The India-Sri Lanka Foundation is a unique inter-governmental mechanism that has provided crucial support to and helped catalyze a number of initiatives taken by civil society in the area of art, culture, education, human resource development, training, etc. Foreign Secretary announced Government of India’s decision to enhance its contribution to the corpus of the Foundation by another India Rupees 15 million (approximately SLR 38 million) as a one-time grant. This announcement was warmly welcomed by her interlocutors. During her visit, Foreign Secretary also inaugurated the Sri Lanka-India Centre for English Language Training in Peradeniya, Kandy on 7th March. The Centre has been set up with the assistance of the Government of India in collaboration with the well-known English and Foreign Languages University, Hyderabad and is meant to support the Sri Lankan Presidential Initiative for English as a Life Skill. The Centre has a state-of-the-art digital language laboratory and has already trained over 4,000 teachers. In her remarks at the inauguration, Foreign Secretary expressed her happiness at participating in an initiative that was aimed at the empowerment of the ordinary people of Sri Lanka.
251. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the establishment of Short-Term Indian Chair at the University of Colombo,

New Delhi, March 19, 2010.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and University of Colombo have signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) for establishment of Council's Short-Term Chair of Social Sciences at the University of Colombo. High Commissioner of India in Sri Lanka, Shri Ashok K. Kantha, and Vice Chancellor of the University Prof. Kshanika Hirimburegama signed the MoU on March 11th, 2010 at the University's Senate Hall in the presence of the Foreign Secretary of Sri Lanka, and senior academic staff of the University.

Under the terms of agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the University, shall appoint a suitable Indian academician to hold the Chair for a period of six months. During the six months term, the Visiting Professor would contribute to the academic life of the University by engaging in teaching, research and mentoring. The Chair would commence from October, 2010. The MoU would remain valid for five years from 2010.

In his remarks, Indian High Commissioner Shri Ashok Kantha stated that Indian and Sri Lanka share an excellent relationship, in which both countries could count on each other whenever required. However, there has been a lack of focus on regional studies, thus depriving policy makers of crucial inputs. He reiterated that the MoU would enable the University to source academicians on a long-term basis from India. He opined that the Visiting Chair should be regarded as a stepping-stone for the establishment of a much-needed Center for Contemporary Indian Studies. The Vice Chancellor observed that the MoU would contribute to the exchange of expertise on regular basis between the two countries.

The institution of a Visiting Chair would be a very important step in furthering ICCR's larger mandate of fostering and strengthening educational and cultural linkages and mutual understanding between India and Sri Lanka through exchange of scholars, intellectuals, academicians and artistes.
At the invitation of the President of India, Smt. Prathiba Devisingh Patil, the President of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, Mr. Mahinda Rajapaksa, is paying a State Visit to India from 8th - 11th June 2010. The President is accompanied by Mrs. Shiranthi Rajapaksa.

2. The President of Sri Lanka was accorded a ceremonial welcome at Rashtrapathi Bhavan on 9th June 2010. During the visit, the President of Sri Lanka was received by the President of India, who hosted a banquet in his honour.

4. The President of Sri Lanka had a meeting with the Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, on 9th June 2010, which was followed by delegation level talks.

5. The official discussions between the two sides were marked by friendship, mutual respect and understanding. The President of Sri Lanka and the Prime Minister of India agreed that the shared cultural and civilizational heritage of India and Sri Lanka and the extensive people-to-people interaction provided the foundation to build a vibrant and multi-faceted partnership. India-Sri Lanka relations have matured and diversified with the passage of time, encompassing all areas of contemporary relevance, including trade, services and investment, development cooperation, science and technology, culture and education.

6. In consonance with their vision of the future of the India-Sri Lanka relations, the two leaders agreed to further harness the enormous potential available for consolidating and strengthening the bilateral partnership by building on shared values and principles of democracy and pluralism, leveraging common strategic concerns and interests, enhancing connectivity between the two countries, increasing the integration of their economies, and reinforcing the institutional framework for cooperation.
7. The Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, congratulated the President of Sri Lanka, Mr. Mahinda Rajapaksa, on his recent electoral victories and conveyed that the recent elections, together with the cessation of hostilities in Sri Lanka in May 2009, provided a historic opportunity for the country’s leaders to address all outstanding issues in a spirit of understanding and mutual accommodation and to work towards genuine national reconciliation. The Prime Minister emphasised that a meaningful devolution package, building upon the 13th Amendment, would create the necessary conditions for a lasting political settlement. The President of Sri Lanka reiterated his determination to evolve a political settlement acceptable to all communities that would act as a catalyst to create the necessary conditions in which all the people of Sri Lanka could lead their lives in an atmosphere of peace, justice and dignity, consistent with democracy, pluralism, equal opportunity and respect for human rights. Towards this end, the President expressed his resolve to continue to implement in particular the relevant provisions of the Constitution designed to strengthen national amity and reconciliation through empowerment. In this context, he shared his ideas on conducting a broader dialogue with all parties involved. The Prime Minister of India expressed India’s constructive support for efforts that build peace and reconciliation among all communities in Sri Lanka.

8. The President of Sri Lanka expressed appreciation for India’s substantial and generous assistance including through a grant of Indian Rupees 500 crore for the humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs). He noted that the steps taken by India for humanitarian assistance, including supply of family packs of food and clothing, medicines, setting up of a field hospital and an artificial limb fitment camp and for the resettlement of IDPs, including provision of shelter material, cement bags and agricultural implements and deployment of demining teams, were important and timely.

9. The Prime Minister of India was apprised on the measures taken by the Government of Sri Lanka to bring about a rapid and sustainable resettlement of the bulk of the IDPs. It was stated that the process of resettling the limited number still remaining in the transit facilities would be further expedited. Both leaders agreed on the urgent need for the resettlement of the remaining IDPs, along with speedy rehabilitation, reconstruction and development in the North and the East of Sri Lanka. They agreed to work closely towards this end. In this context, India’s assistance to rebuild infrastructure, including railway infrastructure, set up several Vocational Training Centres, repair and construct schools, houses, stadium and recreational facilities, supply much-needed inputs for agricultural regeneration and undertake several other projects was greatly appreciated.

10. Both leaders announced a major initiative to undertake a programme of construction of 50,000 houses for Internally Displaced Persons in the Northern and Eastern Provinces. The President of Sri Lanka warmly welcomed the offer of Indian support for this programme.

11. With regard to the task of reconstruction in northern Sri Lanka, the Prime Minister of India reiterated India’s support for various infrastructure projects. In this regard, the two leaders witnessed the signing of the contract for the reconstruction of the Madu-Talaimannar railway line by IRCON. The contract for the Medawachchiya-Madu segment of the track will be signed shortly. It was also noted that the contract for the reconstruction of the Omanthai-Pallai segment of the railway track by IRCON has already been signed. The two leaders directed that the contracts for the construction of a new signalling and tele-communication network by IRCON, and for the reconstruction of the Pallai-KKS railway line, which will be undertaken by the Sri Lanka Railway in collaboration with IRCON, also be concluded at the earliest. The work on all these construction projects will commence latest by October 2010. It was also noted that the procurement of rolling stock from India would take place in a phased manner. The Prime Minister of India and the President of Sri Lanka directed that a Steering Committee be established to oversee and facilitate the timely and successful completion of the contracted work.

12. The President of Sri Lanka expressed his appreciation for the generous and concessionary credit facilities amounting to about US$ 800 million offered by India for the railway projects in Sri Lanka. The two leaders directed that the relevant agreements on the lines of credit for requisite amounts be concluded within two months, so that there is no delay in the commencement of the projects.
13. In addition, with a view to restoring physical and cultural infrastructure and promoting normalcy in northern Sri Lanka, it was also agreed that India would extend assistance for the rehabilitation of Palaly Airport and Kankesanthurai Harbour as also help in renovating the Duraiappah Stadium and constructing a Cultural Centre in Jaffna.

14. Both leaders welcomed the involvement of Self Employed Women's Association (SEWA) in addressing the issue of rehabilitation of war widows and witnessed the signing of the MoU on Setting Up of Women's Trade Facilitation Centre and Community Learning Centre at Batticaloa.

15. Both leaders expressed satisfaction at the progress of work on the Colombo-Matara railway line being constructed with Indian assistance, and directed that the project be completed in a timely manner.

16. The two leaders witnessed the signing of the MoU on Small Development Project Scheme.

17. The Prime Minister of India and the President of Sri Lanka reiterated their mutual commitment to substantially enhance the range and depth of the India-Sri Lanka bilateral relationship including through greater economic integration, enhancing connectivity and other linkages and closer developmental cooperation.

18. In this context, both leaders agreed to revive the Joint Commission mechanism and hold the next meeting of the Joint Commission, co-chaired by the two Ministers of External Affairs, in the second half of 2010 in order to devise a fuller agenda of bilateral cooperation in various fields.

19. Both leaders agreed to promote dialogue on security and defence issues of relevance to their bilateral relationship, and enhance high-level military exchanges and training of military personnel as well as impart additional training in Indian institutions for the newly recruited police personnel. They agreed to institute an annual defence dialogue between the two governments.

20. Both leaders condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. They also agreed to strengthen the security and legal framework of their bilateral relationship. To this end, the leaders witnessed the signing of the following Agreements:
i. Treaty on Mutual Legal Assistance on Criminal Matters; and

ii. Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Prisoners.

21. Both leaders underlined their desire for closer economic integration to achieve the shared goals of alleviating poverty, creating wealth and bringing about progress and prosperity for the people of the two countries. In this context, they agreed to cooperate closely to nurture a favourable environment to forge closer economic and trade linkages.

22. Both leaders expressed satisfaction that bilateral trade, despite the downturn in 2009 as a result of the global economic slowdown, was already beginning to show a healthy recovery.

23. Recognizing the considerable benefits from greater economic cooperation between the two countries, the two Leaders noted the progress achieved under the India - Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement. They agreed that it would be timely to build on this achievement through a more comprehensive framework of economic cooperation, best suited to the two countries. In this context, they directed the concerned officials of the two countries to hold intensive consultations towards developing a framework for sustainable economic partnership between the two countries and addressing outstanding issues.

24. The two leaders also agreed to launch a CEOs Forum to involve the public and private sectors in a dialogue to generate ideas to deepen and broaden the bilateral economic relationship in all its aspects and to help chart the future course of business and trade interaction between the two countries.

25. The Prime Minister of India and the President of Sri Lanka agreed that there was great potential for the further and rapid expansion of bilateral agricultural cooperation and collaboration in livestock development between the two countries. They noted that the MoU for Scientific and Technical cooperation between the Indian Council of Agriculture Research and the Sri Lanka Council for Agriculture Research Policy had yielded sound results, including in human resource development. They agreed that collaborative research and development programmes in areas such as livestock, biotechnology, the design and manufacture of agricultural and farm machinery and equipment, hybrid seed development and post harvest processing of perishable products, fruits and vegetables would further contribute to agricultural cooperation. The concerned authorities of the two countries would also cooperate in the area of weather forecasting. Towards this end, the two leaders resolved that the two countries should finalize at the earliest possible an Agreement providing for comprehensive cooperation in Agriculture.

26. The two leaders agreed to enhance cooperation in the energy sector. In this connection, they welcomed greater cooperation between the public and private sector entities and emphasised the need to cooperate further.

27. The two leaders were briefed on the progress in discussions between the National Thermal Power Corporation of India and the Ceylon Electricity Board of Sri Lanka on the establishment of a joint venture for building a 500 MW coal-fired power plant at Sampur (Trincomalee), incorporating environmentally friendly technologies, with the Government of Sri Lanka providing the requisite infrastructure support. The concerned parties have agreed to complete their discussions on the Joint Venture Agreement, the Power Purchase Agreement, the Agreement with the Board of Investment of Sri Lanka, the Implementation Agreement and other relevant arrangements within three months, so that the work on the project can commence without delay. The Sri Lankan side expressed its appreciation for the further concessionary line of credit of US$ 200 million afforded by the Government of India, to enable the Government of Sri Lanka to fulfil its commitments under the Implementation Agreement, including with regard to the construction of a jetty at Sampur and of transmission lines from Sampur to Habarana as also the initial equity of the Ceylon Electricity Board (under the Joint Venture Agreement).

28. An agreement on conducting a feasibility study for the interconnection of the Indian and Sri Lankan electricity grids was also signed on this occasion. The two leaders expressed their confidence that the agreement would make a significant contribution to enhancing India-Sri Lanka cooperation in the energy sector.

29. Recognising the need to speedily restore the traditional links between the two countries, both leaders agreed to resume the ferry services between Colombo and Tuticorin and between Talaimannar and Rameswaram. They directed their respective officials to put in place the mechanisms to start these services at an early date.
30. The two leaders agreed on establishing the Consulates General of India in Jaffna and in Hambantota to reinforce consular cooperation and friendly links between the two countries. The Prime Minister of India welcomed in this regard Sri Lanka’s interest in establishing a further Post in India, in addition to those in Chennai and in Mumbai functioning under the High Commission in New Delhi.

31. The Prime Minister of India and the President of Sri Lanka expressed satisfaction that the Joint Statement on Fishing Arrangements of October 2008, which sought to put in place practical arrangements to deal with bonafide fishermen crossing the International Maritime Boundary Line (IMBL), had led to a decrease in incidents. Both sides agreed to explore ways to strengthen the safety and security of fishermen and, in this context, directed their respective officials to revive the meetings of the bilateral Joint Working Group on Fishing. It was also decided to enhance and promote contacts between the fishermen’s associations on both sides.

32. The President of Sri Lanka proposed discussions on the matter of establishing a joint information mechanism on the possibility of oil and gas fields straddling the India Sri Lanka Maritime Boundary. The Prime Minister of India assured the President of Sri Lanka that this proposal would receive the Government of India’s attention and the matter could be discussed further between the two sides.

33. Recognising that the shared cultural and civilizational links provided the bedrock of bilateral relations, the two leaders agreed that the 2600th year of the attainment of enlightenment by Lord Buddha (Sambuddhatva Jayanthi) will be commemorated through joint activities. They noted with appreciation that an International Buddhist Conference will be organized in Kandy later this year with the support of the Indian Council of Cultural Relations.

34. Both leaders also welcomed the proposal for the restoration of Tiruketheeswaram temple at Mannar to be undertaken with the assistance of the Archaeological Survey of India and the College of Architecture and Sculpture, Mamallapuram, with the involvement of the Department of Archaeology of Sri Lanka.
35. The Prime Minister of India and the President of Sri Lanka also witnessed the signature of the Programme for Cultural Cooperation for the period 2010-2013.

36. Recognising the immense potential that exists in the two countries to tap knowledge as a key driver of economic and social advancement, the two leaders agreed that both countries should enhance links in the educational sector as a core component of their bilateral engagement. In this context, the two leaders announced the launching of an "India-Sri Lanka Knowledge Initiative".

37. Under this Initiative, the two leaders welcomed the proposal of the University of Colombo to establish a Centre for Contemporary Indian Studies with the support of the Government of India.

38. The two leaders further welcomed the recent inauguration in Kandy of the Sri Lanka-India Centre for English Language Training (SLICELT) as part of the President's Initiative on English and Information Technology. A distance learning network linking the English and Foreign Language University, Hyderabad and SLICELT will be established to enable training of master trainers and teachers in Sri Lanka and upgrading their skills. It was agreed to expand SLICELT further by establishing provincial and regional centres with Indian assistance.

39. The other elements of the Knowledge Initiative agreed upon by the two leaders include the following:

- India announced an expansion of its scholarship programmes in Sri Lanka, including increasing their numbers, introducing new scholarship schemes, addressing special needs of Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka and upcountry areas and ensuring wider outreach throughout the country.

- Both sides agreed to promote linkages between Indian and Sri Lankan universities and institutions of higher learning.

- India responded positively to the request of Sri Lanka to extend technical assistance to the Ten Year Presidential Initiative to steer Sri Lanka towards a Trilingual Society by 2020.
Both sides agreed to collaborate in the establishment of a research institute on agriculture in the Northern Province of Sri Lanka.

Both leaders agreed to promote the use of space technology for a variety of societal services using Indian satellites. For this purpose, the Indian side will extend bandwidth to set up satellite-interactive terminals in Sri Lanka.

Welcoming the growing connectivity between the two countries, the two leaders called for greater cooperation in tourism and promotion of people-to-people contacts, especially between the youth of India and Sri Lanka.

The leaders reiterated the importance of continuing to work together in the regional and international fora given their increasing convergence of views on a range of issues.

Recalling the deliberations at the 16th SAARC Summit in Thimphu, the two leaders agreed to work towards the full realization of the vision of the Thimphu Silver Jubilee Declaration.

The two sides also agreed that current global challenges require the reinvigoration of multilateralism, including through the strengthening of the UN system. In this context, Sri Lanka reiterated its position that the UN Security Council reform process should facilitate India’s legitimate claim for a permanent seat in the UN Security Council and reaffirmed her support for the candidature of India as a permanent member of an expanded UN Security Council. Sri Lanka’s support to India’s candidature for a non-permanent seat on the UN Security Council for 2011-12 was also reiterated.

Both leaders expressed their satisfaction at the outcome of the State Visit by the President of Sri Lanka to India, which provided further testimony to the continuing excellent relations between the two countries. The President of Sri Lanka also invited the President of India and the Prime Minister of India to pay early visits to Sri Lanka. The invitations were accepted with appreciation.
253. Remarks by Foreign Secretary at media briefing on the State Visit of President of Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, June 9, 2010.

The President of Sri Lanka H.E. Mahinda Rajapaksa is currently in India on a State Visit. He is accompanied by Mrs. Shiranthi Rajapaksa and a high-level delegation, including three Cabinet Ministers.

2. This morning, he was accorded a ceremonial welcome at Rashtrapati Bhavan. External Affairs Minister and the Finance Minister called on him. The Leader of Opposition and the Chairperson of the UPA are also calling on him. A delegation of MPs from Tamil Nadu is also meeting him in the afternoon.

3. He had a meeting with Prime Minister followed by delegation-level talks. Seven Agreements and MOUs were signed.

4. The talks between Prime Minister and President Rajapaksa were wide-ranging and encompassed a range of issues reflecting the multi-faceted nature of our relationship. The two leaders shared their vision of the future of India-Sri Lanka relations and agreed that President Rajapaksa’s visit provided an opportunity to lay the foundation for a forward-looking comprehensive agenda for bilateral engagement. These shared understandings are reflected in a Joint Declaration which will be issued shortly.

5. Our Prime Minister emphasised that Sri Lanka’s emergence from decades of conflict offered a historic opportunity to spearhead an era of reconciliation where all communities can come together to realise a political settlement. Prime Minister also observed that a meaningful devolution package, building upon the 13th Amendment, would create the necessary conditions for this purpose. In particular, Prime Minister emphasised the need for urgent steps to resettle the remaining IDPs and urged Sri Lanka to undertake speedy rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka. Prime Minister also referred to the extensive assistance being provided by India for these efforts including Rs.500 crores as grant and about US$ 800 million as lines of credit for railway projects.

6. Both leaders announced a major initiative to undertake a programme of construction of 50,000 houses for Internally Displaced Persons in Northern and Eastern Provinces of Sri Lanka. This will be done with Indian assistance.

7. India will also be taking up several projects for the reconstruction of the North and the East, including rebuilding of railway infrastructure, rehabilitation of Kankesanthurai harbour and Palaly Airport, construction of a cultural centre in Jaffna and several vocational training centres, renovation of the Duraiappah stadium, rehabilitation of war widows, etc.

8. In order to assist setting up of the NTPC-CEB Joint Venture of 500 MW Thermal Power Plant at Trincomalee in Eastern Sri Lanka, India will be extending a line of credit of US$ 200 million. The relevant agreements to set up the power plant will be concluded within three months.

9. We have also signed an agreement to conduct a feasibility study for the inter-connection of the Indian and Sri Lankan electricity grids.

10. Both countries have also decided to resume the ferry services between Colombo and Tuticorin and between Thalaimannar and Rameswaram in keeping with the desire to restore traditional links between the two countries.

11. India would also establish Consulates General in Jaffna and Hambantota.

12. The two leaders noted the progress achieved under the India-Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement and agreed that it would be timely to build on this achievement through a more comprehensive framework of economic cooperation. They have directed officials to hold intensive consultations on such a framework.

13. We have also agreed to launch a CEOs Forum to involve the business community in a dialogue to generate ideas to deepen and broaden the bilateral economic partnership.

14. Another significant initiative announced by the two leaders was the India-Sri Lanka Knowledge Initiative. Under this initiative, the Government of India will support the University of Colombo to establish a Centre for Contemporary Indian Studies. We have announced a major expansion of our scholarship programmes in Sri Lanka. We will be assisting in English language education in Sri Lanka under the aegis of the newly-established
902  INDIA’S FOREIGN RELATIONS - 2010

Sri Lanka-India Centre for English Language Training at Kandy and its regional and provincial centres. We will also provide technical assistance for the Presidential initiative on Trilingual Society in Sri Lanka and collaborate in the establishment of a research institute on agriculture in the Northern Province.

15. The two leaders have agreed that the 2600th Year of the Enlightenment of Lord Buddha (Sumbuddhatva Jayanthi) will be commemorated through joint activities.

16. We have also agreed to assist in the restoration of the sacred Tiruketheeswaram Temple at Mannar, Sri Lanka.

17. In order to explore way to strengthen the safety and security of our fishermen, the two sides agreed to resume the discussions under the Joint Working Group on Fishing and promote contacts between the fishermen’s association on both sides.

18. Sri Lanka has reaffirmed its support for the candidature of India as a Permanent Member of an expanded UN Security Council, as also for India’s candidature for a non-permanent seat on the UN Security Council for 2011-2012.

New Delhi, June 9, 2010.

Your Excellency President Mahinda Rajapaksa
Madam Shiranthi Rajapaksa
Distinguished Guests from Sri Lanka
Ladies and Gentlemen

It is, indeed, a great pleasure to welcome Your Excellency President Rajapaksa and Madam Shiranthi Rajapaksa to India. Excellency, allow me, at the outset, to felicitate you on your resounding electoral victory.
The people of Sri Lanka have renewed their faith in your leadership. The successful conclusion of the elections and the participation of all communities in this process from all provinces augur well for the future of Sri Lanka.

Excellency, your visit comes at a time when there is promise of a new era of peace and progress in Sri Lanka. Terrorism and secessionist forces have been resolutely defeated. Rehabilitation and reconciliation are the need of the hour. Your Government has undertaken the immediate and challenging task of resettling the nearly 300,000 Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs), who emerged out of the conflict zone traumatized by the violence. I am confident that in the coming days, the remaining IDPs will also return to their places of residence to resume their life in peace and security. The restoration of their livelihood, rekindling of their entrepreneurial spirit and resumption of cultural and developmental activities combined with strong financial and moral support will help them resume productive lives again.

Your Excellency’s electoral victory holds out hope that an era of reconciliation will begin, where all communities would come together and forge a permanent settlement addressing all outstanding issues in a spirit of mutual accommodation. A genuine political settlement is the path to cohesion and mutual coexistence.

India stands ready to contribute, in any way it can, to assist Sri Lanka in its return to normalcy. The visit to Sri Lanka of a group of Members of Parliament from Tamil Nadu last October served to underline this commitment. Our initial focus was on humanitarian assistance which included supply of family packs, medicines, artificial limbs and a field hospital and on the resettlement of IDPs. Apart from the assistance of Rs. 500 crores for the rehabilitation in the north, we are extending about US$ 800 million as Lines of Credit for railway projects. We are willing to contribute to the reconstruction process through support for reviving agriculture, for rebuilding schools, housing and civil infrastructure, for rehabilitating war widows, constructing the Cultural Centre in Jaffna, setting up Vocational Training Centres and restoring the Duraiappi Stadium.

India and Sri Lanka relations are civilisational and inextricably linked by history, language, religion, trade and, more recently, by our struggle against colonialism and commitment to democracy and pluralism. In fact, it is this blend of the ancient and the modern that has made India and Sri Lanka relations unique in the modern world. With the cessation of hostilities in northern Sri Lanka, India and Sri Lanka have an opportunity to realize the full potential of their bilateral relations. I am heartened to note that, during this visit, we are committing ourselves to substantially enhance the range and depth of our bilateral engagement.

Enhanced economic interaction and greater connectivity hold the key to leverage our mutual strengths for the benefit of our peoples and, indeed, the entire region. Gains of the India-Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement should be consolidated. Trade and investments need to be encouraged further. Several Sri Lankan private sector companies have invested profitably in India. Our traditional development partnership thrives and several projects have been taken up all over Sri Lanka.

I am pleased that we have decided to resume the ferry services between Rameshwaram and Thalaimannar and between Colombo and Tuticorin ports - links that had remained disrupted for years. Power-grid interconnectivity is another linkage being explored. More than 100 flights a week ply between the two countries and the largest number of tourists in Sri Lanka are from India. To bring India closer to the people and promote people-to-people contacts, we are opening Consulates in Jaffna and Hambantota.

Both our countries should come together to leverage our strengths in the world of knowledge and enhance our cooperation in the education sector. Our scholarship outreach in Sri Lanka is being expanded and our capacity building in the education sector, especially among the Indian Origin Tamils, will continue. Recognising our shared civilisational bonds, both countries will commemorate the 2600th year of the attainment of Enlightenment of Lord Buddha through joint activities in Sri Lanka.

India and Sri Lanka can show the way forward to the region and to the world as a model of mutually beneficial cooperation. We can find new synergies and new areas of cooperation. It is through enhanced engagement that we can realize the full potential of our relations.
Distinguished Guests, may I request you to join me in a toast:—

— to the good health and personal well being of His Excellency President Rajapaksa and Madam Shiranthi Rajapaksa; — to the progress and prosperity of the people of Sri Lanka; and — to the ever-growing cooperation and friendship between the two countries.

255. Press Release issued by the High Commission of India in Sri Lanka on the visit of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao to Sri Lanka.

Colombo, August 31, 2010.

Foreign Secretary Smt Nirupama Rao began her visit to Sri Lanka on 31st August with a visit to Vavuniya, Kilinochchi and Jaffna. She was accompanied during the visit by the High Commissioner of India Shri. Ashok K. Kantha, Governor of the Northern Province, Maj Gen (Rtd) G.A.Chandrasiri and senior officials of the Governments of India and Sri Lanka.

2. In Vavuniya, Foreign Secretary received a briefing on the resettlement situation from Maj Gen Kamal Gunaratne, the Security Forces Commander of the Wanni. She then visited Menik Farm, where she met with a number of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) and their families who still await resettlement. She also visited their homes and witnessed their conditions of stay. In a public meeting at the Urban Council Hall in Vavuniya, Foreign Secretary met with another group of IDPs. She assured the IDPs of the Government of India’s continued commitment to assist them in the task of rebuilding their lives. India’s announcement to build 50,000 houses was widely welcomed. Foreign Secretary underlined that these houses will be built with local participation and will give a fillip to local employment. Foreign Secretary also met with the Government Agent (GA) of Vavuniya, Mrs. PSM Charles and discussed other possible areas where India could assist in the process of resettlement.
3. Foreign Secretary next visited Mahilankulam near Omanthai, a site where the Horizon (ex-servicemen) Group of India is conducting demining operations in a heavily mined area that constituted the no-man's land between the former Forward Defence Lines (FDLs) of the Sri Lankan Army and the LTTE. The Government of India is funding three Horizon demining teams, in addition to four teams from Sarvatra, another Indian demining group working in Sri Lanka. The work of the demining teams has come in for considerable praise. Before leaving Vavuniya, Smt Nirupama Rao also distributed another consignment of Indian assistance consisting of agricultural toolkits, roofing sheets and cement bags among recently resettled IDPs, at the Agrarian Services Centre in Omanthai.

4. Foreign Secretary visited Kilinochchi, where she met with local army and civil officials who briefed her on the progress of resettlement. They expressed their happiness that Government of India was readily coming forward to assist in the process of resettlement. She also met with recently resettled families in the Kilinochchi area and distributed toolkits, cement bags and roofing sheets to them.

5. In Jaffna, Foreign Secretary met with local officials who briefed her on the situation in the Jaffna Peninsula and the resettlement priorities of the district. Foreign Secretary was accorded a warm public reception at the Jaffna Public Library where the Minister of Traditional Industries and Small Enterprise Development, Mr. Douglas Devananda and the Mayor of Jaffna were also present. At the Library, she also met with a broad spectrum of civil society leaders and heard from them about the recent developments following the end of armed conflict. They underscored the need for India to be involved in the political process to ensure a permanent settlement.

6. During her interaction in Jaffna, Foreign Secretary underlined that India stood with Sri Lanka in responding to the challenges posed by the task of resettlement and rehabilitation of the large number of IDPs resulting from the end of armed conflict in 2009. In particular, she referred to the challenge posed by housing and noted that India had pledged to build 50,000 houses in the Northern and Eastern Provinces, and that Jaffna would be assisted through signature projects such as the Jaffna Cultural Center, Jaffna Teaching Hospital and the Duraiappah Stadium.
She emphasized that it was time to look to the future for the sake of the coming generations and underlined that India had always accorded high priority to the welfare of the people of Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka.

7. Foreign Secretary also visited the site of the Cultural Centre that will be constructed with Indian assistance. She also distributed Indian assistance to a group of recently resettled IDPs.

8. On 1st September, Foreign Secretary will continue her visit to Sri Lanka by visiting Mullaitivu and Trincomalee, before returning to Colombo for further meetings with Sri Lankan dignitaries. She will also call on the President of Sri Lanka before her departure to India.

256. Press Release issued by the High Commission of India in Sri Lanka on the visit of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao to Sri Lanka.

Colombo, September 1, 2010.

Foreign Secretary Smt Nirupama Rao continued her visit to Sri Lanka by traveling to Mullaitivu and Trincomalee on 1st September. She had visited Vavuniya, Kilinochchi and Jaffna on 31st August.

2. In Mullaitivu, which was one of the districts most affected by the recent conflict, Foreign Secretary received a briefing from the Government Agent (GA) of Mullaitivu, Mr. N. Vethanayakam, on the status of efforts directed at resettling IDPs and rebuilding essential infrastructure in the region. While 16,000 families have already been resettled in Mullaitivu, the GA informed Foreign Secretary that de-mining was still a factor preventing the resettlement of others. He expressed deep appreciation for the assistance that had been received from the Government of India for resettling IDPs. Foreign Secretary subsequently met with a group of IDPs at the District Secretariat Office and distributed roofing sheets and agricultural toolkits among them. Speaking on the occasion, Smt Nirupama Rao praised the spirit of the people of the region, saying that they had come through a very difficult challenge. She reiterated India’s concern for the welfare of the people of this region and said that India would continue to work with the Government of Sri Lanka to help resettle the people and rebuild their lives. While speaking about India’s pledge to build 50,000 houses in Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka, she underlined that this would be done using local expertise and resources wherever available so that employment could be generated locally. She emphasized that peace was necessary for development and that the need of the hour was to look forward and benefit from the tremendous potential that Sri Lanka had as a country to grow and prosper.

3. Foreign Secretary next visited Trincomalee. She held a meeting with the Chief Minister of the Eastern Province, Mr. Sivanesathurai Sandirakanthan at the Eastern Provincial Council offices and discussed with him various projects with which India was assisting in the Eastern Province and others that were in the pipeline. She noted in particular the project on housing, a project to assist war widows in Batticaloa by the Self Employed Women’s Association (SEWA) and another to build a vocational training centre in Eastern Province. Foreign Secretary also invited the Chief Minister to visit India at his convenience.

4. Foreign Secretary called on the Governor of the Eastern Province, Rear Admiral (Rtd) Mohan Wijewickrema, who briefed her on the development work undertaken in a number of sectors in the Province following the restoration of peace in mid-2007. He also outlined future investment opportunities in the Province, especially in the area of tourism. While in Trincomalee, Foreign Secretary visited the Koneswaram Temple and handed over to the temple management the keys of a bus gifted to the temple by the Government of India.

5. Returning to Colombo, Foreign Secretary called on His Excellency Mahinda Rajapaksa, President of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, at Temple Trees. She apprised him of her visit to the Northern and Eastern provinces and the assistance projects being undertaken by India for the benefit of the IDPs. President Rajapaksa welcomed India’s assistance.
6. Foreign Secretary also met with leaders of major political parties, including UNP Leader and Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Ranil Wickremesinghe, as well as leaders of the Tamil National Alliance and the Ceylon Workers’ Congress.

7. On the final day of her visit on 2nd September, 2010, Foreign Secretary will be hosted for breakfast by the Minister of External Affairs of Sri Lanka, Hon. G.L. Peiris. She will hold further meetings with delegations of other political parties as well before departing for India later in the afternoon.

257. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna's visit to Sri Lanka.

New Delhi, November 23, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. The External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna is paying a bilateral visit to Sri Lanka. EAM leaves on the 25th, the day after tomorrow, and would return on the 28th. His salient engagements include calls on the President and the Prime Minister of Sri Lanka on Friday 26th November, followed by co-chairing the seventh India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission meeting along with his Sri Lankan counterpart. In the second half of the day he leaves for Hambantota where he would be inaugurating the new Consulate General of India.

On the 27th, EAM leaves for Jaffna where he would first inaugurate the new Consulate General of India in Jaffna and then participate in the ground-breaking ceremony for the pilot project to construct 1,000 housing units. You would recall that when President Rajapaksa had visited India in June, 2010, it was decided that India would be constructing 50,000 housing units for assisting the IDPs.

Thereafter he leaves for Medawachchiya where he would be inaugurating the railway project. I will come back to the details of the new 100 kms railway line shortly. This is broadly the programme, including some of the salient engagements of EAM.

He would be accompanied by Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao; my colleague Joint Secretary (BSM) Mr. Tirumurti, as well as some other colleagues from MEA and of course our High Commissioner in Colombo.

India and Sri Lanka share a common cultural and civilisational heritage. She is also one of our closest and historically important neighbours. Highest level attention is being paid by both sides towards nurturing this vital relationship. You are aware that President Mahinda Rajapaksa had visited India last month to participate in the closing ceremony of the 19th Commonwealth Games. He also had a bilateral meeting with the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh where they reviewed all aspects of the relationship.

President Rajapaksa had earlier paid a state visit to India in June, when a Joint Declaration was adopted, which you must have seen, outlining a roadmap for infusing greater vigour, greater content in our relationship.

Similarly the External Affairs Minister has been regularly engaging, regularly meeting with his Sri Lankan counterpart Prof. G.L. Peiris. The Sri Lankan FM had accompanied his President to India both in June and October, and has also been meeting EAM on the sidelines of international fora every few months. During his October visit, last month, the two Foreign Ministers had a very useful exchange of views on the bilateral relationship focusing also on the seventh Joint Commission meeting which will be taking place on the 26th of November.

Foreign Secretary had last visited Colombo from 31 August to 2 September, and JS (BSM) had accompanied her. These are just some of the key instances of important meetings or visits that have been taking place. I am happy to note that over the years our bilateral relations have matured, have diversified to cover the entire gamut of relationship including important areas like trade, commerce, services, developmental cooperation, science and technology, security and defence cooperation, cultural relations, agriculture, capacity-building, and so on.

After the ending of the armed conflict in May 2009, Prime Minister announced a Rs.500 crore package for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction in Sri Lanka primarily to assist some 300,000 Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) who had taken refuge in temporary shelters.

The package included 250,000 family packs comprising important needs such as grocery, hygiene kits, food, utensils, clothing. We had also set up an emergency field hospital which treated more than 50,000 IDPs. We supplied medicines and medical equipment.

Subsequently we worked on resettlement of IDPs. Here 7,800 tonnes of roofing and construction material was made available to Sri Lanka for that purpose. Also 70,000 agriculture starter packs were provided. You are aware that agriculture is one of the important means of livelihood for people affected by the conflict in that area. Therefore, one of the important things was to de-mine the area, and India had sent seven teams for de-mining.

Next the reconstruction and development phase has been initiated especially in the Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka, which was outlined in the Joint Declaration of June 2010. Under this, India has agreed to construct 50,000 housing units, which I mentioned earlier.

Besides the 70,000 agriculture starter packs, India is supplying high quality seeds, 500 tractors and other agricultural implements to assist in cultivation. This exercise will be completed before they end of this year.

During the visit of President Rajapakse a decision was also taken to provide a US$ 800 million credit line for upgrading railway infrastructure including for construction, rolling stock, signaling and telecom equipment. I mentioned that the EAM will be inaugurating the 100-kilometre Thalaimannar-Medawachchiya-Madhu railway line on the 27th of November.

Another $ 167 million credit line has been made available for rehabilitation of Southern Colombo-Matara railway line which was earlier damaged by the tsunami, and work is proceeding on schedule.

In addition, India has agreed to undertake a host of infrastructure development projects including development of the KKS Harbour, the Palaly airport, construction as a joint venture of 500 MW coal-fired thermal plant in Sampur, in Trincomalee, construction of a cultural centre in Jaffna, establishment of a 150-bed hospital in Dikoya, and as importantly in assisting Sri Lanka in reviving small and medium enterprises (SMEs). We are also assisting in the setting up of vocational training centres and are taking up a number of small development projects.

I would like to note that the number of IDPs has since fallen from about 300,000 to 20,000. Both sides continue to pay attention to further improving the quality of life of the IDPs by inter alia assisting them to secure means for sustainable livelihood.

India has also urged Sri Lankan Government to undertake a structured dialogue to evolve a political settlement acceptable to all communities in Sri Lanka to enable them to live in an atmosphere of peace and dignity.

Our economic and trade relations are also developing very well. India has become Sri Lanka’s largest trading partner. Since the conclusion of the Free Trade Agreement, trade has increased manifold and is currently in the region of $3 billion. Both sides are also in the process of finalizing the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA).

Sizeable Indian investments estimated at over US$ 400 million in a number of sectors including telecom, automobiles, hotels, banking, airlines have already flown into Sri Lanka. To further enhance, to invigorate direct business-to-business links it was decided during the visit of the President of Sri Lanka to establish an India-Sri Lanka CEOs Forum.

It was similarly agreed to enhance people-to-people links, to resume ferry services from Colombo to Tuticorin and from Thalaimannar to Rameshwaram. We have good air connectivity with 35 flights between the two countries every week. More than 100,000 Indian tourists are visiting Sri Lanka.

Thank you.
Friends

I am delighted to arrive in Sri Lanka this evening.

India-Sri Lanka bonds are historical and civilisational - the arrival of Prince Arhat Mahinda in 3rd Century Before Christ heralded the advent of Buddhism into Sri Lanka. Over the years, our links have become truly multifaceted. Given these links and our mutual support in times of need and adversity, a more comprehensive relationship beckons us.

The visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in 2008 and President Rajapaksa twice this year have been landmark visits. The Joint Commission, which I will Co-chair with my counterpart Prof. Peiris, Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs of Sri Lanka, will ensure that the decisions taken during these visits are closely monitored and implemented.

During my visit, I look forward to calling on H.E. President Rajapaksa and Prime Minister Jayaratne. I will be inaugurating our Consulates in Jaffna and Hambantota, which will serve to promote our people-to-people links. I also look forward to inaugurating the Pilot Project of 1000 houses in Jaffna for the resettlement of IDPs in the Northern Province. As you are aware, India will be taking up the construction of 50,000 houses in Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka. I will also inaugurate the construction work on the railway lines in the North. India has committed itself to extending an assistance of US$ 800 million as lines of credit for railway infrastructure development.

India and Sri Lanka are actively collaborating on a range of developmental and connectivity issues and rehabilitation projects. These include the rehabilitation of the Colombo-Matara railway line in the South, resumption of ferry services between Colombo and Tuticorin and Thalaimannar and Rameswaram, rehabilitation of the KKS harbour, projects to resettle and rehabilitate the Internally Displaced Persons and war widows and revive their livelihood etc.

It is our hope, and the Sri Lankan Government has assured us that the remaining IDPs in the camps would be re-settled by the end of this year.

Economic engagement, connectivity, tourism and knowledge industry are areas of great potential in our future bilateral cooperation. We hope to intensify our trade and investments as we recover from the global recession.

The end of the armed conflict holds out hope that an era of reconciliation will begin in Sri Lanka. A meaningful devolution package would help create conditions for a lasting peace.

I would like to conclude by mentioning that India and Sri Lanka have an unprecedented opportunity to take our relationship forward and I am confident that my visit will generate further momentum in that direction.

Thank You

259. Agreed Minutes of the 7th session of the India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission.

Colombo, November 26, 2010.

The seventh session of the Sri Lanka-India Joint Commission was held on 26th November 2010 in Colombo. It was co-chaired by His Excellency, Shri S.M. Krishna, Minister of External Affairs of India and Hon’ble G.L. Peiris, Minister of External Affairs of Sri Lanka. The agreed agenda of the meeting is at Annexure-1. The lists of the Indian and Sri Lankan delegations are, respectively, at Annexure-2 and Annexure-3.

2. The discussions at the Joint Commission were marked by friendship, mutual respect and understanding. The two Ministers agreed that the shared cultural and civilizational heritage of India and Sri Lanka, the extensive people-to-people interaction and their common strategic concerns and interests provided the foundation to build a vibrant and multi-faceted partnership. India-Sri Lanka relations have diversified with the passage of time, encompassing all areas of contemporary relevance, including trade, services and investment, development cooperation, science and technology, culture and education. Today, with the end of armed conflict in Sri Lanka, these relations are poised to develop further in an all-round manner.
3. The Joint Commission reviewed developments in bilateral relations since the visit to India in June 2010 of His Excellency Mahinda Rajapaksa, President of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka and noted with satisfaction that the visit had laid a strong foundation for the future development of India-Sri Lanka relations. The Joint Statement issued during the visit embodies the vision of the two leaders for harnessing the enormous potential available for consolidating and strengthening the bilateral partnership. This can be achieved by building on shared values and principles of democracy and pluralism, leveraging common strategic concerns and interests, enhancing connectivity and economic engagement, and reinforcing institutional frameworks for a comprehensive partnership in all areas of bilateral endeavour. In this context, the two sides welcomed the opening of the Consulate General of India in Hambantota on 26 November and of the Consulate General of India in Jaffna on 27 November. The Ministers also reaffirmed the importance of the Joint Commission mechanism to monitor implementation of bilateral understandings.

ECONOMIC & DEVELOPMENT COOPERATION, TRADE, FINANCE & INVESTMENT

4. The Joint Commission reiterated the need to substantially enhance the range and depth of the India-Sri Lanka bilateral relationship through greater economic integration to achieve the shared goals of alleviating poverty, creating wealth and bringing about progress and prosperity for the people of the two countries. The meeting noted with satisfaction that bilateral trade, despite the downturn in 2009 as a result of the global economic slowdown, has shown a healthy recovery in 2010. The two sides reviewed investment proposals being considered by companies in both countries and expressed satisfaction at the growing interest of Indian and Sri Lankan companies to invest further in each other's markets. In this context, the two sides agreed to cooperate closely to nurture a favourable environment to forge closer economic and trade linkages.

FTA/CEPA

5. Recognizing the considerable benefits from greater economic cooperation between the two countries, the Joint Commission noted the significant progress achieved under the India-Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement (ISLFTA). It reaffirmed the understanding contained in the bilateral Joint Declaration of June 9, 2010 that it would be timely to build on this achievement through a more comprehensive framework of economic cooperation best suited to the two countries. In this context, it expressed satisfaction with the recent discussions between the officials of the Departments of Commerce of the two countries. The Joint Commission also took note of the stakeholders’ consultations carried out by the Sri Lankan side on the draft framework text of the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA). It welcomed also the agreement between the officials of the Departments of Commerce of the two countries following their recent talks that, in keeping with the instructions of their respective leaders to hold intensive consultations towards a more comprehensive framework for economic cooperation, a delegation from the Ministry of Commerce and Industry of India would visit Sri Lanka on mutually convenient dates in December 2010 to resume discussions on such a framework from where they had been left in July 2008.

CEOs' Forum

6. The Joint Commission welcomed the constitution of the India-Sri Lanka bilateral CEOs' Forum. It expressed its hope that the Forum would prove to be a valuable mechanism in bringing together the public and private sectors in a dialogue to generate ideas to deepen and broaden the bilateral economic relationship in all its aspects and to help chart the future course of business and trade interaction between the two countries.

Credit Lines

7. The Joint Commission reviewed the utilization of the existing Lines of Credit (LOC) offered by the Government of India to the Government of Sri Lanka, especially those pertaining to the rehabilitation of the Southern Railway corridor (US$ 167.4 million). The two sides also reviewed the status of the LOC for Northern Railway Reconstruction and the LOC of US $200 million offered by India for the construction of a jetty at Sampur and of a transmission line from Sampur to Habarana, and financial support for equity contribution of the Ceylon Electricity Board (CEB) for setting up the joint venture with NTPC to develop a coal power plant at Sampur.

Railway Projects

8. The Joint Commission reviewed progress on the Northern Railway projects being implemented by IRCON. It expressed satisfaction that contracts for Omanthai-Pallai, Madu Road-Talaimannar and Medawachchiya-Madu Road had been signed. The Ministers witnessed the signing of the credit agreement for $416.39 million for these three projects in the presence of His Excellency the President of Sri Lanka and welcomed the fact that work on the Northern Railway Line was commencing with the inauguration scheduled for 27 November, 2010. Both sides agreed to facilitate the work for its timely completion. Further, in keeping with the understanding contained in the Joint Declaration of June 9, 2010, the Joint Commission took note of the finalization of the negotiations pertaining to the agreement on signaling and telecommunication and agreed that the contract for the Pallai-KKS line, to be implemented jointly by IRCON and Sri Lanka Railway would be concluded soon. The Joint Commission noted that the procurement of rolling stock from India would take place in a phased manner. The Joint Commission agreed on the need for early completion of all these negotiations. Both Ministers expressed their satisfaction at the progress of work on the Colombo-Matara railway line being constructed with Indian assistance.

Tourism and Civil Aviation

9. The Joint Commission noted the immense potential that exists in the two countries in the tourism sector, given the fact that India contributes the largest number of tourist arrivals in Sri Lanka and the latter is among the top ten tourist sources for India. The last year has seen a significant revival in tourist traffic between the two countries. The Ministers noted that an MoU on cooperation in the field of tourism was signed in January 2004, while the Joint Working Group set up under the MoU is yet to meet. They accordingly directed the concerned officials on both sides to meet at an early date to identify potential areas of cooperation.

10. The two sides noted that Sri Lanka enjoys a very special relationship with India in the field of civil aviation with Sri Lankan Airlines being the largest foreign airline in India. The Joint Commission took note of the interest of Sri Lankan Airlines to increase its services to Delhi and Chennai and agreed that the civil aviation authorities of both countries would meet bilaterally.

Development Cooperation

11. The Government of Sri Lanka thanked the Government of India for the substantial development assistance being provided through a wide variety of projects. The range of assistance being received from the Government of India for Resettlement and Rehabilitation of the Northern and Eastern Provinces includes, inter alia, the following:

1. Housing - 50,000 houses for IDPs;
2. Supply of 7200 MT of Roofing Sheets for IDPs in the Northern Province;
3. Supply of 400,000 Cement Bags to IDPs;
4. Supply of 70,000 Agriculture Tool Kits to IDPs;
5. Provision of Seven de-mining teams;
6. Supply of 500 Four-Wheeled Tractors and agricultural equipment;
7. Supply of Seeds;
8. Assistance in the Fishing sector;
9. Limb Fitment Project;
10. Rehabilitation of Duraiappa Stadium;
11. Construction of Vocational Training Centres;
12. Construction of Jaffna Cultural Centre;
13. Railway infrastructure;
14. Rehabilitation of Palaly Airport;
15. Rehabilitation of Kankesanthurai Harbour;
16. Supply of equipment to Jaffna Teaching Hospital;
17. Supply of books to Jaffna Library and Jaffna University;
18. Project for war widows by SEWA;
19. Assistance to rehabilitation of Micro and SMEs;
20. Assistance for Schools and Universities; and

A substantial amount of this assistance has been directed towards humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) in northern Sri Lanka. Following the initial assistance directed at humanitarian relief in the areas of food, clothing, medicine and shelter, the Joint Commission welcomed Indian project assistance in the areas of de-mining, restoration of agricultural livelihood, vocational training, repair of schools and other public facilities. In particular, the two sides reviewed the ongoing preparatory work on the project for the construction of 50,000 houses for IDPs in the Northern and Eastern Provinces and also for estate workers in the Central Provinces with the support of India and welcomed the proposed commencement of work on this project on 27th November, 2010.

13. The Joint Commission also welcomed the signing of the contract with Hindustan Prefab Limited by the Government of India for commencement of construction of 1000 houses as a "Pilot Project" in the Northern Province. The two Ministers also witnessed the Exchange of Letters with regard to the Housing Pilot Project, which took place in the presence of His Excellency the President of Sri Lanka.

Agriculture

14. The Joint Commission agreed that there was great potential for the further expansion of bilateral agricultural cooperation and collaboration in livestock development between the two countries. They noted that the MoU for Scientific and Technical Cooperation between the Indian Council of Agriculture Research and the Sri Lanka Council for Agriculture Research Policy had yielded sound results, including in human resource development. The two sides reiterated that collaborative research and development programmes would further contribute to agricultural cooperation. It was agreed that the Agreement on Agricultural Cooperation would be signed soon and the Government of Sri Lanka would propose a draft work programme for cooperation in the field of agriculture for the period 2011-2012.

Energy

15. The Joint Commission noted with satisfaction that all negotiations between the National Thermal Power Corporation of India and the Ceylon Electricity Board of Sri Lanka on the establishment of a joint venture for building a 500 MW coal-fired power plant at Sampur (Trincomalee) had been completed and the various Agreements in this regard, including the Joint Venture Agreement, the Power Purchase Agreement, the Agreement with the Board of Investment of Sri Lanka, the Implementation Agreement and other relevant arrangements had also been agreed upon. These agreements would be signed in the near future. The Sri Lankan side expressed its appreciation for the US $200 million concessionary line of credit offered by the Government of India to enable Sri Lanka to fulfill its commitments under the Implementation Agreement.

16. The two sides noted the presence of Indian suppliers in the Sri Lankan wind and solar energy sectors and agreed to explore cooperation in other fields of new and renewable forms of energy, including through greater cooperation between the public and private sector entities of the two countries.

17. The Joint Commission also recalled the signing of the agreement on conducting a feasibility study for the interconnection of the Indian and Sri Lankan electricity grids and noted that the concerned officials are in touch to convene a meeting of the Steering Committee in this regard. Both Governments have already committed their respective share of financial support for the study.

Ferry Services

18. The Joint Commission noted the importance of speedily restoring the traditional transport links between the two countries. In this connection, it welcomed the finalization of the agreement to resume ferry services between Colombo and Tuticorin and Talaimannar and Rameswaram and directed the concerned officials to put in place the mechanisms to start these services as soon as the agreement is signed.

Health Sector

19. The Joint Commission reviewed the projects being implemented in the health sector in Sri Lanka with the assistance of the Government of India. It welcomed the finalization of implementation mechanisms for the 150-bed Base Hospital at Dickoya. It also noted the ongoing implementation by India of projects to supply equipment for upgradation of the facilities at the Intensive Care Unit, Eye Ward and Operation Theatre of the Jaffna Teaching Hospital. The Sri Lankan side also thanked the Government of India for agreeing to donate a Bhabhatron -
II (a Cobalt 60 teletherapy machine) for cancer treatment to the Hambantota General Hospital. The Sri Lankan side requested for enlargement of coverage of the ‘Jaipur Foot’ Limb Fitment camp conducted earlier by India through Bhagwan Mahaveer Viklang Sahayata Samiti.

Fishing

20. The Joint Commission expressed satisfaction that the Fishing Arrangements agreed earlier had helped decrease incidents on the International Maritime Boundary Line (IMBL). Both sides agreed to explore ways to strengthen the safety and security of fishermen and, in this context, welcomed the decision to revive the meetings of the bilateral Joint Working Group on Fishing.

SOCIAL, CULTURAL AND EDUCATIONAL MATTERS

Education

21. The Joint Commission took note of the recent high-level contacts between the two sides in the field of education. In this context, it welcomed the proposal of the Government of India to significantly expand its scholarship programme for Sri Lankan nationals as part of the "India Sri Lanka Knowledge Initiative". It also took note of the signing of an MoU between the University of Colombo and the Government of India on the establishment of a Centre for Contemporary Indian Studies. The two sides also directed their concerned officials to expedite discussions on the setting up of regional and provincial Centres of English Language Training and the design of the "10 Year Presidential Initiative to Steer Sri Lanka towards a Trilingual Society by 2020". The need to train in Sinhalese and Tamil languages to support the Presidential initiative was also noted.

22. The Joint Commission took note as well of the concept paper presented during its 7th Session by the Ministry of Higher Education of Sri Lanka, on the establishment of Agriculture and Engineering Faculties in the University of Jaffna.

23. The Joint Commission also took note of the collaborative initiatives in the field of Information & Communication Technology (ICT) between the two sides. In this context, it welcomed the support extended by the Government of India towards expanding the network of Nenasalas (Telecentres) across the country.

24. The Joint Commission noted with satisfaction the ongoing cooperation in the field of strengthening public administration, based on the Memorandum of Understanding between the Lal Bahadur Shastri National Academy of Administration (LBSNAA) of India and the Sri Lanka Institute of Development Administration (SLIDA) of Sri Lanka. The Joint Commission encouraged the two institutions to intensify their collaboration, including in the exchange of staff, researchers and graduate students/trainees, engagement in joint research activities and participation in seminars and academic meetings.

25. Given the dynamism of the younger generations in both countries and the need to invest in their future, the two Ministers decided to promote a programme of annual youth exchanges between the two countries. To begin with, it was decided to organize and exchange programme consisting of one hundred youth from both countries in the year 2011.

26. The two Ministers also agreed that both countries would jointly commemorate the 150th birth anniversary of Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore during the year-long celebrations which will take place in 2011-12.

Cultural Activities

27. The Joint Commission welcomed the growing cultural engagement between the two countries in keeping with their shared cultural and civilizational links, which provided the bedrock of bilateral relations. In this context, the two Ministers directed the concerned officials to carry forward discussions to facilitate the organization of the proposed International Buddhist Conference in Kandy with the support of the Indian Council of Cultural Relations as part of the activities to commemorate the 2600th year of the attainment of enlightenment by Lord Buddha (Sambuddhatva Jayanthi).

28. The Joint Commission also welcomed the proposal for the restoration of Tiruketheeswaram temple at Mannar to be undertaken with the assistance of the Archaeological Survey of India and the College of Architecture and Sculpture, Mamallapuram, with the involvement of the Department of Archaeology of Sri Lanka.

29. The two Ministers also reviewed the progress in the preparatory work on renovating the Duralappah Stadium and constructing a Cultural Centre in Jaffna with Indian assistance.

India Sri Lanka Foundation

30. The Joint Commission welcomed the significant contributions of and the important role played by the India Sri Lanka Foundation in forging deeper links between civil society actors in the two countries and contributing to closer relations in the economic, scientific, educational, technical and cultural arenas. It noted the recent augmentation of the corpus fund of the Foundation on the basis of a grant made by the Government of India and welcomed the expansion of the activities of the Foundation into new areas as agreed to by the last meeting of its Board.

Science and Technology

31. The Joint Commission agreed upon the urgent need to develop a Programme for Cooperation under the Agreement on Cooperation in Science and Technology signed in September 2008 between the two countries. It recalled that the visit to Sri Lanka in March 2010 of Secretary, Department of Science and Technology had led to the identification of certain areas for cooperation. The Indian side agreed to propose a draft programme of cooperation for the period 2011-2012 for the consideration of the Sri Lankan side.

32. Both sides agreed to identify specific areas of cooperation in using space technology for a variety of societal services using Indian satellites.

SECURITY COOPERATION

33. Both sides welcomed the ongoing and close cooperation between the two countries in the field of defence and security, the resumption of high level contacts between the defence forces of the two sides and the planned interactions on an annual defence dialogue.
34. The Joint Commission meeting witnessed the exchange of Instruments of Ratification of the Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Prisoners and of the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty, thus bringing into effect these two important agreements.

OTHER ISSUES

35. The Joint Commission agreed that while the respective claims of the two countries with regard to the delimitation of their continental shelf margin had been submitted to the United Nations Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, bilateral discussions to come to a mutually acceptable and beneficial settlement would be useful. They agreed to convene a meeting of their respective officials in this regard at an early date.

36. The Joint Commission agreed that Indian companies would be encouraged to participate actively in future oil and gas exploration activities in Sri Lanka, including in the Cauvery and Mannar basins. With regard to the proposal to establish a joint information exchange mechanism on the possibility of oil and gas fields straddling the India Sri Lanka Maritime Boundary, the Indian side assured the Sri Lankan side that the proposal was receiving the Government of India’s attention. It was agreed to hold discussions on this subject at the earliest possible.

37. Both sides expressed their satisfaction at the outcome of the Joint Commission Meeting, which provided further testimony to the continuing excellent relations between the two countries. It was agreed that the next session of the Joint Commission would be held in India in the second half of 2011 on a date to be mutually agreed upon between the two sides.

Signed on the 26th day of November 2010 in Colombo.

260. Remarks of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to media after the 7th India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission meeting.

Colombo, November 26, 2010.

Hon’ble Prof. G.L. Peiris, Minister of External Affairs, Distinguished Members of the two delegations,

Ladies & Gentlemen of the Media,

Friends,

I have just concluded very useful and productive discussions with Hon’ble Minister Peiris on the various items on the agenda of the seventh session of the India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission. Let me, at the very outset, express my sincere gratitude to Minister Peiris and his government for the warmth and gracious hospitality that has been extended to me and to my colleagues and the excellent arrangements made for my visit.

The Joint Commission discussions covered all areas of bilateral relevance, including trade, services and investment, development cooperation, science and technology, culture and education. The sheer breadth of our engagement today, as is reflected in the Joint Commission discussions, is testimony to the fact that our relations have greatly diversified with the passage of time. The visits of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in 2008 and His Excellency President Rajapaksa in June and October this year have undoubtedly given our relations a fillip. Our relations are poised to develop further in an all round manner.

Earlier this morning, I was honoured to meet His Excellency President Mahinda Rajapaksa. We witnessed the signing of the credit agreement for $416.39 million for the Northern Railway construction project. I am also happy to announce that work on the Northern Railway Line will commence soon with the inauguration scheduled for tomorrow.

Prof. Peiris and I have also just witnessed the exchange of Instruments of Ratification of the Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Prisoners and of the Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty. This brings into effect these two important agreements between our two countries.
To build on the vibrant and multi-faceted partnership between our two countries, it is important that we leverage our common strategic interests, further enhance connectivity and economic engagement, and promote people-to-people contacts. The opening of our Consulates in Hambantota and Jaffna, which will take place over today and tomorrow, is a significant milestone in this quest. In this connection, we also expect to resume ferry services between Colombo and Tuticorin and Talaimannar and Rameswaram soon, an agreement on which has been finalized.

The project for the construction of 50,000 houses for IDPs in the Northern and Eastern Provinces and also for estate workers in the Central Provinces will be an enduring symbol of India-Sri Lanka partnership. This morning, we witnessed an Exchange of Letters on the pilot phase of this project, which also took place in the presence of His Excellency President Rajapaksa. Tomorrow, through a ground-breaking ceremony in Jaffna, we will be signalling the commencement of this project.

The cessation of hostilities in Sri Lanka in May last year provides a historic opportunity to address all outstanding issues related to rehabilitation as well as a political settlement in a spirit of understanding and mutual accommodation. It is our hope that a structured dialogue mechanism to work towards this end will be launched soon. We have been assured that it is the intention of the Sri Lankan Government to resettle the Internally Displaced Persons by the end of this year.

I also took this opportunity to emphasise on the need to adhere to the October 2008 understanding on fishing arrangements arrived at between the two countries, which has had a salutary effect on the incidence of fishermen's arrests and on their safety. We agreed that the joint Working Group on Fishing should meet soon.

With the tone that has been set in my discussions today, I have no doubt that India-Sri Lanka relations are poised the fully take advantage of the opportunities open before us. I have told Minister Peiris that I look forward to receiving him in New Delhi at his convenience to take forward our bilateral discussions.

Thank you.
261. Remarks of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Inauguration of Works for the Reconstruction of Northern Railway Lines.

Medawachchiya (Sri Lanka), November 27, 2010.

Hon'ble Basil Rajapaksa, Minister of Economic Development,
Hon'ble G. L. Peiris, Minister of External Affairs,
Hon'ble Kumar Welgama, Minister of Transport,
Hon'ble Rohan Dissanayake, Deputy Minister of Transport,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

It gives me immense pleasure to participate in today’s event of the formal inauguration of works for the reconstruction of the Northern Railway lines. We are deeply honoured by the presence of senior Ministers of the Government of Sri Lanka. Let me take this opportunity to reiterate at the outset that we are committed to working with the Government of Sri Lanka towards the consolidation of peace, prosperity and development in Sri Lanka and for the further enrichment of our bilateral ties.

Following the end of armed conflict in Sri Lanka last year, the development partnership between India and Sri Lanka has expanded significantly. Much of our initial assistance was for relief and rehabilitation as the Government of Sri Lanka addressed the challenges involved in resettling the nearly three lakh Internally Displaced Persons. As the task of resettlement proceeds, our assistance is moving into the areas of reconstruction in Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka where we aim to complement the efforts of the Government of Sri Lanka.

As part of our effort to provide for the reconstruction of Northern Sri Lanka, the Government of India has pledged a line of credit of US$ 800 million at significantly concessional rates for various aspects of the Northern Railway project, including reconstruction of railway lines, installation of signalling and telecom systems and the procurement of rolling stock.

Today’s ceremony marks the launch of works on the Medawachchiya-Madhu line by IRCON International Ltd., which is a leading Indian company in railway infrastructure and is already working on the rehabilitation of the Southern Railway, which is also being financed through an Indian line of credit. I understand that the work on Phase 1 of the project in the Galle-Matara Section is progressing well and is likely to be completed by December 2010. IRCON has assured us that in the north too, this work undertaken by them would be completed within schedule. Work will also begin simultaneously on the Madhu-Talaimannar and Omanthai-Pallai railway lines. In this context, I would also like to recognize the efforts put in by the demining teams from India to clear the project area of mines.

As a part of these works, a new pier at Talaimannar will also be built. In order to enable resumption of ferry services between Talaimannar and Rameswaram at an early date, IRCON will also build a temporary jetty at Talaimannar. The resumption of this ferry service will re-establish old ties and the linkages that have existed historically between our two countries.

I believe that both our countries should continue to work together in the spirit of partnership, as our destinies are interlinked. The reconstruction of transport-related infrastructure would restore normal life, generate and support livelihood-related activities and also assist in restoring connectivity, not only within the Northern Province, but also with the rest of the country, thus promoting integration and reconciliation.

Before I conclude, I would like to place on record my deep appreciation for the cooperation extended by various agencies of the Government of Sri Lanka, including the Ministry of Transport and Sri Lanka Railways, in developing the railways projects. Continued cooperation between our agencies will be crucial for the timely completion of these projects. This cooperation is testimony to the strength of our cooperation and the enduring friendship that exists between our two countries and peoples.

Thank you.
262. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Inauguration of Consulate General of India at Jaffna.

Jaffna, November 27, 2010.

Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs of Sri Lanka,
Hon'ble Governor of the Northern Province
Distinguished Ministers and Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am grateful to you all for being present here today for the opening of the Consulate General of India in Jaffna.

India's relations with Sri Lanka would be incomplete without highlighting the special relationship that exists between the people of the Northern Province in general, the Jaffna Peninsula in particular and those of southern India.

Over centuries, Jaffna has always stood at the crossroads of history, culture and religion, kings and kingdoms, trade and commerce, and arts, dance and literature. Jaffna port was on the main sea route of its times. One of the great epics of Tamil literature - Manimekalai - has reference to Jaffna. Jaffna's Tamil equivalent - Yaalpanam - itself refers to the mythical harp player from Kanchipuram receiving the land as a royal gift. Tamil intellectuals and scholars from Jaffna like Arumuga Navalar and C.W.Thamodaram Pillai have enriched Tamil literature by their deep understanding and study of ancient Tamil literature. It is, therefore, natural that when India decided to establish a Consulate General, Jaffna was a logical, almost inevitable, place for such a presence.

There must be several in this audience who would have seen the days when there was a direct flight from Palaly to Trichy and a ferry service from Talaimannar to Rameswaram. It is possible that some among you may even have gone off to Chennai - Madras as it was called - only to catch a movie. It's time to revive those links.

Friends,

Sri Lanka has recently come through probably the most difficult period in its history. While the armed conflict that ended last year impacted on all sections of the population of this country, it did so disproportionately on the civilian population of the Northern Province, as innocent men, women and children were caught up in the cross-fire not of their own making.
Several thousands of Internally Displaced Persons - held as human shields - came out of the zone of conflict. The challenge before Sri Lanka is to resettle the Internally Displaced Persons and take up the task of rehabilitating and reconstruction of Northern Sri Lanka.

India has tried to contribute whatever it can to alleviate to miseries and difficulties the people in Northern Province underwent. Initially we rushed food, clothing, medicines and other daily-use articles to the camps. Our emergency field hospital, first in Pulmoddai and later in Menik Farm, which treated more than fifty thousand patients and where Indian doctors carried out more than three thousand surgeries, was a symbol of our solidarity with those who had suffered the worst in the closing stages of the conflict.
In recent months, we have extended a helping hand to those who are being resettled in their former places of habitation by providing roofing sheets and cement to help them build transitional shelters and agricultural toolkits to start minimal gardening activities.

We are now looking at the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Northern Province and supplement the efforts of the Sri Lankan Government. Later today, I hope to flag-off, in a ground-breaking ceremony, the Pilot Project for the Government of India-aided housing project under which fifty thousand houses will be built in Northern and Eastern Sri Lanka. Earlier this month, India has also begun the process of donating seeds as well as five hundred tractors, with their associated tools and implements, for distribution to agrarian service centres in the Northern Province. We will stay engaged to revive the livelihood of those in the Northern Province and help people rebuild their lives.

Even as we focus on the immediate tasks of relief and rehabilitation, longer term reconstruction is equally important. India will remain committed to this task as well. Later today, I will inaugurate the work to be carried out by an Indian company, IRCON, on the reconstruction of the Northern Railway from Medawachchiya to Madhu. Work will also begin simultaneously on the Madhu-Talaimannar and Oanthai-Pallai railway lines.

As this region returns to peace and normalcy, one of the priorities of the governments of India and Sri Lanka is to resume the old ties and linkages of connectivity that existed between our two countries. With this in view, we have recently completed negotiations on a Memorandum of Understanding on resuming ferry services, both from Colombo to Tuticorin and Talaimannar to Rameswaram. At Talaimannar, the old pier will also be rebuilt. We have started the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Kankesanthurai harbor and restore it as the hub of Jaffna's commercial lifeline. After all, Point Calimere is only forty nautical miles from KKS. We hope the Government of Sri Lanka will develop Palaly as a civil airport and restore its connectivity with India and within Sri Lanka. I am confident that the resumption, in the years to come, of these multiple linkages will not only restore people-to-people contact, but will also give a tremendous fillip to the local economies in our two countries.

To ensure that the cultural heights of Jaffna are indeed revived, the Consulate General of India will assist in setting up the Jaffna Cultural Centre and restore the Duriappa stadium. We are undertaking the restoration of the Thiruketeeswaram temple in Mannar.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The end of armed conflict in Sri Lanka in May 2009 provides Sri Lanka with an unparalleled opportunity to address all outstanding issues in a spirit of understanding and mutual accommodation and to work towards genuine national reconciliation. We are convinced that a meaningful devolution package, building upon the 13th Amendment, would create the necessary conditions for a lasting political settlement. We hope that this process of dialogue and discussion would start soon with the participation of all communities. The ultimate goal is to live in dignity and peace.

Before I conclude, I would like to place on record my deep appreciation for the cooperation extended in the task of the opening of this Consulate General by the Sri Lankan Ministry of External Affairs under the leadership of Prof. Pieris. I would also like to thank the offices of the Governor of the Northern Province and the Government Agent of Jaffna for their facilitation in setting up this post, which, I hope, will continue to receive their cooperation and assistance. I have no doubt that this development holds rich promise for the further flowering of the relations between our two countries.

Thank you.
263. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the inauguration of Consulate General of India at Hambantota.

Hambantota, November 28, 2010.

Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs of Sri Lanka,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure today to be present at this seminal event. The opening of this Consulate General of India in Hambantota is reflective of India's desire to strengthen its linkages with a region of Sri Lanka with which my country shares deep historical bonds.

Religious, cultural and linguistic interface between our two countries goes back several centuries. Prince Arhat Mahinda's arrival in Anuradhapura in the 3rd century Before Christ, which heralded the arrival of Buddhism in Sri Lanka, is a story that has been told over many generations. Respected Sri Lankan scholars have drawn parallels and linkages between religious practices in Southern Sri Lankan and Southern India. Not too far from here is Dondra, which in the past housed a magnificent thousand-pillared Vishnu temple described in the Sandesaya poem of the Sinhalese poet Alagiavanna. And of course, one cannot forget that we are not too far away either from the famous Kataragama shrine, where Hindu Tamils and Sinhalese Buddhists worship the God Murugan or Skanda at the same location.

In recent years, southern Sri Lanka came to the attention because of the terrible impact of the tsunami that struck this region in 2004. On that occasion, India, which was impacted itself, was the first to come to Sri Lanka's assistance. Indian Navy ships with food, drinking water and medical attention on board were at Sri Lankan shores within 24 hours, delivering much needed succour to many affected communities who live within a few kilometers of here.

India has also taken up the reconstruction of the damaged Southern railway corridor from Galle to Matara. I am happy that the work on this railway line is proceeding on schedule.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

Our relations are multifaceted and historical. The challenge has been to derive the full benefit of our proximity and exploit the full potential of our friendship and cooperation. With the shadow of the conflict lifting, I believe that the time has come when we can do that.

The visit of H.E. President Rajapaksa to India in June this year opened a significant chapter in our bilateral relations. Our Prime Minister and President Rajapaksa agreed to intensify our development cooperation, revive connectivity and the age-old cultural links and enhance our economic engagement. It was further agreed that the 2600th year of the attainment of enlightenment by Lord Buddha (Sambuddhatva Jayanthi) will be commemorated through joint activities.

The Joint Declaration of the two leaders covers every aspect of our multi-faceted relationship and has set markers for progress in the areas of connectivity, development partnership, cooperation in agriculture, power, education, human resource development and culture, greater economic engagement including through joint ventures and investment.

His Excellency the President himself has plans for developing Hambantota and its environs as a major regional hub. It is therefore, natural that when we decided to open a Consulate in the South, we have opened it in Hambantota. Given the optimism we have of the future of this region, the inauguration of the Consulate General in Hambantota is intended to build on India’s linkages with this region in the field of trade and commerce, investments, culture and tourism. I am confident that India will take advantage of the industrial and commercial potential in and around Hambantota. We would encourage our private sector to participate in Hambantota’s development by seizing the opportunities for investments. I look at our engagement with optimism and hope.

India is Sri Lanka’s largest trade partner overall and Sri Lanka is one of India’s largest trade partners in South Asia. The overall trade turnover grew five times within eight years since the entry into force in 2000 of our bilateral Free Trade Agreement. After a temporary dip in 2009 on account of the global recession, bilateral trade is again on the upswing and Sri Lankan exports to India have grown by over 50% since last year. India is also among the four largest overall investors in Sri Lanka. Sri Lanka’s investments in India, too, have shown remarkable growth in recent years. Our development cooperation has increased to include in its sweep all parts of Sri Lanka.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Throughout history, Sri Lanka and its citizens have been known, and with good reason, for their hospitality. I have every confidence that this renowned hospitality will be extended in full measure to this Consulate General and to its officers and staff as they set about their responsibilities in building and strengthening the already robust relationship between our two countries.

I would in particular like to make a special mention of the extraordinary cooperation we have already received from the Sri Lankan Ministry of External Affairs, for which I have my colleague Minister Peiris to thank. In the coming months and years, I have no doubt that our relations will be richer as a result of the cooperation that all of you extend to the endeavours of this post and its officers and staff.

Thank you.

AUSTRALIA

264. Statements issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the various incidents of violence against Indians in Australia.

Please see Document No.150.

New Delhi, March 2, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good Evening. Nice to see you in numbers! First of all, a belated Happy Holi to you. We celebrated it on the aircraft on our way back from Riyadh. Let me introduce my colleague Mr. Arun Goel, the Joint Secretary (South), who looks after our relationship with Australia amongst other countries.

Currently we have two very important visitors in town – the Foreign Minister of Australia and the Foreign Minister of Norway. I will briefly touch upon both the visits and their significance. Thereafter we will be happy to take questions.

Foreign Minister Stephen Smith is in New Delhi. He came today morning and will be here till the 4th of March. His programme includes meetings with our Commerce and Industry Minister, our Minister of Human Resource Development, talks with our External Affairs Minister, which is tomorrow, followed by a dinner that the External Affairs Minister would be hosting for him. He leaves thereafter on the 4th. The visiting Minister will also watch the India-Australia match at the Men’s Hockey World Cup today.

We attach high importance to the visit of the Australian dignitary. Both India and Australia are strong, vibrant, secular and multicultural democracies. Australia has a GDP of more than one trillion dollars, and is the fourteenth largest economy in the world. It is our tenth largest trading partner, and we have since emerged as the seventh largest trading partner of Australia. Our ties have been steadily expanding, deepening and were elevated to the level of a strategic partnership during the visit of Prime Minister Kevin Rudd in November last year, as you all know.

We have also been having regular high-level exchanges, which has been imparting momentum to the ties. In fact, in 2009 we had eight Ministerial level visits from Australia to India. Significant visits include that of our External Affairs Minister who was in Australia in August 2009; Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Education Ms Julia Gillard visited in August-September; the Victorian Premier was here; the Queensland Premier was here; Foreign Minister Stephen Smith himself was here for the sixth Annual Framework Dialogue between the Foreign Ministers in October; and then the visit of Prime Minister Kevin Rudd.

We see significant scope and potential for expansion of our ties in areas like economic and trade relations, science and technology, energy, IT, education, defence and so on. Australia, as I had mentioned last time and I would like to note here, has been supportive of India’s candidature for a permanent seat in the UN Security Council. This was reiterated in the Joint Statement that was issued during the visit of the Australian Premier. We have been closely cooperating in various regional and international fora. Australia has since become an Observer at SAARC.

Our trade relations are growing quite rapidly. In 2008-09 trade in goods and services was close to 22 billion Australian dollars and growing. Eighty per cent of our imports from Australia comprise of three products basically: gold, coal and copper ores in addition to lentils, dals, and so on. Recognizing the potential, both sides are examining the possibilities of concluding a Free Trade Agreement, and a group has been constituted to look into the question of doing a feasibility study. Australia is also an important investor in India with total investments of over two billion dollars.

During the visit both sides will review the entire gamut of bilateral relations and also discuss other regional and international issues of interest. We would also be discussing the issue of safety of Indian students and the Indian community with the visiting dignitary. The Indian community has been growing and is now close to half a million with the student population having touched 120,000. I believe that in 2009 alone Australia had issued 96,000 student visas, of which 47,000 students are studying in the Province of Victoria. Their safety, security and well being are a cause of serious concern for us and at the highest levels we have been sensitizing our Australian friends about this aspect.

EAM and Foreign Minister Smith last met in London on the 27th of January, 2010 on the sidelines of the Conference on Afghanistan when the External Affairs Minister conveyed that individuals from the Indian community appeared to be singled out and it was increasingly difficult to accept these attacks as mere opportunistic crimes. We have been stressing that measures should be effective so that such incidents do not recur.

Australia has taken a slew of measures which we appreciate. You are aware that a high-level Committee under Foreign Minister Stephen Smith himself has been recently constituted to deal with the issue on an urgent basis and to take coordinated steps. Many of you would have seen Foreign Minister Stephen Smith’s important address to the Australian Parliament on the 9th of February, 2010 when inter alia he made two significant points. He noted, “We have zero tolerance for racism in this country.” He also said, “If any of these attacks have been racist in nature, and it seems clear some of them have, they will be punished with full force of law.”

You would have also seen the significant suo motu statement by the External Affairs Minister in Parliament just last week, on the 25th of February, when he had inter alia stated that India takes the incidents of assault on our students very seriously and also noted, “It can be honestly said that they (i.e., Australia) are making efforts to meet our concerns”. This was External Affairs Minister in the Parliament. I think this will be all for the time being on the visit of Foreign Minister Stephen Smith.

Let me then turn to the other important visit of the Foreign Minister of Norway Mr. Jonas Store who is also in India. He arrived on the 1st of March. His meeting includes those with our National Security Advisor. He has already addressed today a Maritime Security Seminar at IDSA. He would be meeting with our Commerce and Industry Minister and later today would have delegation level talks. In fact, it will be the Fourth Joint Commission meeting which will be chaired by him and the External Affairs Minister. Thereafter the External Affairs Minister hosts a dinner in the visitor’s honour.

India has traditionally enjoyed cordial relations with Norway. Of late bilateral economic and technical complementarities are moving the relationship on to a new path. Many of you would recall the private visit of the Prime Minister of Norway Mr. Jens Stoltenberg to India in February this year to participate in Delhi Sustainable Development Summit 2010. He had also a very good meeting with the Prime Minister when they discussed a wide range of subjects. Prime Minister had welcomed investments from Norway in the telecom sector. Both sides noted the considerable potential of cooperation in areas like renewable energy and hydro power.

As I said, during the visit of the Foreign Minister of Norway the fourth meeting of India and Norway Joint Commission would take place when the entire range of bilateral matters as well as regional and international issues will come up for discussion. This is not the first visit of the Foreign Minister. He was here in December 2006 for the second round of the Joint Commission meeting. Mr. Anand Sharma, our then Minister of State, had visited Oslo in June 2008 to co-chair the third round.

Norway, though having a small population of 4.7 million, is a developed and a technologically rich country. Our bilateral trade at the moment is close to a billion dollars and growing. Norway is also an important investment partner of ours. There are something like 70 Norwegian companies that are already present in India. The cumulative Norwegian FDI in India as of March 2009 was over 1.5 billion dollars. As significant are the Indian investments in Norway which have already exceeded 1.8 billion dollars.

