chenab enters Pakistan. The flows (Discharge in Cusecs) are as follows:-
It will be seen from the above table that increase or decrease of flows at Marala is reflected in the flows at all the points on the Indian side. This shows that when Pakistan receives reduced flows, it is because of reduced flows available on the Indian side and not because of any diversion of water by India. Increased or reduced flows at Udaipur get reflected at all the subsequent points. This point is also illustrated by the following table of the annual flow in Chenab (MAF) from 1997-98 to 2008-09:

The above table shows that decrease of flow entering Pakistan is accompanied by corresponding shortage in India.

The annual flow in Jhelum at Uri, which was 8.29 MAF in 1997, dipped to as low as 3.07 MAF in 1999, but has subsequently recovered to register figures of 6.37 MAF in 2002, 6.31 MAF in 2005 and 5.67 MAF in 2008. The June to December flow in Jhelum at Uri shows the same pattern.

Combined annual flows (MAF) for January-December period in Indus at Nimoo and Chutak for the years 2001 to 2009 are no exception to the above trend as will be seen in the following table:

It will be seen from the above table that the combined flows rose from 6 MAF in 2001 to 11.30 MAF in 2003, only to dip to 6.51 MAF in 2004. The flows have been steadier in recent years, registering 9.41 MAF in 2005, 10.58 MAF in 2006, 8.41 in 2007, 9.95 in 2008 and 9.93 MAF in 2009.

The data that I have provided in respect of flows in all the three Western Rivers clearly demonstrates that these flows have followed a curve moving up and down, depending upon climatic factors from year to year, rather than showing progressive decline, which would be the case if there were any truth in the allegations of India building infrastructure to progressively deprive Pakistan of its share of water.

A complaint has often been made that India has not been providing data of water flows regularly. In accordance with the Indus Waters Treaty, India and Pakistan exchange daily data on about 600 Gauge and Discharge sites on a monthly basis. India has been fulfilling its obligation in providing this data. However, if for some reason, data for particular points is not available, it is so indicated and such information, when received, is provided as supplementary data. I am told that this practice is followed by both sides. India has also supplied in the past, as a gesture of goodwill, data on floods to enable Pakistan take timely action for preventing damage as a result of floods.

One also hears the accusation that India is building hundreds of dams/hydroelectric projects to deny Pakistan its share of water. This does not correspond to the reality on the ground. There are no quantitative limits on the hydroelectricity that India can produce using the Western Rivers. There is also no limit to the number of run-of-river projects that India can build. However, India has so far undertaken a limited number of projects. We have provided information to Pakistan, as per the Treaty, in respect of 33 projects. Out of these, 14 are in operation, 13 are under construction, 2 are still at the proposal stage, 3 have been dropped or deferred and work on one project stands suspended. Out of these 33 projects, as many as 20 have a capacity of 10 MW or less. Projects identified for implementation in the coming years number 22. This certainly does not make for hundreds of dams/hydroelectric projects.

The Indus Waters Treaty requires India to provide certain specified technical information to Pakistan at least six months before the commencement of construction of river works for a hydroelectric or storage project (the period is two months for a Small Plant), in order to enable Pakistan to satisfy itself that the design of a plant conforms to the provisions of the Treaty. If Pakistan raises any objection, it has to be resolved in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty. India has been meeting its obligation to provide the specified information as necessary. In all the cases in the past, India has responded to all queries from Pakistan about such projects, even if these were not strictly in keeping with the Treaty, in order to address Pakistan's concerns. This has resulted in endless delays and cost overruns. The Tulbul Navigation project is a case in point. India provided information to Pakistan on this project as a matter of goodwill. As a further gesture of goodwill, works on the project were unilaterally stopped by India in October, 1986 and remain suspended to this day. However, infinite queries from Pakistan could amount to a virtual veto on Indian projects. This is not the intention of the Treaty in requiring India to provide information in advance of the river works. India is within its rights to proceed with the construction of a plant at the end of the period of advance notice, even if Pakistan raises objections, subject to any subsequent changes in design or any other consequences that may flow from resolution of the matter under Article IX of the Treaty.
India had communicated information concerning Baglihar project on Chenab to Pakistan as early as in 1992. Pakistan's objections were referred to a neutral expert in 2005 at the request of Pakistan. The expert upheld India's design approach and suggested only minor changes in the scope of construction. Pakistan subsequently objected to the initial filling of the Baglihar reservoir. However, this was done by us in keeping with the Treaty provisions. In fact, the Pakistan Indus Commissioner was invited to India at his request in July, 2008 to be briefed about the procedure of initial filling. The actual filling was done in August the same year within the time window specified in the Treaty.

The Kishanganga hydroelectric project on a tributary of river Jhelum has also been objected to by Pakistan, inter alia, on the ground that Pakistan has existing uses on the waters of Kishanganga (Neelum). The matter has been under discussion since 2004. However, details of the claimed existing uses are yet to be substantiated. We believe that the matter should be resolved at the Commission level, keeping in mind the provisions of the Treaty and the findings of the neutral expert in the Baglihar case. In August 2009, we also informed Pakistan that in case technical experts were unable to resolve the issue, efforts could be made to take it up at government level.

Ladies and Gentlemen, India has all along adhered to the provisions of the Indus Waters Treaty and will continue to do so. However, it is natural for questions and issues to arise in the course of implementation of any treaty. We believe that the Permanent Indus Commission is the best forum to resolve all such matters. However, for any issues that cannot be resolved in the Commission, Article IX of the Treaty provides a mechanism for settlement of differences and disputes, which can be resorted to by the aggrieved party. Since the Indus Waters Treaty provides an elaborate framework for distribution of water and resolving any questions, differences or disputes, we fail to understand attempts by some quarters in Pakistan to inflame public passions on the subject. Angry statements targeting India can neither increase the quantity of available water, nor can such statements become a substitute for the mechanism in the Treaty to resolve differences regarding its implementation. Concerns have also been expressed about some Indian projects on Western Rivers from the environmental point of view. I would like to assure you that we have strict norms for such projects under our Environmental Protection Act and Forests Protection Act. These norms include Catchment Area Treatment Plans and Compensatory afforestation.

We have often heard the bizarre allegation that India wants to deprive Pakistan of water to dry up its canals and drains etc, which besides serving as irrigation channels, can also serve as defensive features in times of war. The Chenab Canal network is mentioned in particular in this connection. There is no truth in this allegation. It is clear from what I have mentioned so far that India has not taken any action to deprive Pakistan of its share of water and consequently to dry up its canals.

Another piece of misinformation being spread by certain circles is that a dam/hydroelectric project is being built by the Government of Afghanistan on the Kabul River with India's assistance and this would adversely affect the flows of this river to Pakistan. I would like to inform you that there is no truth in this allegation. Those who make it ought to know that a dam or hydroelectric project is not something that can be built surreptitiously. It is highly undesirable to mislead people by making such baseless allegations on issues, which are easily verifiable on the ground.

Ladies and Gentlemen, the issue of water scarcity in Pakistan cannot be analyzed fully without looking at the picture in the large part of the Indus basin - around 65% - that lies in Pakistan's territory or territory controlled by Pakistan. A preponderant portion of the water of the Western Rivers flowing through Pakistan is generated in the catchment area within Pakistan or territory under Pakistan's control. This share of water is completely controlled by Pakistan. Therefore, it is difficult to understand the excessive and, in many cases, exclusive focus of the public discourse on water scarcity in Pakistan on flows from India. Moreover, as water gets increasingly scarce, the issues of water management and avoidance of wastage of water assume greater significance.

The per capita availability of water in Pakistan is reported to be around 1400 cubic meters or even less. Speaking of the availability and use of water in Pakistan, the Pakistan Water Sector Strategy issued by the Ministry of Water and Power, Government of Pakistan, in 2002 stated the following: "The Indus River and its tributaries on average bring about 152 million acre feet of water annually. This includes 143 MAF from the three Western rivers and 8.4 MAF from the Eastern Rivers. Most of the inflow, about 104 MAF, is diverted for irrigation, with 38 MAF flowing to the sea and about 10 MAF consumed by system losses. The same report stated that out of the 38 MAF flowing to the sea, 93.7% flow is during the Kharif season and for several months during winter, there is no flow to the sea. The report further stated that a part of this water could be effectively used for supplementing the irrigation water, hydropower generation and meeting the agreed environmental needs through storage in multipurpose reservoirs which could carry water over the winter season to ensure a good start to the Kharif cropping season. These statements do not signal shortage of water, but the urgent need for a closer look at the management of available water resources.

According to the report "Pakistan's Water Economy" issued by the World Bank in 2005, salinity also remains a major problem in Pakistan. According to the same report, much of the water infrastructure in Pakistan is in a state of disrepair. Water loss between canal heads and farms is reported to be significant, as high as 30%. The report further states that Pakistan has only 150 cubic meters water storage capacity per capita as against 5000 cubic meters in the US and Australia and 2200 cubic meters in China. Pakistan can store barely 30 days of water in the Indus basin. The report points out that "Relative to other arid countries, Pakistan has very little storage capacity. If no new storage is built, canal diversions will remain stagnant at about 104 MAF and the shortfall will increase by about 12% over the next decade." The Pakistan Water Strategy calculates that Pakistan needs to raise storage capacity by 18 MAF (6 MAF for replacement of storage lost to siltation and 12 MAF of new storage) by 2025 in order to meet the projected water requirements of 134 MAF. Water productivity in Pakistan also remains low. According to the above report, crop yields, both per hectare and per cubic meter of water, are much lower than international benchmarks. Improved irrigation efficiency, through techniques such as sprinkler irrigation and drip irrigation, is the answer to this problem. India has nothing to do with these issues of water management that are internal to Pakistan, but which nevertheless ought to be integral to any discourse on water scarcity. Only Pakistan can seek solutions to these matters.
Ladies and Gentlemen, the Indus Waters Treaty is an example of mutually beneficial co-operation between India and Pakistan for the last 50 years. It has withstood the test of time. Article VII of the Treaty, which deals with future co-operation, recognizes the common interest of both sides in the optimum development of the rivers and lists out the avenues of future co-operation. We need to adhere to the spirit of co-operation, inherent in the Treaty, in ensuring its implementation and to identify further areas of co-operation within its framework. Let me end with the hope that the Indus Waters Treaty, which has completed its first fifty years successfully, will continue to guide us on water sharing in the future.

208. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister’s meeting with the U. S. President Barack Obama.

Please see Document No.566

209. Extract relevant to Pakistan from the Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister’s visit to Thimphu for SAARC Summit.

New Delhi, April 22, 2010.

Question: Has a meeting been set up between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Pakistani Prime Minister? If so, what is the agenda?

Foreign Secretary: The answer is no. As of now, there is no such meeting.
Question: Madam has there been any request from the Pakistani side for a bilateral with Dr. Manmohan Singh in Bhutan? Also, could you tell us a little bit more about Mr. Karzai's visit? Is it something that was planned at the last minute or was this on the cards for some time?

Foreign Secretary: President Karzai is transiting through New Delhi. We thought it would be an excellent opportunity to request him to stay in New Delhi for the 26th and to have discussions on issues of mutual interest concerning the region as also our very strong and friendly development partnership, our time-tested relationship with Afghanistan. As far as the other question you asked, there has been no request from Pakistan for such a meeting, as I said, as of now.

Question: I wanted to ask you about the Pakistan meeting. Should we rule it out or is there a possibility?

Foreign Secretary: I do not believe in making forecasts about whether a meeting will take place or not. I would say that you should wait and let us see how the situation develops.

Question: Madam, the US Ambassador said a couple of days ago that the US is looking for new ways to partner with India in Afghanistan. Has there been any concrete proposal in that respect? You are not saying that a meeting has been set up between Indian and Pakistani Prime Ministers. But what is the message as of now on the talks front? How are you looking at this likely visit?

Foreign Secretary: You are asking me if I have a message?

Question: What is the message to Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: If there is a message I would not be talking about it in this forum. In any case since you have asked me that, I have always said, and you are aware of the Government's position, that dialogue represents a concrete method to move forward in our relationship. That has always been our position. That was the approach we took during the recent Foreign Secretary level talks with Pakistan. There has been no change in that position. As for the subject of Afghanistan and our discussions with the United States on the issue, let me say that the situation in our region, the relations that the United States has with Afghanistan, the relations that India has with Afghanistan, of course do figure in these discussions. I think you are aware, when I addressed the media in Washington the other day, we spoke about how President Obama had expressed his deep appreciation for our role in Afghanistan and the development activities that we have carried forward there, and how we have helped stabilize the situation in Afghanistan. So, we constantly exchange ideas on this issue. This is a subject that remains under discussion with the Government of the United States and indeed with all our other friends and partners.

Question: Madam, last time when the Indian Prime Minister and Pakistan Prime Minister came face to face in Washington, a newspaper carried a headline, "Hands met but hearts did not." Do you think that when they come face to face again there will be any change of hearts this time?

Foreign Secretary: I do not really want to forecast what is going to happen. But let me say that dialogue is always useful. It helps clear the atmosphere and especially between neighbours, such as India and Pakistan. Dialogue is really the way forward.

Question: At the February 25 Foreign Secretary level talks you said that situation was not ripe yet for resuming Composite Dialogue. The talks ended with the two sides agreeing to remain in touch. My question is, is the situation ripe now? Secondly, have you been in touch with your counterpart following February 25 in the last one month or so? And has Pakistan got back to India on those dossiers?

Foreign Secretary: Pakistan has not got back to us on those dossiers that we handed over during the February 25 meeting. No, I have not heard from the Pakistan Foreign Secretary after we met on February 25. Is the situation ripe for the resumption of composite dialogue? The situation has not really changed in that regard because we need action in terms of movement on the Mumbai terror trials that are taking place in Pakistan. The levels of infiltration have been a cause for concern in the last few months. The infrastructure, the activities of terrorist groups on territory controlled by Pakistan is still a cause for serious concern.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.
After the Retreat that Prime Minister attended with the other Heads of State and Government, the bilateral meeting between our Prime Minister and the Prime Minister of Pakistan was held at Bhutan House. Prime Minister and Prime Minister Gilani had very good talks. They discussed all issues in a free and frank manner. They agreed that India-Pakistan cooperation is vital, if the people of South Asia are to realize their destiny and if SAARC is to become an effective and powerful instrument of regional cooperation. They agreed that relations between the two countries should be normalized, and channels of contact should work effectively to enlarge the constituency of peace in both countries.

Prime Minister emphasized to Prime Minister Gilani the various issues that cause concern to India, issues relating to terrorism, the rise in infiltration, and the slow progress in the trial of the Mumbai perpetrators. He told Prime Minister Gilani that India is willing to discuss all issues of concern with Pakistan and to resolve all outstanding issues through dialogue, but that the issue of terrorism is holding back progress.

Prime Minister Gilani on his part shared his perceptions on these issues in a candid manner. He said Pakistan is serious about prosecuting the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks and that all efforts were being made to bring the trial of these individuals to a speedy conclusion. Prime Minister Gilani said that Pakistan would not allow Pakistan territory to be used for terrorist activity directed against India.

The meeting was an exercise in mutual comprehension because there is a lack of mutual trust in the relationship impeding the process of normalization. The two sides have agreed on the need to assess the reasons underlying the current state of relations, or current state of affairs of the relationship and to think afresh on the way forward.
They have agreed that the Foreign Ministers and the Foreign Secretaries will be charged with the responsibility of working out the modalities of restoring trust and confidence in the relationship and thus paving the way for a substantive dialogue on all issues of mutual concern. Thank you.

Question: The statement that you have just read out seems to indicate that there has been a decision to move forward and reopen some channels of communication but not maybe a full Composite Dialogue process. How would you categorize what you are saying that the Foreign Secretaries and Foreign Ministers are now to be charged with taking this forward? What would you call this process now?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think we have to get stuck with nomenclature here. I think what you have to focus on is the fact that both sides are agreed that dialogue is the only way forward, that it is essential to open channels of communication, that there is a need to restore trust and build mutual confidence and that we should discuss all issues of mutual concern.

Question: When you say that we are ready to think afresh, could it lead to Composite Dialogue in times to come? And, was the case of Hafiz Saeed specifically taken up?