Potential areas of cooperation include the hydrocarbons sector, shipping sector, hydro power, fisheries where Norway has considerable strengths; and the knowledge-based economy and space where both India and Norway have significant complementarities. These are areas of great synergy for us. I may also note here that Norway has the second largest sovereign fund in the world which is currently estimated at over 460 billion dollars. Therefore, investments from Norway into India are something where there is a lot of potential. Norway is also the world's fifth largest oil exporter and the third largest gas exporter. I think this gives you a brief overview of our relations with Norway and the areas in which we are likely to move further.

With this, my colleague and I will be happy to take your questions.

Question: Foreign Minister Smith spoke about some white paper on counter-terrorism. What is the status of cooperation between the two countries in counter-terrorism? Also the security of the Commonwealth Games, I believe that too will be discussed.

Official Spokesperson: Let me take the latter part and my colleague will take the first. As far as the security of the Games is concerned, Australia and India have been in close touch. As you know, the Australian hockey team is currently visiting; Australian players are likely to participate in the IPL matches; and Australia has expressed satisfaction at the security arrangements.

Joint Secretary (South) (Shri Arun Goel): What was the question about counter-terrorism?

Question: I believe there is some white paper which the Australian Government has come out with on counter-terrorism. In his statement before he came here, Mr. Smith spoke about this paper and said it would be discussed.

Joint Secretary (South): It is not scheduled. It has not come to my notice.

Question: It was a part of Mr. Smith’s statement. I just thought I would draw your attention to it.

Official Spokesperson: But we have been, as you know, consulting each other on this issue. We have similar outlook on the issue of terrorism.

Question: Just a while ago you called back Sujatha Singh for consultations for a week. What was her report to the Government of India on the situation with Indian students? Is the Indian Government satisfied with what the Australians have done, not what they have said, on the ground so far?

Official Spokesperson: Our Ambassadors or Heads of Mission coming on consultations is a very normal activity. You are aware of that. Our Heads of Mission are invited to come regularly for consultations. They brief the Ministry about how they see a certain situation; their brief is also renewed. So, that is a very normal process. As to your second question, I would again like to invite your attention - which I am sure you have seen, I saw your report, you have analyzed it also – to the External Affairs Ministers detailed suo motu statement in Parliament on the 25th of February where he at length touched upon this issue; how we have been talking to Australia; how Australia has been responding to it. Therefore, in my opening remarks I had culled out while putting it in context about our concerns. We certainly have concerns; we have raised it at every possible forum; we have regularly been in touch with Australia. At the same time we are conscious of the fact that measures that are being taken would take time to become effective. External Affairs Minister in Parliament had categorically said, “It can be honestly said that they are making efforts to meet our concerns”. I think there is nothing more that needs to be said there.

Question: Are we still engaged with them on the uranium issue or have we put it on the backburner because of the Government’s ideological composition?

Official Spokesperson: Energy cooperation is a very important area of cooperation for us. As you know, we are importing a lot of coal from Australia. In the field of renewable energy also we are engaging closely. Specifically in terms of nuclear cooperation, let me remind you that Australia had supported us at Vienna, both at IAEA and during the India-specific dispensation that was given by the NSG. So, that is where the matter is. We are ready to expand our cooperation in the energy sector with Australia in every meaningful fashion. So, on this aspect we are ready when they are.

Joint Secretary (South): I would like to add that Australia is also one of the largest producers of natural gas and we have made a beginning in this direction in that Petronet LNG Limited, New Delhi has signed an agreement with Exxon Mobil on 10th August 2009 to source 1.5 million metric tonnes per annum of LNG for twenty years starting 2014. So, gas imports from Australia are also likely to increase manifold in the future.

Question: On the issue of safety of students, it has been seen that there have been a number of attacks and then the conviction rate has been quite low. Will this fact that there are not enough convictions be taken up in the discussion between the two Foreign Ministers?

Joint Secretary (South): Foreign Minister Smith has repeatedly said that the attackers will face the full force of law. Many of the cases are under investigation and many are at a further stage in the courts. We are constantly watching and awaiting the results in each and every case.

Official Spokesperson: What I would like to add, and I am sure you would have noticed it yourself, is that increasingly we see the suspects being apprehended very quickly. As I said, they are taking a slew of measures including even changing their laws, tightening their laws and so on, increasing the police presence in plain clothes and otherwise. So, they are taking a number of steps.

Question: Just one small clarification. Do you think that this is a step forward because Australia has now at least started accepting that some of these cases are racist in nature, something that it did not do earlier?

Official Spokesperson: It is not a question of a step forward or a step backwards. We are not there to score any debating points. Look at our perspective. As a country for us the important concern is that the safety, security and wellbeing of Indian nationals, people of Indian origin and students. So, whatever takes us towards that objective is something that is welcome.

Question: You just spoke about the potential of Norway so far as the natural resources are concerned. You said that it is the fifth largest nation so far as oil is concerned and the third largest nation so far as gas is concerned.

Official Spokesperson: I said they are the fifth largest exporters.

Question: Sorry. On this particular topic, is there any kind of cooperation or are any future things being talked about between Norway and India as far as oil and gas are concerned?
Official Spokesperson: There is a lot of ongoing cooperation in terms of technology transfer from them. Reliance for example has already tied up with the Norwegian side, has given out contracts of nearly one billion dollars to various Norwegian technology providers to help bring the Krishna-Godavari D6 gas field on line. So, there is cooperation between ONGC and the Norwegian side and Reliance. This is again a very important area. In particular, their offshore technology and their offshore expertise is something which is very valuable.

Question: What about agreements to be signed between India and Norway? The advisory says agreements.

Official Spokesperson: Yes, some agreements are likely to be signed. We will apprise you as per practice very soon.

Thank you very much.

266. Statement by the Official Spokesperson commenting on the statement of Australian Prime Minister regarding security in New Delhi during the Commonwealth Games.

New Delhi, September 25, 2010.

In response to questions on a statement by the Australian PM on the security situation in India the Official Spokesperson said,

"We have seen the statement, purportedly on the lines of a travel advisory issued by Australia. Terrorism is an unfortunate reality in today’s world which recognizes no political borders. It is incumbent on all countries to join hands to tackle this scourge.

There were some concerns expressed by some countries including Australia about the security aspect during the Commonwealth Games which took place in New Delhi in October 2010. The Government of India which made foolproof arrangements for security of the athletes assured Australia and other concerned that India did not apprehend any danger in view of the arrangements made. The games did pass off peacefully without any untoward incident and the athletes from all the Commonwealth countries and territories including Australia participated in full force."
The Government of India has taken effective measures to ensure safety and security of all during the forthcoming CWGs. We are in close touch with all participating countries, including Australia about the steps we are taking. We are confident of having a safe and successful sporting event.

CAMBODIA
267. Media Briefing by Secretary (East) on President's visits to Laos and Cambodia.

New Delhi, September 8, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to all of you.

You are aware that Rashtrapatiji, Hon. President, is leaving on a state visit tomorrow for Lao PDR and Cambodia. Secretary (East) Ms. Latha Reddy is here to brief you on this very important visit of the President of India. Let me also introduce colleagues who are with us this afternoon. To the right of Secretary (East) is Mr. Arun Goyal, Joint Secretary (South); and to my left is Mrs. Archana Datta, OSD to President.

Secretary (East) would be making an opening statement and thereafter will be happy to take a few questions pertaining to the visit of Rashtrapatiji to Lao PDR and Cambodia. May I invite Secretary (East) to please make her opening remarks?

Secretary (East) (Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy): Good afternoon to all of you.
I am happy to be here to brief you on Rashtrapatiji's upcoming state visit to Lao PDR and Cambodia from 9th September onwards.

She would first be visiting Lao People's Democratic Republic (Laos) from September 9th onwards at the invitation of His Excellency the President of Laos Choummaly Sayasone. Later she will proceed to Cambodia at the invitation of His Majesty King Norodom Sihamoni of Cambodia. Rashtrapatiji will be accompanied by Minister of Tribal Affairs Shri Kantilal Bhuria, three Members of Parliament, as well as, a Business and the Official Delegation.
I would first like to brief you on the visit to Laos. It would be Hon. President's first visit to Laos and only be the second by an Indian President since the two countries established diplomatic relations. During the visit, apart from the President himself she will be meeting the President of the National Assembly and the Prime Minister of Laos His Excellency Bouasone Bounphavanh.

India-Laos relations are warm and friendly and are underpinned by profound historical and cultural linkages that date back 2000 years to the period of the Great Emperor Ashoka. Our first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru paid a historic visit to Laos in 1954. The role played by India as Chairman of the International Commission for Supervision and Control on Indo-China is still appreciated and remembered with gratitude by the Lao leadership and people. After the emergence of Laos from civil strife and coming to power of the present regime in 1975, India and Laos have worked towards evolving areas of common interest and concern.

In the context of our Look East policy, on which I will speak in more detail later, Laos is an important country. Also in the context of ASEAN, Laos has played a very important role. On the multilateral side Laos has supported India’s permanent membership of an expanded UN Security Council, and has voted for our candidature to the Human Rights Council of the United Nations.

These excellent political relations do provide a fertile ground for growth of economic and commercial relationship. They have good transport connectivity, thanks to the ASEAN Initiatives, the East-West Highway being developed. They have good professional labour. They have rich natural resources such as iron ore, forestry, timber, land and plentiful water resources. That makes it an ideal destination for our investments.

There is considerable scope for investments by Indian entrepreneurs and business. We already have a concession agreement signed between the Aditya Birla Group to set up an integrated plantation-cum-pulp project in Laos with a capital outlay of 350 million dollars. We have provided considerable assistance in the area of human resource development and capacity-building.

We have set up the Laos-India Centre for English language training and the Laos-India Entrepreneurship Development Centre. We have given various lines of credit for projects in Laos. We have also recently had the Joint Commission meeting, and we do have some aspects of defence cooperation.

Moving on to Cambodia, Hon. Rashtrapatiji will first go to Phnom Penh. Again, historically India Cambodia relations are a product of Hindu and Buddhist religious and cultural influences in the past emanating out of India in the 4th to 6th century AD. The pervading influence of Hinduism and Buddhism and Indian architecture are well-known in Cambodia, thanks to the world famous infrastructure of the temples of Angkor Wat and the surrounding area in Siem Reap.

The political relations are warm and cordial. Our association with the Paris Peace Accords and the intense interaction at high levels which preceded their finalization in 1991 are fondly remembered by Cambodia. Cambodia too supports India’s candidature for the permanent membership of the UN Security Council.

Cambodia has also been extremely helpful in the ASEAN context. We have had regular exchanges of high-level visits. Prime Minister Vajpayee visited Cambodia in April 2002 both on a bilateral visit and for the first India-ASEAN Summit. Cambodian PM Hun Sen paid a state visit to India in 2007.

Again, we have an active Joint Commission with Cambodia. We export drugs, pharmaceuticals, chemicals and many other items to Cambodia. Many pharmaceutical companies including Ranbaxy, Dr. Reddy’s, Cadilla, Micro Labs have set up representative offices in Phnom Penh. Kirloskar Brothers also have offices in Phnom Penh. There is some potential for cooperation between India and Cambodia in the oil and gas sector. An MoU has been signed between ONGC Videsh Ltd. and the Cambodian National Petroleum Authority.
Cambodia too has been a major recipient of economic assistance from India. There have been several credit lines in the past and there are some being processed for the future.

In Siem Reap, which I have already mentioned, the Indian Government has a major renovation and restoration project with the Ta Prohm temple. These restoration works started in 2003 and are expected to be completed by 2013. We also have Cambodia-India Entrepreneurship Development Centre and English language training.

We have also gifted five information technology kiosks in different provinces of the country. We are setting up the Asian Traditional Textiles Museum in Siem Reap under the Mekong-Ganga Cooperation Programme. We have a large number of Cambodian students coming under the ITEC programme for training as well as academic studies in India. We have had several defence visits as well.

Moving now to the programme of Hon. President, in Vientiane our President will have extensive talks with the President and the PM. The President will be hosting a state banquet in her honour. She will meet with other senior leaders of Laos including the President of the Senate.

In Phnom Penh in Cambodia she will have extensive discussions with His Majesty the King of Cambodia, the PM and other senior leaders. The King of Cambodia will hold a banquet in her honour. We are confident that Rashtrapatiji’s visit will be instrumental in reaffirming and enhancing the longstanding ties of friendship between our two nations and our two peoples.

I did say that I would mention something about the cooperation on the ASEAN side. Both these countries are important members of ASEAN. As you all know, ASEAN goes back over forty years. In the context of our Look East policy, it was a conscious decision to engage more closely with the countries of the ASEAN and ASEAN as a group.

Laos played a proactive and supportive role for enhancing India's profile with ASEAN. It played a central role in successfully coordinating our accession to the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation with ASEAN, and the signing of the Joint Declaration for Combating Terrorism which was signed between India and ASEAN, as well as the Framework Agreement for Comprehensive Economic Cooperation, and the ASEAN-India Partnership 20-20 for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity, which was signed during the Vientiane Summit. Similarly, Cambodia has played a very important role and is currently playing a very important role as the country coordinator for all ASEAN countries in the context of ASEAN-India cooperation.

ASEAN itself has become extremely active and is playing a central role in directing the regional architecture in South East and East Asia. As part of our recognition of the importance and the centrality of ASEAN to this process, India will be hosting a special India-ASEAN Summit in 2012 in India, which the ASEAN leaders have accepted to attend. Again, Cambodia will play a very important role in this as the country coordinator.

Similarly, we are planning to organize a major ASEAN-India Business Summit and a meeting of the Joint Business Council in India in March, 2011. In all of these, I am sure both Laos and Cambodia will have a very valuable role to play and we look forward, during Hon. Rashtrapatiji’s visit, to a useful exchange of views on how we can cooperate closer in the ASEAN context.

I think that gives you an overview of the visit and what we hope to achieve there. I would now be happy to take questions.

Question: Do you have any agreements on the cards?

Secretary (East): We do hope to sign some agreements in both countries, and also to make some important announcements. But I think those announcements we would make while we are actually there.

Question: Do they support permanent membership for India on the Security Council?

Secretary (East): Permanent membership, both the countries.

Question: Will you please tell us in what fields there might be agreements?
Secretary (East): We are hoping to sign agreements in the fields of culture, and perhaps in the fields of accounts and audits. But as I said, I would prefer to give those details during the visit.

Question: The relations of these two countries are a little closer with China. Is it the purpose of this visit to strengthen India’s relations independent of those relations? What results do you envisage after this visit? Because both the countries are practically in the lap of China.

Secretary (East): You are aware that this entire area is known as Indo-China. It is closer to India as also to China. Our Prime Minister has said that there is space for both the countries. As our Prime Minister has said, there is place for both cooperation and competition between ourselves and China, and the same would be true in this region as well.

Question: Madam, you mentioned something about oil and gas and this agreement being signed. Could we have some more details on that? How do we look at further investments or cooperation?

Secretary (East): I think the real issue is that there is potential for cooperation in the oil and gas sectors, as I said. An MoU between ONGC Videsh Lt. (OVL) and the Cambodian National Petroleum Authority was signed in December 2007. Present indications are that their oil and gas reserves may prove to be significant. But the MoU only provides the framework for these two agencies to work together. There has not been a specific project as such set up so far, but there are talks ongoing between the two.

Question: What is the estimated amount of reserves?

Secretary (East): I am afraid I do not have those details.

Official Spokesperson: I take it there is no further question on the visit of the President of India.

Thank you very much.

This time I travel eastwards to Laos at the invitation of President Choummaly Sayasone and to Cambodia at the invitation His Majesty Norodom Sihamoni, the King of Cambodia. These are countries with whom India has deep historical and cultural relations dating back to the period of Emperor Ashoka. What Phu in Laos and Ankor Wat in Cambodia, both World Heritage Sites, stand as grand symbols of the ancient civilizational linkages of India with these countries. In more recent times, our countries have struggled against colonialism. Soon after Laos and Cambodia achieved independence, Prime Minister Nehru visited both these countries in 1954. India had been the Co-chair of International Commission for Supervision and Control on Indo-China where it played a significant role for which there is considerable appreciation in the region.

We have maintained political dialogues with both these countries. President Sayasone of Laos visited India in 2008 and Prime Minister Hun Sen of Cambodia in 2007, when I had the opportunity to exchange views with them on bilateral cooperation and on a range of issues of mutual interest. My visit will be an opportunity to continue discussions with the leaderships of these countries and to reaffirm our commitment to strengthen and consolidate our relations as well as enhance our economic engagement with these countries.

There exists enormous goodwill and affection for India in both these countries. This environment of trust and confidence we enjoy with these countries and the shared political commitment to take forward the relationship provides a good basis to reinvigorate ties. Laos and Cambodia are growing economies, seeking socio-economic development. I will assure them that they can count on India as a willing development partner. Our efforts in this direction have been towards undertaking infrastructure projects and capacity building programmes... in these countries. Our trade and investment linkages have grown over the years although they remain much below potential. An Indian business delegation will be in Vientaine and in Phnom Penh, where I will interact with them as well as business representatives of both countries. I will urge them to avail of the many mutually advantageous opportunities that exist.

Our ties with Laos and Cambodia have a strong cultural and historical basis. At Luang Prabang in Laos and Siem Reap in Cambodia, I will visit monuments reflective of our common heritage to highlight the cultural bonds which have created a special empathy between our peoples. India is involved in the conservation and preservation of ancient monuments in both these countries. I hope my visit to these sites will encourage people-to-people contacts as well as tourism, thus strengthening our traditional linkages. The deep understanding that developed through history lasts to this day. It must be carried forward into the future and this can be possible through contacts between our students and the youth. We have Cultural Exchange Programmes with both the countries to promote cultural exchanges. During this visit, the existing Cultural Exchange Programme with Laos will be renewed for a further period of 3 years.

Our relationship with Laos and Cambodia are of strategic importance as well. I look forward to an exchange of views with Laos and Cambodia on how we can promote greater stability and security in the region. I believe India, Laos and Cambodia have much to gain by cooperating with each other in combating extremism and terrorism. I would like to add that both Laos and Cambodia have given us unconditional support for our candidature for permanent membership of UN Security Council.

My visit to Laos and Cambodia- two important countries in South East Asia will reaffirm our pursuit of a closer and enduring partnership with the countries of ASEAN region as part of our Look East policy. As Country Coordinator for India from 2003-06 in ASEAN, Laos played a proactive and supportive role for enhancing India's profile in the region. Currently, Cambodia is the coordinator on the ASEAN side on India-ASEAN relations, and we recall that it was under its Chairmanship of ASEAN that India attained Summit level partnership. I expect to discuss our growing engagement with ASEAN countries as we move towards the next Indian-ASEAN and East Asia Summits in Vietnam in October.

I will meet members of the Indian community in Laos and Cambodia, who are working and living there. They are also at the same time contributing to perceptions about India at the people's level, and thus are important in building bridges of friendship and promoting understanding.

I am looking forward to my visit to Laos and Cambodia to further strengthen our historic cultural ties. I am also sure that all of you are also looking forward to visiting these countries who have a rich culture and with whom we have had historical ties and a promising future relationship.

269. Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Reception for the Indian Community hosted by the Indian Ambassador.

I am delighted to be in this beautiful country, with which India has had historical connections, going back to almost 2000 years. I arrived in Phnom Penh only a few hours ago and interacting with the Indian community is my first engagement in the Kingdom of Cambodia. I convey to all of you, my personal greetings and also greetings from the people of India. You play an important role in promoting relations between India and Cambodia.

It is interesting that many legends are prevalent in this country tracing their ancient linkages with India. Most of the historical and cultural monuments spread all over Cambodia speak of the close Indian association, which was made possible as a result of continuous interaction between navigators, merchants and intellectuals of the two countries, over a period of two thousand years. One has heard so much about the grandeur of the world famous Angkor Wat and many astonishing architectural marvels such as Ta Prohm, Bayon and Banteay Srey. I and my delegation would be visiting Siem Reap where all these magnificent cultural monuments, which are glorious testimony to our common cultural heritage, are located. I am informed that there are many commonalities in the day-to-day life of the people of Cambodia with Indians, such as language, customs and rituals. This must be a product of our ancestors’ willingness to learn from each other and is an indication of the everlasting bonds of friendship.

I am happy to say that the Governments of the two countries strived to regain old historical bonds. In the 1950s, India was associated with the International Control Commission on Indo-China and our role as Co-Chairman was well appreciated. There were numerous high level exchanges between our two countries. We are all aware of the close friendly ties that existed between Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and His Majesty Norodom Sihanouk, which paved the way for not only excellent bilateral ties, but also offered opportunities to the two leaders to exchange views on the role of newly liberated countries in the development of a peaceful world.

Everyone is aware of India’s unwavering support to Cambodia not only in good times but also during the difficult period of its history. After the collapse of the Khmer Rouge regime in Cambodia, India was among the first countries to recognize President Heng Samrin’s government and re-open its diplomatic mission in 1981. Since then, the Governments of India and Cambodia have worked together to expand and deepen our bilateral ties, through high level bilateral exchanges, as well as through interactions at regional and international fora.

While human resource development and capacity building have been the primary focus of our bilateral relations, India is happy to cooperate with Cambodia in infrastructural projects, as well as in projects related to conservation and preservation of historical monuments. Over the years our two countries have signed numerous agreements to enhance bilateral cooperation, and have also established mechanisms to exchange views and to review the status of ongoing projects.

We appreciate the role played by the Royal Government of Cambodia in India’s engagement with this region. It is worth mentioning that India attained Summit level partnership with ASEAN under Cambodia’s Chairmanship of the ASEAN in 2002, and a forthcoming Commemorative Summit in India to mark India’s 20-year association with ASEAN too will be organized, during Cambodia's Chairmanship in 2012. India is satisfied with its friendly and cooperative ties with Cambodia and would continue to work for strengthening of these ties.

Overseas Indians comprising People of Indian Origin and Non Resident Indians today are amongst the best educated and successful communities in the world. India has the second largest Diaspora, estimated at over 25 million, present in every major region of the world. We are proud of you, and aware of the important role the diaspora plays as a 'bridge' to access knowledge, expertise, resources and markets for the development of the country of their origin. The Pravasi Bhartiya Divas is celebrated since 2003, every year on 9th January to mark the contribution of the Overseas Indian community in the development of India. Individuals of exceptional merit are honoured with the prestigious Pravasi Bharatiya Samman Award. January 9 was chosen as the day to celebrate this occasion, since it was on this day in 1915 that Mahatma Gandhi, the greatest Pravasi - the Father of our Nation, returned to India from South Africa to lead India's freedom struggle. His philosophy and his firm adherence to the principles of non-violence and truth are universally admired and emulated across the world. There is a bust of Gandhiji in Phnom Penh and I shall be visiting the site to pay homage to him.

You must carry forward the legacy of the values of our civilisation, upheld so magnificently by Gandhiji. The onus is now on all of you to ensure that a correct image of India is portrayed among your colleagues, neighbours and others with whom you interact. You must also carry forward the efforts of our ancestors in establishing extremely friendly ties thousands of years ago with Cambodia. Always remember that your deeds in this country not only reflect your individual personality but in some way make Cambodians aware of the capabilities of India and also the Indian way of life.

I am told that the Indian community in Cambodia though small is vibrant, active and is supportive of those who need assistance. Such compassion for others is a good trait and I encourage everyone to be humane. I have been informed that the Indian Association in Cambodia celebrates important Indian festivals, and has recently launched a website which is quite informative. This is a good development and I am sure you will continue with such efforts. I take this opportunity to wish you progress and success.

JAI HIND!
270. Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Banquet hosted in her honour by the King of Cambodia Norodom Sihamoni.

Phnom Penh (Cambodia), September 14, 2010.

Your Majesty,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is, indeed, a great pleasure to visit the Kingdom of Cambodia. We are overwhelmed with the warmth and affection received since our arrival in your beautiful country. I and the members of my delegation greatly appreciate the gracious hospitality extended to us.

Historically, India-Cambodia relations are a product of strong civilizational links spanning two millennia. The many magnificent historical monuments spread all over Cambodia are symbols of our shared cultural heritage. Looking back, one is also reminded of the close association between Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Prince Norodom Sihanouk, which helped in developing extremely friendly ties between our two newly independent countries. Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru visited Cambodia in 1954. President Dr. Rajendra Prasad paid a State visit to Cambodia in March 1959. We in India fondly remember the visit of His Royal Highness, Prince Norodom Sihanouk undertaken in March 1955 and his subsequent visits to India. There has always been a strong desire on part of both our countries to strengthen bonds of friendship. India never wavered in its commitment to support Cambodia even at the most difficult phases of its history, immediately after the fall of Khmer Rouge regime.

Your Majesty,

I am extremely happy that Cambodia has been progressing well and it achieved double digit economic growth for a number of years prior to the global economic crisis. While commending the ongoing efforts of Cambodia to achieve a better life for its citizens, I can assure the Royal Government of Cambodia of India's continued support in fulfilling this objective.
Human resource development and capacity building have been the primary focus of India-Cambodia bilateral cooperation for the last many years. India is cooperating with Cambodia in infrastructural projects, considered priority projects for the development of Cambodia, under concessional lines of credit. Today, we have signed an additional line of credit of US $ 15 million for the Stung Tassal Water Development Project in Cambodia.

Your Majesty,

As both our countries have large agrarian sectors, there is tremendous scope for co-operation in agriculture. Initiatives have also been undertaken to enhance economic engagement between our two countries. We need to encourage private sectors to pro-actively explore trade and investment opportunities.

India and Cambodia also have predominantly young populations. There should be greater exchanges between the youth of our two countries, so that our friendship and deep cultural links continue to resonate in the future. To promote cultural ties, recent significant initiatives have been the setting up of a Chair of Sanskrit and Buddhist Studies at Preah Sihanouk Raja Buddhist University and of Mekong-Ganga Cooperation Asian Traditional Textiles Museum. The team of the Archaeological Survey of India is currently working on restoration and preservation of Ta Prohm temple at Siem Reap. We are proud that India was involved in the restoration and preservation of the World Heritage monument Angkor Wat for a few years beginning 1986.

Defence and security-related issues are other areas of active cooperation between India and Cambodia. India is happy to play a role in training the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces officials. It is heartening that in less than two decades, Cambodia has transformed itself from a country which hosted blue berets, to a troop-contributing nation for UN peacekeeping operations in Africa.

We value the support extended by Cambodia for India’s enhanced engagement with the ASEAN and for India’s inclusion in the East Asia Summit.

I am confident that my visit and similar high level exchanges in the future will contribute to broaden, as well as deepen our bilateral ties and generate goodwill between our peoples.
Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I now request you to join me in a toast:-

– to the good health and well-being of His Majesty Preah Bat Samdech Preah Boromneath Norodom Sihamoni, the King of Cambodia; – to the continued progress and prosperity of the People of Cambodia; and – to the lasting friendship and cooperation between India and Cambodia.

Phnom Penh, September 15, 2010.

I am delighted to be amongst the captains of business communities of our two countries. At the outset, I would like to thank the President of the Cambodian Chamber of Commerce for organizing this event. The Indian business delegation consists of representatives from Indian companies and from the three major business associations of India namely the Confederation of Indian Industry, the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry, and the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry, reflecting the interest to engage with Cambodia. Today’s meeting offers an opportunity for business persons from both countries to interact and explore business potentials.

India and Cambodia have deep civilizational links and a time-tested friendship. Our peoples have known each other for more than two thousand years. Our ancestors exchanged ideas and techniques, and created such architectural marvels that are now termed as the wonders of the world. Indian traders sailed to this region, playing an important role in not only establishing trading links, but also in promoting people to people contacts. Those ancient friendly ties which continued for many centuries, once again flourished in the era of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Prince Norodom Sihanouk, which saw an upswing in political interaction, not only on the bilateral platform, but also in the international arena. After the fall of the Khmer Rouge regime, India was among the first countries to re-establish its diplomatic Mission in Phnom Penh in 1981. Since then, our two countries have worked together to bolster bilateral ties covering almost all sectors. Prime Minister Hun Sen's visit to India in 2007 and my interaction with the leadership of Cambodia during my visit not only reconfirms the time-tested bonds but is a desire to further strengthen our friendship. A background of such a rich interaction accompanied by a strong commitment by the leadership of the two countries to promote ties, provides numerous opportunities for businesspersons to forge trade and investment linkages.

It is worth mentioning that India and Cambodia started the process of economic liberalization in the 1990s - almost at the same time. Since then, the pace of economic growth in both countries has accelerated. Cambodia figured among an exclusive group of countries to achieve double digit growth in its GDP for a few years in a row, prior to the global economic crisis. India was one of the few countries where the impact of the global economic downturn was limited. This was largely on account of Indian economic growth being propelled by domestic consumption. India is trillion dollar economy and is ranked as the fourth largest economy in the world on the basis of purchasing power parity. India is a large, attractive and a growing market.

Ladies and Gentlemen, India-Cambodia economic relations are at a modest level but there exists much greater scope for expansion. Total bilateral trade is approximately US$ 50 million with pharmaceuticals being the dominating item of India's export basket. I am certain it is possible to expand the bilateral trade basket, which requires initiatives to create awareness among the business communities of the two countries about the quality and prices of exportable goods and import requirements. In order to promote trade with Cambodia, India has extended a duty free tariff preference facility since last year. I encourage the Cambodian business community to avail of this facility in full at an accelerated pace.
Indian companies have invested overseas and are looking for opportunities to do more business. Frequent business interactions will help in identifying the many investment opportunities in mining, oil and gas, hydropower, infrastructure, tourism, among others. Moreover, in the economies of both India and Cambodia, agriculture continues to play an important role. I am told that the Royal Government of Cambodia is exploring ways to improve agriculture productivity, as well as to transform Cambodia into a rice basket and a key rice exporting country in the world. We welcome these initiatives of the Cambodian Government and I can assure that India would cooperate and share its experience with Cambodia in achieving this objective. India would be happy to extend training support and also depute Indian experts to Cambodia under bilateral co-operation arrangements. I am informed that trade and investment opportunities in the agriculture sector have also generated a lot of interest among reputed Indian business companies. I am hopeful that the current visits by some of them would fructify into actual business transactions.

India has a strong presence of small and medium enterprises, which have been in operation for many centuries. I believe Cambodia is keen to expand its manufacturing base to add value to its local agro-produce and also for other products to meet local demand. These sectors, alongwith IT and IT enabled services, could be areas which are worth exploring. I am glad that an Indian bank - Bank of India - is now operating in Cambodia. This should help facilitate business between the two countries.

Ladies and Gentlemen, Cambodia’s central location in the ASEAN region is useful as India seeks to expand its economic engagement with the region. We are also helped by the fact that for Indians, South East Asia is an important travel destination. In this context, I would like to mention that India-Cambodia tourism trade has tremendous potential for expansion. I am also told that a large number of Cambodian tourists travel to India for pilgrimage purposes. Such visits boost our tourism business and people to people contacts. One of the best catalysts to promote tourist traffic between the two countries would be the establishment of a direct air link between India and Cambodia. This would open possibilities of attractive tour packages, and also significantly reduce travel time.

Cambodia is a country with which we have historical ties and there exists an abundance of goodwill for India at all strata of society. Therefore, I urge my own compatriots to share their experiences learnt over the years and play a positive role in the development of Cambodia. There exists tremendous scope for developing trade and investment relations between India and Cambodia, which should be realized by businesspersons of the two countries.

I wish you good luck and success in this endeavour.

Thank You.

272. Remarks by President Shrimati Pratibah Devisingh Patil at the Banquet hosted in her honour by the Governor of Siem Reap Province.

Siem Reap (Cambodia), September 16, 2010.

I deeply appreciate the warm hospitality extended to me and my delegation. I am delighted to be in the historical city of Siem Reap which is home to so many magnificent monuments including the world heritage site - Angkor Wat. These monuments reflect the glory of the Khmers at that time and are a visible symbol of strong cultural ties that existed between India and Cambodia.

India is proud to have been involved in the conservation and restoration efforts of Angkor Wat from 1986 to 1993 and is currently working for Ta Prohm Temple. Today, I had the honour of laying the foundation stone for MGC Asian Traditional Textiles Museum, which would be an added testament of Indian cultural cooperation between India and member countries of the Mekong Ganga Cooperation in this beautiful city of Siem Reap.
I see such joint initiatives as proof of the desire of the two Governments to keep alive the historical cultural ties that exist between the two countries.

I wish to commend Your Excellency, the Governor of Siem Reap Province, and your officials, for their untiring efforts in making the city as well as the Angkor area a tourist paradise. Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I invite you to join me in a toast:

— to the age old friendship between India and Cambodia; - to the progress and prosperity of the people of Cambodia; and — to the historic city of Siem Reap and to the World Heritage site of Angkor Wat.

273. Statement of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil to the Media on board the Special Flight on her way back from her State Visits to Lao People’s Democratic Republic and the Kingdom of Cambodia.

September 18, 2010.

As I mentioned in my departure statement, I visited Laos and Cambodia at the invitation of President Choummaly Sayasone of Laos and H.M. Norodom Sihamoni, the King of Cambodia. My visit to these countries was undertaken to reinforce the deep historical and cultural ties which India has with these countries dating back to more than 2000 years, and to build a dynamic economic and developmental partnership on these foundations. The last visit of an Indian President to Laos and Cambodia was that of our first President Dr. Rajendra Prasad in March 1959.

In Laos, I visited the capital city of Vientiane and the world heritage city of Luang Prabang. I had detailed and valuable discussions with President Sayasone who had paid a State Visit to India in August 2008 as well as with PM Bouasone Bouphavanh and the President of the Lao National Assembly. Government of Lao PDR repeatedly conveyed its deep appreciation for India's continued assistance and support for its developmental efforts through loans and assistance in the field of human resource development, hydropower and irrigation schemes in particular. The Lao leadership emphasized that Indian Lines of Credit were very important for Laos and also conveyed special appreciation for the preferential tariff assistance given by India for Lao exports. I was informed that the National Assembly of Laos has already approved the India-ASEAN Agreement on Trade in Goods and only some administrative formalities remain prior to its notification. The Lao leadership also indicated that they look forward to investments from the Indian private sector.

In Vientiane, a Cultural Exchange Agreement for the years 2011-13 was signed as also an agreement for a new Government of India Credit Line of US $ 72.55 million to finance two power projects. Agreements between the newly set-up Indian Chamber in Laos (INCHAM) with each of the three leading Indian Chambers of Commerce (viz. FICCI, CII and ASSOCHAM) were also signed. These measures are expected to give impetus to further economic cooperation between India and Laos.

President Sayasone and I participated in a virtual inauguration of the 115 KV Paksong-Jiangxi-Bangyo transmission line project in Champassak province, where Government of India had provided a Line of Credit for US$ 18 million.

In Cambodia, I held talks with King Norodom Sihamoni, Prime Minister Hun Sen and the Presidents of the Senate and the National Assembly. The Cambodian leaders warmly recalled India's invaluable support for Cambodia during its most difficult times. They appreciated our developmental assistance and discussed new areas of cooperation. Prime Minister Hun Sen mentioned oil and gas, mineral extraction, agriculture and tourism as future areas for bilateral cooperation. I invited His Majesty King Norodom Sihamoni to visit India, which he accepted. The dates will be worked out through diplomatic channels.

An MOU for cooperation between our Comptroller and Auditor General and the National Audit Authority of Cambodia was signed. A US$15 million Credit Line Agreement between EXIM Bank and the Cambodian Government was signed for Phase II of the Stung Tassal Water Development Project. I announced a financial grant of US$ 246,000 for upgradation of the Cambodia-India Friendship School. I attended the India-Cambodia Business meeting in Phnom Penh. I also performed the ground breaking and foundation stone laying ceremony of the Asian Traditional Textiles Museum being set up under the Mekong-Ganga Cooperation Programme.

On ASEAN, Cambodia has played a vital role as the host and ASEAN Chair in 2002 for the first ASEAN-India Summit. Cambodia is currently the Coordinator for India-ASEAN interaction and will again hold the ASEAN Chair in 2012 when we will host the Commemorative India-ASEAN Summit in India.

The grandeur and scale of the historical monuments I had visited has been particularly impressive in both Siem Reap and Luang Prabang. In my meetings with the Governors of these provinces, they both mentioned the old links with India. Our shared cultural heritage is very much in evidence in the architecture, the language, the religion, the art and culture and the social customs of our countries. The Baci ceremony in Laos in which threads are tied is very reminiscent of our Raksha Bandhan festival. We are proud of India’s contribution to the restoration works in Angkor Wat and Ta Prohm in Cambodia and Wat Phu in Laos.

I was accompanied by Shri Kantilal Bhuria Union Minister for Tribal Affairs and by Members of Parliament - Shri Mohan Singh, Shri N. Peethambara Kurup and Shri Anandrao Adsul. They actively participated in the various events during the visit. They, like me, were deeply impressed with the commonality of culture and the ancient linkages with Laos and Cambodia, and the commitment of the leaders of the two countries to forge stronger bonds of friendship with India. I believe that greater economic engagement and people-to-people contacts, particularly among the youth and students will be the catalysts for this.

A business delegation also accompanied me. It consisted of representatives from Indian companies and the three major business associations - CII, FICCI and ASSOCHAM participated. As we look at our objective of greater economic engagement with these countries, it will be our companies and business organizations who will explore possibilities, and increase trade and investment levels.

I was touched by the exceptional affection and personal warmth extended to me in both Laos and Cambodia from the leadership and the people. I am convinced that my visit to Laos and Cambodia has served to reinforce our traditional ties and will also help us to forge new links for the future.

Thank You

CHINA
274. Speech by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Book Release function at the Observer Research Foundation.

New Delhi, January 7, 2010.

Shri M. Rasgotra, President, ORF Centre for International Relations,
Shri Prem Shankar Jha, well known author and scholar,
Prof. Suranjan Das, Vice Chancellor, University of Calcutta, Distinguished scholars, Excellencies,
Ladies and gentlemen,

I feel privileged to release before this distinguished audience two very topical and insightful books on China and our relations with this emerging powerhouse. One of the books is a crystallization of a hundred schools of thought contending, with well-known scholars and policymakers throwing up riveting possibilities and alternative iterations of the India-China dynamics over the crucial next decade or two. The other is the product of in-depth and painstaking research on the unknowns of China's political economy, seeking to demystify, and offer fresh perspectives on, the Chinese growth story.
The two books released today represent the growing and welcome interest among the Indian intelligentsia in things Chinese and attempt to understand them from an Indian perspective. This in itself is a result of the growing relevance of China to us in India, whether in the precincts of the Government, company boardrooms, market streets or university campuses. It is only proper, therefore, that we develop our own intellectual framework in which to study the Chinese phenomenon from this side of the Himalayas. We can be aloof to the unfolding new challenges and opportunities presented by our largest neighbour's rapid ascendancy only at our own peril. Nor can we rely entirely on external sources for understanding and addressing them. This is why books like "India and China --- the next decade" and "Managed Chaos --- the fragility of the Chinese miracle" matter indeed.

The discourse on China is central to the ongoing process of Asia's economic integration and emergence ---- a process where we have vital stakes. China's sustained eye-catching growth over three decades and our own high growth in relatively recent times have largely pulled the centre of gravity of the world economy to this part of the world. Our two countries, because of the size of our domestic market and unsaturated demand, hold promises for continued economic growth and show a way out of recession worldwide. We have mutual interest in each other's prosperity, as our trade statistics and investment trends eloquently indicate. Respective experience of economic management and respective best practices can similarly serve as the most appropriate benchmarks and models for Indian and Chinese economy, which are uniquely similar in their scale and complexity. At the same time, we need to manage and contain the short-term pains of economic dislocation, while addressing the long-term need for trade sustainability and diversification.

Moving into the sphere of geopolitics, we need to recognize the complexity of relations posed by an unresolved boundary question. This is naturally an emotive issue for us. However, that need not obscure the hard-won fact that peace and tranquility has been preserved in the long India-China border for more than two decades, and the plethora of Confidence Building Measures put in place to reduce or eliminate the perception of threat from each other has worked satisfactorily well. Nor has the non-settlement of the Boundary Question prevented mutually beneficial functional cooperation in a number of areas. At the political level, the aspiration to consolidate our bilateral relations found reflection in the Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity that we established in 2005. That our relations have now gone beyond the framework of the purely bilateral and assumed strategic and global connotation is rather clear from the intent of the Joint Statement on the Shared Vision for the 21st Century issued in 2008. It also becomes evident when India and China work and articulate from the same side of the development divide, whether on the issue of trade liberalization in the context of the Doha round of the WTO or in the Climate Change debate.

Let me reiterate that Government of India does not view China or China's development as a threat. That said, however, we recognize that cooperation and competition can overlap, as it is not possible to have a perfect congruence of interests between two nations as vast and diverse as India and China. Such competition or lack of cooperation must not be misunderstood as antagonism. Our differences, when they exist, must be handled with dialogue and diplomacy. Fortunately, within the parameters of the Strategic and Global Partnership, our two countries have a vibrant system of political exchanges and have created a full-fledged architecture of dialogue at all official levels, covering all fields. It is our endeavour to fully utilize these mechanisms, address issues in a frank and mature manner and set new goals, rather than allow uncertainties to persist and lead to mistrust and grudge.

This brings me to the paramount need to create greater awareness and mutual understanding at the public level. Knowledge and scholarship of China in our country needs to be augmented to attain the maximum benefit from the rise of China. The media could play a responsible and responsive role in this. Our civil societies must engage with each other more vigorously, recognizing the promises held out by each other.

I hope this process of people-to-people friendship will be put on faster track in the New Year, which will mark the 60th year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China. We will commemorate this event in a befitting manner, including through a spectacular Festival of India in China and a Festival of China in India. I am looking forward to my own visit to China this year at the invitation of my Chinese counterpart to further strengthen and reinvigorate our ties. I warmly recall my earlier visit to China, before assuming the office of the External Affairs Minister. I had also recently hosted my Chinese counterpart in Bangalore. He reminded me, and I wholeheartedly agreed, that our relationship should continue to be guided by the spirit of Panchsheel - the five principles of peaceful co-existence. I am happy that the launch of two books today heralds the promising year ahead.

In conclusion, I would like to thank the Observer Research Foundation for organizing this very timely function. ORF's scholarly inputs are of great value in the process of formulating our foreign policy alternatives. I wish ORF all success in its future endeavours.

Thank you.

275. Official Spokesperson's Response to a question on detention of Indian nationals in China.

New Delhi, January 12, 2010.

Ministry of External Affairs is aware of the detention of 21 Indian nationals* by the Anti-Smuggling Bureau of Shenzhen Customs (China) on 8 January 2010. They are charged with illegal transportation of diamonds from Hong Kong to Shenzhen.

On learning of this detention, our Embassy in Beijing immediately approached the Chinese authorities seeking consular access to the Indian nationals, as provided for, in a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on consular matters of 2003.

Indian Consular Officers are expected to be granted access to the detained Indian nationals tomorrow morning, 13 January 2010.

* Twenty-one Indians were among 33 foreigners arrested in the southern Chinese city of Shenzhen on diamond-smuggling charges. Local authorities said the Shenzhen-based traders were involved in a smuggling racket, reportedly bringing in diamonds from Hong Kong for sale in the open market. The Indian traders were alleged to have been hired by the smuggling ring as "carriers," according to officials. Ambassador to China S. Jaishankar told The Hindu that the Chinese authorities had assured the Embassy that those arrested would be granted consular access. Officers from the Indian Embassy in Beijing and the Consulate in Guangzhou have been dispatched to Shenzhen.
276. Press Note issued by the Ministry of Commerce after meeting of Commerce Minister Anand Sharma with Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

Beijing, January 19, 2010.

Shri Anand Sharma, Commerce and Industry Minister currently on a visit to China, today called on Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao. In a warm and cordial meeting, the Chinese Premier agreed that trade and economic cooperation between the two countries is an important part of the overall bilateral India-China relationship. He agreed that both sides could work together to ensure more balanced trade. China would do its part in working towards this objective. Stating that India and China have extensive common interests, he pointed out that each country has its own strengths and can learn from each other. The Chinese Premier emphasized that China and India should work together to further develop their economic relationship as an important plank of their bilateral partnership. Shri Sharma agreed that India-China bonds are strong and expressed his appreciation of Chinese willingness to address the trade imbalance between the two countries.

Earlier, Shri Sharma co-chaired the 8th Meeting of the India-China Joint Economic Group (JEG) with the Commerce Minister of China Mr. Chen Deming. The JEG was meeting after a gap of 4 years. Shri Sharma conveyed that India placed importance on economic and trade cooperation between the two countries. China was India's largest trade partner, while India was China's tenth largest partner. India desired to expand its exports to China and India's rank in China's foreign trade does not do justice to the potential that exists between the two countries. Shri Sharma drew attention to the large and growing trade deficit that India is experiencing in its bilateral trade with China. He requested the Chinese side to take corrective steps to reduce this imbalance. He pressed for greater import of IT and ITES by China from India, removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers to the import of power plant equipment from India, removal of restrictions on import of Basmati Rice, fruits and vegetables by China, landing rights for Indian TV channels in China, and import of more Indian films by China. He further highlighted the procedural bottlenecks, including time consuming licensing procedures being faced by Indian drugs and pharmaceuticals. During the JEG Meeting, an India-China MOU on Expansion of Trade and Economic Cooperation between the two countries was signed which provides for the Chinese side to import as much of its requirement of value added goods from India as possible.

The Chinese Commerce Minister stated that China too would work towards reducing the trade deficit that India was experiencing. Stating that India had emerged as one of the largest markets for Chinese project exports, he requested India to facilitate the work of Chinese companies in India. Both Ministers looked forward to working together in expanding mutual investments in the other country.

Shri Sharma and the Commerce Minister of China also delivered key-note addresses at an India-China Business Seminar held at Beijing today. An MOU between FICCI and the China Chambers of Commerce for Import and Export of Machinery and Electronics (CCCME) for cooperation between the two Chambers was signed.

During his China visit Commerce Minister also visited Shanghai and met Communist Party Secretary of Shanghai Mr. Yu Zhengsheng, and told him that "cooperation between Chinese & Indian companies is instrumental in strengthening bilateral relations between the two countries." He also said that "India attaches high importance to its participation in the Shanghai World Expo at which we will showcase not only its progress in science & technology but also our rich and diverse cultural heritage". Mr. Tang Dengjie, Vice Mayor of Shanghai; Mr. Sha Hailin, Deputy Secretary General of Shanghai Municipal Government & Chairman of Shanghai Municipal Chamber of Commerce; and Mr. Chen Kehong, Chairman of Shanghai Municipal Science & Technology Commission were present from the Chinese side. Both Shri Sharma and Mr. Yu Zhengsheng exchanged views about how India and China were coping with the global economic crisis and spoke about both countries being engines of economic growth that was helping the world come out of global economic crisis. The Minister said that China is an important economic partner for India's development particularly in the infrastructure sector and added that there are enormous opportunities for Chinese companies in this sector. Mr. Yu Zhengsheng expressed confidence that Indian pavilion will be one of the highlights of the Expo and it will provide an excellent opportunity for Chinese People to enhance their understanding about India. He spoke about business opportunities for Chinese companies in India and also assured full support for Indian business operations in Shanghai.
277. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs to mark the 60th Anniversary of the Establishment of Diplomatic Relations between India and China.

New Delhi, April 1, 2010.

April 1, 2010 marks the 60th Anniversary of the establishment of Diplomatic Relations between the Republic of India and the People’s Republic of China. On this occasion, messages of felicitations have been exchanged between the Presidents, Prime Ministers and External Affairs Ministers of the two countries.

2. Conveying “warm greetings and good wishes” to the leadership and friendly people of China, President Smt. Pratibha Patil, in her letter to the Chinese President, observed that “our bilateral relations have gained in strength and momentum and have assumed global and strategic dimensions” as a result of efforts by the two sides.

3. In his message to the Chinese Premier, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh stated that “India - China relations have diversified into almost all areas of human endeavour. They have achieved a high level of maturity that serves the interests of both our peoples and the cause of peace, stability and progress in the region and the world. We share a Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity. We are important trade partners. We cooperate closely on many global issues. The Shared Vision for the 21st Century which we signed in 2008 provides the roadmap for our continued interaction and cooperation in the years ahead.” PM added that “we regard the future of India - China relations with optimism” and that he looked forward to working with the Chinese Premier “to harness the vast potential for the further expansion of our ties to realize the mutual aspirations of our two peoples”.

4. In his communication to the Foreign Minister of China, External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna remarked that India and China, “are rapidly developing countries which share the objective of improving the living standards of our people. In recent times, we have emerged as two of the fastest growing economies in the world”. He reiterated “our resolve to work closely with China for the peace and prosperity of our region and the globe”.
278. Keynote Address by National Security Advisor Shiv Shankar Menon at the seminar organised by the Indian Council of World Affairs & Institute of Chinese Studies Seminar on "India and China: Public Diplomacy, Building Understanding".

New Delhi, April 1, 2010.

Ambassador Devare, Ambassador Zhang Yan,

Friends

Thank you for asking me to speak at the inauguration of this seminar on "India and China: Public Diplomacy, Building Understanding" to mark the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China. This is a useful and timely initiative by the Indian Council of World Affairs and the Institute of Chinese Studies. It will be a significant part of the commemoration of this anniversary in both countries.

It is a pleasure to see so many friends in the audience, and particularly to see our Chinese friends here with us in Delhi.

Sixty years ago, in the international and domestic circumstances surrounding the birth of two new republics in India and China within two years of each other, the rapid recognition and early establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries had a special significance. Asia was taking charge of its own destiny again, and intended to do so on its own terms. That was a moment of promise, a declaration of intent by the two most populous nations on earth, conscious of the role that they had played in history, and aware of the vast gap between their past glory and present condition.

Today, sixty years later, thanks to our separate and collective efforts, both our countries, and Asia as a whole, are beginning to play the roles promised by our mutual recognition sixty years ago.

Today, as our leaders have reminded us, and as was shown again at the Copenhagen COP on climate change, India-China relations have global significance. How have we come to this point and what should we expect from India-China relations in the future?

India-China Relations Today

For ancient nations and neighbours like India and China, sixty years is only a brief moment in a long record of civilisational contact between our peoples. Ours has always been a broader engagement, not just between our states but between our peoples. Throughout history it was the scholars and pilgrims, the traders and travellers, who carried ideas, goods and science from one country to another. It is even argued by some that Buddhism, that great import from India which was so successfully Sinicised, flourished in China until it acquired the disadvantages of state patronage and of being a state religion, and that it was its place in the people’s hearts that enabled it to survive and flourish until today in China.

It was awareness of the historical contact between the two peoples of India and China that created the basis for the attempt in the fifties to build a new type of relationship based on Panchasheela or the Five Principles. That attempt foundered on the boundary question and the politics that prevailed in the late fifties and sixties internationally and in China, leading to the difficult phase of bilateral estrangement during the sixties.

When we began the process of rebuilding state-to-state relations in the seventies, we tried to learn the lessons of history and to bring into play the strength of people to people links and public diplomacy as your seminar calls it. Beginning with Foreign Minister Vajpayee’s 1979 visit to China and culminating in Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi’s historic visit to China in 1988, Indian and Chinese leaders decided that the difficult and complicated boundary question would be addressed, but would not stand in the way of the expansion of relations in other areas, including the economy and functional cooperation. This approach was taken one step further by the 1993 agreement on the maintenance of peace and tranquility in the border areas and the 1996 CBMs agreement, which committed both sides to preserving the status quo and established procedures to deal with difficulties that might arise on the ground.

The results of this policy of engagement speak for themselves. Today China is India’s largest trading partner in goods, over 3,000 Indian students study in China, and India is one of China's largest markets for project exports. India and China cooperate in international organisations and on global issues. We have established a practice of regular leadership visits and meetings that has resulted in high level political understanding and impetus for the relationship.

By 2003 both countries were confident enough to re-address the most complicated and difficult issue that affects bilateral relations, the India-China boundary question, at the political level. It was decided to entrust the issue to Special Representatives of the leaders. This decision too has borne fruit in the Guiding Principles and Political Parameters for a boundary settlement that were agreed during Premier Wen Jiabao's 2005 visit to India.

In other words, differences in world view, structure, systems and foreign policy decision making have not prevented and will not prevent an expanding engagement between India and China, successfully managing contradictions while building on congruence. The two countries have found a modus vivendi to deal with the fact of the boundary issue and to manage their different approaches to issues where their peripheries overlap. India and China both cooperate and compete at the same time because of their interests and how they perceive the balance of power and situation around them. We have also shown through practice that our bilateral relations are too important to be affected by our relations with any third country.

Both countries can now actively consider together the next steps in the evolution of our bilateral relations; evolve a detailed framework for the resolution of the boundary issue in a manner that is politically feasible for both leaderships; and, seize the opportunities for cooperation that the domestic transformations of our economies and the evolving global situation have opened up.

The Prospect

Today, India has been transformed, China has changed beyond recognition, and the two countries are increasing the well being of their people and contributing to the emergence of a multi-polar world.

its structural causes in terms of global imbalances remain unsolved. Both the trend towards multi-polarity and the financial crisis have actually increased the opportunity and need for India and China to work together on global issues. As the visionary joint statement issued by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Premier Wen Jiabao in January 2008 made clear, both countries share common positions and approaches on several major international issues of long-term significance such as the environment and climate change, energy security, food security, remaking the institutions of global governance, and international support for national economic and social development efforts.

In the immediate region in which both countries are located, Asia, as well, there is common ground between India and China on combating terrorism and extremism, enhancing maritime security, and on the need for a peaceful environment to permit the domestic transformation of the two countries. While there may be differences in method and choice of tools, in most cases there is a marked similarity of goals. Naturally, the bilateral modus vivendi which has been in place for some time may need to be reworked periodically in the light of developments in our countries and around us.

Our experience suggests that there is space in Asia and the world for both India and China to grow and develop, and for us to do so in a way that is mutually reinforcing, if we both wish it. We also have the experience and ability in India and China to continue to manage our relationship successfully.

As India and China continue to pursue their interests, so long as their overwhelming preoccupation remains their domestic transformation, and both understand that this goal requires a peaceful periphery, it is my understanding that the elements of competition in the bilateral relationship can be managed and the elements of congruence can be built upon. As our interests get progressively more complex, the costs of withdrawal from engagement rise.

The larger issue is whether India and China can work together to help to manage the complicated regional security environment in Asia. India's preference is for the open security architecture and the sort of multi-polarity that China too has advocated previously for global issues, and from which we have both benefited in the recent past. To do so, India, China and other rising Asian powers must be willing and capable of contributing to global public goods in terms of security, growth and stability that the region and world require. How will we help to preserve security in the global commons? Asia has proved that she can do the economics. Can she also do the politics that come with power?

You might ask what this has to do with public diplomacy by India and China, the topic of your seminar. Everything is my answer, for two principal reasons. One is the shrill and over excitable commentary on the relationship that has appeared in both countries in the last year or so. The emergence of "nativist" voices, and the loud expression of opinion as fact in the new media which purports to express public opinion, could introduce volatility in perceptions. We have all witnessed this phenomenon in India-China relations in the last year or so. When the world is changing so rapidly, and when uncertainty in the international system is at unprecedented levels, neither India nor China can afford misperceptions or distortions of policy caused by a lack of understanding of each other's compulsions and policy processes.

Secondly, in a democracy like India foreign policy has a symbiotic relationship with public opinion; it is both formed by it and needs its support to be legitimate, coherent and implementable.

And that is why public diplomacy by both countries becomes important, to bring issues into perspective and to make clear the context and implications of public policy.

It is only on the basis of informed and supportive public opinion that we will be able to grasp the opportunities and move forward on the ambitious agenda that awaits India-China relations, the pursuit of which would place India-China relations on a sound footing for the twenty-first century, and enable us to realise the potential of the India-China strategic cooperative partnership for peace and development.

I therefore wish you success in your seminar. You have a wide canvas to cover in terms of the relationship and the contribution that public diplomacy can make to it - whether through academic exchanges, journalism, civil society contacts and so-called track two dialogue between Indians and Chinese, all of which are becoming richer by the day. I wish you well and look forward with anticipation to learning the results of your deliberations.

Thank you.
Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (East Asia) on the visit of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to China.

New Delhi, April 3, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to you all and sorry to keep you waiting a bit. Let me first of all introduce a dear friend and colleague Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia), who is responsible for affairs pertaining to China, Japan and other countries.

As you are aware, the External Affairs Minister Mr. S.M. Krishna will be paying an official visit to China at the invitation of his counterpart from the 5th to the 8th of April. We would like to brief you on the important visit. This would be the first official bilateral visit by the present EAM to China and the highest level political visit from India to China under the UPA-II Government. You would recall that the last visit of our EAM to China took place in June 2008.

The External Affairs Minister's visit assumes added significance as it coincides with the 60th anniversary of establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China. The exact date of the anniversary was the 1st of April 2010 when the leadership of both the countries exchanged messages of felicitation. In his message to Premier Wen Jiabao, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh hailed the Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity between India and China and observed, "We regard the future of India-China relations with optimism". The Prime Minister went on to say that he looked forward to working with the Chinese Premier "to harness the vast potential for the further expansion of our ties to realise the mutual aspirations of the two peoples".

Let me say at the very outset that developing friendly relations with China, partnership with China, has been one of the topmost priorities of the Indian foreign policy. There is an overarching consensus across the political spectrum in India to have good, cooperative and friendly ties with China. A significant landmark in the relationship has been the establishment of the Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity between India and China during the visit of Premier Wen Jiabao to India in April 2005.

Turning to the visit of the EAM let me add that he would be accompanied by the Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao; his Advisor; Joint Secretary (East Asia) Mr. Gautam Bambawale; myself; and our Ambassador in China Dr. S. Jaishankar would be joining the delegation at Beijing.

During his visit, the EAM would be holding wide-ranging talks with his counterpart Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi. He would also be calling on Premier Wen Jiabao. Amongst his important engagements would include an address at the China Institute of International Studies. The EAM would be participating in a reception to mark the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations, which would be jointly organised by our Embassy in Beijing and the Chinese People’s Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries.

EAM would also be inaugurating the Festival of India which is being held in China. The Festival of India would be for a period of six months. The Festival of China in India would commence in the second half of April. EAM would flag off the Festival of India in China.

External Affairs Minister and Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi know each other well. They have met several times. They had a very good meeting at Phuket on the margins of the East Asia Summit Ministerial meeting in July last year. The Chinese Foreign Minister had also visited Bangalore last October for the RIC (Russia, India and China) Ministerial meeting.

In fact, high-level exchanges characterise our bilateral relationship. We intend to not only maintain but further enhance this momentum. It is these high-level exchanges, the focus at the highest level which has been imparting momentum to the ties.

You would recall that Prime Minister had met with President Hu Jintao at Yekaterinburg in June 2009. The two Premiers have also met on more than a couple of occasions including during the East Asia Summit at Hua Hin in October 2009 and again at Copenhagen during the COP15 Summit meeting in December. I may add that during this festive year we expect honourable President of India to be visiting China. The dates are being finalised through diplomatic channels.
I am particularly happy to note that over the years both sides have established a comprehensive architecture of dialogue which has helped in imparting momentum to the ties. We have, as you are aware, the Special Representatives Dialogue on the boundary question. The Thirteenth Round was held in New Delhi in August last year. We have the strategic dialogue at the level of Foreign Secretaries. We have the annual defence dialogue, the expert-level mechanism on trans-border rivers and other such mechanisms. This is just to give an idea of the breadth and the sweep of the dialogue architecture that is already in place.

We have truly multifaceted ties. Our economic and trade relations are one of the pillars of our bilateral ties. It is remarkable that from a figure of a mere 1.8 billion dollars in 2000, our trade has risen despite global economic slowdown to over 43 billion dollars in 2009. I am happy to note that during the first two months of 2010 our bilateral trade has grown at over 50 per cent compared to the same period last year. We have a trade target of 60 billion dollars by the end of 2010 which both sides should be in a position to achieve.

At the same time, the growing trade imbalance is an issue which needs to be addressed. In 2009, India faced a trade deficit of 15.8 billion dollars as compared to 11.17 billion dollars in 2008. We are having constructive discussions with our Chinese friends on greater market access to Indian commodities and easing of other hurdles including non-tariff barriers.

Chinese companies have been very active in bidding for undertaking and executing infrastructure development projects in India. As of end of 2009, 25 billion dollars worth of projects were secured by the Chinese companies in areas like highways, metro, steel plants, and especially in the power sector. You know that energy security is an area which is very important for us. Out of the 25 billion dollars, a number of projects have been implemented and others are in the process of being implemented.

India has already conveyed to the Chinese side that we will participate in a befitting manner in a big way in the Shanghai World Expo which commences in May this year and lasts for about six months. It is indeed satisfying that our bilateral relations have become multifaceted. They cover a diverse area. Not only within the bilateral framework but also in the regional and the global context the relationship has been expanding.
We have good functional cooperation in areas such as culture, tourism, people-to-people contacts, energy, defence, science and technology, agriculture, education, trans-border rivers, parliamentary exchanges - just to indicate a few key sectors.

At the same time, like with any country there are also areas of divergence which include the boundary issue. I mentioned that we have already a mechanism of SR talks in place to address the boundary issue. There is also the issue of Chinese construction activities in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir which is an area of concern, as well as the issuance of stapled visas to those who are domiciled in Jammu and Kashmir. Our position is very clear that there should be uniformity in the practice of issuance of visas regardless of the ethnicity or the domicile of an Indian national. However, I must say that both sides have the maturity and the confidence to address all such issues in a spirit of friendship, peacefully and to narrow our areas of divergence, which we have been doing very successfully.

I have already mentioned that there are increasing areas of convergences between the positions of our two countries not only on bilateral matters but also on regional and international issues including important matters for both countries like climate change, international financial crisis, the Doha round of trade talks and so on. India and China are both members of G20, the East Asia Summit, the ASEAN+6 Dialogue, BRIC, BASIC, etc.

Friends, it is in this background that the visit of the External Affairs Minister takes place when the entire range, the whole gamut of bilateral matters, bilateral relationship will be reviewed by both sides. The leaders will also discuss regional and international matters of mutual interest. It goes without saying that we are keen to build on the positives.

I would like to close by recalling what Prime Minister has said on more than one occasion that the world is large enough to accommodate the developmental aspirations of both India and China. Thank you. My colleague and I will be happy to take a few questions.

Question: You have just now said that India has been raising the issue of stapled visas to China. What has been the Chinese’ response so far? Have they simply refused to discuss this issue or were they listening to India?
Joint Secretary (East Asia) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): We have raised this issue with the Chinese Government, with the Chinese side at different levels. This is a matter of core concern for India because it goes to the very heart of India's national sovereignty and territorial integrity. We have asked the Chinese side to do away with this dual visa policy that JS (XP) was talking about, of issuing visas stamped on Indian passports for a certain segment of Indian people and giving them a separate stapled visa which is issued on a separate sheet of paper and stapled to the passport. So, this dual visa policy we have asked the Chinese to do away with. We will continue to press them on this issue because it is a matter of core concern to India.

Question: What has been their response?

Official Spokesperson: As my colleague has already mentioned we have articulated our views very clearly at various levels to our Chinese friends and we would expect that this very important concern of ours is taken on board.

Question: At ICWA Mr. Yang had spoken of a regional trading arrangement and he had also spoken of the trade imbalance. Are you going to set up a mechanism to deal with this issue?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): We already have a mechanism to deal with this issue. That mechanism is what is called India-China Joint Economic Group which is headed by the Commerce and Industry Minister of India and the Commerce Minister of China. In fact, this group met as recently as in the middle of January of this year where our Commerce Minister took up the issue of imbalances in trade, and we have brought it to the attention not only of the Chinese Commerce Minister but also the Chinese Prime Minister Premier Wen Jiabao. The Chinese side have told us that they agree with us that trade cannot continue on a sustained basis with such imbalances, and that they will work with us to address the problem of imbalances in bilateral trade.

Question: Could you tell us about the case of 21 Indians arrested in China on the charges of diamond smuggling? What is the latest on it? Would it also be taken up in the meeting?
Joint Secretary (East Asia): Yes, definitely there will be some time for discussion of consular and visa issues and other such matters between our External Affairs Minister and the Foreign Minister of China. I expect that this issue will also be touched upon, will also be taken up. Let me give you what is the latest on this issue. As you know, the 21 Indian nationals were first detained by the authorities in Shenzhen in South China in early January. It was probably the 8th of January, if my memory serves me correctly. Investigations against them continued. In early February there were charges against them which were levied by the Chinese authorities. Twenty of the twenty-one were charged with diamond smuggling and one of the twenty-one was charged with money-laundering. In the Chinese system what happens is that the investigations will continue for a couple of months more, and then within a few weeks we hope and we think that the case will be brought to the law courts in China. In the meantime of course our Embassy in Beijing, our Consulate General in Guangzhou has been very very active. They have had consular access to these twenty-one Indians thrice already. We have asked for yet another round of Consular access now for early April. We find that the twenty-one Indians are in good health. There were some complaints about the quality of the food because they are all vegetarians and they were not getting food which was adequate. I think this has now been addressed. More importantly we have insisted that the family of those Indians, at least the immediate family members, should be allowed to meet with them.

The Chinese authorities have now accepted this. There is likely to be a meeting between the immediate family members and the twenty-one Indians who are in jail in Shenzhen very soon. In the meantime of course the law will take its course. We have tried to assist these twenty-one Indians in finding legal redress in the sense of hiring a lawyer who has a good track record. We hope that they will get the best of legal assistance in this case.

Question: There was a proposal to connect the Kunming of China to Kolkata. It was mentioned in one of the joint statements also. A motor car rally was also announced in that joint statement. What happened to this project?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): You are absolutely right. There is a proposal for a connection between Kunming and Kolkata. In fact, Kunming and Kolkata have already been connected in terms of air connectivity. There is already a flight from Kunming to Kolkata and from Kolkata to Kunming. The motor car rally, you were right, there is a proposal. It is still on the table. It did not materialise so far because of some problems of the access in the roads between the two cities. But I think this has been worked on in the last few years. It is possible that this car rally could take place maybe in the coming months or maybe during this year or maybe next year. But we are still working on it. That proposal is still on the table.

Question: Celebrating sixty years ... (inaudible) ... what efforts should both sides should put into facilitating our ties, especially from the Indian side?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): You are right. Sixty years is an important sort of point both in Indian culture as well as in Chinese culture. I think it is a good point to take stock of what has happened in the last sixty years, to build on the positives as the Joint Secretary (External Publicity) was saying so that we can have a stronger, closer relationship. We already have a Strategic and Cooperative Partnership between our two countries. There was a period when we worked very closely together in the past. I think this has some lessons for the future. We are working very closely together again not only on certain bilateral issues but also on many global issues like at Copenhagen last year. I think there is a lot of potential for the two countries to work together in the coming sixty years.

Official Spokesperson: Let me also add here that, as my colleague said, we need to take stock and see where we are today which gives us the encouragement, gives us the momentum to stay the course. So, it is very important to stay the course and build on the positives. I think it is important to note that between India and China we account for forty per cent of the global population. We are two neighbours, we are two civilisational societies. I think India and China working together - I am not saying that by cooperating we will not be competing. Competing is positive, competing is healthy. That is very natural, that is normal - it is in our mutual interest to cooperate. And you have seen so many reports which have pointed out that by the year 2025 for example or the year 2030 US-China-India or China-US-India would be the three largest economies in the world. So, on whichever parameter whatever yardstick you see, it is in our mutual interest, I think, to stay the course. We should build on our convergences and try to narrow the divergences, which we have been doing all these years.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Just like to add one last point on that question and it is a very good question from the People's Daily. You are absolutely right that the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China are celebrating the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations. But I think you have to also keep in mind that India and China are ancient civilisations. Our interaction between India and China goes back thousands of years. There have been historians, travellers from one country to the other. So, I think we should also keep in mind and take into stock the fact that we are ancient civilisations with histories of interaction which go back for thousands of years.

Question: Looking at the increasing volume of trade and also closeness to China as we are discussing now, is there any possibility of opening of new Consulates in China? Secondly, the Sikkim Chief Minister Pawan Chamling has been demanding that the trade should be opened at Nathu La borders. What is happening?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): In fact, border trade is open at Nathu La. It opened some years ago.

Question: What is the volume of trade?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): We will get back to you with the exact figures. The volume has been increasing over the last two-three years. It has gone on rising in the last three years. Also let me be very clear that as far as agreements between India and China on border trade are concerned, they focus on the people who inhabit the India-China border areas. It is for their benefit that we have opened this border trade. So, we visualise this as trade between inhabitants of the India-China border areas.

On Consulates, you know we have just opened one new Consulate each just in 2007. The Chinese opened a new Consulate at Kolkata and India opened a new Consulate in Guangzhou in the South of China. I do not think at the present moment there is a move to open new Consulates. But given the vast size and areas of both countries, maybe in the future there might be a request from each side for opening of new Consulates. But that is in the future. As of now we are trying to consolidate our diplomatic representations in both countries.
Official Spokesperson: What my colleague has not mentioned is that he is the first Indian Consul General in Guangzhou. He had set up the Consulate, he had established the Consulate. Who can be a better person than him to give you that perspective!

Question: How many border trade posts are there altogether?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): There are three points where we allow border trade. One is called Lipu-Lekh Pass which is in Uttarakhand; the other is Shipki La or Shipki Pass which is in Himachal Pradesh; and the third is which has opened more recently in Nathu La in Sikkim.

Question: Chinese investment in India is 25 billion dollars, right? What about Indian FDI in China? Also, I want to know how many Chinese workers are currently working in India. We have been having some labour-related issues. Are we following security clearance for Chinese investment in India?

Official Spokesperson: I think there are two different aspects. What I mentioned was the infrastructure-related contracts that China has secured, which is different from FDI. As far as we know, till the end of 2009 Chinese companies had secured 25 billion dollars worth of projects for development of infrastructure. Many of them have already been completed. Many of them are being implemented. Secondly, in terms of FDI or investments, Indian investments in China are in the range of about 400 to 450 million dollars. Bulk of the investments are from the private sector companies in areas like IT, pharmaceuticals and so on. As far as the workers are concerned, there are different categories of visas. If you look at the number of visas that are being issued by both the sides, you will see a steady growth in the numbers. Almost half a million Indians and Chinese are travelling to each other's countries. That is the kind of numbers that we are talking of here. In visas there are different categories. You have the tourist visa, you have the business visa, you have the employment visa. So, the basic position is that the visa should be utilised for the purpose it has been taken. If you have taken an employment visa it should be used for employment purposes. If it is a tourist visa, it should be used for tourism purposes. That is the requirement not just of India but also of China or any other country. That is what has been streamlined. The position is, I think is working quite well.
Question: Is the Chinese Embassy still issuing stapled visas or has this practice ended?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I think it is best if you ask the Chinese Embassy that.

Question: How does India react to Hurriyat leaders from Kashmir visiting China? Is it seen as interference into India's internal affairs?

Official Spokesperson: Let us look at the framework. Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India. That is something that has to be very clearly understood. That said, travel between the two countries of the people of each other's country is fine. India and China have a relationship which I mentioned is a very important relationship. It is a growing relationship, it is a broadening relationship. We have committed to each other to be sensitive of each other's concerns. As I said, you need to build on the positives and show sensitivity to each other's concerns. That is the framework within which any aspect of travel, invitation or interaction should be looked at.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I will just add to what the Joint Secretary (External Publicity) has said. You know that we have taken up this issue of Jammu and Kashmir with the Chinese leadership on several occasions in the past and the Chinese have conveyed to us that this is an issue which has to be solved, sorted out, resolved between India and Pakistan. I would just draw your attention to this position of the Chinese side.

Question: The Shanghai Expo is the focus of the whole China for this year. How is India going to take advantage of this event to showcase the best of India in terms of technology, culture, economy, because it is a big and a very good opportunity for India to better inform the Chinese on what India today is. Can you specify how India is going to do it? Will it be funded by the Government or financed by private sector as well?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): You are absolutely right. India places great importance on the Shanghai Expo. We are going to be participating in it in a big way. The main lead organisation from the Indian side is the Indian Trade Promotion Organisation. But this is not just a Government effort, it is a public-private participation effort. We are going to show the best of Indian industry, the best of India culture at the Shanghai Expo.
We have set up and established a huge India Pavilion which is basically made of bamboo because the theme of this year’s Shanghai Expo is linked to green technologies and clean energy. So, we have set up a huge India Pavilion which has about 4,000 square metres of space. It is made out of bamboo. It is supposed to have the largest free-standing bamboo dome. I think that the pavilion itself is very unique. We will also have a large number of performing arts troupes participating in the Shanghai Expo. These will showcase Indian performing arts not only from the area of our traditional dances and traditional performing arts but also to the modern and more people sort of performing arts including troupes from bollywood. We will also have major interactions with Chinese businesses at the Expo. So, there will be a number of business events at the Expo. We will be celebrating India’s National Day on August 18 at the Shanghai Expo. There is a whole range of activities, a whole range of events which have been planned. I think the people of Shanghai will really see the best of India during this entire period of the six months that Shanghai Expo will be on.

Question: Will the troupes be performing in Shanghai?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Absolutely. In the whole of China and especially in Shanghai because the Expo is there.

Question: Will there be any frank discussion over Paresh Baruah issue because the news reports in Assam are saying that Paresh Baruah is hiding in Kunming. Is there any possibility of that figuring in the talks?

Official Spokesperson: I have already said that the visit of the External Affairs Minister offers an opportunity to both sides to have a broad-based discussion on all matters of mutual interest. We have a broad canvas to work on, a broad canvas of our relationship. I really cannot prejudge as to what the two leaders will be discussing. But what I can tell you is that the two leaders will be covering various aspects of bilateral relationship and subjects of mutual interest. Given the quality of our relationship with China, our discussions are always constructive and open.

Question: You just mentioned about the troupes which will be there from different parts of the country. Would there be one from Arunachal?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I really do not have a list of all the troupes.
For that you will have to check with the ITPO and maybe the ICCR.

Question: What has been the Chinese response to the construction activities that they have been carrying out in PoK? Will the issue be taken up?

Official Spokesperson: The issue has been taken up. In fact I am on record to have stated, and it is on the website, that the State of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India and any such activity is illegal. So, this is an issue which is a very important issue for us and we have taken this up with our Chinese friends.

Question: I would like to focus on the regional issues like Iran and the affairs in Afghanistan. What is India's position on Chinese assessment of the developments in the region especially in terms of the counter-terrorism measures? Even the Chinese are very apprehensive of the developments in Afghanistan bordering them. And, you two are competitors in the market. It is very difficult really to locate areas where you can balance the trade relations between India and China. Is there any area India is likely to focus on? ...(Inaudible)...

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I will start with your second question first. There are some areas in which India has a competitive advantage in which we sell all across the world. I will give you just a few examples. IT-enabled services is one; pharmaceuticals is the second; basmati rice is the third; Indian movies which are very popular in China is the fourth. We find that all these items - where India has a strength, has a competitive advantage, which we sell all across the globe - are finding market access issues in China. So, we have taken this up with the Chinese. We think this is an area where India can increase its exports to China. We have been pressing our Chinese friends, our Chinese colleagues for giving these Indian items greater access to the Chinese market.

Official Spokesperson: About the other question, I think it is best addressed by you to the Chinese side. They will be in a better position to respond to your question.
Question: Mr. Bambawale, with Mr. Menon having taken over as the SR now, can we expect the next round of talks? Any idea about the dates for the next level of talks on boundary issue? Secondly, we have heard Mr. Qureshi make statements recently to the effect that Pakistan was willing to give a blank cheque to China to mediate, to which India of course objected strongly. And China itself, as you mentioned, had said that they would not like to mediate in our affairs. On the specific issue of terrorism we mentioned recently that we would like Saudi Arabia to exercise influence. Since Pak and China are all-weather friends, would we like them to be interlocutors in any way or exercise their office of influence for Islamabad to act?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): On your first question about the Special Representatives, I guess there will be a meeting at some point in time. We do not have any dates as yet. We do not have any specifics on the next round of meeting on boundary question between the Special Representatives. On the second question, we have a Joint Working Group with China on counter-terrorism and we have had some good exchanges with them. I would also draw your attention to the fact that the Indian Army and the Chinese PLA have had two exercises which have been basically counter-terrorism exercises - one in the Southwest of China and one in the South of India in 2007 and then again in 2008. So, both India and China do share concerns on international terrorism and we have been talking to each other about this aspect.

Question: Have we ever asked them to exercise their influence on Islamabad particularly ...(Inaudible)...

Joint Secretary (East Asia): As I told you earlier, even after the statement that you referred to, the Chinese Foreign Ministry Spokesman came out very clearly to reiterate the Chinese position that as far as Jammu and Kashmir is concerned this is something that should be resolved, sorted out, discussed between India and Pakistan.
280. Speech by External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna at the China Institute of International Studies (CIIS) on 'India and China in the 21st Century World'.

Beijing, April 6, 2010.

President of the China Institute of International Studies,
Excellencies,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

It is a great pleasure for me to speak to you today on "India and China in the 21st Century World". I thank the China Institute of International Studies for providing me its prestigious forum to share my thoughts. CIIS has a well deserved reputation as one of Beijing’s premier think-tanks. I express my sincere appreciation to Mr. Qu Xing President of CIIS and his colleagues who have taken great pains to make this event possible.

2. I am on an official visit to China and will be holding discussions tomorrow with my counterpart, Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi, on a range of bilateral, regional and global issues. My visit coincides with the 60th anniversary of the establishment of India’s diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China. To commemorate that anniversary, we are holding a Festival of India in China. I will have the privilege of opening this Festival at the Forbidden City tomorrow in the presence of Chinese dignitaries. Quite appropriately, the Indian cultural performance that will take place focuses on our shared heritage of Buddhism.

3. Most Foreign Ministers, when speaking abroad, articulate their immediate national concerns and interests. With the 60th anniversary very much in my thoughts, I stand before you recalling the rich heritage of our cultural and civilizational interaction and our millennial ties. In that background, I felt it better to address my remarks to the common concerns of India and China and then speak about the future of our cooperation.

4. What does the 60th anniversary of our ties mean for us? In the late 1940s, when we reached out to each other, India and China had a natural bonding and understood each other's aspirations in a way that nobody else could. As great civilizations that left a major imprint on history, we had both known the oppression of foreign dominance and witnessed the stark decline of our economic strengths. Our pathways to independence were different but the end objective was very similar. India achieved freedom from colonial rule through patient and peaceful political struggle. China, for its part, came through the World War, met the challenge of foreign occupation, and like India, sought to rebuild its social fabric. Domestic political developments in such large countries necessarily impacted on the international system. Indeed, it was no accident that we produced leaderships with such a strong internationalist outlook. The impact of the internal socio-political changes in India and China on the global polity cannot be overstated. It was their charting of new directions that really shaped the emergence of the post-colonial world order.

5. Not surprisingly, the post-1945 order was reluctant to recognize the legitimate concerns and interests of these two nations. China, in particular, stood isolated as a result of Cold War politics. In fact, as late as 1954, only 19 nations had recognized the People's Republic of China. India, of course, was among them, having established diplomatic relations with China in April 1950. It was also sensitive to the sentiments of the Chinese people and became an early advocate of the 'one China policy' and of the PRC's admission to the United Nations. Its own bilateral ties with China during this period, that included a historic visit by Jawaharlal Nehru in 1954, also reflected the friendship between the two nations.

6. In their early years as independent players, the two polities found themselves on the same page on de-colonization, national sovereignty and independence, and security of states. The Panchasheela, or, the five principles of peaceful co-existence, was their unique contribution to contemporary diplomacy. This period was marked by global crises and flashpoints, some like Korea and the Taiwan Straits that directly affected Chinese security, and others like Vietnam and the Suez which were issues of basic principles. India and China stood shoulder to shoulder and the Bandung Conference was the high watermark of that era. In celebrating 60 years of diplomatic ties, we obviously seek to honour and uphold that tradition of working together. The younger generation may well be unaware of it and it is our duty to remind them so that the spirit of cooperation can be even stronger. Therefore, our endeavour is to draw inspiration from those early years of our existence as independent nations to cooperate more closely in the future.
6. In the 1980s, having overcome initial challenges, India and China saw that rapid economic growth would give them a stronger voice in the international community. Looking back, it is significant that Rajiv Gandhi actually sought to accelerate India's modernization just a few years after Deng Xiaoping unveiled his reform policy in China. Unfortunately, it took us another decade to evolve a national consensus. But the point that I wish to underline is that the architects of modernization and reform in both countries - Rajiv Gandhi and Deng Xiaoping - were also the prime movers of normalizing our ties after a difficult interregnum. Rajiv Gandhi's 1988 visit to China was the landmark event that put our ties on their present course. The underlying assumption that was clearly shared by both leaders was of the importance of growth at home and of cooperation abroad. Those still remain our guiding principles.

7. Getting our growth strategy right in an ever-changing world has its own challenges. As India and China manage their domestic priorities well, it has huge implications for global prosperity. After all, between them, they are raising the living standard of almost one-third of humanity. When the question is raised about what we are doing for the world, it is often forgotten that our domestic development itself has world-wide effect. In the last two decades, we have impacted significantly on global per-capita income, longevity and human development. Given the scale of what is underway, there is much that can be gained through our close cooperation. The economic models of India and China may be very different. But an exchange of best practices can still benefit both countries. After all, we do face similar challenges of urbanization, resource consumption, food and energy security, inclusive growth and skills development.

8. The paradigm of co-existence has today been enhanced by more active engagement. But this is still not adequate. We must ask ourselves whether as neighbours and partners, each of whom are large and rising economies, are we making the best of opportunities? Put bluntly, is it possible that India and China can leverage each others' strengths? After all, in their own past history, both nations have leapfrogged using international relationships. There is a huge infrastructure demand in India, covering sectors like power, roads, rail and telecommunications. In the recent budget, 46% of the total plan allocations are assigned for physical infrastructure development. China has actually carried out many of the changes that India is still contemplating. As a result, it has capacities but less domestic demand. There is considerable scope for joint projects as we master the practice of working harmoniously together. On the Chinese side, the outsourcing of IT by state enterprises has only started recently. There is a potential waiting to be tapped, which would happen only by connecting Chinese users to Indian providers. I am meeting representatives of Indian businesses in China later today and will encourage them to be creative in exploring opportunities here. We strongly feel that the India-China relationship is grossly under-realized and the capacities for expansion are enormous.

9. Like other major States who made the same journey earlier, India and China seek a secure and peaceful environment that allows them to focus on their growth prospects. In this regard, we must always remember that the two countries are each part of the other's immediate periphery. Just by ensuring stability and promoting prosperity at home, we are actually serving each others' interest. What are the challenges to our peaceful periphery? They are actually not very different from the problems that we face at home. These emanate from two central issues - material poverty and intellectual poverty. To the extent that we can raise living standards rapidly at home and encourage similar progress in our neighbourhood, we will be more secure and stable. The more complex challenge is that of ideas. As pluralistic societies, we are threatened by political ideologies that are based on narrow loyalties, often justified by distorting religious beliefs. These forces are against progress and modernity and have only brought misery wherever they have dominated. States that use them as instruments to advance their political interests find themselves consumed by these very destructive ideas. For both of us, stability at home stands in sharp contrast to extreme instability in our shared neighbourhood. We cannot afford to be passive spectators. It is critical for our future that we cooperate actively in meeting common challenges. Our ties were never a zero sum game. Today, it is all the more important that we take an enlightened and long-term view of our self-interest.

10. A strong and stable relationship between India and China has consequences for the entire world. Because we are different, our divergences are often exaggerated. If truth be told, there are vested interests at work too. India and China must not just cooperate; they must be seen to be doing so by the rest of the world. Our Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh, often emphasizes that the world is large enough to accommodate the aspirations of both countries. But this is not an inevitable outcome. It is a goal that requires strong political will, sustained engagement and a high degree of mutual sensitivity. What can we do to make this cooperation stronger? I believe that we need to work on a wide variety of fronts as progress on one will reinforce in the other.

11. A number of dialogues and forums already exist between India and China that need to keep meeting regularly and productively. These include mechanisms where we discuss bilateral, regional and global political issues. We have a separate set of talks for the boundary question. Annual consultations take place between our foreign offices, defence establishments, policy planners, consular officials and disarmament experts. There are also dedicated bodies to deliberate on trade matters and water management. Regular meetings lead to better communication, more understanding and strengthen confidence. I would, therefore, strongly encourage an intensive and sustained engagement between the two systems.

12. Far from sliding into complacency, we must keep pushing the pace of the relationship with new ideas and more activity. I was pleased to note that this is already underway. On the political side, the support provided by growing track-2 dialogues is a welcome development. Our military-to-military cooperation is also expanding steadily. In trade, business events in 18 Chinese cities this year with IT, pharmaceuticals, engineering and agro-exports as thrust areas will surely make an impact. In culture, the Festival of India that will take our performing arts to 33 Chinese cities this year will be equally noteworthy. Growing exchanges of students and tourists speak of changing levels of comfort. Soap operas on Chinese TV and Bollywood dances in local restaurants confirm that we have transcended cultural barriers.

13. We need to strengthen sentiment at the popular level. The 60th anniversary of our ties itself offers a great opportunity. But this needs to be a continuous and widening process. There are powerful symbols of connectivity between our societies. Xuan Tsang is one from distant history. We are now completing the construction of an Indian temple at the White Horse Temple complex in Luoyang which is associated with him. This will be a powerful symbol of our shared history. Asia’s first Nobel Laureate Rabindranath Tagore too evokes positive sentiments among Chinese intellectuals. His 150th birth anniversary next year offers a unique opportunity to build stronger cultural bonds. We have, of course, examples from more contemporary times like the young and heroic Dr. Kotnis and the Indian medical mission to Yenan. We must appreciate the power of culture to bring about perceptual changes in society as a whole.

14. India and China have only begun to impact seriously on the world. Just as we advanced de-colonization and independence movements in the fifties, today we are striving to rewrite the rules of the world a little more in our favour. A reshaping of the global architecture is underway, evident in new groupings like the G-20, BRIC, BASIC and the East Asia Summit. As developing societies, our convergence is manifest on issues like climate change and global trade rules. Given their shared interest in creating a more contemporary order, the two countries can advance their respective interests much better through active cooperation. Indeed, even on the complex issue of UN reform, it is perhaps time for China to review previously held positions and welcome the presence in the Security Council of a nation with which it has much in common.

15. We have to accept that there will be outstanding issues between the two countries even as our relationship forges ahead. This is in the very nature of global politics and we should not get discouraged as a result. The true test of our maturity is how well we handle our problems. Even on an issue like the unresolved boundary question that is often the subject of media speculation, it is not always appreciated that considerable progress has actually been made. The Peace and Tranquility Agreement of 1993, the Confidence Building Measures of 1996 and the Guiding Principles and Political Parameters of 2005 have all demonstrated that we have the ability to increase convergence and deepen mutual understanding on this complex issue through patient negotiation.

16. As rising powers, India and China are often projected to have a competitive relationship. In the final analysis, we all are what we want to be. It is upto us to disprove such scenarios, not through platitudes and wishful thinking, but by concrete examples of cooperation. Certainly, there is a strong case for a global issues partnership between India and China as two large developing Asian economies. We can work together on key challenges that will define the 21st century. These include sustainable development, technology exploitation, water usage, climate change, rapid urbanization, migration, human development and building a pluralistic society. The 21st century will be increasingly driven by the quality of human resources. As the two largest human resource powers, our cooperation can accelerate that trend.

17. But there is more to our prospects than issue-based cooperation. Our rise promises to alter the configurations of the global order as we have known it in a fundamental manner. We cannot accept incremental change in the way the world is currently run. The G-20 represents the first step in a new direction. Our combined efforts can help reform the systems of international financial governance much more effectively than we could by working alone. As Asian states, we must recognize that our continent lags behind Europe and the Americas in terms of economic and infrastructural integration and security cooperation. We have yet to find the right common denominators in many areas. If India and China work purposefully in this direction, the whole world stands to benefit.

18. The destinies of India and China were linked in the past. The growth of our relationship will be determined by the extent of our awareness that they are linked in the future as well.
281. Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Opening Ceremony of the Festival of India in Beijing.

Beijing, April 7, 2010.

Your Excellency State Councilor Madam Liu,
Your Excellency Minister for Culture Mr. Cai
Excellencies
Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is a pleasure and a privilege to be amongst you in Beijing today to inaugurate the Festival of India in China in this very important year marking the 60th anniversary of establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries. The Opening Ceremony will witness the enactment of a play based on the life of Emperor Ashoka, who underwent a dramatic change of heart after a major war and converted to Buddhism. Since Buddhism has played a major part in contacts and exchanges between our two nations for thousands of years, it is only befitting that we inaugurate the Festival of India in China with such a performance.

The Festival of India will bring to the Chinese people a full spectrum of Indian culture, art and theatre. More than 30 Chinese cities will witness performances of various Indian classical dances, folk dances, classical music, martial arts and contemporary music. A number of Indian exhibitions, covering both antiquities and modern art, will be on display at Chinese museums in different cities. An Indian Film Festival will also take place in three separate locations in China. We hope that the Festival of India will play a major role in increasing awareness about India and its culture among the Chinese people.

This year of the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations has got off to a good start. We hope to carry on this momentum throughout the year and into the future. The various activities to be undertaken in the Festival of India will serve as a platform to build stronger bridges between and create more awareness among our two peoples. I am confident that this will aid in the further consolidation of the India - China relationship.

I am confident that you will all enjoy today's performance. I wish the Festival of India complete success.

Thank you.
Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on the External Affairs Minister’s talks with Chinese leaders.

Beijing, April 7, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening to you again. As you know the External Affairs Minister Mr. S.M. Krishna is on a visit to China. Foreign Secretary is here to brief you on his engagements yesterday and today. Ma’am, can I invite you to make your opening remarks?

Foreign Secretary (Smt. Nirupama Rao): Thank you Vishnu. As he said EAM is paying an official visit to China at the invitation of his counterpart Mr. Yang Jiechi, Foreign Minister of China. The External Affairs Minister has been received with great warmth, and accorded all courtesies by the Government of the People’s Republic of China during this visit. His visit, as you know, coincides with the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China.

The External Affairs Minister participated in the reception hosted yesterday by the China People’s Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries and the Embassy of India. State Councillor of the Peoples Republic of China His Excellency Mr. Dai Bingguo attended the reception together with other Chinese dignitaries.

Our Minister will inaugurate the Festival of India in China later this evening at the Forbidden City Concert Hall, and there will be a performance of Ratan Thiyam’s Uttara Priyadarshi. This is a dance drama brought to audiences here in China through the aegis and the good offices of the Indian Council for Cultural Relations, New Delhi.

As you are aware, the focus of the External Affairs Minister’s visit has been to build mutual understanding, mutual trust and mutual confidence between the two countries as well as to enhance all-round bilateral relations. We have a truly multifaceted relationship with China which extends to almost every field of human endeavour. It covers areas like trade, investment, science and technology, energy, defence, culture, tourism and the important area of people-to-people contact. Both countries have a similarity of outlook on a number of issues of regional and international importance, as for example terrorism, climate change, the Doha round of trade talks etc.

The External Affairs Minister addressed the China Institute of International Studies yesterday. Many of you were present during the talk and you must have seen the text of his address. Today he called on His Excellency Premier Wen Jiabao. They had a 45-minute meeting at the Zhongnanhai a short while ago. Of course, earlier today the EAM had consultations and discussions with Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi at the Diaoyoutai State Guest House here in Beijing. The discussions went through the morning and were followed by a banquet hosted by Foreign Minister Yang in honour of our External Affairs Minister and the visiting delegation.

During these discussions our Minister conveyed the greetings and good wishes of the Government and people of India to the Government and people of China. He conveyed to Premier Wen Jiabao the warm regards and good wishes of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, and this was in turn warmly reciprocated by Premier Wen Jiabao.

Both sides have hailed the Strategic and Cooperative Partnership between the two countries, and have expressed the conviction that more content and depth should be imparted in the years to come, especially against the backdrop of the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries. This visit has enabled an exchange of views on enhancing mutual synergies, and in continuing with regular high-level exchanges.

Both Foreign Minister Yang and External Affairs Minister Krishna have agreed that the spirit of cooperation between India and China, as was evident at the Climate Change Conference at Copenhagen and at the number of G20 summits held over the last year, should continue.

The two Foreign Ministers today signed an agreement on the establishment of a hotline between the Prime Minister of India and the Premier of China. This initiative was agreed upon between Prime Minister and President Hu Jintao during their meeting in Yekaterinburg in June last year. The agreement to establish a hotline is an important confidence-building measure and it opens up a direct channel of communication between the leaders of the two countries.
As I mentioned earlier, the subject of people-to-people exchanges also was discussed during these meetings. The two Foreign Ministers particularly have agreed to increased exchanges of students, of school teachers, of young people. As you know, we already have youth exchanges between the two countries. It was felt that these should be further intensified in order to promote mutual understanding. Also, exchanges between university Vice Chancellors and media personnel were discussed. Both sides felt this was a good way to go forward in order to enhance mutual understanding.

The leaders were able to exchange views on regional and global issues. The situation in Afghanistan, the threat of terrorism was discussed. Foreign Minister Yang conveyed that both China and India should stay in touch on these issues and remain in regular contact in regard to the situation in the region, particularly on Afghanistan.

As you know, the President of India has been invited to visit China later this year. The Chinese leadership said that they were greatly looking forward to this visit, that it would be a significant milestone in our relations. External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna has invited Foreign Minister Yang of China to visit India.

As you can see, these have been cordial, useful, constructive and wide-ranging discussions. What came across during these discussions was that this relationship between the two countries has more than just a bilateral dimension, it has a global impact, and that a long-term strategic view is required of this relationship. The 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations, as I mentioned, forms an excellent backdrop to the discussions held today and for the events that we hope to see put in place and fulfilled over the next year.

The enhancement of leadership level contacts has found significant mention in these discussions. I mentioned to you that our President is to visit China this year. From the Chinese side Vice-Chairman Han Qide of the National People’s Congress visited India a short while ago. Vice Premier Hui Liangyu was in India, as you know, also a short while ago. He met our Prime Minister during that visit and had very good discussions. The Vice-Chairman of the Chinese People’s Political Consultative Conference Mr. Sun Jiazheng is going to visit India shortly, later this month, for the inauguration of the Festival of China in India. It is also hoped that there would be more leadership level visits from China to India later this year.

Both sides have agreed to intensify their cooperation in counter terrorism. I mentioned Afghanistan, but we also have a counter terrorism dialogue. It is one of the dialogue mechanisms between the two countries. Both sides agreed today that there is need and that they must activate the various dialogue mechanisms that exist between India and China. Just to enumerate a few, we have of course the Counter Terrorism Dialogue, we have Foreign Office Consultations, we have a Strategic Dialogue between the Foreign Secretary and the Vice Foreign Minister of China, we have the annual Defence Dialogue, and also there is cooperation in science and technology. If you remember, during the visit of President Hu Jintao to India in 2006 we had identified specific areas including biotechnology, nanotechnology, cooperation on climate change engineering, weather forecasting as some of the areas where we could cooperate. The scientists and the scientific establishments of the two sides have been working on these ideas and these projects are going to fructify shortly. That is another area that we spoke of today.

Education was given a very prominent position in the discussions because in the context of building greater mutual awareness and understanding it was felt that educational exchanges play a very important part. In this context the example provided by the educational exchanges that India and the United States have, and China and the United States have did find mention.

It was discussed as to how we could in a sense see the example that has been provided in these other contexts, how we could see if these experiences could also be in a sense repeated when it came to India and China. So, we agreed to explore those possibilities and there was a suggestion from the Chinese side that they would like to invite about 100 secondary school students from India to come to this country and understand it, and also have a program to invite around 50 teachers to begin with from the schools in India to come to China and to promote such exchanges. Our External Affairs Minister Mr. Krishna particularly stressed the importance of teacher level exchanges as being very important towards the contribution of mutual understanding.
I know that you will ask me about the subject of stapled visas between India and China. You are aware of our position in this regard that we do not accept the stapled visas that have been put on the passports of Indian citizens who reside in the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir. Our position in this regard was made clear once again to the Chinese side during this visit. They listened very attentively to what we said. We underlined the need for more sensitivity to be shown to Indian concerns in this regard. This is a subject of ongoing discussion between India and China. That is where it stands at the moment.

The issue of India’s membership of the UN Security Council was also raised in the meeting between our External Affairs Minister and Premier Wen Jiabao. The Chinese position in this regard as encapsulated in the Joint Statement issued after our Prime Minister’s visit to China in 2008 was reiterated.

Our Minister Mr. Krishna has suggested to his Chinese counterpart that the Foreign Ministers of the two countries should meet annually from now on and this proposal found an immediately positive response from the Chinese side. So, this is another outcome of the visit. I would stop here and take your questions.

Official Spokesperson: I just wanted to mention that Foreign Secretary has to go for another engagement but she will be happy to take a few questions. Kindly keep your questions brief.

Question: Madam, you said that you discussed the situation in Afghanistan and the threat of terrorism. Considering the fact that Indian interests face the sole threat from agencies either sponsored by Pakistan or otherwise. Now was this discussed with the Chinese side considering that conventionally Chinese have been closer to the Pakistanis?

Foreign Secretary: The External Affairs Minister was able to elaborate on the work that we are doing in Afghanistan, our development partnership with Afghanistan, and the unfortunate and tragic incidents of terrorism that have affected our personnel and our assets in Afghanistan. Of course, the Chinese side told us that they condemn all acts of terrorism. As I said to you earlier in my briefing, we have agreed to remain in touch on this issue. The Chinese side was interested in knowing our view on developments in Afghanistan. I believe that this is going to be a good area of cooperation in the context of the dialogue between our two countries.

Question: You would have seen reports about Chinese hackers targeting computers of the Indian Defence Ministry and some Indian Embassies like the ...(Inaudible)... This report said that these hacking attacks originated within China. I was just wondering if this issue was brought up during meetings with the Foreign Minister.

Foreign Secretary: We did not discuss this issue.

Question: But are you worried?

Foreign Secretary: Obviously we are concerned about such reports and there is every need for us to be alert to such threats. Cyber security is of paramount importance and we will of course take all necessary steps to safeguard our assets against such attacks.

Question: Madam, after a rough patch last year between our two countries, do you think this visit is a breakthrough of sorts because we do not have any hotline of this sort with any other country? What would you think is the biggest deliverable that you are taking back from India's standpoint from this visit?

Foreign Secretary: I have not quantified it in such terms but let me try and give you my take on this. I think we go back with an enhanced level of understanding, of clarity about each other's positions, and the determination to step up our level of exchanges. I think what came through in the discussions from both sides was that they see this relationship as a very important relationship, a relationship between two emerging powers, a relationship between two large neighbours in Asia, a relationship between two of the largest developing countries in the world. So, from all these parameters this is an important relationship. I think there is growing realisation of the enormous potential that exists for the enhancement, the deepening and the strengthening of this relationship.

Question: Madam, I just want to check whether these issues were discussed: the boundary issue, construction activity in POK, and the arrest of 21 diamond merchants.
Foreign Secretary: All three issues were discussed. On the boundary question both sides referred to the ongoing efforts within the Special Representatives mechanism that was set up in 2003. As you know, we have had 13 rounds of discussions by the Special Representatives on the boundary question so far. The mechanism has yielded progress in the guiding principles and the political parameters that can form the framework for a boundary settlement. So, certainly this has been most useful and productive mechanism. Both sides understand that this is a complex issue between the two countries, that it will need patience to solve. But we also are fully cognizant of the fact that in the ten-pronged strategy that we announced during the visit of President Hu Jintao to India in 2006 both sides had expressed and articulated their resolve to reach an early settlement of this question. That point found reiteration again in the discussions held today. So, there is political will on both sides to move forward, to narrow their differences on this issue, and to seek a peaceful negotiated settlement to this outstanding question, and also while these efforts are ongoing, to maintain peace and tranquillity in the boundary areas, the border areas between the two countries.

On the issue of the Chinese projects in Pakistan Occupied Kashmir, yes, the matter was raised. Our concerns were conveyed and the Chinese side was given the full picture as to why we feel this way about their activity in Pakistan Occupied Kashmir. The Chinese position is that the issue of the outstanding differences that exist on Jammu and Kashmir between India and Pakistan should be resolved between these two countries through bilateral dialogue in a peaceful way, and that what they do in Pakistan Occupied Kashmir is without prejudice to this position of theirs.

On the issue of the Indian merchants who are held in Shenzhen, we have communicated to the Chinese side that the legal process should be conducted in a transparent manner, that we should be permitted access to these businessmen. They have permitted access to us and they said they would continue to do so, and the families of these businessmen will meet with the 21 detainees between April 7th and 9th, between today and day after tomorrow.
Question: Was there some talks about the supply of arms by China to Pakistan? (question was asked in Hindi)

Foreign Secretary: We did not discuss that issue specifically but in the context of India-Pakistan relations the Chinese side welcomed our recent initiative for Foreign Secretary level talks between India and Pakistan. They were briefed on the discussions and the outcome of these discussions. What we have stressed is that we have always advocated dialogue with Pakistan to resolve outstanding issues, but that terrorism that has affected us from Pakistan territory and territory held by Pakistan should stop, and that unless proper atmosphere is created in terms of dismantling the infrastructure of terrorism and the reduction and doing away with such terrorist activity, it will really be difficult to resume substantive dialogue with Pakistan.

Question: Any discussion on ...(Inaudible)... dam, or irrigation projects ...(Inaudible)... on the upper reaches of ...(Inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: We did discuss the issue of trans-border rivers. As you know, India and China have an expert level mechanism that has been established between the Water Resources Ministries of the two countries. The fourth meeting of the expert level mechanism will take place in India later this month. On the issue of the Brahmaputra river and the reports which have appeared in the media of the construction of certain projects by China in the upper reaches of the Brahmaputra river, the Yalu Zangpo river, we were told by the Chinese side that they have not undertaken any such projects. They have of course some projects for generation of hydro power. But these are not storage projects and they are not designed to divert water in the river.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much and thank you for your presence.
283. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on Prime Minister’s meeting with President Hu Jintao on the sidelines of the IBSA and BRIC Summits.

Brasilia, April 15, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Very good morning to you all. I hope you had a comfortable and pleasant evening. Today Prime Minister has a packed calendar. Very soon he will be heading for his bilateral meeting with President Lula where after, there would be the IBSA Summit and the BRIC Summit. Today morning, the first engagement of the Prime Minister was his meeting with President Hu Jintao. From the Chinese side, State Councillor Dai Bingguo and Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi assisted President Hu. Prime Minister was assisted by Commerce and Industry Minister, National Security Advisor and other officials.

The discussions between the two leaders were marked by mutual warmth and respect. Both sides expressed happiness at regular high-level exchanges which have become one of the hallmarks of our relationship. The leaders expressed an interest to further scale up the high level exchanges between the two sides.

You would recall that President Hu and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh had last met at Yekaterinburg on the sidelines of the BRIC and SCO Summits in June 2009. By the way this was the first meeting with any Head of State for Dr. Manmohan Singh, after UPA government came back to power.

Talking of high-level exchanges, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Premier Wen Jiabao have been meeting regularly. They met at Hua Hin on the sidelines of the ASEAN and EAS Summits in October. They again met in Copenhagen in December 2009.

External Affairs Minister, earlier this month from the 5th to the 8th, paid a very successful visit to China where he had comprehensive discussions with his counterpart Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi. He called upon Premier Wen Jiabao and also at a function met with State Councillor Dai Bingguo amongst other Chinese leaders and dignitaries.
During the meeting today, Prime Minister conveyed deep sympathies and condolences at the tragic loss of life during the earthquake that had hit the Qinghai Province. He conveyed the sense of grief of the people and the Government of India.

Prime Minister also conveyed the greetings and good wishes of the President of India, Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi, and the people of India to the friendly people of China, to the leadership of China, and President Hu Jintao.

Both sides described 2010, which is the 60th anniversary year of establishment of diplomatic relations, as a momentous year in our relationship, as a significant year in our ties. They noted with satisfaction that the ties had grown steadily, had expanded and had deepened. Both the leaders noted with satisfaction that our strategic and cooperative partnership was gaining in content, was gaining in substance. Prime Minister observed that India was fully committed, which sentiment was reciprocated by our Chinese friends, to take our important strategic and cooperative relationship further.

Both sides underlined that India and China cooperation, our friendship was of mutual advantage, was a win-win proposition. It was not just beneficial for both the countries but also good for peace, stability and prosperity in the region and the world. They expressed a keen desire to widen cooperation to new areas and deepen cooperation in areas like education, science and technology, high technology, agriculture, defence, and of course trade and economic relations which does constitute one of the cores of the bilateral relationship.

Both the leaders noted and reiterated that they have been encouraging companies in their respective countries to invest more in each other's countries. It was underlined that India and China were not competitors but partners. In fact, President Hu Jintao recalled Prime Minister's sentiment which he has expressed so lucidly at more than one occasion when he remarked that the world is large enough to accommodate the aspirations of growth of both India and China. And President Hu Jintao remarked that China fully subscribed to that viewpoint.
Both the leaders expressed a desire to seek enhanced bilateral trade and economic ties. They agreed to facilitate greater market access for each other's products, and recognised that there was significant potential for expansion of trade and economic relations. You would recall that we have established a target of 60 billion dollars in bilateral trade for the year 2010, and both sides are optimistic that that target can be attained.

They also spoke of maintaining even closer cooperation and coordination on major global issues of interest such as climate change, the Doha round of trade negotiations, and of course the issue of terrorism which affects not only the two countries but the world at large. They also spoke of the desirability to not only maintain but enhance our coordination in multilateral fora like G20, BASIC and other such organisations.

President Hu remarked that he and the people of China look forward to the state visit soon of President Pratibha Patil to China. As I noted earlier, they also looked forward to many more high-level exchanges during this important year and the years to follow. In fact, there was a marked optimism expressed by both sides at the future of bilateral relations. While both leaders took stock of how the relationship had progressed, expressed happiness, satisfaction at that; they also said that they would like to see this trend continue.

In sum, the talks were held in a warm, cordial and constructive atmosphere. The discussions lasted close to 45 minutes. I will be happy to take a few questions.

Question: Did the Prime Minister raise any contentious issues with China for example the issue of the stapled visas or Chinese projects in PoK or even the issue of hacking which has always been a concern? Did he bring any of these issues up?

Official Spokesperson: As you would recall, External Affairs Minister was in China last week from the 5th to the 8th. That was an occasion to take stock of our relations. We have a broad canvas of our ties which were discussed at considerable detail. It was noted that our convergences are steadily growing. Like any other relationships there are also areas of divergence, some of which you had alluded to. During the visit of the External Affairs Minister and his discussions with his counterpart, some of these matters of concern to India were articulated, flagged to the attention of our Chinese friends.

Question: Was there any talk about the next round of boundary discussions? I notice that both the SRs were present at the meeting. Is there any possibility of the two SRs meeting together on the sidelines separately?

Official Spokesperson: Prime Minister introduced NSA Mr. Menon as the new Special Representative to President Hu Jintao and his delegation, which as I said also included State Councillor Dai Bingguo. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the manner in which the SR mechanism was operating. You would recall that the 13th round of SR talks were held in New Delhi in August. Both sides felt that the next round of talks should take place at an early and mutually convenient date. It was also reiterated that pending settlement of the boundary issue - and both sides are working towards a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable settlement of the boundary issue - both sides would work towards, as they have been, to maintaining peace and tranquillity along the LAC.

Question: Were India’s concerns on maritime security discussed in any manner, Sir, with China’s expansion into Arabian Ocean?

Official Spokesperson: I have already given you a good flavour of the nature of discussions that took place.

Question: Did the issue of trade imbalance come up? Also, when you spoke about greater access to Indian services can you elaborate on that as to which sectors?

Official Spokesperson: I did note that the both the leaders remarked and underlined the fact that trade and economic relations constitute one of the key pillars of our bilateral relationship. If you look at the trade graph, from close to a billion dollars in 2001 it had touched 52 billion dollars in 2008. Because of the global economic slowdown, it dipped slightly to about 43 billion dollars in 2009. In the first two months of the current calendar year, I believe that our trade has bounced back and the bilateral trade is already up about 50 per cent as compared to the previous year. At the same time, while we are very happy at the buoyancy in the trade, the manner in which our trade and economic relationship has grown, there is a concern about a growing trade imbalance, which was close to 15.8 billion dollars in 2009. And you would again recall that Commerce and Industry Minister had led a delegation to China in January this year when all aspects of trade and economic relations were discussed at length. Obviously the desire to see a rapid growth in trade, especially rapid growth in balanced trade is something which we have been expressing and which has been noted and appreciated by our Chinese friends. That is the background and that is the context in which the two leaders today spoke about the economic and trade relations. The sides agreed that they would work towards this objective and work towards providing greater market access to each other's products.

Question: Did the issue of the nuclear aspirations of Iran come up in the meeting the first day? After the US President Barack Obama and Hu Jintao meeting, the White House had remarked that the China's reaction was positive.

Official Spokesperson: I have already given you a flavour of the discussions. This was a meeting which lasted about 45 minutes, and the primary focus of the discussions was on bilateral relations. By the way, that issue did not come up.

Question: Has there been any evolution in China's position on India's candidature for Security Council seat and did the issue of UN reforms figure in the discussion?

Official Spokesperson: Again let me take you back to the recent visit of the External Affairs Minister. All the details have been shared with you. India's candidature of the UN Security Council is one of our important foreign policy priorities. We have been taking up this matter with our key interlocutors, our friends, key nations, and in fact all the nations in the world. During the visit of our External Affairs Minister to Beijing when he called on Premier Wen Jiabao, the latter had said, and you recall, the Foreign Secretary had briefed at that time and when she had mentioned that Premier Wen Jiabao reiterated the position as expressed by the two sides, in the Joint Communiqué that was issued after the visit of Prime Minister to Beijing in January 2008.

Question: Are we to take that all the contentious issues were left to the Foreign Minister earlier and only the positive features were discussed between the Prime Minister and President today?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, the visit of the External Affairs Minister was from 5th to the 8th of April and that afforded an opportunity, the time, the space, the place, the atmosphere, to take up the whole array of matters, both our convergences and our divergences. Today’s was a short meeting, it was 45 minutes. It was on the sidelines of the BRIC and IBSA Summits in Brasilia. The President and our Prime Minister had last met in Yekaterinburg in June. So, it was after a gap of about ten months that the two of them were meeting. The focus was primarily on bilateral issues where, as I have already remarked before you came in, they looked at different aspects of the relationship, they took stock of the relationship and expressed satisfaction at the manner the relationship is progressing, reiterated the resolve to deepen our exchanges. That does not by any manner mean that anybody is glossing over any aspect of concern. Like any other relationship, there are areas of divergences. But what is a matter of satisfaction is that the areas of divergences are steadily narrowing, the areas of convergences are steadily growing. And both sides have the maturity and the confidence to be able to address all the issues, positives and divergences, in a manner that it is forward-looking, that while we narrow our divergences, that does not weigh us down in taking forward our positive agenda which is quite a substantive agenda.

Question: Any roadmap for talks between the two Special Representatives on boundary issues?

Official Spokesperson: The Prime Minister introduced, as you know, Mr. Menon our National Security Advisor has taken over recently and three weeks ago, he was designated as the new SR for carrying forward the boundary talks. And it was agreed that the SRs will remain in touch and that they will meet at a mutually convenient early date.
Question: You said that global issues like climate change and terrorism were discussed? Can you give us more details on the terrorism front and what exactly was discussed?

Official Spokesperson: I do not think I said that it was discussed. What I said was and I would repeat that both sides agreed that it was useful and important for us to not only maintain but deepen our coordination, our exchange of views, bilaterally and at international fora on international issues of mutual interest. So, that was flagged.

Question: Of the 45 minutes, how much time was spent on discussing regional matters? Did Pakistan figure?

Official Spokesperson: I have already mentioned that the focus of discussions was on bilateral issues. It was not only agreed but it was underlined that our cooperation, our coordination, our friendship is beneficial not just for India and China but conducive to peace, stability and prosperity in the region, in Asia and the world.

Question: Between now and the Mexico Summit on Climate, are any BASIC countries meetings scheduled in which China and India are important members?

Official Spokesperson: You would recall that we had a very good coordination at Copenhagen. That is something which is a matter of satisfaction for all BASIC countries. My sense is that this BASIC mechanism is going to be continued, that both sides or all sides, or the BASIC members would remain in touch before, during and after the Mexico event. But specifically when the next round of BASIC countries would be held, I would need to check on that and come back to you.
284.  Condolence message of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Chinese President Hu Jintao at the loss of lives in an earthquake in China.

New Delhi, April 15, 2010.

I have learnt with deep sorrow of the devastation wrought in Qinghai province by a severe earthquake yesterday. Your Government has reacted with commendable speed in bringing medical and other assistance to the quake-afflicted people in the disaster zone.

The people and Government of India join the people of China in mourning the loss of so many lives, and the untold damage done to property and infrastructure.

As your Government rallies to the assistance of the injured and displaced, I want to assure you, Excellency, that the people of India share the grief of the people of China. We stand ready to render any assistance that you and your Government may require of us.

Please accept my sincere condolences, and the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

285. Questions relevant to China answered by Foreign Secretary at the Media Briefing on Prime Ministers visit to Bhutan for the SAARC Summit.

New Delhi, April 21, 2010.

Question: Has China admitted that they are going ahead with the dam on the Brahmaputra? Earlier they had said, no, run of the river, this and that.

Foreign Secretary: Let me clarify that. Again, when I briefed some of you after EAM’s discussions in Beijing, I had mentioned that the Chinese side spoke about the fact that there is a run of the river project that they are doing for generation of hydroelectricity in the upper reaches of the Yarlung Zangbo, on the Brahmaputra river, in the Tibet Autonomous Region. What they said to us was that this is not a project that would divert water in any way, in other words affect downstream flow of water. This was said to us in the context of the discussions that the External Affairs Minister had with his counterpart the Chinese Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi. As you know, we have an expert level mechanism with China to discuss hydrological data and flood control data in the Brahmaputra and Sutlej rivers. The fourth meeting of the expert level mechanism will take place in a few days from now in New Delhi.

Question: So, they are not building dams. It is just run of the river.

Foreign Secretary: A run of the river project involves certain work on the river but it is not a storage dam for irrigation purposes. That is what they said.

Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on the visit of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil to China.

New Delhi, May 25, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. As you are aware, Hon'ble Rashtrapati, President of India, would be leaving on a State visit to China tomorrow. Foreign Secretary, Smt. Nirupama Rao, will be briefing you on the visit. Let me also introduce the colleagues who have joined Foreign Secretary. To Foreign Secretary's right is Mr. Gautam Bambawale, the Joint Secretary looking after East Asia in the Ministry of External Affairs. To my left is Mrs. Archana Datta, OSD (PR) in President's Secretariat.

Foreign Secretary would be making an opening statement and thereafter would be happy to take a few questions. Ma'am, may I invite you to make your opening statement?

Foreign Secretary (Smt. Nirupama Rao): Good Afternoon,

I am happy to be here to brief you on Rashtrapati's upcoming State visit to the People's Republic of China from 26th to 31st May, at the invitation of H.E. President Hu Jintao. Rashtrapati will be accompanied by Minister of Food Processing Industries Shri Subodh Kant Sahay, Members of Parliament Smt. Jayanti Natarajan, Shri Ramdas Agarwal and Dr. Raghuvansh Prasad Singh and senior officials including Foreign Secretary and Secretary to President, besides a business delegation.

2. This visit is the first by an Indian Head of State to China in a decade, the last one being in 2000 by the then President Shri K.R. Narayanan. From the Chinese side, President Hu Jintao paid a State visit to India in November 2006.

3. India China relations are characterized by regular high-level exchanges, which are proposed to be maintained and even enhanced. In the preceding months our Prime Minister met with President Hu Jintao at Yeketerinburg in June last year and again at Brasilia in April this year. He had very good exchange of views with Premier Wen Jiabao, on the sidelines of the East Asia Summit in Hua Hin (Thailand) in October last year and during the 15 Summit of the Conference of Parties on Climate Change at Copenhagen in December 2009

4. I would like to note that developing friendly cooperation with China, has been one of the priorities of our foreign policy and we are pleased that our relations are becoming truly multifaceted. A significant landmark in the development of this relationship was the establishment of Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for peace and prosperity in 2005 during Premier Wen Jiabao's visit to India.

5. The visit of our President assumes added importance, as it is taking place during the 60th anniversary year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China. It also signals our unequivocal commitment to deepen and expand our Strategic and Cooperative Partnership, with China.

6. In Beijing on the first leg of her visit, our President will have extensive talks with President Hu Jintao who will also be hosting a State Banquet in her honour. She will meet with other senior most leaders of China, including the Chairman of the National People's Congress Wu Bangguo, Premier Wen Jiabao and Chairman of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Jia Qinglin.

7. Rashtrapati will visit the historic city of Luoyang in central China's Henan Province on 29th May. The city has special association with India, as the first two Indian Buddhist monks to China lived and worked in the famous White Horse Monastery there under imperial patronage in the first century A.D. The President will inaugurate an Indian-style Buddhist shrine which has been built within the precincts of the Monastery with the assistance of the Government of India to commemorate these historical connections between our two countries. She will dedicate it as a gift from the people of India to the people of China.

8. Shanghai will be the last leg of the President's visit. She will visit the World Expo, which was opened to the public earlier this month. India has built its own dedicated pavilion and President will be visiting the pavilion at the World Expo. She will address a Business Meeting to be attended by captains of industry in both countries. I may also mention that a sizeable business delegation is accompanying the President on her visit.
9. Naturally, the President will interact with the growing Indian Community in China. This interaction will be in Shanghai, which has a significant concentration of Indians. Our President will also unveil a statue of Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore in a main avenue in Shanghai.

10. As I mentioned, the President’s visit coincides with the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries. We are celebrating this with a high-quality Festival of India in China and a Festival of China in India. The two Festivals are currently under way, and have received warm and enthusiastic response in both countries.

11. We are confident that Rashtrapati’s visit will be instrumental in re-affirming and enhancing the long-standing ties of friendship between our two nations and our two peoples.

Thank you. I will be happy to take your questions now.

Question: Madam, are there any agreements or documents to be signed between the two countries during the visit?

Foreign Secretary: I will not give you the details now. I think you should wait till the meetings are over and we will be able to communicate the final agreements to you. Certainly, there are some agreements on the anvil. They are under discussion and in the process of being finalized.

Question: Madam, Nalanda International University is a major thing that is to be created between East-Asia Summit partners. China is also one of the donors. Has the Nalanda Mentor Group submitted its final report? Has China has assured of any contribution in this international university?

Foreign Secretary: It is true that China has also participated in the meetings of the Nalanda Mentor Group. Prof. Wang Bangwei from Peking University has been contributing to the discussions in this Group. The report is ready. As you know, the Nalanda University Bill has to be presented in Parliament. Thereafter, we will be able to announce the founding of the University and the starting of its functioning. So, this is still a work in progress. Let me also tell you that this is not strictly an India-China bilateral matter. It is something that is flowing out of the discussions at the East-Asia Summit.
Question: Madam, Indo-China relations have seen highs and lows. It is very confusing as to what exactly is the status of our relationship at the moment. After Copenhagen there was supposed to be this warmth and then there were all kinds of bickering among the Ministers. Please tell us a little more about what the President's visit is going to achieve.

Foreign Secretary: I must start by saying that I do not exactly subscribe to the point of view that you just expressed. I think there is clarity about this relationship, about the outlook that we have on this relationship, the perspective, the policy that we adopt regarding the improvement and enhancement of relations with China. Let me say it is a two-way street. There is dialogue, there is discussion, there is constant exchange of views between the two countries, the two Governments at the highest level - I referred to that in my opening statement - and also between officials, between various Ministries of the Governments, between the think-tanks and the cultural organizations. The building of the Indian style Buddhist temple at Louyang is another manifestation of this. So, what you have seen in the last decade, decade and a half is the evolution and the development of a multifaceted relationship between India and China.

Look at the trade between the two countries, the way in which it has mushroomed. It is true that it is not balanced exactly because there is an adverse trade balance that India has vis-à-vis China, and obviously this needs to be addressed through concerted efforts particularly by the Chinese side, let me say. But the fact is that of the manifestation of such strong commercial and economic relationship between the two countries.

Question: What are the bilateral trade figures?

Foreign Secretary: It was about 43 billion dollars both ways last year. The year before that the volume was larger. It was about 51 billion US dollars. The drop in figures is basically accounted for by the global recession which impacted trade also between India and China last year.

I was referring to the fact that relations have mushroomed in so many areas. A lot of people ask me about the issue of stapled visas, or the issue of Chinese projects in Pakistan-Occupied Kashmir, or the issue of the ‘difficulties’ faced by Chinese telecom companies. I know that these questions are coming and I am going to put this in perspective.

Question: Including Arunachal Pradesh?

Foreign Secretary: I am not going to refer to that at the moment. But I am referring to these day-to-day issues that seem to crop up. The first point I want to say is that these issues are the subject of continuing discussion between India and China. Obviously we want to resolve them satisfactorily in a manner that safeguards our legitimate concerns on all these issues. That is a second point.

The third point I would like to make is that you must also understand that the India-China relationship is not predicated on one or two issues alone. My honest advice is, do not predicate this relationship on the basis of one or two issues alone. Just because we do not see a solution on some issues does not mean that we judge the relationship on the basis of these issues alone. That is another point I would like to make. I think, and I honestly feel, we must take a wider view of this relationship between India and China, I have said this before, a relationship between two large neighbours, a relationship between two of the largest developing countries, a relationship between two emerging global powers. So, please see the relationship in that context. Also when you look at our Rashtrapati Ji’s visit to China, see it in that context. I believe that this visit will have a very positive impact across the length and breadth of the relationship.

Question: Madam, a Minister in the Government appears to be lobbying for a specific Chinese company also ends up painting, possibly inadvertently, the Indian Government as paranoid as far as Chinese companies are concerned. Does that have diplomatic fallout on India-China relations? Has it had?

Foreign Secretary: I am not going to get into discussion on that issue. All those matters have been clarified. No, it has not had an impact as far as the issue before us is concerned - the India-China relationship. Most importantly, we are talking now of our President’s visit to China.

Question: When is the next meeting of the Special Representatives of the Prime Ministers scheduled?
Foreign Secretary: We do not have dates as yet. This is being discussed through diplomatic channels. We will be able to give you an answer to that in due course.

Question: Would you say that this would be a good occasion for India to discuss with China about its role in containing terror in the region because it is after all a P5 country and there are a host of resolutions and a lot of responsibility devolves upon China to ensure that they were adhered to. But in this region mostly we see other P5 countries more active than China. So, would the President take this up with her Chinese counterpart with specific reference to what is happening in Pakistan vis-à-vis us?

Foreign Secretary: There will be discussion on the bilateral issues that concern the relationship. There will be references to the regional situation and the larger context of global issues that concern both countries. On the subject of terror, again this is a subject of ongoing discussion with China. It is not that we are just raising it now or going to raise it tomorrow. We have discussed this for quite some time between the two sides. There are mechanisms between the two countries also on counter-terrorism matters. We have articulated our concerns very clearly to the Chinese on these issues. I believe that they are fully aware of where we stand on terrorism in our region and the need for the international community to be clear and aware about the dangers that we face on account of terrorism directed against us and the need for neighbours like China also to be sensitive to our concerns.

Question: There have been several reports about China supplying or maybe financing the construction of two new nuclear reactors in Pakistan. What is the stance of the Indian Government on this? Are you going to bring this up somewhere in the international fora?

Foreign Secretary: We are alert to these reports and we are fully aware of what has been announced in regard to the supply of nuclear power reactors by China to Pakistan. Now, these reports state that the cooperation is ostensibly for peaceful use and is under IAEA safeguards. Reports have also mentioned the issue in the context of what the Nuclear Suppliers Group Guidelines are on this. This is obviously a matter that has to be discussed within the Nuclear Suppliers Group. We will have to see what the outcome of that is.
Question: Madam, to carry on from the earlier question, just at this time when you are going there are reports of a nuclear deal between Pakistan and China. During your visit there are you going to take this up? Also, as you know, Hillary Clinton would be there.

Foreign Secretary: She is there already.

Question: Yes. The US State Department Spokesman has also been very ambivalent about this. He has not criticized this at all despite Pakistan being a proliferator. Is this issue going to be taken up by the Indian Government?

Foreign Secretary: I have already expressed in my answer to your colleague just now as to where this matter stands at the moment. Obviously, this is a matter that is under examination. It has to be studied properly. The results of that examination will really establish what this deal is about and whether the NSG Guidelines have been fully applied in this case. So, we will await the result of that examination.

Question: Just a follow-up to that question on Chinese nuclear supplies to Pakistan. Are you really going to take this up at the bilateral level? Secondly, about the stapled visas there has been no finality. The Foreign Minister has taken this up. After completion of 60 years of diplomatic relations between the two countries, if they continue to issue stapled visas to Indian citizens it questions the very sovereignty.

Foreign Secretary: We are very clear that there cannot be discrimination against any of our nationals on grounds of ethnicity or domicile. That position is very well-known to the Chinese. At the same time, I have told you that this is an issue under discussion, we hope we can resolve it, and our legitimate concerns must be safeguarded. That is our clear position and the Chinese Government - our interlocutors on the Chinese side know that very well. Having said that I also mentioned in my earlier statements that let us not predicate this relationship on the basis of one or two issues alone. There is a larger context involved here.

Question: But you are not committing to taking up the ...

Foreign Secretary: All issues of concern to us, obviously would figure in the discussions. On the issue of the nuclear proliferation in our neighbourhood our views are very well-known and our Chinese interlocutors are fully aware of our position.

Question: Do you plan to take up the issue of Chinese plans to dam the Brahmaputra River during the visit and if so, in what terms?

Foreign Secretary: The issue of the usage of the waters of the Brahmaputra has figured consistently in media reports. The issue is also a matter of discussion between India and China. We have the mechanism at the level of experts to look at some water-related issues between India and China - basically emergency flood management, hydrological data on the Brahmaputra and Sutlej, which is of use to us in the context of downstream use. That is what we discuss at the expert level. As far as the damming of the waters of the Brahmaputra is concerned, every time we have taken it up with the Chinese they have consistently denied that they are engaged in activity that would involve diversion - and I emphasise the word diversion - of the waters of the Brahmaputra and of course the resultant impact that it would have on downstream areas. This is the position as it stands. The reports continue to surface from time to time. Most recently we took it up when our External Affairs Minister was in China in April this year. The Chinese referred to the Zangmu project on the Brahmaputra and they said this is again not a project designed to divert waters; it was designed to generate hydro-electricity and basically, in their words, a run-of-the-river project. That is where the matter stands. Obviously we are alert to this and we monitor the situation carefully, and would take whatever steps necessary as the situation evolves.

Question: My question was, are you planning to take it up during this visit?

Foreign Secretary: We have taken it up consistently at every occasion. But let me say that please see the visit of the President in the larger context. This is not about one or two or three issues. Obviously they would be relevant to the discussion. But please see it in the larger context of two large Asian countries engaged in a visible improvement of their relations.
Question: With respect, Madam, you did not answer my question.

Official Spokesperson: Your question has been answered Sir, thank you.

Question: Madam, this is on a slightly different note. Pakistan Supreme Court in the last couple of ours has dismissed the Pakistani Government’s appeal against the release of Hafiz Saeed from house arrest saying that evidence against him is all speculative and there is not just enough evidence against him. What is your reaction to that?

Foreign Secretary: There is a sense of disappointment. I am sure everybody in this country would share that sense of disappointment at this latest development because we regard Hafiz Saeed, as you know, as one of the masterminds of the Mumbai terror attack and he has openly urged Jihad against India. We are all aware of that. The LeT and the JuD that he heads, have been designated as terror organizations by the UN Security Council, and enough evidence has also been given by India to Pakistan on the role and activities of Hafiz Saeed. Pakistan has assured us that it will not allow its soil to be used for terror activities against India. We hope, therefore, that Pakistan will be sensitive to our concerns and would take meaningful action against this individual.

Question: What is China’s position on India’s claim for a seat in the United Nations Security Council? Has there been any evolution in the Chinese position? Will this issue be taken up since this is the first visit by an Indian President in the last ten years and this is also the 60th year of establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries? Are we expecting a positive response from China on this?

Foreign Secretary: The Chinese position is that they have taken note of and they understand our legitimate aspirations for better representation and a better role in the affairs of the United Nations including in the UN Security Council. That is a position that they have expressed. Most recently that was expressed during the visit of our External Affairs Minister when he met Premier Wen Jiabao in Beijing during that visit. As I said, there would be opportunities to refer to that also in the forthcoming discussions. Our effort will be to ensure that there is an evolution even further forward of the Chinese position on this matter. I am not just, as I said, predicking it to this visit. But it will be our future effort to ensure that.

Question: Madam, what is the status of security clearance of Chinese telecom companies?

Foreign Secretary: Let me first of all say that there is no intention to discriminate against any specific country in this regard. Of course, when it comes to certain sectors for foreign investment there are legitimate security concerns that any country needs to safeguard before permitting such investment. Our effort is to tackle this issue, to deal with it in a predictable, in a transparent and non-discriminatory manner. And that is exactly what we are doing at the moment. I would also like to add that we attach importance to mutually beneficial cooperation with China in the telecom sector.

Question: I have a little different question. The Canadian Embassy (high commission) has refused visa to two police officer - ADG (Crime) Rajan Gupta and SSP Patiala, R.S. Hatta on the pretext that they were involved in terrorist related activities. What is the Indian Government thinking about it? (Original question was asked in Hindi)

Question: If I may add to this, this is not the first time, Madam, this has happened. This has happened with serving officers of the Indian Government earlier as well.

Foreign Secretary: I will reply in English because the second question is in English.

The matter, when it was brought to the attention of the Ministry of External Affairs, was taken up immediately and appropriately with the Canadian High Commission and, of course, the Canadian Government. We take this matter very seriously. That is what I wanted to say. Of course, the Canadian Foreign Minister has, in a public statement, stated that Canada has the highest regard for India's democratic institutions and processes, and also respect for India's armed forces and related institutions. But let me once again say that we did take up the matter, we expressed our serious concern, and we continue to take this matter very seriously.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.
287. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao during the visit of President to China.

Beijing, May 27, 2010.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Good evening and thank you for your patience. Once again my apologies for keeping you waiting.

We are here to brief you about the meetings that our President had with the Chinese leadership, beginning this afternoon with Premier Wen Jiabao, followed by Chairman of the National People's Congress Wu Bangguo, and thereafter the Summit meeting with the Chinese President Hu Jintao. That meeting was preceded, as you know, by the Ceremonial Welcome held in the Great Hall of the People. Because the weather was inclement today outside, we had the Ceremonial Welcome inside the Great Hall of the People.

All these meetings were very cordial and extremely positive. In all the discussions that were held, the context in which the visit was taking place was reiterated - not only the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China but also the consolidation of the strategic and cooperative partnership for peace and prosperity between the two countries. From both sides there was a reiteration also of the fact that relations between India and China are a diplomatic priority for both Governments. The need for these relations to grow and expand, that there is space enough for India and China to grow and expand was also emphasised.

It is interesting also to note that during these discussions one of the points that was articulated was that the consolidation of the strategic partnership for peace and prosperity was also necessary because it was through such a consolidation that we could ensure that a single issue or a single episode cannot damage or cause problems for the relationship; and this could be done through a deepening of mutual trust through high-level exchanges between the two countries at the level of the top political leadership as well as non-governmental exchanges particularly between the youth of the two countries.

Naturally, in any dialogue between India and China today the importance and the salience of the economic and trade relationship between the two countries always finds a prominent place. From both sides it was emphasised that this relationship should continue to be strengthened, that we should ensure not only an increase in the volume of trade but also ensure the diversification of this trade, and also address the adverse trade balance that affects India.

Our President mentioned to the Chinese leadership, she emphasized, that there was need to address this adverse balance of trade not only through a diversification of the trade basket but especially through the import of more goods from India, particularly in pharmaceuticals, in engineering goods, in agricultural products, in IT and IT-enabled services. These were a few of the items that were mentioned. From both sides there was the desire expressed that there should be an intensification of contacts in this field, more visits of trade and business delegations, more business investment in both countries, in short a very concerted focus on this aspect of the relationship.

From both sides it was also emphasised in these talks that apart from the strengthening of the bilateral relationship and a consolidation of mutual trust, the two sides should also strengthen cooperation in the United Nations and other multilateral fora - within BRIC, within the trilateral India-Russia-China format, within the G20, all these multilateral fora - to deal with such issues as for instance the financial crisis, on the issue of climate change - the cooperation at the Copenhagen Summit found a very prominent mention - and also the need to continue and also to develop on such cooperation in the run-up to the next Conference of Parties at Cancun in Mexico.

On the issue of UN Security Council reform, what the Chinese leadership told us was that they understood India's aspirations and its desire, they supported this desire to ensure a more prominent role for India in the United Nations, particularly in the Security Council. The Chinese said that they believed that representation of developing countries should be increased in the Security Council. As I said, they emphasised that they understood India's position, they supported our desire to play a greater role in the United Nations including and especially in the Security Council. And, this is important, they said that the two Governments should strengthen cooperation on Security Council matters, which would include the reform of the Security Council.
Question: Madam, you used the words the reform of the United Nations.

Foreign Secretary: Let me repeat it. What they said was they supported the idea that there should be greater representation of developing countries in the Security Council. That was the first point. The second point is that they understood our desire and they supported our desire to play a greater role in the Security Council. Thirdly, that India and China should stay in close touch and strengthen their cooperation on Security Council matters with specific emphasis on reform of the Security Council.

Question: Kindly explain this to me, preferably in Hindi.

Foreign Secretary: I shall try.

Question: Has the Chinese Government expressed their explicit support to the Indian desire for a seat on the UN Security Council or have been guarded in diplomatic language that 'yes, ok, we are with you'.

Foreign Secretary: my assessment is that they did not use guarded or diplomatic language in this context. They said they understood the need for reforms that are desired in the UN and for India’s desire………………...

Question: Is reform a short cut for a seat for us?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, reform means expansion of the Security Council.

Question: And also, did President specifically raise this point?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, she did.

Question: Do you see this as a big breakthrough because China has always been seen as trying to confine us to South Asia? So, today is a big step forward.

Foreign Secretary: If you relate it to the context in which today’s visit took place, the very positive tenor and tone with which the discussions were held and the warmth of the welcome that is accorded to the President, and you could see it in the chemistry between the leadership at these meetings, I think it is a very positive statement from the Chinese side. I think what it would suggest, I think you have to interpret it, is that they are positive about engaging with India on this issue, that they are listening very carefully to what we are saying, that there is increasing awareness of the legitimacy of India's position, that they support our aspirations for a greater role in the United Nations. They want to stay in touch with us to discuss this, to intensify their discussions on this because as you know the entire issue of the reform of the UN Security Council, the expansion, is receiving a lot of attention now within the United Nations. Over the last few months there have been a number of evolving steps that are being taken. So, this is a process in which I think the ideas are being generated on what kind of expansion there should be, how much in the permanent category, how much in the nonpermanent category. So, there are a lot of ideas now that are finding expression. So, this is obviously a very opportune moment for countries like India and China to really establish perfect communication on this issue. And that is the signal that we have got today.

Question: Is it fair to say that they want India to engage with them in the manner in which they want the Security Council to be, the way they want the UNSC to be expanded?

Foreign Secretary: Just as we have had this exchange, this cooperation for instance on climate change, which you know has evolved over the last few months, is really making a difference when it comes to strengthening the voice of the developing countries. I think one can see this in a similar way, this new dialogue and new communication on this issue. There is one more issue I wanted to mention. As you know, India is a candidate for a nonpermanent seat in the UN Security Council for 2011-12. So, today during the discussions the Chinese President Mr. Hu Jintao announced China's support for India's candidature at this nonpermanent seat election that is going to take place for 2011-12. That is also I think a very positive development.

Question: Whom did she raise this with? The Premier or the President?

Foreign Secretary: She raised the issue of UN Security Council reform with both the Premier and President Hu Jintao.

Question: Does it in any way dilute their support for the permanent seat?
Foreign Secretary: No, it does not. These are two issues that should be seen different from each other.

Question: Was there any reference to the American idea of India’s presence in the Security Council?

Foreign Secretary: No, there was no reference to the American idea. We were not there to discuss the American idea on this. We were talking bilaterally between India and China.

As you know, there were three agreements, MoUs signed this afternoon after the Summit meeting. One was for streamlining visa applications and visa formalities for airline staff of both countries. This will enable airlines staff of India and China to enjoy visa free entry and exit for both countries. Secondly, there was an MoU between the Ministry of Personnel, Public Grievances and Pensions of our Government. The names of the agreements will be given to you. There was an agreement between our Ministry of Personnel and their Ministry of Human Resources and Social Security on cooperation in the field of civil service personnel management and public administration. So, this one will enable cooperation in human resource development in the civil services and public sector, exchange of visits and organising of lectures, study tours and cooperation between training institutions of the two sides.

Thirdly, there was an MoU on sports cooperation between the Ministry of Youth Affairs and Sports of our Government. The General Administration of Sports of the People’s Republic of China. This will enable the exchange of expertise in the field of physical education and sports, the exchange of sports persons, trainers, and the organisation of workshops, and also cooperation in the field of anti-doping.

Question: But these are very light-weight kind of agreements.

Foreign Secretary: They are agreements nonetheless. When you talk of cooperation in human resource development, when you talk of cooperation in the field of sports, very relevant I think in this time and age. The visa-free exemption for airlines staff is I think very relevant also when we are talking of better and easier connectivity between the two countries, more flights, more airlines operating. So, in a sense you are institutionalising these processes. I think I would say that you are reaching a process of every day the levels of maturity, the levels of expansion of the dialogue ensuring multifaceted cooperation, these are not just empty words. These are substantive issues in the relationship today.

During the discussions held this afternoon, President and the Chinese leadership had also referred to the steady progress, the dialogue between the two countries on the resolution of the boundary question between India and China, and the fact that both sides lay great importance on the ensuring of peace and tranquility in the border areas pending a boundary settlement. So, there was a reiteration of that approach by both sides during the discussions.

They also spoke, as I said earlier, the expansion of ties in education and culture. Education has become one of the big areas in the relationship. The number of students who come from India to study in China and also vice versa - there are students from China who study in India. So, education has also become an area in which we feel that there is scope for strengthening of ties.

I also wanted to mention that when the President spoke about the relationship between India and China, she spoke about the fact that these relations stretch back over millennia. She mentioned the names of the Buddhist monks who had come from India to China to spread the word of Buddhism. She mentioned the names of Bodhidharma, Kashyapa Matanga, Dharmaratna, Kumarajiva, all these. Chinese leaders listening to her mention that these are household names in China and that people of China remember the contribution of these Indians to better understanding between the two countries.

She also mentioned that in the modern era, Dr. Dwarkanath Kotnis and Gurudev Tagore, through their work in China had deepened friendship and understanding between the two countries. I wanted to mention in this context that President felt during her visit that it would be a good gesture to invite the sister of Dr. Kotnis who lives in Mumbai, Dr. Vatsala Kotnis, to come to China during her visit. Dr. Vatsala Kotnis has arrived in Beijing today and she will be present at the function tomorrow being organised by the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries. Dr. Kotnis played a great role in cementing friendship between India and China.

Question: You have said that she has arrived in Delhi.

Foreign Secretary: She is going to be at the function being organised tomorrow by the Chinese People’s Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries, and our Ambassador in Beijing Hotel to which all of you are invited.

Question: I need a small favour. There are two questions on the UN Security Council—one permanent seat and other non-permanent seat for which election has to take place and Chinese agreed to support. Second question is in favour of reform on UNSC. Please explain both these things in Hindi. We need a sound bite for our TV live.

Foreign Secretary: As I told you, in today's talks they explained their position regarding UN reforms and expansion and said they are desirous of the role of the developing countries and their cooperation. Regarding India's aspirations for permanent membership of the Security Council, the Chinese has told us that they understand our aspirations, that India should play much bigger and representative role in the Security Council—to play a bigger and a more representative role as a member of the Security Council, China understands that position of India and supports that position of India, and would like to intensify its discussions with China on this issue. This is what I have said.

Question: and about non-permanent sea?

Foreign Secretary: For the non-permanent seat 2011-12, we are contesting the election. President Hu Jintao has told our President that China supports our candidature for non-permanent sea. Both these issues are separate.

Question: But there are a lot of apprehensions to work together. You know the history of our relationship with China. There is Japan, there are other permanent members.

Foreign Secretary: But we are talking of the Indian candidature. We are not talking of what the other countries think. We are talking of dealing with India. As I said, the desire that was so clearly expressed in today's meetings was that this is a really priority relationship for both countries, from the Chinese side and from the Indian side, and it is absolutely crucial that you meet more often, you intensify your dialogue, you expand your cooperation, not just in bilateral areas but on regional issues. In this context we said we must strengthen. This is from the Chinese side, President Hu Jintao said that we must strengthen the strategic dialogue between India and China. We must strengthen Foreign Office consultations, we should strengthen our cooperation on multilateral issues, we should strengthen our cooperation on counter-terrorism. All these things they said.

Question: Coming back to the UN reform, could you say that there is any change in the Chinese position because this phrasing has been sort of constant since 2005. China understands ...

Foreign Secretary: I do not think it has been constant before 2005. If you look at the 2008 document when our Prime Minister visited here, there is a reference to that which went far beyond what they have said before. They are building on that position now. I think this dialogue that they are now suggesting between the two sides is obviously aimed at how to further build on that position, how to enhance the levels of that understanding.

Question: Perhaps it would be better to say that the sense of priority on the issue position for the first time.

Foreign Secretary: You are saying it better than I do.

Question: Madam, there is one question about the difference between peace and tranquility. Both these words are used. They look the same. But they have been used with meaning. What exactly is that?

Foreign Secretary: We have always used these words, peace and tranquility, together. There should be peace and there should be tranquility. Tranquility refers to tranquil conditions along the border to ensure that the situation remains stable, that there is no disturbance of the situation; that if there are issues that arise, the two sides should meet and sort these out peacefully. I think peace and tranquility is something that we have always used when we referred to the situation.

Question: I still wanted to …

Foreign Secretary: I think we could discuss that outside the press conference if you want to.

Question: Did our President make any mention about the disturbances at the border?

Foreign Secretary: Let me put it this way. From both sides there was a desire that was very clearly stated that we have to seek a settlement of the boundary question through continued negotiations in the mechanism of the Special Representatives. That has been working well because they have agreed on Guiding Principles and Political Parameters for the framework of a settlement. Now we are talking of a framework. That is one part of the process. Pending a boundary settlement, you have to look at the long border between the two countries and the need to ensure that there is peace and tranquility, that situations are not disturbed in any way. Both sides should make continued efforts to ensure this.

I also wanted to add that President Hu Jintao mentioned that the Chinese Government is going to support and going to contribute to the establishment of a gallery in Rabindra Bharati in Kolkata on Tagore. On setting up a gallery on Tagore in China, we are going to help set that up as part of the 60th anniversary celebrations and also to coincide with the 150th birth anniversary of Rabindranath Tagore.

Thank you.

Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on President’s meetings in China.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): I will just brief you on the meetings held today, give you a general picture of the discussions.

This afternoon the President met Mr. Jia Qinglin, the Chairman of the Chinese People’s Political Consultative Conference. It was a meeting held in the Great Hall of the People. It was a good meeting. Both sides appraised the state of relations between India and China very positively, particularly because of the context, as I mentioned yesterday also in my briefing, that this visit takes place in the 60th anniversary year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China.

Mr. Jia Qinglin referred to the fact that China-India relations have maintained 'sound momentum and steady growth'. Those were the very words that he used. Interestingly, he not just referred to cooperation between the two countries but also coordination, coordination especially in multilateral fora, their cooperation on issues such as climate change and in the United Nations, he referred to the relationship as 'a mature and healthy one'. Again I am quoting from what he said. He said, 'cooperation serves both countries and confrontation obviously would harm both countries'. This was his view. He said that they were partners and not rivals, and their relationship has a strategic and global significance.

He, of course, said that with the combined population of the two countries being 2.5 billion, the level of people-to-people contacts remains rather low and the potential of that has not been fully realized, and the two Governments should focus on that aspect of the relationship in future, it should be strengthened across all sections of society, that is what he said, and particularly to look at the exchanges between young people of the two countries.

The President agreed with these sentiments and she referred to the relationship between the two countries as a civilizational relationship. She referred to the millennial contacts, the Buddhist monks from India who had come to China, brought the Buddhist scriptures, translated them into Chinese, lived here and spread the message of peace from India so many thousands of years ago. She also talked about the modern period of the relationship. References were made to Rabindranath Tagore and Dr. Kotnis, the development of contacts in trade between the two countries. Both our President and Mr. Jia Qinglin referred to the need to strengthen not only political and economic relations but also defence relations, cultural and educational relations.

Our President referred to the trade deficit between India and China and the need to have better access to the Chinese market for Indian goods and products. They also talked about the huge potential that exists for cooperation in agriculture and science and technology. I have already mentioned education. That, of course, also was singled out and in this context.

Mr. Jia Qinglin was hopeful that looking at the current trends in trade between the two countries, particularly in the first few months of this year, he was quite optimistic that the trade target that the two countries have set for themselves, 60 billion US dollars by 2010, could be realized. In other words, they felt that there was across the political spectrum - and President also mentioned this that across the political spectrum in India - there is the feeling that India and China should work together and expand their relations. Mr. Jia Qinglin said that the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference would like to expand exchanges with India, and that he would like to work with Indian friends to do so.

Our President then met Vice-President Xi Jinping here just before the function that you all attended to mark the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations jointly organized by the Embassy of India in Beijing and the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries (CPAFFC). Mr. Xi Jinping was accompanied by a host of other Chinese dignitaries including Mr. Jiang Zhenghua who is the Chairperson of the China-India Friendship Association. Among those present were Ministerial representatives from the Ministry of Sports, etc. You know the names mentioned at the outset when Mr. Chen Haosu of the CPAFFC introduced the Chinese dignitaries and the Indian members of President's Delegation. The Deputy Chief of General Staff of the People's Liberation Army Gen. Ma Xiaotian was also present. As you know, Gen. Ma leads the Chinese side at the Annual Defence Dialogue with our Defence Secretary. So, he is well-known to us in that context. Vice-President Xi Jinping referred to India and China as neighbours linked by mountains and waters. In fact, this was the phrase that President Hu Jintao also used yesterday. So, this phrase came up twice in the conversations held over the last two days.

Our President also spoke of achieving greater heights in the relationship in her conversation with Vice-President Xi Jinping and about how cooperation can take us far. In fact, she recalled what Premier Wen Jiabao had said yesterday about our two countries having had 99.9 per cent of the time very good relations in the past. And she said why do we not look at the future where our relations are hundred per cent good and marked by friendly cooperation? Vice President Xi Jinping agreed with that and he said that the 60th anniversary could be seen as a new starting point - these were the words he used - to further develop and uplift relations between the two countries. He also stressed the importance of people-to-people contacts.

Our President again referred to the ambassadors of peace of yore, the people who had come from India to China like Bodhidharma, Kumarajiva, and also ambassadors from China - in a sense they were all ambassadors - like Xuan Zang and Fa Xian, and also in modern times, Gurudev Tagore and Dr. Kotnis. As you know, the younger sister of Dr. Kotnis, Dr. Vatsala Kotnis, accompanied by her niece Dr. Hattangadi are both here at the invitation of our President to be here during her visit and to participate in this evening's function. Dr. Vatsala Kotnis will also visit Dalian where the widow of Dr. Kotnis, Madame Guo Qinglan, who is over 90 years old, is currently staying. She is not in good health. So, she was not able to make the journey for Beijing. But Dr. Vatsala Kotnis will go to Dalian to meet her.

As you know, Vice-President Xi Jinping represents a new generation of leadership in China. Our President stressed the importance of looking to the future of this relationship, the role that the younger generations of India and China could play to build and cement the ties of friendship between the two countries. She conveyed once again to Vice-President Xi Jinping that we look forward to his visit to India at an early date, at a mutually convenient date. As you know, Vice-President Xi Jinping has been invited by our Vice-President Mr. Ansari to visit India, if possible during this year because I think it will be very fitting if that visit took place during the 60th anniversary year. But we do not have dates for the visit as yet. These have to be decided through diplomatic channels.
289. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary on President's Meetings in Shanghai.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Good evening.

I am here to brief you with my colleagues. You know everybody here. On my far left is Shrimati Riva Ganguly Das our Consul General in Shanghai. You know our Ambassador to China Dr. Jaishankar. Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia) is on my right.

This morning many of you were there at the Expo 2010 venue when Rashtrapatiji visited the Expo. She went to the India pavilion and to the China pavilion. Subsequently she spoke to the media also. So, I would not go into those details. This afternoon she met the Party Secretary of Shanghai Mr. Yu Zhengsheng. Mr. Yu Zhengsheng, as you know, is no stranger to India. He visited India in October of 2008 as part of an exchange programme conducted under the aegis of the Ministry of External Affairs and the International Department of the Communist Party of China. Apart from Delhi, on that trip he visited Bangalore and Mumbai. He also met the External Affairs Minister, the Chief Minister of Karnataka and the Maharashtra Governor, when he was there in India.

You may also be aware that Mr. Yu received the UPA Chairperson Shrimati Sonia Gandhi during her visit to Shanghai in October 2007, a day after he took over as Party Secretary of Shanghai. In fact, Shrimati Gandhi was the first foreign visitor that Mr. Yu Zhengsheng met after he became Party Secretary. During that meeting the UPA Chairperson had invited him to visit India. So, prior to his visit in October of 2008, in August that year Mr. Yu had also met Shrimati Gandhi during her visit to Beijing for the Olympics. This is just the background information. I will just come to the meeting.

Our President had a very good meeting with Party Secretary Yu. He was particularly appreciative of the fact that our President had visited Shanghai, a visit that coincides with the Expo here. He thanked her for her visit to the Expo this morning. He particularly singled out the India pavilion as being extremely popular with the Chinese people. These were his words, ‘it has been widely applauded by the visitors to the Expo’. He mentioned that yesterday the Expo had 500,000 visitors. We have our own statistics of the people who have been visiting our pavilion and on one day in the last few weeks we recorded 37,000 visitors to our India pavilion in one day.

Question: I think it was 47,000.

Foreign Secretary: Well, it is a record number of people. What I am coming to is it almost amounts to one/tenth of the people who visit the Expo every day. That is just an index of the popularity of our pavilion.

Our President mentioned to Party Secretary Yu that she was deeply impressed by what she had seen at the Expo. When he spoke in such positive terms about our pavilion, she mentioned that the bamboo dome of the Pavilion represents the collaborative effort between Indian and Chinese architect. So, it is yet another example of fruitful cooperation between the two countries. She recalled his visit to India in 2008 and the positive outcomes of that visit. She mentioned to him that he, as a result of his knowledge and experience gathered during his visit to India, is particularly aware of the opportunities that exist for cooperation between our two countries, and the fact that after the advent of the strategic and cooperative partnership between India and China, the opportunities to work together have increased so much. In this context she mentioned our cooperation on climate change in multilateral fora and the opportunities for cultural and educational exchanges between the two countries.

Incidentally, the Shanghai region - the city and the greater Shanghai region, and Zhejiang and Jiangsu Provinces - accounts for a large proportion of the economic, trade and commercial ties between India and China. There are over a hundred Indian companies that operate in this region. In terms of banks alone, I think we have six Indian banks present here in Shanghai one of which, the State Bank of India, has a full-fledged operating office here in this city. In terms of trade volumes also we have about five billion dollars worth of trade being generated just from Shanghai region alone. So, the importance of this city as an economic and commercial hub not only in the Chinese context but also in terms of our trade cannot be denied.

Mr. Yu on his part recalled in very positive terms his interaction with our leaders during his visit to India in 2008. He said he was deeply impressed not only by the ancient civilization of India but also by the scientific and technological advancement of the Indian people, and also the fact that against the backdrop of the global financial crisis there has been a meeting of minds as it were between India and China on ways to cope with the crisis, and the ideas that have been generated from that discussion have been very relevant and very useful.

He said that he hoped that the scientific and technical cooperation, particularly between India and China would be taken to new heights. He mentioned such areas as steel, the automobile and automotive component industry, power generation as good areas for cooperation. In fact, again Shanghai equipment suppliers and contractors have been participating in the power sector contracts in India. He mentioned the importance that they attach to this cooperation.

Our President, taking this theme forward, spoke of how we have the 60 billion dollar target that the leadership of both countries have set for themselves for 2010, how we could work together to achieve this target. She spoke of her conversations with representatives of Indian business here, how they were satisfied with the support that they are receiving from the Chinese authorities, the good work that is being done particularly in the IT sector. Then she referred to the pharmaceuticals sector and the interest of our pharmaceutical companies in gaining greater access to the Chinese market. Then she recalled Premier Wen Jiabao’s assurance in this connection that the trade deficit between India and China would be addressed seriously by the Chinese side. The importance, as she stressed, was that we should balance this trade even as we seek to increase it. That point was emphasized by her to Party Secretary Yu.

She also referred to the fact that there are eleven Indian banks today in China, and there is no Chinese bank that operates in India. She flagged that issue, the fact that there are no Chinese banks in India as of now. In this context, responding to the points made by the President, Party Secretary Yu said that the achievement of trade balance as far as China’s external trade statistics are concerned is part of their long-term national strategy and a huge trade surplus as they have now is, in intrinsic sense of the word, not so good for the economy. So, they are conscious of this and they want to balance it. They want to encourage more Chinese companies to engage in outbound, that is foreign, investment abroad, and also to support and encourage more imports from foreign countries into China, in this context increase imports from India into China.
Party Secretary Yu also spoke very warmly about Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore and his visits to Shanghai in the 1920s, the friendship that he had built with Chinese intellectuals like Xu Zhimo and people involved at that time in this great awakening of Chinese national identity. This was an era, as you know as in India so also in China, when people were consolidating their efforts to resist foreign occupation and interference in their internal affairs. So, he said that there was great sympathy and support that Gurudev Tagore had expressed for the Chinese people at a very difficult time in their history and they appreciated this and they remember it very warmly. He felt that it was very very appropriate that President was going to unveil a bust of Gurudev Tagore at the Mao Ming Avenue in Shanghai, very close to where he had stayed when he came to Shanghai at the residence of the writer Xu Zhimo. You were there I think at the unveiling of the bust and you must have witnessed that function which was very beautiful and was witnessed also by a number of local residents of the city who were present at that time.

That is basically to give you an idea of today's meeting. Thank you.

Question: Was there any specific plan for reaching the 60 billion US dollar trade target?

Foreign Secretary: Not specifically discussed at this meeting but President has been interacting with a number of representatives of Indian business and industry. As you know, there is a business delegation that has accompanied her with representatives of ASSOCHAM, FICCI. The CII has a Resident Office in Shanghai. So, she has had the opportunity during her visit to talk to a number of representatives and corporate, industry executives who are here in China, and they have spoken about their experience about doing business with China. Tomorrow I hope many of you will be there at the business meeting and you will get a chance to hear more about this.

Question: Are there any difficulties which Indian businessmen expressed to the President?

Foreign Secretary: I think there is the issue of market access, as I mentioned, for instance in pharmaceuticals and also to diversify the trade basket. Obviously we would like more engineering goods from India entering the Chinese market. Companies like Thermax for instance who are leaders in environment-friendly technology, in green technology, obviously would like to do more. In that context many of them expressed the hope that cooperation between India and China within the BASIC framework on climate change could become a catalyst to promote cooperation in such areas.

Question: Was there any positive answer for Chinese banks in India?

Foreign Secretary: The issue was flagged. This was not just flagged today, it was flagged earlier also. The response from the Chinese side was one of interest. I think they will focus on this issue in the short-term. I have no doubt about that.

Question: I thought it was the Chinese leadership which raised first the issue of accessibility for Chinese banks.

Foreign Secretary: No, our President raised it.

Question: On the India pavilion at the Expo, given the business focus of Shanghai, it seemed incongruent in that there is very little business focus in the Indian pavilion unlike some of the other pavilions which we saw at the Expo. I was just curious as to given the diplomatic weight that China has given to the Expo, was there any one in any way being consulted on the content, on the message or it was something that was totally handed over by the ITPO?