Foreign Secretary: Prime Minister did mention our very deep and continuing concerns about Hafiz Saeed, the fact that he has been allowed to go free and engage in language and in communications that are certainly not conducive to building an atmosphere of peace and stability. Yes, we did mention it. And I believe our concerns were registered with the Pakistan side. They did mention that they have some difficulties as far as their judicial system is concerned about tackling such issues. We expressed the hope that their laws to deal with such issues could be strengthened in times to come. As I said in my answer in response to Maya's question, we are not getting stuck with nomenclature here. I am not going to answer that question in the way you have framed it. I said both sides have agreed that the Foreign Ministers and the Foreign Secretaries will take this process forward now, this process of trying to build more trust and confidence in the relationship and to address all issues of concern, thereby ensuring better communication between the two countries.
Question: After Sharm el-Sheikh there was a dialogue between the two prime ministers. Now when is the next meeting? Have any modalities been settled about it?

Foreign Secretary: No modalities have been worked out about it. Let me put it this way. The two sides have agreed to meet as soon as possible. We have not yet fixed a date. Obviously it would be unrealistic for me to tell you here and now that we fixed a date. The Prime Ministers have just met. But the instructions of the Prime Ministers are that the Foreign Ministers and the Foreign Secretaries should meet as soon as possible.

Question: Post-Sharm el-Sheikh there was this entire debate that there was a de-linking from terror as far as talks were concerned but we do seem to have gone back to the old position when we asked Pakistan to act especially on terrorism and track down terrorists. Could you throw some light on that? Secondly, were water disputes and the issue of Kasab brought up by the Pakistani side?

Foreign Secretary: The focus is on charting a course forward. That definitely I think is the message from today’s meeting. So, the searchlight is really on the future, not on the past. Our concerns about terrorism remain very much on the agenda. Prime Minister was very clear that public opinion in India particularly is most concerned about this issue, the issue of the terror machine that operates from Pakistan and that it would be essential for Pakistan to address this issue comprehensively. I believe that Prime Minister Gilani understood the concerns that we expressed in this regard. For instance, on the Mumbai trials he said that their intention is to complete the trial as soon as possible to see that the perpetrators are brought to effective justice. When I say issues of concern will be discussed between the two countries, obviously they will encompass all issues of mutual concern.

Question: What about the water issue?

Foreign Secretary: I have answered that question. All issues of mutual concern would be focused on in the dialogue.

Question: But did the Pakistan Prime Minister raise this issue in particular?
Foreign Secretary: No, the idea was on the renewal of dialogue to understand the state of affairs in the relationship, what is it that is holding both sides back at the moment, how do we address the state of affairs? So, I think there was a lot of soul-searching here. I think you must regard this meeting in that light, a meeting that resulted in an understanding between the two sides that we should honestly attempt now to take this process forward because it is good for our two countries, it is good for the region, and it is good for the destiny of our two peoples.

Question: Madam, I was wondering what has really changed during the last two years? Pakistan has not given any assurance about attacking the terror and the same assurances came today. What has really changed the Government’s mind to reopen the dialogue process?

Foreign Secretary: It is not just a question of one-side agreeing to reopen the dialogue process. I think there was a certain, shall I say, confluence of thought here of basically both sides agreeing that dialogue is the only way forward and that we must attempt to take this process forward, that we should discuss all issues of concern, we should try and understand what are the problems that affect the relationship, and that eventual normalization of relations is good for the people of the two countries and good for the growth of our economies. For instance, one terrorist attack sets back economic well-being by so many percentage points. So, I think both sides want to focus on development, want to focus on taking their economies forward, and improving the living standards of their people in generally bringing peace to the region.

Question: Madam, did the Pakistani side raise the issue of Baluchistan?

Foreign Secretary: The issue was not raised specifically. To the best of my knowledge it was not raised. On this issue, the Pakistan side is well aware of the fact that India does not seek to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries, in the affairs of its neighbours, and Pakistan is our neighbour, and there has been no evidence at all to suggest that there has been any interference by us in the internal affairs of Pakistan.

Question: Madam, you said there was a lot of soul-searching.
Foreign Secretary: Well, that is my phrase.

Question: Okay. My question is about terrorism. Did the Pakistan Prime Minister give a commitment to our Prime Minister that there would be no use of Pakistani territory. Anyway, you did say something to this effect that any commitments on the end of terrorism vis-a-vis India? Do you think that there is any linkage between the end of terrorism and the beginning of dialogue?

Foreign Secretary: Prime Minister was very emphatic in mentioning that Pakistan has to act on the issue of terrorism, that the terror machine, as he termed it, that operates from Pakistan needs to be controlled, needs to be eliminated. That was very clearly said. Prime Minister Gilani on his part said that Pakistan was equally seized of these concerns, that terrorism has affected Pakistan’s well-being also, and that they want to address this issue comprehensively and effectively.

Question: Madam, before this bilateral meeting, the Pakistan Foreign Office had said that Sharm el-Sheikh should be the foundation of whatever future dialogue takes place. Did any such matter come up at this meeting? Is that a position that can ever be acceptable to India?

Foreign Secretary: No, the issue did not come up.

Question: From your briefing we understand that the resumption of the dialogue between India and Pakistan is the biggest outcome of this meeting today.

Foreign Secretary: Dialogue was never broken off. From our side when did we ever say that dialogue was closed? When the Foreign Secretaries met in February we said at that time also that dialogue was the only way forward.

Question: I should say Composite Dialogue. How is it different from the Composite Dialogue? What would you be doing?

Foreign Secretary: I really do not want to get into that kind of debate. I think it does the relationship no good to get stuck with names like that. I think the idea is to discuss all issues of concern. I am not going to get stuck with nomenclature, I said that very clearly. So, you are not going to get an answer from me on that.

Question: How long the two prime ministers talked one-to-one? Did the question of Kasab come up? There was a talk of handing over Kasab to Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: One-to-one meeting was for more than an hour. As far as the issue of Kasab is concerned, I was not present during the one-to-one discussion, let me say. I am not able to tell you whether that issue was discussed during the one-to-one meeting.

Question: You have just said that both sides have agreed to mutually get down analyzing why things have gone wrong between the two countries. Why this sudden realization? Do you think you want to disown the past and all the rhetoric that you have been engaging in about terror from Pak? What is the reason for this sudden change in attitude?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think literal interpretations can help this relationship. I do not believe the past can be abandoned. I do not believe in any relationship you forget the past and then build anew. You have to understand from the past and then build the future accordingly. I think that was what came through.

Question: Madam, there is frustration among the other countries that SAARC Summit has always been overshadowed by the bilateral problems between India and Pakistan. Apart from the bilateral issues, what is your view in terms of trade in services bringing about more economic cooperation between SAARC countries?

Foreign Secretary: Let me say to you that India attaches the utmost importance to its participation in SAARC, to the strengthening of regional cooperation within SAARC, to speed up the process of implementation of the various understandings and the projects that we have agreed to implement within the ambit of SAARC. And that came through very clearly in our meetings at the Standing Committee of the Foreign Secretaries, at the Council of Ministers, and at the Summit meeting yesterday. SAARC at 25 years, the Silver Jubilee 16th SAARC Summit I think focused on these issues very effectively. Of course, bilateral meetings are always held on the sidelines of such summit meetings. The relationship between India and Pakistan I think receives the focus of all South Asian neighbours also. So, I know that there is a lot of interest when India and Pakistan meet. But I do not think the word overshadow should be used in this context. I think that SAARC, its cooperation among all eight neighbours in South Asia, has a vision for the future. In fact, the Vision Statement that the Summit Declaration hopes to speak of, you will see it once it is released, talks about a number of ideas that we could institutionalize to take this common vision of SAARC forward. Trade in services helps us to build more cooperation in the hospitality industry, in civil aviation, in health, in education. So, again it is a visible sign of SAARC coming of age, the new maturity in our cooperation.

Question: Just to go back to what you were saying that you do not want to get bogged down by nomenclature and that India and Pakistan will discuss all issues of concern, apart from terrorism what are the other issues of concern?

Foreign Secretary: Maya, I need not educate you on the relationship. You know exactly what is meant by that. So, I am not going into details, but all issues of concern.

Question: Okay. Just an aside. On the Madhuri Gupta case there is plenty of attention in Delhi. I am sure you all have been following the developments on that. Your reaction please?

Foreign Secretary: Our Minister of State for External Affairs has made a statement in Parliament today on the subject. I would ask you to refer to that.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.
211. Statement by External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna on his telephone conversation with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

New Delhi, May 11, 2010.

I had a telephonic conversation with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, my esteemed friend, Mr. S.M.Qureshi. This was a follow-up of the meeting of our two Prime Ministers in Thimphu where it was decided that the Foreign Ministers and the Foreign Secretaries will work out the methodology as to how the dialogue between the two countries can be carried on so that all outstanding issues between our two countries could be discussed in an atmosphere of mutual trust and mutual respect.

The Foreign Minister of Pakistan has invited me to go to Islamabad on the 15th of July. So, I am planning to visit Islamabad for my talks with Foreign Minister Muhammad Qureshi and I am looking forward to these talks. Let us hope that these talks will be helpful in bringing our two countries closer together, bringing our two countries the cordiality that all of us desire. And let us hope that our effort will be fruitful.

212. Interview of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna with Raj Chengappa, Editor-in-Chief of the daily The Tribune published from Chandigarh.

New Delhi, May 20, 2010.

Mr. Raj Chengappa, Editor-in-Chief (RC): India has now agreed to hold talks at the ministerial level and you plan to go to Islamabad in July? What has changed in recent months that prompted this decision?

External Affairs Minister (Shri S.M. Krishna): During the recent SAARC Summit at Thimphu, Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani and Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh had free and frank discussions. They felt the only way forward to settle all outstanding concerns between our two countries was to get back to the negotiating table.
RC: But what made India change its position?

EAM: Well, when Mumbai was attacked, we had to respond to the popular sentiment, which was also the government's sentiment. We wanted to tell Pakistan that the conspiracy for the attack was hatched in Pakistan, was executed by Pakistanis and we had clinching evidence which we provided to them to prove our point of view. So we had to call off the composite dialogue. The government felt that under the circumstances, it was neither desirable nor acceptable for it to talk to Pakistan. Now, a year has passed and we know that Pakistan has certain difficulties internally. About Mumbai attacks, they have arrested a few persons and their trial is going on. There are many more from our list who are absconding.

RC: What is Pakistan's explanation for not moving fast enough to take action against the perpetrators of the Mumbai attacks?

EAM: The argument put to us by Pakistan was that the executive does not have any control over the judicial process. We understand and respect that. Even in India, we cannot tell the courts what to do. And we have known that the judiciary in Pakistan has been fiercely independent in recent times.

RC: Was that the main reason?

EAM: We also thought of alternatives. What were the alternatives open to India? Shall we wage a war, a limited war, localised war or go after those suspected of the Mumbai attacks? Then it would become a full-scale war. What will then happen to the subcontinent? Let us remember that we are two nuclear powers and this fact heavily weighed on Dr Manmohan Singh's mind. So when the two leaders met in Thimphu, the tone and tenor of Pakistan created enough confidence in us. That they are serious and they do have difficulties. So we felt it was necessary for us to resume the talks. We thought political-level talks were more effective, productive and convincing than the talks at the bureaucratic levels.

RC: India doesn't seem to have defined the parameters of the talks?

EAM: The parameters of the talk are very clear and obvious. There is total distrust between our two countries. We won't trust them, they won't trust us. So the question arose as to what we can do to eliminate this distrust.
That is the reason why Dr Manmohan Singh and Prime Minister Gilani said that we need to attack the trust deficit and they mandated that the Foreign Ministers would address this distrust, work out how to reduce it and eliminate it. And my attempt to go to Islamabad on July 15 is to make an effort to eliminate this trust deficit.

RC: Wouldn't India be diluting the terror issue by agreeing to talks with Pakistan?

EAM: No, terror will continue to be the core issue for us even when I go to Islamabad. I will be talking to Foreign Minister Qureshi on terror, on terror instrumentalities and how those terror instrumentalities are operating from the soil of Pakistan. But at the same time, Pakistan also says they are afflicted by terror. The Taliban and other terrorist outfits are active even in Pakistan against the establishment. So, that has to be factored while making an assessment of the impact of terror on India and Pakistan.

RC: Do you see the Pakistan government making sincere efforts to dismantle the terror apparatus and cut off establishment links?

EAM: In the light of the terror attacks they have been experiencing in their own country they are in a position to assess what terror is all about. Terrorists can strike any country anywhere and they can do it at will. That is what they have proved in Rawalpindi. That is what they have proved in Swat and various other areas. So I am sure, Pakistan would be looking at terror perhaps in the same prism with which India views it in.

RC: But Pakistan is yet to prosecute Hafiz Sayeed?

EAM: We have been telling them that we have given you enough evidence to prosecute Hafiz Sayeed who is the mastermind behind the Mumbai attacks. We have the evidence and that evidence is provable in a court of law; so I think they should proceed against him. To that their answer is that they took Hafiz Sayeed in custody and tried him twice. But both the times it was the court of law which let him out of custody. But we still insist that Hafiz Sayeed is the brain behind the Mumbai attacks and he has to be brought to justice.

RC: Would your talks include ways to tackle the Kashmir issue?
EAM: Well, I will not certainly at this point of time go into the details as to how we are going to solve the Kashmir problem. The Kashmir problem has been marooning us for so long and it will rather be too simplistic on my part as Foreign Minister to say that we are going to solve the Kashmir problem. But our efforts will certainly be to eliminate the prevailing distrust. The central theme of my visit to Pakistan is to make an effort to eliminate the distrust among us. I think if we succeed, something would have been achieved.

RC: So are we willing to talk on all aspects of the Kashmir issue?

EAM: We have said that we are going to discuss every issue which can be raised by Pakistan and which can be raised by India.

RC: The former Pakistan foreign minister K.M. Kasuri claims that India and Pakistan were close to a solution on Kashmir when Musharraf was in power. Is that true?

EAM: During the Shimla talks, it was said that something was clinched but early that morning it did not materialise. So there are so many ifs and buts, turns and roundabouts. I will certainly not like to dwell on that.

RC: What will be our thrust on Kashmir? We had talked of making borders irrelevant.

EAM: With reference to Kashmir, India's position is very clear. We do not have to repeat our stand which is that it belongs to the Indian Union and that the Pakistan is in illegal possession of certain parts of Jammu and Kashmir, which really belong to India according to the Constitution. That is our stated position.

RC: But we have been talking to Pakistan about making the borders softer. Is that something we would still pursue?

EAM: I am going to Islamabad in about a month's time so it is rather delicate to spell it out.

RC: Are you planning to discuss Siachen?

EAM: It is too early in the day for us to be looking at tension points. It will be on the table if Pakistan raises it.

RC: Pakistan has been saying that water too is becoming a contentious issue?
EAM: Well, we have the Indus Water Treaty and the Indus Water Commission. The experts met recently in Delhi. If Pakistan has any concerns, those can always be referred to the Commission or to the committee of experts. So that is why we have said that on water, or anything else, we are willing to talk. According to me, with reference to water issues, there is already a mechanism which is in place and this can always be applied.

RC: Pakistan had talked about India's involvement in Balochistan. Is that still in an issue?

EAM: I do not think Balochistan is an issue any more. They have not given us any proof about India's involvement in Balochistan. In the absence of proof, it would not be fair to accuse India. The Indian Government's position is that we will not interfere in the internal affairs of Pakistan.

RC: The Opposition especially the BJP charges your government of going soft on Pakistan and says you are willing to compromise India's national interests in doing so?

EAM: Safeguarding India's national interest, safeguarding India's security, safeguarding India's sovereignty is supreme in our minds. It is beyond any compromise and I do not think that anybody could make that kind of a charge against us. But at the same time, we would like to have friendly relations with our neighbours. This is our twin approach towards Pakistan. One is that India's national interest will be intact and secondly we would have friendly and cordial relations with Pakistan and with all the neighbours of India.

RC: The BJP president in an interview to The Tribune said India should not be talking to Pakistan. What is your reaction?

EAM: I think when NDA was in power they did talk to Pakistan and they took a lot more days talking to Pakistan then we have done in the six years of UPA rule. So they need to look at it from the larger perspective of our neighbourhood. The larger perspective is how long are we going to keep on fighting? I think we will have to talk to Pakistan and come to an understanding with them because that will be in our interest and that will be in their interest and in the interest of all our neighbours as well.
213. Reaction of the Government of India to comments made by the Organisation of Islamic Conference (OIC) at its 37th Foreign Ministers Meeting.

New Delhi, May 26, 2010.

We note with regret that the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers has once again chosen to comment upon Jammu and Kashmir and India’s internal affairs in the Resolutions adopted by the Organisation of Islamic Conferences Foreign Ministers at their 37th session held at Dushanbe during May 18-20, 2010. Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India and the OIC has no locus standi in matters concerning India’s internal affairs. We reject all such references/resolutions.