Foreign Secretary: The ITPO led the effort. The idea was to define a theme, the cities of the future and the use of appropriate technologies to ensure a harmonious blend of local conditions with the larger universal themes of urban development. So, that was really the theme of the pavilion. I think the focus was on creating an ambiance and the structure and the content within the pavilion that would underline and underscore that theme. The fact that you are attracting so many Chinese visitors to the pavilion and they have an exposure to the message from India, the theme of unity in diversity, pluralism; the fact that this is a country of almost continental proportions very much like China, I think in China that is a very important message to be projecting in my view.
Question: Madam, was MEA also part of the process or was that completely handled by the ITPO?

Foreign Secretary: It is a consultative process but the theme was selected by the ITPO.

Question: Madam, you said that there are six Indian banks in Shanghai and there are 100 plus companies. The five billion dollars generated, is it by the banks or by the companies?

Foreign Secretary: No, no, it is in terms of trade volume.

Question: Do you think that the numbers that are being cited of people visiting the Indian pavilion at the Expo are slightly misleading because a number of them may also go there by chance and may not be interested in actually displayed there. I have spoken to several people and they were not actually very satisfied to see what they saw.

Foreign Secretary: Which people did you speak to? The Chinese people?

Question: Some Indians also.

Foreign Secretary: You are focusing on an international audience here, particularly the Chinese. Here also the Mr. Yu was mentioning to our President how he asked some Chinese visitors to the Expo yesterday when he went there. He said, “Why do you wait five hours to see a pavilion?” he was not referring to this country or that country's pavilion. The answer he got was that many Chinese people, do not get a chance to visit foreign countries, they do not get a chance to see what goes on in other parts of the world, and that was the reason why they wanted to wait and visit various pavilions, to satiate their curiosity about a place. Very much like what happens in India if you go to a big trade fair or a big exposition. The people who visit are ordinary citizens who see this as an opportunity to deepen their knowledge about the outside world.

Question: Madam, I have a specific question about the pricing of Chinese goods in Indian markets. Has this question been raised?

Foreign Secretary: No. It has not been raised.

Question: I am not referring to only the President's visit. Has this question been raised by any one of you earlier as to how they are able to sell Chinese goods so cheaply in India and that this is a sort of dumping and destroying the Indian market. Has this question ever been raised?

Foreign Secretary: There is an ongoing discussion and negotiation and contact and interaction between the Chinese and Indian sides on the entire issue of balancing the trade better, removing the adverse balance of trade. The proportion, let me tell you, of goods exported from China to India is not made up of a small consumer goods. That is what you see in the markets. The greater proportion of goods exported from China to India are basically power equipment, equipment for steel making, blast furnaces, there are huge commodities and products. Let me give you the figures of trade from Eastern China to India. Last year it was 15.07 billion US dollars, of which Shanghai generated 4.5 billion, Zhejiang 5.4 billion, and Jiangsu 5.2 billion US dollars. So, 35 per cent of our trade you could say is generated out of East China.

Question: Any idea about how much money our six banks generate?

Foreign Secretary: The State Bank of India, the Bank of India, the Canara Bank and the Bank of Baroda, are the four banks that have full-fledged offices in China today. The seven others are representative offices.

Question: I want to ask a question about our trade deficit. What we import from China and what we export to China there is a big gap, Has there been any discussion on how India can increase exports to reduce the deficit? Is there any road map to fill this gap? You referred to one or two items like pharmaceutical sector. Are there other companies who could come in….please indicate in coming times what is going to be done?

Foreign Secretary: Of course, in our discussions with China we are focusing a lot on this issue. We have also identified areas like pharmaceuticals has been mentioned likewise there is the engineering goods, IT, IT enabled services, agricultural products and commodities. In our discussions during this visit, the Chinese have assured us, they have assured us that this is something that they take very seriously. They understand that it would be unviable to sustain such a trade imbalance in the medium-term, in the long-term and that this is an issue that they must address. In this context, attracting and encouraging more Chinese businesses to invest in India is also important, just as our companies are coming here, And of course I also feel that Indian companies also need to push more on this. The Government can do so much and we will continue to do that, but there needs to be a very intense drive on the part of Indian companies also to ensure that they have more access to this market. As you talked about the manufactured goods, the pricing and all that, there are a number of anti-dumping investigations also on Chinese products coming into India. There are also safeguard duties that are placed on Chinese products. Whenever we see a surge which is likely to affect our industry adversely, corrective measures are taken.

Ambassador S. Jaishankar: In terms of trade promotion, we are doing seven events in 17 different cities in China this year. Some of these will be very sector specific like we did a big IT event, we are doing a big pharma event. So, yes there is a strategy. There are four thrust areas which are IT, pharma, agro exports and engineering. There are right now 17 events under planning between now and November.

Foreign Secretary: We just exported alphonso mangoes to China for the first time in large quantities this year.

Question: Any other varieties apart from alphonso?

Foreign Secretary: No. We will have to slowly diversify that.

Question: Is this commercial?

Foreign Secretary: Commercial, not just promotion.

Question: Coming back to anti-dumping, can you explain to us what are these lawsuits that have been pending and how are you taking them up?

Foreign Secretary: I am here to brief you on the President's visit. We can talk about this later.

Question: We met some businessmen today, yesterday too we met them here during the meeting with the Indian community, there was this problem and it was also highlighted by Jairam Ramesh also that in India there are a lot of problems with the Chinese companies. The feedback that we got here, it is understood that the Chinese companies that are working for the last two years, perhaps the Chinese bureaucracy is more rigid that the Indian bureaucracy, you know it better since you have been yourself ambassador here, considering the red tap that is entrenched here, do you think, the Indian companies wanting to invest in China, or work on projects here, do you think that the visit of the President and the talks you had here at the highest level, it will benefit in a manner that the companies in both the countries wanting to invest and work on projects of joint ventures, or even single ventures, the money that is invested, even if it is fifty crores, the government will consider these aspects and try to ease the..

Foreign Secretary: Obviously, as business grows and as more and more companies invest in each others’ countries, you would focus very much on transparency issues, on predictability on non-discrimination. All these issues would come up to ensure that there is no protectionism, that market access is provided. All this forms the subject of discussion between the two countries. The fact that during this visit the issue of trade has figured quite prominently in all the meetings that our President had had I think raises not only the level of awareness and sensitivity about the importance that we attach to this issue, but also I think provides them direction from the highest political level, to the working levels of Government to ensure that you remove obstacles like red-tape or other difficulties that may arise in the actual conduct of business and transaction of trade and commerce.

Question: Did the state of Chinese telecom companies come up in any of the meetings? Is there a concern that that might affect the push to get more Chinese access?

Foreign Secretary: The issue did not come up.

Question: Is it that when we keep saying market access and market access, they will always go back to what is happening in India about the fact that the ...

Foreign Secretary: They did not do that. That was not the response we got.

Question: Just to follow up what Dr. Jairam Ramesh said and the fact about market access, even Chinese are equally paranoid about Indian companies.

Foreign Secretary: I am not going to be drawn into that discussion. I think I answered that question. That issue is closed and I am not going to delve into further. The point I am making here is that we have sought greater market access. We would like to see more of our products, particularly in these areas, pharmaceuticals, IT, IT-enabled services, very high end engineering goods that we produce, agricultural commodities. These are all issues on which we want progress. The political message that we are sending to the Chinese side is please pay attention to this, this is important if you have to address the adverse trade balance you will need to tackle these difficulties.

Question: Why is it that there is nothing modern about the pavilion of ours. Does it truly represent India today?

Foreign Secretary: That is your opinion. Are you asking me for my personal opinion? What are you driving at?

Question: It did not seem as if it is …

Foreign Secretary: That is your take on it. I am talking about the response that the pavilion has received from the Chinese side. I think it embodied both the traditional and modern. I do not believe it was just the way you described it, if I may say so.

Question: Madam, one question about the President herself. When the discussions take place, what kind of response does President personally gives to queries by the Chinese leaders?

Foreign Secretary: They are having a conversation. Each side expresses a certain point, talks in appreciative terms about the relationship. The President spoke of what she had seen while she was in China, the kind of discussions she had, the warmth of the welcome that she had received, how positively she had been impressed by the progress that China has made especially here when you come to Shanghai.

Question: Is that normally an easy-flowing conversation?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, extremely.

Thank you.
The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and the University of Fudan have signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) for establishment of an India Chair in Humanities & Social Sciences at Fudan University. Ambassador of India to China, Dr. S. Jaishankar and Dr. Yuliang Yang, President of Fudan University signed the MoU on May 31, 2010 in Shanghai in the gracious presence of H.E. Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil, President of India.

Under the terms of the Agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the Fudan University, shall appoint a Professor in Humanities and Social Sciences who would be visiting Fudan University for a four-month semester during each academic year. The Indian Professor would contribute to the academic life of the Fudan University by engaging in teaching and research in his/her respective specialization.

Education has been identified as an important area of co-operation between India and China. This MoU is a very significant step in facilitating enhanced interaction between institutions of higher learning in India and China. Establishment of this Chair at Fudan University is in keeping with the objective of fostering greater educational and academic interaction between Indian and Chinese scholars and students. This MoU will help in introducing Indian Studies at the prestigious Fudan University.

292. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on defense exchanges with China.

New Delhi, August 27, 2010.

In response to a question, the Official Spokesperson said, "We have an important, multifaceted and complex relationship with the People's Republic of China. Our interaction has been growing in a number of areas, including defense. In recent years, we have had useful defense exchanges at various levels.

The visit, referred to in a newspaper report today, has not taken place, due to certain reasons. While we value our exchanges with China, there must be sensitivity to each others' concerns. Our dialogue with China on these issues is ongoing."

The decision to suspend defence exchanges with China followed Beijing's refusal of a visa to allow the Army's Northern Command Chief, Lt. Gen. B.S. Jaswal to join a military delegation for a high-level visit. Media reports said that in retaliation, India has refused to allow two Chinese Army captains to attend a defence course and a colonel to speak at a higher defence course. While border meetings between Army personnel will continue as before, a cloud hangs over future military exchanges and even a joint exercise. It will remain so until China "unties the knot it has tied," media quoted unnamed senior officials.

Pointing out that India's sensitivities on Kashmir are similar to China's on Tibet, the sources said China questioning the State's status by resorting to this move was unacceptable. "There is little point in taking forward other exchanges in the defence area," added the unnamed officials. A senior official found it strange that while China had hosted the Army's Eastern Command chief (now the Chief of the Army Staff) even though it has unsubstantiated claims on large parts under his military jurisdiction, it objected to the visit of the Northern Command chief even though the main discord over India's export to China declined during the year 2008-09 and China's exports to India declined during the year 2009-10. There are various factors which restrict exports from India to China. China's macroeconomic policies, exchange rate policy and other specific non-tariff measures make exports to China uneconomic and cumbersome. During the eighth session of India-China Joint Group on Economic Relations, Trade, Science and Technology (JEG) held on 19th January, 2010, the Commerce & Industry Minister raised the issue of growing trade deficit with his Chinese counterpart. As an outcome of 8th JEG, an MoU on Expansion of trade and Economic Cooperation was signed between India and China. The MoU recognizes that a balanced trade is conducive to long term, sustainable and harmonious development of economic cooperation between India and China. As per the MoU, the Chinese side shall strive to import as much of its requirement of value added goods from India as possible.

Hanoi, October 29, 2010

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Very good morning and welcome to the media centre. You are aware the Prime Minister of India has had two very important meetings this morning, with Premier Wen Jiabao of China, and the President of Republic of Korea. The National Security Advisor Shri Shivshankar Menon is here to talk to you about the visit.

Sir, the floor is yours.

National Security Advisor (Shri Shivshankar Menon): We thought we would brief you about the two meetings that Prime Minister had this morning. He met first with the Premier of People’s Republic of China Premier Wen Jiabao, and then met with the President of the Republic of Korea thereafter.

The meeting with Premier Wen Jiabao was warm, friendly and covered the entire gamut of the relationship. This was their tenth meeting actually in the last six years. As you know, Premier Wen Jiabao has visited India before; Prime Minister also visited China as Premier Wen Jiabao’s guest.
During their discussions on the bilateral relations both of them took a broader strategic view of the significance of India-China bilateral relations; expressed satisfaction at the development of that relationship; and also discussed specifics in the relationship. Premier Wen Jiabao recalled what Prime Minister had said before that there is enough space in the world for both India and China to realize their development aspirations. He actually added to it and he said that there is enough space for China and India to also have cooperation in all areas.

Premier Wen Jiabao indicated that he hopes to visit India in the course of this year. This is the 60th anniversary year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries. As you know, we have had a series of high-level visits. President has visited China earlier this year. Prime Minister also spoke of sensitivity to each other's core issues. Both spoke of their determination to carry their relationship forward.

Question: Sir, I would like to know about the India-China meeting. What were the specifics discussed with respect to climate change and the G20 Summit where China seems to be under pressure on the currency issue?

National Security Advisor: On the climate change issue they both recalled their work together in Copenhagen, and spoke of continuing to work together on a range of global issues - climate change, counter-terrorism, disaster management, energy security, food security - and that we would continue to work together. That is because these are issues where we have similar or identical positions. There was not a discussion on G20 issues during this meeting.

Question: Did the Prime Minister raise the issue of stapled visas?

National Security Advisor: The Prime Minister raised the issue of all difficult questions and showing sensitivity to each other. We were instructed, the SRs and the officials on both sides, to prepare for Prime Minister Wen Jiabao’s visit and to work our way to solutions of all the issues that are difficult in our relationship including the boundary question. As I said, they covered the entire range of the relationship.

Question: Sir, you said that core issues were discussed and stressed the need to carry it forward.
National Security Advisor: No, I did not say that. I said that Prime Minister spoke of the need to show sensitivity to each other’s core issues.

Question: Can you just elaborate on that, flesh it out for us?

National Security Advisor: No, I think that is what he said. I will give you what he said. I am not going to put a gloss on what he said.

Question: But when you say there are core issues or sensitivities on both sides, what are the core issues, and do we agree on the core issues of each other?

National Security Advisor: I think we have both indicated to each other and this is an ongoing conversation. It is not one conversation where we mention what concerns either of us. So, we will continue that discussion as we lead up to Premier Wen Jiabao’s visit which we are sure will be a very successful and productive visit.

Question: Sir, how long did the meeting last between the two Prime Ministers?

National Security Advisor: About forty-five minutes.

Question: What are the dates of the visit? Has it been decided in the meeting?

National Security Advisor: No, we have not actually fixed the dates yet. We are consulting about dates which suit both sides.

Question: Did the issue of defence exchanges come up?

National Security Advisor: As I said, they covered the entire range of relations. They did say that we have to work our way through all these issues.

Question: Can you elaborate on discussions on the boundary issue?

National Security Advisor: On the boundary issue I think both sides said that they look forward to an early resolution of the issue. Both mentioned the need to carry the process forward from the guiding principles and the political parameters which were agreed and signed in 2005. Both said they would ask the Special Representatives to do so with a sense of urgency. And they agreed that in the meantime, pending a settlement, we will maintain peace and tranquility along the boundary. The SRs are likely to be meeting towards the end of November.

Question: Will the Wen Jiabao visit be in this year or next year?

National Security Advisor: He said he hopes to visit during this year.

Question: Where are the SRs meeting?

National Security Advisor: In Beijing, before the end of November. I think the last meeting was in Delhi.

Question: Sir, this point about 'we have to work our way through difficult issues' was made by the Chinese Prime Minister right in the beginning. It was part of the opening statement.

National Security Advisor: By both sides. It is agreed. I think we both feel we need to. But as I said, both took a larger, strategic view of the significance of the relationship, and the importance of good India-China relations and of working towards that goal, as we have done over several years in the past.

Question: But after the opening statements, forty-minute conversation is a long time, were these issues discussed in detail?

National Security Advisor: I just told you, they covered all the issues in the relationship.

Question: Sir, the stapled visas was a sensitive issue. What was the response of the Chinese on that?

National Security Advisor: I have told you, they both discussed the entire range of the relationship, all the issues in the relationship, and then they spoke about asking their officials and so on to prepare for the visit and to deal with each of these issues.

Question: So, everything will be decided by officials and during the visit.
National Security Advisor: No, what I am saying is that we will continue the process of engagement and continue to deal with the issues that concern each of us as we have done for several years and will continue to do.

Question: What was the significance of the meeting?

National Security Advisor: The significance of the meeting, as I told you is three things. (1) We had a high-level review where both sides reaffirmed their determination to carry this relationship forward along the positive track that we have maintained for several years; (2) that we will, during the 60th anniversary year of diplomatic relations, hope to have a very high-level visit from China as well. Premier Wen Jiabao himself said he hopes to come; (3) that they have given new impetus to the process which we have both between the SRs and between the officials of both countries to work our way through the issues and have given us a clear direction of how they want this handled.

Question: Did the Prime Minister raise the issue of trade imbalance? Secondly, will defence exchanges remain suspended?

National Security Advisor: Premier Wen Jiabao first said that we are very conscious of the trade imbalance and of the need to do something. He outlined some of the steps that the Chinese Government has taken to address this issue. As you know, we had a Joint Economic Group meeting. Commerce Ministers had met in the beginning of the year and they had taken several steps. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the fact that in the first nine months of the year we had achieved about 45 billion dollars worth of total two-way trade, and that we are on track to achieve the target of 60 billion dollars total two-way trade in 2010, which was the target which we had set in 2008. There is some diminution in the imbalance, but there is still an imbalance, and we will continue to work at those issues.

Question: What about defence exchanges?

National Security Advisor: On defence exchanges, we will continue to work the issue. As I said, some high-level defence exchanges for the present are paused.

Question: Sir, do you expect the visit of Mr. Zhou Yuo Kang’s visit to be preparatory to that of Premier’s?
National Security Advisor: We think it is a very important visit not only because he is such a senior Politburo Standing Committee Member, it is also a part of the party-to-party exchanges between the two countries. We are looking forward to that visit. They are holding a seminar on India-China relations. It will give us a chance to have a much freer, broader sort of exchange of views at a very high level with the Chinese side. And we are looking forward very much to that. He will also be calling on our state leaders.

Question: Was there any decision on both sides to avoid public statements that could create misunderstandings?

National Security Advisor: Do we ever make such statements? Never!

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

295. Keynote Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the inaugural session of 2nd Seminar on India-China Relations organized by the Indian National Congress and Communist Party of China.

New Delhi, November 1, 2010.

Your Excellency Mr. Zhou Yongkang, Member of the Standing Committee of the Politburo and Secretary of the Political and Legislative Affairs Committee of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China;

Mr. Wang Jiaarui, Minister of the International Department of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China

Dr. Karan Singhji, Chairman, Foreign Affairs Cell, All India Congress Committee;

Distinguished delegates from the Communist Party of China;

Members of the Indian National Congress;

Dear Colleagues;
Ladies and Gentlemen

It gives me great pleasure to inaugurate this 2nd Seminar on India-China Relations being organized jointly the Indian National Congress and the Communist Party of China. I warmly welcome the Chinese delegation led by Mr Zhou Yongkang to India. I also take this opportunity to thank Dr Karan Singh for institutionalizing this forum of inter-change of ideas between the two political parties. I thank Dr Mridula Mukherji, Director of the Nehru Memorial Library and Museum for hosting the Seminar. Holding today's event in Teen Murti Bhawan has a special significance as it's most illustrious resident Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru worked tirelessly throughout his life for strengthening bilateral ties between our countries.

2. As I speak to you today on India-China Relations, at a time when the motor of the world's economic growth has shifted to Asia, I recall Pandit Nehru's vision of these relations. Panditji who had deep consciousness of the rich heritage of our cultural and civilizational interaction and our millennial ties envisioned that India and China would come together as a unified force. He expected our two countries to exemplify the idea he called "Asianism". His vision was for both nations to rediscover Asia's pride of place after years of living under colonial rule and domination by foreign powers.

3. Today both India and China are demonstrating remarkable economic growth and social development and playing an increasingly important role in world affairs. On this road which we have traversed, we have had trials and tribulations but what is encouraging is that today's post Cold-War world provides us the opportunity to work together to strengthen each other. There is deep realization in both China and India of the need to engage each other, and to cooperate rather than compete.

4. We cannot talk of India-China ties without seeing the reflection of history, and everyday new and more interesting evidence of age old relations are brought out by scholars. Our dear friend Tan Chung, who has contributed immensely to the development of India-China relations and understanding between the two countries, makes an astute observation quoting Reverend Daozuan, the prominent academic authority of the Tang Dynasty, that the term used to describe China by the Chinese people, that is Zhongguo (Chung Kuo) or Middle Kingdom, has been used in the past in China to even describe India or Madhyadesa. Tan Chung makes an interesting point that in the voluminous Chinese Buddhist literature over nearly two thousand years, the term Zhongguo denotes not China but Madhyadesa, the Buddha's country- Magadha. No doubt such visceral ties have led many to say that India and China were 'Buddhist twins'.

5. These civilizational ties between our two countries were described very eloquently by another great son of our soil, Gurdev Rabindranath Tagore who, when he arrived in China in 1942, said and I quote "I don't know why, as soon as I arrived in China, I felt as though I was returning to my native place. Maybe I was an Indian monk in a previous life, who stayed on a particular mountain, in a particular cave, enjoying freedom". Unquote. Gurudev instinctively sensed the grand harmony that has existed between India and China.

6. In the late 1940s, when we reached out to each other, India and China had a natural bonding and understood each other's aspirations in a way that nobody else could. Not surprisingly, the post-1945 order was reluctant to recognize the legitimate concerns and interests of these two nations. As a challenge, leaders of our two countries had the courage and the vision to chart their own course. The Panchasheela, or, the five principles of peaceful co-existence, was their unique contribution to contemporary diplomacy. This year when we are celebrating 60 years of diplomatic ties between India and China, we obviously seek to honour and uphold that tradition of working together. Our endeavour is to draw inspiration from those early years of our existence as independent nations to cooperate more closely in the future.

7. As rising powers, India and China are often projected to have a competitive relationship. In the final analysis, it is up to us to disprove such scenarios by concrete examples of cooperation. Certainly, there is a strong case for a global issues partnership between India and China as two large developing Asian economies. And we are working together on key challenges that will define the 21st century. However, unless we address some of the issues of bilateral concern, our relationship will not attain its true potential for building our common future in this Asian century. While we accept that there will be outstanding issues between two large countries, we have to address on each other's concerns and exhibit sensitivities on issues impinging each other's security and well-being if we are to make our relationship forge ahead.

8. China is today the world's second largest economy. India is also marching relentlessly on the way towards economic well-being. Getting our growth strategy right in an ever-changing world has its own challenges. As Asian states, we recognize that our continent lags behind Europe and the Americas in terms of economic and infrastructural integration and security cooperation. If India and China work purposefully in this direction, the whole world stands to benefit. After all, between us we are raising the living standard of almost one-third of humanity. Given the magnitude of our development efforts, there is much that can be gained through our close cooperation as we do face similar challenges of urbanization, resource consumption, food and energy security, inclusive growth and skills development. We must ask ourselves whether as neighbours and partners, each of whom are large and rising economies, are we making the best of opportunities? Can we not leverage each others' strengths? Can we not be more sensitive to each other's concerns? I am of the strong view that the India-China relationship is grossly under-realized and the capacities for expansion are enormous.

9. A strong and stable relationship between India and China has consequences for the entire world. Because we are different, our divergences are often exaggerated, sadly sometimes by our own people. India and China must not just cooperate; they must be seen to be doing so by the rest of the world. Our Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh, often emphasizes that the world is large enough to accommodate the aspirations of both countries. But this is not an inevitable outcome. It is a goal that requires strong political will, sustained engagement and a high degree of mutual sensitivity. What can we do to make this cooperation stronger? I believe that we need to work on a wide variety of fronts as progress on one will reinforce the others.

10. At the political level we have to work closely to consolidate and strengthen our political partnership and understanding. We welcome Premier Wen Jiabao's proposed visit before the end of the year. He will receive a warm welcome. The hotline between the two Prime Ministers will soon become operational. In addition I would suggest that Indian and Chinese leadership at all levels in the government and amongst political parties should meet frequently to boost trust and understanding. A number of dialogues and forums already exist between India and China that need to keep meeting regularly and productively. Regular meetings lead to better communication, more understanding and strengthen confidence. I would, therefore, strongly encourage an intensive and sustained engagement between the two systems.

11. Economics closely follows politics and here I would like to call upon business and industry leaders of both countries to deepen the engagement and stake in each other's economy. China is now India's largest trading partner in goods. Trade between our two countries this year is well on its way to achieve the US$ 60 billion target set by the Prime Ministers of our countries. While both our GDPs are growing at a fast pace and so is bilateral trade, our inter-dependence is still insufficient towards building substantive stakes in each other. Our economic engagement needs to go well beyond trade in goods and investment. We hope China will provide Indian companies a level playing field particularly in the pharmaceutical and IT sectors where we face barriers which restrict market access.

12. Within the framework of our political and economic relations I would also make the case for enhanced cooperation in multipliers such as science and technology and energy which will enable us to leverage our cooperation to bring benefits to our peoples. Both China and India have obtained considerable skill in development of cost effective and innovative technologies. Our scientists and engineers need to engage more with each other in order to allow the diffusion of these technologies. Similarly, a whole new set of challenges confront us on the energy front, where the quest is not only to obtain affordable energy but also to check carbon emission. Climate change has indeed thrown at us a challenge which can only be countered by cooperation. Our cooperation within BASIC framework reveals some new directions in which we can work together.
13. Lastly but more importantly, I would emphasize the need to build people-to-people contacts. Our interactions during the ages along the Silk Route, which saw inter-exchange of goods and ideas, have led to our mutual enrichment. Sadly, as modern nations we seem to be lacking in emulating our ancestors. There is a need to comprehensively revolutionize this aspect of our relations through cultural exchanges, education, films, sports, cuisine and tourism.

14. Ladies and Gentlemen, I have attempted to spell out what I visualize is a recipe for strengthening the India - China relationship in order to build our common future in Asia. The destinies of India and China were linked in the past. The growth of our relationship will be determined by the extent of our awareness that they are linked in the future as well. Far from sliding into complacency, we must keep pushing the pace of the relationship with new ideas and more activity. The world is watching both India and China and what we do together will decide not only our destiny but the history of the world.

Thank you very much. Jai Hind.

296. Speech of Defence Minister A. K. Antony while presenting "K. Subrahmanyam" award to Dr. Srikant Kondapalli a scholar of Chinese studies.

New Delhi, November 11, 2010.

It is a real pleasure to be in your midst for the 45th Foundation Day of IDSA. I express my warm greetings to all of you on the occasion. Our gratitude is also due to Professor Kaushik Basu, a renowned economist, for delivering the Foundation Day address today. I hope that the ideas expressed in his address will generate greater interest among our scholars on various issues and also in using other disciplines in their research. His ideas are thought-provoking. They will be useful to all of us.

One problem plaguing our institutes, think-tanks and universities is that they often work within the narrow confines of their respective disciplines.
Real life problems, as complex as security and its various dimensions require a multi-disciplinary approach. It calls for a thorough understanding of a wide array of disciplines like Political Science, Economics, Sociology, Geography, History, Psychology and Natural Sciences. The security challenges of today are far more complex than at any time in the past. These challenges are both - global and local and nearly always, interlinked. Mankind needs to grasp facts clearly and understand issues in the proper perspective to facilitate better and quicker policy making. In this context, Indian think-tanks will have to discharge an important responsibility by way of rigorous policy research to support more-informed policy making.

I also take this opportunity to heartily congratulate Dr. Srikant Kondapalli for winning this year's K. Subrahmanyam Award. This is the fourth award in the series and its conferment recognizes Dr. Kondapalli’s outstanding work on China, especially, its Armed Forces. We attach great importance to our relations with China. I hope that this award will provide impetus to other researchers to go in for more intensive research work on China. I also wish to compliment the winners of this year's President Awards for their noteworthy contributions in journals of repute. I wish to strongly urge the younger scholars of IDSA to draw inspiration from such researchers and excel in their fields of study.

I am told that for the third year in succession, IDSA has been ranked amongst Asia's top ten and the world's top fifty think-tanks. In fact, IDSA is the only think-tank from India to have been included in this list. That way it is a satisfactory thing. You should not be satisfied with the 10th rank. You must aim to become No. 1, if not No. 1, then No 2. Even at the recent Commonwealth Games, India stood at No 2. So, IDSA too should aim to become at least No. 2. Coupled with the rising popularity of the Institute's Visiting Scholars' Programme, this reflects its growing national and international stature.

Despite these satisfactory developments, we cannot afford to relax and be complacent. There is still a lot of hard work ahead for all of us, if we really want to fructify the vision of becoming a ‘centre of excellence’. As I have said on earlier occasions, IDSA has to intensify its efforts to make the Institute’s work more relevant and useful to the policy-makers. You must be able to foresee the future challenges the country faces. You must strive tirelessly to continuously improve the quality and quantity of research work.
IDSA scholars particularly need to increasingly tap the primary sources and field visits to add quality to your work. Original sources alone will provide new insights that are in touch with the ground reality. Last but not the least, research must not remain confined to being published in journals. You must make your research work more transparent and accessible to our policy makers, parliamentarians, the media, and to the general people. IDSA scholars need to reach out to as wide cross-section of the society, as possible. The ideas and findings need to be communicated in a substantial measure.

Let me share some thoughts on the issues that in my view the Institute needs to focus on. You must utilize the available human resources to turn the focus on key areas for deeper research, rather than scattering them on a large number of issues. You must focus only on key issues.

Among other things, your research work must factor in the rapidly changing geopolitical equations, geo-strategic developments and their implications for India's security. You must pay special, critical attention to the developments in our immediate neighbourhood and beyond.

Today, the security scenario is constantly evolving due to the changing nature of conflicts. You must focus your energy on the strategy and force structures needed to face these unconventional threats and asymmetric conflicts. There are other issues that merit attention like defence reforms focusing on jointness, acquisition, offsets, development of India's defence industrial base, terrorism, climate change and energy security. The challenge lies in producing original, high quality research studies with in a form that is useful for the policy makers.

Before I conclude, I wish to strongly emphasise the urgent need for high quality, analytical research work capable of anticipating threats, arriving at better-informed policy decisions and for defending India's vital security interests.

Five years from now, IDSA will be celebrating the 50th Foundation Day. You must set your sights on becoming not only the best in Asia, but also in the world by 2015. I assure you my full support to your endeavours and hope that you will take IDSA to even greater heights.

Wuhan (China), November 14, 2010.

Drawing a dramatic parallel between the territorial red lines of both countries, India told China that just as New Delhi had been sensitive to its concerns over the Tibet Autonomous Region and Taiwan, Beijing too should be mindful of Indian sensitivities on Jammu and Kashmir.

[The comparison - which is intended to drive home the depth of Indian concerns over recent Chinese attempts to question the country's sovereignty in Kashmir - was reportedly made by External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna in his meeting with China's Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi on the sidelines of the Russia-India-China trilateral meeting.]

Briefing reporters about the meeting, Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao said the two Ministers reviewed the state of bilateral relations, which Mr. Yang described as being in "very good shape." As India-China relations grew, Mr. Krishna said, there was a need for both sides to be sensitive to each other's core concerns. "In that context," said Ms. Rao, "[the External Affairs Minister] spoke of Jammu and Kashmir and expressed the hope that China would be sensitive to J&K just as we have been to the Tibet Autonomous Region and Taiwan."

According to Ms. Rao, Mr. Yang said in response that China always believed the problem of Jammu and Kashmir could only be resolved through dialogue and negotiations between India and Pakistan and that there has been no change in its policy.

The Chinese Minister also said Beijing wanted to expand the political content of the relationship between the two countries. "He said both countries should see each other's growth as an opportunity and not a challenge."

[India has been objecting to the Chinese policy of issuing 'stapled' visas to Kashmiri-domicile Indian citizens. New Delhi suspended defence exchanges with Beijing in August after an Indian general from Kashmir was denied a proper visa to travel to China on an official visit.

On the question of a permanent seat for India on a reformed UN Security Council - a question Mr. Krishna raised in a general way without reference to President Barack Obama's recent announcement - Mr. Yang said he acknowledged there had been a fundamental change in the international situation and that consultations were needed on the question of UN reform. He added that China was willing to continue and increase its consultations with India and others on this question, a stand Ms. Rao described as "incrementally speaking, a positive development."

But she added: "To say that they have given full-scale endorsement would be inaccurate."

Also present at Mr. Krishna's meeting with the Chinese Foreign Minister was Duan Yunlin, vice governor of Hubei province. Mr. Duan spoke of Hubei's economic relations with India and described his own involvement in promoting business links with Bangalore and Andhra Pradesh. Mr. Krishna said he hoped India-China bilateral trade would cross the target of $60 billion but urged the Chinese side to do more to ensure a better balance.

Address by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on "India-China relations" at Observer Research Foundation Conference on China.

New Delhi, December 3, 2010.

Ambassador Rasgotra,
Ambassador Raghunath,
Distinguished invitees,
Representatives of the Media, Ladies and Gentlemen,

This year saw India and China celebrating the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations. A couple of weeks from now Premier Wen Jiabao will be India and will participate in the closing ceremony of the Festival of China in India which will bring to a close the calendar of activities organized in both China and India to commemorate this occasion. Sixty years is a short period of time in the relations of two countries whose ties date back many millennia. Ours has always been a broader engagement that took place between our peoples. Throughout history, scholars and pilgrims, traders and travellers, who "mortgaged their lives for pilgrimage" in the words of the renowned Chinese Indologist Ji Xianlin, engaged in a traffic of ideas between the two countries. The Buddhism that travelled from India to China was successfully Sinicised and survived in China as it found a place in the heart and soul of the people. It is in the context of our historical and popular relationship that we must always view and evaluate our contemporary relationship. Indeed, this was the vision that inspired Rabindranath Tagore during his sojourns in China in the early decades of the 20th Century.

2. The six decades of the India-China relationship behind us have record that is chequered. We became arbiters of our national destinies from the date of India's independence and China's liberation in the late forties of the last century, inspiring many others in Asia and Africa to independence and the fruition of national goals to end colonialism and foreign domination. This was the time when India and China in a sense, rediscovered each other, understanding the potential of the synergy between two of the largest populated nations in the world on the global stage. The vision of our founding fathers is in many ways within our reach today as we regain our place in Asia and the world as leading global economies. The awareness and the “muffled footsteps” (to use Tagore’s phrase) of historical contact between the two peoples of India and China created the basis for our well-intentioned attempt in the fifties to build a new type of relationship based on Panchasheela or the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence. It was an attempt which however faltered, telescoping into the troubled phase that enveloped our relationship in the sixties up until the mid seventies. The leadership in both our countries understood the untenability of any sustained estrangement between us. The last three decades have been marked by well-intentioned efforts of exploration towards establishing the framework of a stable, peaceful, productive, and multi-sectoral relationship between India and China. Contradictions are sought to be managed, and our differences have not prevented an expanding bilateral engagement and building on congruence. There are elements of cooperation and competition that form the warp and weft of our relationship. I propose to speak to you in some detail about the specifics of this engagement.

3. There are both challenges that the relationship confronts us with and also there are opportunities before it. As our Prime Minister has said, India and China will continue to grow, simultaneously, and our policies will have to cater to this emerging reality. For India, the situation is complex since China is not only our largest neighbour but also because China is today a major power in the world both from the traditional geo-political point of view and the more current geo-economic point of view. In the world of today, China is a factor in several equations and therefore it is intellectually satisfying to see that scholarship in India is increasingly dedicated to looking more closely at all facets of China. As a nation, we should encourage more efforts to accelerate this intellectual drive to understand China.

4. I personally have had an almost three decades-old relationship with China, both in our Foreign Office while handling relations with China and thereafter when I was privileged to represent my country as India’s Ambassador to China. In this period, I have witnessed the transformation that economic growth and development have helped to achieve in both countries. I made my first trip to China in the company of an Indian film delegation in the spring of 1986. We travelled to Beijing, Shanghai, Chongqing and Guangzhou. City streets swarmed with people on bicycles, and we flew in to the various places on our itinerary within China in planes that seemed ancient compared to what we had in India. There were no luxury hotels worth speaking of although economic reform had become the buzz-word. The countryside had begun to be magnetized by town and village enterprises which were elevating living standards among farmers and peasants. The trip had receded into the recesses of my memory until I saw a photograph in a recent publication of China Radio International which showed two young women - the actor Shabana Azmi and myself - standing outside a palace in the Forbidden City on a rather blustery spring day in 1986! That first trip was followed by many more, the most significant such visit being when I was a member of the official delegation that accompanied Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to China in December 1988. That visit made a historic and crucially important contribution to the transformation of the India-China relationship.

5. China’s rapid economic growth over the last three decades has been spectacular and riveting. It is now the second largest economy in the world with a GDP of roughly USD 5.5 trillion. Its people, particularly the youth, seem focused on improving their living standards in the quest for a prosperous future, and politics does not define their everyday. China has begun to deal in the currency of global power, and its economic success is impacting its foreign, defence and security policies. The appellation of assertiveness is frequently applied to China’s profile in global affairs today. The question that I am always asked is whether our relationship with China will be one dominated by increasing competition for influence and for resources as our economic needs grow. I believe that neither of us has the luxury of seeing each other in antagonistic terms. The view that India and China are rivals to me is an over-generalization as well as over-simplification of a complex relationship which encompasses so many diverse issues. I believe the proposition of competition and rivalry should not be exaggerated in a manner that it overshadows our genuine attempts to manage and transact a rationally determined relationship between India and China. The reality is that India and China have worked hard over the last two decades to enhance dialogue in a number of fields and we must maintain and build on that trend.

6. It is true that divergences persist. There is no denying the fact that we have a disputed border. There are legacies as well as lessons bequeathed to us by history. This is a complex problem and the cartographies that define national identity are internalized in the minds of people in both countries. At the same time we are making a serious attempt at trying to arrive at a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable solution to the boundary question as the recent fourteenth round of the Special Representatives talks will testify.
The absence of a solution to the question is not due to lack of efforts but arises from the difficulty of the question, as any analyst in the audience can well appreciate.

7. What also needs to be appreciated is that the India-China boundary is one of the most peaceful of all borders. We have in place a well organized set of measures or what we call confidence building measures or CBMs to ensure peace and tranquility on the border. We are currently talking to each other on establishing more such mechanisms. There is maturity on both sides to understand the complexity of the issue and to insulate it from affecting our broader relationship. This policy on both sides I think has paid dividends and has contributed towards reducing the possibility of conflict. The dividend from this policy can be seen in other areas of our relationship.

8. Another issue of concern is the management of trans-border rivers.
Many of the rivers nourishing the plains of Northern India and also areas in North-east India arise in the highlands of the Tibetan Autonomous Region and are a source of livelihood and sustenance for millions of our people. We are alert to reports of China damming trans-border rivers and have sought assurances from China that it will take no action to negatively affect the flow of the rivers into India, and so that our rights as the lower riparian are not adversely affected. China has assured us that the projects on the Bramhaputra are run-of-the-river projects and are not meant for storing or diverting water. We look forward to working closely with China in this critical area of environmental and livelihood security.

9. There is then the question of the China-Pakistan relationship. India firmly believes that a stable and prosperous Pakistan is in India’s interest, and we are not against Pakistan’s relations with other countries. While I agree that relationships between countries are not zero-sum games, we do not hesitate to stress our genuine concerns regarding some aspects of the China-Pakistan relationship particularly when it comes to China’s role in POK, China’s J&K policy and the Sino-Pak security and nuclear relationship. The need for mutual sensitivity to each other’s concerns cannot be denied. The issue of giving stapled visas to Indian nationals from the state of Jammu and Kashmir arises in a similar context. We believe that the India-China relationship will grow even stronger as China shows more sensitivity on core issues that impinge on our sovereignty and territorial integrity. We hope this can be realized.

10. Our trade with China is growing faster than that with any other country and China is our largest trading partner in goods with trade likely to exceed US$ 60 billion this year. There is also serious discussion between the two countries on correcting the trade imbalance and we would like to see more Indian goods and services entering the Chinese market. Many Chinese companies are now well established in India and many Indian companies are also opening up in China. We in India have also worked to resolve hurdles that have sometimes been faced by Chinese companies to ensure a level playing field for all foreign investors. We also expect similar access to Chinese markets especially in the area of pharmaceuticals, IT, engineering goods, where our companies have often faced non-tariff and opaque barriers. Our bilateral investment relationship is also steadily growing. India is one of China’s largest markets for project contracting. India needs an investment of US $ 1 trillion during the next Five-Year Plan period in infrastructure. China is well positioned to participate in this process.

11. The results of our policy of engagement are manifest in many areas and are not limited to bilateral trade and investment alone. Over 7,000
Indian students study in China, and the CBSE is set to introduce Chinese in the curriculum of schools from the next academic session. India and China cooperate in multilateral forums and on global issues. We have established a practice of regular leadership visits and meetings that has resulted in high level political understanding and impetus for the relationship. This now sets the stage for us to actively consider together the next steps in the evolution of our bilateral relations; evolve a detailed framework for the resolution of the boundary issue in a manner that is politically feasible for both countries; and, seize the opportunities for cooperation that the domestic transformations of our economies and the evolving global situation have opened up. There is also an information gap that keeps our peoples from understanding each other better and which we need to bridge by concerted public diplomacy from both sides. There is much work to be done to improve perceptions within the media in both countries. Larger numbers of tourists need to be encouraged as also students and teachers.

12. The global trend towards multi-polarity and a more even distribution of power has been accelerated by the recent global economic crisis. While the immediate financial aspects of the crisis may have been addressed, its structural causes in terms of global imbalances remain unsolved. This provides an opportunity to India and China to work together on global issues. Our participation and consultations within the G-20 have shown the way in this regard. Similarly, we have partnered well in BASIC (for the climate change negotiations), and in the BRIC grouping of Brazil, India, Russia and China. We hope such cooperation will also be strengthened on the important issue of UN Reform and that we will be able to build common ground on the issue relating to the expansion of the Security Council and India's interest in permanent membership. The two countries share common positions and approaches on several major international issues of long-term significance such as the environment and climate change, energy security, food security, reform of the global financial institutions, etc. In the immediate region in which both countries are located, Asia, as well, there is common ground between India and China on combating terrorism and extremism, enhancing maritime security, and on the need for a peaceful environment to permit the domestic economic growth and development of the two countries. An open, balanced and inclusive architecture to enable a transparent dialogue on these issues that concern security and stability in Asia is in the interest of both our countries.

13. As India and China continue to pursue their interests, and so long as their overwhelming preoccupation remains their domestic transformation, and both understand that this goal requires a peaceful periphery, it is my firm conviction that the elements of competition in the bilateral relationship can be managed and the elements of congruence can be built upon. As our interests get progressively more complex, the costs of any withdrawal from engagement will rise. I believe this is a big relationship with the clear possibility of an ambitious agenda of mutual engagement that will be one of the most important bilateral equations of our new century. It is in our interest to view it in a more wide-angled and high definition manner than ever before.

During the delegation-level talks the Prime Minister of India would be assisted by the Finance Minister, our External Affairs Minister Sh. S. M. Krishna, Minister of Human Resource Development, Commerce and Industry Minister, Minister for Water Resources, Minister of State for Commerce and Industry, Principal Secretary to PM, National Security Advisor, Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao, our Ambassador in Beijing, Mr. Gautam Bambawale, and other senior officials.

Let me briefly take you through the programme. Premier Wen arrives, on 15th at New Delhi. In the second half of the day he would visit the Tagore International School. On Thursday, 16th December, there will be the ceremonial welcome at Rashtrapati Bhavan. EAM would call on him. Next there would be delegation-level talks and signing of agreements. The Prime Minister will be hosting a banquet in honour of the visiting dignitary.

Premier Wen would be making a very important address at the Indian Council for World Affairs at Sapru House on India-China Relations. This address would be at 1530 hours. Thereafter, Premier Wen will be calling on the Vice-President. He would have a meeting with Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi. In the evening, he would attend the closing event of Chinese Festival in India to celebrate the 60th anniversary of the establishment of our diplomatic relations.

On Friday the 17th, Leader of Opposition would call on him and thereafter he will be departing from New Delhi.

I mentioned that this is Premier Wen's second state visit to India. He was last here in April 2005 when both sides decided to elevate our relationship to the level of strategic and cooperative partnership. Premier Wen and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh have been meeting regularly including on the sidelines of the international fora. They last met in October this year in Hanoi during the East Asia Summit.

China is our largest neighbor. We share a 4000 km long boundary with China. We also enjoy civilisational links which date back to over 1600 years. Over the years our relationship has evolved, has grown, has matured, and it has become truly multifaceted. There is consensus across the political spectrum in India for cooperative and cordial ties with the People's Republic of China. There has been high-level attention given to the relationship. We have regular high-level contacts which has enhanced mutual convergences.
Both sides have celebrated the 60th anniversary year of establishment of diplomatic relations, which falls this year, in a befitting manner. We have seen a qualitative high in our exchanges and bilateral events.

External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna paid an official visit in April this year to China where he held broad-ranging discussions on the entire gamut of our ties with his Chinese counterpart Yang Jiechi. EAM also called on Premier Wen Jiabao. He also flagged off the Festival of India in China. On the other hand, the Vice-Chairman of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Committee visited New Delhi on the 20th of April this year to flag off the Chinese Festival in India.

As I said, this year has seen unprecedented high-level exchanges. You would recall the state visit of Rasthrapatiji to China in May this year. She was received with great warmth and courtesies and she had very good meetings with the Chinese leadership including with President Hu, NPC Chairman Wu Bangguo and Premier Wen. She also dedicated the Indian style Buddhist temple at Luoyang, Henan to India-China friendship. This temple has been built by India and is a proud symbol of the enduring cultural relationship, friendship between our two countries.

China has since evinced interest in playing a role in the revival and rejuvenation of the ancient seat of learning, the Nalanda University. We welcome Chinese interest in the matter. Politburo Standing Committee Member Zhou Yangkang paid a very successful visit to India in October-November this year as a part of party-to-party exchanges. During his visit he met Prime Minister and also Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi amongst other leaders.

Foreign Secretary was in Beijing on the 16th of November for the Strategic Dialogue. The National Security Advisor had visited Beijing for the 14th round of the SR talks on the 29th and 30th of November. I would like to underline here that both sides are committed, as per the Guiding Principles and Political Parameters that were agreed to during the state visit of Premier Wen Jiabao to India in April 2005, to find a fair, reasonable, and mutually acceptable solution to the boundary question.

This year of engagement will culminate in the very important visit of Premier Wen Jiabao. A substantial and broad-based agenda of cooperation awaits him. The canvas of our cooperation is already quite broad and includes areas like trade, investment, science and technology, energy, tourism, culture, people-to-people, youth and media exchanges.

The economic ties constitute literally the bedrock of our relations and we expect that China would emerge as the single largest trading partner of India in goods during 2010 when bilateral trade could touch US$ 60 billion. Our trade was around US$ 43 billion last year, and we should see a spectacular increase during this year. Both sides are keen to further enhance trade ties and are looking at new initiatives in that direction. In January, CIM had visited Beijing for the 8th meeting of India-China Joint Economic Group. At the same time, we are in touch with our Chinese friends on the issue of the growing trade imbalance between the two countries and working towards obtaining better access for products like IT services, pharmaceuticals, agricultural products in which we are quite competitive.

A number of Indian private sector companies have already made investments in China. More investments are on the way. By the same token we would like to invite more Chinese investments particularly in the manufacturing sector. We would also like to see greater Chinese cooperation in the development of infrastructure in India. Government is planning to invest US$ 1 trillion in development of infrastructure during the 12th Five-Year Plan period from 2012 to 2017. India would welcome a bigger role by Chinese companies in infrastructure projects particularly in areas like highways, power sector, metros, and so on.

As important is to boost people-to-people exchanges so that we have a better appreciation of each other's outlook, a better understanding of each other's strengths and potentials. One of the important initiatives that will be unveiled is to commence teaching of Chinese in middle schools in India, beginning the academic year that commences in April 2011. The Chinese side have welcomed this initiative and have offered to extend any assistance that we may require.

Already a large number of Indian students are studying in China, basically studying medicine, and also a large number of Chinese students are studying IT services, and management in India. But we would like to enhance the people-to-people exchanges, we would like to see more exchanges amongst youth, media, tourists and artistes. 2010 also saw the largest number of Indian pilgrims visiting China for the Kailash Manasarovar Yatra.

We have a similarity of views on a number of international issues of mutual interest, be it climate change or the Doha Round of trade talks. We regularly consult each other in important international fora like G20, BRIC, IRC (India, Russia, China) and also SCO. The 10th IRC Ministerial Meeting was held in Wuhan, China last month which was attended by our EAM. The next BRIC Summit will take place in China next year.

A number of agreements and Memoranda of Understanding are likely to be concluded, during the visit of Premier Wen Jiabao. We also expect a Joint Communique to be issued.

In sum, a warm welcome, a red carpet welcome, awaits Premier Wen. Both sides will be holding wide-ranging discussions on the entire array of matters - bilateral, global, regional of mutual interest. His visit is expected to give a further impetus to the multifaceted relationship between our two countries.

Thank you. My colleague and I will be happy to take a few questions.

Question: Sir, when you say both countries have to strengthen the ties, it has to include the subject of terrorism as well. China has a greater influence on Pakistan. So, have we ever tried to put pressure on China or rather request China to take it up with Pakistan and put pressure on them to act against the perpetrators of Mumbai attack? Are we going to pursue this case? Are we going to raise it with China this time? Coming in the series of the most important visits like that of David Cameron, Barack Obama, German Chancellor Merkel, everyone named Pakistan and said that they should act against terror. Keeping in mind the Chinese influence in Pakistan, are we going to raise it?

Official Spokesperson: I think that is a very important question. Let me say that our concerns on terrorism which emanate from our neighbourhood are very well-known. We are engaged with Pakistan. You are aware of the last meeting that was held between the two Prime Ministers at Thimphu. Thereafter the External Affairs Minister has visited Islamabad. The Home Minister has visited Islamabad. We have been calling upon Pakistan to dismantle the terror infrastructure. At the same time we are engaged with our international interlocutors, our friends for the simple reason that terrorism is a common concern for the mankind. Terrorism does not recognize any boundaries and there are very strong growing inter-linkages amongst terror groups. Between China and India we have a strategic and cooperative partnership. And on this very important issue of terrorism we are certainly engaged with all our interlocutors including China.

Question: We understand that there has been some movement forward on the stapled visa issue. Do you think that that issue can be resolved on this particular visit, or it is a work in progress that will take some time?

Joint Secretary (East Asia) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): Definitely that is an issue which we have raised with the Chinese side over the last many months. We do hope that the Chinese side will address this issue. Whether that will happen today or tomorrow or during the visit or after the visit, I really cannot predict. But let me also say that I am confident that the two Prime Ministers will talk to each other about all issues which are important to both countries.

Question: Mr. Prakash, you mentioned that economic ties are the bedrock of this relationship, and you also mentioned that certain agreements are expected to be signed. What are some of those?

Official Spokesperson: We do expect to conclude a number of important agreements in a number of sectors. The discussions are on. Generally, as you are aware, during these visits discussions continue till the last minute. We will be very happy, as usual, to share the details of the agreements once they are concluded.

Question: Which areas do they concern?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Let me actually point to the fact that Premier Wen Jiabao is coming with a huge economic delegation, with a huge business delegation - and I think many of you have already reported on that - and there is going to be an interaction between Indian businessmen and women and Chinese businessmen and women. It will probably take place on the 15th under the aegis of our major Chambers of Commerce and Industry. So, I think I would refer you to them - to CII, FICCI and Assocham - on the question of what agreements will be signed. I think I can leave a hint that this particular visit by Premier Wen Jiabao will see India and China cooperating closer in the financial sector especially in the area of banking.

Question: This is the largest ever delegation of Chinese businessmen or economic delegations to come to India. And also the Chinese Ambassador here said this morning at FICCI that ...(Inaudible)... on a Free Trade Agreement between the two countries to be launched. Are we going to see that? The Chinese Ambassador also said at the FICCI event that there are ten banks in China and none here. So, is that what you are referring to?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Let me start with your last question first and let me say that I am really impressed by the competitiveness and the adventure that Indian banks have shown in opening up in China. We definitely look forward to seeing more Chinese banks open up in India also.

Question: Are there any at the moment?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): No, at the moment there are not any Chinese banks operating.

Question: And there are ten Indian banks there?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): There are ten Indian banks operating in China, but operating at different levels because, as you probably know, you first have to open up a representative office in China and then there are certain conditionalities that you have to meet before you can upgrade into a branch or branch operations, and even those branch operations are permitted only in foreign currency assets. You have to meet some more requirements before you are able to upgrade your banking operations to be able to do so in Chinese currency, Yuan. So, there are ten Indian banks there but not all of them are branches. Some of them are still at the rep office stage.

Question: Are the issues related to visas for Chinese businessmen coming here and Indian businessmen going there resolved or not?

Official Spokesperson: When we are talking of greater people-to-people exchanges, when you see trade growing at a brisk pace, you see more tourism, more travel for project work and so on, it obviously stems from an environment which facilitates this movement. Visa is a matter which receives constant attention and we are regularly taking steps to streamline the process of issue of visas. Obviously we have to be sensitive to different aspects. But keeping those in view we are steadily moving in the direction of streamlining visas.

Question: Sir, you have not answered the question on the largest delegation of businessmen that is coming.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I think this is one of the largest delegations of Chinese businessmen who have accompanied their Prime Minister to India. Definitely the numbers have been growing over the few days. We first were informed that there would be about 200 Chinese business people. We are now told that there will be 400 Chinese business people. Obviously the growth of the Indian market does hold significance for Chinese businesses especially when they look around the world and look for increased profits and growth. So, obviously this is an important area of cooperation between India and China.

Question: The Chinese Envoy to New Delhi described bilateral relations this morning as very fragile, very easily damaged and not easily repaired. I wonder whether you share his assessment and how you interpret his remarks two days before the Premier arrives.

Official Spokesperson: Let me reiterate that we see this relationship as very important. I mentioned that there is the broadest consensus across the political spectrum in India for cordial and cooperative relations with China. We have a strategic and cooperative partnership. I have enumerated a number of areas where we have growing convergences. At the same time there are divergences which are natural in any relationship. But there is a maturity, there is a confidence, and there is a mechanism to address the divergences without them impacting the convergences in any way.

Question: You said that you have taken up the issue of stapled visas many a time over the past several months. What had the Chinese told? Why it has defied resolution despite our growing relationship in other areas? Secondly, Chinese Premier comes soon after American President and the French President both of whom declared support for India's bid for Security Council as well as NSG. Are we expecting similar announcements by the Chinese Premier?
Official Spokesperson: On the issue of stapled visas my colleague has just mentioned that our concerns in the matter have been very clearly articulated and our Chinese friends are very conscious of our concerns. Secondly, when it comes to India’s membership of the UN Security Council, China had supported our candidature for the non-permanent seat for UNSC and you are aware that India was elected with the largest number of votes. We are certainly in touch with all our friends, our interlocutors on the question of the permanent seat in the UN Security Council for India. China has said, and it is on record, that they understand India’s aspirations to play a larger role in international affairs including in the UN.

Question: Is there any progress on the border negotiations? What can you expect at this meeting?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I think at every round of discussions either between the Prime Ministers or between the Special Representatives of the Prime Ministers of India and China there is progress in our understanding of each other’s positions. I assume that this issue will also be discussed between the two Prime Ministers because it is of importance to both countries. I am afraid I cannot really prejudge what the outcome of their discussions would be.

Question: Mr. Prakash, in the past also India has expressed its concern over a couple of issues like the Chinese development projects in the Pakistan Occupied Kashmir and also Chinese nuclear aid to Pakistan. Will these two issues feature in the bilateral talks? Or will they in some way be taken up with the Chinese?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I think we covered that when we said that all issues which are of importance to each side will be discussed at this meeting.

Question: After the whole visa row and a senior army officer having been denied visa in the past, military exchanges were stopped between the two countries. Will there be a change in that stand?

Official Spokesperson: Let me again reiterate what I have mentioned about this relationship. This is a very important relationship; this is a multifaceted relationship; and both sides are constantly endeavouring to enhance the convergences. As far as the defence cooperation is concerned, for reasons that you are aware it has been paused at the moment. That is what the status is.

Question: The fact that the Chinese Premier will be going to Pakistan from here, a practice that is discontinued by a lot of leaders these days, does it bother us?

Official Spokesperson: It is the prerogative of the visiting dignitary to decide where he wants to travel. We have nothing to say in the matter.

Question: Premier Wen’s visit is coming soon after India’s stand in Oslo attending the Nobel Prize meeting. ...(Inaudible)... atmosphere before the visit? If a specified stand had been taken just before his visit, some critics have written, it would have helped India to raise the tempo for the visit.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): As far as the Government of India is concerned, we did not see any linkage between attendance at the Nobel Peace Prize award ceremony in Oslo and India-China bilateral relations. So, we did not see a connect between the two. Therefore, our Ambassador in Oslo attended the ceremony.

Official Spokesperson: Absolutely. I may just say that this has always been the practice. For the Nobel ceremony it has been the practice for our Ambassador to represent India because we are invited. So, there is nothing new in this. And certainly there is no bilateral connection whatsoever.

Question: FTA or RTA, is there any possibility that the negotiations will be kicked off during the bilateral meeting with Wen Jiabao?

Official Spokesperson: Our trade and economic relations constitute one of the bedrocks of our ties. I also made a pointed mention to the fact that this year China should emerge as our single largest trading partner in goods, that we think that there is still more untapped potential and we are looking at new initiatives to further tap the potential, enhance our trade and economic relations. So, this is work in progress. The idea is to build on convergences, idea is to enhance economic and trade linkages. And both sides are in close touch with each other. We are regularly looking at initiatives to boost trade while checking the trade imbalances that are creeping in. So, all these matters are constantly on the radar screen.
Question: Mrs. Nirupama Rao in her speech to the ORF on December 3, had mentioned that there were some more CBMs in the works, and the border with China being the most peaceful thanks to 1993 and 1995 agreements. But she indicated that there were some more CBMs in the works. So, could you share with us what those CBMs are? If not, are we likely to see any announcements during this visit?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Even the introduction of Chinese in our middle schools, which was mentioned by Joint Secretary (External Publicity), at least we visualize that as a measure which will increase trust and understanding between India and China. In fact, we also look upon this as a step for preparing the younger generation of India for the world which is coming at us in the coming years and coming decades. Obviously Chinese language is going to be important. I would in fact even term this step as a confidence building measure between our two countries. I do not know if that was what the Foreign Secretary had in mind but I look at it this way.

Question: She was talking about CBMs specific to the boundary.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I have nothing else to add to that.

Official Spokesperson: CBMs with reference to the boundary is something that both sides are looking at regularly. Let us also take note of the fact that the India-China boundary has been one of the most peaceful boundaries anywhere in the world ever since 1993. So, we already have mechanisms in place, and we are in regular touch with each other to ensure that peace and tranquility prevails on the boundary as the two sides go about addressing the boundary question through the mechanism of SR talks.

Question: Regarding the permanent membership for India in the UNSC, the last we heard was in 2008 January, the Joint Statement said it. After that we have not heard any public reiteration of that Chinese position. Are you expecting a reiteration of what they said in 2008, or are you expecting an upgrade from there?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, we are certainly in touch with our Chinese friends on this very important matter for us. We believe that we have impeccable credentials to be a permanent member of the UN Security Council. Also a Joint Communiqué is likely to be issued which will give you a feel for all aspects that have been discussed and agreed upon between the two countries during the visit.

Question: Vishnu, you are hopeful that means.

Official Spokesperson: I have said exactly what I have said, nothing more, nothing less.

Question: Will discussions on China’s currency feature during the discussions this week? If so, is India …(Inaudible)… scope the US position of restructuring the currency?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Issues of trade, and definitely the imbalance of trade between India and China will be discussed and are likely to be discussed between the two Prime Ministers, and the other dignitaries that the Chinese Prime Minister will be meeting during his stay here in India.

Official Spokesperson: I mentioned that during the visit we will be discussing all matters which are of mutual and bilateral interest, regional and global interest. After the visit the Joint Communique will be issued which will give a flavor of all that was discussed.

Question: Since you are going to give a very standard answer, my question is to Gautam. The presence of the Water Resources in our Delegation, is it an indication that we will be taking them to Brahmaputra and other issues very vigorously with the Chinese side?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I do not know if I am going to give an answer which is not the standard answer. Whether it comes from the JS(XP) or myself, I think you will get the same answer. The answer is that all issues which are important to each country will be discussed.

Question: Since the troop deployment on both sides across the border is increasing, is there any increasing threat perception from the Indian side?

Official Spokesperson: I thought I have just mentioned that this is a boundary which is peaceful and tranquil, and that we have enough mechanisms in place to discuss any aspect that needs to be discussed to maintain the peace and tranquility along the boundary.

Thank you.
300. Opening remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the delegation level talks with Premier Wen Jiabao.

It gives me great pleasure to extend a very warm welcome to you and the distinguished members of your delegation to India.

At the outset, I wish to congratulate you and the people of China for successfully organizing the ‘Shanghai Expo’ as well as the Asian Games this year. We were touched by Your Excellency’s gesture of visiting the India Pavilion when you visited the Expo for its closing ceremony.

Excellency, this is your second visit to India, and I have no doubt that it will impart new impetus to our relationship and advance our cooperation in new areas. Your visit marks the culmination of the celebrations of the 60th anniversary of the establishment of our diplomatic relations. Earlier this year, the President of India paid a very successful visit to China.

Since 2005, our two countries have maintained an intensive high-level dialogue. Apart from my own bilateral visit to China in 2008, I have met Your Excellency and His Excellency President Hu Jintao close to twenty times in the last five years. This shows the intensity of our interactions.

Since your last visit in 2005, both our countries as well as the international situation has witnessed many changes. The rapid socio-economic transformation of India and China has opened up new opportunities to progress our relations across all fields. A strong partnership between India and China will contribute to long-term peace, stability, prosperity and development in Asia and the world.

301. Opening remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at Indian Council of World Affairs welcoming the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

Your Excellency Premier Wen Jiabao,

Ambassador Sudhir Devare, Director General, Indian Council of World Affairs, Distinguished members of the Chinese delegation,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Good afternoon!

It gives me immense pleasure to add to the words of welcome* which Ambassador Devare just spoke.

We are privileged to have as our guest Premier Wen Jiabao deliver a major address. His visit to India symbolizes the rendezvous between 1.3 billion Chinese people and 1.1 billion Indians. It will set the terms of engagement between the two fastest growing economies in the world. It embodies the determination of the leaders of the largest Asian nations and contiguous neighbours to forge stronger political trust, maturely address differences and build global partnership. Little wonder, therefore, that interest in Premier Wen’s visit is not limited to our two countries. How India and China interact with each other, and jointly with the rest of the world, is a topic of immense contemporary importance.

Very few people can speak about India-China relations as authoritatively and as comprehensively as Premier Wen. As Head of the Government of China for nearly eight years, he has presided over a period of unprecedented intensification of bilateral ties, personally steering our relations from strength to strength. It was during his previous visit in April 2005 that India and China established a Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity. Many of the initiatives and much of the progress in our relations benefited from the wisdom and sagacity of Premier Wen and Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh, and their shared vision of partnership.

The relationship that our leaders have envisaged for India and China is multi-dimensional. It encompasses vigorous political exchanges, wide-ranging government-level dialogues and consultations, across-the-board functional cooperation, mutually beneficial economic and commercial engagement, widespread people-to-people intercourse and strategic cooperation in regional and multilateral initiatives. As countries availing of historic opportunities for economic and social development, India and China see no contradiction in each other's rise. We increasingly realize that it is important to leverage each other's growth and development for our own prosperity and progress. As inheritors of ancient civilizations, the modern nation-states of India and China have the maturity and wisdom to deal with any differences through dialogue and diplomacy. Both of us have an abiding commitment to the Panchsheel principles that we jointly initiated, and realize the importance of mutual sensitivity to each other's core concerns and interests. Therefore, I am confident that we will jointly write an even brighter chapter in our history in the years ahead, with both assuming rightful place in the comity of nations.

As Vice President of the Indian Council of World Affairs, I am delighted that Premier Wen has set aside time in his busy schedule to reach out to scholars, media and the general public of India through his address at this Institute. As someone witness to the meeting between our two leaders this morning, I can say that he shares our own optimism about the strength and potential of India-China relations. I am as eager as all of you to listen to Premier Wen's lofty vision for our partnership and his prescription for attaining that.

With these words, ladies and gentlemen, I invite His Excellency Mr. Wen Jiabao, Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, to address this audience.

302. Joint Communiqué issued during the visit of Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

1. At the invitation of H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of the Republic of India, H.E. Mr Wen Jiabao, Premier of the State Council of the People’s Republic of China, is on a State visit to the Republic of India from 15 to 17 December 2010. Premier Wen Jiabao held talks with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and will call on Smt. Pratibha Patil, President of India. Leaders of the two countries had an in-depth exchange of views on bilateral relations and regional and international issues of mutual interest in a sincere and friendly atmosphere and reached broad consensus.

2. The two sides agreed that as the two largest developing countries in the world, India and China shoulder important and historical responsibilities of ensuring their comprehensive and sustainable economic and social development. They also make a vital contribution to advancing peace and development in Asia and in the world at large. India-China relations go beyond their bilateral scope and have acquired global and strategic significance.

3. The two sides welcome each other’s peaceful development and regard it as a mutually reinforcing process. They believe that their growing relationship offers increasing opportunities to advance their cooperation. There is enough space in the world for the development of both India and China and indeed, enough areas for India and China to cooperate.

4. The two sides reviewed with satisfaction the comprehensive and rapid progress of India-China relations in the last ten years, and reaffirmed their commitment to abiding by the basic principles and consensus concerning the development of India-China relations set out in the Declaration of Principles for Relations and Comprehensive Cooperation between India and China in 2003, the Joint Statement of India and China in 2005, the India-China Joint Declaration of 2006 and A Shared Vision for the 21st Century of India and China of 2008. The two sides decided to enhance strategic communication, advance functional cooperation, broaden cultural exchanges, and deepen and enrich the India-China Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity on the basis of the Five Principles of Peaceful Co-existence, mutual respect and sensitivity for each other's concerns and aspirations.

5. Reflecting this partnership, the two sides decided to establish the mechanism of regular exchange of visits between Heads of State/Government. They welcomed the opening of the telephone hotline between the Prime Minister of India and Chinese Premier and agreed on regular consultations between the two leaders on issues of importance to both countries. They also agreed to establish the mechanism of annual exchange of visits between the two Foreign Ministers.

6. While expressing satisfaction at the growing quantum of bilateral trade and investment ties, the two sides agreed to further broad base and balance trade and economic cooperation, and identify new opportunities to realize the vast potential for future growth. Towards this objective, the two sides:

a) Positively viewed the growing opportunities in the economic relationship and agreed to establish a Strategic Economic Dialogue to enhance macro-economic policy coordination, to promote exchanges and interactions and join hands to address issues and challenges appearing in the economic development and enhance economic cooperation.

b) Set a new bilateral trade target of USD 100 billion by 2015. The two sides agreed to take measures to promote greater Indian exports to China with a view to reduce India's trade deficit. This includes support for Indian participation in China's national and regional trade fairs, advancing of trade facilitation, enhancing exchange and cooperation of pharmaceutical supervision, stronger relationships between Chinese enterprises and Indian IT industry and speedier completion of phyto-sanitary negotiations on agro products.

c) Agreed to expand cooperation in infrastructure, environmental protection, information technology, tele-communications, investment and finance on a priority basis to draw on each other's strengths and pursue mutual benefit and win-win results. India welcomed Chinese enterprises to invest and participate in India's infrastructure development such as in roads, railways and in the manufacturing sector. The two sides agreed to encourage greater mutual investment and project contracting cooperation between businesses of the two countries, appropriately handle economic and trade frictions and differences and jointly oppose protectionism in all forms. They constituted an India-China CEO’s Forum to deliberate on business issues and make recommendations on expansion of trade and investment cooperation.

d) Concluded a Memorandum of Understanding between the Reserve Bank of India and China Banking Regulatory Commission to increase banking and financial cooperation. India and China also agreed to grant permission to the banks of the other country to open branches and representative offices. Modalities will be worked out by the concerned authorities.

7. Both sides reviewed with satisfaction the celebration activities of the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China in 2010. The two sides declared 2011 as the “Year of India-China Exchange”. The two sides further decided to encourage greater exchanges between the civil society organizations, youth, media, scholars, think-tanks, artists and cultural personalities. The two sides agreed to continue youth exchange activities in the next five years. China will invite 500 Indian youth from various fields to visit China within the year 2011. Memorandum of Understanding on Media Exchanges as well as the Programme of Cultural Exchanges between the Government of the People’s Republic of China and the Government of the Republic of India for the year 2010-2012 were signed. Both sides agreed to discuss compiling an encyclopedia on India-China cultural contacts.

8. Both sides recognized the importance of educational exchanges, including promoting wider knowledge of each other’s languages. In this context, the Chinese side welcomed the decision by the Central Board of Secondary Education (CBSE) of India to introduce Chinese as a foreign language in the curriculum of schools in India from the next academic session (April 2011). China will offer support for training Chinese language teachers and providing Chinese language training materials. The two sides declared the establishment of the India-China Outstanding College Students Exchange Programme and would work out the modalities of the Programme through consultations. To facilitate and strengthen intercollegiate and student exchanges, the two countries agreed to consider the finalization of an agreement on mutual recognition of degrees and diplomas.

9. The two sides noted the good cooperation between China and India in the field of trans-border rivers. The Indian side appreciated the flood-season hydrological data and the assistance in emergency management provided by the Chinese side. The two sides reiterated that they will promote and enhance cooperation in this field.

10. The two sides reiterated their firm commitment to resolving outstanding differences including the boundary question at an early date through peaceful negotiations. They reiterated that resolution of the boundary question is one of the ten-pronged strategies agreed by leaders of the two countries. The two sides reaffirmed their commitment to the Agreement on Political Parameters and Guiding Principles for Settlement of the Boundary Question agreed in 2005 and the process of negotiations being undertaken by the Special Representatives and resolved to actively seek a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable solution from the political and strategic perspective. Pending the resolution of the boundary question, the two sides shall work together to maintain peace and tranquility in the border areas in line with the previous agreements.

11. Both countries called for continued international adherence to the principles of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and its Kyoto Protocol including that of "common but differentiated responsibilities". Both sides also appreciated the joint efforts of India and China in the international negotiations towards arriving at fair and balanced climate agreements with the aim of further enabling the full, effective and sustained implementation of the UNFCCC and its Kyoto Protocol according to the mandate of Bali Roadmap. Both sides appreciated bilateral cooperation in the area of mitigating and adapting to climate change and agreed to strengthen such cooperation. They welcomed the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding between the two countries on Cooperation

12. Both sides underlined their unequivocal opposition to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and stressed that there is no justification for any act of terrorism anywhere. They committed themselves to countering terrorism through joint efforts that include disrupting the financing of terrorism. They also recognized the need to implement all relevant UN resolutions, in particular UNSC resolution 1267, 1373, 1540 and 1624.

13. India and China, being each other's neighbour, have a shared interest in the stability, prosperity and security of the wider region. They agreed to intensify their dialogue on various aspects pertaining to this region and work together on realizing their common goals. The two sides believed that as members of the Asian family, stronger neighbourly relations and mutually beneficial cooperation between India and China help foster a peaceful and stable regional environment that promotes equality, mutual trust and mutual respect. India and China expressed their commitment to assisting Afghanistan to become a peaceful, stable, prosperous nation. They emphasized the importance of a coherent and united international commitment to Afghan-led initiatives.

14. The two sides reaffirmed their support for the multilateral cooperation mechanisms in Asia and their positive view on each other's participation in the cross-regional, regional and sub-regional cooperation processes in Asia. The two sides agreed to broaden cooperation within the framework of the East Asia Summit, the Asia-Europe Meeting, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, the Russia-India-China trilateral cooperation mechanism and the South Asian Association of Regional Cooperation (SAARC). Both sides agreed that EAS is making a meaningful contribution to building an open, inclusive and transparent architecture in the Asia-Pacific region. Both sides agreed to work together on projects which strengthen bonds between the peoples of East Asia. In this context, China welcomed India's efforts to revive the Nalanda University. Both sides appreciated the work of the Nalanda Mentor Group and the progress made so far. India welcomed China's contribution of US$ 1 million for the Nalanda University.
15. The two sides expressed their commitment to promoting the multilateral arms control, disarmament and non-proliferation processes. They supported the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of all nuclear weapons, and called on the international community to move forward together to achieve the goal of global nuclear disarmament. The two sides reaffirmed their firm opposition to the weaponization of and an arms race in outer space.

16. The two sides reaffirmed the importance of maritime security, unhindered commerce and freedom of navigation in accordance with relevant universally agreed principles of international law. In this context, they agreed to work together in tackling piracy in the Gulf of Aden.

17. Recognizing common interests and similar concerns on major regional and international issues, the two sides decided to enhance their coordination and cooperation in multilateral forums. China attaches great importance to India's status in international affairs as a large developing country, understands and supports India's aspiration to play a greater role in the United Nations, including in the Security Council. China welcomed India's election to non-permanent membership of UN Security Council during 2011-2012 and both countries agreed to deepen consultation within the Council. Multilateral issues such as climate change, the Doha Development Round of WTO, energy and food security, international financial and economic reform are a particular focus for closer cooperation. The two sides recognized that as the global economy stabilizes and recovers, China and India would strengthen communication and consultation within the G20 framework, jointly facilitate the improvement of global economic governance and advance economic globalization towards balanced development and shared benefits. They agreed to enhance cooperation within the BRIC framework.

18. Premier Wen Jiabao invited Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to visit China during 2011 and Prime Minister Singh accepted the invitation with pleasure. The dates of the visit will be decided through diplomatic channels.

New Delhi
December 16, 2010
Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on the ongoing visit of Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. You are aware that Premier Wen Jiabao is currently on a state visit to India. Yesterday and today he has had meetings with the Prime Minister of India. Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao is here to talk to you about the visit, the meetings and the exchanges. We also have our Ambassador of India to Beijing Dr. S. Jaishankar to the right of Foreign Secretary. And to my left is Shri Gautam Bambawale, our Joint Secretary (East Asia). I would like to invite Foreign Secretary to kindly make her opening remarks.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you, Vishnu. Ladies and gentlemen, we have just completed the talks between the two Prime Ministers - the Prime Minister of India and the Premier of China. This was followed by discussions over lunch. Six agreements were signed. Many of you were witness to that and you have all the details. The Joint Communiqué has been issued and many of you have already seen it. I thought I would begin by describing the atmosphere in which the talks and in fact the visit took place.

Our Prime Minister and Premier Wen Jiabao are meeting for the eleventh time. They have a strong personal chemistry, a very positive rapport, and this permeated the talks they held during this visit. Premier Wen Jiabao’s visit to India in April 2005 in many ways is seen as a turning point in our ties. The personal relationship between the two Prime Ministers was also reflected when our Prime Minister hosted a private dinner in honour of Premier Wen Jiabao last night.

Since 2005 when Premier Wen was last here, the relationship between India and China has undergone a major transformation. The political understandings reached then and in subsequent visits have created a framework in which our cooperation has grown significantly. Both in the Joint Communiqué and the six agreements signed this morning, you can see that we are working together in many more areas than before.
The visit was, therefore, an opportunity for the two sides to take their cooperation to new levels and set out more ambitious goals.

Let me highlight some of the more important outcomes that have been agreed upon. Reflecting the growing relationship, it was agreed that our leaders meet more regularly. In fact, you are well aware that the Foreign Ministers of the two countries are going to have annual meetings from now on. Premier Wen has invited our Prime Minister to visit China possibly next year. Of course, that will have to be worked out but what the Chinese Premier told our Prime Minister was that he would very much welcome his visit to China next year.

You also know that the hotline between the two Prime Ministers, which has now been operationalised, will help set up direct communication between them. Today such personal interactions, you will all appreciate, are a very important part of diplomacy particularly between countries like India and China who are driving many changes in the global order today.

The rapid expansion of our economic cooperation has been one of the major achievements of the last five years. Trade has actually tripled since 2005. We have now set for ourselves during this visit an ambitious target of reaching a turnover of US$ 100 billion by 2015. Moreover, we see the need for a more integrated approach to various economic opportunities. To that end, a Strategic Economic Dialogue has been established.

A CEOs Forum has also been constituted so that the two Governments get inputs from our business leaders on taking the relationship forward. An agreement between the banking regulators of India and China will now enable Branch opening by our respective banks. In short, we are now creating an enabling environment to reach the next economic frontiers.

While trade has expanded, many of you are also aware of our concerns on market access and trade imbalances. This was discussed candidly and constructively with the Chinese side who assured us that they will work to address trade problems. The trade figures in the coming months will hopefully speak for themselves.
A number of initiatives in the field of civil society indicate how broad our interaction with China is today. They will create broader connectivity and higher levels of comfort. In particular I draw your attention to the decision to introduce Chinese as a foreign language for study in the CBSE curriculum from next year. The media exchanges agreement, expanded youth exchanges, and a compilation of a Cultural Contacts Encyclopedia are also significant.

There was a detailed and useful exchange of views on a range of political issues - bilateral, regional and global. You will note that these are reflected in the Joint Communique. I refer to the paragraphs on trans-border rivers, peace and tranquility on the border, climate change, terrorism, Afghanistan, multilateral mechanisms, disarmament, maritime security, and the United Nations.

I must also add that the broad approach which is also articulated in the Joint Communique is of India and China having enough space and enough areas to cooperate. That cooperation takes place on the basis of mutual respect and sensitivity to each other's concerns and aspirations.

Thank you for your attention. I will be happy to take questions.

Question: Madam, paragraph 12 in the Joint Communiqué says, "They also recognized the need to implement all relevant UN resolutions, in particular UNSC resolutions 1267, 1373, 1540 and 1624." In the light of the fact that just a couple of days back JuD Chief Hafiz Saeed has held an open rally in Pakistan and the fact that now it appears in the Joint Communiqué as well, what sort of cooperation do you expect from China in this regard?

Foreign Secretary: In the discussions that the two Prime Ministers had, obviously they talked about the situation in the region and also the relations between India and Pakistan. Our concerns about terrorism emanating from Pakistani soil were expressed, as also the fact that relations between India and Pakistan will really move forward in a substantive manner, once these concerns that we have, these very legitimate concerns, about terrorism and about terrorist groups, and terrorist leaders of such groups pursuing an agenda which is very anti-Indian, is stopped.

That was clearly put forward and also the fact that the need is very much there for China to also look at the real concerns that India has, and the fact that it is only when terrorism is properly addressed and the forces of terrorism are defeated that we will have a stable region. And that affects China also because Premier Wen referred to the terrorism that they face in Xinjiang. And he expressed great sympathy for the victims of the Mumbai attacks and how concerned they have been about the fact that Mumbai had come under attack like that. So, in that context we spoke about, in the context of what is happening in the UN Security Council and 1267 Committee, the need to effectively curb and prevent the activities of organizations like the Jamaat-ud-Dawa was raised. This was a conversation I think which moved in a very open and candid manner where we were able to express our concerns quite clearly, articulate them very clearly. I think the Chinese Premier was given a very clear understanding. I am sure it enabled him to have a much clearer understanding of India’s concerns in this regard.

Question: Madam, just one follow-up on that. What was the Chinese response to our concerns on terror, which you said we brought up in a big way, and particularly about these UN Resolutions? I am asking this because they are still holding out on Masood Azhar being added to 1267. So, while in the Joint Statement they say one thing, is it practically being reflected in what they are doing? Also, did the issue of stapled visas come up and what was their response?

Foreign Secretary: On terrorism I think I have explained myself quite clearly. In some detail I referred to the conversations that Prime Minister had with Premier Wen on this issue. So, I do not need to go into that in greater detail. On the stapled visas issues, in fact Premier Wen Jiabao brought it up himself and he said that China takes our concerns on this issue very seriously. And he suggested that the officials of the two sides should have in-depth consultations with each other so that this issue can be resolved satisfactorily.

Question: What consultations?
Foreign Secretary: On the issue itself.

Question: It is up to them.

Foreign Secretary: Yes, of course, in a sense the ball is in their court. There is no doubt about that. I do not deny that. But I wanted to emphasise that he himself brought this up even before we raised it. Of course, we intended to raise it with him but he brought it up in the course of the conversation and spoke about how they took this issue and the issue of our concerns very seriously. I think that is something that you have to take note of, the fact that he said that.

Question: How has the Chinese Premier responded to these major Indian concerns - the Brahmaputra dam, India’s candidature for permanent membership of UNSC?

Foreign Secretary: On the UN Security Council permanent membership for India, again the two Prime Ministers had a detailed discussion. The Chinese Premier said, they have said this earlier also, that they understand our aspirations and our ambitions to play a greater role in the United Nations including in the UN Security Council, and that China particularly supported the interests of developing countries in this regard on the issue of membership of an enlarged Security Council, and that India is the biggest developing country outside the Security Council and China is in the Security Council. So, they very much paid attention to that particular aspect. That is where the issue stood.

On the issue of cooperation in water resources, on the issue of the run of the river project that they are building at Zangmu on the Brahmaputra, he once again said that this is not designed to affect the interests of people living in the lower reaches of the river, and that whatever they would do in terms of development in the future also would take into account the concerns and the interests of people living in the lower reaches of the river. That he said. And I wanted to add that we have suggested that there is need to enhance our cooperation on trans-border river issues over and above what we are doing now. We have an expert-level mechanism where they provide hydrological data on flood management, emergency management. We have it for the Brahmaputra, we have renewed it for the Sutlej today. But over and above that we have suggested to them that we should enhance our cooperation on trans-border issues and both sides will discuss this further. That is where it stands.

Question: The Chinese Premier will be visiting Pakistan tomorrow. Did our Prime Minister tell the Chinese leader to use China’s enormous influence over Pakistan to expedite 26/11 probe? And also did we convey our concerns over the Sino-Pakistan nuclear deal for building two nuclear reactors?

Foreign Secretary: The fact that Premier Wen is going to Pakistan after India, you should not see this as in any way connected to what we are doing in the India-China relationship. We just have to look at the Communiqué and I think it really speaks for itself. There is evidence here of a multidimensional, well-evolved relationship that India and China have been able to achieve. And this does not compare with any other relationship really because it is the narrative of two of the largest developing countries, two neighbours who have consciously worked on building a relationship despite the complex issues that still remain to be resolved - I refer to the boundary question between the two countries. There is a conscious attempt by both sides to expand the scope of the relationship and the Communiqué speaks for itself. We are really moving from one level to a higher level with each visit, with each such engagement.

On the issue of Pakistan, I answered in the first question about how our concerns about terrorism from Pakistan were expressed very clearly. China’s assessment on the situation in Pakistan was also conveyed to us. Of course, I am not going to discuss confidential assessments but certainly we were able to have a very good exchange of views on what is happening in our region, particularly in the context of the terrorism in Pakistan, the kind of turbulence that we have seen coming out of that country.

On the issue of the nuclear reactors, I wanted to draw your attention to the fact that both countries stated their commitment to nonproliferation objectives and to expand their dialogue on these and related issues in bilateral and international fora. So, we already have a means, a mechanism, a way to handle these issues, and that is how we intend to tackle it.

Question: Do you disagree with Chinese assessment that your bilateral relations are fragile, easy to break, difficult to repair?

Foreign Secretary: You are referring to the statement that Ambassador Zhang Yan made two days ago at a Business Seminar. I think that India-China relations, if you go by the record of the last three decades at least, I would in fact argue that they have become stronger, that the foundations of this relationship have become much more stable. It is true that there is a certain tendency perhaps to regard - I know this happens in the media - that certain angles of the relationship are focused on and given a certain emphasis and a certain prominence. But we who are actually participating in this process of trying to develop India-China relations understand that this interaction between India and China as it has grown over the years has become far more stable and the foundations are far stronger than they were twenty years ago or thirty years ago. So, I see this as a process of gradual evolution. And I certainly do not subscribe to any, what shall I say, extreme judgments about fragility or the fact that one issue on which we have a difference or one issue of complexity can shake the relationship at its very foundations. I do not think that is really plausible. Having said that, I am in no way trying to detract from the professional capacities of the Chinese Ambassador, he is an excellent diplomat and I have always valued my interaction with him.

Question: Any positive movement on resumption of defence contacts between India and China?

Foreign Secretary: What we have agreed, I think what both sides have understood is that both countries should endeavour to create a basis for defence exchanges to continue without constraints.

Question: How do you do that?

Foreign Secretary: You watch this space!
Question: Madam, this is in continuation to the question on stapled visas.

Foreign Secretary: I think I have answered stapled visas.

Question: But was there a stern message that was sent out in terms of the way External Affairs Minister sent out a statement when he went to China saying that Jammu and Kashmir is to India what Tibet is to China?

Foreign Secretary: Our position in the matter is well-known to the Chinese. Premier Wen Jiabao is fully informed of our position in this regard. It was very clear in the discussions that we had last night and this morning.

Question: Madam, we have read this communiqué. Can you say that China and India both are trying to maintain status quo? Otherwise can you tell us what are the steps forward, one or two major achievements? How will you rate this particular visit?

Foreign Secretary: When you have a relationship where we have regular summit meetings, where our Foreign Ministers meet regularly, where we have a number of dialogue mechanisms, you are talking of a relationship that is functioning all the while. It is not that you take one visit as a kind of an expedition or you have to reach a point that you have not reached before. I would say that this is a gradual process and with each visit of this nature, and the communiqué explains that very well, more significance and more substance is added to the relationship. That is how I look at it.

Question: We have been hearing about the hotline for I do not know how long. Is the hotline now working? Can they call? Is it operationalised?

Foreign Secretary: It is operationalised. Believe me, it has been operationalised.

Question: When was it activated?

Foreign Secretary: About three-four days ago.

Question: The hotline is between who and who?
Foreign Secretary: It is between the two Prime Ministers.

Question: One boilerplate phrase which was there in the last three Joint Statements is not here in this one which is India reiterating its commitment to one China policy and Tibet is an integral part. Should we read anything into the fact that this is not here in the Joint Statement?

Foreign Secretary: The issue did come up in the discussions. Premier Wen Jiabao spoke about it, and we reiterated our position, the position that we have always stated through the years.

Question: But did they ask for it to be in the statement? How come it is not there?

Foreign Secretary: I do not believe that really became a bone of contention, let us put it that way, because they understand our position very well. I think what Premier Wen said today was they appreciated the fact that we have been careful about not allowing anti-China political activities on our soil.

Question: My question relates to the fact that leaders of two big countries meet and they do not take even a single question. Is the relationship so fragile..?

Foreign Secretary: Let us put it this way. This is not a relationship made of porcelain china.

Question: The question is, is it not odd that Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Premier Wen Jiabao did not take any questions after that meeting?

Foreign Secretary: Do not read too much meaning into that. Frankly, there is a Joint Communiqué, you saw the agreements being signed. And from our side we are trying to give all the information that is required, that you might be interested in in connection with the visit. Put it that way.

Question: He is probably a little nervous of the Indian media? Is that so?

Foreign Secretary: You should ask the Chinese side? Are there any Chinese correspondents present here?
Official Spokesperson: Yes, the next question goes to him.

Question: Yes. You have mentioned that the two countries have set a higher target for the trade in the next five years. So, during the talks of Premier Wen and Prime Minister Singh, was there a mention about the negotiation about regional trade arrangements or even the free trade zones?

Foreign Secretary: No, we did not go into the question of the regional trading arrangement. As you know, a feasibility study has been done. But as of now that is where the matter stands. To your listeners, since you come from China Radio International, I think our Chinese friends must know and should know that there is a big imbalance in trade between our two countries. Now the trade target is going to reach US$ 60 billion this year. It is very impressive. It has grown phenomenally. But there is an imbalance in that trade. And in fact the trade deficit for India has been growing. So, we have very legitimate concerns in this regard. We would like more market access. And I hope you report this really. We would like more market access, and we would like our pharmaceuticals, we would like our agro commodities, and we would like our IT services, in all of which we are brand leaders internationally, to come into China. So, please take that message.

Question: We have regular annual summit level meetings with the Russians, the French and several other countries, but with China only with Foreign Minister level talks. Of course, one is not talking about RIC and so on. But is that likely to happen in the near future?

Foreign Secretary: Let me put it this way. We do not have a kind of a rigid timetable on how many summits there will be, whether it is annual or biennial. But the trend is certainly pointing in a direction that would suggest, and we can revisit this next year around the same time, that our leaders are going to meet much more frequently. And it definitely would suggest that there will be many many more bilateral summits than before, by that I mean each leader visiting the other country. For instance, next year China is hosting the BRIC Summit, as you know, it is China’s turn, and India is a member. That will be an occasion also when the leaders will meet because our Prime Minister will in all likelihood travel to Beijing for that meeting.
Question: Madam, did the prime minister compare the question of Kashmir and Tibet during his talks i.e. as Tibet is sensitive issue for China, Kashmir is for India?

Foreign Secretary: I have already replied to your question in detail. The question of Kashmir, stapled visas, terrorist threat from Pakistan which are facing for a long number of years-on all these issues there was a lot of detailed discussion with the Chinese Premier. Our position on Kashmir is our core concern. The Chinese authorities, the Chinese Government, the Chinese Foreign Ministry, and their top leadership are fully aware of our position on these issues. They have been left in doubt about that.

Question: Did the Dalai Lama come up at all?

Foreign Secretary: I have already answered the question on Tibet.

Question: Madam, could you please tell us if there was a specific issue about the valuation of Chinese currency? Did it come up as a part of the discussion? If yes, could you please share some details?

Foreign Secretary: We did not talk about the valuation of the Chinese currency. At the delegation-level talks PM was accompanied by a number of Cabinet Ministers from our side. Finance Minister was there, External Affairs Minister was there, the Commerce and Industry Minister was there, the Human Resource Development Minister was there, and the Water Resources Minister was there. During the delegation-level talks, Finance Minister spoke about our cooperation with China in the G20, reform of international financial institutions, currency issues in the larger sense, the quantitative easing policies. So, there was a good discussion on these issues.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.

304. Speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the closing ceremony of Festival of China in India.

Your Excellency Premier Wen Jiabao,

Distinguished Guests

Ladies and Gentlemen

I am delighted to be here today on the occasion of the Closing Ceremony of the Festival of China in India and the festivities associated with the commemoration of the 60th anniversary of establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China.

The Festivals of China in India and of India in China have played a crucial role in increasing awareness and consciousness about each other's countries and cultures.

We have been touched by the response of the people of China to the Festival of India in China. The people of India have on their part watched with admiration the Shanghai Expo and the spectacular conduct of the Asian Games in China. Through this Festival, the people of India have had a glimpse of the richness of China's culture and pageantry.

India and China are two great ancient civilizations that have flourished for thousands of years. The constant exchange of ideas, scholars, goods and scriptures has enriched our relationship through the ages, and finds a strong resonance in modern times.

Contemporary India-China relations are a product of this long evolutionary process of historical contacts, and the underlying emphasis of both civilizations on traditions and values; the arts and culture; dialogue; the spirit of adventure and the unyielding quest for progress and development.

Six decades ago, as young nations, India and China rediscovered each other and understood each other's aspirations. The development of sound relations with China has since then been a constant feature of India's foreign policy.
As the economic weight of the world shifts towards Asia, the steady development of India and China have opened new opportunities for the global economy. Our shared interest in creating a more equitable world order has transformed our relations beyond its bilateral dimension to a strategic and global partnership. There is enough space in the world for both India and China to grow and fulfil the development aspirations of their respective peoples.

As we draw the curtain on the celebrations of the 60th anniversary, we also open our hearts and minds to usher in the next decades of India-China friendship and cooperation. China is India's largest neighbour. We must significantly enhance our understanding of each other through greater exchanges in all fields, whether cultural, tourism, sports, students or scholars. We must close the information gap between us and learn about each other's achievements directly rather than through third sources.

India-China cooperation will be the keystone of the Asian century that is unfolding before us. On this occasion I take this opportunity to applaud the personal role played by Premier Wen Jiabao in the advancement of our Strategic and Cooperative Partnership. This has laid the ground for the future growth of India-China relations.

Thank you.
305. Speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the banquet hosted in honour of the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

Your Excellency Premier Wen Jiabao,

Ladies and Gentlemen

I am delighted to welcome Premier Wen Jiabao and members of his distinguished delegation to India.

Excellency, you are a friend of India, and the architect of the India-China Strategic and Cooperative Partnership established during your landmark visit to India in 2005. Your personal commitment to expanding and strengthening our bilateral ties is deeply valued by the people of India.

Your visit, Excellency, is a fitting culmination to the commemoration of the 60th anniversary year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China.

India and China are young nations but ancient civilizations. Our history abounds in exchanges of scholars, monks, pilgrims, traders, crafts persons, travellers and ideas. These exchanges have enriched our societies. They have given strength and resilience to our relations in modern times.

Since your last visit to India, Excellency, the world has witnessed significant changes. India has been engaged in the task of socio-economic transformation. We have a mutual stake in each other's progress and prosperity. We have lot to learn from each other's development experiences.

Excellency, our relationship has transcended the bilateral dimension and has assumed global and strategic significance. The growing interdependence of nations provides both the opportunity and the obligation for India and China to cooperate together to meet the challenges facing the international community.
The fact is that when India and China, representing more than two and half billion people speak in one voice, the world listens.

Excellency, India-China relations have achieved a high degree of maturity that serves the interest of our two peoples. As the Asian century unfolds, we must work together to bring peace, stability and development to our peoples, to the region and to the world at large. India stands ready to play its part in this important and noble enterprise.

Excellency, the people of India admire the Chinese people for the rapid strides they have made in all fields. Let us pledge to work sincerely for the rapid development of our ties in the second decade of this century for the common good of the region.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to invite you to join me in raising a toast to:

• the good health and well-being of Premier Wen;
• the prosperity and happiness of the Chinese people; and
• long-lasting friendship between India and China.

Thank you.
Interview of Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao by Mr. Karan Thapar for India Tonight Programme on CNBC TV-18.

New Delhi, December 21, 2010.

Interviewer (Shri Karan Thapar): Hello and welcome to India Tonight to an exclusive interview with the Foreign Secretary Nirupama Rao on India-China relations in the wake of Prime Minister Wen Jiabao's visit. I want very much, Foreign Secretary, to spend a significant amount of time of this interview talking about India-China relations. But let us start with Prime Minister Wen Jiabao's visit. The press seems to have had mixed reviews of the outcome. How does the Government view the visit?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): The Government sees this visit as part of a continuum, part of a process, part of a process of evolution in the relationship. Secondly, I would offer the opinion and view that this visit has had a further stabilising effect on the relationship. When our leaders meet and when they discuss issues that concern the relationship it provides for greater clarity, higher resolution, if one were to use an optics-related term, in terms of the way forward. And, I think it is important always to have a long-term perspective about this relationship.

Interviewer: Let us look at some of the issues that would have cropped up. To begin with, unstapled visas. As you said, the Chinese themselves brought up the subject. According to reports in The Hindu, the Chinese had … (Inaudible) … in Beijing that they view this as an administrative, not a political issue. Where do things actually stand today?

Foreign Secretary: As I mentioned earlier, Premier Wen Jiabao brought it up himself even before we could raise it, and we intended definitely to raise it with the Chinese. And the first point he made was that they understood that this was a serious issue. They understand the seriousness and the importance that we attach to this issue because we wanted results. We cannot accept the status quo on this. Therefore, what he told Prime Minister was that we need to sort this out, we need to sit down and discuss this, and let us get our officials to look at this more intensively with a view to resolving it as soon as possible. That is where the matter stands at the moment.
Interviewer: So, you are optimistic that this will be settled and it will be settled reasonably quickly.

Foreign Secretary: Well, that is our intention that it should be settled because the more you allow it to fester and there is a lot of public debate surrounding this issue, and I am sure the Chinese see that there is an impact of this on the relationship. It has not had a good impact on the relationship.

Interviewer: A second issue that would have come up would be India’s claim to permanent seat at the United Nations Security Council. The Indian Express has said that in his private conversation Prime Minister Wen said China would not be an obstacle to India seeking a permanent seat. But none of that was actually in the Joint Statement. So, have you got an indication of support more than we have had in the past from the Chinese?

Foreign Secretary: Whenever Premier Wen and our Prime Minister have discussed this issue, the signals that we have received from the side of the Chinese and particularly from Premier Wen have been that they are looking at this issue with a lot of interest, and they are absorbed in the debate that is developing on this issue both in the United Nations and both within the countries concerned who aspire for permanent membership. So, I think they understand that this particular issue about permanent membership is very important for many of the aspiring members including India. There are other countries also, as you know, who are interested in permanent membership. So, in that context, my reading of the issue is that at the moment of course the issue has not as yet acquired that critical mass and momentum for it to be placed before the UN General Assembly for a vote or for an ultimate decision. But when it comes to that, and hopefully we will see momentum in that direction, the signals that we are getting from China are firstly that they see that the aspirations of a country like India to play a greater role in the United Nations including its Security Council are worthy of support. And ultimately my own reading is that when it comes to the crux of the matter, when it comes to the ultimate decision, China is unlikely to stand in the way.

Interviewer: So, you are actually optimistic that when it comes to the crux, they would not be an obstacle?
Foreign Secretary: Because when it comes to the crux you should have that groundswell of support and movement.

Interviewer: They would not want to stand against the groundswell.

Foreign Secretary: That is what I am saying.

Interviewer: On the question of terror, from the Joint Statement there is no mention of 26/11, there is no mention of bringing the culprits to justice in Pakistan, or Pakistan not indulging in anti-India terror. Your Ministry has suggested - in the briefing this is done - that this was in a sense obliquely covered by reference to UN Security Council Resolution 1267. And in your own press statement, according to the Business Standard, you said Prime Minister Wen expressed great sympathy for the Mumbai attacks and that Chinese people have felt great concern for the victims of Mumbai attacks. Why there was not some of this in the Joint Statement?

Foreign Secretary: The fact that it did not find mention in the Joint Statement, I would suggest that you look at it in the larger context. China and India do have a dialogue on counter-terrorism issues. Premier Wen did bring this up in the conversation with our Prime Minister. Of course, you have to be realistic about the relationship also. China and Pakistan have a very close strategic consensus on many issues, and the depth of that relationship is known to all of us. So, we have a very realistic appreciation of where we stand with China on a number of these issues. But the fact is that with China the relationship that we have been able to build up over the last few years and the dimensions that this relationship has come to acquire have included a very useful discussion on counter-terrorism also.

Interviewer: One of the things that everyone picked up was that the Joint Statement perhaps for the first time after 15-20 years does not mention India's commitment to a One-China policy, it does not recognise or reaffirm India viewing Tibet as part of Chinese territory. Is there significance to that omission?

Foreign Secretary: I mentioned in my press conference that it was not really a bone of contention when we were drafting the communiqué.

Interviewer: They did not demur at all?
Foreign Secretary: They did not demur at all. It did not really figure in the discussion. Well, you can read a number of meanings into that. First of all, every communiqué and every statement that we have made so far jointly with the Chinese has referred to the One-China policy. And in fact there is a mention of all these previous statements in the joint communiqué that we concluded this time.

Interviewer: Which is a sort of …(Inaudible)…

Foreign Secretary: So, in a sense there is a reference to understandings and positions expressed in those earlier documents.

Interviewer: It is not expressed in the document.

Foreign Secretary: Yes, in this particular joint communiqué it does not find a mention.

Interviewer: So, how do you read this? What is the significance?

Foreign Secretary: I see it as an assumption on the Chinese part that they understand India's long-stated position on these issues, that there is really no need to reiterate it because it is assumed that the One-China policy has not changed.

Interviewer: The press has interpreted this to mean that India would like some significant recognition by China of India's total sovereign claim on Kashmir. And if that is not forthcoming, then we discreetly held back our recognition and reaffirmation either One-China or Tibet as China.

Foreign Secretary: I think there have been a lot of dramatic assumptions that have been expressed through various sections of the media and a number of opinion makers, or at least analysts have alluded to what you have just said. But obviously in any relationship there has to be mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty. In fact, one of the principles of the five principles of peaceful coexistence, which find reference in the latest document also, is mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty.

Interviewer: So, there was a message here, subtle and discreet, but there was a message to the Chinese.
Foreign Secretary: And the message that we have been putting across not just subtly, very clearly and candidly to the Chinese is that yes on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir and particularly on the stapled visa issue which directly seems to question our sovereignty over Jammu and Kashmir, we would like more positive statements of support from China.

Interviewer: On the question of Jammu and Kashmir, something that has emerged in the papers shortly after Prime Minister Wen Jiabao left India is the fact that the Chinese seems to only accept 2000 kilometres as the border between the two countries, not 3500, and the missing 1500 is in fact right along Aksai Chin. Does that concern you?

Foreign Secretary: First of all let me say that this is not a position that we came across yesterday or day before yesterday. We have been aware of it for some time. Obviously there are differences of perception, there are divergences between China and India on the length of the border. A lot of it has to do with their conception of the border in the western sector. And that is where the whole issue of Jammu and Kashmir comes in. It is an issue, it is a problem, it is a divergence between India and China. But the question I will pose to you is, "How do we address this issue?" We have a mechanism in place to discuss the outstanding question of the boundary. We have an ongoing discussion with China. And I think both countries need to engage each other more closely on these issues with a view to reducing these divergences.

Interviewer: I want actually to ask you a question about the Special Representatives.

Foreign Secretary: But let me add we certainly do not agree with their perception of the boundary being limited to just 1900 kilometres. In our view it is about 3500 kilometres.

Interviewer: I want to now talk about the Special Representatives and the progress or the lack of progress that they are making. But very quickly, is this another indication from the Chinese that they do not recognise Kashmir as Indian sovereign territory and that is why the 1500 kilometres which has disappeared, which is all in Kashmir, is now being recognised as part of the border.
Foreign Secretary: It is really up to the Chinese to clarify that issue. I think it would be in nobody's interest for this to become an obstacle in the relationship. And that is why we say the ball is in the Chinese court when it comes to stapled visas, when it comes to clarifying their position in such matters. Obviously, it would be in nobody's interest for such an issue to acquire dimensions which create more divergence between the two countries.

Interviewer: Is this in the context of the stapled visas, in the context of China's increasing involvement in POK, another development that worries is about the Chinese overall attitude to Kashmir?

Foreign Secretary: I think you have to search even more deeply in this. And I think our vision in this sense must be directed westward and looking at the China-Pakistan relationship. And there is every indication, and the Chinese also leave us in little doubt about this in terms of their actions and statements, about the depth and substance of the China-Pakistan relationship. It is a strategic relationship that has acquired momentum over the last five decades directly after the India-China conflict over the border in 1962. And it shows no signs of diminishing. We are completely aware of this. It is not that we have sought to turn a blind eye to it when we have engaged the Chinese. What is important now is that we are directly raising issues of concern with the Chinese side in a very candid and in a very forthcoming way. And that is when it comes to discussions on the length of the border, when it comes to discussions about the western sector of the boundary where, mind you, we engage with each other on a day-to-day basis along the Line of Actual Control in a peaceful way.

Interviewer: What I detect from what you are saying is that there is a more upfront assertiveness in India.

Foreign Secretary: Well, there is much more confidence about asserting our positions.

Interviewer: Let us then very briefly come to the border talks that have been held by the two Special Representatives. The media seems to be convinced that the Chinese are either rethinking or perhaps even resigning from the 2005 agreement that settled areas would not be disturbed. Is that actually the case?
Foreign Secretary: I would not make those stark conclusions. We have had the agreement on Guiding Principles and Political Parameters for the settlement of the boundary question way back in 2005, and those agreements still hold. There is nothing to suggest any resiling from those principles.

Interviewer: Any rethinking on Beijing ...?

Foreign Secretary: I would disagree with that. I think it is more a question of the fact that we are getting down to working out a framework for a boundary settlement. And obviously it is extremely complex. You know the discussions that have been held from 1960 onwards on this question of the boundary.

Interviewer: Let us then come to the economic dimension of this relationship. The two countries are hoping to achieve US$ 60 billion worth of trade this year. You have set a target of US$ 100 billion for 2015. But at the same time you have a worrying trade deficit which is just over US$ 19 billion. Can you achieve US$ 100 billion without the trade deficit becoming even bigger?

Foreign Secretary: Before I go into the problem of the trade deficit - and we just discussed the boundary question and the divergences with China on these issues - where is the relationship going to develop in very substantive terms in the future? The record of the last few years would suggest the economic relationship, the people-to-people relationship, the connectivity between the two countries. So, this is really the future of the relationship. You are going to have discussions to resolve outstanding issues, as I said, on the boundary, but where do we move forward on the economic and trade relationship? And that is where the imbalance comes in. I saw Dr. Amit Mitra's very well-argued article the other day about the imbalance being unsustainable. And that is the message that we have made very clearly to the Chinese. They have to open the market to our IT services, to our pharmaceuticals, to our agricultural commodities.

Interviewer: But are they prepared to do that because that is how they secure the trade surplus?

Foreign Secretary: Absolutely. Well, when Premier Wen was here and you saw his public statements on the issue, I think he made the effort - think in all honesty we should acknowledge that - to convey to the Indian public that China took this issue seriously and they intended to work towards reducing this. So, they will have to walk the talk on this really.

Interviewer: Once again, the ball is very much in China's court.

Foreign Secretary: I think so. I think the ball is in China's court. But Indian business is doing well in China today. We have a number of our big names doing good business in China and there is that dimension also of the relationship.

Interviewer:............. Foreign Secretary, let us then come to the bigger canvas of India-China relations. On the one hand China is India's single biggest trading partner - you are hoping to target US$ 100 billion in 2015 - but on the other China supports Pakistan over Kashmir, it would not criticise Pakistan's use of terror as an instrument of policy, it bends laws to supply Islamabad the nuclear reactors, it seems to want to check India's emergence as a leading power, it disputes our sovereignty over Arunachal Pradesh. What sort of a relationship do we have?

Foreign Secretary: Karan, I think it is a question of finding the right responses and charting a course that preserves and protects India's interests given the scenario that you just mentioned. On the trade front I have mentioned to you what we want from China and what we intend to engage them about as far as reduction of the trade imbalance is concerned. On the other hand there is the strategic aspect of the China-Pakistan relationship and all the attendant complexities that it brings to bear even on the discussions on the boundary question, I would try to bring that out. I think the public in this country also needs a more informed debate on China. I think there has to be an element of sobriety also when we look at how we view the relationship with China. This is when we look at the way forward.

Interviewer: Two quick questions. People like Brajesh Mishra often sound concerned about the possibility that Beijing and Islamabad may work together thus posing for India the unique problem of two troublesome neighbours on the north and the west. How does your Ministry view that possibility?
Foreign Secretary: That is a situation obviously that would not be in our interest. And how do we work to prevent that? I think we have to think smartly about dealing with such scenarios. I think we run the risk very often in this country of reducing the relationship with China to one issue or another issue and then developing scenarios around it. I think we need a much more comprehensive appreciation of what the challenges are in this relationship and how do we address these challenges. And, to my mind the best way to do that is to proceed along the lines that we have been going in the last two and two and a half decades, which is more dialogue, more engagement, more leadership level confidence in dealing with each other. I think we have set a certain paradigm for this relationship and I believe it is the right paradigm.

Interviewer: What about the fact that today China is the world's second biggest economic power. It is heading fast towards becoming in fact the biggest. Some people say that by 2050 it would probably replace America as the biggest super power. Does that concern you?

Foreign Secretary: It should concern every Indian and I think it should really spur us on to narrowing this divide or this gap in the race with China. It should not be a relationship defined by competition or rivalry alone because it does not suit either country. Look at the stakes involved. Look at the tasks before us in terms of our development. Look at the miles that we have to cover. So, I think we have to understand as we move forward that we must make use of the opportunities we have to understand China better, to engage it in a way that defends our interests. It is not that we are going to resile from our basic positions and that our security will be hampered in the process.

Interviewer: To what extent is the popular appreciation of the relationship with China hampered by a lingering trauma of ...(Inaudible)... from 1962? To what extent is that holding India back?

Foreign Secretary: You know Karan, I have thought about this and I know there is a generation of Indians that still thinks of 1962 and in many ways our opinions and images of China - the scratches on our minds as it were - to use a term from Harold Isaacs - are very much defined by the trauma of 1962. But, there is a whole new generation of Indians and Chinese that has grown up after that. I would say issues like stapled visas, or this whole debate that has surrounded the possibility of China building dams on the Brahmaputra, or the reports that surface from time to time about how the Chinese look at the border, these are issues that are affecting the public psychology on China today, even much more than 1962, I think.

Interviewer: In which case let me put this to you, some people say that India and China are wary rivals who will perhaps cooperate when their interests converge but will be suspicious of each other when they do not. Would you accept that as an interesting way of viewing the relationship?

Foreign Secretary: I think there will be competition in this relationship and there will be collaboration also. There will be areas of collaboration, areas of cooperation. And, I think the challenge is to find the right balance and maintain a kind of steady equilibrium in taking the relationship, the dialogue particularly with China forward so that we are able to articulate our concerns, we are able to tell the Chinese where we stand on issues of absolutely fundamental interest to us, and, at the same time trying to build greater mutual confidence in this relationship.

Interviewer: So, the keynote is to strike the right balance.

Foreign Secretary: Exactly.

Interviewer: A pleasure talking to you, Foreign Secretary.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you, Karan.
INDONESIA

307. Press Release issued by the Cabinet Secretariat of the approval by the Union Cabinet to open a Consulate General of India in Bali (Indonesia).

New Delhi, November 4, 2010.

The Union Cabinet today approved the opening of the Consulate General of India (CGI) at Bali in Indonesia and creation of four India-based posts including one post of Consul General in the level of Joint Secretary and six local posts.

The opening of the Consulate General of India in Bali will strengthen India’s traditional bonds with Bali and also improve its protocol, commercial and consular presence in the island. This will provide impetus to commercial interaction between India and the target region in Indonesia.

The CGI in Bali will also be beneficial to the local PIO community, which comprises over 230 families within Bali itself, apart from some more Indian and PIO families in neighbouring East and South Kalimantan.

The proposed Consulate will entail an annual recurring expenditure of about ₹ 1,77,01,569/- per annum. In addition, there shall be one time expenditure of Rs. 33,02,344/-.

Background:

An Indian Cultural Centre was established in Bali in 2004, which has done exemplary work in propagating yoga, Indian culture and performing arts. With the increasing popularity of Bali as a holiday destination, the number of Indian tourists going to Bali has also swelled to about 20,000 every year. This has put enormous pressure on the meagre resources of the Indian Cultural Centre, in Bali.
JAPAN

New Delhi, April 30, 2010.

H.E. Mr. Masayuki Naoshima, Minister of Economy, Trade and Industry of Japan, and H.E. Mr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission of India, met in New Delhi on the 30th of April, 2010 for the fourth ministerial-level meeting of the Energy Dialogue between Japan and India.

The two Ministers welcomed the progress made in Working Group discussions by Japanese and Indian officials on energy efficiency, renewable energy, coal and electricity and power generation and the Japan-India Energy Dialogue steering committee meeting.

The two Ministers noted with satisfaction India’s formal joining of the International Partnership for Energy Efficiency Cooperation (IPEEC) in September 2009, and confirmed the importance of bilateral and multilateral cooperation in the fields of energy efficiency.

Recognizing that energy policy can also contribute to addressing climate change, the two Ministers welcomed the Copenhagen Accord. The two Ministers reaffirmed their determination to collaborate closely in the negotiations under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change towards an Agreed Outcome to be adopted at the 16th session of the Conference of the Parties in Mexico in 2010.

In the meeting, the two Ministers reached a conclusion on the following cooperation, outlined below from (1) to (4), in order to build a cooperative relationship between the two countries in the energy sector through concrete and pragmatic projects.

(1) Cooperation in the energy conservation sector
(i) As a follow up to the Joint Statement issued at the Third Meeting of the Japan-India Energy Dialogue, the two Ministers reviewed the progress made in discussions on the Regional Energy Efficiency Centre (REEC) Project, reaffirmed the significance of this project in promoting energy efficiency on a practical level in India, and decided to proceed through the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) by India’s Bureau of Energy Efficiency (BEE), National Productivity Council (NPC) and Japan’s New Energy and Industrial Technology Development Organization (NEDO) for its establishment in Chennai. Capacity building, such as training of trainers and dispatch of experts, will take place by the end of 2010, following the completion of ongoing construction work and the installation of training equipment at the Centre. The Japanese side expressed its willingness to positively consider possible cooperation in other similar initiatives upon receipt of specific proposals from the Indian side.

(ii) The two Ministers welcomed the progress in NEDO’s ongoing commercial-scale model projects for a coke dry-quenching system, diesel generator fuel-switching, and sinter cooler waste heat recovery. Annual CO2 reductions of approximately 255,000 tons can be expected through implementing these projects. It is hoped that further large scale deployment of these technologies will make a large contribution to the fight against global warming. India will work towards their deployment by utilising the Energy Efficiency Services Ltd. (EESL) and other measures.

(iii) The two Ministers welcomed the progress of the feasibility study by NEDO regarding the potential for applying heat pump and heat storage technologies to urban buildings. The two sides recognized that a project to demonstrate such technologies would be useful and could lead to large reductions in energy use in the urban area if widely deployed. It is hoped that these energy-saving technologies together with the Energy Service Companies (ESCO) business model for promoting energy conservation will be mutually reinforcing.

(iv) The two Ministers welcomed the Asia ESCO Conference held by NEDO and BEE in January 2010 in New Delhi. They welcomed that the Conference would help to promote the dissemination of ESCO within the Asian region and further encourage investment of Japanese ESCOs in the Indian market.

(v) The two Ministers welcomed the implementation of NEDO's energy conservation diagnosis programme in the cement and steel sectors, the flagship project of the Asia-Pacific Partnership (APP).

(vi) The Indian side expressed its appreciation for the assistance from Japan (Energy Conservation Center, Japan) with regard to the following ongoing activities as part of energy conservation capacity-building programmes: a) the acceptance of trainees from India's energy conservation agencies designated by BEE or local governments; b) the provision of training programmes on ESCO for officials involved in India's energy conservation policies regarding ESCO and concerned enterprises; and c) the dispatch of experts for small-group activities on energy conservation and the introduction of an energy management manual at India's small- and medium-sized enterprises. The Indian side noted that Japan's cooperation in these areas has been reflected in the formulation of India's National Mission for Enhanced Energy Efficiency. The Japanese side expressed its commitment to the cooperation in these areas through the continued provision of training programmes and dispatch of experts.

(vii) The two Ministers welcomed the renewal of the MOU on cooperation in energy conservation, signed by ECCJ and India's Petroleum Conservation Research Association (PCRA). Based on the MOU, energy conservation management technology in the industrial sector has been transferred through the dispatch of experts and provision of training programmes, and the programme for preparing an energy diagnosis manual for the textiles industry has been launched to improve diagnostic capability. In order to promote this programme, the Indian side agreed to establish an implementation framework by PCRA and concerned industrial associations, while the Japanese side confirmed its continued cooperation through the dispatch of experts and the provision of training programmes.

(viii) The two Ministers expressed their satisfaction with the fact that the technical training programme provided by the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) to foster Indian energy managers has been extremely useful and hoped that they will continue to play an important role.

(ix) The Indian side welcomed the participation of the Japan External Trade Organization (JETRO) and the Japanese Business Alliance for Smart Energy Worldwide in India’s Energy Tech Expo in December 2009 and the International Engineering & Technology Fair (IETF) in February 2010, with a view to facilitating commercial-based technology transfers between Japan and India and providing further opportunities for business matching. Besides, the Indian side welcomed the exhibit of NEDO at the Delhi International Renewable Energy Conference (DIREC) to be hosted by India.

(x) The two Ministers also welcomed the progress of the Japanese ODA Loan Project “Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises Energy Saving Project”, extended by JICA through Small Industries Development Bank of India (SIDBI), with synergetic JICA technical training programme focusing on energy efficiency financing instruments in order to promote energy conservation activities all over India.

(2) Cooperation in the electricity and coal sectors

(i) The two Ministers welcomed the formulation and completion of the action plan on high-efficiency and low-emission coal technologies by Japan and India, in the context of the Major Economies Forum on Energy and Climate Change (MEF), which was finalized in December 2009.

(ii) Several efforts on technology transfer aiming at improving the efficiency of India’s domestic coal use and reducing environmental impact are making progress. With regard to the commercial-based model project for high-efficiency coal preparation to reduce the ash content of coal in India, the two Ministers welcomed the signing of a memorandum of understanding by NEDO and the Ministry of Coal of India as well as the progress in the construction of necessary facilities. The two sides decided to continue discussions on possible cooperation in the area of coking coal washing.

(iii) The Japanese side conveyed its decision to conduct a pre-primary study for improvement of efficiency and environment of coal-fired power stations in India by dispatching experts and providing advice on modifications. The two Ministers welcomed the signing of a memorandum of understanding of the study on improving the thermal efficiency of coal-fired thermal power plants in India and reducing their environmental impact by the Japan Coal Energy Center (JCOAL) and India's Central Electricity Authority (CEA).

(iv) The two Ministers welcomed the continuation of the training programme regarding the transfer of Clean Coal Technology (CCT) since fiscal year 2001. They also welcomed the fact that a total of 92 Indian trainees had been accepted by Japan by fiscal year 2009.

(v) In the area of electricity generation, the two Ministers welcomed the progress in the training programme on thermal power technology by JICA and the implementation of the study on enhancing the efficiency of operating thermal power plants in India's NTPC Ltd.

(vi) The two Ministers welcomed the first India-Japan Joint Venture manufacturing plant for supercritical pressure boilers and turbine generators, which will be operational shortly. They expressed their hope that the JV, set up with financial support from the Japan Bank for International Cooperation (JBIC), will make a significant contribution to meeting India's fast-growing electricity demand and improving India's power generation technologies.

(vii) The Indian side welcomed Japan's Technical Mission to India on coal mining safety in February this year. The areas of cooperation proposed by India are: (a) development of integrated underground communications system (b) instrumentation for monitoring of mine gases and fires (c) detection of partings between adjoining waterlogged unapproachable workings and
(d) rescue equipment and operations.

(viii) The Indian side welcomed the proposal of the Japanese side to hold the Clean Coal Seminar on Japan-India cooperation in areas such as low-carbon coal-fired power plants in India this year.

(3) Cooperation in the renewable energy sector

(i) The two Ministers welcomed the progress of the joint research and development project, proposed by NEDO, regarding technology for evaluating the operating life of solar cells, as one of the activities of the APP’s Renewable Energy and Distributed Generation Task Force. The project involves installing multiple solar panels of the same kind in Japan and India and comparing their life evaluations under actual load conditions. The necessary facilities have been installed in India and demonstrations have started.

(ii) The two Ministers welcomed the joint project by NEDO and the Indian Institute of Technology (Hyderabad) to study a stable electricity supply system for industrial parks through the introduction of Micro Grid and Smart Grid technologies.

(iii) The two Ministers noted that Smart Communities and Eco-friendly Townships along the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor, which aim to develop next-generation energy infrastructure utilizing technologies such as solar energy, smartgrid, smart urban transport, water management, recycling, etc. and IT technology from Japan, are important from the energy perspective. The two Ministers welcomed the progress made under this initiative. The two Ministers noted that a microgrid using mega-scale solar energy could be a good area for energy cooperation as part of this initiative, and NEDO will conduct a feasibility study in this area under METI’s instructions.

(iv) The Indian side welcomed the planned implementation of a training programme on new energy for Indian officials involved in policymaking by Institute of Energy Economics, Japan (IEEJ).
(4) Cooperation in the oil and natural gas sectors

(i) Japan and India welcomed the steady implementation of the joint statement signed by METI of Japan and the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Gas (MOPNG) of India as well as the six MOUs concluded between the two countries' implementing agencies based on the joint statement.

(ii) In accordance with their MOU, the Japan Oil, Gas and Metals National Corporation (JOGMEC) and India's Oil and Natural Gas Corporation (ONGC) Videsh have made steady progress in their cooperation, including holding of the second meeting on exploration cooperation in India and third countries.

(iii) In accordance with their MOU, JOGMEC and the Directorate General of Hydrocarbons (DGH) of India have made steady progress in their cooperation, including holding of the second meeting on methane hydrate in Tokyo.

(iv) In accordance with the MOU concluded between Japan's METI and India's MOPNG, the two ministries have made steady progress in their cooperation, including holding of the seminar on oil stockpiling technology in New Delhi by the two countries' stockpiling implementing agencies --- JOGMEC and India's Oil Industry Development Board (OIDB)/Indian Strategic Petroleum Reserves Ltd. (ISPRL).

(v) The two Ministers highly evaluated the results of the joint research project by the Institute of Energy Economics, Japan (IEEJ) and the Petroleum Planning and Analysis Cell (PPAC) of MOPNG on Recent Volatility in Oil Prices and its Impact on the Asian Economy. They also hoped for the further development of cooperative activities under the MOU including joint research and its contribution to the enhanced stability of the energy market.

(vi) The two Ministers welcomed the renewal of the MOU signed by the Petroleum Conservation Research Association of India and ECCJ as well as the progress in cooperation based on the MOU, such as the dispatch of experts.
The two Ministers recognized the need to facilitate cooperation between the industries of the two countries in order to expand bilateral energy cooperation on a commercial basis. In this context, they took note of the successful holding of the Third Japan-India Energy Forum in India in February 2010 by NEDO and The Energy and Resources Institute (TERI) of India.

Based on the Joint Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Yukio Hatoyama and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, released on 29 December 2009, the two Ministers reiterated the important role of nuclear energy in meeting the growing energy demands in both countries in a safe, sustainable and non-polluting manner. The two Ministers decided to establish a Nuclear Energy Working Group under the Energy Dialogue to exchange views and information on their respective nuclear energy policies from the energy, economic and industrial perspectives. They welcomed that the first meeting of the Working Group is being held right after the Energy Dialogue.

The two Ministers emphasised that bilateral cooperation under the framework of the Japan-India Energy Dialogue will not be limited to those activities mentioned above and will continue to deepen further. They decided to hold the Fifth Ministerial Meeting in Japan at a mutually convenient time in 2011.

309. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on India - Japan 2+2 Dialogue.

New Delhi, July 6, 2010.

The 1st India - Japan 2+2 dialogue was held in New Delhi on July 6, 2010. The Indian side was led by Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao and Defence Secretary Shri Pradeep Kumar, while the Japanese side was led by Deputy Foreign Minister Mr. Kenichiro Sasae and Vice Defense Minister Kimito Nakae.

2. The Prime Ministers of India and Japan had agreed to these 2+2 consultations at Senior Officials level in the Action Plan to advance Security Cooperation of December 2009. Japan is the first country with which India has such 2+2 consultations.

3. Each side provided the other with an exposition of its defence and security policies in the framework of their respective security environments. In this background, the two sides reviewed the India - Japan Joint Declaration on Security Cooperation and the Action Plan to advance such cooperation.

4. The two sides discussed non-traditional threats to security and decided to hold the next meeting of the India - Japan Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism at an early date. Ways to strengthen cooperation in anti-piracy operations in the Gulf of Aden and holding of joint naval exercises were reviewed.

5. The two sides exchanged views on the regional and international security situation.

6. The next round of the India - Japan 2+2 dialogue will be held in Tokyo in 2011.
310. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on India - Japan Foreign Office Consultations.

New Delhi, July 6, 2010.

India - Japan Foreign Office Consultations were held at New Delhi in the afternoon of July 6, 2010. The Indian side was led by Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao, while the Japanese side was led by Deputy Foreign Minister Mr. Kenichiro Sasae.

2. The two sides reviewed progress on India-Japan flagship projects such as the Dedicated Freight Corridor (DFC) and the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor (DMIC) and expressed satisfaction on the steady momentum in implementation of these projects. The Indian side thanked Japan for its assistance in the establishment of the Indian Institute of Technology, Hyderabad.

3. The Indian side expressed the hope that Japanese Foreign Minister Mr. Katsuya Okada would visit India at an early date for the next round of the India - Japan Strategic Dialogue.

4. The Indian side noted with appreciation the removal of several Indian entities from the Japanese End User List, thereby promoting High Technology Trade between the two countries. The two sides also noted with satisfaction the commencement of negotiations on an India-Japan Agreement on Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, the conclusion of which will enable Japanese companies to participate in the civil nuclear energy sector in India.

5. India and Japan will continue to cooperate in their efforts to reform the United Nations Security Council, including in the G-4 framework.

6. The two sides looked forward to the Annual Summit between the Prime Ministers of India and Japan in Tokyo later this year.
311. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (East Asia) on the visit of Foreign Minister of Japan.

New Delhi, August 20, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good morning to you.

My colleague who needs no introduction Mr. Gautam Bambawale, JS (East Asia), and I would like to brief you on the forthcoming very significant visit of the Foreign Minister of Japan.

His Excellency Katsuya Okada, the Foreign Minister of Japan will be arriving tomorrow on an official visit for the Fourth Strategic Dialogue with his Indian counterpart, Hon’ble S.M. Krishna. He would be calling on the Prime Minister, where-after there would be the delegation level talks. It would be followed by a press interaction. The FM of Japan would be meeting the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission. The day after tomorrow, on the 22nd, he has also some engagements including a likely meeting with the Minister of State for Environment and Forests.

The Foreign Minister of Japan would be assisted by the Japanese Ambassador in New Delhi; the Director-General of Southeast and Southwest Asian Affairs from the Japanese Foreign Office; and a number of other senior officials. The External Affairs Minister would be assisted by Shrimati Nirupama Rao, the Foreign Secretary; our Ambassador in Tokyo; Joint Secretary (East Asia) Mr. Gautam Bambawale; and other officials.

The mechanism of the Strategic Dialogue at the Foreign Ministers level was instituted in December 2006 during the visit of our Prime Minister. The third round of the Dialogue was held in June last year in Tokyo when EAM visited Japan.

Within the framework of Strategic and Global Partnership which was unveiled in December 2006, during the visit of the Prime Minister of India, we now have a number of key dialogue mechanisms between the two countries to concretize, to deepen our multifaceted bilateral relationship. The Strategic Dialogue between the two Foreign Ministers is one of the very vital such mechanisms.
Another key element of our bilateral Strategic and Global Partnership is the practice for the two Prime Ministers to have an annual summit meeting alternately in Japan and India. Soon after assuming office Prime Minister Hatoyama had visited India for the fourth annual summit meeting with the Prime Minister of India in December last year. During the visit, a Joint Statement was signed between the two Prime Ministers on the new stage of India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership.

India-Japan relations have undergone a significant and qualitative shift in recent years. I would also like to add here that Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Prime Minister Naoto Kan met on the sidelines of the G20 Summit on the 27th of June in Toronto, practically within days of Prime Minister Kan assuming office, when both sides reiterated their resolve to enhance our mutually beneficial Strategic and Global Partnership.

The practice of high-level exchanges has gained momentum in the recent years. Just to cite a few instances, the National Security Advisor visited Japan in October as Prime Minister's Special Envoy when he also called on the then Prime Minister Hatoyama. Our Defence Minister, Raksha Mantriji, visited Japan in November 2009 when it was decided that India and Japan would have annual meetings at the level of Defence Ministers. Within the framework or consequent to that decision, the Defence Minister of Japan Toshimi Kitazawa was in India on the 29th April - 1st May this year when he also called on the Prime Minister of India.

Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao was in Tokyo in December for discussions with her counterpart. Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori, who is known as one of the key architects of the modern-day relationship between India and Japan visited in March this year. He had a meeting with the Prime Minister. We had another significant meeting of the fourth round of the India-Japan Energy Dialogue, and the third round of Japan-India Policy Dialogue between the METI Minister (the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Investment of Japan) Mr. Masayuki Naoshima and Deputy Chairman of Planning Commission in New Delhi on 29th April - 1st May 10. These are just a few key exchanges that have taken place in recent months, which would give you a sense of the quality and the level of the dialogue between the two countries. The 4th round of the Strategic Dialogue is taking place in this background when we are witnessing an all-round progress in our ties. I would like to briefly elaborate.
Our trade and economic ties are a vital component of this relationship. As per official Japanese statistics, in 2008-09 our bilateral trade was more than 12 billion dollars. Japan has now become our sixth largest investor in India. In recent years Japanese investments have shown a marked increase. In the last ten years actual Japanese investments have already exceeded four billion dollars, of which a sizeable proportion happened just in the last two to three years. Already, 627 Japanese companies have business operations in India and over a 1000 have rep offices.

It is also quite significant, that successive surveys since 2007 of the Japan Bank for International Cooperation (JBIC) have identified India as a most preferred long-term investment destination for Japan amongst all countries in the world. Recognizing the tremendous potential, recognizing the strides that we are making, the two sides are in the process of negotiating a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) the thirteenth round of which was held in Delhi recently.

Japan has also been extending very valuable assistance to us, which we greatly appreciate, for a number of flagship infrastructure development projects. Amongst them are the dedicated freight corridors, the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor, the IIT in Hyderabad and so on. We are also the largest recipient of Overseas Developmental Assistance (ODA) from Japan in the last few years. In 2009-10, the Japanese ODA grant was more than 218 billion yen. We greatly appreciate Japanese support and we have been putting it to very good use.

Ours is a multifaceted relationship encompassing practically all areas of interest including the very vital sector of energy. As I mentioned, we already have a Ministerial-level dialogue the fourth round of which took place in April-May. Japan is one of the world leaders in cutting-edge technologies. We are quite interested in collaborating with Japan in green technologies including clean coal, renewable resources of energy and technology for enhancing energy efficiencies.

I may also add that on the 25th of June this year, FM Okada announced the commencement of negotiations on civil nuclear cooperation between India and Japan. The first round took place in Tokyo on 28th and 29th June.
Again, in October 2008, during the visit of our Prime Minister, a Joint Declaration on Security Cooperation was signed. And during the visit of PM Hatoyama in December last year, an action plan on security cooperation was issued. We now have regular defence exchanges, port calls, consultations between the two sides on matters of maritime security, marine environment, anti-piracy, security of sea lanes of communication, coastguard cooperation, and so on. We have also instituted a practice for our Defence Ministers to meet every year.

The first round of the Two-Plus-Two Dialogue was held on the 6th of July, 2010 which was led by Foreign Secretary and Defence Secretary at this end and their Japanese counterparts. Steps are similarly being taken to enhance people-to-people contacts and parliamentary exchanges. Beginning 1st of January 2010 we initiated the practice of visas on arrival to visitors from Japan plus some other countries.

That is the broad canvas that we see of the bilateral relationship. During the fourth round of Strategic Dialogue, EAM and Foreign Minister Okada will have wide-ranging discussions on bilateral matters, on regional and multilateral issues of interest. Their discussions would also be preparatory to the forthcoming visit of the Prime Minister of India to Japan.

As two major democracies and economies in Asia, Japan and India share common values and economic complementarities. That is spurring cooperation in various areas which I have just enumerated between our two countries.

Thank you. My colleague and I would be happy to address a few questions.

Question: Today the Japanese Foreign Minister has said in Tokyo that he wants a clause that Japan will get out of the Nuclear Cooperation Treaty, if India detonates a nuclear device. Is India agreeable to this clause?

Joint Secretary (EA) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): I do not think I have any comment to make on that because I do not want to negotiate in public through the media. That is something we will take up with our Japanese counterparts, if at all they make this point to us, when we have the next round of discussions on civil nuclear cooperation between India and Japan.

Question: With the negotiation with Japan on the civil nuclear cooperation, what is their stand on this ...(Unclear)... regime? Are they insisting on any convention like CSC? How do they look at it?

Joint Secretary (EA): I am afraid my reply is the same. I do not want to negotiate through the media; I do not want to negotiate through a public forum. As far as the civil nuclear cooperation issue is concerned, we greatly appreciate the position of the Japanese Government where on 25th of June, as Joint Secretary (XP) told you earlier, they publicly announced the formal commencement of negotiations between our two countries on agreement for cooperation in peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Those negotiations are currently on. Let me say that there is no timeline which has been laid down for the conclusion of these negotiations. But both sets of negotiators, are working towards a good agreement which will be a win-win situation for both India and Japan.

Official Spokesperson: Also please do appreciate that we have had one round of discussions so far and discussions are ongoing. Here I may also add that we are appreciative of the support that the Japanese side provided to us at Vienna, which enabled a unanimous decision to be taken by the Nuclear Suppliers Group.

Question: When is the next round of negotiations going to be held? And also what is the status of CEPA? Are we confident that ...(Inaudible)... Prime Minister ...(Inaudible)... by the time?

Joint Secretary (EA): As Vishnu just mentioned, both sets of negotiations are currently ongoing. The first round of negotiations or talks on civil nuclear cooperation took place in Tokyo on the 28th and 29th of June. The dates for the next round of talks have not really been set. But they will happen sooner rather than later. Obviously, we are hoping that the Japanese negotiating team will come this time to India. When that happens, we will let you know.

As far as CEPA is concerned, I think both Governments are placing a lot of importance on its conclusion. There is another round of negotiations which is scheduled to take place in Tokyo in the first week of September when our Chief Negotiator the Commerce Secretary visits Tokyo. I do not want to prejudge what the outcome of those negotiations will be. But let me just add once again that both Governments in India and Japan are looking forward to a successful conclusion of this very important agreement between our two countries.

Question: There are some functionaries in Japan who are opposing this deal; do you think it will impact the relations existing between the two?

Official Spokesperson: As I told you and if you observe, our relations are getting progressively strengthened and they are getting strengthened in different sectors, both sides-the Indian as well as Japanese sides give them a lot of importance; and this is a process which is constantly on the increase.

Question: How do you view the recent reports in the media, particularly in the Indian media, of Japanese functionaries like Mayors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki expressing concern? One understood that Indian Government and Japanese Government have already gone through this entire exercise and probably we were much beyond these very nascent sort of reservations, objections, etc.

Joint Secretary (EA): You are right. We have seen these viewpoints expressed in Japan. But we are also aware that there are certain sensitivities in Japan on this entire nuclear issue. After all Japan is the one country which has actually been the target of such weapons. So, we appreciate the fact that there are these viewpoints out there in Japan. But I think it is for the Government of Japan to handle these views. The Government of Japan has taken a decision to move ahead, which they formally announced on the 25th of June, and I am sure they did that after considering all the different viewpoints which may be there out in Japan, just as the Government of India considers various viewpoints in India on any matter including on civil nuclear cooperation.

Official Spokesperson: And also to add that India and Japan share a common goal of a world free of weapons of mass destruction. India strongly believes that such an arrangement should be comprehensive, universal, non-discriminatory, and verifiable. So, we are on the same page there.
Question: There are reports about the Pakistan Foreign Minister accepting Indian aid, which they announced in New York. Can you tell us about it?

Official Spokesperson: You are aware that on the 13th of August, EAM called Foreign Minister Qureshi. Yesterday, the Prime Minister spoke to his Pakistani counterpart Mr. Gilani to condole the loss of life, loss of property, the devastation and the deaths caused due to the huge floods in Pakistan which is our neighbour. EAM had offered and Prime Minister reiterated that offer, for providing relief material and also said that we are willing to do more. Foreign Minister Qureshi has conveyed acceptance for India's offer to provide relief material. And we welcome the decision by Pakistan to accept the offer of assistance that has been made. It is a goodwill offer, in the spirit of solidarity and goodwill for the people of Pakistan. We believe that India and Pakistan share a common destiny and also that it is a common interest for both our countries to work towards having a cordial and cooperative relationship.

Question: Was the assistance offered in terms of money or was it in terms of relief material for five million dollars?

Official Spokesperson: If you look at the Press Release that was issued on 13th August, it says that Government of India has offered assistance of five million dollars for provision of relief material to Pakistan to assist in the flood relief efforts.

Question: We are continuously seeing reports that the damage caused by the floods in Pakistan is growing by the day. Does the Indian Government intend to increase, add to the five million dollars that you have offered to Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: Yesterday, in his telephonic conversation with Prime Minister Gilani, Dr. Manmohan Singh the Prime Minister of India said that we are willing to do more. We are pained at the loss of life, the damage to property in Pakistan; and in this hour of need India is willing to offer a helping hand.

Thank you.

New Delhi, August 21, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Welcome to the press interaction. First, the External Affairs Minister of India Mr. S.M. Krishna will make an opening statement. Next, the Foreign Minister of Japan His Excellency Katsuya Okada would be making a statement.

May I invite the External Affairs Minister to please make his opening statement?

External Affairs Minister of India (Shri S.M. Krishna):

Your Excellency Foreign Minister Okada,

Members of delegation

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media.

Foreign Minister Okada and I have just concluded the 4th round of the India-Japan Strategic Dialogue. It has been a pleasure to welcome Foreign Minister Okada on his first official, bilateral visit to India as the Foreign Minister of Japan.

Earlier today, we had a productive exchange of ideas on how to further strengthen the many dimensions of the India-Japan Strategic & Global Partnership. We discussed ways of further consolidating the excellent political, economic, security and people-to-people relations that India and Japan enjoy.

We affirmed the fundamental and inherent strength of India-Japan relations, which is demonstrated in the continuing logic of our Partnership which has withstood changes in Government in both our countries. We agreed on the pivotal role of economic cooperation in steering our ties forward. We recognized that both sides have a mutual stake in each other's prosperity and progress. I thanked Japan for their continuing Official Development Assistance to India as well as their assistance to flagship infrastructure projects like the Dedicated Freight Corridor, the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor and the establishment of IIT-Hyderabad. FM Okada reiterated Japan's commitment towards these projects.

I conveyed to Foreign Minister Okada our appreciation of Japan's decision to commence negotiations on a bilateral Agreement on the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy. As you are aware, the first round of negotiations was held in Tokyo on June 28-29 this year. We agreed that the negotiations will continue quickly and that we will jointly work towards a good Agreement which will result in a win-win situation for both India and Japan. We do not intend fixing set a time-line for the conclusion of such an Agreement.

I thanked the Government of Japan for removing 11 Indian entities from their End User List. This will provide a big boost to High Technology Trade between India and Japan.

We exchanged views on the evolving regional architecture in Asia and agreed to work together in ensuring that such an architecture is open and inclusive. As member-nations of the East Asia Summit we welcomed the ASEAN Foreign Ministers decision to move towards the inclusion of the United States and Russia in the EAS.

We also agreed to continue and enhance our consultations within the G-4 process for reform of the United Nations including its Security Council. I have accepted Foreign Minister Okada's invitation to meet with other G-4 Foreign Ministers in New York in September this year on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly Session.

We also discussed regional issues of interest to both India and Japan. We also agreed to enhance dialogue between the Foreign Offices of our two countries on several regions. We decided to embark on a new Dialogue on Africa, with a view to synergizing our developmental efforts in that continent.

We discussed global issues like climate change, non-proliferation and disarmament. I conveyed our willingness to Foreign Minister Okada to work with Japan to ensure a balanced, comprehensive, equitable and effective outcome in the UN-led process on climate change at COP-16 in Mexico. On disarmament issues, I conveyed that India and Japan share the goal of a nuclear weapon-free world. We are ready to work with Japan to achieve such an objective in a comprehensive, non-discriminatory and verifiable framework.

Foreign Minister Okada invited me to Japan for the next round of the Annual Strategic Dialogue. I have accepted his invitation with pleasure and look forward to visiting Japan at a mutually convenient time next year.

Thank You.

Foreign Minister of Japan (Mr. Katsuya Okada): Today, together with External Affairs Minister Krishna, we held the fourth round of the Foreign Ministerial Strategic Dialogue. We were able to engage in an extremely useful exchange of views on the efforts to further consolidate our bilateral relations and on numerous regional and international issues.

On economic cooperation, as Minister Krishna just mentioned a while ago, we agreed that with regard to the Dedicated Freight Corridor project and the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor project we shall continue to implement these projects steadily. In the meeting I stated that India already is the largest recipient of Japanese Official Development Assistance, and that we shall continue to firmly work with each other on this economic cooperation in the days ahead as well.

As the Minister has just mentioned earlier with regard to East Asia Summit, we also confirmed that we shall welcome the inclusion of both the United States and Russia. We also exchanged views with regard to such countries as Afghanistan, Pakistan and North Korea.

Having said all that, broadly speaking we concentrated notably on the following three points in our discussions - first economic area, second civil nuclear cooperation, and thirdly UN Security Council reforms. First with regard to our economic relations, I said that thanks to the efforts made by both our countries we have seen a notable deepening in the economic relations between our two countries in recent times; and yet they still fall short of their potentials and, therefore, we really need to further redouble our efforts to raise our economic relations.

I said that it will certainly not be beyond our imagination if say trade and investment relations or people-to-people contacts between our two countries in the economic sphere grew ten-fold from the present level. In this connection I made two specific suggestions. The first is to establish an Economic Ministerial Meeting.

The second point I have made was with regard to Economic Partnership Agreement. We believe that the negotiations on EPA should be finalized by the time Prime Minister Manmohan Singh visits Japan. We exchanged views in our meeting today on the remaining issues.

I would also like to speak of the second subject which is the civil nuclear cooperation agreement. I first expressed my appreciation for the efforts that have been made to date by India for nuclear nonproliferation and towards a nuclear weapons free world. Having said that, I also stated very candidly that the decision to launch the negotiations for the nuclear cooperation agreement was probably one of the toughest decisions that I had to make as Foreign Minister amongst the numerous decisions that I have made so far.

The background to that is that Japan is the only country that has experienced atomic attacks and against the policy of seeking a nuclear weapon free world. And would it not run counter to that policy of Japan to seek a nuclear weapon free world, if we are to engage in nuclear cooperation with a country, India, that is not a member to NPT?

Considering that domestic criticism in Japan is high, I asked for consideration on the part of India so that this philosophy of nuclear disarmament and nonproliferation would be contained in the nuclear cooperation agreement. In addition to that I also conveyed to Mr. Krishna that Japan also attaches importance to the efforts that India makes and will be making towards an early conclusion and ratification of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty as well as efforts towards Fissile Material Cut-Off Treaty talks.

Let me turn to the third point which is the reform of the UN Security Council. As External Affairs Minister has already mentioned, indeed I did make a proposal that the G4 Foreign Ministers gather on the margins of the UN General Assembly meeting in September to discuss this matter. I suggested that this question of the UN Security Council reform should be considered as an important part of global governance issue. We reaffirmed that Japan and India shall cooperate with each other in order to realize these reforms. And I look forward to cooperating very closely with India on specific ways and means shall I say in approaching African countries in this regard.

I might also add that in the meeting that I had earlier today with Prime Minister Singh, I also gave an outline of these three points.

Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Excellency, thank you very much.

The two Ministers would be very happy to take two questions from each side. You may like to address your question to either of the Ministers but please indicate whether the question is for the External Affairs Minister or for the Foreign Minister. Also, please introduce yourself and your organization. You are requested to kindly restrict your questions to India-Japan relations. The first question goes to the Japanese side.

Question (Japanese Media): I would like to ask questions with regard to economic relations. You mentioned that in the meeting you suggested that the Economic Ministers meeting be held. I wonder first of all what sort of themes you have for the Ministerial meeting, their framework, and when likely the first meeting would take place? Secondly on EPA, I understand that promoting EPA is one of the major pillars of the Democratic Party of Japan Administration's growth strategy. I want to know what will be the strategic significance of finalizing EPA talks between Japan and India by the time Prime Minister Manmohan Singh visits Japan, and the likely impact that it would have on the Japanese economy. Thirdly with regard to the remaining issues, I wonder how you intend to settle those issues within the coming several months? Are you going to make some political judgment towards that settlement? These are all questions for Minister Okada.

Foreign Minister of Japan: First with regard to Economic Ministerial meeting. In fact, just next week I shall be attending a similar Economic Ministerial meeting between Japan and China as Chair. So, the idea is to establish a similar gathering between Japan and India as well. In this connection I also suggested that one possibility might be to combine or have private business people attend as well. This after all is just a proposal that I made today, and I appreciate it if the Indian side would be kind enough to consider this possibility.
The question with regard to EPA was, will it really be effective? My answer to that would be, well the effects could be unfathomably deep. Some problems do remain. However, my understanding is that the talks are proceeding relatively smoothly. Ultimately, I think the matter may have to be put to a political decision. Just yesterday, Ministers concerned in the Japanese Cabinet gathered and to some extent discussed this Japan-India EPA. After returning to Japan I shall again discuss these remaining issues with my colleague Ministers. But I hope that we shall be able to make our political decision so that when Prime Minister Manmohan Singh visits Japan we shall be able to have an agreement.

What I said to Prime Minister Singh was that we really have to raise the Japan-India economic relations one step or two steps above the current level, one stage or two stages above the current level. I believe that this EPA will serve as an important means to do that.

Official Spokesperson: Due to paucity of time I would earnestly request you all to please restrict yourself to one question either to the External Affairs Minister or to the Foreign Minister.

Question (Indian Media): My question is to the Foreign Minister of Japan. What specific commitment on nonproliferation issue do you expect from India before the Indo-Japanese nuclear deal is finalized? Also is it true about the reports that Japan is insisting on a clause which says if India tests again the deal will be over?

Foreign Minister of Japan: It is really about negotiations of the agreement that will be proceeding from now on and, therefore, I believe it is best not for me to say anything definitively. Having said that, I look forward to engaging in in-depth discussions with the Indian side regarding the formulation or wording so that the philosophy of nonproliferation and disarmament will be built into the agreement. I do not think we can say, we can suggest that India refrain absolutely from conducting any nuclear tests. But if such a thing were to happen, then I think Japan will have no option but to state that we shall suspend our cooperation.

Question (Japanese Media): I would like to ask these questions for Minister Okada with regard to the nuclear cooperation agreement. Minister Krishna earlier mentioned in his opening remarks the discussions regarding peaceful uses of nuclear energy. I wonder, Minister Okada, if you could explain what sort of discussions you had, and also essentially what sort of exchange of views did you have on this matter. Secondly, have you got any rough idea as to when you wish to conclude the nuclear cooperation agreement?

Foreign Minister of Japan: I was not entirely clear about the purport of the question. But these are discussions now on the nuclear cooperation agreement and as such it goes without saying that we are discussing peaceful uses of nuclear energy. As for timeline, I would say as soon as possible. But we have not really set any specific deadline.

Question (Indian Media): My question is addressed to Indian Foreign Minister. Sir, how do you plan to first of all address Japan's concern on the testing of a nuclear device? If I may drift from this, China has also expressed concern over the meeting of Dalai Lama with the Prime Minister. Can you just clarify on both?

External Affairs Minister of India: The very fact that Japan has commenced negotiations with India in order to work out a bilateral agreement on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the first round of negotiations were held in Tokyo, and we will continue a follow-up on that as quickly as possible. And as I mentioned in my opening statement, there is no timeline for the conclusion of any such agreement.

With reference to the visit of Dalai Lama, the Indian position has been stated and repeatedly. And it is unequivocal and it is categorical. I have mentioned this to my esteemed friend the Chinese Foreign Minister that Dalai Lama is an honoured guest in India, and he is a spiritual leader, and he has been held as such by millions of Indians, and we do not encourage anyone to get into political or other activities which will concern the relationship between two countries. It has also been made abundantly clear that Tibetan Autonomous Region is a part of the People's Republic of China. I think that should bring down the curtain on any controversy on this question.

Official Spokesperson: The interaction now draws to a close. Thank you for your presence.
Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao and Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy on Prime Minister's three-nation (Japan, Malaysia and Vietnam) visit.

New Delhi, October 22, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and wonderful to see you all. You are aware that Prime Minister is departing on Sunday on a very important three-nation tour of Asia which will take him to Japan, Malaysia and Vietnam. Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao and Secretary (East) Ms. Latha Reddy are here to brief you on this very important visit. I would also like to introduce two of my colleagues who are here. To my left is Mr. Gautam Bambawale, our Joint Secretary (East Asia), and to the right of Secretary (East) is Mr. Suresh Reddy, Joint Secretary (ASEAN).

May I now invite Foreign Secretary to please make her opening remarks?

Foreign Secretary (Smt Nirupama Rao): Friends

On October 24, the Prime Minister will embark on a significant three-nation Asian tour covering Japan, Malaysia and Vietnam.

As you are well aware, India enunciated its 'Look East' policy in 1992. Our strategy was to qualitatively enhance synergies and civilizational linkages with the dynamic East and South East Asian region. Over these past 18 years we have made visible progress in attaining these goals. There are dimensions to India that encapsulate an identity that is South Asian, that is South-east Asian, that is East Asian. India, is now a member of the East Asia Summit and holds annual Summit meetings with the ASEAN. Our relations with Japan stand transformed. The Indian economy is getting increasingly integrated with those of its East Asian partners. PM's three nation Asian tour is organically defined by this process.

PM will first visit Japan for his Annual Summit with Japanese Prime Minister Naoto Kan. He arrives in Tokyo on the evening of October 24th. On Monday October 25, PM and Smt. Gursharan Kaur will have an audience with their Majesties, The Emperor and Empress of Japan.
The same evening, PM will hold extensive discussions with Prime Minister Naoto Kan both in restricted and delegation level sessions, on bilateral, regional and global issues. The Prime Ministers are expected to announce the conclusion of negotiations on the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement or CEPA. The agreement signifies the economic alignment of two of the largest economies in Asia and would lead to a marked increase in our business and economic ties. CEPA is a win-win proposition for both our countries.

Prime Ministers Singh and Kan will also discuss Japanese involvement in major infrastructure development projects in India, such as the Dedicated Freight Corridor and Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. India continues to be the largest recipient of Japanese ODA, of which we are very appreciative.

India-Japan consultations are expected to cover bilateral security cooperation that has been progressing well in the context and framework of the Joint Declaration on Security Cooperation and the Action Plan on Security Cooperation signed last December in New Delhi. High Technology Trade and Energy Cooperation including renewable and civil nuclear, are also subjects that are receiving high level attention.

India and Japan have a similar outlook on a host of regional and global issues, including UN reforms, regional integration within East Asia and the rejuvenation of Nalanda University. Fellow G 4 countries, we have been engaged with the comity of nations in ushering-in earliest expansion of UNSC, both in permanent and non-permanent categories.

Some important documents are likely to be signed. PM Kan will also host a banquet in honour of PM and Smt. Gursharan Kaur.

Prime Minister inter alia, will meet a number of Japanese dignitaries including Minister of Foreign Affairs, Minister for Economy, Trade and Industry, as well as, former Prime Ministers Mori, Abe and Fukuda, besides DPJ Secretary General and former FM Okada. He will address a Business event organized by Nippon Keidanren. As such, PM will have a full program in Japan which will advance our Strategic and Global Partnership.

On the second leg of his tour, the Prime Minister will pay an official visit to Malaysia from 26 to 28 October, at the invitation of the Prime Minister Dato' Sri Mohd Najib Tun Abdul Razak. The latter had earlier been on a State visit to India in January this year.

India and Malaysia have traditionally enjoyed close and friendly ties. Malaysia is also home to one of our largest overseas Indian-origin communities of about 2.1 million, constituting 8% of the country's population, besides some 150,000 skilled and semi-skilled Indian workers. Thousands of our students study in each other's country. As such to enhance people to people ties, an Indian Cultural Centre was opened in Kuala Lumpur in February 2010.

Malaysia is our second largest trading partner in the ASEAN region. Malaysian investors are increasingly viewing India as an attractive destination. Malaysian construction companies have a good presence in India and have already completed 52 construction projects worth US$ 2.34 billion. 35 more projects are in the pipeline. To give our economic engagement a strong impetus, the Prime Ministers are expected to announce the conclusion of negotiations on the bilateral Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement or CECA.

PM will have in-depth discussions with his counterpart on all facets of bilateral relations, as well as regional and global issues of mutual interest. Prime Minister's other engagements include an audience with the King and Queen of Malaysia and meeting with the Deputy Prime Minister. Both Prime Ministers will launch the CEOs' Forum signaling their strong expectation that business and industry on both sides, will foster a closer and deeper economic engagement. PM will deliver the Khazanah Global Lecture 2010, pay a visit to 'Little India' and will attend an Indian community reception hosted by the High Commissioner.

A number of agreements are likely to be signed during PM's visit. India and Malaysia are striving to give a strategic orientation to their partnership and crafting broad based ties focusing on key sectors like IT, infrastructure, health & medicine, biotechnology and energy. Prime Minister's visit will further this process.

Prime Minister will travel to Hanoi (Vietnam) on the third and final leg of his Asia tour, for participating in the 8th India-ASEAN Summit and 5th East Asia Summits on 30th October 2010.
The India-ASEAN Summit will take place in the forenoon, when Prime Minister will hold discussions with his 10 ASEAN counterparts. Our relationship has indeed come a long way. The India-ASEAN Trade-in-Goods Agreement became operational on 1st January, 2010. We expect to complete negotiations on the Trade in Services and Investment Agreement soon. To give a fillip to our economic engagement an India-ASEAN Trade Fair and Business Summit is planned at New Delhi in March, 2011. The India-ASEAN Plan of Action for 2010-15, is proposed to be adopted during the Summit. A series of events are also being contemplated next year leading to the first ever India-ASEAN Commemorative Summit in India in 2012.

The 5th East Asia Summit will also be held on 30th October. It would deliberate on the issues of (a) Energy, Environment, climate change and sustainable development (b) Financial Cooperation (c) Pandemics (d) Natural Disaster Mitigation (e) Education and (f) Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia (CEPEA) and Economic and Research Institute of ASEAN and East Asia (ERIA). The leaders will also exchange views on regional and international issues and on the future cooperation in EAS. They are expected to invite US and Russia to attend EAS as the 'Guest of the Host' with formal entry at Summit level scheduled for 2011.

Prime Minister would take this opportunity to, inter alia, brief the EAS leaders on the Nalanda University Project, which is now ready to take-off after the acquisition of land and passage of the Nalanda University bill in Parliament. The Summit will adopt the 'Hanoi Declaration on the Commemoration of the Fifth Anniversary of the East Asia Summit'. All EAS leaders will also pay a courtesy call on President of Viet Nam H.E. Nguyen Minh Triet who will host a lunch in their honour.

On 29th October, the preceding day, Prime Minister will have a number of bilateral meetings with ASEAN and EAS leaders, besides attending a gala dinner hosted by the Prime Minister of Vietnam, for all the visiting Heads of States and governments.

Let me pause here. I hope you have got a good feel of the packed schedule of engagements of the Prime Minister. Secretary (East) and I will now be happy to take your questions.
Question: What is the status of nuclear dialogue between India and Japan? Is the nuclear agreement expected during the visit?

Foreign Secretary: We have had two rounds of discussions on the subject of cooperation and peaceful uses of nuclear energy with the Government of Japan. In fact, the second round of discussions was just held this month, in October. We intend to take these discussions forward. From both sides there is political resolve that we should continue our discussions in this regard and seek to build more common ground. In fact, the first two rounds have been very useful and have covered a lot of ground. We will not be signing an agreement on this during the visit because we need to have a few more rounds of discussions.

Question: How large is the delegation and who all are accompanying the Prime Minister?

Foreign Secretary: External Affairs Minister will accompany our Prime Minister on his visit to Japan. Of course, Prime Minister will be accompanied by senior officials including the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister; the National Security Advisor, the Foreign Secretary, and other senior officials. While EAM will accompany the Prime Minister to Japan, the Commerce and Industry Minister Mr. Anand Sharma will be present during the Malaysia visit.

Question: Madam, why are India and Japan not signing the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement? Could you give us a flavor of the CECA negotiations with Malaysia? Also, could you give us a flavor about the CEPEA?

Foreign Secretary: On the CEPA negotiations with Japan, we have been able to conclude the negotiations. But there are some internal processes that Japan has to go through before the CEPA is signed by the two Governments. There is a fairly complicated and lengthy process, but they have already begun that and the legal scrubbing of the documents is also taking place on both sides. Obviously we will be very happy to announce the conclusion of the negotiations. But actual signing will have to await the completion of some formalities on the Japanese side.
On the CECA with Malaysia and the CEPEA on the East Asia Summit, I would like to request Secretary (East) to respond.

Secretary (East) (Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy): Regarding the Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) with Malaysia, after Prime Minister Najib's visit to India in January this year both Prime Ministers directed their officials to intensify negotiations on CECA in Goods, Services and Investment as a single undertaking. Between March and October this year, the negotiators have met on seven separate occasions to work out the parameters of this agreement. We expect a positive outcome to be announced during Prime Minister's visit. We believe that this will be a high quality and a mutually beneficial arrangement. There will be clear advantages for our exports in both goods and services. It would be premature at this stage to disclose all the details. But we are very optimistic. As I told you, it will be a comprehensive agreement. I am informed by the negotiators that they are making good progress. I think there would be some formalities to be completed before it can be finally adopted.