New Delhi, May 28, 2010.

Government strongly condemns the terrorist attacks* in Lahore that have claimed the lives of scores of innocent people and injured many more. Our condolences go out to the families of those killed by these acts of terrorism.

* The Spokesperson was referring to terrorist attacks on two Ahmadis mosques in which eighty people were killed and 70 injured in Lahore during Friday prayers. Armed with grenades, the gunmen held people hostage in the mosques for nearly three hours before security personnel managed to take control of the besieged premises.

In response to a question, the Official Spokesperson stated that the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan was called in this afternoon and handed over a set of responses to the 6 dossiers received from Pakistan on April 25, 2010 on the Mumbai terror attacks.

218. Extract* relevant to Pakistan from the Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary and Secretary (West) on the Prime Minister’s visit to Canada.

New Delhi, June 22, 2010.

Question: Just a clarification on the civil nuclear energy cooperation. Will this agreement pave way for Canadian nuclear companies setting up nuclear reactors in India or supplying nuclear fuel to India? Also, since Canada is a member of the Nuclear Suppliers Group, will the Prime Minister raise the issue of Sino-Pakistan nuclear cooperation?

Secretary (West): As far as the Sino-Pakistan nuclear cooperation issue is concerned I think Foreign Secretary may like to say something. To answer the earlier part of your question, yes I think the agreement does cover the supplies of uranium and natural resources. As far as cooperation is concerned, I think that would be decided by the concerned authorities here which is the Department of Atomic Energy.

Foreign Secretary: I had anticipated that you would ask this question. As you are aware, we have been following reports about the supply of two additional nuclear power reactors by China to Pakistan. Now there are reports that all of us have seen, which mention also the issue of the supply of these reactors in the context of the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) guidelines. As you know, India is not a member of the NSG. But we are monitoring the debate and the developments in this regard as they relate to this subject of supply of nuclear reactors by China to Pakistan.

Question: Madam, you are going to Pakistan tomorrow. India and Pakistan have exchanged 19 dossiers so far after the 26/11 Mumbai attacks but the investigations there seem to be tardy. How hopeful are you that with the visit of the Home Minister things will move forward? Do you think that it is time for Pakistan to take some credible action to actually prosecute the 26/11 perpetrators?

Foreign Secretary: We have always emphasised the need for credible action on the part of Pakistan, in regard to the evidence that we have provided on the Mumbai terror attacks, the additional information that has been provided over the last few months. We have underlined the need for Pakistan to take this evidence seriously, to take it onboard and to take substantive action in response to what we have conveyed to them. Obviously, this issue will form a part of our discussions with the Pakistan Government during the forthcoming visit. I will be meeting with my Pakistani counterpart Mr. Salman Bashir in Islamabad day after tomorrow. Also, our Home Minister Shri P. Chidambaram, who is going to Islamabad for the SAARC Interior Ministers meeting, will have a meeting with his Pakistani counterpart Mr. Rehman Malik. Obviously, our core concerns about this issue will be conveyed and will be discussed.

As far as the firing, it is extremely unfortunate. Over the last few months we have pointed and we have conveyed to Pakistan our concerns about the rise in infiltration, about the ceasefire violations, and the fact that such incidents which have been provoked for no reason at all do not contribute to a positive atmosphere between India and Pakistan.

Islamabad, June 24, 2010.

Foreign Secretary of India (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you very much, Foreign Secretary Bashir and a good afternoon to all of you.

I am very happy to be here in Islamabad. I would like to thank Foreign Secretary Bashir and his colleagues for the warmth of their hospitality and the friendly reception that we have received during our stay here in Islamabad. I would like to add my words to those of Mr. Bashir. He described our discussions as cordial and constructive and I would fully endorse that. I think our discussions have been not just exploratory; we have sought to understand each other's position. We have a forward-looking orientation and vision as far as this relationship is concerned.

We have taken inspiration from the meeting between our two Prime Minister's at Thimphu which has really paved the way for these discussions today as we prepare for the visit next month of the External Affairs Minister of India Shri S.M. Krishna to Islamabad for discussions with His Excellency Foreign Minister Qureshi of Pakistan.

During our discussions here today we have reflected on the modalities for restoring trust and confidence so that we are able to pave the way for a comprehensive, sustained and meaningful dialogue on all issues of mutual interest and concern. We are agreed that dialogue is the best way forward. I also had the privilege of calling on Foreign Minister Qureshi and listening to his very constructive and profoundly meaningful views on our bilateral ties and the strengthening of the relations between India and Pakistan.

I believe that the destiny of our two peoples is linked to each other. As Prime Minister Manmohan Singh said very recently, our two countries should adopt effective ways of cooperation to the benefit of the people of both countries. I believe that the people are the lifeblood of any relationship, and that is the way we look at the discussions, at the dialogue between our two Foreign Ministries.
Let me add that I have always looked forward to my discussions with Foreign Secretary Bashir. I have admired his professionalism and his deep understanding of many issues that concern our bilateral relations. Today we were able to cover a range of such issues in a sense to prepare for the meeting between our two Foreign Ministers here in this city in July.

I think we owe it to our peoples to chart a course forward as far as the normalization of our relations is concerned, to narrow differences and to embark upon collaborative engagement. Thank you.

Official Spokesperson of India (Shri Vishnu Prakash): With the permission of my colleague, there will be two questions on each side. The first question goes to India.

Question: Ma'am, my first question to you is cross border terrorism continues to be the core issue for India. Did India set any goal post and any standards that Pakistan must do to stop cross border terrorism, to crack down on Lashkar-e-Tayyiba and other such terrorist groups or, is it still an open-ended requests?

Foreign Secretary of India: Smita, let me say that when I said we discussed all outstanding issues that are relevant to the relationship obviously our core concerns about terrorism were also articulated. Prime Minister Gilani had assured our Prime Minister, when they met in Thimphu, that Pakistan will not allow its soil to be used for terrorist activities against India. We believe that is an important commitment. What we also believe is that we should jointly work together towards our goal of resolution of outstanding issues and also to deal with the dangers, with the threat, with the evils of terrorism. I believe we must work together to deal with that threat, and we must deny terrorist elements any opportunity to derail the process of improvement of relations between our two countries.

Question: Madam, welcome to Pakistan. My question to you is that what is worrying India from having Composite Dialogue between our two countries? Is it that India is not interested in the nomenclature of the Composite Dialogue or India does not want to have to structured dialogue with Pakistan?
Foreign Secretary of India: I think you have to focus on the fact that dialogue is the best option that exists for the improvement of relations and deepening of understanding between our two countries. It is not an issue of the nomenclature that we attach to this dialogue. We used the adjectives 'serious', 'sustained', and 'comprehensive' when we talked about the dialogue that we are seeking to re-engage in between our two countries. So, I think the focus, the orientation must be to the fact that dialogue is resuming between the two countries; that we are re-engaging with each other; that we are looking at the current climate of relations; we are trying to understand and comprehend why there is a trust deficit between the two countries; how we bridge it. India has talked about its concerns about terrorism. My colleague Mr. Bashir listened to what I had to say. And then we discussed how best we can handle these situations. I think you must understand the total picture that now is trying to be put into place by the two countries; look forward to the meeting of the two Foreign Ministers here in July. So, there is a whole chapter that we are seeking to put in place as far as this relationship is concerned.

Question: I would like to ask both of you if you have agreed on some concrete programme for returning to peace talks and what were the proposals that were discussed?

Foreign Secretary of India: I think at the expense of repeating myself I would just like to say that we are looking at the future of this relationship, that India and Pakistan together must be the arbiters of the destiny of their peoples. We would like a stable, a prosperous, a peaceful Pakistan. Pakistan is in many senses our closest neighbour. The people of the two countries, I believe there is a constituency for peace in both countries. And that is really the spirit that informs this dialogue. I think we should avoid stock phrases like roadmaps and agendas and what topics we have discussed. The vision that is taking this relationship forward, a vision that looks at the last sixty years, understands the difficulties that have torn us apart, that have kept us apart; and to draw the right conclusions and the right lessons from those experiences, and to say that for the future we must think of how better to cooperate, how better to resolve our differences, understand that this is going to be a protracted process, it is going to take time, but there are many doables and achievables that we can think of in the interregnum, but certainly be informed by this vision of a peaceful relationship for the future between our two countries, and which can best be achieved through dialogue, a serious, comprehensive, and sustained dialogue.

Question: How do you propose to insulate this process that has begun from any Mumbai-like attacks if it happens again? Has any kind of mechanism been considered to sustain dialogue as such?

Foreign Secretary of India: That will be the subject of ongoing discussion between the two sides. We referred to strengthening and solidifying our cooperation and our dialogue to deal with terrorism. Our Home Minister is expected here tomorrow. He will hold discussions with the Interior Minister of Pakistan. So, all this will provide us with opportunities to focus on this issue.

220. Response of Official Spokesperson to terrorist attack in Lahore.

New Delhi, July 2, 2010.

In response to a question on the terrorist attack in Lahore, the Official Spokesperson said:

Government strongly condemns the terrorist attacks on Data Darbar in Lahore and expresses sympathies to the families of the bereaved.

At least 41 people were killed and nearly 175 injured in the suicide bomb attack on the Data Darbar complex in Lahore. The bombings at the shrine of the Persian Sufi saint Hazrat Syed Ali bin Usman Hajweri are being seen as not just an attack on a crowded place but an assault on the tolerant Sufi tradition.
Friends,

I am very pleased to be in Pakistan on the invitation of my distinguished colleague, H.E. Shah Mehmood Qureshi, Foreign Minister of Pakistan. This is an important visit as it marks the beginning of a new journey in our efforts to build a peaceful, friendly and cooperative relationship between our two countries.

I bring with me the warm greetings of the people and Government of India for the well-being of the people and Government of Pakistan. I would also like to convey our best wishes for a peaceful, prosperous and stable Pakistan.

During my stay in Islamabad, I, along with my delegation, am looking forward to my meetings with Foreign Minister Qureshi and his delegation. We hope to discuss all issues of mutual interest and concern that can contribute to restoring trust and building confidence in our bilateral relationship. I also look forward to receiving feedback on the issues raised by our Home Minister during his visit to Pakistan last month on our core concern of terrorism, particularly in the light of the discussions our Home Minister had in Pakistan in the context of the interrogation of David Coleman Headley regarding the Mumbai terrorist attack. India is committed to resolving all issues with Pakistan through a peaceful dialogue and negotiations, based on mutual trust and confidence.

I am also honoured by having the opportunity of calling on their Excellencies the President and Prime Minister of Pakistan.

I am carrying with me a message of peace and friendship from the people of India and we hope to undertake this voyage of peace, however long and arduous, jointly with the Government and people of Pakistan.

Thank you!
Opening Statements by Pakistan Foreign Minister and External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna at the Joint Press Interaction.

Islamabad, July 15, 2010.

Foreign Minister of Pakistan (Mr. S.M. Qureshi): Ladies and Gentlemen, my apologies to keep you waiting. It took much longer than anticipated. Obviously, we were meeting after a long interval. There was so much to discuss. Mr. Krishna, the External Affairs Minister, and myself, we had a very frank, candid and honest discussion on where we stand, how we look at our bilateral relations, and how do we move forward.

Pakistan has always wanted friendly, cooperative, and good neighbourly relations with India. We have started a process to achieve this objective. Both sides recognize that process had made incremental progress. We had made substantive progress in a number of areas as well. Both sides at the leadership level in Thimphu, Bhutan, agreed that dialogue is the only way forward and is the most preferred way forward.

The two Foreign Ministers were given the task to sit and discuss ways and means to restore confidence and bridge the trust deficit. Today we have had an extended meeting looking at various options, looking at various steps that would build and restore confidence, that would bridge trust deficit.

If our objective is good neighbourly relations, friendly, cooperative relations, the question is, how can we achieve this if we are not engaging? We cannot achieve this objective while remaining disengaged. And that is why the two Prime Ministers felt the necessity to resume the dialogue process.

If we want to move forward, the question is how do we move forward without addressing issues of mutual concern? And there are many issues of mutual concern. Let me point out terrorism is an issue of mutual concern. Today India and Pakistan both are victims of terrorism. How do we face this challenge? We have come to the conclusion that the
The best way to deal with this challenge is to recognize this as a common enemy and adopt a common approach vis-à-vis this menace. I explained to the Foreign Minister the change in mood within Pakistan, the steps Pakistan has undertaken to deal with this menace, and the law enforcement operations under way in Pakistan.

We also discussed how we can hasten the trial process which is under way. We recognize and accept that the meeting of the Home Minister and the Interior Minister was encouraging. We are of the view that the meeting between the Foreign Secretaries was very useful to lay the foundations for a sustained, meaningful, result-oriented dialogue.

Pakistan would take the leads provided by the Home Minister very seriously because we want to move on. Resolution of outstanding issues is important. Today there are issues which are of significance to India. And progress vis-à-vis the Mumbai trial, cooperation in overcoming the challenge of terrorism is important and has taken a very prominent role. One recognizes that. But there are issues that are of core importance to Pakistan. They should be addressed and we have to discuss them. We have agreed on the need to discuss them, to make the process meaningful.

In our discussions we were very frank and we had a discussion on all the issues that are of importance whether it is terrorism, Jammu and Kashmir, the recent developments in Jammu and Kashmir, Sir Creek, Siachen. How there are opportunities of economic cooperation, and how through economic integration we can uplift the quality of the ordinary citizens of South Asia, how people-to-people contacts will facilitate and create an enabling environment to sustain the dialogue, all these issues were discussed in a very open, in a very frank, and in a very candid manner.

We have made progress on certain Kashmir-related CBMs. We have discussed how useful they have been and how we can build on what we have achieved in the past, whether it is cross-LoC trade or travel. We have talked about the fact that we can reach an amicable resolution of the Sir Creek issue. And Pakistan has asked for the Indian proposal that was made verbally to be sent to us in writing.

We have also discussed how we can take steps that will improve, help many people like prisoners, like fishermen. But we feel we have to look at the larger picture and all issues have to be dealt in tandem. We have to respect the Indian point of view and they have to understand Pakistan's point of view, and collectively we have to move on.

So, today's prolonged discussions were useful in creating an understanding how to move forward. We have agreed that this process is valuable, and we will continue to meet in the future as well. We also feel that the progress made through a concerted effort in the last four years should not come to naught and we should build on it. So, to that extent I would say this was a useful meeting; it was a useful engagement; and we have agreed to continue this engagement in the days to come.

Thank you.

External Affairs Minister (Shri S.M. Krishna): Excellency, Foreign Minister Qureshi, ladies and gentlemen, I would join the distinguished Foreign Minister of Pakistan in profusely apologizing to all of you for making you wait for a long time. The nature of these discussions that we had had was such that it could not be concluded on time. In the meanwhile, I had the honor of calling on the President of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and also the Prime Minister of this country. As a result of these engagements, we were delayed.

Let me start by thanking Foreign Minister Qureshi for the remarks he just now made. The sentiments that he has expressed about good neighborly relationship between our two countries, that's what we have been striving for the last so many years. At times, we have succeeded, at times we have not been able to make for the kind of progress that we expected, we thought we would. Foreign Minister Qureshi and I along with our delegations have had cordial and useful exchange of views on all issues concerning our relationship. We reviewed the current state of bilateral relations and discussed steps to promote trust and confidence in keeping with the mandate given to both of us by the respective Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan during their meeting in Thimphu. This was to pave the way for a serious, comprehensive and sustained dialogue thereon, on issues of mutual interest and concern.
I think our talks have enabled us to develop better understanding. We are starting on this journey cognizant of the complexities in our relationship, the challenges that lie ahead and the promise that a good neighborly relationship between our two countries holds for our peoples. India is committed to being a sincere partner in our efforts to establish peaceful and cooperative relations between our two countries. I would also like to reiterate that India desires a peaceful stable and prosperous Pakistan. We wish the people of Pakistan well. Our Prime Minister has ambition of prosperity in south Asia in which all countries of the region grow together in a cooperative mode.

I have conveyed to the distinguished Foreign Minister Qureshi that effective action against terrorism directed against India and all out effort by Pakistan to fulfill the commitment given by His Excellency, the Prime Minister of Pakistan to Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in Thimphu, not allow the territory of Pakistan to be used for terrorism against India would go a long way in building trust and confidence. I am indeed please that Foreign Minister Mr. Qureshi has assured me that the Government of Pakistan will do everything in its power to fulfill this commitment. In this context Foreign Minister Mr. Qureshi has also assured me that the investigation in the Mumbai terrorist attack case, taking into account the additional information coming out the recent interrogation of David Coleman Headley and provided by our Home Minister during his visit to Pakistan last month, could be pursued rigorously to unravel the full conspiracy and bring all the perpetrators of that horrific crime to justice.