On the CEPEA that stands for the Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia, this is a wider FTA being contemplated to include the ten ASEAN countries and the six partners which are China, Japan, Korea, India, Australia and New Zealand. This has been initiated along with another arrangement for the ASEAN Plus 3. And four Study Groups have been set up by the ASEAN to study different technical issues such as tariffs, customs and other issues in order to take the progress forward. The decision taken at the last Economic Ministers' meeting held in August 2010 in Hanoi, and before that in August 2009 in Thailand, was that both processes would progress together and that they would be looking at both these arrangements together. So, we are confident that this arrangement will move forward and that CEPEA will become one of the widest trade arrangements in Asia.

Foreign Secretary: And to give you some more information on CEPA with Japan, as you know we have such agreements with Singapore and the Republic of Korea. This will be the third such agreement that we propose to conclude. It is the most comprehensive of all the agreements that we have been able to conclude so far. It covers more than 90 per percent of the trade and a vast gamut of services, investment, IPR, customs and other trade-related issues. It will not only open the Japanese market for Indian products and vice versa, but also facilitate movement of natural persons between the two countries. We expect the complementarity between the two economies to be further harnessed as a result of this agreement. As our Prime Minister has said, agreements of this nature like what we have with Singapore, with Republic of Korea and now that we hope to have with Japan, would contribute to the creation of what Prime Minister has referred to as the Asian Economic Community.

Question: Is there a plan for a bilateral meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and the Chinese Premier? Also, how do you look at the growing Chinese influence in the East Asia region? Do you see rivalry or confrontation with the growing Chinese power in this region?

Foreign Secretary: There will be a meeting between our Prime Minister and the Chinese Premier. It is planned to be held in Hanoi during the East Asia Summit.

As far as your second question is concerned, I am not going to give you the answer you want! Obviously, as we have said on many occasions, there is space enough for India and China to grow and to coexist and to work with each other. That is the outlook, as we see it, for the future.

Question: Regarding the CEPA with Japan, are you disappointed that you are not signing the CEPA agreement with Japan?

Foreign Secretary: I think what is important to underline is that we have concluded the negotiations. These have been complex negotiations. The fact that we have been able to conclude these complex negotiations I think is a development of great satisfaction. We have a very positive feeling about the conclusion of the negotiations on both sides. Of course, as far as the Japanese system is concerned, the Japanese Ambassador here in Delhi and also the Foreign Ministry in Tokyo has explained to us that there is a certain process that you have to go through statutorily in the Japanese system to get these agreements approved. So, that is the reality and we have to always deal with realities.

Question: When was the last time that an Indian Prime Minister visited Hanoi, Vietnam?

Secretary (East): I will get back to you on that question. I do not have the exact answer.

Question: Who are the members of the economic delegation accompanying PM?

Foreign Secretary: There will be eight to nine CEOs from the Indian side and they will be led from the Indian side by Mr. Mukesh Ambani.

Question: Madam, talking about this bilateral meeting between Prime Ministers of India and China, in the last few months we have had a whole host of issues with China including that of the stapled visas. What are we going to be discussing at this moment? Also, are we going to seek added clarifications on their strategic shift towards Jammu and Kashmir?

Foreign Secretary: I think it would be premature for me to go into the nature of the discussions that will take place between the two Prime Ministers. Let me just say that China and India are important Asian countries. They are neighbours of each other. As is always the case, when two large neighbouring countries meet we have a lot of issues to discuss. The relationship with China has matured, has evolved, has grown in the last few years. So, the agenda of discussion at such meetings is always a rich and textured one.

Question: From a purely Indian viewpoint what is the significance of the US and Russia participating in the East Asia Summit?

Foreign Secretary: From the Indian viewpoint we welcome the inclusion of the United States and Russia as entrants to the East Asia Summit. We have always favoured an open, balanced and inclusive regional architecture for the Asia Pacific region. We believe that these two countries, Russia and the United States, with their participation will bring even more value and richness to the discussions and the nature of cooperation and dialogue within the East Asia Summit.
Question: Madam, in the past we had seen that we had signed an FTA with Thailand and it did not really mature. Now we are having individual Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreements or cooperation agreements with other ASEAN countries, and simultaneously we are having a CEPEA also. When we are having individual agreements with different countries and then an overarching CEPEA, how does one look at this?

Secretary (East): I think you have to look at this in three separate ways. The first is the question of the individual bilateral free trade agreements which may or may not be CEPAs or CECAs. CEPAs and CECAs will mean that it is a free trade agreement in goods, services and investments. You can have separate FTAs in goods or in the services and investment as well. As far as the CEPEA is concerned, as I explained earlier, it is for ASEAN Plus 6. As far as our existing Free Trade Agreement in Goods with ASEAN is concerned, that is for India Plus the 10 ASEAN countries only. What we are endeavouring to do is to complete the free trade agreement in services and investment with the ASEAN countries, which all of us have made a commitment should be completed by March 2011. This was agreed to by the Commerce Ministers at their meeting in August.

As far as the bilateral CECAs or CEPAs are concerned, as you know, we have concluded one with Singapore, first of all the ASEAN countries, though actually we signed the framework agreement with Thailand. You are quite right. In the case of Thailand we had an early harvest scheme of 82 items which came into effect and which led to a quantum leap in trade. At the time when we were on the point of concluding the Free Trade Agreement in Goods, it was overtaken by the fact that the ASEAN Free Trade Agreement in Goods was coming in. So, Thailand also being a signatory to the Free Trade Agreement in Goods has benefited from signing the FTA in Goods with India. However, there is interest in concluding the separate bilateral agreement with Thailand which should be an ASEAN Plus, in other words ASEAN FTA Plus, to give something additional to both sides. The indication which we have is that our Commerce Ministry would like to see comprehensive agreements in future with all the ASEAN countries for bilateral arrangements; it should not just be free trade in goods. I know that Malaysia certainly is in the pipeline, as we have discussed, and should be concluded definitely in 2011. I think some timelines have been agreed to both for the conclusion and the implementation of the CECA in Malaysia. I think the other countries which are also expressing interest are Indonesia and some of the others. This is the position as it presently is with reference to the ASEAN Plus 6, ASEAN Plus India, and the bilateral FTAs in the region.

Question: There was a report about the MEA trying to stop the Dalai Lama from receiving an honorary Ph.D. Is that correct?

Foreign Secretary: I have seen the newspaper report you are referring to. Of course, you know that His Holiness the Dalai Lama is a very respected religious and spiritual figure for millions of us Indians. The matter that you referred to, which is the subject of the newspaper report, is receiving our attention. I do not want to comment on it further, but it is receiving our attention.

Question: Madam, I have two short questions. It is perhaps exactly the fifteenth day from the day Enforcement Directorate had written to Mumbai RPO to serve a notice to Mr. Lalit Modi to revoke his passport and perhaps try and bring him back to India. Has he responded to that notice, Madam, and what natural course of action will follow for revocation of his passport? I have one more question. Before the start of the Commonwealth Games there was an email from the Indian High Commission in London that was shown by Mr. Suresh Kalmadi, which was supposed to be forged. Is any inquiry under way in the MEA to that effect to cooperate in the Commonwealth Games inquiry?

Foreign Secretary: As regards the first question you raised about Mr. Lalit Modi, yes, it is true he is a holder of a passport issued by the Regional Passport Office in Mumbai. I think the passport was issued sometime in July of 2008. We received a request from the Directorate of Enforcement in Mumbai on the 5th of this month, asking us to revoke the passport of Shri Modi in public interest in general and in the interest of a thorough investigation into the alleged irregularities that he had committed. Accordingly, Shri Modi was issued a show-cause notice on the 13th of October calling upon him to explain as to why action under the relevant section of the Passports Act of 1967 should not be initiated against him. Why I am going into this is there is a certain procedure that we have to go into under the law. And as per the provisions of this Act, a person is given 15 days’ time to represent his case from the date of the issue of the notice. On the 15th of October the Director of Enforcement in Mumbai provided Shri Modi’s alternative address in Mumbai to the RPO, and accordingly a copy of the notice has been forwarded by the RPO Mumbai on the 15th of October itself to the alternative address. RPO Mumbai has confirmed that Shri Modi has not responded to the notices issued to him till date - that is as of yesterday, I have not been able to check the position as of today - and a reply is awaited from him. If no reply is received within the stipulated period, further action would be obviously initiated by the RPO as prescribed under the rules.

As regards the question on the Commonwealth Games, as you are aware, our Prime Minister has ordered a probe into various aspects concerning the Commonwealth Games and the preparations that went into it. These investigations are currently under way. I would not like to pronounce on the matter until the findings of these investigations are ready for disclosure.

Question: There are reports that the Taliban are being escorted to meet Mr. Karzai. Is there any link between the Taliban and Afghan Government? Is it a concern for India?

Foreign Secretary: On the links that you refer to, obviously you must pose this question also to the Afghan authorities. I do not think it would be proper for me to give you the opinion of the Afghan Government on this matter. But as far as the Taliban are concerned and as far as the groups that have indulged in terrorism and extremism and have targeted vulnerable sections of Afghan society are concerned, India’s views are very clear. At the London Conference early this year in February when they spoke of reintegration and reconciliation, certain redlines were drawn as to how this whole process should be carried forward, and that it should be predicated on these groups giving up violence, subscribing to the values of the Constitution of Afghanistan, giving up terrorism, giving up recourse to arms as a means of solving problems and any differences that they have with the Afghan Government. We are obviously alert to the evolving situation in Afghanistan. Afghanistan is a close neighbor of India. The situation in Afghanistan impacts all of us because we are very clear in the enunciation of our position that we would like to see the forces of democracy, of economic growth and development, women's empowerment, regional stability, to be strengthened as a result of the efforts that the international community is making in Afghanistan.

Question: Next Tuesday, the United Nations General Assembly is going to discuss and vote on a resolution condemning the United States blockade on Cuba. What will India's position be in that regard?

Foreign Secretary: I have not been informed of the latest position in this regard. Obviously, we have always taken the position that sanctions against any country affect the ordinary people of the country concerned; and that we should always, when we take a view on the imposition of any economic measures against any country, be conscious and sensitive to this aspect.

Question: Madam, there are reports that Dawood Ibrahim has undergone surgery in Pakistan. Any information on that and what is India's stand?

Foreign Secretary: No, I have not checked with the surgeon!

Question: Madam, though we have seen a lot of reports about David Headley cropping up in recent days now, Mr. Krishna said a few days ago that prior to 26/11 no specific information was given to us on what Headley was doing. This morning we did an interview with Robert Blake who said in fact that all information was shared with India, even whatever specifics there were. So, what is going on here? Who is not telling the truth?

Foreign Secretary: I am not going to set up a truth commission on this. But what I want to say is that I saw the interview with Assistant Secretary Blake. I saw it just before coming here. I think you have to look at the sequence of events here. In the last few months obviously you are all aware that once the Headley case surfaced, we have had interaction and exchanges with the Americans on the investigations into that case. So, that is one part of the sequence. But before 26/11, and that is what External Affairs Minister was referring to, we did not have anything more than very general, nonspecific information on these warnings and threats that had apparently been surfacing.

Official Spokesperson: I take it there are no more questions. Thank you.
314. Interview of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Japanese media prior to departure for Tokyo.

New Delhi, October 24, 2010.

Que-1: Could you describe India's strengths in areas of trade, investment and services? Is there any specific field in which you want to strengthen bilateral cooperation - for example, steel production or automobiles? Improvement in infrastructure is key for India's economic growth. What will the Indian government do to attract Japanese investments?

Ans: In recent years, the policy framework relating to investment, taxation, foreign trade, finance, capital markets and regulatory systems has evolved to make Indian industry more productive and globally competitive. As a result, India's share in the global flows of goods and services has grown steadily. Today, India offers a growing and vibrant market, young workforce, and an attractive destination for foreign investors. New policies are enabling public-private partnership in the development of critical infrastructure like roads, ports, airports and power.

Japan is the major economic partner of India, and the economic and technological powerhouse of the world. Strengthening the bilateral economic partnership is central to India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership established in 2006. It is heartening that India is now recognized as the best long-term investment destination by Japanese companies. We welcome Japanese investments in India. We have concluded negotiations on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement, which will boost our trade and economic ties manifold.

Our Government places the highest importance on improving the investment climate for foreign investors in India. We recognize the multiplier effects of improving infrastructure on the growth of Indian economy. We are upgrading our infrastructure for which the Japanese Government is extending valuable assistance through ODA. Japanese companies are partnering with India to build metro rail services in several cities. The Dedicated Freight Corridor Project as well as the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor Project will open up vast opportunities for Japanese businesses for mutually beneficial cooperation. I would encourage Japanese investors to come to India and become part of our ambitious development plans.
Que-2: Economic reform and deregulation in India has slowed down noticeably during the last few years. Are you prepared to accelerate the process and go ahead with key reforms such as opening up multi-brand retail to FDI? Some Japanese companies, planning to set up factories, face difficulties in obtaining land and handling complicated tax system. They end up shelving their plans and moving their investments elsewhere. What is government doing to remove such bottlenecks.

Ans: We are in the midst of a major socio-economic transformation. Our economy has grown at an average annual rate of over nine percent in the last few years. We have managed sustained growth despite the global economic slowdown. The Government of India is committed to economic reforms as the principal instrument of economic transformation and inclusive growth. There is an increasing appreciation that calibrated and sustained change is better than abrupt about turns. A number of steps have been taken to simplify the FDI regime. All regulations and guidelines have been consolidated into one comprehensive document, which is reviewed every six months. Government have also started stakeholder consultations on opening up additional sectors to greater inflow of FDI.

The policy framework relating to land, environment and resettlement and rehabilitation remains under constant review. We have formulated the National Rehabilitation and Resettlement Policy, 2007. The Government of India is committed to improve the efficiency of the tax system by eliminating distortions in the tax structure, introducing moderate levels of taxation, expanding the taxable base, promoting equity while enhancing revenues and simplifying taxation provisions. The new Direct Taxes Code has been unveiled with these objectives and is expected to come into effect shortly. Efforts are also underway to reform the indirect tax regime by introducing a country wide Goods and Services Tax, based on a consensus between the different stakeholders.

Que-3: How crucial is Japanese nuclear technology in furthering of India’s energy plans? Regarding the civil nuclear negotiations, do you still believe that an agreement can be hammered out soon?

Ans: Developing countries like India seek new energy sources to sustain high rates of economic growth. We see nuclear energy as a vital component of our global energy mix. Our nuclear industry is poised for a major expansion and there will be huge opportunities for the global nuclear industry to participate in the expansion of India’s nuclear energy programme. We would like Japan to be our partner in this initiative. We are aware of the advanced capabilities of Japanese firms in this field and the important role they play in the global supply chain. We are negotiating an Agreement on the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy with Japan. I am confident that we will be able to conclude an agreement which will be a win-win proposition for both of us. We have not laid down any deadline for concluding these negotiations.

Que-4: Japan is putting the condition that it will annul the nuclear cooperation if India goes for another nuclear test. Is India agreeable to this condition in the agreement? How does India rate its nuclear non-proliferation record? Can India sign NPT?

Ans: Since negotiations are continuing on the bilateral nuclear cooperation agreement, I do not wish to comment on specific details. Both countries would benefit from an agreement that provides a long-term and stable basis of cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. This will contribute towards our energy security requirements and will also help in the global efforts to combat climate change.

India's position on the NPT is well-known. India has an impeccable non-proliferation record which has been recognized by the international community. We are committed to maintaining our unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. India has been steadfast in its support for global and non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament in a time-bound framework. We are ready to work with Japan and other like minded countries in realizing the vision of a nuclear weapon free world.

Que-5: In recent days, China has had frictions with Japan and other South East Asian countries. How do you see this situation and is there any impact on India? Many of Japanese people are worried by China's aggressiveness and its territorial claims. China is also said to be building what is called "the String of Pearls" around India. Will India counter Chinese aggressiveness or accept it as a reasonable phenomenon?

Ans: The Asian region is witnessing an unprecedented period of sustained economic growth in recent years. Countries in the region are engaged in improving standards of living of their people, and overcoming the effects of the global economic downturn. We all are trying to respond and readjust to global trends towards multi-polarity and managing the regional environment in Asia in a manner which enhances peace, security and overall development of our societies. It is incumbent on all countries of the region to build cooperative partnerships and work towards an open and inclusive regional architecture. Inter-state relations must be based on the five principles of peaceful co-existence. It is in this context that we also approach our relations with China, with whom we have established a Strategic and Cooperative Partnership.

Que-6: India’s influence has been growing all over the world. Where does India see itself in the global political and economical arena in near future? And what do you expect from Japan in this endeavor? During Bush Administration, India had set up a mechanism of trilateral talks with China and Russia in an effort to break the uni-polar world order system. What kind of world order is India seeking?

Ans: We seek a global order which is conducive to the rapid, sustainable and inclusive socio-economic development of India. India has been playing a constructive role in responding to changing global realities. We have been working with the likeminded countries to address the major challenges of our times such as poverty eradication, terrorism, food and energy security and climate change.

As major nations in Asia sharing common values of democracy, rule of law and shared interests of peace and prosperity in Asia, it is important for both India and Japan to work together at the bilateral, regional and global levels, including in the United Nations and G-20.

Que-7: What India’s strategy on UNSC reforms and to become a permanent member? Is there a time schedule and what are your expectations from G4? P5 countries do note want new members of UNSC to get a veto right. Is India agreeable?

Ans: The reform of the United Nations Security Council to reflect contemporary global realities is an integral part of the ongoing UN reform process. The proposal led by the G-4 countries for reform of the Security Council, including by expansion of its permanent and non-permanent membership and improvement in its working methods, enjoys a high degree of support and acceptance among the UN members. Early reforms are of utmost importance to enhance the credibility and effectiveness of the Council.

Que-8: India has announced its target to reduce CO2 emissions by 20-25 percent by 2050. China plans to a reduction of 40-45 percent. Can India do better or would it be unrealistic? What other major cooperative initiatives are being taken to tackle climate change?

Ans: We have declared a voluntary target of bringing down, by 2020, the emissions intensity of our GDP by 20-25%, over the level in 2005. We take the challenge of Climate Change seriously and are ready to play our part based on the principles of common but differentiated responsibilities contained in the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. We have put in place an ambitious National Action Plan on Climate Change. We are pursuing a multi-pronged strategy of mitigation. This includes ongoing plans to enhance the share of renewables in our energy mix, with a target for solar power alone, of 20,000 MW of grid connected capacity by 2020. We are also pursuing a variety of measures in the power, construction, and transport sectors to increase our energy efficiency.

The national circumstances and development challenges differ among countries. A look at the per capita CO2 emissions will indicate that the situations of China and India are not comparable. 40% of our people lack access to commercial sources of energy. There are many steps that have to be taken concurrently as part of a global effort to address climate change, including adequate access to technology and financial resources.

Que-9: The war in Afghanistan is a grave challenge for USA, NATO and also for Japan. What can India contribute towards solution of the conflict? Do you endorse early withdrawal of US and NATO troops from Afghanistan? Would you like to deepen dialogue with Pakistan to improve bilateral ties and peace in Afghanistan?

Ans: Our links with Afghanistan are historical and civilisational, spanning several centuries. We have an interest in a stable, secure and peaceful Afghanistan, which can pursue its nation building efforts free from outside interference.
We welcome the role of the international community in supporting the development and reconstruction of Afghanistan. On our part, we have pledged more than USD 1.3 billion in assistance to Afghanistan. Our assistance is Afghan-led and Afghan owned and lays particular stress on capacity building and human resource development. It has been widely welcomed by common people across that country and we will continue with it.

Pakistan has an important contribution to make in Afghanistan by denying support and sanctuary to terrorist and extremist groups that are working against the interests of the Afghan people, and by allowing the people of Afghanistan to determine their destiny freely and independently.

Que-10: What more can be done by India and Japan, in addition to strengthening economic relations? India’s first moon mission Chandrayaan-1 carried payloads for different countries. ISRO is now trying to commercialize its operations. Japan space programme is also similar. Is there any scope for bilateral cooperation here?

Ans. Besides deepening our trade and economic partnership, India and Japan are cooperating in several other areas. Space can certainly be one of them. In the field of education, Japan is assisting us in establishing the Indian Institute of Technology, Hyderabad. We would like to see more Indian students in Japanese Universities and greater thrust on people-to-people exchanges. This would serve as a bridge between our two countries and enhance mutual understanding. We have already embarked on a policy of visa-on-arrival for Japanese tourists, hoping to welcome many more of them to India. We wish to celebrate the 60th Anniversary of the establishment of our diplomatic relations in 2012 in a befitting manner.
I am truly delighted to once again be in Tokyo after almost two years. I take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Yonekura on his assumption of onerous responsibilities as the Chairman of Nippon Keidanren. I also thank him for his generous opening remarks and for the opportunity he has provided me to address this gathering.

Distinguished guests,

The last time when we met, the global economy had just entered its worst crisis since the great depression of the nineteen thirties. The world’s leading developed countries were pushed into a severe recession, triggered by an unprecedented meltdown of the financial sector. Capital flows to emerging market economies dried up. Stock markets crashed worldwide.

Fortunately the world responded in a very timely manner. At the global level, India joined with other major economies in constituting the G-20 as the premier forum for decision-making on international economic issues. Thanks to the collective efforts of G-20, the world economy has gradually stabilized even though the recovery is still fragile. However, circumstances remain difficult even today. The recovery as I said is fragile and demand in industrialized countries remains weak. Protectionist sentiments have increased because of high unemployment.

Given the severity of the crisis it was inevitable that India would also be affected. Our economy slowed down from the 9 % growth rate it had achieved in the four years before the crisis of 2008 to 6.5% in 2008-09. But we responded with concerted measures to revive and sustain economic growth through a range of fiscal and monetary policies. I am happy to report that as a result our growth recovered to 7.4% in 2009-10 and is now projected to be 8.5% in the current fiscal year that is 2010-11. It is my expectation that we will return to a 9 % growth path in 2011-12.

I am confident that the strong fundamentals of the Indian economy will enable us to achieve our objective of double digit growth in the coming years. I do not underestimate the many challenges we face in achieving such high levels of growth. We need to close the infrastructure deficit, especially in the fields of power and transport and communication. This is a major constraint on our development and we shall give high priority to infrastructure development and modernization in the years ahead. We will rely on both public investment and public private partnership to achieve our infrastructure targets. We will also invest in education, health and rural development to ensure that growth is inclusive and broad-based.

Most of our investment is financed by domestic savings. I am happy to say that India's saving rate has increased to around 35%. I am confident that it will rise to 40% of GDP. However domestic savings will have to be supplemented by foreign capital so that total domestic investment can be higher. During the last three years India has received cumulative Foreign Direct Investment worth over 100 billion US dollars. We have seen a slow down in recent months but I see that as being temporary.

We are determined to continue the process of economic reforms that will create a favourable investment environment and facilitate higher investment flows. We are continuing the process of reform of both direct and indirect taxes and hope to unify in due course all indirect taxes into a single Goods and Services Tax. We are pursuing reforms in the financial sector, capital markets, higher education and skill development.

Let me now turn to the question of what Japan and India can do together. Japan has always been viewed with great admiration by the people of India.

The Government and the people of India deeply appreciate the generous assistance which Japan has provided to us for building economic and social infrastructure. India has been the largest recipient of Japanese ODA since 2003. The highly successful Delhi Metro project has been followed by ODA assistance for Metro projects in Kolkata, Bangalore and Chennai. The Dedicated Freight Corridor project between Delhi and Mumbai, launched with Japanese ODA support, is designed to transform India’s freight logistics.

Today, more than ever, India’s buoyant economy, young population and large market combine well with Japan’s technological prowess, manufacturing skills and financial resources to create a win-win situation for both our countries. I strongly believe that we can and must synergize our complementary strengths to impart momentum to Asian as well as global economic growth and prosperity.

We have witnessed a steady expansion of trade and investment relations between our countries in recent years. Bilateral trade has made a robust rebound in 2010 and should exceed 20 billion US dollars by 2012. However, you will agree with me that India-Japan trade is still at a low threshold, apart from being unbalanced.

I am happy to note that Japanese Foreign Direct Investment in India has grown substantially in the last three years. Much of this has been due to mergers and acquisitions. We welcome greater Japanese participation in Indian industry through Foreign Direct Investment. We seek the creation of new capacity in India’s manufacturing and infrastructure sectors and freer flow of high-end technologies.

It is a welcome sign that the number of Japanese companies with an established business presence in India has more than doubled in the past four years.

Friends,

I have long believed that India and Japan must work together to create a business environment conducive to much greater two-way trade and investment flows. It was with this perspective that we launched negotiations for a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement almost four years ago. I am happy to share with you that our efforts have finally succeeded and a mutually beneficial agreement is ready to be concluded.
India's capabilities in the services sector and the knowledge economy are well recognized as is our global success in the Information Technology sector. Collaboration in this sector with Indian IT companies has brought significant benefits to our partners in Europe and America. We hope that Japanese companies will also take advantage of these opportunities to enhance their efficiency and competitiveness through expanded partnerships with India's IT sector.

We also expect that the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement will create new opportunities for India's pharmaceutical industry in the Japanese market, helping to meet Japan's growing demand for high quality and relatively inexpensive generic medicines.

I have already mentioned that India's infrastructure deficit poses a major constraint on manufacturing growth and can adversely impact FDI flows. During India's next Five Year Plan from 2012 to 2017, we envisage financial outlays of over one trillion US dollars on infrastructure projects. Private investment will play a large role in achieving this target. We welcome a much greater role by Japanese industry in the development of economic infrastructure in India.

Japan is our partner of choice in the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor project. This is a mega project covering a length of over 1480 km across six States of India. It has the potential to become the hub of our new bilateral economic engagement in the area of manufacturing. Some of the notified investment regions are almost the size of Singapore in terms of their area. We welcome in particular the involvement of Japanese companies in the development of "smart communities" in the DMIC area.

With India's rapid economic growth, the demand for energy has been rising rapidly. Japan, as a global leader in energy efficient technologies can play a significant role in helping us meet India's energy needs in an environmentally friendly manner. We seek Japanese technology and investment in conventional as well as new and renewable energy.

Nuclear energy can provide our growing economy with a clean and efficient source of power. Cooperation in this area will enable Japanese companies to participate in India's ambitious nuclear energy programme.

Dear Friends,

The weight of global economic power is shifting inexorably towards Asia. I am confident that irrespective of the current slowdown Japan will remain Asia's most advanced industrialized nation for decades to come and will exert considerable influence on the global economy. India is participating fully in the rising tide of economic expansion in Asia. It is my hope that India and Japan will continue to work together for the creation of a broader Asian Economic Community.

In my more than four decades in public life, I have had the privilege of working closely with Japanese statesman and captains of Industry. During this period, I have steadfastly nurtured the vision that Japan must be an important partner in India's economic development and transformation. Together we can contribute to global stability, prosperity and development.

As I stand before this distinguished gathering of leaders of Japan's business and industry, I sense a new enthusiasm and a vibrancy that gives me reason to believe that my long held vision will be realized. I invite you to repose your faith in India. I assure you that we will spare no effort to make Japanese business welcome. Together, we can ensure the long term prosperity of our two peoples for the greater benefit of countries in our region and the world.

Thank you.
316. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Joint Press Interaction with Japanese Prime Minister.

Tokyo, October 25, 2010.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Kan,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media.

I wish to begin by thanking Prime Minister Kan and the Government and people of Japan for the warm welcome extended to me and members of my delegation. It is always a pleasure to be back in this beautiful city.

Prime Minister Kan and I have just concluded very productive and fruitful discussions.

The tradition of regular high level dialogue is the hallmark of the India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership. Our annual Summits have set the pace and direction of this partnership, which rests on the firm foundation of shared values of democracy, rule of law and respect for fundamental human freedoms.

Our two Governments have concluded negotiations on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement. This is a historic achievement that signals the economic alignment of two of the largest economies in Asia. It will open up new business opportunities and lead to a quantum increase in trade and investment flows between our two countries.

I suggested to Prime Minister Kan that we redouble our efforts in progressing major infrastructure projects in India such as the Dedicated Freight Corridor project and the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor project. Both these are proceeding on schedule and will have a transformational impact on our two economies.

I conveyed to the Prime Minister our gratitude to the Government and people of Japan for the Official Development Assistance to India.

We discussed ways to expand High Technology Trade between India and Japan. I hope that Japan will make its export control regulations for such trade easier and predictable. We appreciate the Japanese government’s decision to cooperate with India on civil nuclear energy.

I also conveyed our satisfaction with the High-Level Energy Dialogue between our countries through which we are partnering in the development and utilization of new and renewable energy sources.

We reviewed the implementation of the Action Plan on Security Cooperation signed last December. Our Defence Ministers have agreed to meet annually. Prime Minister Kan and I discussed the possibility of further deepening our strategic partnership.

The year 2012 will mark the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and Japan. We discussed ways to celebrate the occasion in a befitting manner including through expanded people-to-people exchanges, especially amongst our youth.

We have agreed to enhance our cooperation, both bilaterally and within the G-4, in the reform of the United Nations, and especially of the Security Council. We will continue to work together on global issues such as climate change, the Doha round of trade negotiations and the G-20.

We will continue to work closely within the framework of the East Asia Summit and the region as a whole.

I have invited Prime Minister Kan to visit India next year for our Annual Summit. I look forward to welcoming him in Delhi.

Thank you.
Address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Reception jointly hosted by the Embassy of India, Japan-India Association and Japan-India Parliamentary Friendship League.

Tokyo, October 25, 2010

Your Excellency Mr. Yoshiro Mori, Chairman of Japan-India Association,
Your Excellency Mr. Yasuo Fukuda, Acting President of the Japan-India Parliamentary Friendship League,
Your Excellency Mr. Shinzo Abe,
Your Excellency Mr. Katsuya Okada,
Ambassador H.K. Singh,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen:

Over the past four decades, I have had the pleasure of visiting Japan on several occasions and in various capacities. Each time I have experienced the friendship and warmth of the people of Japan.

As Prime Minister, I have been privileged to witness the steady transformation of India's relations with Japan. The Strategic and Global Partnership established between India and Japan continues to grow and holds tremendous potential to bring greater prosperity and progress to our two nations.

I am particularly happy to be here in this new and modern premises of the Chancery. This project is one of our most ambitious embassy construction projects overseas and it is fitting that it should be in the city of Tokyo.

I am extremely happy to see so many of my dear friends in the gathering this morning. I would like to pay tribute to the leadership of former Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori whose strong personal commitment helped open a new chapter in bilateral ties a decade ago. The Japan-India Association has been in the forefront of promoting friendship and closer ties between our countries for over a century.

I would like to thank former Prime Minister Mr. Yasuo Fukuda, Acting President of Japan-India Parliamentary Friendship League for his important role in building a broad-based political consensus on strengthening of India-Japan ties among members of the Japanese Diet.

I express my gratitude to former Prime Minister Mr. Shinzo Abe for being here this morning. It was under his leadership that we established our Strategic and Global Partnership in 2006.

I am grateful to Mr. Katsuya Okada for his Party's support to India-Japan relations.

I am overwhelmed by your presence here this morning and on behalf of the people of India thank you for friendship. It is because of your collective efforts that we have raised our partnership to unprecedented heights.

Dear Friends,

I would also take this opportunity to commend the significant contributions of the Indian community in Japan. India takes pride in your achievements and lauds your efforts to build bridges of friendship and understanding between our two countries.

I look forward to my discussions in Tokyo over the next two days. I am optimistic that we will make concrete progress in all areas of our cooperation. This will benefit not only our two countries but also the Asia-Pacific region and the world at large.

I have great pleasure in dedicating this Chancery building to the Strategic and Global Partnership between India and Japan in the 21st Century.

Thank you.

318. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister's engagements at Tokyo.

Tokyo, October 25, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you and welcome to the Indian Media Centre. You are aware Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh arrived yesterday for an official working visit to Tokyo. Today Prime Minister had a number of very important engagements.

Foreign Secretary of India Shrimati Nirupama Rao is here to brief you about the engagements of the Prime Minister. She is joined by the Ambassador of India to Japan Mr. H.K. Singh, Media Advisor to Prime Minister Dr. Harish Khare and Joint Secretary (East Asia) Mr. Gautam Bambawale.

Foreign Secretary will be making an opening statement, and thereafter she will be happy to take a few questions. Madam, the floor is yours.

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you, Vishnu.

Good evening ladies and gentlemen of the media. As all of you have been following the Prime Minister's engagements here in Tokyo today, I will not go into too exhaustive detail because you obviously have all the facts in this regard.

Let me say that our Prime Minister has had a very productive, a very busy, a very rewarding day here in Tokyo today. He has had very comprehensive discussions with the Prime Minister of Japan Mr. Naoto Kan. This morning, Prime Minister and Shrimati Gursharan Kaur had an audience with Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Japan. Foreign Minister Maehara called on the Prime Minister in the morning. As you also know, Prime Minister laid a plaque at the new Chancery Building of the Embassy of India here in Tokyo dedicating it to the India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership.

Prime Minister was, as you know, felicitated at the Chancery by the Japan-India Association and the Japan-India Parliamentary Friendship League. Three former Prime Ministers of Japan were present at the event including Mr. Mori, Mr. Fukuda and Mr. Abe. Also present and representing the Democratic Party of Japan was Secretary-General Okada at the same function. Prime Minister addressed a luncheon meeting hosted by the Nippon Keidanren and Japanese Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

In the discussions that the Prime Minister had today, the point that was consistently emphasized by both sides was that both India and Japan believe that there is every need to develop a strong, a vigorous and all-encompassing relationship between the two countries. When I say all-encompassing I refer to political, economic, security. And as the leaders mentioned, there were no impediments to the development of these relations.

The expansion of the economic relationship was, of course, stressed with the focus on infrastructure development. The idea of a Minister-level economic dialogue has been proposed by the Japanese side, and we have welcomed this idea. We look upon it very positively. This is a structure of dialogue that I believe Japan has with China. Japan having broached this idea to us and given the fact that our relationship has such strong foundations and has been growing so positively in all areas and especially the economic area, we felt that this is an idea that deserves close and positive attention.

Prime Minister described the development of India-Japan relations as a project close to his heart. As you know, at the press conference also and at the banquet speech he gave, he spoke of the sky being the limit when it comes to the development of India-Japan relations, the enormous possibilities that exist for cooperation in trade, in technology, in services, in investment. Of course, with the conclusion of the negotiations on the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement, all these areas of cooperation will become even more tangible and translated into concrete action. The unique complementarities for instance that exist between Japanese capital and technology and the young labour force in India is one of the ideas that was articulated. All in all, what was stressed was that India and Japan can build a multifaceted relationship between themselves in so many areas.
I think we should probably take this discussion forward through a question and answer format. I know that all of you have a lot of questions to ask. So, I think I will stop here and take your questions and we can throw greater clarity on today’s meetings in that process.

Question: Madam, the Joint Statement obviously covers a gamut of issues but I would like you to put the discussions on the nuclear agreement in perspective. There is emphasis on concluding it at an early date. Is the sense of urgency more from India’s side or from Japan’s side? In the morning we got the impression that the Prime Minister is more or less reconciled to a deferment of the agreement when he said that he is not going to force it keeping in mind the sensitivities of Japan. So, could you just put it in perspective?

Foreign Secretary: I will certainly do that. I think the conclusion you have drawn certainly does not correspond to the actuality or the reality or the state of play - let me put it that way. I would like to put this in perspective. The impetus or the idea to strengthen or to look at the possibilities of civil nuclear cooperation has been amply expressed from both sides. There is enthusiasm on the part of Japan and there is enthusiasm on the part of India to take this project forward. We have had two rounds of very productive and very useful discussions so far in Tokyo and in Delhi. The next round of discussions will take place in Tokyo in the third week of November. So, there is a certain momentum to this process, and let me add that it is a very positive momentum. The impression that you have that somehow this is being deferred or this is being slowed down would not be the accurate impression. Obviously, negotiations of this nature are complex; they are delicate; they are sensitive. The very nature of the subject would imply that you have to look at the issue in terms of its various complexities, and both sides are fully equipped to do that. The political resolve, as I mentioned a few days ago in Delhi, has been very clearly stated by both Governments - the political resolve to strengthen cooperation in this area, and come to an ultimate agreement.

Question: Madam, I would like to draw your attention to the Joint Statement. While you have spoken about maritime security and similar issues, you have spoken about bilateral and multilateral exercises.
I just wanted to know when they begin. And if you say multilateral, which other countries are potentially involved and where these exercises could take place?

Foreign Secretary: The Joint Statement encapsulates again the political resolve. I mentioned that both sides want a strong, vigorous and all-encompassing multifaceted relationship. Obviously you are looking at cooperation in the security sphere also. India and Japan have established a system for cooperation in security. You are aware of the Declaration on Security Cooperation of 2008, the Action Plan on Security Cooperation of last year. We have a Defence Minister-level dialogue. There has been an exchange of visits at the level of the Defence Ministers. We have had the Two-Plus-Two Security Dialogue between the Foreign and Defence Ministries on both sides. There is a regular exchange of visits at the level of Chiefs of Staff of the defence forces of both countries. And, Navy to Navy cooperation is a very important segment of this exchange and this interaction. This has been happening for some years now. So, the Joint Declaration that we have seen concluded today takes this aspect of cooperation and expresses the resolve of both countries to build upon it, to have further exercises both bilateral and when it comes to multilateral, of course, each one would be considered on a case-by-case basis depending on the need, depending on the situation, and depending on the areas that we need to cover. So, I would not be able to tell you specifically which regions these will be conducted in. You understand that. These are on the planning board for some time. The two navies consult each other. There is an interaction between the two Governments, and then you come to a decision on where these exercises will be conducted. This is an ongoing process let me say.

Question: Madam, on the nuclear cooperation energy working group and so on, there is a mention here saying that both Prime Ministers are exploring the possibility of developing in recycling of rare earths which is coming in the context of China holding Japan for ransom recently. Does this mean that India is going to help Japan look for another source of rare earths? Is it going to be India or is it going to another country?
Foreign Secretary: Let me first of all preface my remarks by saying that this is a very India-Japan centric process. We are not looking at what third countries are doing or saying about this. We have worked in the area of rare earths or rare earth elements. India and Japan have worked together since 1952. We are now moving to implement long-term cooperation in the form of joint ventures in this area. So, that is what this statement is referring to.

Question: Madam, my question is quite similar to the question already asked. Is India kind of using arm-twisting tactics with Japan over giving the rare earths to Japan and in the hope of wanting Japan not to ask it to sign the CTBT?

Foreign Secretary: I am sorry, if you are looking for drama and theatre in this you are not going to find it. This is going to be very functional. This is going to be need-based. Obviously when you develop joint ventures in the field of rare earths you will be looking at technology also that Japan can provide in this area so that you can build up the Indian industry, which is a matter naturally of benefit to us as a country. But if you are looking at arm-twisting, as you called it, and this being used as a bargaining chip for Japanese action on another front, that is not the way these relations are being transacted. There is a very high degree of mutual trust between our two democracies which are governed by the rule of law with so much in common. That is the ambience in which such cooperation is being transacted.

Question: Madam, in the morning the Prime Minister's address at Nippon Keidenren, he specifically mentioned two aspects drawing the attention of Japanese businesses. One he said that FDI from Japan into India is more into M&As. So, if you look at 2008-09, roughly about 80 per cent of foreign investment from Japan was through mergers of just two companies. So, there was not really foreign direct investment on the ground creating capacities in manufacturing industry. Second, he talked about bilateral trade. Even in bilateral trade, Japan is in huge favour in terms of surpluses. So, last four years if you look at bilateral trade data, Japan's exports to India are almost double of what India exports to Japan. I just wanted to check out whether there has been any specific talk on this aspect of trade because at the end of it, a large part of it is CEPA and economic agenda on the talks.

Foreign Secretary: But the CEPA is such a momentous development in itself when you look at the potential. You rightly pointed out that at this moment we have not been able to attain the potential that we could possibly have in our hands when it comes to trade between India and Japan. The CEPA is about that. Through the CEPA you are going to be able to attain the potential because it covers 90 per cent of the trade between the two countries. It talks of services, it talks of investment, it talks of movement of natural persons. So, CEPA is the future and that is the future of India-Japan trade and economic relations. That in itself is a very positive development. When you look at investment, of course, you need to step up obviously FDI from Japan into India but that is happening also in pharmaceuticals, in telecom, in steel. Beginnings have been made and that is why I think in the last year, maybe the Ambassador can corroborate that, in 2008-09 Japanese direct investment in India had overtaken Japanese direct investment in China.

Question: This was what the PM specifically pointed out. This has largely come from acquisitions and not from actual investment.

Foreign Secretary: It is true there has been M&As from Japan but look at the manner in which Japanese business is moving into India. The number of business visas and employment visas that are being given to Japanese businessmen to come into India, the number of Japanese businesses that have opened office in India, I am not talking of rep offices I am talking of actual operating presence in India, the number is over 728. So, all these are pointers, these are all reference points which speak of a future that is going to be very exciting in this relationship.

Question: I just got information that today both Prime Ministers exchanged views about China for about ten minutes. What did you talk about? What kind of information did the Prime Minister of India express towards each Naoto Kan?

Foreign Secretary: They did refer to the relations that each country has with China, how important these relations are from a strategic, security and economic point of view, how both countries desire a peaceful and productive relationship with China, and how it is essential to engage China in closer and more open dialogue. Both countries feel that. And we cited the examples from each relationship. And the Japanese Prime Minister was interested in knowing from our Prime Minister about the development of our relationship with China - I am talking of the development of our relationship - and the fact that trade has grown, the economic interaction has grown. And while issues still exist which need to be resolved - Japan has issues to resolve with China, India has issues to resolve with China when it comes to in your case your maritime boundary issues, in our case our land boundary issues with China - and the fact that there are systems in place and we mentioned from our side that we have a very well-functioning system to discuss these issues, these differences with China in a peaceful and in an engaged way. Both sides felt that this is the best way to engage China and to draw it into a more productive discussion in order to resolve these issues peacefully.

Question: When you said about that CECA would result in a large degree of access to Indian services, besides the visas can you give some specific examples of exactly how we will be able to access service markets in Japan?

Foreign Secretary: I am talking in terms of movement of our IT professionals, our engineers, our tourism professionals, our nurses and caregivers. There will be openings for access to the Japanese market for such people also.

Question: Madam, of late we were given to understand that Japanese have been pressing the Indian Navy more particularly to become the part of Malabar. Is there any progress on that front? And Indian Navy even is more keen to have them in Malabar.

Foreign Secretary: We did not talk about the Malabar exercises today. The two sides spoke of, as I said, developing an all-encompassing relationship that would cover all these areas. The Joint Declaration, of course, refers to this in some detail. Security cooperation is one of the pillars of the relationship. But we did not discuss Malabar exercises.
Question: May I just build on my Japanese colleague point of view? Recently as you may have heard from former Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, the increasing number of population it seems to me is trying to rely on India as a sort of counter power against China. How do you react to this growing sentiment? Was there any discussion similar to that during the exchanges between your Prime Minister and his Japanese counterpart?

Foreign Secretary: I think I put it in context when I answered the question just now. You have to look at these three countries - India, Japan and China - as three of the largest economies of Asia. Two of us - India and Japan - are democracies. China has followed another political system. But in the case of both India and Japan, China is the neighbor. We have a long land boundary with China, and you are very contiguous to China in terms of the very short stretch of ocean that separates you. So, it is a reality; it is a fact of life that both our countries will have to develop very in-depth relations with China as time goes by. The growth of the Chinese economy, China's emergence as a global power, its military modernization, its ability to project its influence in the region when it comes to our respective neighbourhoods, these are all issues that will require a close analysis, a study, and understanding because of dealing with the rise of China, we would of course - both our countries would, I think - our wish is to see the peaceful rise of China. I think that was expressed by both Prime Ministers. And how do we attain that vision of the future? It is I think by engaging China, drawing it into a more productive dialogue, developing structures of cooperation with China, I think that is the way forward. It requires deep analysis, it requires close engagement, and it will require a lot of patience.

Question: Madam, was there any discussion on the Nalanda project?

Foreign Secretary: In the context of the East Asia Summit and the fact that the Nalanda University project is very closely linked with the discussions that we have had in the East Asia Summit, this subject did come up. The Japanese Prime Minister and the Japanese Government are very appreciative of the initiative that we have taken in this regard. Prime Minister mentioned it also in his banquet speech this evening.
when he said that we would like to see more Japanese cooperation and involvement in this project. And Japan has expressed itself very positively about this involvement.

Question: Madam, para 14 of the Joint Statement talks of 'transport and industrial development corridor in the peninsular region of India'. Could you flesh that out?

Foreign Secretary: You now, of course, have the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. One of the issues that is linked with it is the development of similar infrastructural projects in peninsular India, in the southern part of India. That would link our infrastructure, our industries, our technological base with Southeast Asia. We have of course the Mekong-India corridor also. So, we are envisioning the possible linkages that we can develop through the establishment of such corridors which have the infrastructure, which have the technological base, which have the manufacturing and industrial capability, and export potential, so that linkages that can be developed with Southeast Asia.

Question: Madam, as you rightly pointed out, Japan and India want to study the rise of China in a very positive manner. Are we intending to have an institutional mechanism to study that rise of China in a positive manner?

Foreign Secretary: I think at the academic level in both countries already there is this exchange and there is this cross-fertilization of ideas that is taking place. At the level of the Foreign Offices, at the level of the consultations that we have between the Foreign Ministries we discuss the regional situation. For instance, nobody asked me whether Afghanistan was discussed. We did discuss Afghanistan also. Like that we discussed China. So, we have a mechanism already in place between the two Foreign Ministries to discuss regional issues of interest, and obviously China would be one of those issues.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much. Have a good night!
319. Joint Statement of ‘Vision for India - Japan Strategic and Global Partnership in the Next Decade’ issued during the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Japan.

Tokyo, October 25, 2010.

1. The Prime Minister of India, H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, is currently paying an Official Working Visit to Japan for the Annual Summit of the Prime Ministers on 24-26 October 2010 at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Japan, H. E. Mr. Naoto Kan. The two Prime Ministers held extensive talks on bilateral, regional and global issues of shared interest on 25 October 2010.

2. The two Prime Ministers reiterated the fundamental identity of values, interests and priorities between Japan and India. They reaffirmed the political commitment in both countries cutting across party lines and popular desire for upgrading bilateral relations, and valued their cooperation for sustained peace and prosperity in a changing and dynamic Asia and the world. In this context, they expressed their common desire to further consolidate, enhance and expand the Strategic and Global Partnership between them through the second decade of the 21st Century.

3. The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction at the steady growth of political exchanges, dialogue and policy coordination at all levels. They positively evaluated Ministerial-level annual dialogues and exchanges between Foreign Minister, Defense Minister and Minister of Economy, Trade and Industry of Japan and External Affairs Minister, Defense Minister, Commerce and Industry Minister and Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission of India and noted that all these exchanges were successfully accomplished in 2010. They also supported the establishment of a Ministerial Level Economic Dialogue between India and Japan to give strategic and long-term policy orientation to their bilateral economic engagement, taking into account the regional and global context and to coordinate economic issues of cross-cutting nature, including infrastructure development and financing. They welcomed the launch of the '2 plus 2' dialogue at Sub-cabinet /
Senior Official level and the launch of a dialogue on Africa at the official level in 2010 as a reflection of wider policy consultation and coordination on foreign policy and security issues.

4. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the successful conclusion of negotiations on a balanced and mutually beneficial India - Japan Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA). They directed their relevant authorities to work towards early entry into force of CEPA and its smooth implementation. They expressed optimism that India-Japan CEPA will deepen their economic engagement, in terms of trade in goods and services, investment and cooperation and contribute to mutual prosperity. They hailed CEPA between these two leading economies of Asia as an important step for regional integration. They noted with satisfaction the recent growth in Japanese foreign direct investment (FDI) into India and hoped that CEPA and the Memorandum on Simplifying Visa Procedures, the latter signed today, will further facilitate the presence of Japanese businesspersons in India.

5. The two Prime Ministers underlined the vital importance of economic cooperation, including Japan’s Official Development Assistance to India and Special Economic Partnership Initiatives, in strengthening India-Japan partnership. Prime Minister Singh expressed his appreciation to the Government and the people of Japan for Japan’s generous role in India’s development. The two Prime Ministers aimed for early completion of both phases of the Western Dedicated Freight Corridor in India in a parallel manner with Japan’s financial and technical assistance, and noted with satisfaction the progress on the Phase II of the Corridor with the signing of the Exchange of Notes for the Engineering Services for Phase II in July 2010. They expressed their desire to accelerate progress on the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor (DMIC). Prime Minister Kan expressed his intention to enhance Japan’s involvement to DMICDC (Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor Development Corporation) through the efforts of related organizations such as JETRO (Japan External Trade Organization) and AOTS (Association for Overseas Technical Scholarship). The two Prime Ministers positively appraised the efforts from both sides to develop the Corridor in an eco-friendly manner as “Smart Communities” and welcomed the progress of cooperation in the field of urban development. They took note of the potential of the DMIC project to enhance physical connectivity across Asia. They encouraged greater investment from Japan into India including in the infrastructure sector over the next decade to realize this vision, and asked their respective sides to engage in dialogues on public-private partnership on DMIC. Prime Minister Singh appreciated Japan's decision on the extension of the period of technical cooperation programme, Visionary Leaders for Manufacturing (VLFM) Programme. The two Prime Ministers hoped that this programme will contribute to the development of manufacturing sector in India.

6. The two Prime Ministers welcomed India-Japan cooperation in development of new and renewable energy, and clean coal technology and enhancing energy efficiency in India's power sector and encouraged the India-Japan Ministerial Level Energy Dialogue to facilitate pragmatic and mutually beneficial cooperation in other related areas to further strengthen energy security. In this context, they also welcomed the establishment of a Nuclear Energy Working Group under the Energy Dialogue in April 2010 to exchange views and information on their respective nuclear energy policies from the energy, economic and industrial perspectives. They further welcomed the exchange of information between the nuclear energy industries of the two countries including through business missions. The two Prime Ministers recognized the importance of promoting cooperation between the two countries' industries in expanding bilateral energy cooperation on a commercial basis, including through the New Energy and Industrial Technology Development Organization (NEDO). Recognizing the importance of rare earths and rare metals for future industries, the two Prime Ministers decided to explore the possibility of bilateral cooperation in development, re-cycling and re-use of rare earths and rare metals and in research and development of their industrial substitutes.

7. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the commencement of negotiations between India and Japan on an Agreement for Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy in June 2010. They affirmed that cooperation in this sector will open up new opportunities for further developing the India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership. They encouraged their negotiators to arrive at a mutually satisfactory agreement for civil nuclear cooperation at an early date.
8. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the progress made in 2010 on facilitation of trade in high technology between the two countries. They asked the relevant authorities to maintain dialogue on high technology trade including respective export control systems and realize its full potential keeping in mind the strategic partnership between the two countries.

9. The two Prime Ministers decided to steadily expand security and defense cooperation between India and Japan. They aimed to cooperate to enhance their capacity in responding to security challenges such as maritime security which entails safety and freedom of navigation and counter-piracy, humanitarian assistance and disaster relief and response, inter alia, through bilateral and multilateral exercises, information sharing, training and dialogue. In this context, they welcomed the launch of India-Japan Shipping Policy Forum and mutual exchange of schedules of escort operations by the Indian Navy and Japan Self-Defense Forces in the Gulf of Aden. They instructed relevant authorities to realize the full potential of the Action Plan to advance Security Cooperation signed in 2009, based on the Joint Declaration on Security Cooperation between India and Japan.

10. The two Prime Ministers condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purpose. Prime Minister Kan condemned terrorist attacks in and against India, such as the bomb blast in Pune on 13 February 2010 and in Kabul on 26 February 2010, in which Indians as well as other nationals were targeted. They decided to enhance greater cooperation in combating terrorism through information-sharing and counter-terrorism training as well as utilizing the India-Japan Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism. They recognized the urgent need to finalize and adopt the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism in the United Nations and called upon all States to cooperate in resolving the outstanding issues expeditiously. Japan welcomed India’s membership of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) and India appreciated Japan’s support towards this.

11. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the progress made in Science and Technology cooperation, including the India-Japan Cooperative Science Programme. In order to realize full potential of cooperation in this field, they encouraged their respective authorities to promote the cooperative research in the strategic and high technology areas such as Green Innovation and Life Innovation. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the establishment and the holding of "Committee on India-Japan ICT (Information and Communication Technology) strategy for economic growth" and "India-Japan ICT regulatory policy talk". They shared the view that they will further enhance business tie-ups, R&D collaborative activities and policy cooperation in the field of information and communication technology through close bilateral cooperation.

12. The two Prime Ministers recognized the importance of strengthening cultural, academic and people-to-people exchanges between India and Japan to reflect their strategic partnership and popular goodwill. They hoped that the signing of the Memorandum on Simplifying Visa Procedures will further facilitate the movement of people between India and Japan. Prime Minister Kan appreciated India’s provision of the Visa on Arrival facility for Japanese tourists in India on experimental basis for 2010. They reiterated their commitment to collaborating in the development of the Indian Institute of Technology, Hyderabad (IITH) through various contributions from Japan including through Official Development Assistance and encouraged the relevant authorities to work towards early creation of physical infrastructure for IITH. They welcomed the on-going exchanges between IITH and Japanese academia and industry, including the visits of the students and young professors of IITH to Japan within the framework of Japan-East Asia Network of Exchange for Students and Youths (JENESYS) programme and the kick-off of Information Network for Natural Disaster Mitigation and Recovery under Science and Technology Research Partnership for Sustainable Development (SATREPS). They also welcomed the fact that the collaboration for the development of the Indian Institute of Information Technology, Design and Manufacturing Jabalpur is enhanced with the cooperation of Japanese universities and companies.

13. The two Prime Ministers decided to celebrate the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and Japan in 2012 in a befitting manner. They directed their officials to bring out a calendar of exchanges and events, aimed at bringing the two nations closer, to mark this important anniversary.

14. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their support for the East Asia Summit (EAS) as an open, inclusive, transparent and outward-looking forum, striving to strengthen global norms and universally recognized values and promoting peace, stability and prosperity across East Asia, of which India and Japan are key members. In this context, they welcomed the recent decision of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers to invite the United States and the Russian Federation to join as members of the EAS. They also supported existing achievements such as Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia (CEPEA) and its three-pillar approach for regional cooperation. They welcomed Japan's Concept Paper "Initial Steps towards Regional Economic Integration in East Asia: A Gradual Approach". They also welcomed ERIA's "Comprehensive Asian Development Plan", and recognized the importance of hard infrastructure and industrial policy in the Mekong-India Corridor Study, whose implementation could be further discussed between relevant authorities and entities. They discussed ways for enhancing greater economic integration and connectivity between India and the East Asian region. They encouraged their officials to examine studies undertaken by ERIA and other think-tanks in the East Asia region relating to transport and industrial development corridors in the peninsular region of India. Prime Minister Singh noted with appreciation Japan's initiative for an East Asian Community, in which India is expected to play an important role. Prime Minister Kan welcomed India's initiative to revive Nalanda University and expressed Japan's continued support to this initiative which will strengthen the cultural and civilizational bonds between the countries in Asia.

15. The two Prime Ministers expressed their commitment to assisting Afghanistan to become a stable, democratic and pluralistic nation free of terrorism and extremism. They emphasized the importance of a coherent and united international commitment to Afghan-led initiatives. Prime Minister Kan expressed that such a commitment encompasses security assistance, including assistance towards Afghan National Police, reintegration of insurgents, and development. Prime Minister Singh emphasized the importance of strengthening and adequate training of the Afghan National Security Forces so that they can defend the sovereignty and independence of Afghanistan. They concurred that the process of reintegration should not deviate from the principles expressed in the Kabul Conference. The two Prime Ministers pledged to explore opportunities for consultation and coordination on their respective civilian assistance projects, including those projects implemented in the neighboring countries, that advance Afghan leadership and ownership and build civilian capacity.

16. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their shared commitment to the total elimination of nuclear weapons. Prime Minister Kan stressed the importance of bringing into force the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) at an early date. Prime Minister Singh reiterated India’s commitment to a unilateral and voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing. They supported the strengthening of international cooperation with a view to addressing the challenges of nuclear terrorism and clandestine proliferation and expressed satisfaction with the outcome of the Nuclear Security Summit of April 2010, including the establishment by Japan of the Integrated Comprehensive Support Center for Nuclear Non-Proliferation and Nuclear Security to be established in Japan and the Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership to be established by India. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to working together for immediate commencement and an early conclusion of negotiations on a non-discriminatory, multilateral and internationally and effectively verifiable Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty (FMCT) in the Conference on Disarmament. They further reiterated that nuclear disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation are mutually reinforcing processes. They also underscored the importance of peaceful uses of nuclear energy and of further strengthening the nuclear non-proliferation efforts. They decided that both countries will enhance cooperation in nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation through close dialogues, including at regularly held bilateral nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation meetings as well as at the Conference on Disarmament.

17. The two Prime Ministers reiterated the importance of a positive result for the current climate change negotiations at the forthcoming conference of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) in Mexico, and reaffirmed their determination to work together towards this conference. They stressed that the outcome should be reached in an inclusive and transparent manner and should effectively address the challenge of climate change in accordance with the principles and provisions of the UNFCCC. They decided that the Copenhagen Accord should contribute positively to such an outcome. The two Prime Ministers also reaffirmed the importance of strengthening bilateral discussions on climate change on various occasions, including a possible establishment of a framework of comprehensive bilateral cooperation.

18. Prime Minister Singh congratulated Japan for hosting the 10th meeting of the Conference of Parties (COP) on Biodiversity in Nagoya on 18th-29th October 2010 and wished it a successful outcome, including the adoption of the Protocol on Access and Benefit Sharing. As prospective host of the next meeting of COP on Biodiversity in 2012, India looks forward to a close working relationship with Japan during its Presidency and beyond Nagoya.

19. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their resolve to realize a comprehensive reform of the United Nations (UN) Security Council, especially its expansion in both permanent and non-permanent categories which has commanded the maximum support from UN member states in the text-based intergovernmental negotiations in the UN General Assembly. They shared their view that both countries would participate actively in these negotiations and decided to accelerate their efforts, bilaterally as well as in close cooperation with the G4 and other like-minded countries, to achieve a meaningful result during the current session of the General Assembly, so as to make the Security Council more representative, legitimate, effective, and responsive to the realities of the international community in the 21st century.

20. The two Prime Ministers recognized that a positive outcome of the WTO Doha Development Agenda (DDA) of trade talks will be instrumental in economic recovery. They reaffirmed that a prompt, ambitious and balanced, as well as successful conclusion of the DDA would bolster the credibility of the multilateral trading system. They appreciated the momentum to rejuvenate the DDA negotiations and resolved to work together towards bridging the remaining negotiating gaps.
21. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed the role of the G-20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation and reiterated their commitment to work together and with other partners to pursue urgent and effective implementation of G-20 Summit decisions. They reaffirmed the importance of their cooperation for the Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth. They expressed their commitment to reform financial sector so as to prevent recurrence of financial crisis. They expressed support for the reform of the international financial institutions (IFIs) including IMF within the internationally recognized time frame to enhance their legitimacy, credibility and effectiveness. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to eschewing protectionism in all its forms covering trade in goods and services as well as investment and financial flows.

22. Prime Minister Singh expressed his appreciation for the warm welcome and hospitality of Prime Minister Kan. Prime Minister Singh extended an invitation to Prime Minister Kan for the next Annual Bilateral Summit in India in 2011 at a mutually convenient date to be decided through diplomatic channels. Prime Minister Kan accepted the invitation with pleasure.

Prime Minister of the Republic of India

Mr. Naoto Kan
Prime Minister of Japan

After the meeting between the two prime ministers, Foreign Secretary Mrs. Rao told journalists: "In the discussions, the point consistently emphasised was that both India and Japan believe they need to develop a strong, vigorous and an all-encompassing relationship in political, economic and security spheres." She termed the economic pact an alliance between Japanese technology and capital and a young Indian labour force. Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and his Japanese counterpart Naoto Kan, during restricted and delegation-level talks, resolved to continue the talks on a civil nuclear agreement. They instructed officials to ensure the smooth implementation of the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) and accelerate discussions on the reform of the United Nations Security Council (UNSC), to which both countries are aspirants as permanent members, Ms. Rao said: "Both discussed the need for open and transparent dialogue with China... they agreed that engaging China in more productive dialogue and developing structures of cooperation is the way forward. It requires deep analysis, close engagement and lots of patience... the reality is that both will have to develop in-depth ties with China." On the cooperation in the nuclear field, while Japan was keen on some sort of Indian political commitment on moving closer to the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty regime, India reportedly pointed out that its civil nuclear agreement with Japan cannot be materially different from the agreements signed with other countries.
Joint Declaration between Leaders of India and Japan on the conclusion of the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement.

1. We, the Prime Minister of the Republic of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, and the Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Naoto Kan, held a meeting in Tokyo on 25 October 2010, and discussed the importance of a close and broad economic partnership between India and Japan.

2. Having confirmed the progress made thus far in our work, we now declare the successful conclusion of negotiations for the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement between the Republic of India and Japan (hereinafter referred to as the India-Japan CEPA). We expressed our intention that the India-Japan CEPA will be signed at the earliest at Ministerial level, on completion of necessary formalities by both sides. We noted with satisfaction that India and Japan have succeeded in rendering the India-Japan CEPA truly comprehensive, as indicated by its name, by including fields that range from Trade in Goods, Investment, Trade in Services, and Movement of Natural Persons to Intellectual Property, Competition, Improvement of the Business Environment, Bilateral Cooperation and so forth. We also expressed our determination to put the India-Japan CEPA into effect soon after its signing and the completion of necessary procedures in each country.

3. The India-Japan CEPA will elevate the Strategic and Global Partnership between India and Japan to a new level. The India-Japan CEPA will develop areas of potential mutual complementarity, further strengthen the bilateral economic relationship, and promote economic development by increasing the cross-border flows of goods, persons, investment and services. It will also strengthen the foundation for the economic development of India and Japan through closer cooperation between the two countries in various fields. We hope that through the India-Japan CEPA’s implementation, India and Japan will be able to make maximum use of respective competitive advantages to promote the development of both economies. This will bring about increased prosperity and stability to the peoples of both countries, and thus, contribute to the peace and prosperity of the Asian region and the international community.

4. The India-Japan CEPA is also expected to foster new business opportunities, enhance competitiveness of the private sectors of both countries, and encourage closer partnership between those private sectors, from SMEs to infrastructure-related enterprises. We affirm the intention of the two Governments to support private sector efforts to fully utilize their potential.

5. We, representing the Governments and peoples of both Republic of India and Japan, in order to upgrade our Strategic and Global Partnership to a higher level for the mutual benefit of our citizens, and to lay a solid foundation for the peace, stability and prosperity of the two countries, the Asian region and the international community, hereby sign this document, affirming our firm determination to continue working for the further expansion and strengthening of the economic partnership between India and Japan.

Memorandum on Simplifying Visa Procedures between India and Japan.

MEMORANDUM ON SIMPLIFYING VISA PROCEDURES BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF INDIA AND THE GOVERNMENT OF JAPAN

The Government of the Republic of India (hereinafter referred to as “GOI”), and the Government of Japan (hereinafter referred to as “GOJ”) Considering the desire of both countries to strengthen their friendly relations;

Desirous of facilitating the contacts between nationals of both countries;

Have mutually confirmed their intentions to take or maintain the following measures to simplify their respective visa procedures subject to the laws and regulations of their respective countries.

1. Measures related to Business Visas in India and Temporary Visitor's Visas for Businessmen in Japan

(a) Each side may issue multiple entry visas valid for up to 5 years to each other's businessmen who travel to the other country on a temporary visit for business purposes on receipt of a letter of request from a duly recognized company or employer of each country or on a request from recognized chambers of commerce and industry and business organizations of each country, such as Confederation of Indian Industries (CII), Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), National Association of Software Services Companies (NASSCOM) and Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry in India (ASSOCHAM) and government recognized business and trade promotion councils in India and NIPPON KEIDANREN in Japan subject to the following:

(i) The stay in India during each visit should not exceed 180 consecutive days;
(ii) The stay in Japan during each visit should not exceed 90 consecutive days.

(b) Each side may issue entry visas to each other’s businessmen who are not covered under (a) above as follows:

(i) The Indian side may issue multiple entry business visas valid for up to 6 months with the period of stay up to 180 consecutive days to nationals of Japan who travel to India on a temporary visit to establish industrial or business venture, to explore possibilities of setting up industrial or business venture, for purchase or sale of industrial or commercial products, or for purpose of trade and other short term business related activities (not employment).

(ii) The Japanese side may issue single entry temporary visitor’s visas valid for 3 months with the period of stay up to 90 consecutive days to nationals of India who travel to Japan on a temporary visit for business purposes such as trade, short-term business projects and other short-term business related activities (not employment).

(c) The Japanese side may issue multiple entry temporary visitor’s visas valid for up to 3 years with the period of stay up to 90 consecutive days on each visit to family members (spouse and children) of the Indian businessmen mentioned in (a) above.

(d) Neither conversion of business visas to employment visas in India nor change of immigration status of persons who enter Japan with temporary visitor’s visas, not due to special unavoidable reasons, may be permitted, unless the applicant returns to his or her country of nationality and applies to the Embassy or Consulate of the other country.

2. Measured related to Employment Visas in India and Entry Visas for Working in Japan

Each side may issue employment visas/entry visas for working as follows:

(a) (i) The Indian side may issue multiple-entry employment visas to Japanese technicians or experts coming to India in pursuance of bilateral arrangements between the GOI and the GOJ or in pursuance of arrangements between non-governmental organizations including arrangements regarding cultural or academic exchanges that have been approved by the GOI for duration stated in the arrangement or a period of 5 years, whichever is less.

(ii) For those Japanese applicants who are not covered under (a) (i) above but are highly skilled and qualified professionals employed by a company, organization or industry in the IT software and IT enabled sectors in India, the Indian side may grant multiple-entry employment visas valid for 3 years initially. The applicant must submit proof of his or her employment contract or engagement by the company, organization or industry in India or of the undertaking in India. The applicant may be asked to submit proof of registration of the company, organization or industry under domestic laws and regulations. The Indian side may grant extensions of the period of stay for 2 more years on a year to year basis beyond the initial 3 years to those Japanese applicants who entered India with visas mentioned in this paragraph, in accordance with the procedures determined by the GOI. In this connection, the GOI will ensure that such procedures will be completed as expeditiously as possible.

(iii) For those Japanese applicants who are highly skilled and qualified professional coming to India for employment by a company, organization or industry in India or engaged in an undertaking in India on contract not covered in (a) (i) and (a) (ii) above, the Indian side may grant multiple-entry employment visas valid for up to 3 years or the term of assignment whichever is less. The Indian side may grant extensions of the period of stay for 2 more years on a year to year basis beyond the initial 3 years to those Japanese applicants who entered India with visas mentioned in this paragraph subject to provision of necessary documents.

(iv) The Indian side may issue to family members (spouse and children who are dependent on the applicant and forming part of the same household) of the nationals of Japan mentioned in (i), (ii) and (iii) above, multiple entry visas co-terminus with employment visas issued to the nationals of Japan, upon presentation of proof of their relationship and a sponsoring letter from their employer.

(b) (i) The Japanese side may issue single entry visas for working valid for 3 months with the period of stay of 3 years or 1 year depending on the intended length of their stay in Japan to nationals of India who have an appropriate Certificate of Eligibility issued by the regional immigration offices of Japan. After the arrival in Japan, nationals of India can obtain from the regional immigration offices a multiple re-entry permission valid for up to 3 years consistent with the period of stay marked on the landing permission granted at the port of entry. The GOJ will endeavour to deal with visa applications as expeditiously as possible from the date of application.

(ii) The Japanese side may issue to family members (spouse and children), who are dependent on the nationals of India mentioned in (b) (i) and forming part of the same household, single entry visas valid for 3 months with the period of stay co-terminus with the visas of the nationals of India depending on the intended length of their stay in Japan, on presentation of an appropriate Certificate of Eligibility issued to each family member by the regional immigration offices of Japan. After the arrival in Japan, family members can obtain from the regional immigration offices a multiple re-entry permission valid for up to 3 years consistent with the period of stay marked on the landing permissions granted at the port of entry.

(iii) The Japanese side may issue to family members (spouse and children), who are not dependent on the nationals of India mentioned in (b) (i) as well as family members (spouse and children) who are dependent on the national of India but not forming part of the same household, multiple entry visas valid for up to 3 years with the period of each of stay up to 90 days, on presentation of proof of relationship with the national of India and proof of his or her employment in Japan.
(iv) In case of parents of the nationals of India mentioned in (b) (i) or parents of his or her spouse, the Japanese side may issue single entry temporary visitor's visas valid for 3 months with the period of stay up to 90 consecutive days on presentation of proof of relationship, travel bookings and documents to prove the capacity of the applicants or nationals of India mentioned above to cover their travel expenditures.

(c) The nationals of Japan and their family members mentioned in (a) above will complete formalities for residence permits by applying to the Foreigners' Regional Registration Office under the Ministry of Home Affairs of India (hereinafter referred to as FRRO) within 14 days after their arrival in accordance with the relevant regulations of India. The residence permits issued by the GOI above need to be renewed on annual basis.

3. Measures related to Tourist Visas in India and Temporary Visitor's Visas for the Purpose of Sightseeing in Japan

Each side may issue tourist visas/temporary visitors visas for the purpose of sightseeing as follows:

(a) The Indian side may issue multiple entry tourist visas valid for up to 5 years with the period of stay up to 90 consecutive days to the nationals of Japan. An interval of at least 2 months between 2 visits to India is required on a tourist visa. However, with a view to ensuring that genuine tourists are not affected, nationals of Japan with tourist visas, after initial entry into India, may visit another country largely on account of neighbourhood tourism and need to re-enter India within 60 days, before finally exiting. Such tourists may be permitted up to 3 re-entries (on the basis of the needs) by the Indian Missions or Posts subject to their submission of a detailed itinerary and supporting documentation such as ticket bookings.

(b) (i) The Japanese side may issue single entry temporary visitor's visas for the purpose of sightseeing valid for 3 months with the period of stay up to 90 consecutive days ,on presentation of travel bookings, to the nationals of India, as well as to their families, who meet certain criteria, such as members of companies listed on recognized stock exchange, members of state and municipal enterprises, government officials and cultural figures and other persons judged by the Chief of Mission to be reliable.

(ii) The Japanese side may issue single entry temporary visitor's visas for the purpose of sightseeing valid for 3 months with the period of stay up to 90 consecutive days to those other than (i) above on presentation of travel bookings as well as documents to prove the applicant's capacity to cover their travel expenditures.

(iii) If the nationals of India participate in package tours organized by tour operators registered with the GOI and designated by the Japanese side, single entry temporary visitor's visas for the purpose of sightseeing valid for 3 months with the period of stay up to 90 consecutive days may be granted on presentation of necessary documents by the tour operator.

4. Measures related to Student Visas in India and Entry Visas for Students in Japan

Each side may issue student visas/entry visas for students as follows:

(a) The Indian side may issue student visas to Japanese applicants valid for up to 5 years, or duration of the course, whichever is shorter on presentation of a letter of confirmed admission from a recognized educational institution, proof of finances to cover travelling expenses and other expenditure in India. A maximum of 3 re-entries per academic year may be allowed. In emergency situation additional entries may be granted. The Japanese applicant should be required to register himself or herself with the concerned FRRO for a residence permit within 14 days of his or her arrival.

There will be no restriction with reference to the number of courses a Japanese student can attend in one institution or multiple institutions, provided the institutions are recognized. In case a Japanese student wishes to change a course midway and join another course, the period of validity of the residence permit will be adjusted to the duration of the latter course.

(b) The Japanese side may issue single entry visas valid for 3 months, with the period of stay up to 2 years and 3 months to Indian students to receive education at Japanese colleges, high schools or equivalent educational institutions or to take courses such as Japanese language at other equivalent educational schools. Indian students can obtain from the regional immigration offices a multiple re-entry permission valid for up to 2 years and 3 months consistent with the period of stay marked on the landing permission granted at the port of entry. The GOJ will endeavour to deal with applications for extension of the period of stay from such students of India beyond the permitted period of stay, as the case may be, for studying in Japan as expeditiously as possible from the date of application.

(c) In the case of applicants covered under the Cultural Exchange Programme or the Education Exchange Programme or other mutually approved Programme between the two sides, each side may issue relevant visas on presentation of a letter of authorization from the concerned Government body in each other's country.

5. Short-Term Visas (India)/Temporary Visitor's Visas (Japan)

Each side may issue relevant entry visas to the nationals of one country travelling to the other country for conferences, seminars and other short-term academic exchanges in accordance with applicable procedures as set forth in laws and regulations of each side.

6(a) Each side will, within a reasonable period that does not exceed 5 working days after an application requesting entry visas is considered complete under its domestic laws and regulations, inform the applicant of the decision concerning the application. At the request of the applicant, each side will endeavour to provide, without undue delay, information concerning the status of the application.
(b) The period referred to in paragraph (a) can be extended if additional consideration on the documents provided by the applicant is necessary.

7. Each side reserves the right, for reasons of security, public order or public health, to suspend temporarily, either in whole or in part, the implementation of the foregoing measures upon notification given to the other side through diplomatic channels.

8. The foregoing measures will be implemented from a date to be mutually decided by both sides through diplomatic channels. These measures are subject to all other conditions for grant of visas as per the extant instructions issued by both Governments being applicable. Such extant instructions are issued subject to the applicable laws and regulations of each country.

9. Both sides may, as necessary, hold consultations through diplomatic channels to deal with any issues that may arise relating to the foregoing measures.

10. Each side, when it terminates the foregoing measures, either in whole or in part, will give 1 month’s notice to the other side in writing through diplomatic channels.

11. Both sides will continue consultations to explore measures to further simplify visa procedures.

322. Speech by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Banquet hosted in his honour by the Japanese Prime Minister.

Tokyo, October 25, 2010.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Naoto Kan and Madame Nobuko Kan,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be back in your wonderful country after a gap of two years. I wish to thank Prime Minister Kan, the Government and the people of Japan for the exceptional courtesies and warm hospitality extended to me, my wife and to members of my delegation.

Excellency,

In my interactions with you since our first meeting in Toronto I have been touched by your deep personal interest in strengthening the foundations of our Strategic and Global Partnership. I admire your leadership, commitment and vision for a better future for our two peoples and for an enhanced partnership.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

India and Japan have historical and civilizational old ties. Our relations have been marked by mutual goodwill, amity and respect. This legacy has remained unbroken into the modern era, which has seen our bonds strengthen based on our shared values of freedom, democracy and the rule of law.

Today, our economic complementarities, strategic interests and common aspirations for Asian economic integration make us natural partners. Indeed, we have a mutual stake in each other’s progress and prosperity.

Excellency,

What sets our relations apart from others is that we rejoice in each other’s success. Our relations with Japan enjoy a national consensus in India. We wish to see Japan as a prosperous engine of growth for the world economy and the centre of technological excellence. The people of India remain ever grateful for the generous development assistance that Japan has provided to India over the years.

I would like to thank you for the productive discussions that we have had this evening. These reinforce my belief that the sky is the limit for expanding cooperation and friendship between us. We invite Japan to participate in the revival of the ancient seat of learning at the Nalanda University.

As the Asian century unfolds, we must stand together in our determination to bring peace, stability and economic advancement to our respective peoples, to the region and to the world at large.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to invite you to join me in raising a toast to:

- The health and well-being of His Excellency the Prime Minister of Japan and Madame Kan;

- The prosperity and progress of our friendly peoples; and to

- The India-Japan Strategic and Global Partnership.

Thank you.

323. Extract relevant to Japan from the Suo Motu Statement by External Affairs Minister in Lok Sabha on Prime Minister's recent visits abroad.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

Madam Speaker,

I rise to inform the House of Hon'ble Prime Ministers recent bilateral visits to Japan and Malaysia, and also to Vietnam and South Korea for attending the 8th India-ASEAN Summit & 5th East Asia Summit in Hanoi and the G-20 Summit in Seoul.

JAPAN

2. Prime Minister visited Japan from October 24-26, 2010 for the Annual Summit with the Prime Minister of Japan. Such summits have been institutionalized and held regularly since 2006. The desire to deepen relations with India came through in PM's all meetings in Tokyo with Prime Minister Kan and important members of his Cabinet, with leaders of opposition parties as well as captains of Japanese industry. PM also had the opportunity to call on and exchange views with Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Japan.

3. PM conveyed appreciation for Japan's generous Official Development Assistance to India over the years, especially in flagship infrastructure projects such as the Delhi Metro, Dedicated Freight Corridor Project and Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor. To corporate Japan, PM underlined the attractiveness of India as an investment destination and the complementarities between our two countries in terms of technology and manpower. Both Prime Ministers announced the conclusion of negotiations on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) between our two countries. Japan is completing its internal procedures following which the CEPA will be signed and later implemented, leading to a quantum increase in our trade and investment with each other. The Japanese Prime Minister also proposed the establishment of a comprehensive Ministerial-level Economic Dialogue to drive our economic relations forward. PM has agreed with his suggestion.
4. PM complimented Prime Minister Kan for his bold decision in June this year to commence negotiations with India on an Agreement for Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy. Given Japanese sensitivities on this issue, such a decision is further indication of the strategic nature of India-Japan ties. Both Prime Ministers have urged our negotiators to conclude such an Agreement at an early date. PM also expressed the hope that Japanese firms will soon be able to contribute to civil nuclear power generation in India.

5. India and Japan have agreed to work together on several regional and international issues including the emerging East Asian architecture, for reform of the United Nations including its Security Council and on climate change.

6. I am confident that his visit to Japan and his interactions with Prime Minister Kan and other leaders will contribute substantially to enhanced engagement with Japan which is becoming one of our most vital and dynamic international partnerships.

324. Press Release on the Indian Council of Cultural Relations constituting a Chair of Indian Studies at the University of Ryukoku at Kyoto.

Kyoto, November 24, 2010.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and the Ryukoku University, Kyoto, Japan signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on November 15, 2010 for establishment of a Short-Term Chair of India Studies at the Ryukoku University. Ambassador of India to Japan, Shri Hemant Krishan Singh signed the MoU on behalf of ICCR along with Prof. Dosho Wakahara, President of the Ryukoku University.

Under the terms of the agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the Ryukoku University, shall appoint an Indian academician who would be visiting the University for a period of one semester during each academic year. The Indian academician would deliver lectures on Indian Philosophy/Literature/History and Buddhist Studies and would contribute to the academic life of the University by engaging in teaching and research in his/her respective specialization. The Chair would commence from the academic year 2011 and the MoU would remain valid for three years till 2014.

This Chair would be ICCR’s second Chair in Japan. The first Chair on Indian Studies was set up at the University of Tokyo on September 25, 2009 and the Chair commenced in April 2010.

Establishment of this Chair is another major step in propagation of India related studies in Japan and thereby fulfilling ICCR’s mandate of fostering and strengthening academic and cultural bonds and towards enhancing knowledge and awareness about India.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and welcome. My colleague Shri Gautam Bambawale, who is Joint Secretary (East Asia) and I would like to talk to you about the visit of the President of Republic of Korea (ROK). After my opening remarks, both of us will be happy to take a few questions.

As you are aware, His Excellency Mr. Lee Myung-bak, President of the Republic of Korea will be paying a state visit to India from 24th to 27th January. He will be the Chief Guest at our Republic Day Celebrations this year. Some of you may know that he had earlier visited India in April 2007 before assumption of office in his personal capacity to familiarize himself with contemporary India. After assuming office, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and he have met on several occasions on the sidelines of international fora starting from the G20 Summit that took place in Japan in July 2008.

President Lee is being accompanied by a high-level delegation comprising of a number of Ministers, Parliamentarians, senior officials and businessmen. I may add that the Ministers include the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade; Minister of Knowledge Economy; Minister of Education, Science and Technology; Minister of Culture, Sports and Tourism; Minister of Trade and so on. This itself gives you an idea of the breadth of our cooperation and the number of sectors in which we are working together and where we are looking at deepening cooperation.

Let me briefly take you through the programme. He arrives on the 24th afternoon at Chennai where he would be visiting the Hyundai Motor India Limited and also be meeting with Korean businessmen. Later that evening, on the 24th, he comes to Delhi. On the 25th, after the ceremonial reception at Rashtrapati Bhavan, he has a series of meetings and calls on him and by him, which include calls by the External Affairs Minister, likely calls by the Leader of Opposition, the Vice-President, Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi, delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister. There is a banquet also that President would be hosting for him. Next day, he is the Chief Guest on the 26th at the Republic Day Celebrations. He would also be having an important business meeting organized by the apex business bodies including ASSOCHAM, FICCI and CII. That is very broadly his programme. We will be putting out a Media Advisory soon.

As to the relationship, I am happy to note that India and ROK enjoy very good relations. In October 2004, both countries established Long-Term Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity, which constitutes the bedrock of our relations. This was during the visit of President Roh Moo-Hyun. Both sides, see India-ROK partnership as a factor of peace and stability in Asia. We also have a Ministerial-level Joint Commission headed by the two Foreign Ministers. The last meeting of the Joint Commission, the fifth round, was held in Seoul in September 2007.

In recent years there has been significant all-round expansion in our bilateral ties including in the trade and economic sectors. We have a robust bilateral trade which was close to 16 billion dollars in 2008 reflecting an increase of 22 per cent. We had set a target of 10 billion dollars for 2010 and by 2008 actual trade was already 16 billion. Yet we are still far from attaining the potential which is quite significant.

ROK is also one of our major investment partners. There are about 300 Korean companies already in India including global majors like Hyundai, LG and Samsung. If there are any questions later on investment relationship, my colleague and I would be happy to dwell on it.

I would like to note that thanks to the significant growth in our trade and economic relations, in August 2009, during the visit of Commerce and Industry Minister we signed a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) with ROK, which is the second such agreement with any country. The first, as you would recall, was with Singapore. The second in August was with ROK. Also significantly this is the first CEPA with an OECD country. We expect that this would give a major boost to our trade and investment ties, and particularly give a substantial access in ROK to our services industry.

As I said, our relations are broad-based. The canvas extends to priority sectors like IT, knowledge-based industries, science and technology, high technology, automobiles and components, the SME sector, defence, space, cultural exchanges. We see synergies between the sophisticated IT hardware sector of ROK and our software sector.

I would also like to note that defence cooperation between our armed forces is expanding. In particular, cooperation between the Navies and Coastguards is of great importance to us. Our Coastguards signed a Memorandum of Understanding for cooperation in 2006.

We also have an agreement on science and technology which dates back to 1976. We have established a Joint Committee on Science and Technology which has already met three times since 2005. The last meeting was in Seoul in December 2009. A programme of cooperation in the field of science and technology for the years 2010-2012 has also been finalized. We are looking at identifying further synergies in this very important sector for us.

As importantly, we have been cooperating closely in the field of peaceful use of space. Some of you would recall that in 1999 India had launched a satellite for ROK called KITSAT-3. Since then there have been close contacts between ISRO and the Korean Aerospace Research Institute. We are looking at further increasing cooperation between the two organizations. I mentioned SME sector which is quite important. We feel that the Korean and Indian SME companies can find synergies in a number of areas such as semiconductors, plastics, auto parts, ceramic products, software and so on.

We also have a very vibrant cultural exchange programme. The two sides are in the process of discussing some special cultural events in both countries for this year. We have regular youth exchange programmes which can certainly be enhanced.

We maintain close contacts in regional fora including the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), the East-Asia Summit (EAS), the G20 Summit, and so on. We welcome the fact that ROK will be host to a G20 Summit in November this year. We also enjoy a commonality of views on the very important pertinent issue of global climate change. I may add that several agreements and MoUs are likely to be signed during the important visit which is expected to give a great impetus to our bilateral relationship.
Let me stop here. My colleague and I will be happy to take questions on the visit.

Question: What are the agreements on?

Joint Secretary (East Asia) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): The agreements we look forward to having between the two countries are likely to be in the areas of information technology, peaceful uses of space technologies and so on.

Question: Given South Korea’s proficiency in the area of nuclear technology, what is the kind of cooperation that India is looking at?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Let me put it this way. As you probably know, ROK supported us at the Nuclear Suppliers’ Group and we are very grateful for their support in that forum. We are also aware of the capabilities that ROK has in this area. In fact I am sure, all of you would have also noted, that very recently one of their power Corporations, KEPCO, has won a big contract worth 20 billion dollars in the United Arab Emirates. We have taken note of this. Both sides are keen to work in this area which is of interest not only to India but also to ROK. But I think we have to wait for the leadership of the two countries to discuss this issue if they do. And then we will take it forward from that point once this visit is over.

Question: Will there be any discussion about POSCO project which is being delayed?

Official Spokesperson: I cannot tell you what specifically will be discussed or not discussed. But regarding the POSCO project let me say that it is a very important project. It is one of the largest investment projects from anywhere in the world to India. Both the Government of India and the State Government attach considerable importance to the project. It has not evolved at the pace that we would have wanted it to evolve. But many of the issues have been sorted out. The remaining issues hopefully will be sorted out. As I said, Government of India and the State Government are trying its best to pave the way for the initiation of the project.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): Can I just add, Vishnu, to that? I wanted to draw your attention to the fact that there has been some recent move forward on POSCO project. In fact, Stage-II environmental clearances were given by the Central Government, by the Ministry of Environment and Forests, on the 29th of December 2009, just a few days ago. So, there has been, as Official Spokesperson has just said, some movement forward in this entire POSCO project recently.

Question: Is there any invitation or request from South Korea to join the six-nation talks on North Korea?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I am not aware of any such invitation.

Question: You mentioned about the ASEAN aspect. How do you place this visit in the context of ASEAN Plus Six format, instead of ASEAN Plus Three Plus Three which covers many countries including China?

Official Spokesperson: As I said already, ROK is a very important Asian country. It is an OECD country. It is a country with which we have a very broad-based cooperation. It is a country which has been supportive of an enhanced role, a suitable role by India in the Asian economic architecture. That is the background as far as cooperation between India and ROK is concerned.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I think what Vishnu has said is very correct. I would just like to add that we have had a lot of interaction with ROK not only bilaterally, as we are going to do during this visit, but also in international fora including the ARF, EAS and G20. So, our leaders meet at many of these fora and they also build up their own individual sort of linkages and individual relationships. In that sense, yes, India has been working in these international fora including EAS and ARF with ROK.

Question: Talking about POSCO project again, you said some issues have been resolved and some issues remain. Could you give us an idea what are the sticking points where we could see some sort of breakthrough maybe in this visit? Secondly, could you also give us an idea of trade balance between the two countries?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): First of all, let me talk about the POSCO project. As you know it is a very important project. The way the company visualizes it, it will be a 12 billion dollar investment when it is finally up and running. It will be the single largest Foreign Direct Investment project in India. But the problems that we are facing at present are basically issues dealing with land and land acquisition. There are two parts of the land which POSCO needs to acquire for this project. One part is Government land, the second part is private land. The overwhelming majority of the land is Government land. There is a very small part which is private land owned by about 400 odd families. There are some problems with that private land. The Government-owned land is further subdivided into two parts - forest land and non-forest land. The forest land has now been given the Stage-II environmental clearances by the Ministry of Environment and Forests, which I just spoke about, on the 29th of December 2009. So, we are moving ahead on the project. But we have to see how fast it moves ahead. We would like it to move ahead very fast.

On trade, as per the statistics that we have, total trade in 2008 was about 16 billion dollars out of which South Korean exports to India were about 11 billion dollars and the rest was Indian exports to South Korea. I would say that though we have a trade deficit, it is not something which is a terribly large.

Question: Any plan to expand the area of defence cooperation?

Joint Secretary (East Asia): The Minister of Defence of ROK visited India in 2007. So, there has been some movement forward during that visit. The way we are looking at it is that we want to move beyond Navy-to-Navy cooperation especially in the defence of the sea lanes, or interoperability between the two Navies and the defence of the sea lanes of communication. We want to move beyond that to other aspects of cooperation, whether it is Army-to-Army, Air Force-to-Air Force and maybe even defence production aspect of this cooperation. But we have to see how the discussions and the talks go between the two leaders.

Question: Will these issues be discussed during the current visit?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, the whole range of matters of mutual interest, and defence cooperation is one of the matters of mutual interest which would be covered during the discussions. I may just add to what Joint Secretary (EA) has mentioned. We have already had joint exercises between Coast Guards. We have had ship visits. In 2005 there was a Memorandum of Understanding on defence industry and logistics cooperation. A Joint Committee has been set up which has already met twice to identify several areas of mutual cooperation. So, again here there are a number of exchanges that we are having at different levels from Ministerial, to Services, to Coast Guards and so on.

Question: You said that about 300 companies from South Korea have invested in India. Any reciprocal figures available so far as India is concerned?

Official Spokesperson: We will certainly come back to you on that figure. I may just add that ROK is the seventh largest investor in India with FDI approvals of 2.7 billion dollars between August 1991 and 2009. As importantly, in October 2003 a Joint Investment Promotion Committee has been set up which has met thrice. The third meeting was recently in Seoul in September 2009. So, investments in both directions are something which is of interest. I mentioned that the Minister of Trade is accompanying the President. The President is being accompanied by a business delegation. We do expect the visit to give investments in both directions an impetus.

Joint Secretary (East Asia): I only want to add one point which is, as you all know, that the India-ROK Comprehensive Economic Partner Agreement (CEPA) has started implementation from the 1st of January. We believe that that is a very important document. Once its implementation has begun, and it has just begun, it covers a whole series of things including trade in goods, trade in services, investment and movement of natural persons. So, we think this is a win-win situation for both countries and we are going to see not only a rise in bilateral trade but also a rise in bilateral investments including movements of our services industries into South Korea.

Question: What is the major area of movement of our services into South Korea?

Official Spokesperson: That is one important facet of CEPA which is worth flagging. You know that we have the India-ASEAN agreement on goods which has been operationalised again on the 1st of January. But CEPA, as the name itself suggests, is far more comprehensive and covers both goods and services and gives a platform for the Indian service industries to make entrees into ROK.

Question: Sir, anything on Australia? There have been attacks in Brisbane. This is slightly south of Seoul.
Official Spokesperson: We have learnt of the attacks today in Brisbane. We are getting further details. You would recall that External Affairs Minister spoke to the media just a couple of days ago where he expressed his anguish at the continued attacks on people of Indian origin, Indian nationals and Indian students. At all levels between India and Australia, this matter has been taken up. We have received assurances from the Government of Australia that they follow a policy of zero tolerance. They are taking measures, but clearly more needs to be done. Our High Commission in Australia, our Consulates in Australia are in close and regular touch with the Government of Australia, with the State Governments, with the Police authorities, and they have been extending all possible assistance to the community. But safety and security of the Indian students and Indian nationals is very important for us. We are disappointed at the attacks which continue to be happening towards Indians.

Thank you.

326. Opening Remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the delegation level talks with President of Republic of Korea.

New Delhi, January 25, 2010.

Excellency,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome Your Excellency and the distinguished members of your delegation to India. I wish you a very pleasant and fruitful stay in India.

We are deeply honoured that you have accepted our invitation to be the Chief Guest at our Republic Day celebrations. It was during your visit to India in 2007 that you had called for a closer partnership between our two countries and an early conclusion of a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement between India and Korea.

We are delighted that a friend of India is at the helm of affairs in Korea and that together we will have the opportunity to realize your vision and our common vision of a strong and vibrant India-Korea partnership.
Your State visit today reflects our mutual commitment to strengthen relations between our countries. This is a relationship that rests on our shared values of democracy, rule of law and respect for human freedoms.

There is great admiration in India for the rapid progress made by Korea in all fields. The economic growth model followed by Korea has brought unprecedented prosperity to the people of Korea. We would like to learn from the Korean experience as we enhance our own efforts to achieve rapid and inclusive growth in India.

We are committed to developing a robust and comprehensive framework for strategic engagement with Korea.

I once again warmly welcome you to India. I am confident that your visit will open new vistas of cooperation between our countries.

327. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Science and Technology on the signing of India-South Korea agreement for Cooperation in Science and Technology.

New Delhi, January 25, 2010.

The Programme of Cooperation (POC) in Science & Technology with the Republic of Korea for the period of 2010-12 was signed here today by Shri Prithviraj Chavan, Minister of State (I/C) for Science & Technology with his Korean counterpart H.E. Byong Man Ahn. The POC was signed in presence of Hon'ble Prime Minister and the visiting Korean President. The new POC would provide opportunities in working on application oriented joint research projects of mutual interest in the following areas:

Transportation
Robotics & Engineering Sciences
Nutrition & Food Safety
Renewable Energy
The POC will also provide opportunities to scientists of both the countries to visit each other’s laboratories. To further intensify present level of ongoing bilateral cooperation, the new POC has been signed.

328. Joint Statement issued during the visit of the President of the Republic of Korea: 'Towards a Strategic Partnership'.

H.E. Mr. Lee Myung-bak, President of the Republic of Korea (ROK), paid a State Visit to India from 24 to 27 January 2010, at the invitation of H.E. Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil, President of the Republic of India.

2. The President of the ROK was accorded a ceremonial welcome at the Rashtrapati Bhawan on 25 January 2010. During the visit, President Lee met President Patil, and also held a summit meeting with Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh. On 26 January, President Lee will be the Chief Guest at the celebrations to mark the Republic Day of India.

3. During the summit meeting, the two leaders discussed ways to develop bilateral relations and exchanged views on regional and international issues. They expressed satisfaction on the strong development of India-ROK relations based on the "Long-term Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity" established in October 2004. Both sides welcomed the steady growth in high level exchanges and contacts between the two countries, and the expansion in various areas of bilateral relations.
including defence, trade, science & technology, information & communication technology, education, and culture.

4. Recognizing that the India-ROK partnership is based on the principles of common interest, mutual benefit and shared values, the two leaders agreed that there is immense scope for further enhancing bilateral relations in various areas. In this context, they also welcomed the entry into force of the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) on 1 January 2010 as the bedrock of a new comprehensive partnership between India and the ROK. They also recognized that, as both countries are major economies in the region, the partnership has the capacity to promote regional growth, and to contribute to prosperity and economic development of Asia.

5. Referring to the common challenges that both countries face in ensuring security against non-conventional threats, the two leaders agreed on the importance of cooperating and consulting with each other in developing regional architecture in the broader Asia-Pacific region.

6. Considering that India-ROK Partnership is a factor for peace and stability in Asia as well as between the two countries, the two leaders decided to enhance bilateral relations to a Strategic Partnership. They also identified the following elements of the future relationship:

Political and Security Cooperation

7. The two leaders agreed to maintain regular contacts, including on the margins of international meetings and conferences.

8. Both sides reiterated the importance of the India-ROK Joint Commission co-chaired by the Foreign Ministers of the two countries and acknowledged the necessity of holding the Joint Commission on an annual basis. It was agreed that the sixth meeting of the Joint Commission will be held in 2010.

9. The two leaders agreed that the Foreign Policy & Security Dialogue will be raised to the level of Vice Foreign Minister, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade (MOFAT) of the ROK, and Secretary (East), Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) of India. It was also agreed that the first meeting of the upgraded dialogue will be held in 2010.
10. The two leaders agreed to strengthen dialogue and exchanges in the area of defence through regular high-level military exchanges. They also agreed to explore the possibilities of joint venture cooperation in research & development, and manufacture of military equipment including through transfer of technology and co-production. It was agreed that the third meeting of the Joint Committee on Defence Logistics and Industry will be held during the first half of 2010.

11. The two leaders also agreed on the need for greater cooperation between the navies and coast guards in areas pertaining to the safety and security of international maritime traffic. They shared the view that developing long-term cooperative relations in this area will contribute to peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region.

Economic and Trade Cooperation

12. Both sides shared the view that the CEPA will contribute to enhancing trade and investment flows between the two countries. They also reaffirmed their commitment to ensure the smooth implementation of the CEPA. It was agreed that the first meeting of the Joint Committee headed by Trade Ministers of the two countries or their representatives will be held in the second half of 2010 to review the status of the implementation of the CEPA.

13. The two leaders agreed to set a target of US$ 30 billion for bilateral trade to be achieved by 2014. They also agreed to strengthen cooperation in trade and investment, SMEs, SPS and Standards related measures, trade remedies and IPR issues.

14. Both sides agreed to enhance cooperation in the financial sector through bilateral consultations on macroeconomic policy, budget, taxation, finance, and public sector reform.

15. Noting that the expansion of mutual investment will contribute to the reciprocal economic growth of both countries, the two leaders agreed to enhance cooperation and support at the governmental level to nurture a favourable environment, including through mutual agreement on a revised Double Taxation Avoidance Convention (DTAC) before the end of 2010. The Indian side hoped that investment from the ROK into India will expand, including in the infrastructure and manufacturing sectors. In this context, referring to the project to set up a Korean industrial complex and technology zone in the State of Gujarat, the two leaders noted its potential to further accelerate the bilateral trade and investment linkages. The two leaders also recognized the need to expedite the implementation of the POSCO project in the State of Orissa. The Korean side hoped that Indian investment in the ROK will also expand. It was agreed that the fourth meeting of the India-ROK Joint Committee on Investment Promotion will be held in New Delhi in 2010.

16. Noting the important role of air transport network in promoting economic, social and cultural exchanges, the two leaders agreed to explore the possibility of enhancing air connectivity between the two countries. They also agreed to consider the early conclusion of a mutually beneficial Maritime Shipping Agreement.

Science and Technology Cooperation

17. The two leaders recognized the importance of strengthening cooperation in the field of science & technology. They welcomed the outcome of the Meeting of the Joint Committee on Science & Technology held in Seoul in December 2009 and endorsed the decision of the two sides to consider creating a dedicated fund of US$ 10 million (with a contribution of US$ 5 million by each side) to promote joint research. The two leaders also agreed that the two sides may explore the possibility of upgrading the level of the dialogue.

18. The two leaders also agreed to strengthen cooperation in the information technology sector including through the expansion of mutual investment and personnel exchanges. They also welcomed the decision of the two sides to renew the Memorandum of Understanding on Cooperation in Information Technology and Services.

19. The two leaders welcomed the signing of the MOU on cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space between the Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) and the Korea Aerospace Research Institute (KARI) and expressed confidence that the MOU will facilitate strong cooperation between the two countries in this important sector.

20. The two leaders shared the view that nuclear energy can play an important role as a safe, sustainable and non-polluting source of energy. They agreed to facilitate development of a framework for bilateral civil nuclear cooperation.
Social and Cultural Cooperation

21. Recognising the need to further strengthen cultural exchanges and people to people contacts between India and the ROK, the two leaders agreed to designate the year 2011 as 'Year of Korea' in India and 'Year of India' in the ROK.

22. The Indian side also welcomed the ROK initiative to open a Korean Cultural Centre in New Delhi in 2011, which will go a long way in further promoting awareness about Korean life and culture in India.

Cooperation in the International Arena

23. The two leaders recognized the legitimate and long-term interests of both countries in the peace and prosperity of the Asia-Pacific region, and the importance of developing an open and inclusive economic regional architecture that is based on the principles of mutual benefit and shared opportunity. In this context, they affirmed that both India and the ROK have a significant role to play in such a regional architecture and agreed to maintain regular consultations and close coordination in the EAS, ARF, ACD and ASEM processes.

24. Both sides agreed to work for comprehensive United Nations reform, including Security Council expansion, with a view to enhancing its representativeness and, consequently, its effectiveness, authority and efficiency, as well as its capacity to address various challenges facing the international community.

25. The two leaders reiterated their commitment to the eradication of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, and agreed to enhance cooperation in this area, including through information sharing.

26. Both sides also reiterated their common commitment on nuclear disarmament and the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery.

27. The two leaders valued the G-20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation and commended its timely and strong policy response in the crisis. They welcomed the Framework for Strong, Sustainable and Balanced Growth launched at Pittsburgh and looked forward to its implementation.
28. The two leaders welcomed the Copenhagen Accord. They reaffirmed their determination to work closely together in the negotiations both under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and the Kyoto Protocol towards an Agreed Outcome to be adopted at the 16th Session of the Conference of the Parties.

29. The following agreement and MOUs were signed during the visit:

(i) Agreement on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons
(ii) MOU on Cooperation in Information Technology and Services
(iii) Programme of Cooperation in the Fields of Science and Technology for the Period 2010-2012
(iv) MOU for Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space

30. The two sides agreed that the State Visit of the President of the Republic of Korea to India has reflected the recent trend in expanding bilateral relations between the two countries and that this visit will provide the impetus for a new vision of friendly and cooperative relations in the years to come.

31. On behalf of the Government and the people of the Republic of Korea, President Lee Myung-bak thanked the Government and the people of India for the warm and friendly hospitality accorded to him and his delegation. President Lee extended cordial invitations to President Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to visit the Republic of Korea at a mutually convenient time. The invitations were accepted with appreciation. The timing of these visits will be decided through diplomatic channels.

New Delhi, January 25, 2010,

Your Excellency President Lee Myung-bak,

Madame Kim,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I extend a warm welcome to you Mr. President, to Madame Kim and your delegation on the eve of India's 61st Republic Day.

India and the Republic of Korea are both ancient civilizations. Cultural contacts between our peoples date back several centuries, enriching the bonds between our two countries. We, in India, have heard of the legend from a Korean classic, that a Princess from Ayodhaya in India travelled all the way to Korea some 2000 years ago to marry King Kim Suro.

The teachings of Lord Buddha constitute another enduring link from our past. The famous Korean monk Haejao, on his return from India to Korea in the 8th Century A.D., gave an invaluable record of the socio-economic conditions that obtained in India then. This symbolizes the intellectual exchanges which flourished between our ancient universities and monasteries. In that glorious age, Nalanda was a great seat of learning for scholars from all over the East, South East and Central Asia. Today, we are working to revive Nalanda University's glorious past and once again, make it a centre of academic excellence. We greatly value Korea's support in these efforts. Korea also enjoys the unique distinction of having one of the largest women university in the world, that focuses primarily on development of leadership skills amongst women. This, alongwith exchange of students, can be an area of cooperation between our two countries.

Excellency,

We, in India, admire the discipline and hard work of the Korean people that has turned your country into a modern, developed economy. The socio-economic transformation of the Republic of Korea is a source of inspiration.
As far back as in 1929 Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore, our national poet, wrote:

"In the golden age of Asia
Korea was one of its lamp bearers
And that lamp is waiting
To be lighted once again
For the illumination of the East"

Our shared values of democracy, rule of law, respect for human rights and the quest for peace and development, have brought us closer together again. India is one of the fastest growing economies in the world. Several Korean companies have chosen India as their global hub for production and product development. This is an excellent model which can harness the synergies between India and the Republic of Korea to mutual advantage.

The implementation of our bilateral Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement from the 1st of January this year will open new opportunities for growth in trade, investment and services. We are confident that businesses in both our countries will leverage the Agreement to mutual benefit and to the common advantage of our people.

Excellency,

We have raised our relationship to a Strategic Partnership. I assure you, that India will always take a long-term perspective of our bilateral ties. We will continue to work with you on regional and global issues. We are happy that the G-20 has become the framework in which we discuss international financial and economic issues. We welcome the fact that the Republic of Korea will host the G-20 Summit in November this year.

India and the Republic of Korea are two important countries in Asia. We work closely together in the East Asia Summit process. We believe that such an architecture should remain open and inclusive. We look forward to working with you in building an East Asian community for prosperity and peace.

Excellency,

We recall your earlier visit to India in 2007. The vision that you outlined then, for the growth of our bilateral relations had ready resonance in India.
In the course of your current visit we have had fruitful discussions and signed several agreements. I am confident that this visit will prove to be a major milestone in our ever-expanding ties.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in raising a toast to:-

— the good health of President Lee and Madame Kim;
— the continued progress of the people of the Republic of Korea; and — the expanding co-operation and friendship between the Republic of India and the Republic of Korea.

330. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Sinking of ROK Frigate 'Cheonan'.

New Delhi, May 21, 2010.

The Government of the Republic of Korea has shared with us the report of the Joint Civilian-Military Investigation Group established to inquire into the causes of the sinking of Frigate* 'Cheonan' on 26 March 2010.

We condemn the incident and condole with the Republic of Korea on the tragic loss of life. India appreciates the maturity and restraint with which the Republic of Korea has been handling the issue with a view to maintaining peace and stability in the region.

* The statement of the Government of India came when the tensions deepened on the Korean peninsula as South Korea accused North Korea of firing a torpedo that sank a naval warship in March, killing 46 sailors in the country's worst military disaster since the Korean War. President Lee Myung-bak vowed "stern action" for the provocation following the release of long-awaited results from a multinational investigation into the March 26 sinking near the Koreas' maritime border. North Korea however called the results a fabrication, and warned that any retaliation would trigger war. It continued to deny involvement in the sinking of the warship Cheonan. While 58 sailors were rescued from the frigid Yellow Sea waters, 46 died.
Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (East Asia) on External Affairs Minister's visit to Republic of Korea.

New Delhi, June 16, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to you all. My colleague and good friend Mr. Gautam Bambawale, our Joint Secretary (East Asia) who inter alia looks after matters pertaining to Republic of Korea (ROK), is here along with me to brief you about the very important visit of our External Affairs Minister (EAM) to Seoul from the 17th to the 19th of this month for the Sixth India ROK Joint Commission Meeting. The Joint Commission Meeting (JCM) is co-chaired by EAM and the Foreign and Trade Minister of ROK.

During his stay in Seoul, the EAM Shri S.M. Krishna will be calling on the President of ROK, would meet the Defence Minister and of course hold extensive discussions on the whole range of issues of interest with his counterpart.

Let me share with you brief details about EAM's delegation and programme. He would be assisted by: our Ambassador in Seoul; Advisor to EAM Mr. Raghavendra Shastry; Mr. Gautam Bambawale, Joint Secretary (East Asia); and senior officials from the Ministry of Defence, the Ministry of Commerce and others.

As to the programme, I mentioned that the visit is from the 17th to the 19th of June. Tomorrow, on the 17th of June, EAM would be meeting prominent members of the Indian community and Indian business leaders. On the 18th, Friday, there would be the Joint Commission meeting. He will be calling on the President of ROK and giving a talk at the Institute of Foreign Affairs and National Security, which is an important think-tank. He would also be meeting with the Minister of Defence. Those are the programme highlights.

We enjoy excellent relations with the Republic of Korea. In fact, there are no outstanding issues between us. You would recall that President Lee Myung-bak had paid a state visit to India in January when he was the Chief Guest at the Republic Day Celebrations. During the visit it was decided to elevate our relations to the level of strategic partnership. India and South Korea see our partnership as a factor for peace, development and stability in Asia.

Coming back to the Joint Commission, this institution was established in 1996. I mentioned that we are going to have the sixth meeting of the JCM on the 18th. The JCM is the main forum for discussing the entire spectrum of our very vibrant and multifaceted ties, to take stock of the relationship and to give it further direction and momentum. Both sides are keen to enhance bilateral engagement and build on synergies.

In recent years there has been all-round expansion in our ties, including in the trade and economic relations. We have a robust bilateral trade which crossed 15 billion dollars in 2008. During the visit of the President, a trade target of 30 billion dollars by 2014 was established which is easily achievable.

ROK is also one of our key investment partners. In fact, investments from ROK to India are already the 7th largest. There are about 300 South Korean companies operating in India including the global giants like Hyundai, Daewoo, LG, Samsung, etc., and they are employing more than 40,000 workers.

To give a further boost to our trade and economic relations, especially to garner greater access for our services in ROK, a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) was signed in August 2009 and was operationalised on the 1st of January this year. This is only the second CEPA that has been signed and the first with a OECD country.

I mentioned we have vibrant and multifaceted ties with ROK. We have already identified a number of high priority areas where very good work is being done, including IT and knowledge-based industries, science and technology, high-technology, energy, automobiles and components, small and medium enterprises - again that is a sector which we are attaching a lot of importance to - defence, space, cultural ties, parliamentary exchanges, people-to-people exchanges. Defence cooperation between our armed forces is expanding. The Indian and the South Korean Coast guards signed a Memorandum of Understanding for cooperation in 2006, and cooperation between the Coast guards and Navies is also growing.
India and ROK also signed an agreement on science and technology cooperation in 1976. During the visit of the President of ROK, a dedicated joint fund for R&D has been established to which five million dollars will be contributed by both sides.

We are also closely working together, cooperating in the peaceful use of space. I would like to note here that in 1999 India launched a satellite for ROK called KITSAT-3, along with an Indian satellite. More initiatives are being discussed.

There is very good scope for deepening our collaboration in the SME sector covering a number of areas which have been identified. We also have a very good, a very vibrant cultural exchange programme between ROK and India. In 2011, that is next year, we expect to have the Festival of India in ROK and the Festival of ROK in India. Both sides would also like to see greater people-to-people contacts and tourism. Buddhism for example is another common link between our two countries.

We have maintained close contacts and held exchange of views at a number of international fora where both of us are members including ARF, East Asia Summit, G20 and so on. You know that a G20 Summit would take place in Seoul in November 2010, and we welcome that. We also have similarity of views on issues relating to global climate change.

Coming back to the visit, I may just note that some agreements are likely to be concluded during the visit. We expect that it will give a strong impetus to our bilateral relations and infuse greater momentum, greater depth, greater content in the strategic partnership between India and Republic of Korea.

My colleague and I will be happy to take your questions. Thank you.

Question: You were talking of high-tech trade. Is there any prospect of civil nuclear cooperation as well? Secondly, what is the update on the POSCO project? There were some hurdles when the ROK President visited us in January.

Joint Secretary (EA) (Shri Gautam Bambawale): On the first question of civil nuclear cooperation, I think it will be discussed at the Joint Commission between the two Foreign Ministers. I do not know in what direction that discussion will go. But I think there will be something that the two Foreign Ministers will put out to the press after their meeting. So, we have to wait for their discussions to take place and for the results of their discussions to emanate after the meeting of the Joint Commission.

As far as POSCO is concerned, I think the Central Government has now given the clearances which lie with the Government of India, and it is now for the State Government of Orissa to move the project forward. I think you have been seeing in the last few weeks that the State Government has been making tremendous efforts in moving this project forward. We hope that it will get off the ground very soon.

Question: Do you have something on the defence cooperation? What will be the direction?

Joint Secretary (EA): The Defence Minister of Korea visited India in 2007 and had very good discussions with our Raksha Mantri. The Coast guards of the two countries have been collaborating, as has been mentioned by my colleague the Joint Secretary for External Publicity. We look at expanding this cooperation between the two Coastguards, between the two Navies, during this round of the Joint Commission. In fact, we will be looking to the Republic of Korea for an expansion of the cooperation between our two Navies definitely in the Indian Ocean and in the Gulf of Aden in anti-piracy operations.

Question: Can we expect some discussion on the PSI? South Korea has signed up for the PSI. India is holding out. Could you just tell us what our position will be?

Joint Secretary (EA): I do not think there will be any discussion on the PSI with the Republic of Korea. In case they raise it we will be in a position to reply to them.

332. Press Release issued by the Embassy of India in Seoul on the Call by External Affairs Minister on President of the Republic of Korea.

Seoul, June 17, 2010.

External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna commenced his official visit to the Republic of Korea (ROK) earlier today with a call on the President H.E. Lee Myung-bak at the Blue House, the official residence of the President. The constructive and fruitful meeting, in a warm and cordial atmosphere, lasted over 40 minutes.

President Lee fondly recalled his landmark visit to India in January this year, as the chief guest at India's Republic Day celebrations. He appreciated EAM's visit to Seoul for the 6th Joint Commission meeting (JCM), soon after his own, which would give further impetus to bilateral relations and the initiatives announced during his visit to India.

President Lee and EAM underscored the importance of increasing people-to-people exchanges to bolster the Strategic Partnership between the two countries including in the fields of education, tourism and youth. EAM suggested that a bust of Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore, who had described Korea as the 'Lamp of the East', be installed at a prominent location in Seoul. Warming to the theme, President Lee said that he would make a strong recommendation to the concerned city authorities to identify a suitable location for installing the bust of Gurudev in 2011, the 150th birth anniversary of the poet laureate.

Referring to the MOU of cooperation, signed last January between the Indian Space Research Organization (ISRO) and Korean Aerospace Research Institute (KARI), EAM suggested that ROK satellites could be launched on Indian launch vehicles. President Lee agreed to consider the suggestion.

Later in the evening, EAM interacted with prominent members of the Indian Community. He apprised them about the Strategic Partnership between the two countries. EAM observed that bilateral ties were on the cusp of a major take-off and exhorted the Indian community to assist the process, as well as, to make the best use of emerging opportunities for greater trade and investment.

EAM will be co-Chairing the 6th India-ROK JCM with his ROK counterpart tomorrow.
Press Release issued by the Embassy of India in Seoul on the 6th meeting of India - ROK Joint Commission.

Seoul, June 18, 2010.

External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna who is on an official visit to the Republic of Korea June 17 - 19, 2010, today co-chaired the India - Republic of Korea (ROK) Joint Commission with his counterpart Mr Yu Myung-hwan, ROK Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade.

2. The Joint Commission reviewed all aspects of India - ROK bilateral relations particularly developments since the landmark state visit to India of President Lee Myung-bak in January 2010. The two Ministers noted with satisfaction that the progress achieved in bilateral ties over the past few years resulted in its elevation to a Strategic Partnership. It was agreed that more high level visits between the two countries would be encouraged. The importance of exchanges and contacts between the Parliaments of the two countries were discussed.

3. EAM stressed that economic cooperation is the bedrock of India - ROK bilateral relations. The implementation of the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) since January 1, 2010 was reviewed by the Ministers. Bilateral trade has jumped by a robust 70% in the first 4 months of the year. This trend is expected to continue over the coming months, providing confidence that the trade target of US $ 30 billion by 2014 can be achieved. In this context, EAM pointed out the need for expanded but balanced trade growth and made a strong case for greater access to the Korean market for Indian pharmaceuticals, IT enabled services and agro-products.

4. The two Ministers discussed ways to enhance bilateral defence and security cooperation including through expanded naval cooperation in anti-piracy operations in the Indian Ocean. EAM stressed the potential for expanded cooperation in defence production including through transfer of technology, joint ventures and co-production. The visit of the Defence Minister of India to ROK later this year is expected to further boost such cooperation. EAM also met with ROK Defense Minister Kim Tae-young later in the day.
5. Noting that the two sides had already exchanged drafts of an Inter Governmental Agreement on Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, the two Ministers agreed to launch negotiations between the two countries, at an early date, for the conclusion of such an Agreement.

6. EAM underscored the importance of the implementation of the Memorandum of Understanding on Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, including through the launch of Korean satellites on Indian launch vehicles.

7. EAM proposed that the establishment of the dedicated Joint Science & Technology Fund of US $10 million (with a contribution of US $5 million by each side) to promote joint research between scientists and technologists of the two countries be expedited. In this context, he invited the Korean Minister for Education, Science and Technology to visit India soon.

8. The Joint Commission discussed details of the 'Year of India' in Korea and the 'Year of Korea' in India in 2011, including cooperation in showcasing Indian culture and arts in Korea. EAM suggested the installation of a bust of Indian poet Rabindranath Tagore at a prominent location in Seoul in 2011, the 150th birth anniversary of the poet. Tagore is well known in Korea after having described it as the 'Lamp of the East' in one of his poems.

9. Expanding people-to-people exchanges including through greater tourism, student exchanges and youth delegations were discussed in the Joint Commission Meeting.

10. Addressing a large gathering of eminent scholars, researchers and diplomats at the Institute of Foreign Affairs and National Security (IFANS), EAM suggested a 6-pronged strategy for strengthening the India - ROK Strategic Partnership for the 21st Century. The speech was extremely well received by the Korean audience.

11. Both sides agreed that an open and inclusive Asian regional architecture based on the principles of mutual benefit and shared opportunity is in the interest of both countries. They agreed to work closely towards this goal within the East Asia Summit framework. The Indian side welcomed the fact that the G20 Summit will be held in Seoul, RoK, in November 2010.
12. The following documents were signed during the visit:

(i) MoU between the Ministry of Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises of India and the Small and Medium Business Administration of the RoK on Cooperation in the field of Small and Medium Enterprises.

(ii) MoU for Cooperation between ICCR and Korea Foundation.

(iii) MoU for Cooperation between Indian Council for World Affairs (ICWA) and the Institute for Foreign Affairs and National Security (IFANS) of the RoK.

13. The Minister of External Affairs of India invited the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade of the RoK to pay an official visit to India at a mutually convenient time in 2011 for the 7th Joint Commission Meeting. The Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade of the RoK accepted the invitation.

334. Address by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the Institute of Foreign Affairs and National Security (IFANS) on 'Strengthening India - ROK Strategic Partnership'.

Seoul, June 18, 2010.

Chancellor Lee Soon-chun,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen.

I am delighted to be in Seoul on my first official visit as External Affairs Minister of India. It is a privilege and honor to be able to address such a distinguished gathering here at the Institute of Foreign Affairs and National Security, the premier foreign policy and strategic affairs institution of the Republic of Korea. I thank you for providing me your august platform to share my views on how India and Korea can move ahead in the coming years with a view to strengthening our 'Strategic Partnership' for the 21st Century.
2. We in India viewed the visit of President Lee Myung-bak this past January, when he was Chief Guest at our Republic Day celebrations, as a major milestone in our bilateral relations. It signaled a coming of age of the India - Korea relationship. Forged in the crucibles of civilization when a Princess from Ayodhya traveled to Korea to marry King Suro, through the poems of India's poet laureate Rabindranath Tagore who described your country as the 'Lamp of the East', and to India's Chairmanship of the Election Commission that held the first ever elections on the Korean Peninsula, both our countries were well aware of the other. However, it required our recently expanding economic ties and the astute leadership of President Lee and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to elevate our relationship to that of a 'Strategic Partnership'.

3. Ladies and Gentlemen, my own visit to Seoul is aimed at consolidating and expanding our ever closer ties. In the hours gone by, I have been able to call on President Lee and hold wide-ranging, intense and fruitful discussions with my counterpart Foreign Minister Yu Myung-hwan. I am scheduled to meet Defense Minister Kim Tae-young later this afternoon. Foreign Minister Yu and I co-chaired the 6th meeting of the India - ROK Joint Commission where we agreed on several steps and measures to impart greater momentum to our relations. From this podium I wish to convey my ideas, on the road ahead, to a wider segment of the Korean population, particularly to you its intellectuals and opinion-makers.

4. India embarked on what we term our 'Look East' policy in 1992. In the eighteen years since, we have increasingly become an East Asian nation. The proportion of our trade with and investment from East and South East Asia has risen dramatically. We are not merely a Summit Partner of ASEAN, but are integral to the economic and strategic processes underway in this part of the world. We actively participate in the ASEAN Regional Forum or ARF and are founder members of the East Asia Summit. Our Trade in Goods Agreement with ASEAN has been implemented since January this year and we are making steady progress in our negotiations on an agreement on Trade in Services. Similarly, we are moving ahead in our discussions with Japan on an Economic Partnership Agreement. Meanwhile, China has emerged as one of our largest trading partners. It is an India moored in East Asia through an ever enlarging web of relations with this most dynamic part of the world, which seeks to build an even stronger partnership with the Republic of Korea. I would like to propose a 6-step strategy to accomplish this goal.

5. First, we should consolidate and strengthen our political partnership through high level exchanges. President Lee’s State Visit to India this January has been quickly followed up by the meeting of the India - Korea Foreign Policy and Security Dialogue in early April, the first time this forum has been held at Vice Foreign Minister or Secretary level. This set the stage not merely for my own visit but also an expansion in our cooperation on several regional and global issues. Many of you would have noted the sympathetic reaction of India to the investigation report on the sinking of the Korean naval corvette 'Cheonan'. We condemn the incident and condole with the ROK in the loss of life. India appreciates the maturity and restraint with which the ROK is handling the situation with a view to maintaining peace and stability in the region. At the same time in order to meet the new challenges that international shipping is facing from non-State actors especially in the Gulf of Aden, we believe it is time for our two countries to expand our naval cooperation. Perhaps, we can do so by holding the next joint exercise between our Coast Guards at an early date. Also, we must contemplate greater cooperation and coordination in anti-piracy operations in the Indian Ocean in which both our Navies are very closely involved.

6. Later this year, my colleague the Defence Minister of India will visit your great nation. I am confident that his visit will provide a boost to our security cooperation including in the sphere of defence research and development. This will bring our countries closer together. In my own discussions with your leadership, I have suggested that India and Korea look beyond a buyer-seller defence relationship to one where we envisage co-production, joint ventures and the transfer of technology. We suggested a few specific ideas in the recent meeting of our bilateral Joint Defence Industry and Logistics Committee. We need to move further and we need to do so faster.
7. High level visits are integral to moving our partnership onto a higher growth trajectory. On our part, we will ensure continuity, and will not be found wanting. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh will of course be in Seoul this November when you host the G-20 Summit.

8. Second, we must continue to expand, diversify and deepen our burgeoning economic ties. Ladies and Gentlemen, we have reached the current juncture in our bilateral relations due to the rapidly expanding Indian economy and the fact that Korean businesses were quick off the starting block in recognizing the tremendous opportunities in India. While our GDP grew at an average annual rate of about 9% in the four years prior to the global economic and financial crisis, we have been able to weather this international storm reasonably well. In fiscal 2008, our GDP growth rate fell to 6.7%, but in fiscal 2009 we were able to manage 7.4% growth and our economy is forecast to expand by 8.5% this year. Our banking sector has remained relatively immune from the global malaise due to our strict regulatory framework and our stock market has rebounded strongly after an initial hiccup. Therefore, my friends, the outlook for the Indian economy continues to be positive and Korean industry can look to India for growth and profits. The experience of Hyundai Motors is a case in point. Hyundai which has one factory near Chennai manufacturing 300,000 cars, recently decided to establish yet another unit in southern India with a similar output catering mainly for exports to the Gulf and east Europe. We are confident that the leadership provided by Hyundai Motors where it has made India a hub for global production and exports will be followed not merely by other Korean companies but also by firms from across East and South East Asia. The Hyundai business model will serve both India as well as South Korea well.

9. We continue to remain cognizant of the fact that foreign direct investment is extremely competitive in nature. We do not intend to sit back on our laurels and hope to continue enjoying the fruits of past endeavours. We are very sensitive to the necessity of continually improving the investment environment in India. To this end, we are upgrading our infrastructure in terms of roads and highways, ports and airports, railways and shipping. India is spending billions of dollars in this effort, which in itself constitutes a huge business opportunity being leveraged by many companies from Asia including Malaysia and the Philippines, Japan and China, Korea and Taiwan.

10. The Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement or CEPA that we have implemented since January 1, 2010 is proving to be a multiplier in our economic relationship. During the first four months of the year our two-way trade jumped 70% over the same period of the previous year and is expected to catch further steam in the coming months. If this is an indicator of things to come, we can rest assured that the bilateral trade goal of 30 billion US Dollars that we set for ourselves this January will be met before the target date of 2014. However, I believe that we must take stock of the functioning of our CEPA a little later this year after allowing sufficient time since its implementation.

11. Friends, our economic engagement goes well beyond trade in goods and investment. As you are aware, India has a competitive advantage in the service sector especially IT and IT enabled services. Most of India's major IT software companies all have offices in Korea but are looking for opportunities to exhibit the kind of work they are capable of and for which they have become famous in the West. We are sure that Korean firms and public sector institutions will provide them with the opening they seek. This will be a win-win situation for all, as our IT firms will ensure lower costs for Korean companies, which in turn will benefit consumers and lead to employment growth. India is also very competitive in financial and management services. Entry of Indian entities will benefit the Korean economy.

12. Third, we must forge new Science and Technology links between us. One of the major outcomes of President Lee's visit to India was the announcement of the establishment of a Joint Fund of 10 million US Dollars with equal contribution from both sides to sponsor joint research between our scientists. In the meeting of the Joint Commission earlier today, Foreign Minister Yu and I discussed ways of operationalizing this Fund at an early date. This will enable our technologists to work on new products as well as process innovations which will also benefit industry. The areas visualized for joint research include high energy physics, nanotechnology, new materials, robotics and engineering sciences, information and communication technology and biotechnology. We look forward to your Minister for Education, Science and Technology visiting us in India later this year in order to move this initiative forward. I for one, am sure we will reap rich rewards from this great idea.

13. The MOU we concluded earlier this year for cooperation between our space agencies can have positive spin-offs for both our countries and our economies. In 1999, a Korean satellite KITSAT III was launched by India. We look forward to working with ROK in fabrication of satellites as also in helping you launch more Korean satellites on Indian launch vehicles. Our launch services are of very high quality and our costs are extremely competitive. Perhaps, the ROK can think in terms of participating in experiments on our next Moon orbiter Chandrayaan II. The sky, literally, is the only limit to such scientific collaboration between India and Korea.

14. Fourth, as major importers of our respective energy requirements, India and Korea should work closely together to meet our mutual energy security needs. Both our countries are major importers of oil and gas. India has suggested the establishment of an India - ROK Joint Working Group on Hydrocarbons to learn from each other's experience in this field. Perhaps, Indian and Korean companies could jointly prospect and explore for oil and gas in third countries. Each of us has ample experience of doing so on our own. Would we not be able to harness the synergies of doing so together, for the common benefit of the Indian and Korean people? ONGC Videsh Ltd. of India and Korea National Oil Corporation have contemplated such possibilities but still need to put theory into practice. Another possible area of cooperation where India will gain from Korean experience is the field of energy efficiency. A recent delegation from India to Korea studied how your companies minimize transmission and distribution losses and has suggested that we establish a Joint Group on Power and Energy Efficiency with both public and private participation.

15. We in India are well aware of Korean capabilities in the area of civil nuclear energy. We watched with admiration when KEPCO won an international contract through competitive bidding in the United Arab Emirates earlier this year. During the visit of President Lee to India, our leaders recognized that nuclear energy is clean, reliable and environmentally friendly. We therefore agreed to move towards a framework for cooperation in this very important field. I am happy to report to you that we have made rapid progress. Our two countries will soon commence negotiations on an Agreement for the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy. This is an area of some importance for India as we search for a more rational energy mix in our economic development strategy. The continued growth of the Indian economy will need to be increasingly powered by new and renewable energy sources, including nuclear energy, which are non-polluting and contribute to international efforts to control climate change. In this quest, we have successfully sought international cooperation with the approval of the member nations of the Nuclear Suppliers Group. We look forward to deepening our cooperation with the Republic of Korea in civil nuclear energy.

16. Fifth, we must strengthen cultural exchanges between our countries. In this context, we welcome the decision of your Government to establish a Korean Cultural Center in New Delhi. It will help bring the best from the culture and the arts of Korea to the people of India. With a similar aim in mind we have decided to have a ‘Year of India in Korea’ and a corresponding ‘Year of Korea in India’ in 2011. This will enable the Indian people understand Korea, its culture and history, while providing the Korean people a glimpse of Indian performing arts, exhibitions, film and literature. Earlier today, we signed an MOU between the Indian Council for Cultural Relations and the Korea Foundation, which will help sustain the momentum of cultural exchanges beyond 2011.

17. I proposed yesterday to President Lee and earlier today to Foreign Minister Yu that India would like to install a bust of our national poet laureate Rabindranath Tagore at an appropriate location in Seoul. Next year is the 150th birth anniversary of Tagore and given his popularity in Korea it would be apt to unveil his bust on a street corner or in a verdant park in Seoul. We will, of course, be guided by the Korean authorities in this matter.

18. Finally, we need to work together to expand people-to-people exchanges between our nations. The bedrock of relations between any two countries is the relationship between its citizens. While India and Korea share values including democracy, rule of law and respect for human freedoms, we need greater exchanges between our peoples to be able to sustain our Strategic Partnership. We need to strive for greater tourism between our countries which in turn requires better air services between us. Indian air companies have been requesting fifth freedom rights to fly to points beyond Korea for which we need to amend our Air Services Agreement. I have suggested to Foreign Minister Yu that we task our officials to have an early meeting on this issue.

19. We can also work together towards greater student exchanges between us. There are large numbers of Indian students who travel abroad to study each year and there is no reason why some of them cannot be convinced to come and study in Korea. Similarly, we hope to be able to attract to India some of the Korean students who go overseas for higher studies. Such students eventually become a bridge between the two countries and cultures once they have completed their courses and returned to their country of origin.

20. I am extremely happy to know that IFANS itself has contributed in no small measure to our bilateral exchanges by entering into an agreement earlier today with the Indian Council for World Affairs or ICWA which provides for more academic interaction through study tours, conferences, seminars and workshops.

21. Ladies and Gentlemen, I have attempted to spell out what we in India visualize as a road-map for strengthening the India - Korea partnership in the coming years. How successfully we move down this road will define our relationship in the years to come. I am confident that both our countries have the sagacious leadership and the political confidence to grasp the opportunity and follow the path I have just described. By doing so, we will strengthen the India - Korea Strategic Partnership for the 21st Century.

22. I thank you for your attention.
Heralding a new chapter in the history of defence cooperation, India and South Korea today signed two landmark Memoranda of Understanding to give a huge boost to the Strategic Partnership between the two countries. The two MoUs were signed at the end of nearly ninety minutes of intensive discussions, marked by warmth, between the delegations of the two countries, led by their Defence Ministers, Mr AK Antony and Mr Kim Tae-young in Seoul. This was the first ever visit of a Defence Minister of India to South Korea. Shri Antony was accompanied by a high-level delegation including the Defence Secretary Shri Pradeep Kumar, Vice Admiral RK Dhowan, Lt General KT Parnaik, Dr Prahlada and Shri Sundaram Krishna.

The first MoU signed by Mr Antony and Mr Kim envisages exchange of defence related experience and information, mutual exchange of visits by military personnel and experts including civilian staff associated with defence services, military education and training and conduct of military exercises, exchange of visits of ships and aircraft, as jointly decided between the two countries. The MoU further envisages cooperation in humanitarian assistance and international peace keeping activities. The MoU will remain valid for a period of five years with provision for its extension by five more years.

The Second MoU was signed by the Chief Controller of Research and Development of DRDO, Dr Prahlada and Vice Commissioner, Defence Acquisition and Procurement Agency (DAPA) of South Korea, Mr Kwon Oh Bong. To be operational under the overarching umbrella of India-South Korea Defence Agreement, the MoU aims at identifying futuristic defence technology areas of mutual interest and pursuing R&D works in both the countries. It also envisages co-development and co-production of defence products with Indian industry through DRDO.
There will be joint IPR on all the products developed through this mechanism. Some areas of immediate interest e.g., marine systems, electronics and intelligent systems have been identified as priority tasks.

Speaking at the meeting, Mr. Antony said New Delhi will be happy to see the defence industry relationship to be more than a buyer-seller relationship and its further evolution into Transfer of Technology, joint production and joint R&D etc. He hoped that 'his visit will start a new chapter in our already close relationship'.

Mr. Kim said the two MoUs signed today will provide a win-win scenario for the two countries in a number of areas.

The talks covered a wide range of security issues - both regional and global.

Maritime Security

Mr Antony said India and South Korea share common perception of maintaining peace as well as ensuring safety and security of sea lanes of communication in the region. He said regular exchanges towards ensuring maritime security is important to both countries, especially in securing vital energy supplies that pass through the Indian Ocean. 'It is of particular importance for like-minded countries working in the Gulf of Aden to coordinate efforts and also exchange information on the happenings in the area. We look forward to continued and enhanced cooperation between the navies of India and South Korea in this regard', said Mr Antony.

Regional Security Scenario

Talking about the regional security scenario in the Indian subcontinent, Mr Antony said we live in a troubled neighbourhood. 'Some call it a fragile region. We have to maintain balance and restraint even in the face of grave challenges to our security. Our intention is to develop friendly and cooperative relations with all our neighbours so that we can focus on our major development needs', Mr Antony said.
East Asian Architecture

Mr Antony said India looks at itself as an integral part of East Asia. India is a founding member of East Asia Summit and as such, looks at the emerging architecture in East Asia as open and inclusive. ‘That is why we welcome the decision of ASEAN Foreign Ministers to move towards the inclusion of the United States and Russia as members of the East Asia Summit. We look forward to working closely with South Korea in the emerging architecture in this part of the world’, he said.

Earlier in the morning, Mr Antony along with the delegation drove down to the National Cemetery in Seoul and laid a wreath there. He also inspected, amid light drizzle, a traditional colourful inter-services guard of honour presented by the South Korean Armed Forces on arrival at the Ministry of Defence Head quarters.

The visit by the Defence Minister Antony was part of India’s Look East Policy and a wide range of issues including Defence Cooperation for peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region and bilateral cooperation in Research and Development for manufacture of military equipment figured prominently during the discussion between Shri Antony and the top leadership of South Korea.

Shri Antony's visit was as a follow-up of the declaration issued by both countries during the State visit of the South Korean President Mr. Lee Myung-Bak to New Delhi in January, 2010, when it was decided to elevate the bilateral relationship to a ‘strategic partnership’. It may be recalled that the foundation for India - South Korea defence relations was laid in 2005, when the two countries signed a MoU on Cooperation in Defence, Industry and Logistics. Yet another MoU for Cooperation between the Coast Guards of the two countries was signed in March 2006.

337. Statements by the Government of India on the fighting between North and South Koreas.

Government of India has closely followed developments in the Korean Peninsula over the last two days. We express our sympathies at the tragic loss of lives and injuries caused to the civilian population of Yeonpyeong Island. We urge both sides to maintain peace and stability in the region, and stress the need to respect international obligations and for return to negotiations*.

December 3, 2010

In the second statement it was said:

"Government continues to closely follow developments in the Korean Peninsula, in the aftermath of the recent shelling of Yeonpyeong Island. We are pained at the tragic loss of life in this deplorable incident. India believes that peaceful negotiations rather than the use of force, should be the basis for addressing differences between States. In this connection, India appreciates the maturity and restraint with which the Republic of Korea has been handling the situation with a view to maintaining peace and stability in the region."

* The Spokesman was referring to the artillery duel between North Korea and South Korea across the disputed Yellow Sea. The South accused the North of violating the 1953 Armistice Agreement at its Yeonpyeong Island, which lies along the disputed maritime border off the western coast of the Korean Peninsula. It is inhabited by around 1,600 people.

340. Speech of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Reception for the Indian Community hosted by Indian Ambassador.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to be amongst members of the Indian community today in this beautiful city. I am very happy to begin my visit with an interaction with you and with our Laotian friends. The small yet growing Indian community in Laos is gaining recognition for its accomplishments. Your achievements and attainments are in diverse areas from textiles to mining. I am also happy that several Indians here also work for the United Nations, multinational companies, consultancy organizations and financial institutions. Your growing contribution to Laos in your various vocations has won appreciation and recognition.
Bilateral relations between India and Laos are civilizational, yet also modern and contemporary, covering areas like investment, trade, financial services, among others. At the leadership level we have a consensus that there is immense potential to develop our relations in many fields, and thus take them to greater heights. I am happy that several corporate groups from India have participated in the development of important hydropower, irrigation, agarwood and mining projects in Laos. Your contribution to this country in meeting its developmental goals, is well recognized by both our Governments.

The Indian economy has weathered the impact of the global financial crises with resilience, and is now growing at rates close to those it had achieved prior to the crises. In the last quarter, the economy has posted a remarkable growth, not only in terms of overall growth figures, but more importantly, in terms of certain fundamentals, which justify optimism and confidence in the Indian economy. We believe that this growth will not only qualitatively transform our economy, but will give a boost to economic relations with friendly countries, also offering them many opportunities for trade and investment.

Friends, I have undertaken this journey to Laos to renew our historic contacts and build new bridges. We attach a very high priority to relations to ASEAN countries within the context of our Look East Policy. Laos is a good friend, as also an important partner in the ASEAN. Tomorrow, when I meet the leadership of Laos we will review together the entire gamut of our relations, and seek ways to further develop our partnership. You play a big role in this partnership that we are jointly resolved to build.

Every overseas Indian is a representative of India. I know that, as peaceful and law abiding citizens, you act as ambassadors of India, winning goodwill and respect. As an overseas community you have made a distinctive contribution by virtue of your dedication, hard work and success. It is also a matter of equal gratification to see amongst all of you, the cultural and scholarly effervescence which is characteristic of the Indian community. I again congratulate you on your accomplishments and wish you the very best of luck in your various pursuits.

Jai Hind.
Your Excellency,
Madame Sayasone,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am indeed delighted to be in the beautiful country of Laos. I thank you for the warm welcome and the gracious hospitality accorded to me and my delegation. I bring with me greetings from the people of India for the friendly people of Laos.

There exists a great amount of goodwill in India for Laos. This is but natural, given that we have historical links, dating back more than two millennia. The exchanges between our peoples have resulted in many commonalities in our cultures, and some similarity of words in our languages. That Luang, sanctuary for one of the most precious relics of Lord Buddha, and the Hindu temple of Wat Phou, a UNESCO world heritage site, stand testimony to our encounters through centuries. We are proud and privileged to be your partners in the restoration of this historic temple.

The purpose of my visit to the ‘jewel of the Mekong’, as Laos is so poetically called, is to reaffirm the historically close bonds of friendship that exist between our two countries. It is also to continue the high level dialogue. Excellency, our bilateral ties received a strong impetus from your visit to India in August 2008, which we remember fondly as a historic milestone in our relationship. I recall that in my discussions with your Excellency we both expressed satisfaction with our enduring ties and rapidly developing co-operation.

Excellency, we admire your dynamic leadership in shaping the growth of your country, and in pursuing a Socio-Economic Development Strategy that seeks to move Laos out of the LDC status by 2020. India is willing to be your developmental partner. We are already engaged in a number of projects in Laos in the areas of hydropower, IT, human resource development, agriculture and mining. I am pleased that one of the projects, the Pakse - Jiangyue Bangyo transmission line project was commissioned jointly by us today. I was happy to announce that I would also give a Line of Credit of US dollars 72.55 million for power projects to Laos. I would like to reiterate India’s continued interest and commitment to supporting your development objectives through capacity-building and human resource development. As both our countries have large rural populations and there are many experiences that we can share, possibilities of agricultural co-operation should be further explored.

The economic growth of Laos and its investor friendly policies offer many viable prospects for business. India is the fourth largest economy in terms of purchasing power parity and one of the fastest growing economies of the world. Indian businesses are eager to expand and I am glad that some of them have invested in Laos. However, we need to encourage them further to avail of the mutually beneficial economic opportunities that exist in trade and investment. On trade, we hope that Laos will issue the necessary notification at an early date to bring the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement into force. We also hope that Laos will participate in the India-ASEAN Trade Fair due to be held in March 2011 in New Delhi. Your participation will create awareness about complementarities that exist between our economies.

Excellency,

Laos and India have worked together constructively in regional and international organizations, sharing common perceptions on many global challenges. Laos has extended valuable support to India in various multilateral bodies, including to India’s aspirations to be a permanent member in an expanded UN Security Council. We remember with gratitude the very positive role played by Laos in facilitating India to join the East Asia Summit. India attaches a very high priority to its relationship with the ASEAN, and within our Look East policy, we consider Laos a crucial partner. We have also collaborated meaningfully under the Mekong-Ganga Cooperation framework.
I am confident that we will continue to work together and make our traditional friendship more strong and robust.

Ladies and Gentlemen, may I invite you to join me, in a toast:

— to the health and well-being of Your Excellency and Madame Sayasone; — to the happiness and prosperity of the friendly people of Lao People’s Democratic Republic; and — to the lasting friendship and relationship between India and the Lao People’s Democratic Republic.

_Vientiane, September 13, 2010._

I am happy to attend the India-Laos Business Forum, which the Lao National Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Confederation of Indian Industry have so generously hosted. This Forum provides us a very good opportunity to review our business relations and set targets for the future. I am told that for this Forum, there has been a good response from business and industry, both from Laos and from India.

Economic relations are a very important component of the broader relationship that India and Laos have resolved to develop. My visit to Laos has come at a time when there has been an exchange of high level visits. President Sayasone was our guest in India in 2008 and I am now visiting Laos. My extensive discussions with President Sayasone and Prime Minister Boupavanh during my visit, have assured me that there is a strong commitment in both our countries to intensify our engagement, and strengthen our age old friendship. The excellent political understanding provides a strong foundation for economic and commercial ties. Our business and industry must work together for realizing the true potential in trade and investment.
We have been following the encouraging progress made by Laos. The average GDP growth of Laos in the last five years has been 7.8 percent, and it has set the goal to move out of the LDC category by 2020. Laos is a country rich in mineral resources like iron ore, copper and gold. It has an enormous hydropower potential. From being a land-locked country it is turning into a land-linked country, by constructing a network of roads. May I add that India is privileged to be a partner of Laos in meeting its development goals and has provided credit lines for projects. A credit line of US$ 72.55 million which I announced, earlier during my visit is being signed today. I can assure that India will continue to be a development partner of Lao PDR.

However, there is a great scope for private investments in hydropower, mining, construction, roads, railways, as well as in agriculture, since both our countries have large rural areas. Indian companies have made some investments in Laos. However, I call upon Indian businessmen that considering the opportunities available, to further explore this market. Laos is open to foreign investment and, I understand that a series of business laws have been enacted in Laos to simplify investment procedures and regulations. I think that there is insufficient knowledge in India of this change in Laos, and I call upon this Forum to address this issue, so that Lao and Indian businessmen understand each other better.

I am glad, however, that some of the major Indian companies are represented today, as also Indian project development companies working in Laos. Three major Indian trade bodies, the Confederation of Indian Industry, the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry and the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry are participating. You must take this opportunity of your presence here to acquaint yourselves with the Laos economy.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

India coped well with the global financial crisis. There has been a significant upward shift in our growth trajectory which is anchored in robust domestic consumption. With a trillion dollar economy, India is already the fourth largest economy in the world in Purchasing Power Parity, and is poised to rise to the third rank. The vast Indian market offers many opportunities for Lao exporters.
Bilateral trade, however, is currently quite modest below US $ 7 million. We need to address this problem, so that trade reaches its true potential. We can expand the basket of trade commodities and increase trade volumes by availing of mutually advantageous opportunities that our economies offer. The tariff concessions granted by India under the Duty Free Tariff Preference Scheme for Least Developed Countries and the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement should help stimulate trade. We look forward to the completion of the internal procedures and the notification of the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement by the Government of Laos, so that the agreement can come into force for Laos. Prime Minister Bouphavanh informed me that the Lao Parliament has ratified it and only a few administrative formalities are pending for its notification. Again promotional activity is important in this context. We invite all Lao friends present here today to join the India-ASEAN Business Fair due to be held in New Delhi in March, 2011.

We, in India, within the context of our Look East Policy are making concerted efforts to develop links with the dynamic Asia Pacific region. In today's meeting we have Indian business leaders who have traveled from India, as also others who have joined us from Singapore, Vietnam and Thailand. This shows how much importance our businessmen attach to the wider South East Asian region, within our strong engagement with ASEAN, and our Look East Policy. I would call on them to look at modules that promote business with South East Asian region in an integrated manner.

The presence of Indian businesspersons here, I would say, reflects interest on their part to explore business opportunities, as also of investment. Representatives from 25 Indian companies as well as from the major Indian business associations - CII, FICCI and ASSOCHAM are participating. Similarly, the Laos businesspersons here, I am sure, are eager to explore trade and commercial options in India.

I call upon all of you to make your best efforts to further develop our business ties. I wish you success in your endeavors.

Thank you very much.

344. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (South) on the visit of Malaysian Prime Minister Mohd. Najib Tun Abdul Razak.

New Delhi, January 18, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you all. I am seeing most of you for the first time in the New Year. So, let me take this opportunity, though belated, to wish you all a very happy New Year.

I have the pleasure of having my good friend and colleague Shri Arun K. Goel, Joint Secretary (South), who has joined us for the briefing. You know that we are expecting a very important visitor, the Prime Minister of Malaysia His Excellency Mr. Mohd Najib Tun Abdul Razak who would be on a state visit to India from 19th to 23rd of this month. He assumed office in April 2009 and the very fact of his visit within one year of assumption of office is reflective of the common desire between the two countries to deepen our relationship, take our relationship forward.

The Prime Minister is no stranger to India. He last visited India in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Defence in June 2006. After assumption of office in April 2009, in the last few months he has already met our Prime Minister twice - once at Sharm el-Sheikh in July 2009 on the sidelines of the NAM Summit, and again at Hua Hin in October 2009 on the sidelines of the India-ASEAN Summit.
He is leading a very impressive and high-power delegation. Let me just take you through some salient details of the delegation. He would also be accompanied by his spouse; the Minister of Foreign Affairs; Minister in the Prime Minister’s Office; Minister of Higher Education; Minister for International Trade and Industry; Minister for Tourism; Minister of Works; Minister of Human Resources; Minister of Women, Family and Community Development. Chief Ministers from a number of States of Malaysia would be accompanying him. There would be Members of Parliament, senior officials and a large business delegation. That itself gives you an idea of the broad based agenda and the broad based relationship, some aspects of which, I would touch upon.

We are putting out a Media Advisory which will give you a flavour of the programme. But to share some highlights with you, he comes in tomorrow evening. The day after tomorrow, which is on Wednesday the 20th, there would be a call on him by External Affairs Minister. He will be calling on the President. He would be delivering the keynote address at the Malaysia-India Business Forum jointly organised by CII, FICCI and ASSOCHAM on Malaysia-India Economic Relations - The Way Forward. The Leader of Opposition would call on him; there would be a call by him on the Vice-President; meeting with Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi; delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister where after the Prime Minister and Mrs. Gursharan Kaur would be hosting a banquet in honour of the visiting dignitary and his wife and the delegation. Shri Rahul Gandhi, Member of Parliament, would be calling on the visiting dignitary. Then the Prime Minister leaves for Chennai where there would be meetings with the Governor, with the Chief Minister, with captains of Indian industry and Indian business leaders. He would also address the 16th CII Partnership Summit. Those are some of the important engagements of the Prime Minister.

I would like here to note that India and Malaysia have had age-old political and cultural ties. Our relations have traditionally been close and friendly. Economic and commercial ties constitute one of the bedrocks of the relationship. Malaysia is our second largest trading partner in the ASEAN region. It is noteworthy that in 2005, bilateral trade was five billion dollars which rose to ten billion dollars in 2008. So, in three years literally you saw a doubling of bilateral trade. India's export basket to Malaysia is large and quite diversified. Incidentally, we are also the largest importer of Malaysian palm oil. That is one potential area of cooperation, which is development of palm plantations in India.

Malaysia is also an important investment partner. Interestingly, both Indian investments in Malaysia and Malaysian investments in India have been by and large of the same order. In the last couple of years our investments have surged. From the beginning of 2007, leading Indian companies like Reliance, Thapar Group, Larsen and Toubro have invested close to a billion dollars in Malaysia. We have since emerged as the 7th largest investor in Malaysia with a total investment of 1.6 billion dollars.

There are over 100 Indian companies registered there including 60 joint ventures. The cumulative Malaysian investments till 2008 were of the tune of 1.8 billion dollars. You see a similar quantum of investment by and large. Again it is noteworthy that Malaysian construction companies' largest presence outside Malaysia is in India. Malaysian companies have already secured projects worth five billion dollars, some of which they have executed. One of the noteworthy projects has been the involvement of Malaysia Airports Holdings Berhad in partnership with the GMR Group. This group undertook the construction of the Hyderabad airport which is one of the finest airports in India which is completed, and is also involved in the construction of the Delhi airport which is under completion.

Our relations encompass a number of other sectors including education, human resource development, communications technology, IT, defence, tourism, culture and railways, to give you a few examples. About 2000 Indian students are studying in Malaysia, and about 3000 Malaysian students are studying in India. Malaysian professionals have been receiving training under the ITEC programme in India. I am happy to note here that a full-fledged Indian cultural centre was established in Kuala Lumpur on the 4th of November 2009. Other areas of cooperation which have potential or where already activity is going on are, for example, the English language studies where we can work with Malaysia. There is a lot of potential in the IT sector. In fact, 60 Indian IT companies already have a presence in Malaysia. Our leading lights are present in Malaysia. IRCON International Limited has been actively engaged in development of railways in Malaysia for over twenty years.

Also, as you are aware, both India and Malaysia are members of the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), NAM, Commonwealth, the Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM), which offer us additional platforms of working closely. There have been regular parliamentary exchanges between our two countries. There is also a sizeable population of People of Indian Origin in Malaysia which is close to two million now, 1.9 million plus. I would also like to add here that about 150 thousand Indian professionals and workers are employed in Malaysia.

A number of agreements and MoUs are likely to be signed during the visit of the Prime Minister. We are hopeful that the visit would further deepen bilateral engagement in a focused manner in areas such as higher education, infrastructure development, particularly highways, railways, airports, ports, also in sectors like information technology, biotechnology and energy, which are some of the thrust areas of cooperation.

Let me stop here. My colleague and I will be happy to take a few questions on the Malaysian Prime Minister’s visit, if you have any.

Question: Could you tell us about the energy cooperation we are planning with Malaysia? Could you also tell us about the situation of PIOs living over there?

Joint Secretary (South) (Shri Arun K. Goel): As just indicated, out of a total population of 28 million, Malaysia has one of the largest segments of Persons of Indian Origin resident in that country, 1.9 million. Apart from that there are very close links between people from South India and the Persons of Indian Origin already settled in Malaysia. Apart from the fact that, we have a very healthy exchange of persons going to Malaysia on short-term work permits, which is roughly 150,000, a newer sector is the highly qualified people in biotechnology and IT sectors. Malaysia, as you know, has very successfully developed multimedia... super corridor outside Kuala Lumpur where the high-tech industry is located. So, many of the professionals work there. Energy cooperation is another area where, we in the future, could have useful collaboration. Malaysia is a net exporter of oil and gas. So, there are promising possibilities of tie-ups. At present, Malaysia has a little bit of concern because in the South China area, as you know, the waters are rich in oil and gas but there are claims of neighbouring countries including China in that area. Petronas, one of the leading Malaysian companies, is a giant in the field of oil exploration.

Question: You said that there will be a delegation level talks with Rahul Gandhi; what would be its agenda?

Official Spokesperson: I spoke about the delegation level talks with the Prime Minister, the delegation level talks provide a very broad based platform; at the delegation talks between the prime ministers will have broad range of matters pertaining to. At the delegation-level talks, both the Prime Ministers would be discussing a broad range of matters pertaining to bilateral interest, regional and international issues. What I mentioned about the engagements of the Malaysian Prime Minister, it was in this context that I said that Rahul Gandhi will meet the Prime Minister.

Question: A couple of years ago there was talk of Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement. Is there any movement on that? Can we expect something out of this visit?

Joint Secretary (South): We are working towards that. The India-ASEAN FTA in goods sector has just got into operation from the 1st of January. ASEAN at the same time has also signed a similar agreement with China. But Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement is an area towards which we are working. Maybe later in the year we will have some more progress on that score.

Official Spokesperson: We have already had two rounds of discussion in that regard. As my colleague mentioned, consultations are under way.
Question: There was a statement from the Malaysian prime minister that there were 40,000 Indians missing there. Will this issue be taken up? what will be India’s stand on it?

Joint Secretary (South): This was not a case of Indians missing. Perhaps what was meant was of persons visiting Malaysia on legal work permit or on a regular visa but overstaying their stipulated duration. This is an ongoing problem, not only with relation to India but with visitors from many neighbouring countries also. Malaysia, as you know, has a small population but does attract short-term workers and visitors from neighbouring countries. And sometimes they do feel that visitors do overstay their stipulated length of time.

Question: Is an extradition treaty also likely to be signed?

Official Spokesperson: A number of agreements and MoUs are likely to be signed both between the Governments and also between the private sector in New Delhi as well as in Chennai. That is what is likely. But as in the past we will be very happy to share with you details once our consultations are finalised.

Question: Sir, could you tell us something about security cooperation with Malaysia both in the areas of military hardware and coordinated patrolling?

Official Spokesperson: I mentioned that amongst various areas of cooperation, security and defence cooperation is one such area. I would like to note here that an MoU on defence cooperation was signed way back in 1993 which envisages wide-ranging cooperation in terms of training, information exchange, visits and so on, which have been happening. So, defence training is one of the important components of our relationship. You would recall that Raksha Mantri had visited Malaysia in January 2008. We also have annual meetings of Malaysia-India Defence Cooperation Committee (MIDCOM) which is co-chaired by the two Defence Secretaries. The seventh MIDCOM meeting was held last year at Kuala Lumpur in January 2009. So, it is an important area of cooperation and exchanges for us.
Question: The Defence Minister is not part of this delegation I think.

Official Spokesperson: Not according to my reading.

Question: From time to time there are stories of persecution or harassment of Persons of Indian Origin in Malaysia. How serious is that problem? Are you going to take it up because this is an appropriate forum? It is not off and on we hear these stories but round the year.

Official Spokesperson: The safety and security of Indian nationals is something Government of India is committed to, as you are aware. So, wherever we come across an instance where the safety or security of an Indian national is compromised or affected, suitable steps are taken by the Government of India.

Question: I just wanted to know if you could give us any update from Kabul now that we believe this gun battle is over. Do we finally know that all our nationals are safe there and everything is okay?

Official Spokesperson: We have been in close touch with our Embassy in Kabul. We believe that around 10 a.m. today, the attack was launched at the city centre close to the Presidential Palace. The security personnel, we are told through our Embassy, have since cordoned off the entire area. We understand that all Indian nationals are safe. The Embassy has advised all Indians to restrict their movements and remain at safe places and follow security guidelines.

Thank you.

345. Joint Communiqué issued on the occasion of the visit to India of Malaysian Prime Minister Dato’ Sri Mohd Najib Tun Abdul Razak.

H.E. Dato’ Sri Mohd Najib Tun Abdul Razak, the Prime Minister of Malaysia, paid a State visit to India from 19 to 23 January 2010, at the invitation of H. E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India. The two leaders held in-depth discussions on 20th January 2010 during which they covered the entire gamut of bilateral relations as well as regional and international issues of mutual interest. The discussions focused on adding greater substance to bilateral relations taking into account the steady development in bilateral relations and the far-reaching changes in the international situation, in particular the challenges and opportunities emerging from the ongoing economic crisis.

2. The two leaders observed that a long term and strategic partnership between Malaysia and India could be developed based on historical, cultural and social links, pluralism, open society, shared commitment to democracy and development, and a high degree of commonality of political and economic interests.

3. The two leaders recognized that the current international situation, characterised by greater inter-dependence and a globalized world, poses new challenges and offers fresh opportunities to both India and Malaysia for enhanced engagement for mutual benefit. Asia is going through a new surge of change, creativity and vitality, aided by the strengthening of economic linkages, initiatives for greater regional integration as well as trade liberalization. Asia is now truly emerging as the leading growth centre of the global economy and exerting an ever-greater influence in the global affairs.

4. The two leaders recognized the need for concerted efforts among Asian countries to translate the positive developments into an era of growth, prosperity, stability and closer integration in Asia. They welcomed the implementation of the ASEAN-India Trade in Goods Agreement which came into effect on 1 January 2010. This would pave the way for further enhancement of trade and economic ties between Malaysia and India, specifically through conclusion of the Malaysia-India Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement negotiations as soon as possible.

5. The two Prime Ministers reaffirmed their support for the East Asia Summit as an open, inclusive, transparent and forward looking forum for dialogue on broad strategic, political and economic issues of common interest and concern in promoting peace, stability and economic prosperity in East Asia. The two Prime Ministers welcomed further work on Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia (CEPEA). They also emphasised the need to focus on strengthening economic cooperation and capacity building initiatives in the region and reaffirmed their commitment to work together in the framework of regional cooperation.

6. The two leaders noted that the India-Malaysia partnership would be further strengthened by greater engagement and cooperation at all levels namely:

— Bilaterally, the two countries will pursue an all round and comprehensive development of relations proceeding from a strategic perspective and with particular focus on strengthening economic ties through, (i) full utilization of the existing and potential complementarities in their economies and taking advantage of emerging opportunities, and (ii) examining the possibility of establishing the India - Malaysia CEOs Forum;

— Regionally, the two countries will strive to develop closer dialogue and collaboration to secure peace, stability, and prosperity in Asia, promote development, and closer regional cooperation in Asia; and — Globally, the two countries will further strengthen cooperation in diverse areas such as, climate change, energy, security, and combating terrorism, by further building on their strategic convergences and initiating cooperation with the respective counter-terrorism agencies.