He has also further told me that steps are being taken to speed up the ongoing trial by the seven accused under detention. In addition to the above, FM Qureshi and I discussed a number of other bilateral issues. The bottom line is that it was good and constructive discussion. I look forward to my continued discussion on this issue and other issues and I have invited FM Qureshi to visit India, and I would look forward to welcome him to India in the near future.

FM Qureshi and the government of Pakistan and the people of Pakistan have showed enormous goodwill towards Indian and the Indian delegation. I am indeed grateful and I would like to thank Foreign Minister Qureshi from the core of my heart for the excellent arrangements he has made to take care of the Indian delegation and let me conclude by wishing government of Pakistan, Foreign Minister Qureshi and the people of Pakistan God's peace and prosperity, may we continue to be good neighbors and with this I would like to conclude and offer my thanks to Foreign Minister Qureshi.

223. Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao to CNN IBN TV.

New Delhi, July 16, 2010.

CNN-IBN: Qureshi saying even as our External Affairs Minister was on Pakistani soil been seen as an insult to India and not just minister. What is your reaction to that?

Nirupama Rao: This (Friday) morning's appearance by Foreign Minister Qureshi came somewhat as a surprise. Obviously in our view there was no reason for that follow up comment.

CNN-IBN: Do you think that under this kind of political pressure the dialogue process can still go on?

Nirupama Rao: I definitely am of the view that the dialogue process must go on and by no means would I define yesterday's (Thursday) meeting as having ended in a collapse. Well in the discussions we did talk of specifics. It is just that we did not announce anything and I want to be frank that there was a hiatus in expectations from both sides and we had a very clear set of do-ables that we thought we would discuss with Pakistan. The Pakistanis came to this with a slightly different expectation. I think the aim on their side was to see the entire spectrum of dialogue restored.
CNN-IBN: External Affairs Minister was clear when he reached Pakistan as to what kind of assurances Pakistan could give on Mumbai attacks. Did you come up with any assurance?

Nirupama Rao: Pakistan did tell us that they were looking into evidence and they would come out with the result. They told us that they wanted the trial to proceed fast. One can only hope that they will deliver on the assurances.

CNN-IBN: Pakistani Prime Minister Yusuf Raza Gilani said after the meeting that the ball is now in India's court. What does that mean?

Nirupama Rao: As far as we are concerned we are very clear as to how this process should move forward. We had concrete ideas and we have conveyed it to the Pakistani side. So I think it is for Pakistan really to introspect.

224. Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao with NDTV.

New Delhi, July 16, 2010.

[Barkha Dutt: With so much controversy surrounding the India Pakistan meeting of the two foreign ministers...the meeting of SM Krishna and Shah Mehmood Qureshi... where does this leave the peace process. India at this point said that the attempt is to bridge the trust deficit but has this now become a deficit of trust.]

(Joining us now on NDTV is Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao.)

Thank you for your time ma'am.

When you look at the perception in the media on both sides that the talks, in a sense, have collapsed...the talks are in tatters and that it was unprecedented acrimony. Would you agree that the talks did not all go the way you had hoped?

Nirupama Rao: Well Barkha, I would by no means say that the talks collapsed. I think what happened yesterday was we were able to have a very, I must say, protracted discussion on various ideas that could take the dialogue forward. There was a hiatus, if I may say so, in expectations because I believe that the Pakistan side had certain ideas about the re-engagement that were not completely acceptable.

Barkha Dutt: I wanted to ask you that one of the central controversies has been the fact that when Shah Mehmood Qureshi, in response to a question on Hafiz Saeed, in response to a question on Hafiz Saeed, compared this to draw some sort of equivalence with G K Pillai's remarks* on the ISI's role in 26/11. Questions are being raised as to why our Foreign Minister at that time did not rebut the Foreign Minister of Pakistan. Why did he not Ms Rao?

* The irritant appeared to have been Home Secretary G.K. Pillai's remarks that the Inter-Services Intelligence had coordinated the Mumbai terror attacks. Asked why Jamaat-ud-Dawah chief Hafiz Saeed was not being reined in by Pakistan from making anti-India speeches, Mr. Qureshi retorted: "I agree that both sides need to create an enabling environment and not let the climate of engagement be vitiated by negative propaganda. But, I want to know to what extent did the Indian Home Secretary's statement on the eve of the dialogue help? We are both of the opinion that it was uncalled for."
Nirupama Rao: Well Barkha, the External Affairs Minister said very clearly on record today (Friday) that there was no question on any comparison between Hafiz Saeed and the disclosures made by the Home Secretary on the David Coleman Headley’s investigation. And at no point, may I add categorically, during the discussion held yesterday (on Thursday) did the External Affairs Minister in any sense express agreement with the point of view of Mr. Qureshi on the remarks of the Home Secretary.

Barkha Dutt: Can I then clarify Ms. Rao that although Mr. Qureshi claimed that both Foreign Ministers were in agreement that the Home Secretary’s remarks were ill-timed...no such indication was in fact given by the Indian delegations to the Pakistani delegation in the course of the talks. Is that correct?

Nirupama Rao: Yes, absolutely. No such indication.

Barkha Dutt: Ms. Rao was it then considered a choice by the Foreign Minister to not rebut Mr. Qureshi in public when those remarks were made?

Nirupama Rao: Well, I think if you were there at the press conference at the Pakistan Foreign Ministry...there were a huge number of journalists...the pell mell of questions and you know the to and fro... the queries that were raised, the answers from the Foreign Ministers...it may have just happened at that stage the External Affairs Minister did not react. But by no means can you draw the conclusion from that, that External Affairs Minster SM Krishna was in any way in agreement with the remarks of Mr. Qureshi.

Barkha Dutt: Ms Rao did it handicap the Indian side, the timing of the Home Secretary’s remarks?

Nirupama Rao: Well, I think one has to be very clear about our sights here. We have a dialogue that we are seeking to restore with Pakistan but we also have very real core concerns about terrorism and about the trauma of Mumbai, the aftermath of Mumbai and the action that Pakistan needs to take on the basis of very credible evidence on the involvement of Pakistani agencies, Pakistani nationals in the Mumbai attacks. So the Home Secretary was perfectly within his rights to draw attention to this.

Nirupama Rao: Well Barkha, about the involvement of the state and the non-state agencies in the whole business of terror unleashed in India by Pakistan, this disclosure about the involvement of ISI is not new to India.
India has all along maintained that when it comes to the terror machine that unfortunately continues to exist in Pakistan...that there are serious introspections that are required by Pakistan into why terror has been used as an instrument in policy against India...and that involves both state and non-state actors ...I am constrained to say that there are state and non-state actors and Pakistan needs to undergo that whole process of...I believe of catharsis when it comes to understanding why terror is now threatening the very fabric of Pakistan itself.

Barkha Dutt: Mr. Qureshi also suggested this morning that the Foreign Minister did not have the mandate to take his own decisions and that he was on phone to New Delhi throughout...something that Mr Krishna then went on to deny. Are you concerned as the highest ranking diplomat of India at the tone and tenor of the remarks of the foreign Minister of Pakistan?

Nirupama Rao: Well definitely the tone and tenure of those remarks have not contributed...let me say...to a positive atmosphere between India and Pakistan and I believe those were remarks that could have been avoided.

Barkha Dutt: Where do these talks leave India and Pakistan at the present moment? How would you describe it? You said in the beginning that the talks have not collapsed. What would be your choice of words to describe what has happened in the last 24 hours?

Nirupama Rao: Well I think we went through a very serious discussion yesterday. It was by no means a futile exercise. We have several pointers before us as far as the future is concerned. We have exchanged ideas. We have by no means come to a conclusion which would suggest that the way forward is blocked in any way. And as I said and as our Foreign Minister said, Mr. Qureshi is due to come to India in the later in the year. In the interregnum there is time enough for us and I believe particularly for Pakistan to reflect on the process...the modalities carrying it forward and to understand that the reduction of the trust deficit and the building of confidence are itself catalysts to take this dialogue forward. And that is why we need to undertake graduated steps when it comes to the resumption of dialogue.
Barkha Dutt: Would you concede Ms Rao that the core issue right now is the difference in perception on what the framework of dialogue should be...India pushing for terrorism only agenda and Pakistan wanting a more formal resumption of the composite dialogue and how do you bridge this gap?

Nirupama Rao: Well there is a gap in perception, I have to be honest and admit that. But these are not unbridgeable divides between India and Pakistan. On a number of ideas that we exchanged yesterday we were in agreement...in agreement about how to build confidence and trust. On certain other ideas I think much more time and ground will needed to be covered before we can say we are ready to start dialogue in those particular areas. But let me say that in most of the sectors that we talked about yesterday...the sectors for resumption of dialogue...we were in agreement.

Barkha Dutt: Would you say you are disappointed today? Do you come back from Pakistan disappointed?

Nirupama Rao: Well, I would say that I would have hoped that we would've had a more positive outcome to our discussions yesterday. But I think in diplomacy, as in life, disappointments such as these need to be surmounted because as neighbors India and Pakistan will have to deal with each other. We don't have the luxury of maintaining irresolvable distances between our two countries.

(Foreign Secretary also gave similar interviews to other news TV channels. Document Nos.223,225,226 and 227)
225. Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao with the TV channel ‘Times Now’.

New Delhi, July 16, 2010.

Times Now: The BJP has called on the government to call off the dialogue with Pakistan. Is there any merit in this demand? Or do you see it as a knee jerk reaction from the Opposition based on one irresponsible comment from the Pakistanis?

Nirupama Rao: Well I think dialogue with Pakistan is essential and continues to be the best option to engage Pakistan. We are neighbours and that goes without saying, everybody knows that and the issue of engagement with Pakistan in the context of discussing the very issues that divide us is essential. That is the way it has been all over the world and India and Pakistan are no exception.

Times Now: So you are completely ruling out the option?

Nirupama Rao: I don't believe that as I said we should abandon the course of dialogue with Pakistan.

Times Now: BJP is disappointed with India's response. Is India going to seek an official apology from Pakistan over Qureshi's remarks?

Nirupama Rao: Well I think it is for Pakistan to reflect and introspect very deeply on the remarks that they made. They were certainly unfortunate and misplaced. They were not in good diplomatic taste and I think it is for Pakistan to really understand that such remarks do not contribute to the building of trust and confidence between our two countries. I think the ball is in Pakistan's court.

Times Now: It is being said that External Affairs Minister SM Krishna’s mandate was weak and it was shrunk during the talks leading to confusion. Is this true that calls were made to Mr. Krishna during the talks?

Nirupama Rao: I categorically reject that sort of description. By no means was our mandate restricted, by no means was it weak, by no means was it diluted. It was a very clear and a very well defined and a precise mandate. And we didn't need to stray from it in any manner because it was so clearly defined.

Times Now: What's the next step Ms Rao? Where does India go from here?

Nirupama Rao: Well we have to see how the Pakistanis respond to ideas that we have put forward. I will be frank in saying that there was a hiatus in expectations. We had very precise as I said were very clearly defined ideas on how to take this dialogue forward. We had had the opportunity to discuss this with Pakistan over the last few months so we clearly knew where we were going. I think in Pakistan's case the idea or the perspective was to resume dialogue across all fronts. But obviously the process of building trust, the enhancement of confidence has to proceed before you can resume dialogue in all the areas in which Pakistan and India were engaged in years before. But a positive thing that has emerged out of what we discussed with Pakistan yesterday was the affirmation by Foreign Minister Qureshi that Pakistan stood by the achievements made in the bilateral dialogue between our two countries in the period between 2004 and 2008.

Times Now: SM Krishna is in Afghanistan tomorrow. So will Mr. Qureshi be there. Is there any possibility of the two meeting and talking?

Nirupama Rao: I presume you are referring to the Kabul conference which will take place on the 20th of this month. Both Foreign Minister Krishna and Foreign Minister Qureshi will be attending this conference. I don't believe there will be any bilateral meeting during the conference because the way it is structured and the business that has to be transacted at that conference is not going to leave much time for bilateral meetings to begin with and secondly they have just met in Islamabad.

(Foreign Secretary also gave similar interviews to other news TV channels. Document Nos. 223,224,226 and 227)
226. Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao to 'Headlines Today' TV Channel.

New Delhi, July 18, 2010.

Interviewer: We have India's Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao with us today. Welcome to Headlines Today, Madam.

Madam, what went wrong in the Indo-Pak talks? I believe everything was going according to the script. You had also agreed to announce a series of CBMs. Then suddenly I think Pakistan made a u-turn. What really went wrong? What was the sticking point?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): I would not put it in such black and white terms. In a relationship as complex as this, success is the way you define a term. And if you can see the fact that after a long interregnum where we did not have any dialogue or discussions, the fact that we have resumed these meetings and we are beginning to discuss the possibilities of resumption of dialogue in a number of areas, I think that itself is a measure of progress.

Interviewer: But aren’t you disappointed that you have come back without, because some of those CBMs that you were discussing on humanitarian measures, on cross LoC trade and all would have benefited the people of both sides?

Foreign Secretary: It is not as if measures have thrown out of the window. The fact is that these measures, the suggestions that we made are very much on the table, and the Pakistan side is aware of it. And never at any moment did we say that we were going to walk away from the talks and the suggestions we had made no longer were on the table. So, they are very much there and they are for Pakistan to consider. We have a very open, constructive approach to this dialogue. We are very conscious of the goals that we wish to achieve. Let me add that our core concern about terrorism remains very very central to this discussion. By no means has that focus been diluted either.

Interviewer: But has that been addressed? Are you confident that Pakistan will take action against 26/11 perpetrators; they will expedite the case?
Foreign Secretary: One hopes that Pakistan will take action against the perpetrators of 26/11. And even during the meetings that we had during our recent visit to Islamabad, all the dignitaries and leaders that our External Affairs Minister met reassured him that Pakistan was serious about taking action on the issue of bringing the perpetrators of the Mumbai terror attacks to justice. Now, one can only hope that Pakistan delivers on those assurances but what they told us during these talks, including the Interior Minister Mr. Rahman Mallik whom our Minister met during our meetings with Prime Minister Gilani and President Zardari, assured him that Pakistan intended to deliver on the evidence that we had given to them and that they would get back to us.

Interviewer: There is a sense here that the hardliners in the Pakistani establishment, that is the Pakistani Army, is behind the derailing of whatever agreement that you were supposed to have. What is your sense? Do you think that there are some people within Pakistan who felt that timeline was essential, that India must go ahead with what they wanted to announce, the complete calendar of the Composite Dialogue process?

Foreign Secretary: As I said at the outset, we are fully clear-eyed and clear-headed about the fact that there are lots of complexities in this dialogue as we move forward. I do not think at any moment we felt that the going was not going to be difficult. I think from what you saw during this latest round of discussions it is very clear that some more time will be needed for this process to pick up the momentum that we would like to see in place, especially because the reduction of the trust deficit and building of confidence requires us to start with doable steps, graduated steps. And that has been our approach. From the Pakistan side I think their levels of ambition seemed to be a little higher, if I may put it diplomatically. There I think there is a hiatus. Our level of ambition is lofty. I would say it is very lofty because we have this vision of a fully normalized relationship between our two countries. But we understand that the path to the summit has to be a protracted one because we have many obstacles to clear as we go along.

Interviewer: But who are these ambitious people on Pakistan side who actually made sure that they had a u-turn of sorts because you had agreed certain things with the Pakistan Foreign Secretary when you had gone there? Obviously they were well aware of what are the proposals that you were carrying to Islamabad.
Foreign Secretary: I am not going to theorize about who those people were and I do not think it would be professional on my part to do that. Of course we all understand the nature of internal politics in Pakistan. I do not need to go into details, I am sure you are as well informed as I am.

Interviewer: Yes. What next from here? Do you think that the peace process has suffered a bit? Are you disappointed? Where do we go next?

Foreign Secretary: I think we have come away with the sober realization that there is a lot of work that we both sides will have to do to take this process forward. Our Minister, External Affairs Minister Krishna, has conveyed to Foreign Minister Qureshi that we are ready to take this dialogue forward. So, our willingness, the political will that we have indicated remains very much central to this process. And, as I said, the process of how this moves forward in a sense will be catalysed by Pakistan delivering on the Mumbai terror trial. That will be a very prime catalyst.

Interviewer: So, that will be the barometer for you to judge Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: That is a very significant barometer but simultaneous or concomitant with that we are prepared to take graduated steps to build trust and to build confidence relating to humanitarian issues, issues that concern people on both sides because there are people. As I have said before, the people of India and Pakistan are the lifeblood of this relationship. I think the people must be allowed to come into communication more with each other. That is really the process of building confidence and trust.

Interviewer: But are you disappointed that the trust deficit sort of has widened a bit by all the rhetoric that has gone on? The Pakistani Foreign Minister made some uncharitable remarks about the External Affairs Minister. So, don't you feel disappointed a bit?

Foreign Secretary: I, like you, we are both Indian and we belong to a very mature democracy. We are proud of that. We look at transacting relations with our neighbours in a very mature and balanced way. And that is the approach that India brings to these talks. I do not want to comment or pontificate on Pakistan's attitude. That is for Pakistan to introspect about. And I hope they will turn the searchlight inwards on themselves and understand where the problems lie.
Interviewer: So, are you also willing to unilaterally announce some of those proposals that you discussed on humanitarian issues? As you said, it is for the larger benefit of the people which India has done in the past?

Foreign Secretary: Pakistan is aware of what we are ready to offer. I think in diplomacy once the offer is made to the other side it is for that side to respond.

Interviewer: Foreign Secretary, thank you very much for talking to Headlines Today.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you.

(Foreign Secretary also gave similar interviews to other news TV channels. Document Nos.223,224,225 and 227)

227. Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao by 'News X' TV Channel.

New Delhi, July 18, 2010.

Interviewer: We are here for a very quick interview with Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao. Without wasting any time let me start with the questions. Is it true that the Foreign Minister of Pakistan has sent a message to Mr. Krishna for a meeting on Afghanistan?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): I will not be able to give you any details on that at the moment. Our Minister, as you know, is away in Bangalore, he is not in Delhi. Both Ministers will be in Kabul for the Kabul Conference on the 20th of this month. As is normal at such conferences, there will be many opportunities for the dignitaries and for the leaders of delegations attending the Conference to have meetings, as it always happens on the sidelines of such conferences. So, we will have to see how this works out. But yes, it is true that both Ministers will be in Kabul on that day.

Interviewer: So, it is another opportunity.
Foreign Secretary: If it does happen, yes it is another opportunity.

Interviewer: But considering what Mr. Qureshi has been saying and what he said during the joint interaction with the media and more so the next day, wasn't it an attempt by him really to sabotage the talks?

Foreign Secretary: I would not use such strong words like what you just used. I would say that it is very important for both sides to keep their vision focused on what our goals are. I am reminded of being very clear about your goal and not to be distracted by all the minor obstacles that come in between. Our Prime Minister has very clearly outlined to Prime Minister Gilani during their meeting at Thimphu in April what his vision of this relationship is, and how for the region of South Asia it is very important that India and Pakistan try their level best to structure a normal relationship which will help the people of both countries and help development in this region. So, these are the goals that we have in mind and we would like to stay focused on that and to take this dialogue forward.

Interviewer: Before the press interaction in Islamabad, did the talks go the way you wanted and was this vision sort of being realized during the dialogue?

Foreign Secretary: With any such complex relationship I think you have to be very realistic about the fact that progress, by the very nature of the complexities that you are surrounded by, will be slow. It will be a somewhat protracted, if I may say, prolonged process. But the process has to move forward in a steady, in a graduated, and a sustained manner. And our vision about this has not strayed from that goal despite the fact that yes the outcomes of the last meeting were not as, shall I say, concrete in terms of how you define outcomes would be. But all the same, Foreign Minister Qureshi has been invited to visit India. We have kept the door of dialogue open. We have put forward a number of concrete ideas to the Pakistan side about how we re-engage and resume dialogue. So, we are satisfied with the approach we took, and we believe that the Pakistan side should reflect and introspect on the ideas that we have put forward.

Interviewer: When you talk of concrete ideas, does that contain all the issues that were identified in the Composite Dialogue or is it just going to be a focus at the moment on terrorism and the rest to follow as and when Pakistan delivers on terrorism?
Foreign Secretary: Terrorism is a core concern. May I add that the Pakistan side in turn informed us that it is a core concern for them also given the fact that Pakistan has come under a lot of terrorism related attacks in the last few months and in the recent past. So, terrorism is a core concern. And I do not think we can deflect attention from the fact that we await responses from Pakistan on the Mumbai trials, on the evidence that we have handed over to them. So, all this must be stated very clearly at the outset. Having said that, we have also stressed that we need to begin the process of confidence building and reduction of the trust deficit in the areas where it is doable at the moment. Take for instance people-to-people exchanges. Take for instance trade and commerce related areas, the humanitarian issues, the release of prisoners, confidence-building measures in other areas. For instance we have water-related issues between the two countries which are part of the implementation of the Indus Waters Treaty. So, where questions have been raised about those issues we are prepared to discuss.

Interviewer: Is anything doable where Jammu and Kashmir is concerned, or at the moment is that off the agenda?

Foreign Secretary: We have trade across the LoC now in Jammu and Kashmir. That is a big CBM. In fact, it has brought people of the two sides together. And we have transportation links also, the bus services, as you are aware. There are a lot of technical issues relating to the implementation of those CBMs that both sides need to discuss. And this is also one area where we are prepared to move forward.

Interviewer: There is one thing I think Mr. Qureshi said at his press interaction, which sort of got lost in the entire fiasco, where he said something about Sir Creek and that the Indian side is now willing to give a written proposal instead of a verbal proposal.

Foreign Secretary: On that also we have said that there is a process under way as far as Sir Creek is concerned. Up until 2008, until the eve of the Mumbai attacks, we had had some good discussions in that area. We have had some specific ideas that we have in a sense outlined to the Pakistan side, and we are always prepared to take that discussion forward. So, that again is not an impediment let me say.
Interviewer: The very fact that the Foreign Minister who is the person who really handled the talks from all accounts and not so much the Foreign Secretary of Pakistan, the way he sort of went off the tangent, is that going to make it very difficult to get the talks back on an even keel?

Foreign Secretary: I do not believe that it should be difficult. At least I am optimistic by nature, I suppose. And also having understood the tone and tenor of the discussions in the last few meetings that I have had with my counterpart and even during this meeting between the two Foreign Ministers, I think the possibilities are immense. And both sides have begun to discuss concrete ideas. Even if these are at this moment confined to confidence-building and trust deficit reduction, I think one can take encouragement from those developments and the way discussions have gone. And certainly the way is open for further talks and for further discussions.

Interviewer: But every time India and Pakistan have met under this new Government in Islamabad, we had these, what we call Qureshi-isms which always spoiled the atmosphere somewhat. This time of course he went many steps further. But if you remember, he also said, well now Bombay is behind us, let us look forward and let us talk ahead. Was that the kind of sense you have got about terrorism when you were speaking to him?

Foreign Secretary: I am sure the Pakistani side understands that in diplomacy you have to weigh your words very carefully because the impact of words can go far beyond just words themselves. And I am sure they realize that.

Interviewer: You are being so polite. It was all there for the world to see. Did they really realize that? It does not seem so. But I guess if he has sent this message about another meeting in Kabul, we can perhaps be optimistic.

Foreign Secretary: The impact of what was said at the press conference that was held yesterday morning - that is what I said, the impact of words can go far beyond the words themselves - and the reaction that you have seen in our country to that, I think should have sent a message very clearly to the Pakistan side about how we do not want to get drawn into slanging matches. India-Pakistan relations are not about trading accusations; they are not about slanging matches. We have to behave like grown up nations.
We have to behave in a mature way, and understand that the fate of more than a billion people is in balance here. So, we look at it that way and our approach will always be calibrated based on that.

Interviewer: There is another phrase that this round of talks has thrown up and that is of limited flexibility. Who has been exercising this 'limited flexibility'? Was it India or was it Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: That is not a phrase we have used. Probably you have heard it from the Pakistan side.

Interviewer: Absolutely.

Foreign Secretary: You have to ask them what they mean by that. I think it seems to be a very subjective version of their take on the last round of discussions. That is not the way we look at it because I think anybody who is experienced in hard diplomatic negotiations must understand that there can be many obstacles strewn along the course and the challenge of a good negotiator is to understand how to navigate the way forward. And I think you must keep always that door open to future discussion. That is the way we look at it.

Interviewer: Though this is not strictly related to Pakistan, Hillary Clinton is also going to be there in Kabul. So, is there a bilateral on with Mr. Krishna?

Foreign Secretary: There is a possibility that there might be a bilateral. There are a number of other requests we have received also.

Interviewer: Is Pakistan going to figure in that?

Foreign Secretary: As of now I said I do not have anything concrete to tell you on that. We will have to see. As I said, it so happens in ...

Interviewer: Could it be a trilateral?

Foreign Secretary: No.

Interviewer: Thanks so much. Thanks a lot.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you.

228. Response of Official Spokesperson to ISI-related reports on "Wikileaks'.

New Delhi, July 27, 2010.

In response to questions, the Official Spokesperson said, "We have seen media reports about classified information*, supposedly from US government sources, put out in public domain, on support to terrorism by ISI-Pakistan's military intelligence agency. Sponsorship of terrorism, as an instrument of policy, is wholly condemnable and must cease forthwith. The utilization of territory under Pakistan's control to provide sanctuaries for recruiting and sustaining terrorist groups, and to direct terrorist activity against neighbors, must stop if our region is to attain its full potential for peaceful development".

* The documents posted in public domain on whistleblower website WikiLeaks suggested support to terrorism by the Inter Services Intelligence (ISI), Pakistan's military intelligence agency. The available information so far said that despite being an ally of the U.S. in the 'war on terror,' the ISI held secret strategy sessions with the Taliban leadership and arranged manpower to mount attacks on foreign forces and eliminate Afghan leadership. The reports also indicated that Pakistan's frontier areas, especially the seven tribal agencies, were used as sanctuaries for the Taliban to recoup and recruit fighters for launching attacks in southern Afghanistan. The "documents" also suggest that an intelligence agency had an inkling of the attack on the Indian Embassy in Kabul which killed 58 people.
229. Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao with weekly 'Outlook'.

New Delhi, August 6, 2010.

Question. Why did the foreign ministers' meet in Islamabad end in such a disaster?

Answer. Disaster is the wrong word. Every Indo-Pak meeting is an exploration, a quest, an initiation. No absolutes can be applied while describing such meetings. Given the sixty years of relations, it should be apparent that there are no shortcuts to success. Moreover, a press conference cannot be the gauge with which to judge what transpired at the meeting.

Question. Indo-Pak relations are fraught with such nasty surprises why did you not stick to a joint statement instead of a joint press conference?

Answer. There are no easy or simple prescriptions. A categorical conclusion that a joint statement would have been better does not simply follow. The convention of a joint press conference is widely practised today when high-level diplomatic meetings take place. The opening statements made by the two Foreign Ministers were balanced in their tone and substance. At some stage into the Press Conference, after four questions had been raised - two from the Indian side and two from the Pakistani side- as previously agreed, foreign minister (Shah Mahmood) Qureshi decided to allow more questions. Perhaps the outcome would have been less tendentious if this turn of events had not taken place.

Question. When the press conference took this turn, why couldn't you intervene and end S.M. Krishna's agony?

Answer. Our minister was never in agony. I stoutly refute that. He is a seasoned and experienced Minister. He was calm, cool and restrained throughout - a perfect example of grace under pressure. He held his positions with equanimity and confidence. There was no intervention required.

Question. The Pakistani side says you were constantly on the phone to get instructions from Delhi, implying you were not clear about your bottomline. Is that correct?

Answer. We had a very clear brief for the Islamabad talks. We knew our bottom line - and we enunciated it with clarity and precision. Normal communications with our Government were maintained - as is always the case in delicate negotiations such as these. To insinuate that this was evidence of not being prepared is unfortunate, to say the very least.
Question. Has India learnt any lessons from the press conference experience?

Answer. Whatever the Pakistani motives may have been, showing restraint, maturity and sobriety, as our minister did, cannot be construed as a drawback. Our minister conveyed through his demeanour and responses the strength, the confidence and conviction of what India stands for. I know that the succinctness and calm with which our minister enunciated our position has been well recognized.

Question. What happens to Indo-Pak talks now?

Answer. I believe the dust needs to settle. Our minister of external affairs has invited the Foreign Minister of Pakistan to India for a continuation of our dialogue. A genuine, carefully formulated and reasonable approach to these talks by India, which is the victim of terrorism unleashed on us from Pakistani soil and territory under its control, should not be under-estimated and under-valued by Pakistan.

Question. More than 20 months have passed since 26/11. Can you mention one significant step that Pakistan has taken against those behind the terror attack to instil confidence in India?

Answer. The very fact that Pakistan acknowledged that the Mumbai attack was planned and executed from Pakistan by some of its nationals was a signal development. Of course, while some steps have been taken on the Mumbai case by Pakistan, including arrests of seven persons, and the declaration of 20 more as proclaimed offenders, much more needs to be done. The focused and determined investigation of the conspiracy, the bringing of the perpetrators to justice, are all tasks that remain to be completed. The trial has moved at a glacial pace. This is a matter of concern.

Question. When India talks about "perpetrators" of 26/11, does it include the ISI since the agency, according to information and evidence that are now with India, had been in total control of the operation?

Answer. India has not hesitated to share concrete evidence on the real masterminds and handlers of the Mumbai terror attack with Pakistan. During the visit of our Home Minister to Pakistan in June, further evidence was shared in this connection. For Pakistan to state that terrorism has not been used as an instrument of policy against India, and that there is no involvement of state actors in such activity, is unacceptable. The evidence suggests otherwise. Today, Pakistan says it is a victim of terrorism. It is unfortunate that many innocent citizens have lost their lives in terrorist attacks in Pakistan. But the fact that Pakistan suffers from the scourge of terrorism does not diminish its responsibility to address India's legitimate concerns about Pakistan- originated terrorism against our citizens and our territory. A selective approach in such matters is not acceptable.

Question. There is a feeling that the home ministry has kept the external affairs ministry out of the loop on David Coleman Headley's confession. Is that correct?

Answer. I want to dispel the impression that there is insufficient coordination between our two Ministries. We are in constant communication. In the case of Headley, the MEA and the MHA worked together to coordinate our actions and to ensure that the national interest was met. In a matter of such critical importance, it could not be otherwise. We were not out of the loop.

Question. How does India view the WikiLeaks expose which shows how the ISI had been behind every attack against Indians in Afghanistan?

Answer. What the Wikileaks disclosures indicate has been in the realm of our knowledge even previous to the leaks. Our concerns in this regard have been articulated on a number of occasions. Pakistani officials have time and again spoken out against India's presence in Afghanistan and made no secret about their deep hostility about the work we do in that country. Our officials and our private citizens have been victims of terrorist attacks in Afghanistan. The Afghan authorities have said that those responsible for them were enemies of India-Afghan friendship. Seen against the background of Pakistani hostility towards India's presence in Afghanistan, all this raises troubling questions about Pakistani complicity. The Wikileaks disclosures have brought this into even sharper focus.

Question. With so much information about the ISI now in the public domain, how do you see talks with Pakistan going forward?

Answer. The path to a lasting peace with Pakistan will not be easy. We have never nurtured any illusions about this. It is because of the inherently complex and seemingly intractable nature of our differences that we must seek a way forward to address the difficulties. A serious, sustained and comprehensive dialogue remains the best option. But such a dialogue can thrive only in a climate free of terrorism directed against us from Pakistan. Otherwise, the trust deficit and public alienation towards Pakistan will only deepen.
230. Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao by Karan Thapar on TV Programme Devil's Advocate.

New Delhi, August 8, 2010.

Interviewer (Mr. Karan Thapar): Hello and welcome to Devil's Advocate. After WikiLeaks and David Headley, where do India-Pakistan relations stand? That is one of the subjects I shall discuss today in this exclusive interview with the Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao.

Foreign Secretary, let us start with Pakistan. Now that we have proof from WikiLeaks and Headley that the Pakistani state is directly and irrefutably involved in instigating and funding terror against India, what is the justification for continuing dialogue with that country?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): I think the justification for dialogue is by no means diminished despite these revelations. I believe that dialogue is the most effective means to tackle outstanding issues with Pakistan, and the abandonment of dialogue or the interruption of dialogue, by no means serves the interests that we seek to pursue in getting Pakistan to stop its pursuit of terrorism against India. In other words, dialogue is the most intelligent means of addressing points of contention.

Interviewer: But if any dialogue is to be meaningful, surely you would agree that it has to be predicated on the fact that Pakistan accepts what it has been doing and, more importantly, promises not to do it again. That is missing in this case.

Foreign Secretary: Pakistan has from time to time made this commitment to us that it will not permit the pursuit and the encouragement of terrorism by groups on its soil or territory under its control. I think over the last few occasions that we have had the opportunity to raise these issues with Pakistan, it has been made very clear to them and very emphatically to them that the atmosphere for the pursuit of this dialogue will never be really conducive until and unless they stop the pursuit of terrorism against India. So, dialogue has served the purpose of putting across our deepest concerns to Pakistan.

Interviewer: But dialogue has not got you a cessation of terrorist activity from Pakistan. Dialogue has not even got Pakistan to accept that their state, in the shape and form of the ISI, is directly involved. Without that acceptance, aren't you in a sense knocking on a closed door?

Foreign Secretary: To some degree there is an acknowledgement by Pakistan that the pursuit of terrorism directed against India is going to be negative; it is going to have a negative impact on the relationship. To that extent I think there is some degree of acknowledgement. Now let us take the Mumbai trials. We have had Pakistan acknowledge that the masterminds and the handlers of this attack came from Pakistan. And we have engaged with Pakistan over the last one year in the exchange of evidence and information relating to the Mumbai terror attacks. So, obviously the channels of communication that have remained open with Pakistan have served that purpose.

Interviewer: Except that, has Pakistan come close to acknowledging that members of the state and the establishment, the ISI in particular as both David Headley has confirmed and WikiLeaks have confirmed, have been directly involved in instigating terror against India? Has that critical acceptance come?

Foreign Secretary: We are still away from that critical acceptance, I would acknowledge that. But the fact is, now look at the international community, look at the international response to the role of agencies connected with the Pakistan state in the pursuit and encouragement of terrorism directed against India, directed against Afghanistan. Today we are no longer like Cassandras talking about terrorism emanating from Pakistan. There is a widespread groundswell of belief and conviction in the stand that we have taken and the acknowledgement by the international community that we are taking the right position.

Interviewer: And David Cameron's statement in a sense underlines that.

Foreign Secretary: Absolutely.

Interviewer: I will come to that in a moment's time. Let me bring up first a second major revelation that has been exposed by WikiLeaks, the fact that the Pakistani ISI has been involved in instigating terror against India in Afghanistan when General Kayani was head of the ISI. Today the same General Kayani is the Army Chief of Pakistan and he is going to continue in that post till at least 2013. How do you view General Kayani?
Foreign Secretary: I am not going to comment on personalities, and I am not here to give you a kind of assessment of how we see General Kayani. But let me say that the role of official agencies from Pakistan in promoting terrorism against India is something we have been speaking of and drawing attention to for a long time now. It is not just that the WikiLeaks have come up with that revelation. It has been known to us for a long time. And we have said all along that the acts of premeditated violence against our nationals in Afghanistan are completely unacceptable to us.

Interviewer: What about this? Many people in Pakistan and in India believe that General Kayani is inimical to this country. He has himself gone on record to say that under him the Pakistan Army will be India-centric. Does the Indian Foreign Office share that assessment?

Foreign Secretary: We have sixty years of a troubled relationship with Pakistan. And I think we understand and we know that country better perhaps than any other country in the world. So, we see through the glass darkly no doubt about the state of Pakistan and the conditions in which this relationship is operating at the moment. So, to that extent we understand the role of Pakistani state agencies in promoting terrorism against India.

Interviewer: So, there is nothing about General Kayani that you do not understand; it is just that you may not want to say it publicly.

Foreign Secretary: I think we understand the nature of these institutions and the personalities behind them very clearly.

Interviewer: On the other hand he is also far and away the most important person in Pakistan. Is there a need for India to try and establish some direct line of contact with him?

Foreign Secretary: I have been asked that question on a number of occasions. My answer to that is that we have dealt and we continue to deal with and we will continue to deal with the civilian democratic government in Pakistan, the elected representatives of the people there, and the civilian officials concerned. That is the interface that we have adopted.

Interviewer: But you won't side by side seek to open some line of contact to the military leadership or Kayani in particular?
Foreign Secretary: I am not prepared to talk about that at the moment. But let me say that the interface as it exists is with the civilian government.

Interviewer: The hint you are giving is that there could be some attempt to broaden our contact with the Pakistani military, but it is not advisable to talk about it.

Foreign Secretary: I am not giving you any hints to that effect.

Interviewer: Let us widen our discussion. Given the nature of leaks that we have had both from WikiLeaks and from David Headley, is it still sensible for India to rely on America to curb Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: I think the strategic partnership with the United States of America is of undoubted importance, there are no two opinions about that, and the cooperation that we have engaged in with the United States in a number of sectors including counterterrorism is being taken forward. But having said that, we are not dependent on any third country when it comes to transacting relations with Pakistan. We deal directly with Pakistan, and bilateral issues are taken up bilaterally with that country.

Interviewer: You mentioned the strategic relationship. Many people feel that in fact the Headley revelations and WikiLeaks show that the credibility of America as a strategic partner might be under some sort of question today. Has America kept India informed? Did they do everything they could to curb the terror? Or were they aware of things that they did not share and did not respond to?

Foreign Secretary: I think the manner in which we have been to take this dialogue forward with the United States, the kind of cooperation that we have engaged in in counterterrorism has been to mutual benefit. There is no doubt about that.

Interviewer: Let us then talk about the developing situation in Afghanistan. Many analysts believe that as the situation becomes increasingly adverse for America, the Obama Administration sees Pakistan as the key to the solution. Do you share the view that Obama's increasing dependence on Islamabad will give Pakistan an influence and leverage to work out or at least determine the final outcome in Afghanistan?
Foreign Secretary: I do not believe you can paint those colours in a zero sum way as far as Afghanistan is concerned. Firstly, Afghanistan is a fiercely independent country. And the take away we have had from meetings with the Afghan leadership in the recent past is that they are zealous about guarding that independence and in ensuring that the progress that they have made in Afghanistan over the last nine years is not eroded in any manner.

Interviewer: Does this mean that they will check Pakistani influence themselves?

Foreign Secretary: I believe that the international community has to stay committed in Afghanistan for some more time. They are dealing with the war against terror there. That war has to be fought, it has to be won. So, I believe that there is a commitment here that the international community has to reinforce.

Interviewer: I will tell you why I asked this question. Karzai famously has referred to Pakistan as a conjoined twin. Pakistan protects, promotes the Afghan Taliban and is today involved in trying to facilitate talks between the Haqqani and the Hekmatyar groups and the Karzai government. How does the Indian Government view the possibility of Haqqani and Hekmatyar playing a role in a future Afghan Government?

Foreign Secretary: I think here again you are jumping to conclusions before things have happened. The red lines that were drawn at the London Conference on Afghanistan earlier this year are the red lines that the Afghan Government intends to adhere to and abide by. This has been said to us on a number of occasions. Now the fact is that you have groups within the Afghan Taliban that are obviously close to Pakistan, that promote terrorism, that espouse radical ideologies. And I do not believe, given the approach of the Afghan Government to adhering by those red lines that this reality or this possible conclusion that you referred to is really going to come about.

Interviewer: Except for the fact that the Afghan Government has itself been holding, albeit surreptitiously but not by any means secretly, talks with Haqqani group and Hekmatyar group representatives?
Foreign Secretary: I put it this way. I think that the situation in Afghanistan, given the operation of so many groups there, is complex. But let me say once again that this is a fiercely independent country that you are dealing with and a leadership that is fiercely independent, and is not going to, I believe compromise its basic interest in ensuring a strong, a stable and united Afghanistan, which is not going to be bedeviled by the threat of terrorism.

Interviewer: Now as you know, Foreign Secretary, Pakistan has long wanted what it called strategic depth in Afghanistan. Many people believe that America today, perhaps out of a certain sense of desperation, is coming close to accepting Pakistan's primacy in Afghanistan. And if that happens, that would be granting strategic depth. If that strategic depth were granted, what would it mean for India? Help us understand what it would mean?

Foreign Secretary: First of all let me tell you that the so-called strategic depth that you referred to is not a theory espoused by anybody in the international community. There may be some analysts in Pakistan, some people in Pakistan.

Interviewer: General Kayani talks about it.

Foreign Secretary: They may talk about it but I am talking about the reality. You are talking about an independent country; you are talking about a leadership in Afghanistan that is committed to fight terrorism, that is committed to maintain its independence. And I think that leadership needs to be helped in that regard.

Interviewer: You don't believe that this talk of conjoined twinship, which was Karzai's phrase, and at that same time he only referred to India as a friend not a twin, suggests that there is in fact a movement taking place, one that perhaps India may be a little ware of? You don't share that?

Foreign Secretary: I will be very alert obviously to what happens in Afghanistan. It is a neighbor; we have interests there; we have had interests there for a very long time that predate the present situation there. So, let me say that being friends as we are with Afghanistan - and this is a very deep friendship, it is a friendship that is cemented by bonds between people not just between governments - we are confident about our profile in Afghanistan and the fact that our interests will be well recognized by the international community. And this is increasingly evident in the dialogue that we have with our key partners.

Interviewer: One last question before I take a break. How do you view the stepped up military relationship between America and Pakistan? And if you have concerns, have you shared them with Washington? And what response have you got?

Foreign Secretary: We have shared our concerns with Washington. We have said all along that Pakistan cannot be given a blank cheque in such matters; and any assistance that is extended to Pakistan ostensibly for counter-insurgency and counterterrorism operations could very well be used against India as the history of the last sixty years goes.

Interviewer: And what did the Washington say?

Foreign Secretary: Washington is very attentive to our concerns. We have continued our dialogue on this issue. We are engaged in a constant communication with the United States on these issues. And I believe that the United States is increasingly aware, and alert, and attentive to these concerns

Interviewer: Except that arming Pakistan continues as a policy.

Foreign Secretary: Well there is a situation now in Afghanistan and there is the involvement of the United States in that situation, and Pakistan is involved in that entire operation. So, there is a certain context now in which all this is placed. But nonetheless, our concerns about it have been articulated very clearly to the Americans.

Interviewer: Sounds that we have to grit our teeth a little about things we do not like.

[Let us take a break at that point. I want to come back and talk to you about the other critical relationship that you handle - India and China.]

* * * * *
Interviewer: Welcome back to Devil’s Advocate and an exclusive interview with the Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao.

Foreign Secretary, let us come to China. On the one hand China is India’s single biggest trading partner and the two countries hope to hit the 60 billion dollar target this year. On the other hand, China supports Pakistan over Kashmir. It bends laws to sell nuclear plants to Islamabad whilst it questions India’s sovereignty over Arunachal Pradesh and seems to go out of its way to check our emergence as a leading power. How do you as Foreign Secretary view China?

Foreign Secretary: Let me tell you how I view the relationship. I think that is relevant to the question you have asked me. It is a complex relationship there is no doubt about it. But having said that and especially since we celebrate the 60th anniversary of our diplomatic relations this year, let me say the approach as we move forward is to ensure - and this is a point of view which is shared by the Chinese Government - mutual sensitivity to each other’s core concerns, as well as to seek broader convergence on many global issues. So, this is the trajectory along which the relationship is developing.

Interviewer: But are they really sensitive to India’s concerns, particularly Kashmir, particularly the arming of Pakistan, particularly the supply or proliferation of nuclear material to Pakistan? Are they sensitive?

Foreign Secretary: That is exactly the context I referred to when I spoke of the complexity in the relationship. And that is what dialogue, intelligently transacted dialogue, enable you to do when you seek more responsiveness from the other side about your concerns, this is exactly so that we are able to place these issues in context and to seek the other side’s focus on this issue and greater responsiveness and sensitivity to these issues.

Interviewer: The former National Security Advisor Brajesh Mishra has gone on record to say that he fears Islamabad and Beijing may be joining forces. And if that happens, he thinks India will end up with hostile neighbours both in the North and the West. To what extent do you share that concern?
Foreign Secretary: I know that there is a lot of analyses on the various scenarios that could be applied to the India-China relationship. But here in officialdom we deal with realities. And let me tell you the reality of the situation is that the border between India and China has been peaceful for the last few decades and the effort from both sides is to ensure that the mechanisms that we have put in place for confidence-building and for the maintenance of peace and tranquility work well, and there is constant communication between the two sides.

Interviewer: So, are you saying that the fear or the ...

Foreign Secretary: But let me add that this does not mean that we are not vigilant about or alert to situations where our security could be affected.

Interviewer: So, you are aware of the possibility of what in loose language I might call a ganging up between Islamabad and Beijing. You do not turn a blind eye to it.

Foreign Secretary: We take all these factors into account.

Interviewer: China today, in fact just ten days ago, became the world’s second largest economy. Does India have any apprehensions or concerns about China’s emergence as possibly the second most powerful country in the world?

Foreign Secretary: I think you and I belong to a generation that has been witness to the rise of China, the growth in its economic power, its power projection capabilities. We have been witness to all that. And at the same time the world is increasingly alert to the rise of India, the potential of India, the rapid economic growth of India, the potential in other words ...

Interviewer: But the gap between the two is growing, it is not narrowing.

Foreign Secretary: I believe what that points to, Karan, is the fact that this relationship, the relationship between India and China, is going to be the big story of the 21st century.

Interviewer: A story that will be in India's interest or a story which will make India wary and perhaps a little apprehensive?

Foreign Secretary: A story based on dialogue, as I said, which we intend to conduct intelligently and which we intend to conduct with confidence so that our concerns are protected always.
Interviewer: Is China dialoguing with India openly, or are they doing it behind screens?

Foreign Secretary: I think there is a multisectoral dialogue with China on the bilateral front and if you look at the global multilateral front, there are increasing areas of convergence. I referred to that. And so this is really, as I said, the trajectory along which we hope the dialogue develops.

Interviewer: Foreign Secretary, a pleasure talking to you.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you so much.

231. Government of India announced 'Aid assistance of USD 5 million for provision of relief material to flood victims in Pakistan'.

New Delhi, August 13, 2010.

Government of India has offered assistance of US$5 million for provision of relief material from India for the victims of the massive floods that have adversely affected Pakistan, causing widespread damage to life and property.

In a telephone conversation, Hon'ble External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna conveyed to His Excellency Shah Mahmood Qureshi, Foreign Minister of Pakistan this gesture of solidarity with the people of Pakistan, in their hour of need. External Affairs Minister, on behalf of the people and Government of India, also conveyed deepest sympathies and condolences to the people and Government of Pakistan, on this natural disaster.

************

Earlier in a letter to his counterpart Makhdoom Shah Mahmood Quershi, External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna conveyed "sincere condolences of the Government and the people of India, on loss of lives, due to the widespread floods in Pakistan." EAM has also said that he is distressed by the devastation caused by the natural calamity.

232. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on Prime Minister’s telephonic talk with Pakistan Prime Minister to condole the loss of life and property in the recent floods and offer of assistance.

New Delhi, August 19, 2010.

The Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh called the Prime Minister of Pakistan, Syed Yousuf Raza Gilani today to express his sense of sorrow and to condole the deaths resulting from the huge floods that have devastated parts of Pakistan. The Prime Minister said that the Government of India had already made an offer of assistance and was ready to do more to assist in the relief effort. Dr. Singh said that in such times of natural disasters, all of South Asia should rise to the occasion and extend every possible help to the people of Pakistan affected by the tragedy.

233. Statement by Ambassador Hardeep Singh Puri, Permanent Representative at the UN at the Plenary meeting of the General Assembly to consider the humanitarian situation resulting from floods in Pakistan.

234. Suo Motu Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna in Parliament on India’s offer of assistance of US $ 25 million to Pakistan for flood relief.

New Delhi, August 31, 2010.

Pakistan has been severely affected by the massive floods that have caused widespread damage to life and property. The recent floods are being described as the worst in that part of the world in the last 80 years.
According to the latest figures given by the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 17.2 million people have been adversely affected by these floods. Death toll has reached over 1600. More than 1.2 million houses have been damaged or destroyed besides widespread damage to infrastructure, crops and livestock. All four provinces of Pakistan and Pakistan-occupied Kashmir have suffered the consequences. Latest reports indicate that the flood situation in Sindh continues to deteriorate, even as flood waters recede in Punjab.

We cannot remain unconcerned with this grave humanitarian crisis of enormous magnitude in our immediate neighbourhood. I had telephoned the Foreign Minister of Pakistan on August 13, 2010, and conveyed deepest sympathies and condolences to the people and Government of Pakistan, on this natural disaster, on behalf of the people and Government of India. As a gesture of solidarity with the people of Pakistan in their hour of need, I had also conveyed Government's offer of assistance of US $ 5 million for provision of relief material from India for the flood victims in Pakistan.

Prime Minister called Prime Minister of Pakistan Yusuf Raza Gilani on August 19, 2010, to express his sorrow and to condole the deaths resulting from the huge floods in Pakistan. Prime Minister conveyed that the Government of India had already made an offer of assistance and was ready to do more to assist in the relief effort.

Pakistan has conveyed its deep appreciation of India's offer of assistance. While mentioning that the United Nations has launched a flash appeal soliciting contributions from the international community to assist the people affected by the floods, Pakistan requested on 27 August that India may channel its contribution to the flood victims through the UN.

As a more concrete assessment of the damage inflicted by this natural disaster and the urgent needs of the people of Pakistan emerges, Government has decided to increase its assistance to Pakistan from 5 million US Dollars, announced earlier, to 25 million US Dollars. Out of this amount, 20 million US Dollars would be contributed to the 'Pakistan Initial Floods Emergency Response Plan' launched by the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. The balance of 5 million US Dollars would be contributed to the World Food Programme for its relief efforts in Pakistan.

Prime Minister has rightly said that in such times of natural disasters, all of South Asia should rise to the occasion and extend every possible help to the affected people. We remain committed to assisting the people of Pakistan in all possible ways in this difficult hour.

Thank you.

235. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on External Affairs Minister's letter to his Counterpart conveying Eid greetings.

New Delhi, September 9, 2010.

In a letter to his Pakistani counterpart, EAM has conveyed the deep appreciation of the people and Government of India on the release of 442 Indian fishermen who had been lodged in various jails in Pakistan. While thanking the Government of Pakistan, EAM said that he looked forward to early release and repatriation of all Indian and Pakistani prisoners to their respective countries.

EAM also conveyed his greetings to Foreign Minister Qureshi on the forthcoming festival of Eid-ul-Fitr and reiterated India’s commitment to work with Pakistan for the common good of the peoples of the two countries.

Subsequently, Government of India has conveyed to the Government of Pakistan its decision to repatriate seven Pakistani fishermen and twenty four civilian prisoners on September 15, 2010. Further steps are being taken, in cooperation with the Government of Pakistan, to release and repatriate other eligible Pakistani prisoners lodged in Indian jails.

[Please also refer to Document No.204.]
A press release issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs next day (10th September) announcing the release of some fishermen and prisoners said: "During the current year so far, the Indian Government has released 128 Pakistani prisoners and repatriated them to Pakistan via Attari. Orders were issued yesterday for releasing 58 fishermen lodged in Gujarat jails, subject to issue of travel documents by Pakistan authorities. The Pakistan Government has intimated a list of 43 fishermen. It has been seen that only 7 of them could be cleared for release at the moment. Release order in respect of these 7 persons has been issued. However, due to logistic issues, Pakistan Government has indicated that they would be able to receive them only on 15.9.2010. It has been decided that apart from 7 fishermen, 3 other prisoners lodged in Gujarat jails would be repatriated on 15.9.2010. Gujarat Government has been advised to move the appropriate court in respect of 55 Pakistani fishermen facing trial, so that the cases against them could be withdrawn and they could be repatriated to Pakistan. Apart from the above, 7 prisoners from Punjab, 7 from Jammu & Kashmir, 1 from Rajasthan and 2 from Delhi are also being released. They would also be repatriated on 15.9.2010 at Attari-Wagah border. With these orders, a total of 213 Pakistani prisoners will be released in the calendar year 2010."

On November 12, 2010 Ministry of Home Affairs issued another press release announcing the decision to release Pakistani fishermen and prisoners. The following is the text of that press release:

"Government of India has released and repatriated 54 Pakistani fishermen and 10 Pakistani prisoners, who have completed their sentence, to Pakistan on November 9, 2010 through Attari border. During this year, India has so far released and repatriated 111 Pakistani fishermen and 106 Pakistani prisoners to Pakistan. The release and repatriation of the Pakistani prisoners lodged in Indian jails is a continuous process. As per the procedure, a Pakistani prisoner can be repatriated only after he completes his sentence and it is confirmed by the State Government/UT Administration concerned that there are no other criminal cases in which he/she is undergoing trial before any judicial court. Further, a Pakistani national can be released and repatriated only after he/she is provided with Consular Access, his/her nationality is confirmed by the Government of Pakistan and a travel document is issued by the Pakistan High Commission in his/her favour."
236. Response of Official Spokesperson to gratuitous Pakistan statements on J&K.
New Delhi, September 17, 2010.

In response to a question regarding the statement on Jammu & Kashmir by the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, the Official Spokesperson said, "India firmly rejects gratuitous statements* issued by Pakistan on Jammu & Kashmir, which amount to interference in the internal affairs of India. Pakistan should take credible and effective action against infiltration from across the Line of Control and dismantle the terror infrastructure that exists in the territory under its control. This would be an important contribution towards safeguarding the welfare of the people of J&K, who suffer the consequences of terrorism fomented from across the Line of Control and the International Border. As a vibrant democracy, India has sufficient mechanisms and constitutional safeguards to address issues raised by its citizens in any part of the country.

India reiterates its commitment to resolving issues of mutual concern with Pakistan through dialogue and peaceful means. However, Pakistan must fulfill its solemn commitment of not allowing territory under its control to be used for terrorism directed against India in any manner. This would be in the interest of Pakistan and of the international community.

* The statement issued by the Foreign Office on behalf of Foreign Minister Mr. Qureshi took a serious note of the "deteriorating" situation in Kashmir, maintaining that the "indigenous movement in "India occupied Kashmir" has gained a new momentum and urgency." "The Kashmiris are unanimous in their demand for self-determination. This sentiment and its firm determination is being reflected in the peaceful protests of youth, women and all segments of civil society," it said. Reiterating support for the Kashmiris in their "just cause," the statement said Pakistan was committed to finding a fair and peaceful resolution of the Kashmir issue in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions and wishes and aspirations of the Kashmiris. This was second time in a week that Pakistan chose to make comments on the developments in Kashmir. In so doing, it also sought early and full resumption of the dialogue process with India. Pakistan wanted a constructive, sustained and result-oriented dialogue on all issues, including the Kashmir dispute.
237. Statement by Ambassador Hardeep Singh Puri, Permanent Representative at the UN, at the launch of the revised Pakistan Floods Emergency Response Plan.

New York, September 17, 2010.

Please see Document No.666.

238. Statement of Official Spokesperson rejecting resolutions on J&K by Pak National Assembly and Senate.

New Delhi, September 21, 2010.

"We have seen reports of resolutions* on Jammu & Kashmir that have been passed in the National Assembly and the Senate of Pakistan. We reject these resolutions. They have no locus standi on what is purely an internal affair of India. Pakistan should tackle the issues of constitutional safeguards, democracy, extremism, terrorism and human rights violations in the part of Jammu & Kashmir under its illegal occupation.

In the spirit of true rationality, India desires good neighbourly relations with Pakistan. We are committed to resolving all outstanding issues through dialogue. Crucially, Pakistan must fulfill its stated commitment of not allowing territory under its control to be used for terrorism directed against India in any manner."

* Pakistan's Parliament on 20th September condemned India's "brutal use of state force" in 'occupied Kashmir' and urged the international community to stop being silent spectators to the "brutalities" in the troubled Valley. First the Senate and then the National Assembly adopted identical resolutions on the situation in Kashmir on the opening day of the current session. In the National Assembly, the resolution was moved by Chairman of the Special Committee of The Parliament on Kashmir, Maulana Fazl-ur-Rahman. The resolution - moved in the Senate by the Opposition - also calls for the withdrawal of troops from the State, repeal of black laws, and the lifting of curfew in Kashmir. Expressing dismay over the situation in Kashmir, the two Houses further demanded an end to the media blackout, the release of arrested Kashmiri leaders and youngsters, and access to human rights organisations inside Kashmir. Extending support to the struggle of the Kashmiri people, the resolution said Pakistan would always provide moral, diplomatic and political support "for their right to self-determination." Articulating the dismay in Pakistani polity over the silence of the international community towards the issue, the resolution urged the United Nations to ensure that its resolution on the Kashmir dispute was implemented.
Mr. President,

I am exercising the Right of Reply in response to the statement just made by Pakistan.

Regrettably, my distinguished colleague from Pakistan has once again raised the issue of Jammu and Kashmir.

Such unsolicited and untenable remarks will not and indeed, cannot divert attention from the multiple problems Pakistan needs to tackle for the common good of its people, and indeed of the entire region.

Rather than making unsolicited remarks about internal affairs of others, Pakistan should seriously concentrate on addressing the enormous challenges confronting it: terrorism, extremism and sectarianism, to name a few and the dismantling of the terrorist infrastructure that exists on territory under its control.

Violence in Jammu and Kashmir has been fuelled over the past decades by external forces which do not want peace and progress in our region. This is a well known fact. The Indian Constitution guarantees the fundamental rights of all our people, including our brethren in Jammu and Kashmir, which is an integral part of India. Free and fair elections in Jammu and Kashmir have been regularly held and the people of Jammu and Kashmir have exercised their right to franchise to elect their representatives.

Thank you
Mr. President,

I am exercising the Right of Reply in response to comments from the Pakistani delegate.

We reject the untenable and unsolicited remarks from the distinguished delegate of Pakistan.

Thank you

240. Response of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna on the remarks by Pakistan Foreign Minister regarding Jammu & Kashmir.

In response to a question, at an interactive session at Asia Society in New York on September 28, on remarks by Foreign Minister of Pakistan regarding Jammu and Kashmir, in his address at the UNGA earlier in the day, the External Affairs Minister said:

"It is with a sense of genuine disappointment that I react to the unacceptable references to the Indian state of Jammu and Kashmir, made by Foreign Minister Qureshi in his address at the UN earlier today. I am also aware that at this august forum (Asia Society) he had brought up this issue last week. Pakistan is a country that has enormous and serious challenges confronting it. Such unsolicited and untenable remarks will not and indeed, cannot, divert attention from the multiple problems Pakistan needs to tackle for the common good of its people, and indeed of the entire region.

India is a vibrant, mature and thriving democracy. Our democratic institutions guarantee fundamental rights to all our citizens under our Constitution, including to the people of Jammu and Kashmir. The only path, as our Prime Minister has said, for lasting peace and prosperity in Jammu and Kashmir is that of dialogue and discussion. Meaningful dialogue can happen only in an atmosphere free of violence and confrontation. We are ready for dialogue with anybody or any group that does not espouse or practice violence."

241. Response of Official Spokesperson to former Pakistan President General Musharraf’s statement on Pakistan training for terrorism in J&K.

New Delhi, October 6, 2010.

In response to a question on General Musharraf’s reported statement* that Pakistan trained militant underground groups to fight against India in Kashmir, the official spokesperson stated that this is a widely accepted fact and General Musharraf’s assertion only confirms the veracity of what we have been repeatedly saying over the years. This is precisely why India has sought a firm and abiding commitment from Pakistan that it will not allow its territory and territory under its control to be used for the aiding and abetting of terrorist activity directed against India and for providing sanctuary to such terrorist groups.

* The former Pakistani President, Pervez Musharraf, had said Pakistan had regarded terror groups such as the Lashkar-e-Taiba (LeT) as "mujahideen" fighting for the "rights" of Kashmiri people. General Musharraf defending militant groups said: "From our point of view, LeT is fighting for the rights of Kashmiris and there is great public support in Pakistan for groups like the Lashkar-e-Taiba," he told NDTV adding anyone "fighting in your part of Kashmir" was a "mujahideen" for Pakistan. Asked whether killing innocent people was not terrorism, the former President retorted that the Indian Army was also killing civilians. "Isn't Indian Army also terrorist?" However, he admitted that the attack on Indian Parliament and the Mumbai bombings were terrorism. About his remarks to a German magazine last week that Pakistan trained militant groups were fighting in Kashmir, he said he did not mean that they were trained during his tenure. "I didn't say that. I said certain things which were taken as such," he said pointing out that "mujahideen groups like Lashkar-e-Taiba and Hizbul Mujahideen" came into being in 1989 after the "freedom struggle started in Kashmir." "To say that I was doing this ...this argument has to be killed. I was nothing at that time. I was just a Brigadier." Challenged on his description of the LeT as "mujahideen," he insisted that for Pakistan it was a group of freedom fighters.

New Delhi, October 19, 2010.

I consider it a privilege being invited to speak to such an august gathering at the Jamia Milia Islamia on a subject which is of critical importance to over a billion people of South Asia. I would like to take this opportunity to thank Vice Chancellor Najeeb Jung, who I am proud to call my friend and batchmate, my former colleagues Ambassador Satyabrata Pal and Ambassador T.C.A. Rangachari, Shri M.J. Akbar, Dr. Raja Mohan, Dr. Ajay Darshan Behera and the faculty of this reputed centre of learning for providing me an opportunity to set my sights on the future and speak on how I see the evolving paradigm of relations between the two largest countries in the South Asian sub-continent. Predicting the course of one of the most complex and unpredictable relationships in the modern era is a task that most intrepid astrologers would hesitate to undertake and ladies and gentlemen, I am no astrologer. I will however, attempt to approach the subject as a practitioner of diplomacy and international relations.

2. Six decades after the tragedy and trauma of Partition, a host of issues continue to bedevil India-Pakistan relations and cast long shadows on bilateral ties. The challenge then, is to grasp this moment in history to explore the possibility of peace in the region in the larger context of an increasingly interdependent and globalizing world. In the India-Pakistan discourse, we have literally eaten bitterness for the last sixty years and given the complexities of our ties, the task of improvement in ties is also Sisyphean. Some argue that we must induce a radical transformation of mindsets on both sides that view each other through the prism of an embittered past and entrenched hostility. This may be the conventional wisdom but is often not borne out by the behaviour of the multitudes of common people living on either side of the border. I say this in the realization that there are enough people in both countries that continue to be prisoners of the past. And yet, how does one explain the warm and spontaneous applause of thousands of spectators at the Jawaharlal Nehru Stadium on October 3 this year when the Pakistani contingent entered the stadium for the opening ceremony of the 19th Commonwealth Games in Delhi or the statements of support from the Pakistani sports authorities in the run up to the Games when others were vying with each other to write off the event before it had started? What explains this? On the one hand there is the push of realism that compels us to see the relationship with Pakistan as hobbled by its many limitations, while on the other hand, there is the pull of emotion, of sentiment, of the muffled footsteps of shared history that beat in our blood, that generates a response that is giving and generous.

It may be tempting to conclude that the common man desires peaceful and good neighbourly relations and that the governments of both countries are somehow impediments in achieving this cherished goal. This would be far too simplistic and naïve. While it is apparent that the people of both countries desire to live in peace and amity, yet it takes only one act of mindless terrorism, like the barbaric attack on Mumbai in November 2008, to vitiate the atmosphere and poison public perception.

3. Of course, there is the engulfing deficit of trust between the two countries that needs to be bridged. This needs to be done both at the government and people to people level. Numerous well-meaning efforts in the past have faltered and many will continue to do so in the future unless both sides show an unwavering commitment to stay the course and create a propitious and enabling environment to surmount the innumerable obstacles that are littered on the path to peace. There is no magic panacea that can make this happen. But it is incumbent on each and every one of us to persevere with patience and dedication so that future generations do not remain hostage to a poison-ridden legacy of political misunderstandings and geopolitical antagonisms.

4. The Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan met on the margins of the SAARC Summit in Bhutan in April this year and agreed to normalize relations and to address the deficit of trust that exists between the two countries. Accordingly, they mandated their Foreign Ministers and Foreign Secretaries with the task of working out modalities for restoring trust and confidence in their relationship and thus paving the way for a substantive dialogue on all issues of mutual concern.

5. Pursuant to this directive, I visited Islamabad in June to prepare the ground for a subsequent visit by the External Affairs Minister to Pakistan the next month. While I do not want to dwell into the specifics of both these visits, notwithstanding the cordial and frank exchanges, our efforts to bridge the trust deficit and pave the way for a serious and comprehensive dialogue were thwarted by a level of overreach by Pakistan that complicated the resumption of a sustained dialogue process. However, we do not view this as a set-back in our quest for peace as both sides appear to be committed to ensuring that the spirit of Thimphu is not lost. The Foreign Minister of Pakistan has accepted our invitation to visit India, dates for which will be decided through diplomatic channels. We will continue to strive for a resolution of all outstanding issues through dialogue.

6. The countries of the South Asian region have a common stake in ensuring a peaceful, stable environment that guarantees a bright and prosperous future. Democracy has infused a new vitality among all countries in the region, and brought with it a revolution of rising expectations and perceived possibilities among the peoples of South Asia. The leadership in all the countries of South Asia is obliged to concentrate on the imperative of providing inclusive and sustainable development and economic opportunities to the needier sections of their populations. This realization should also unlock bilateral relations between India and Pakistan. It informs the vision of our leadership when they seek dialogue with Pakistan. The linkages resulting from economic interaction, connectivity and people to people contacts could build the sinews of a more durable and lasting peace in which stakeholders will have a vested interest in preserving the gains of a mutually beneficial relationship. This is the call of the 21st Century.

7. India’s advocacy of an incremental, graduated and forward-looking approach that seeks to address the deficit of trust is by no means an attempt to avoid tackling of the substantive differences that trouble relations with Pakistan. While there can be no guarantees for success, such an approach seeks to build first on what is achievable and simultaneously to also address the more intractable issues in a sustained manner. The issue of terrorism arising out of the sub-conventional conflict directed by Pakistan against India for over two decades now, cannot be ignored either. It is as substantive an issue as the issue of Jammu and Kashmir, or the issue of the Siachen Glacier.

8. As we seek to pave the way for a serious and comprehensive dialogue, how do we enlarge the constituencies of peace in both countries so that the dawn of a new era does not remain a chimera? I had earlier referred to economic linkages and enhanced people to people contacts. The task before us is to translate this on the ground to a mutually enriching and beneficial partnership for the greater good.

9. The Indian economy has grown exponentially in the last couple of decades and despite the global downturn, it continues to grow at over 8%. While the Government is committed to inclusive growth so that the benefits of an ever expanding economy percolate down to the grassroots, we would be happy to share this growth with all our neighbours. This can only be done if we are able to promote our complementarities and link our economies to a trajectory of inclusive and incremental growth. Artificial barriers and self-defeating policies need to be struck down. The ensuing economic interaction and mutually beneficial cooperation can lift our region from the morass of poverty and deprivation and at the same time create vested interests in a shared vision of peace and prosperity for our people. Unfettered trade and investment flows coupled with freer people to people exchanges at various levels, particularly between the youth of the two countries, and better communications could help in realizing this vision.

10. Education can form a bridge in bringing together young minds in the region. Universities and academic institutions in both India and Pakistan can play an important role in creating objective understanding. The South Asian University, under the SAARC framework, provides an ideal platform to create a South Asian consciousness. The vision of a world-class South Asian University was envisaged by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the 13th SAARC Summit in Dhaka in 2005 when he stated:

"The people of our subcontinent are at the cutting edge of scientific and technological research and in the front ranks of the knowledge society across the world. Wherever an enabling environment and world-class facilities are made available to our talented people, they excel. Let this become a forum where our academicians, scholars, researchers and gifted students can work together in the service of human advancement".

The University, which commenced its first academic session this year, has as its core objectives, building a culture of understanding and regional consciousness; nurturing a new class of liberal, bright and quality leadership; and building the capacity of the region in science, technology and other disciplines considered vital for improving the quality of life of the people. It can play a stellar role in peace building and reconciliation in the subcontinent by providing a foundation for mutual comprehension and understanding amongst our youth. We have emphasized that Pakistani students seeking admission to the SAU are entitled to the same non-discriminatory dispensation as all other entrants to the University from other South Asian countries, and that we welcome them to come to SAU.

11. The future of India-Pakistan relations, as I see it, must be predicated on such a win-win situation where everybody has a stake in furthering the cause of peace and good neighbourly relations. It is with this vision that our Prime Minister has repeatedly reached out to Pakistan. The recent devastating floods in Pakistan provided an opportunity for us to express our solidarity with the people of Pakistan in their hour of need. Our offer of $25 million was meant to alleviate the heart-wrenching suffering of the people and we are ready to do much more as a neighbour that shares a long border with Pakistan. We are ideally placed to rush badly needed relief material, food, medicines and supplies across the border to provide succour to the suffering millions. Pakistan wished us to route our assistance through the United Nations. We were ready to oblige.

12. I am not trying to predict a rose-tinted future for India-Pakistan relations. But surely, we can dare, perchance, to dream? To dream of a future where on both sides of the divide, our two countries will foster imaginative and creative approaches to tackling problems of peace and security, confidence-building in both conventional and non-conventional areas of defence, the differences over Jammu and Kashmir, and gird our relationship by a raft of clearly enunciated agreements and understandings that can bury the rusting, corrosive hatchet of sixty years and more?

13. Our relations have been encumbered by a host of missed opportunities. We compound these by refusing to learn from history and thereby condemn ourselves to replicating the past rather than unmaking it. However, to learn from history we cannot afford one-sided or biased interpretations. We must also remember that essentially, we were one people shaped from the same timber of humanity before we decided to part ways. There is a need to understand the past in a more redemptive way. Unless we rise above the present we cannot realise the future we seek. The choices for the future are stark and real. Either we learn to live together in peace and harmony or we risk imparting to future generations our differences and prejudices that will continue to divide us rather than unite us and indeed widen the gulf between us. Given the complexities of our relationship and the tortured path that we have traversed till now, it is easy to be cynical and predict a gloomy future. However, as an eternal optimist and someone who believes in the power of people to shape their destiny I feel it is incumbent on all of us to strive and achieve a peaceful and mutually reinforcing relationship that will unlock the true potential of more than a billion people for their betterment. Can we realise this goal? The answer needs to be jointly explored sooner than later or else time will pass us by and yet another opportunity would go begging. I am confident that if we are to approach this with a shared vision and a conviction of purpose, the quest for peace need not remain elusive and in the realm of our fantasy. The eyes of the rest of the world are on us as we engage in this quest.

14. That, Ladies and Gentlemen, would be my prognosis for the future of India-Pakistan relations. I would like to conclude by wishing all the participants in this symposium success in their deliberations.

243. Response of Official Spokesperson to Pakistan proposal for sending a Judicial Commission to India in connection with the Mumbai Terrorist attack.

New Delhi, October 20, 2010.

In response to a question on Pakistan’s proposal for sending a Judicial Commission in connection with the Mumbai terrorist attack trial, the Official Spokesperson said,

“Pakistan has made a general proposal for sending a Judicial Commission to verify the statements of the Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate and the Chief Investigating Officer, who had recorded Ajmal Kasab’s confessional statement, and the Para-medical staff, who performed the post mortem of the dead bodies. Pakistan has requested for the views of the Government of India on receiving and facilitating a Judicial Commission for recording the relevant evidence.”
India has sought clarifications from the Pakistan side on, inter alia, the law under which the Commission will be constituted, its composition, the nature, scope and modus operandi of the work of the Commission. A confirmation has also been sought that the Commission would only record the statements of the Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate and Investigating Officer and that no cross-examination would take place.

Once Pakistan has responded to these relevant questions, Government of India would be in a position to take a decision on the proposal.

244. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on Defence Minister A. K. Antony's statement at the Army Commanders Conference.

New Delhi, October 25, 2010.

The Defence Minister Shri AK Antony today asked Pakistan to shed its ambivalence on terrorism. Addressing the top brass of Army Commanders here, Shri Antony said Pakistan did not appear to give up India-centric posturing.

"Pakistan does not appear to be willing to leave its India-centric posturing. It will have to shed its ambivalence in dealing with terror groups. Though we are not unduly concerned, we will have to keep constant vigil on the developments in Pakistan," Shri Antony said.

Pointing out that fighting terrorism cost the nation substantially, the Defence Minister reiterated that we will crush terrorism with all our might. Shri Antony said that violence has shown signs of abating in Jammu and Kashmir due to the constant vigil by the Army.

"The Army has been quite successful in countering the proxy war and in minimising the incidents of terror," Shri Antony said, adding, "Still, as long as the terror infrastructure across the border continues to flourish, we cannot afford to drop our guard".
The Defence Minister said that the security situation in the 'AfPak' region continues to be a cause for concern. "Despite the physical and material costs, India has at all times, advocated peace and stability with all nations - including our neighbours," Shri Antony said. "The volatile political situation in our immediate neighbourhood has the potential of having a debilitating impact on the region. India's role in preserving peace and stability thus, becomes all the more important," he added.

Calling upon the Armed Forces to maintain a high level of operational readiness, Shri Antony stressed that the Government remains committed to modernisation and indigenisation.

"The Defence Ministry has introduced changes in the Defence Procurement Procedure to increase private participation. I am confident that the changes in our 'Procurement Procedures' will help in realising the full potential of Public Private Partnership and leverage the advantages in the fields of R & D and manufacturing," Shri Antony said.

The Defence Minister underlined the need for probity and transparency in defence deals. "I wish to strongly reiterate that we must adopt 'Zero Tolerance' towards corruption in letter and spirit. Even the slightest hint of corruption will erode the lofty image of our Armed Forces that the people of our nation have become used to," Shri Antony said.

The inaugural session of the Army Commanders' Conference was attended among others by the Chief of Army Staff, General VK Singh and the Defence Secretary, Shri Pradeep Kumar. The five-day conference will review the security situation, emerging challenges and strategies. Issues pertaining to operational logistics to include infrastructure development and modernization will also be discussed. Keeping pace with the technology transformation and advancement, the conference will also focus on training and its effectiveness based on state-of-the-art technology for meeting the future challenges as also attaining a high state of combat readiness.
245. Information supplied to the Lok Sabha in reply to a question regarding international cooperation on terrorism.

New Delhi, November 10, 2010.

The matter of terrorism and international cooperation to counter it is consistently taken up by the Government of India at various levels, including the highest, with governments of friendly countries, including the United States of America. This is done both bilaterally and in multilateral fora.

In the last three years [2007-2009], bilateral meetings have been coordinated by Ministry of External Affairs with 18 countries/groupings. Bilaterally, Government of India cooperates in counter-terrorism through the mechanism of Counter-Terrorism Joint Working Groups (CT-JWGs). Ministry of External Affairs currently coordinates CT-JWGs with 25 countries and 2 regional groupings (list attached). Ministry of Home Affairs does the same with some of our immediate neighbours.

These meetings have proved very helpful in enabling exchange of views and experience regarding terror threats and groups, sharing of information, cooperation in training and capacity building, countering terror financing, sharing best practices, strengthening of multilateral efforts in countering terrorism and in facilitating agency to agency cooperation.
246. Reiteration by India of its request to Pakistan to act on its commitment to bring perpetrators of Mumbai terrorist attacks to justice.

New Delhi, November 25, 2010.

Government of India has conveyed to Pakistan its regret that despite the repeated assurances given by Pakistan’s leadership at the highest level and the extensive cooperation extended by India in connection with the ongoing trial and investigation in Pakistan on the Mumbai terrorist attacks, substantive and verifiable progress has not been made on bringing all the perpetrators and masterminds of the heinous attacks to justice.

India has once again called upon Pakistan to fulfil its stated commitment to bring all the perpetrators of the Mumbai terrorist attacks to justice and unravel the larger conspiracy behind the attacks. A time-bound fulfilment of its stated commitments by Pakistan would not only go a long way towards building trust and confidence between the two countries but would also be a reflection of Pakistan’s commitment to combat terrorism comprehensively.

Lack of tangible progress in delivering on this vital commitment is increasingly being viewed in the Indian public opinion as dilatory and lacking in seriousness.

This message was issued on the 2nd anniversary of the Mumbai attacks by a Pakistani terrorist gang.
247. Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to the media on the 2nd anniversary of Mumbai attack.

Colombo, November 26, 2010.

On the 2nd anniversary of the barbaric terrorist attack in Mumbai, the nation pays respectful homage to its sons, daughters and foreign guests, whose innocent lives were cruelly snuffed out.

The day is a stark reminder, that no cause can ever justify terror, either by state or non-state actors. Once again I call upon Pakistan, to dismantle the terror machine operating with impunity in territories under its control and to bring all the perpetrators of the Mumbai terror attack to speedy justice.

We seek peaceful, stable and cooperative relations with Pakistan. I travelled to Islamabad last July for talks and have also invited my counterpart Foreign Minister Qureshi to visit New Delhi for further discussions. India is committed to resolving all outstanding issues with Pakistan through dialogue.
248. Extract relevant to Pakistan from the press briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on the ongoing visit of Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

Question: Madam, paragraph 12 in the Joint Communiqué says, "They also recognized the need to implement all relevant UN resolutions, in particular UNSC resolutions 1267, 1373, 1540 and 1624." In the light of the fact that just a couple of days back JuD Chief Hafiz Saeed has held an open rally in Pakistan and the fact that now it appears in the Joint Communiqué as well, what sort of cooperation do you expect from China in this regard?

Foreign Secretary: In the discussions that the two Prime Ministers had, obviously they talked about the situation in the region and also the relations between India and Pakistan. Our concerns about terrorism emanating from Pakistani soil were expressed, as also the fact that relations between India and Pakistan will really move forward in a substantive manner, once these concerns that we have, these very legitimate concerns, about terrorism and about terrorist groups, and terrorist leaders of such groups pursuing an agenda which is very anti-Indian, is stopped.

That was clearly put forward and also the fact that the need is very much there for China to also look at the real concerns that India has, and the fact that it is only when terrorism is properly addressed and the forces of terrorism are defeated that we will have a stable region. And that affects China also because Premier Wen referred to the terrorism that they face in Xinjiang. And he expressed great sympathy for the victims of the Mumbai attacks and how concerned they have been about the fact that Mumbai had come under attack like that. So, in that context we spoke about, in the context of what is happening in the UN Security Council and 1267 Committee, the need to effectively curb and prevent the activities of organizations like the Jamaat-ud-Dawa was raised. This was a conversation I think which moved in a very open and candid manner where we were able to express our concerns quite clearly, articulate them very clearly. I think the Chinese Premier was given a very clear understanding. I am sure it enabled him to have a much clearer understanding of India's concerns in this regard.

Question: Madam, just one follow-up on that. What was the Chinese response to our concerns on terror, which you said we brought up in a big way, and particularly about these UN Resolutions? I am asking this because they are still holding out on Masood Azhar being added to 1267. So, while in the Joint Statement they say one thing, is it practically being reflected in what they are doing? Also, did the issue of stapled visas come up and what was their response?

Foreign Secretary: On terrorism I think I have explained myself quite clearly. In some detail I referred to the conversations that Prime Minister had with Premier Wen on this issue. So, I do not need to go into that in greater detail. On the stapled visas issues, in fact Premier Wen Jiabao brought it up himself and he said that China takes our concerns on this issue very seriously. And he suggested that the officials of the two sides should have in-depth consultations with each other so that this issue can be resolved satisfactorily.

Question: What consultations?

Foreign Secretary: On the issue itself.

Question: It is up to them.

Foreign Secretary: Yes, of course, in a sense the ball is in their court. There is no doubt even before we raised it. Of course, we intended to raise it with him but he brought it up in the course of the conversation and spoke about how they took this issue and the issue of our concerns very seriously. I think that is something that you have to take note of, the fact that he said that.

* * * * *

Question: The Chinese Premier will be visiting Pakistan tomorrow. Did our Prime Minister tell the Chinese leader to use China's enormous influence over Pakistan to expedite 26/11 probe? And also did we convey our concerns over the Sino-Pakistan nuclear deal for building two nuclear reactors?

Foreign Secretary: The fact that Premier Wen is going to Pakistan after India, you should not see this as in any way connected to what we are doing in the India-China relationship. We just have to look at the Communiqué and I think it really speaks for itself. There is evidence here of a multidimensional, well-evolved relationship that India and China have been able to achieve. And this does not compare with any other relationship really because it is the narrative of two of the largest developing countries, two neighbours who have consciously worked on building a relationship despite the complex issues that still remain to be resolved - I refer to the boundary question between the two countries. There is a conscious attempt by both sides to expand the scope of the relationship and the Communiqué speaks for itself. We are really moving from one level to a higher level with each visit, with each such engagement.

On the issue of Pakistan, I answered in the first question about how our concerns about terrorism from Pakistan were expressed very clearly. China's assessment on the situation in Pakistan was also conveyed to us. Of course, I am not going to discuss confidential assessments but certainly we were able to have a very good exchange of views on what is happening in our region, particularly in the context of the terrorism in Pakistan, the kind of turbulence that we have seen coming out of that country.

On the issue of the nuclear reactors, I wanted to draw your attention to the fact that both countries stated their commitment to nonproliferation objectives and to expand their dialogue on these and related issues in bilateral and international fora. So, we already have a means, a mechanism, a way to handle these issues, and that is how we intend to tackle it.