7. In order to realize the full potential of bilateral partnership and also to develop knowledge-based economies, the two leaders decided on the following elements for future interaction and cooperation namely:

(i) Maintaining regular contact, including on the margins of international meetings and conferences;

(ii) Convening Joint Commission meetings (at the Foreign Minister level) regularly every two years with the fourth meeting of the Joint Commission in the first half of 2010. The ongoing Foreign Office Consultations would also be held once in every two years, with the next such consultations in the second half of 2010;

(iii) Developing a framework for strategic cooperation and partnership between the two countries;

(iv) Identifying core sectors of cooperation including human resource development particularly higher education, infrastructure development particularly highways, railways, airports and ports, information technology, biotechnology and energy;

(v) Enhancing trade and investment flows between both countries for mutual benefit;

(vi) Strengthening defence and security dialogue and cooperation through ongoing annual Malaysia-India Defence Cooperation Meetings (MIDCOM), high level military exchanges and the enhancement of cooperation between the air forces and navies of the two countries;

(vii) Strengthening bilateral frameworks for ensuring welfare of workers from both countries;

(viii) Expanding the existing cultural and academic exchanges and strengthening of people-to-people contacts to raise the visibility and profile of one country in the other;

(ix) Recognizing the legitimate and long-term interest of both countries in the peace and prosperity of the Asia-Pacific region, and the importance of developing an open and inclusive regional economic architecture that is based on the principles of mutual benefit and shared opportunities;

(x) Maintaining regular consultation and close coordination in the framework of ASEAN-India Dialogue Relations, ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), East Asia Summit (EAS), Non-Aligned Movement (NAM), Commonwealth, Indian Ocean Rim for Economic Cooperation and Asia Europe Meeting (ASEM);

(xi) Cooperating at the United Nations and other international organizations, including cooperation for the early realization of comprehensive United Nations reform, including the Security Council through expansion of permanent and non-permanent categories reflecting the contemporary realities; and

(xii) Coordinating positions on emerging global issues such as climate change, food security, energy security and pandemic diseases.

8. The two leaders welcomed signing of the following documents:

• Extradition Treaty between the Government of India and the Government of Malaysia.

• MoU between the Government of India and the Government of Malaysia on Cooperation in the Field of Higher Education.

• India-Malaysia Capital Market Collaborative Agreement between the Securities Commission of Malaysia and the Securities and Exchange Board of India.

9. H.E. Dato’ Sri Mohd. Najib Tun Abdul Razak, Prime Minister of Malaysia thanked the Government and the people of India for their warm hospitality and extended a cordial invitation to H.E Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India to visit Malaysia at a mutually convenient time. H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India accepted the invitation with appreciation. The dates of the visit will be decided through diplomatic channels.

January 20, 2010
Dr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission of India is currently on a two-day visit to Malaysia. He delivered the Keynote Address this morning at the World Capital Markets Symposium hosted by the Securities Commission of Malaysia. In his address, he shared his understanding of the global economic scenario and was fairly optimistic about global economic recovery, powered by growth in the Emerging Economies. He stated that India's GDP was expected to grow at 8.5% in the current financial year, with the IMF even projecting 9% plus growth. He was very complimentary about Malaysia's achievements, saying that India has looked at Malaysia's economic transformation over the thirty years with great interest and admiration, and with the signing of the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement earlier this year and with the India-Malaysia Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) nearing finalization, the already strong bilateral trade and investment relationship was poised to do even better. He cited the building of Delhi's new airport by an Indian-Malaysian joint venture as a shining example of this.

Dr. Ahluwalia also called on Tan Sri Muhyiddin HJ Mohd Yassin, Deputy Prime Minister of Malaysia and Dato' Sri Mustapa Mohamed, Minister of International Trade and Industry. During the meeting, he observed that engagement with Malaysia was an important pillar of India's 'Look East' policy which had been systematically put into place over the last few years. India also saw Malaysia as an important gateway to ASEAN. Dr Ahluwalia conveyed that Prime Minister Manmohan Singh was greatly looking forward to his visit to Malaysia later this year as well as to the early signing of CECA.

The Deputy Prime Minister stated that the Malaysian Government was looking forward to receiving Prime Minister Manmohan Singh. He observed that the bilateral relationship between India and Malaysia was not only warm but very cordial. The relationship had a very strong and encouraging economic content, especially in the last few years. Malaysian companies had considerable presence in the infrastructure sector in India and were keen to expand their activities further. He added that collaboration with important partners such as India was vital for the success of PM Najib's New Economic Model. Tan Sri Muhyiddin expressed the belief that PM Manmohan Singh's visit would lead to identification of newer areas of mutually beneficial cooperation and collaboration.

During his visit, Dr. Ahluwalia will also participate in a Roundtable with Policy-makers chaired by Tan Sri Mohamed Yackop, Minister, Economic Planning Unit; a CEOs Round Table organized by Khazanah, the sovereign investment arm of the Malaysian Government; and meet with Tan Sri Amirsham Abdul Aziz, Chairman of the National Economic Advisory Council of Malaysia.

347. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao and Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy on Prime Minister's three-nation (Japan, Malaysia and Vietnam) visit.

New Delhi, October 22, 2010.

Please see Document No.313.
Remarks of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at media interaction.

Kuala Lumpur, October 27, 2010.

His Excellency Dato’ Sri Mohd Najib, Prime Minister of Malaysia and, Distinguished members of the Malaysian media and Indian media

This is my first bilateral visit to Malaysia and I am delighted to be in this beautiful country. I wish to convey my sincere appreciation to Prime Minister Dato’ Sri Najib and the people of Malaysia for the very warm welcome given to me and for the excellent arrangements that have been made for our stay.

When Prime Minister Najib visited India in January this year, he had spoken of his wish to see a qualitatively new relationship between our two countries. My visit to Malaysia reflects the commitment of our Government to advance our relations to new heights.

India and Malaysia are two major countries of Asia. Malaysia is an influential member of the world community whose voice is heard with great respect in global institutions.

Our discussions today have laid the basis for a multi-faceted partnership between India and Malaysia. This will contribute to the peace, prosperity and development of Asia.

Prime Minister Dato’ Sri Najib and I have agreed today on the framework for a strategic partnership. The Joint Statement outlines a road map for enhanced contacts between our countries at the political, business and people-to-people levels, based on our shared values of democracy and multiculturalism. We have agreed to work closely with each other on regional and international matters of common interest, including on combating the scourge of terrorism.

It is a matter of deep satisfaction that we have successfully concluded negotiations for a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement. We have agreed that the two sides will work to complete the formalities by 31 January 2011 so that CECA can come into force by the agreed date of 1 July 2011. I am confident that this Agreement will transform our economic engagement in a substantive way.

Today we will also formally launch the India-Malaysia CEOs Forum. This will encourage direct interaction between business and industry in each other’s countries as well in third countries. I conveyed to the Prime Minister that India welcomes greater Malaysian investment in our infrastructure and manufacturing sectors, and our companies similarly look forward to doing greater business in Malaysia and the ASEAN region.

We have agreed to further enhance exchanges in the fields of tourism, civil aviation, culture, higher education and labour.

We discussed regional and international issues of common interest. We agreed on the need to reform the United Nations, including its Security Council, and international financial institutions. Both of us share the view that the regional architecture for cooperation in the Asia-Pacific region should be open, inclusive and transparent.

I thanked the Prime Minister for Malaysia’s constructive role, as ASEAN Coordinator, in helping to work towards an early conclusion of the India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement in Services and Investment.

The year 2010 is a turning point in the history of India-Malaysian relations. The understandings and agreements that we reached today have established a solid foundation for the building of a Strategic Partnership, and bringing our two peoples together for a better future.

Thank you.
Your Excellency Prime Minister Najib,

Your Excellency, Former Prime Minister

Dr. Mahathir

Distinguished Ladies & Gentlemen,

I was honoured when my dear friend Prime Minister Najib invited me to deliver the prestigious Khazanah Global Lecture and to speak to this distinguished gathering on India's development experience. I have very fond memories of previous visits to your beautiful country. I am delighted to be here once again.

Malaysia, like India, had a prolonged experience of colonial rule. Today, your country is a vibrant, fast-growing economy and a hub of regional integration. The Straits of Malacca today is the world's busiest shipping corridor. I pay tribute to your leaders who have brought about this transformation since Malaysia's independence.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

After gaining independence in 1947, India's principal challenge was to fulfill the aspirations of such a large and diverse society and civilisation that is home to all the great religions of the world, and has been so for many centuries. Our founding fathers worked to build a strong state and the organs of our fledgling democracy. In the process, we built a diversified industrial base. We developed strong scientific capabilities, including high quality technical manpower.

Over time our growth began to lag behind that of other newly industrializing countries of Asia. Our economy got stifled with bureaucratic control. We also fell behind countries like Malaysia in integrating into the global and regional value chains created by post-War industrialization.
Our own policies began to change, gradually at first in the 1980s and much more decisively in the 1990s. We liberalized the domestic economy and opened up to foreign trade and investment. We recognized the need for market forces. The private sector was increasingly freed to get on with its business.

Initially, these changes met with resistance. But over time they came to be widely accepted, especially after the economy began growing at over 7% per annum from 1994. There has been no fundamental change in the direction of these policies since then and they enjoy broad domestic support.

The economic reforms of the 1990s unleashed the creative and entrepreneurial spirit of Indian industry. Year after year we saw first generation entrepreneurs taking risks, creating new business opportunities and getting plugged into the borderless world of the global economy. These new entrepreneurs are truly the children of economic liberalisation and have been an important factor behind India's fast growth in recent times.

India’s growth has combined greater openness with an ability to withstand external turbulence. We were not buffeted by the East Asian crisis in 1997 primarily because our capital account was not as open as in many other countries in East Asia and our banking system had very little exposure to short term debt, which was the main source of volatility in 1997.

More recently, India’s economic performance has shown further improvement. The gross national income of India grew at over 9.5% per annum for three consecutive years starting in 2005. After the global crisis exploded in 2008, our growth rate slowed down but India was even then among the three or four fastest growing nations in the world. We took a number of measures to stimulate the economy and we expect 8.5% growth in the current year.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I wish to reflect on some key features of the new phase in India’s economic development.

First, India seeks rapid economic growth that will create wealth for our people and also generate surpluses to fund our ambitious social development programmes.
Second, we seek growth that creates employment and development that is socially and regionally balanced and inclusive.

Third, we seek to build a modern, knowledge and science-based economy to complement our agricultural and industrial base.

Fourth, we want our development to be sustainable so that the wealth of our natural resources is conserved for future generations.

Fifth, we seek a cooperative relationship with our neighbours and other partners so that we can prosper and benefit from one another's development.

Finally, India seeks to realize its development ambitions within the framework of a plural and secular democracy, where each citizen should have equal opportunity for economic, social and cultural advancement.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

India's biggest asset is its people. At a time when the industrialised world is aging rapidly, India has the advantage of a young population. The dependency burden in India is expected to keep falling for another 20 years. It is expected that, in 2020, the average age of an Indian will be 29 years, compared to 37 for China and 48 for Japan.

However, a young population is an asset only if it is educated, skilled and finds productive employment. If this were to happen, our objective of realizing India's potential to grow at 10% or more per annum for a substantial period of time can become a reality. Rapid economic development requires high rates of savings and investment. For a long time it used to be common wisdom that only an East Asian country could save and invest more than 30% of its national income. If that be true then, geography notwithstanding, India is today an East Asian country! India now saves and invests well over 30% of its GDP. In addition, our financial system - including the banking sector and the capital markets - is strong. This has helped support a boom in domestic investment. Domestic investment is complemented by strong Foreign Direct Investment flows which are greatly welcome.

Over the past few years we have initiated a number of far-reaching programmes that have the potential to change the face of rural India and to make our growth more inclusive. These cover rural health, employment guarantee, urban reforms and rural infrastructure and focus on people’s participation and empowerment and the quality of services.

Inadequate infrastructure is a major constraint on our performance and we are determined to overcome it. In the Eleventh Five Year Plan that ends in 2011-12, we had targeted investment in infrastructure of 500 billion US dollars. We hope to step this up to one trillion US dollars in the 12th Plan. Malaysia has well known strengths in building infrastructure and we welcome greater Malaysian participation in this sector.

There are big plans afoot in India to set up special investment funds that can be used to finance long-gestation infrastructure projects. We hope to attract Indian and international funding into these projects.

More than half of our population depends on agriculture for the bulk of their income. We are increasing our investment in agriculture. We hope to use our scientific capabilities to create a new growth momentum in agriculture through a second green revolution. This is vital for our food security and to ensure an inclusive growth process.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The future of the global economy in the 21st century lies in the knowledge economy. We are working to strengthen our competitive advantage in this area. We have increased the expenditure on Science & Technology as a proportion of our GDP. We are investing heavily in both basic and higher education. For the last fifty years, India had seven Indian Institutes of Technology and one Indian Institute of Science. In the last five years we have established eight more IITs and five Indian Institutes of Science Education and Research. Both higher education and the Information Technology sectors are promising areas for India-Malaysia cooperation.

We would like our development processes to be sustainable. We do not wish to go down the path followed by the highly industrialised countries.
We seek a model of sustainable development suited to our own needs, circumstances and genius. This is not an easy task for an emerging economy. We want to strike a careful balance between our needs of today and those of future generations.
We have formulated an ambitious National Action Plan on Climate Change that is intimately linked to our energy security. We have launched a National Solar Mission that aims to build a capacity of 20,000 MW of solar power by the year 2022. There are national missions on water, green India, energy efficiency and on sustaining the Himalayan ecosystem.

I believe that it is vital for any country to keep its development options open. That is why we worked so hard on a civil nuclear initiative that has opened the doors for India to develop the option of clean nuclear energy as an important plank of our energy security.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Indian thinkers and leaders-names like Tagore and Nehru easily spring to mind-have always been inspired by a global humanist vision.

As India’s first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru reminded us, the advancement of the nation-important though it is-must be viewed as a step to a better world for all of humanity.

We seek to continue this great tradition by being good global citizens. We seek cooperative frameworks that will enable us to be active members of groupings and communities in our region. We will work closely with countries in the regions around us - South Asia, South-East Asia, West Asia, Central Asia and the Indian Ocean littoral.

Our desire for openness has encouraged us to work with ASEAN towards an India-ASEAN comprehensive cooperation agreement. We have also finalised an India-Malaysia Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement, which will be signed shortly. Going beyond regional openness, we will work with Malaysia and other nations to strengthen the global multilateral trading system.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The basic objective of our development processes is to realize the values and ideals on which our Republic was founded. Our development efforts reflect and reinforce our ideals of equality, the right to a life of dignity and well being and brotherhood among all nations.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

When I was a student, few ever dreamt that India or China or other Asian nations would catch up with the industrialized world. Today, few doubt that a fundamental change in the global economy is underway. Dynamic emerging countries are growing rapidly despite a period of slow growth in the industrialized world. There is also a discernible shift in economic power towards Asia. India and Malaysia are both playing an important role in this process.

I see many possibilities of synergy between India and Malaysia in the years ahead. We can learn lessons from each other’s development experience. I am confident that we can greatly accelerate the pace of our bilateral economic engagement to our mutual benefit.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

We face similar threats to our prosperity. We have a shared stake in eliminating the threats of extremism and terrorism; in maritime security in our region and the security of the sea-lanes of communication. We can make common cause to promote regional peace, security and stability.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I have spoken today about many things that bring us together and that can continue to keep us together. Indeed, there is no issue that divides us at present.

We seek a relationship of trust, goodwill and mutual interest.

I am convinced that if this and future generations of Indians and Malaysians remain true to the ideals of those who secured our national independence and forged our new nationhood, we will continue to prosper as good neighbours. Together we can and we will contribute to the prosperity of Asia and the world.

I wish the people of Malaysia peace, prosperity and happiness.

Thank you.
350. Remarks of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during the inauguration of Little India at Brickfields, Kuala Lumpur.

Kuala Lumpur, October 27, 2010

His Excellency Dato' Sri Mohd Najib,
Prime Minister of Malaysia and
Datin Paduka Sri Rosmah Mansor
Senator Dato' Raja Nong Chik, Minister of Federal Territories and Urban Well-being Dato' Sri Samy Vellu, President of the Malaysian Indian Congress
Dato' Dr. S. Subramaniam, Minister of Human Resource Hon'ble Deputy Ministers, Community Leaders
Ladies and Gentlemen

I am delighted to be present at the official inauguration of 'Little India' in Brickfields.

I am overwhelmed by the warmth of your welcome. On behalf of the people of India, I thank you for this magnificent celebration of friendship and brotherhood, and bring to you their greetings.

Malaysia represents the best of Asia. It is diverse, welcoming and beautiful. It is home to people of different ethnic backgrounds, races and religions. Malaysia sets an example for the world of tolerance and peaceful co-existence.

The Indian community has made important contributions to the development of Malaysia during the past hundred years. They have worked with sincerity and dedication. They have excelled at medicine, law, engineering and accountancy. They have participated at each stage in the building of Malaysia.

The Malaysian Government's decision to dedicate the area of Brickfields, which is one of the oldest Indian settlements in the country, as "Little India" is a tribute to the contribution to nation building of all Malaysians of Indian origin.
On this special occasion, I have the pleasure to announce that India would be presenting a Torana Gate to the residents of Brickfields as a mark of India-Malaysia friendship.

In the long march of history the paths of India and Malaysia have often crossed. We share close bonds of history and culture. We are pluralistic nations, committed to a composite culture that is unique and tolerant of the diversity in our societies.

Swami Vivekananda, one of India's greatest philosophers, once said that "Variety is the first principle of life." Brickfields embodies that principle. It is a place in which the three communities of Malaysia live in peace and harmony with each other.

It is here that the Vivekananda Ashram, built in 1904, is located. And it is here in Brickfields, that Malaysians of Indian origin can give full expression to their individualism and culture.

As citizens of Malaysia, the Indian community's hopes and aspirations, life, family and future lie in this country. Yet they have maintained cultural and spiritual links with India. We welcome their desire as Persons of Indian origin to re-connect with their cultural roots even as they serve their country of adoption. The Indian community is well placed to be the bridge of friendship and understanding between India and Malaysia.

Malaysia under the dynamic leadership of Dato' Sri Najib has entered a new era of progress and prosperity. We wish him all success as he leads Malaysia to a better tomorrow.

Dato' Sri Najib has extended his hand of friendship to India. I fully reciprocate his friendship. After my discussions with Dato' Sri Najib today, I can say with confidence that India-Malaysia relations are poised for significant expansion in the coming years. Improving ties with Malaysia will be a very high priority of India's foreign policy in the years ahead.

Before I conclude, I wish to recall what Rabindranath Tagore once said: "A civilization must be judged and assessed not by the level of power it has reached but by how it develops and expresses a love of humanity."

It is to that high ideal that we must aspire and I hope that Brickfields will serve as a worthy example in that respect.

Thank you.
351. Speech by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the banquet hosted in his honour by Prime Minister of Malaysia.

Kuala Lumpur, October 27, 2010.

His Excellency Dato' Sri Mohd Najib,
Prime Minister of Malaysia and
Datin Paduka Sri Rosmah Mansor
Distinguished Invitees from both the countries

My wife and I are delighted to be in Malaysia. I wish to thank Prime Minister Najib, the Government and the people of Malaysia for the exceptional courtesies and warm hospitality extended to me and to members of my delegation.

When we met in New Delhi earlier this year, I was greatly impressed by Your Excellency’s desire to create a qualitatively new bilateral relationship for the 21st Century.

I have come to Malaysia today to build upon the vision that you put forward in New Delhi.

Our people have a long and enduring relationship. We are tied together by bonds of history and culture. The large presence of Persons of Indian Origin in Malaysia provides an indelible link between India and Malaysia.

In the middle of the last century, we struggled to free ourselves from colonial rule. Our respective struggles for independence drew inspiration from each other. The great friendship between the first Prime Ministers of independent India and Malaysia - Jawaharlal Nehru and Tunku Abdul Rahman Putra - laid a firm foundation for our close ties.

At the dawn of our independence, at the Asian Relations Conference in 1947, our first Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru said, and I quote:

"Strong winds are blowing all over Asia. Let us not be afraid of them but welcome them for only with their help can we build the new Asia of our dreams." Unquote
These words are as true today as they were then. A robust and durable partnership between two leading democracies, India and Malaysia, will give strength and substance to the idea of a renewed and united Asia.

Our decision to establish a Strategic Partnership today is historic. We will work together as partners and close friends. Our cooperation will help to build a regional architecture that is conducive to prosperity, peace, and development.

Our talks today give me the confidence that we can transform our relationship at the bilateral, regional and multilateral levels.

Mr. Prime Minister, the people of India admire the leadership you are providing to your country and the new directions you are charting for Malaysia and ASEAN's relations with the extended neighbourhood, particularly India.

We fully reciprocate your vision of a cooperative relationship that brings greater prosperity and progress to the people of India and Malaysia.

Thank you.

352. Media Briefing by Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy during Prime Minister's visit to Malaysia.

Kuala Lumpur, October 27, 2010

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to all of you. Sorry to keep you waiting. In fact the banquet that the Prime Minister of Malaysia had hosted for the Indian Prime Minister has just concluded, and we have rushed back from Putrajaya. So, I hope you understand. We hope also that you have had a good day.

Today the Prime Minister of India had a very active, a packed calendar of engagements. You are aware of Prime Minister's programme. You have attended some of the events. Secretary (E) Ms. Latha Reddy is here to brief you about Prime Minister's meetings and engagements in the course of the day today. She is also joined by the High Commissioner of India, Mr. Vijay Gokhale; and Joint Secretary (South) Mr. Arun Goel. Secretary (East) would make her opening statement, would share with you some thoughts, and thereafter she will be happy to take a few questions.

Madam, the floor is yours.

Secretary (East) (Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy): Dear friends, I am delighted to be with you again. The last time I gave you a briefing on this visit was in Delhi, before our departure from Delhi. I think I would not go through the programme because you all have the programme, and you know what a packed day it has been. But let me just give you some highlights as we perceive them as they unfolded during the day.

I think two of the things that came through very clearly were the exceptionally warm welcome given to our Prime Minister and Mrs. Kaur, the personal warmth and friendship that was expressed on many occasions today in the various fora where they interacted between the two Prime Ministers. The fact that was particularly emphasized was that there have been two visits in 2010 - one by PM Najib to India in January and within a space of nine months the return visit by our Prime Minister to Malaysia. I think this has been particularly appreciated and highlighted here by the leadership.

During the official talks I think some of the highlights were they were indeed very wide-ranging and comprehensive discussions on all bilateral issues. Particularly the agreement on CECA which specified timelines both for the signing by 31st January, and for the implementation by the 1st of July, was indeed hailed as a cornerstone of these talks and of the visit. The Malaysian Prime Minister called our Prime Minister’s visit a landmark visit.

Our Prime Minister said Malaysia is fundamental to the success of our Look East policy. The Prime Minister also said that the Malaysian Prime Minister’s visit laid the basis of our multifaceted relationship as it is today. And there was very keen interest expressed on both sides in having more investments in India, in infrastructure, roads and railways. Special mention was made of the possibilities of investment in the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor project.

In addition, an important item that was discussed was that of steps to be taken for counter-terrorism. Malaysia expressed full support for counterterrorism cooperation with India including, as you are aware, the setting up of a Joint Working Group. On regional aspects, the important issues touched upon were that Prime Minister extended an invitation to Prime Minister Najib to attend the India-ASEAN 2012 Commemorative Summit to be held in India. Our Commerce and Industry Minister extended an invitation to his counterpart along with a delegation to attend the ASEAN Business Summit in March 2011.

We expressed our appreciation of Malaysia’s role as ASEAN’s Coordinator for the India-ASEAN FTA and our desire to conclude Services and Investment FTA at the earliest. As I did mention earlier, there is a commitment on the part of the Commerce and Trade Ministers of all ASEAN countries and India that this part of the FTA should be concluded by March 2011, and I believe that would be reiterated again at the Summit.

Other areas which were mentioned for cooperation were maritime security and energy security. There was also great appreciation expressed by our Prime Minister for the involvement by Malaysian companies in important projects in India such as the T3 terminal in New Delhi Airport. The Prime Minister of Malaysia mentioned that in recent months from January to August 2010 figures showed a 13.5 per cent increase in trade year on year figures, and he felt this was a sign that the recovery would be stronger this year.

He also mentioned that Malaysia had opened visa facilitation centres which would help particularly for issue of business visas in Hyderabad and Mumbai, and depending on how these functioned, these could be extended to other centres in India as well. He mentioned that the training programmes which have been done at Infosys have been very effective and, therefore, they were using the Infosys training formats to set up training programmes for IT groups in Malaysia. He expressed his appreciation to India for removing the tariffs on crude edible oil from Malaysia in 2008.

Both sides discussed IRCON and participation in more railway projects in Malaysia. The Malaysian Prime Minister added that companies in Malaysia were not only strong in construction projects but also in power projects, in property development, medical and health services.

If I could now move on to what we see as the outcomes, which have also been covered in the Joint Statement which you all have with you, I think firstly there is obviously we are building the framework for a strategic partnership through the Joint Statement and through the talks which we have had. Points which were stressed were the need for frequent high-level talks and interaction which would include at the summit level both as we have had now as well as on the margins of international and regional summits, joint commissions at the Foreign Minister’s level, and there is a commitment to hold the next meeting in the first half of 2011, other Ministerial exchanges, as well as Foreign Office consultations at Secretary level including regional and strategic issues.

We agreed that defence cooperation should be enlarged. And as I mentioned, on counter-terrorism there was an agreement to set up the Joint Working Group. We have already touched on CECA, the Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement, and on the infrastructure projects. Again, with relation to the infrastructure projects there was the proposal to sign the MoU on cooperation in highway management and development which we expect to be done shortly once final approvals are obtained.

You all know about the launch of the CEO Forum which I think has been a great success. I will particularly emphasise that at the CEO’s forum there were two very concrete examples of partnerships. Since the documents were exchanged between Biocon India and Malaysia Biotechnology Corporation for setting up of a 400 million US dollars biopharma manufacturing facility in Malaysia by Biocon India. Also, Manipal University and the Ministry of Higher Education exchanged the documents for setting up of an international multidisciplinary university by Manipal University with an investment of US dollars 200 million.

I take it that you would have seen the Joint Statement coming out of the CEO Forum. That I think sums up what the CEOs have deliberated on today and what are the priority areas they have identified.

Another important thing which was decided and which was there in the Joint Statement is the collaboration on the ICT front. We have decided to set up the Joint Talent Development Consultative Committee which is the JICTDC. It has been decided that on our side the implementing agency will be NASSCOM and on the Malaysian side it would be the Multimedia Super Corridor Agency.
As I mentioned, there were talks about energy. There we talked about the need for collaboration on oil and gas, and setting up of a Joint Working Group on new and renewable energy.

On the regional aspects, we emphasized ASEAN centrality. We talked about, as I said, the need to conclude the ASEAN-India FTA in services and investment. Nalanda University was mentioned in the Joint Statement. And Malaysia expressed its support for this initiative by India. ASEAN-India and the EAS Summits, one of the important issues discussed was the support for CEPEA which is the Comprehensive Economic Partnership in East Asia; the ASEAN Plus 6 FTA as it would be finally evolved.

We called for UN comprehensive reform and Malaysia said that they would support expansion in both permanent and non-permanent categories of the UN Security Council.

I think I would stop here for now and take questions if there are any.

Question: Madam, I would like to draw your attention to a piece that has appeared in People’s Daily, which is the organ of the Chinese Communist Party, which says very clearly that India’s Look East policy is actually an effort insult the Chinese. What it says is very clear. It says all these defence issues that you have spoken about is an attempt to put China on the back foot - whether it is Malaysia, whether it is Hanoi, whether it is Tokyo. How do you assess this piece? Do you feel that these maritime treaties that we have signed with Japan, this increased defence cooperation with Malaysia, whatever happens in Hanoi in the future - does it really mean what People's Daily is saying?

Secretary (East): I think we have said often that our relationships with countries exist in their own right and are not predicated by our relationship with any third country. I think that sufficiently answers the point which you have raised. Our Look East policy goes back to the early 1990s. This is not a new Look East policy, and our relationship with the countries in Southeast and East Asia also are based not only on very ancient civilisational ties but an effort over several decades to build a modern relationship. And modern relationships would include... not only trade and economic ties and I think political exchanges but also other strategic and security aspects. So, all I can say is that we seek to build strong bilateral relationships and certainly we are participating strongly in regional mechanisms as are other countries in the region. And our visit to Hanoi is for the India-ASEAN and the East Asia Summit which is an annual exercise which we do every year with a country in the ASEAN network. So, I think that sufficiently answers this question. We have valid bilateral relationships with each of these countries and we pursue our interests with each of these countries. And as I said, this is not predicated by our ties with any other country.

Question: Madam, just to clarify, didn't you believe that the strengthening of our military ties is misunderstood and if that is so, what can be done about it?

Secretary (East): I can only speak for ourselves. I have already explained to you our point of view.

Question: Madam, in the Joint Statement there is a mention of the setting up of a Joint Working Group to counter-terrorism cooperation in that area. Have there been some reports that Malaysia is becoming a hub of fund-raising and propaganda by certain terror groups?

Secretary (East): I do not think the desire to do this has been based on any such specific reports. I think we all recognize that terror recognizes no boundaries or borders and, therefore, there has to be a global effort and we do have such Joint Working Groups on Counter-terrorism with a number of countries. I think that we felt that to give a strategic depth to the relationship, we are talking about a framework for a strategic partnership. It would be important to set up a Joint Working Group on this very important subject.

Question: I have two questions about defence. You talked about Maritime security you talked about that we want to enhance maritime security with Malaysia. In what way do we want to enhance this maritime security? Secondly, we were given to understand by Brahmos Aerospace in New Delhi that Malaysians are very keen to have Brahmos in their weaponry. Is there any progress?
Secretary (East): I can confirm that there was no discussion about Brahmos. Regarding your question on maritime security, as you all know, Malaysia is a littoral country for the Straits of Malacca. And safe passage of ships through Straits of Malacca has been a concern for some time in the region. I think that we have been engaged in talks with not only Malaysia but the other littoral States in the Straits of Malacca in what we can be engaged in maritime security here. India is participating actively in preventing piracy operations, as you know, on the other side in the Gulf of Aden and off the Horn of Africa. I think that what has happened in that region has alerted people in this region too that we need to ensure maritime routes safety.

Question: I have two different questions. One is that the Joint Statement states about setting up of a security park. Can you elaborate on this issue?

Secretary (East): This is a Malaysian proposal, and I would request the High Commissioner to perhaps talk about this, the defence and security park.

High Commissioner of India in Malaysia (Shri Vijay Gokhale): There is not much to add. This is a Malaysian proposal. They intend to set up a park. They wanted us to express interest in looking at this proposal. And that is all that the Joint Statement says at this stage.

Question: My second question was different on the IRCON assistance. Malaysia has narrow gauge railway lines. What kind of projects can IRCON take up there?

Secretary (East): They are already executing a project here in Malaysia. Again, if I could ask the High Commissioner to give you the details.

High Commissioner of India in Malaysia: IRCON has been here for 20 years and currently were executing the double-tracking of the narrow gauge line between Seremban and Dimas which is a project of about 1.2 billion US dollars. The first phase of this will come on stream on the 25th of December this year when we will hand to them two stations and part of the track. The second phase of the project will be completed in June 2012. It is a project which is currently running ahead of schedule, and it is highly appreciated by the Malaysian side. We are also leasing 25 locomotives on long-term basis which is pulling their freight on the northern railway between Kuala Lumpur and up to the Thai border. So, IRCON's involvement is both long-term and very substantive.

Question: Madam, given the to and froing on the Kashmiri stapled visas, what can we expect in Hanoi, not just with China but in the one-on-one which Prime Minister Manmohan Singh is going to have with Wen Jiabao, and also what will be the other bilaterals?

Secretary (East): I think we should really take up the bilaterals which are going to happen in Hanoi. We will all be there together. So, I would not like to prejudge the issue of what will and will not taken up in the bilaterals.

Question: When we talk about cooperation in counter-terrorism, what kind of cooperation...

Secretary (East): I think we would have to look at various aspects of counter-terrorism measures. It depends from country to country. Sometimes funding of terrorism becomes an issue. We may have to look into funding issues; we may have to look into exchanges of intelligence; we may have to look into information exchanges. So, I think it really depends as you go along what has been agreed to is to set up the mechanism, the framework. How the mechanism decides to continue its work would only be established once the Joint Working Group is met, exchanged information on both sides, and identify specific areas where they can work on concrete measures.

Kuala Lumpur, October 27, 2010.

The Prime Minister of Malaysia, Dato' Sri Najib Tun Razak and the Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh met in Kuala Lumpur on 27 October 2010. They recalled their decision during the visit of the Prime Minister of Malaysia to India in January 2010 to expand and deepen India-Malaysia bilateral relations by establishing a strategic partnership between the two countries.

The two Prime Ministers acknowledged the long history of cultural and civilization contacts between the two countries and their shared commitment to democracy and development. They also acknowledged that both sides had made a contribution in promoting economic development and stability in the Asia-Pacific and recognized each others' responsibility in the promotion of peace, development and security of the region based on a convergence of political and economic interests and aspirations. Both leaders recalled that India and Malaysia have a mutual stake in the progress and prosperity of the other, and expressed their determination to imbue greater dynamism to the relationship through all-round cooperation and engagement. They expressed their common desire to elevate bilateral relations to the level of a long term and strategic partnership based on mutual equality and mutual understanding.

In this context, the two Prime Ministers have identified the following elements of the Strategic Partnership between the two countries:

1. The two leaders agreed to maintain regular dialogue and contact at the summit level, including at the margins of international conferences;

2. Both sides acknowledged the importance of enhancing and deepening all-round cooperation through biennial meetings of the Joint Commission headed by the Foreign Ministers of the two countries, and that the next meeting shall be held in Kuala Lumpur in the first half of 2011;
3. Both sides welcomed the steady high level exchanges between the two countries and agreed to promote more exchanges at the Cabinet level including between the Ministers in charge of Trade & Industry, Railways, Road Transport & Highways, Tourism, Energy including new and renewable energy, Higher Education and Knowledge;

4. Both sides will continue to hold biennial foreign office consultations, including on regional and strategic issues of mutual interest, between the Secretary General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Malaysia and the Secretary of the Ministry of External Affairs of India;

5. Both sides also agreed to enhance defence exchanges and cooperation through regular exchanges between the Defence Ministers, senior defence officials, Chiefs of the Armed Services and regular Service-to-Service Staff Talks and regular ships visits.

6. The two leaders agreed to explore the possibilities of joint collaboration on projects of mutual interest in the defence sector on the basis of experience gained by both sides during the successful completion of the SU 30 MKM training programme, including in the areas of industry collaboration / partnership. The Malaysian side looks forward to participation from the Indian defence industry at the soon to be established Malaysian Defence and Security Park. Both sides also agreed to support each others defence exhibitions;

7. The two leaders firmly condemn terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, and agreed to enhance cooperation in counter-terrorism including through information sharing and the establishment of a bilateral Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism at an early date;

8. The two leaders affirmed their commitment to further strengthen bilateral trade and investment cooperation and deepen their economic engagement as the core of the strategic partnership;

9. Both sides welcomed the conclusion of the negotiations towards a high quality and mutually beneficial Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) to further enhance trade and investment flows between the two countries, and have agreed to sign the CECA by 31 January 2011 and to implement it by 1 July 2011. Both sides shall ensure realization of the above timelines for signing as well as implementation of the CECA;

10. Noting that the expansion of mutual investment will contribute to the reciprocal economic growth of both countries, the two leaders agreed to enhance cooperation and support at the governmental level to further strengthen existing bilateral collaboration in infrastructure development and involvement in infrastructure projects particularly in the construction industry and provide business opportunities in investment through joint business and government collaboration;

11. The two sides will be signing a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on Cooperation Relating to the Provision of Technical Assistance Services on Highway Management and Development. This MoU will further enhance the participation by Malaysian engineering and consultancy companies in the development of national highways in India;

12. The two leaders welcomed the establishment of a high-level India-Malaysia CEOs Forum that was launched in Putrajaya during the visit, to develop enhanced partnership and cooperation at the business level. The two sides will also consider specific recommendations made by the CEOs Forum to the two Governments on improvements in the business environment and on measures for enhancing investment and trade flows between the two countries in the future;

13. Both sides agreed to explore the possibilities of enhancing cooperation in the financial sector including through participation in each others' capital markets, through the exchange of views between the Finance Ministries and the relevant agencies of both countries. The Indian side welcomes the decision of the Malaysian side to give a commercial banking license to Indian banks;

14. Both sides recognized the competitive advantage of Indian software companies in IT and ITES, and have agreed to set up a Joint ICT Talent Development Consultative Committee (JICTDC) involving stakeholders from both the governments, relevant agencies, industry players and training institutions to make specific recommendations to both the governments for IT skills training, talent development and greater engagement of Indian IT companies in Malaysia;
15. Both sides agreed to study the possibility of enhancing the scope and level of joint collaboration in the hydrocarbons sector between PETRONAS of Malaysia and ONGC Videsh Limited of India in third countries, as well as importance of identifying possible collaborative projects in the new and renewable energy sector through the establishment of a Joint Working Group between the Ministry of Energy, Green Technology & Water of Malaysia and the Ministry of New & Renewable Energy of India;

16. The two leaders recognized that underpinning the two countries relationship are vibrant and longstanding people-to-people ties. In this regard, both sides will strive to promote a quantum leap in tourism, academic, culture and people-to-people exchanges between India and Malaysia, including through the development of specific proposals for University-to-University level collaborations, vocational and English language teaching, for consideration by the two Governments. They agreed that the Joint Working Group on Higher Education shall meet in Kuala Lumpur as early as possible for that purpose;

17. Both sides welcomed the establishment of the Indian Cultural Centre in Kuala Lumpur and will encourage wider cultural exchanges between the two countries;

18. Both sides welcomed the establishment of an Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) India Chair in Development Studies at the University of Malaya, Contemporary Malaysian Studies Centre at the University of Madras and note the intention by the Indian Institute of Technology, Kanpur to establish a Centre for Engineering Excellence at the University Sains Malaysia;

19. The two leaders acknowledged that the partnership has moved beyond the bilateral framework and that the two countries share a mutual interest in cooperating for peace, prosperity and security of the Asia-Pacific region and beyond;

20. Both sides recognized the central role of ASEAN in the regional processes and the importance of greater participation by India in regional initiatives in the long term interests of the region;

21. Both sides recognized the importance of concluding an ambitious and mutually beneficial ASEAN-India FTA in Services and Investments at the earliest possible time in order to give full play to the economic forces of the region in the service of the two peoples;

22. Malaysia welcomed India's initiative to revive Nalanda University to strengthen regional educational cooperation among the Asian countries. Both sides also recognized the need to establish more centres of excellence in Asia;

23. Both sides underscored the importance of open, transparent and inclusive regional arrangements based on mutuality of interests with ASEAN as the driving force. They welcomed ASEAN-India Dialogue Relations, ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) and East Asia Summit (EAS) as important regional mechanisms that advance peace, economic growth and stability of the Asia-Pacific region. Both sides welcomed the progress on the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement in East Asia (CEPEA);

24. The two leaders agreed that a comprehensive reform of the United Nations remains a priority in order for the organization to effectively address today's global challenges. The two leaders also agreed to work in partnership towards achieving a more representative, more efficient and more effective UN Security Council especially its expansion in both permanent and non-permanent categories;

25. Both sides reiterated their common commitment to nuclear non-proliferation objectives based on a fair, universal, non-discriminatory and verifiable regime, and express serious concern at the threat of proliferation of WMD and their means of delivery, and pledge to work together to counter such threats.

The Prime Ministers of India and Malaysia reiterated that with the exchange of visits between them in 2010, the two countries are embarking on a new stage in India-Malaysia relations through the establishment of this Strategic Partnership. Pursuant to this, the two Prime Ministers directed the concerned agencies of both governments to implement the elements outlined in the Declaration in order that form and content be given to the Strategic Partnership as soon as possible.

SYNOPSIS OF SIX MoUs/AGREEMENTS SIGNED ON 27 OCTOBER 2010

Agreement towards implementing Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) between India and Malaysia on 1st July 2011

Background

India-Malaysia CECA

A Joint Study Group was constituted in March 2005 by India and Malaysia comprising government officials and economists to examine the feasibility of a FTA between the two countries. The Study Group submitted its Report in January 2007, recommending a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) between India and Malaysia, and the Report was adopted by both the governments by launching CECA negotiations in February 2008. The negotiations have been concluded in September 2010 with both sides agreeing on the texts of the CECA which include Trade in Goods, Trade in Services, Investment and other areas of economic cooperation. Both sides agreed that the CECA would be signed as a single undertaking.

Taking into account the India-ASEAN Trade in Goods (TiG) Agreement that was implemented with effect from 1st January 2010 between India and Malaysia, both sides have offered 'ASEAN plus' market access in goods. In Trade in Services, both sides agreed on providing access of each others' services market across all modes and various sectors. India and Malaysia would liberalise their respective investment regimes to facilitate greater FDI into each other's territory. Both sides would also finalise 2-3 other areas of economic cooperation from among infrastructure development, creative industries, tourism, SMEs, business facilitation, science and technology, and human resource development.

Agreement on the implementation of CECA

The 'Agreement towards implementing Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) between the Republic of India and Malaysia on 1st July 2011', signed by the Trade Ministers of both countries on 27th October 2010 in the presence of the Prime Ministers of India and Malaysia, indicates the broad contours and the stages of implementation of CECA.

Both sides to prepare all the schedules and take up legal scrubbing of texts in November. The CECA to be signed by 31st January 2011 and to be implemented on 1st July 2011.

MOU on Cooperation in the Field of Traditional Systems of Medicine

The MOU on Cooperation in the Field of Traditional Systems of Medicine provides a framework for cooperation in traditional systems of medicine between the two countries. The scope of the MoU includes identifying further areas of co-operation for promotion of traditional medicine including the regulation of teaching, practice, drugs and drugless therapies; accommodating interested practitioners, paramedics, students and institutions in educational training programmes on traditional systems of medicine. The institutions in both the countries can work towards mutual recognition of Ayurveda, Unani, Siddha Pharmacopoea of India and the Malaysian Herbal Pharmacopoea. The MOU also envisages exchange of experts for training of practitioners, paramedics, scientists, teachers and students in traditional systems of medicine. Both governments would also encourage relevant institutions to exchange medicinal materials and documents necessary for administration and reference for greater understanding and usage.

India would be the second country with which Malaysia would be signing an MOU in the Traditional Systems of Medicine. Due to the presence of large diaspora of Indian and Chinese origin, Malaysia has a wide canvas of traditional systems of medicine including that of Malay herbal medicine. The MOU is expected to guide already existing rudimentary cooperation in a more focused manner and also streamline the existing practices in traditional systems of medicine to higher levels of acceptance by people in the two countries.

MOU for cooperation in the field of Tourism

The tourist flows between India and Malaysia have been increasing in the recent years in a significant manner. India is now the sixth largest source country for inbound tourism to Malaysia with about 600,000 Indian tourists visiting Malaysia in 2009, an increase of 9% over figures of 2008. Malaysia is the tenth largest source country for foreign tourists visiting India with 115,794 Malaysians visiting India in 2008. The trend is expected to continue in view of the improved connectivity between the two countries with the introduction of budget airlines from Malaysia such as Air Asia.

The MOU would further enhance the existing level of cooperation in the field of tourism on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. The areas of cooperation envisaged under the MOU include research and development, training, greater exchange of promotional and publicity materials, investments and organizing meetings, conventions and travel mart/trade fairs etc. between the two countries. The MOU would remain in force from the date of signing for a period of 5 years and thereafter it would be automatically extended for a further period of 5 years.

MOU for Cooperation in the filed of IT & Services

The first decade of the 21st century witnessed marked increase in collaboration in the field of Information Technology and Services between India and Malaysia. There are at present 60 Indian IT companies, including few of the top-ten Indian IT companies, have established offices in Malaysia with some of them operating their global business centres. Keeping in view the importance of IT and Services for both the countries, an MOU was signed in 2002 which expired in 2007. The new MOU is signed to reflect the contemporary changes taking place in the field of IT and Services.

The areas of cooperation envisaged in the MOU include electronic-commerce, multimedia development, electronic-governance, information security, cyber crime, human resource development, research, design and development and exploring third country markets and any other areas of cooperation of mutual interest to both the countries. The MOU shall enter into force from the date of signing and would remain in force for a period of five years.

Separately, the Prime Ministers of India and Malaysia are also expected to announce setting up of a Joint ICT Talent Development Consultative Committee (JICTDCC) involving stakeholders from both the governments, relevant agencies, industry players and training institutions to make specific recommendations to both the governments for IT skills training, talent development and greater engagement of Indian IT Companies in Malaysia.

Agreement between CSIR of India and UNIK of Malaysia on Research and Development Collaboration

The Council for Scientific and Industrial Research (CSIR) and Special Innovation Unit (UNIK) of Prime Minister's Department of Malaysia would be signing an Agreement on Research and Development Collaboration to increase cooperation in research, development innovation and commercialization of technology.

The Agreement envisages establishment of a Joint Innovation Accelerator Centre in Malaysia to carry out research on areas of mutual interest such as green technology, water treatment, medicinal and aromatic plants and also includes other innovative technologies. It also encourages transfer of knowledge; exchange of experts, scientists and researchers; production of joint reports of publications; and study visits relating to the projects and programme to be undertaken by the Joint Innovation Accelerator Centre. Both CSIR and UNIK will also explore and develop the use of herbs, plants, flowers and fruits for medicinal in Malaysia and aromatic purposes by way of extraction techniques, processes and methodologies;

UNIK has been set up in 2010 in the Prime Minister's Department to enable it emerge as an important focal point for innovation in the country. CSIR, a premier scientific and industrial research organization in India, would share its knowledge and expertise for mutual benefit.

Cultural Exchange Programme for 2010-13

India and Malaysia would be signing a Cultural Exchange Programme (CEP) for the period 2010-13 during the Prime Minister's visit, spelling out a number of activities to further strengthen the existing cultural cooperation between the two countries. This CEP stems from the Cultural Agreement signed between India and Malaysia in 1978.
CEP envisages exchange of cultural delegations at Ministerial as well as official level to further enhance development of culture and art programmes between the two countries. In addition, it provides for exchange of performing arts troupes, visual arts, organization of art exhibitions in each others' countries, participation in international cultural and artistic activities held in each others' countries. It also encourages cooperation by way of exchange of visits between archaeological institutions, museums and archives establishments of the two countries. It also has a component of training of personnel in archives and also participation of scholars and experts in international academic conferences held in other countries. The CEP would provide a more focused attention in a number of areas mentioned above.

New Delhi, October 27, 2010.

Shri Anand Sharma, Minister for Commerce & Industry and the Malaysian International Trade & Industry Minister signed an 'Agreement towards implementing Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) between India and Malaysia' today at Kuala Lumpur in the presence of the Prime Ministers of India and Malaysia. The Agreement is an indication of the conclusion of CECA negotiations and it outlines the broad contours of the CECA. The signing of the Agreement would lead to the signing and implementation of the India-Malaysia CECA. In trade in goods, the Agreement proposes that the CECA commitments between India and Malaysia would be more liberal than those under the ASEAN-India Trade in Goods Agreement. In trade in services, the Agreement envisages that, under the CECA, trade in services will be progressively liberalized on a preferential basis, with substantial sectoral coverage, including Movement of Professionals and Skilled Persons, Cross-border Supply, and Telecommunications Services to provide commercially meaningful market access to both parties. Similarly, the investment chapter under the CECA will include commitments leading to progressive liberalisation of investment regimes in order to promote investments and create a liberal, facilitative, transparent and competitive investment regime. The CECA will also include economic cooperation in areas such as infrastructure development, creative industries, tourism, SMEs, business facilitation, science and technology, and human resource development.

The proposed Agreement also stipulates CECA implementation timelines. The entire CECA with legal texts would be signed by 31.1.2011 and would be implemented on 1.7.2011. It may be recalled that India and Malaysia are parties to the India-ASEAN Trade in Goods Agreement signed in August 2009 and both countries have implemented it with effect from 1st January 2010. The India-Malaysia CECA envisages being more liberal compared to the commitments under the ASEAN FTA. The CECA is envisaged to lead to growth in bilateral trade and investment resulting in economic benefits to both India and Malaysia.

Malaysia is the 3rd largest trading partner of India amongst ASEAN (Association of South East Asian Nations) countries. India - Malaysia trade increased from US$ 3.38 billion to US$ 8.01 billion between 2004-05 and 2009-10 after reaching a peak of US$ 10.60 billion in 2008-09. The main exports of India include petroleum products, metals, machinery, meat, chemicals, spices and cereals; our main imports include petroleum products, electronic goods, edible oil, wood, chemicals and metals.

I am happy to have this occasion to meet members of the Indian community in Malaysia.

The Malaysian Indian community holds a very special place in our hearts. You represent the largest gathering of people of Indian origin in the world. You have been contributing to the political, economic, social and cultural fabric of Malaysia, while preserving your ties with India. This is not an easy task. But you have successfully done so by blending Indian culture and values with the local milieu. Your achievements fill us with pride and joy.

I compliment you for the affection that you still have for the land of your ancestors. I applaud you for your contribution to the progress and prosperity in Malaysia.

Malaysia has today transformed itself into a modern industrialized nation. With its democratic framework, plural and progressive values, Malaysia provides a unique development model, which is relevant to the entire developing world and the international community.

Today India is also on the move. We are in the midst of a major transformation in addressing our developmental challenges within a democratic framework.

India offers a growing and vibrant market, young work force, and an attractive destination for foreign investors. We are already a trillion dollar economy. We are aspiring for a growth rate of 9-10% per annum. As our economy expands and creates more opportunities, it provides a new platform for collaboration between India and overseas Indian communities. I invite you to make use of these new investment and business opportunities in India in the best manner that you can.

The Pravasi Bharatiya Diwas is now a full-fledged mechanism for reaching out to our overseas community. I am delighted to know that the Malaysian delegation is usually one of the largest and most active delegations at the annual Pravasi Bharatiya Diwas.
We enjoy excellent bilateral relations with Malaysia. India-Malaysia relations have grown significantly in the last five years. Prime Minister Najib's visit to India earlier this year, and my return visit this year clearly demonstrate our common desire to upgrade our relations in a comprehensive manner. We have also finalized a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement that will create an institutional framework for expanding business and commerce manifold.

The Indian community in Malaysia is well placed to take advantage of the opportunities that will come as relations between India and Malaysia deepen and grow.

With cultural and social links to India and deep understanding of our language, culture and the way we do things, the Malaysian Indian business community can serve as the bridge for fostering economic linkages between the two countries. I look forward to seeing greater involvement by you in this endeavour.

I am pleased to learn about the efforts the community has made in preserving Indian traditions and culture. It is in recognition of this that we decided to open an Indian Cultural Centre in Kuala Lumpur earlier this year.

I am happy to learn that you are making use of the educational facilities we offer in India. I know that there is a much greater demand for education in India from Persons of Indian Origin globally than we can currently fulfill. The Government is considering ways to address these demands. Our Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs runs a Diaspora Scholarship Scheme that offers scholarships to PIO and NRI students studying in Indian universities. I am told that one third of practicing Malaysian doctors have obtained medical degrees from India. Some Malaysian Universities have now begun collaborating with Indian Universities to develop twinning programmes, particularly in medicine and engineering. I hope that the Malaysian Indian community will benefit from these initiatives.

I am happy to announce today a contribution of Rs 5 crore to augment the Indian Scholarship Trust Fund, which will raise the corpus to Rs. 7.55 cr. The Fund was set up by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru in 1946 to provide assistance to Malaysian Indian students. At the request of the Indian community in Malaysia, I am also pleased to announce 20 scholarships for Malaysian students to pursue courses in traditional system of medicine in India.

The respect that non-resident Indians have earned abroad, including in Malaysia, is a matter of pride for all Indians. As a government we will continue to provide all assistance to the community in Malaysia through our High Commission in Kuala Lumpur.

I wish each of one of you and your families the very best, and season's greetings on the occasion of Diwali.

Thank you.

MONGOLA

New Delhi, January 11, 2010.

The 2nd Meeting of the India-Mongolia Joint Committee on Cooperation was held in New Delhi on 11 January 2010. The Meeting was jointly chaired by Smt. Preneet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs and Mr. Yondongiin Otgonbayar, Minister of Education, Culture & Science of Mongolia. The Joint Committee reviewed the entire gamut of India-Mongolia relations, particularly as a follow-up on the State Visit of the President of Mongolia to India in September 2009.

Recognising the need to strengthen bilateral civil nuclear cooperation, the Joint Committee welcomed the MOU signed during the visit of the President of Mongolia to India in September 2009 on Cooperation in the Field of Peaceful Use of Radioactive Minerals & Nuclear Energy. In pursuance of the MOU, the Indian side offered a short course on Radiography for Mongolian personnel at the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre in Mumbai, and assistance to set up a regulatory/radiation protection framework in Mongolia. The Mongolian side invited Indian participation in the uranium mining sector in Mongolia, including through joint ventures and investment. The Mongolian side also welcomed Indian participation in the mining of coal, coking coal and other minerals in Mongolia.

The Joint Committee also discussed possible cooperation in Agriculture and Animal Husbandry sectors. Indian assistance was sought for (a) establishing a National Centre for Research in Animal Diseases (Pandemics) in Mongolia; (b) acclimatization of high-yielding and fast-ripening varieties of crops/plants suitable for the Mongolian climatic conditions; (c) water harvesting and construction of dams; (d) biotechnology; and (e) development of the Mongolian dairy sector. It was suggested to revive the proposal for setting up a Model Farm / Agro Park in Mongolia. It was agreed that an Indian agro-business delegation could visit Mongolia at an early date to study the possibilities of cooperation in this area, particularly in commercial cultivation.

The Mongolian side presented a formal proposal to establish an India-Mongolia Joint Information Technology Education and Outsourcing Centre utilizing the US$ 20 million Line of Credit (LOC) extended by Government of India on special concessional terms. A detailed project proposal was also handed over in pursuance of the financial assistance pledged by Government of India for the construction of a suitable building for the India-Mongolia Joint School in Ulaanbaatar.

The Joint Committee also discussed the commemorative events that could be organized this year to mark the 55th year of establishment of diplomatic relations between India and Mongolia in 1955.
The 11th Foreign Office Consultations between India and Myanmar was held in Nay Pyi Taw on 1 March 2010. The Indian side was led by Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao and the Myanmar side by H.E. Deputy Foreign Minister U Maung Myint.

Leaders of both delegations expressed satisfaction at the close and friendly relations between the two countries and emphasised the need to maintain the momentum in bilateral relations. They welcomed the exchange of several high-level visits from both sides, including that of H.E. the Vice President of India in February 2009, the Chief of Army Staff Gen. Deepak Kapoor in October 2009 and H.E. the Foreign Minister of Myanmar U Nyan Win in January 2010.

The discussions covered a wide range of bilateral issues including security and border issues, trade and economic cooperation and cooperation in cross-border developmental projects, Oil and Natural Gas, Power, Railways, Telecommunications and Education & Training. The two sides stressed the need for greater vigilance at the border and agreed to enhance security cooperation to combat insurgent groups and arms smuggling. The two sides decided to convene the fourth Joint Trade Committee in New Delhi to build on the decisions taken earlier in the field of trade and commerce, which included converting Indo-Myanmar border trade into normal trade, opening of a border trade point at Avangkhung in Nagaland and expanding the existing border trade items from 22 to 40 items.

Both sides appreciated the strengthening of cooperation in the power sector. India is assisting Myanmar in the updating of the DPR on the development of Tamanthi and Shwezaye Hydropower Projects on the Chindwin River by NHPC. The two sides welcomed the taking up of mini-hydel projects by WAPCOS, replacing of 16 cyclone-damaged transformers by BHEL, supply of biomass gasifiers by TERI and construction of new transmission lines by PGCIL.

The Myanmar side welcomed the additional investment of US$ 1.1 billion by ONGC and GAIL in oil blocks in Myanmar for gas field development and upstream projects. Both sides agreed to strengthen cooperation in this field.

The two sides expressed happiness at the progress of work at the Industrial Training Centre, Pakokku, being set up with Indian assistance. TATA Motors are also assisting Myanmar in setting up a heavy turbo truck plant at Magway.

The Myanmar side conveyed its support to India’s candidature for the non-permanent membership of the UN Security Council for the term 2011-12. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the outcome of the BIMSTEC Foreign Ministers’ meeting in Myanmar in December 2009. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the close engagement between India and ASEAN and the special relationship of India with CLMV countries in supporting their developmental efforts. India has set up the Myanmar-India Centre for English Language Training and the Myanmar-India Entrepreneurship Development Centre in Yangon to enhance the skill sets of Myanmar students and youth.

Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao also called on H.E. the Secretary-I, General Thiha Thura Tin Aung Myint Oo and H.E. the Foreign Minister U Nyan Win. Recalling the historical and friendly relations between the two countries, both Myanmar leaders expressed their appreciation for India’s assistance to their developmental efforts.
360. Joint Statement issued during the visit of Chairman, State Peace and Development Council of Myanmar Senior General Than Shwe.

At the invitation of the President of India, Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil, the Head of State of the Union of Myanmar, Senior General Than Shwe, Chairman of the State Peace and Development Council of the Union of Myanmar, is paying a State Visit to India from July 25-29, 2010. The Chairman is accompanied by his wife Daw Kyaing Kyaing. Apart from his official engagements in New Delhi, Senior General Than Shwe will also visit places of economic, historical and religious interest.

2. This visit is a part of a series of high-level contacts that India and Myanmar have had over the past few years. These include visits by Vice Senior General Maung Aye, Vice-Chairman of the State Peace and Development Council of the Union of Myanmar, in April 2008 and Shri M. Hamid Ansari, Vice President of India, in February 2009.

3. In New Delhi, Senior General Than Shwe was accorded a ceremonial reception at Rashtrapati Bhavan on 27 July 2010. He was received by the President of India, who hosted a banquet in his honour.

4. Shri M. Hamid Ansari, Vice President of India, Shri S. M. Krishna, External Affairs Minister and Smt. Sushma Swaraj, Leader of Opposition called on Senior General Than Shwe.

5. Senior General Than Shwe had a meeting with the Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, which was followed by delegation level talks. The meetings and exchanges were positive and marked by cordiality on both sides.

6. India and Myanmar are close and friendly neighbours linked, interalia, by civilizational bonds, geographical proximity, culture, history and religion. Apart from a boundary that stretches over more than 1640 kilometers and borders four North-Eastern states of India, there is a large population of persons of Indian origin in Myanmar. Bilateral relations are reflective of these multifarious and traditional linkages and the two countries live side by side as close neighbors based on the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence.
7. Recalling these shared bonds of civilization, the Head of State of Myanmar and the Prime Minister of India expressed their commitment to further strengthen and broaden the multi-dimensional relationship which now encompasses a range of areas of cooperation. Enhancing economic, social and developmental engagement will help harness the considerable potential in India-Myanmar bilateral relations, which would, in turn, contribute to the socio-economic betterment of their respective peoples.

8. Recognizing that peace and stability in the region is essential for development and for the well-being of the people of their respective countries, the two leaders agreed on close cooperation between the security forces of the two countries in tackling the pernicious problem of terrorism. They agreed that security cooperation should be given immediate attention since terrorists, insurgents and criminals respect no boundaries and undermine the social and political fabric of a nation. Both leaders reiterated the assurance that the territory of either would not be allowed for activities inimical to the other and resolved not to allow their respective territory to be used for training, sanctuary and other operations by terrorist and insurgent organizations and their operatives.

9. Understanding that continued cooperation will lead to success in fighting the insurgency issue, the two leaders agreed to strengthen cooperation and collective efforts of the two countries along the border. In this context, the two leaders welcomed the Home Secretary level talks held in Nay Pyi Taw in January 2010 and the important decisions taken in that meeting.

10. Both leaders expressed their desire for greater economic engagement. In this context, the Prime Minister of India conveyed India's commitment to continue with developmental assistance to Myanmar. The Myanmar side expressed deep appreciation for the generous and concessionary credit facilities given by India to finance significant infrastructure and other projects. Projects that are currently underway under such aid assistance include railways, road and waterway development, power and industrial training centres, tele-communication, etc. The Indian side agreed to consider Myanmar's request for assistance in the three areas namely: IT development, Industrial development and Infrastructure development in Myanmar which will lead to upliftment of the bilateral cooperation to a higher level.
11. Senior General Than Shwe and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh welcomed the considerable enhancement of the connectivity between the two countries. In this context, they welcomed the progress made by M/s Inland Waterways Authority of India towards implementation of the Kaladan Multi-modal Tranship Transport Project and reiterated their respective Governments' commitment to this project. In particular, they welcomed the finalization of the contract for port development and Inland waterway with M/s ESSAR. It was also agreed that the scope of the project with respect to the road component would be revised. The road component between Paletwa and Myeikwa on the India border would be executed by the Myanmar Ministry of Construction with M/s IRCON.

12. The two leaders expressed satisfaction at the construction, maintenance and repair work by Indian Border Roads Organization of the Tamu-Kalaywa-Kalaymo Road connecting Moreh in Manipur to Myanmar and the handing over of most of the segments of the TKK Road to the Government of Myanmar.

13. To enhance road connectivity, especially through the State of Mizoram, both leaders announced the construction and revamping of the Rhi-Tiddim road at a cost of more than US$ 60 million to be financed through grant assistance from India. The Myanmar side expressed its appreciation for this gesture.

14. Both leaders emphasized the need to enhance cooperation in the area of agriculture. The Indian side announced a grant of US$ 10 million for procurement of agricultural machinery from India. The leaders expressed the hope that this machinery will help enhance productivity in Myanmar's agricultural sector, which is the mainstay of its economy. The Myanmar side also requested for technical assistance in manufacturing of agricultural machinery.

15. The Indian side also announced a project to set up rice silos to facilitate disaster relief operations particularly in the cyclone prone delta areas, with grant in aid from India.

16. The Myanmar side expressed appreciation for India's generous assistance in the relief and rehabilitation efforts that followed the devastating Cyclone Nargis which hit Myanmar in May 2008. He noted that the assistance from India, which included dispatch of a large medical contingent to work in cyclone affected areas as well as providing immediate medical and food supplies, supply of GI sheets, 16 electricity transformers, 20 biomass gasifiers and funds for restoration work on the holy Shwedagon pagoda, was timely and catered to Myanmar’s urgent requirements.

17. Both leaders identified the power sector as an area of growing cooperation. In this context, the two leaders agreed to cooperate in the implementation of the Tamanthi and Shwezaye projects on the Chindwin River Basin in Myanmar. They welcomed the involvement of M/s NHPC in carrying out the much required additional investigations after the signing of the MoU on Cooperation in Hydro-power Development projects in the Chindwin River Basin in September 2008. Subject to the findings of these additional investigations, the two leaders will endeavour to conclude the Memorandum of Agreement within a year.

18. The Myanmar side conveyed their gratitude for India’s line of credit of US$ 64 million in the transmission lines sector to be executed through M/s PGCIL. Both leaders also noted the need to provide for inter-grid connectivity between the two countries. They agreed that the two countries shall cooperate in this area, including generation of electricity from renewable sources, and, where necessary, set up joint projects or corporate entities for that purpose.

19. The Myanmar side welcomed the interest of Indian companies in the mining sector. They promised all necessary assistance to enable these companies to explore such opportunities.

20. The Indian side agreed to explore possibilities for cooperation in the field of solar energy and wind energy in Myanmar. They also agreed to offer Myanmar, training in related fields.

21. Cooperation in the energy sector is poised for greater growth, especially in the area of oil and natural gas. Both leaders emphasized the importance they attach to energy security which has a direct bearing on the welfare of the peoples of the two countries. They expressed satisfaction at the ongoing bilateral collaboration in exploration and production in Myanmar’s petroleum sector and agreed to encourage further investment by Indian companies both public and private, in this sector.
22. The Myanmar side welcomed the substantial additional investment by ONGC and GAIL for the development in the upstream and downstream projects of Myanmar offshore blocks A-1 and A-3 including the natural gas pipeline under construction at Ramree in Myanmar.

23. In the field of telecom, following the successful functioning of the official Fibre link between India and Myanmar via Moreh, the two leaders agreed to upgrade the microwave link between Moreh to Mandalay under a line of credit of US$ 6 million from India. Further, a new Optical Fibre Link between Monywa to Rhi-Zawkhathar will also be undertaken with Indian assistance.

24. The Myanmar side thanked India for its continued assistance through renewal of the agreement to provide IRS-P5 and Cartosat Data through Antrix.

25. The two leaders agreed to encourage collaboration between Myanmar and India in the area of Information and Communication Technology.

26. Recalling India’s earlier assistance in supplying railway rolling stock, machineries and equipments to Myanmar, both leaders agreed to further cooperation in the railway sector. The Indian side extended a line of credit of US$ 60 million to procure railway equipment.

27. The two leaders noted with satisfaction that the project being undertaken by TATA Motors to set up a heavy turbo truck plant at Magway is proceeding well and encouraged other Indian companies to enter into the industrial sectors in Myanmar. The Myanmar side assured that current investment proposals by private Indian companies in Myanmar would be actively facilitated.

28. The two leaders welcomed the expansion of trade and commerce between the two countries manifest in the increase in the volume of trade to more than US$ 1 billion per annum. They agreed that trade at border trade points should be further enhanced to boost the immense potential that exists in bilateral trade. This would also directly benefit the North-East States of India.
29. Referring to the existing border trading points at Moreh - Tamu (Manipur) and Zawkathar-Rhi (Mizoram) as well as the additional point agreed to be operationalised at Avankhug-Somra (Nagaland), the two sides agreed to put in place the necessary infrastructure to make these points viable and business friendly.

30. The two leaders welcomed the establishment of direct banking links between India and Myanmar following the signature of the correspondent banking relationship agreement between United Bank of India and Myanma Foreign Trade Bank, Myanma Economic Bank and Myanma Investment and Commercial Bank for providing banking arrangements relating to upgrading of border trade to normal trade. They encouraged the business community to make optimal use of this arrangement and thus enhance direct trade transactions.

31. The two leaders encouraged to conduct business meetings to be held alternately in both countries for trade promotion. They noted that such measures can help build bridges at the business level and promote business and commercial opportunities.

32. In recognition of the close and friendly tourism cooperation between India and Myanmar and cooperation under the frameworks of ASEAN+India and BIMSTEC, the two sides agreed to further promote tourist contacts. The Myanmar side thanked India for the facilities and courtesies being extended to Myanmar pilgrims visiting India.

33. Both leaders welcomed the proposal for the restoration of the historic Ananda temple in Bagan to be undertaken with the assistance of the Archaeological Survey of India, with the involvement of the Ministry of Culture of Myanmar.

34. Both leaders expressed satisfaction at the ongoing implementation of the MoU for cooperation in Buddhist studies and the related work plan agreed to between the Ministry of Religious Affairs of Myanmar and the Nava Nalanda Mahavihara University. Several hundred Myanmar Buddhist scholars and monks are currently studying in this university in various disciplines.

35. The Myanmar side expressed gratitude to India for its numerous HRD initiatives in Myanmar which included setting up of the following:
the Myanmar-India Centre for English language Training;
the Myanmar-India Entrepreneurship Development Centre; the India-Myanmar Centre for Enhancement of IT Skills; and the Industrial Training Centre in Pakokku.

36. The Myanmar side also indicated that the training offered by India under the ITEC and TCS schemes have been valuable for scholars and Government officials in Myanmar. The Indian side agreed to offer more opportunities for higher studies and training in Universities and training institutions in India to scholars from Myanmar.

37. The Myanmar side informed the Indian side about developments in Myanmar including the groundwork for elections scheduled towards the end of the year. The Indian side thanked the Myanmar side for the detailed briefing and emphasized the importance of comprehensively broad-basing the national reconciliation process and democratic changes being introduced in Myanmar.

38. While discussing international developments, the two sides emphasized the importance of an effective multilateral system, centred on a strong United Nations, as a key factor in tackling global challenges. In this context, they stressed the urgent need to pursue the reform of the United Nations including the Security Council, to make it more representative, credible and effective.

39. The leader of Myanmar reiterated Myanmar’s support for India’s bid for the permanent membership of the United Nations Security Council. He also conveyed its support to India’s candidature for a non-permanent seat in the UNSC for the term 2011-2012.

40. The two leaders also emphasized the importance of India and Myanmar to work together in the cause of regional cooperation. The Indian leadership offered its good wishes to Myanmar for a successful term as BIMSTEC Chair, a responsibility that it assumed in 2009. The Indian side welcomed participation of Myanmar at the 16th SAARC Summit as an Observer for the first time.
41. The two sides expressed satisfaction at the ongoing cooperation between India and Myanmar under the ASEAN-India Summit Relations and welcomed the implementation of the ASEAN-India FTA. The Myanmar side appreciated India's support for building an ASEAN Community in 2015, and to the Vientiane Action Programme including the Initiative for ASEAN Integration and other sub-regional growth initiatives such as Mekong-Ganga Cooperation Initiative and EAS cooperation. Myanmar side recognized that ASEAN-India Framework Agreement on Comprehensive Economic Cooperation which was signed in 2003 has played a significant role in strengthening the Dialogue Partnership. Myanmar being a natural bridge between ASEAN and India, the Indian side reiterated its intention of building upon the commonalities and synergies between the two countries to advance its Look East Policy.

42. In the above context, both leaders reiterated their commitment to undertake the tri-lateral connectivity from Moreh in India to Moe Sot in Thailand via Myanmar. The Indian side agreed to take up the preparation of DPRs for roads and causeways in Myanmar to realize this project.

43. During the visit, the following documents were signed;
   a. Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters
   b. MOU regarding Indian Grant Assistance for Implementation of Small Developmental projects.
   c. MoU on Information Cooperation
   d. Agreement on Cooperation in the fields of Science & Technology
   e. MoU on Conservation and Restoration of Ananda Temple in Bagan, Myanmar

44. Senior General Than Shwe thanked the President of India and the Indian Government and people for the warm and gracious hospitality extended to him and the members of his delegation during their stay in India.

45. Senior General Than Shwe also extended a warm invitation to the President and Prime Minister of India to visit Myanmar at a mutually convenient time. The President and Prime Minister of India thanked him and accepted the invitation with great pleasure. The dates for the visit would be decided by mutual consultations through diplomatic channels.

Your Excellency Senior General Than Shwe, Chairman of the State Peace and Development Council, Madame Kyaing Kyaing,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is a great pleasure to welcome Your Excellency Senior General Than Shwe, Madam Kyaing Kyaing, and your distinguished delegation to India. We feel greatly privileged to have you amongst us today.

As close neighbours, our two countries share deep civilisational bonds of friendship and goodwill reinforced by history, geography and culture. The common heritage of Buddhism, the shared experience of colonialism, the struggle for independence and the more recent strides in bilateral cooperation in a variety of areas have drawn our peoples together. Ours is a unique relationship which has stood the test of time.

Excellency, your 2004 landmark visit to India ushered in an era of renewed engagement between our two countries. It signalled the common desire of the two countries, sharing a border of more than 1640 kilometres, to forge mutually beneficial cooperation, in particular in the North East region of India.

Much has happened in the more than five years since Your Excellency’s visit. We have witnessed significant high-level exchanges. The Presidential visit from India to Myanmar in 2006 was followed by the visit of Vice Senior General Maung Aye in 2008 and the visit of the Vice-President of India to Myanmar in 2009. Our engagement has been productive. It has served to strengthen mutual understanding of our respective priorities, especially on the security front, and we have agreed on steps needed to better utilize our geographical proximity and resources. Our relations, indeed, have truly become multi-faceted.

Excellency, over the years, India stands transformed as one of the leading economies of the world. Our rapid development has created exciting opportunities not only for our citizens, but also for co-operation and collaboration with neighbours like Myanmar. Our two countries are already collaborating on a range of developmental projects including the Kaladan Multi-modal Transport Project, various border road projects, the Tamanthi and Shwezaye hydropower projects, the heavy truck assembly plant in Magway, transmission lines project, to cite only a few. Our bilateral cooperation has been further enhanced in the fields of energy, power, agriculture, IT, railways, embracing both the public and private sectors.

Our co-operation in the human resource development in Myanmar is intense. The Myanmar-India Centre for English Language Training, the Myanmar-India Entrepreneurship Development Centre and the India-Myanmar Centre for Enhancement of IT Skills have been established. These will, in time, become centres of excellence and enable the people of Myanmar to share in, and benefit from, India’s developmental experience.

Myanmar’s location makes it a natural bridge between the member countries of the ASEAN on the one hand and SAARC on the other. For us, Myanmar is our gateway to ASEAN and central to our ‘Look East’ policy. Myanmar is an active fellow member of BIMSTEC and an Observer in SAARC. Together, India and Myanmar can make important contributions to regional co-operation initiatives and help bring the countries of this region closer.

Excellency, you began your visit to India on the auspicious day of the Full Moon of Waso, by paying a visit to the holiest of Buddhist sites, Bodhgaya. It is, therefore, no surprise that our countries have agreed during your visit to take up the conservation of the most revered Buddhist temple in the historical city of Bagan - the Ananda Temple. This is an auspicious development.

Our discussions in Delhi have been fruitful and we have signed agreements and announced several new initiatives. I am confident that, just like your previous visit, this visit will prove to be a milestone in our ever expanding ties and bring our countries even closer.
Excellencies, Distinguished Guests, please join me in a toast to:-

— the good health and happiness of His Excellency Senior General Than Shwe and Madame Kyaing Kyaing;

— the ever growing friendship and co-operation between India and Myanmar; and — the progress and prosperity of the people of Myanmar.

New Delhi, November 13, 2010

I understand that the Government of Myanmar has just released Madam Aung San Suu Kyi. The Government of India welcomes her release. We hope that this will be the beginning of the process of reconciliation in Myanmar. The recent elections in Myanmar are an important step in the direction of the national reconciliation process being undertaken by the Government of Myanmar. We have always encouraged them to take this process forward in a broad-based and inclusive manner. In this context, as a close neighbour of Myanmar, we are confident that the release of Madam Aung San Suu Kyi will contribute to efforts for a more inclusive approach to political change.

Apart from official welcome from the External Affairs Minister, the ruling party the Indian National Congress too welcomed the release of Aung San Suu Kyi. In a statement party general secretary Janardan Dwivedi said the Congress recognised her fight for democratic rights and acknowledged her as a symbol of resistance, freedom and human rights. The party fondly remembers her stay in India along with her mother in her formative years, and also her father General Aung San’s immense contribution to building the new Myanmar, the statement said.
NEW ZEALAND

363. Press Release on the constitution of an ICCR Chair at Victoria University at Wellington, New Zealand.

New Delhi, September 23, 2010.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand have signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) for establishment of Council’s Short-Term Chair in India’s International Relations and/or Indian Politics at the University. High Commissioner of India in New Zealand, Admiral (Retd.) Sureesh Mehta, and Vice Chancellor of the University Prof. Pat Walsh signed the MoU on September 23rd, 2010 in Wellington.

Under the terms of agreement, ICCR and the University, shall appoint a suitable Indian academician in mutual consultation to hold the Chair for a period of one semester in each academic year. During the period, the Visiting Professor would contribute to the academic life of the University by engaging in teaching, research and mentoring. The Chair would commence from the academic year 2011 and the MoU would remain valid for four years till 2014.

The establishment of this Chair is expected to be an important step in furthering ICCR’s larger mandate of fostering and strengthening academic and cultural bonds and towards enhancing knowledge and awareness about India, through exchange of academicians.

PHILIPPINES

364. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of Minister of State Smt. Preneet Kaur to the Philippines.

New Delhi, March 19, 2010.

MOS for External Affairs, Smt. Preneet Kaur, visited Manila, the Philippines, as the leader of the Indian delegation to the Special NAM Ministerial Meeting (SNAMMM) on Interfaith Dialogue for Cooperation in Peace and Development held in Manila from 16-18 March 2010.

More than 70 Ministers of Foreign Affairs participated in the SNAMMM, which was the first Ministerial level meeting in the theme of Interfaith Dialogue, a subject under discussion in international fora for a few years now. The meeting was inaugurated by the President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo of the Philippines, and culminated with the adoption of the Manila Declaration and Programme of Action on Interfaith Dialogue.

In her address to the meeting MOS Smt. Preneet Kaur highlighted the dangers of extremism and terrorism which were the antithesis of all religions; MOS also drew attention to India's tradition of give and take between faiths and cultures, and the interfaith conversation over millennia of its history, which had enriched and strengthened India.

MOS for External Affairs also had useful bilateral interactions with the Foreign Ministers of Morocco, El Salvador and Serbia, on the margins of the Manila SNAMMM.

MOS for External Affairs had detailed interactions with representatives of the Indian community (estimated to number around 50,000) over the consular and other issues faced by the community. The Indian Ambassador in Manila hosted a reception in honour of the visiting Minister of State, where Smt. Preneet Kaur met with a number of local dignitaries, and prominent members of the Indian community.

SINGAPORE

365. Press Release issued by the High Commission of India in Singapore on the signing of Memorandum of Understanding between ICCR and National University of Singapore for establishment of Council's Short-Term Chair of Indian Studies.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and National University Singapore signed on March 22nd, 2010 a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) for establishment of Council's Short-Term Chair of Indian Studies at the National University of Singapore. The Chair will function under the aegis of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences (FASS). Shri Tsewang Namgyal, Dy. High Commissioner of India in Singapore on behalf of ICCR and Dr. Brenda S.A. Yeoh, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences on behalf of the National University of Singapore, signed the MoU.

Under the terms of agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the University, shall appoint a suitable Indian academician to hold the Chair for a period of one year. During his/her term, the Visiting Professor would contribute to the academic life of the University by engaging in teaching, research and mentoring at various levels. The Chair would commence from July, 2010. The MoU would remain valid for three years from 2010.

The National University of Singapore is one of the prestigious Universities with over 30,000 students of 100 countries from diverse social and cultural backgrounds, which make it an appropriate place to institute an India Chair. The establishment of Chair of Indian Studies would be an important step in furthering ICCR’s larger mandate of fostering and strengthening educational and cultural bonds and towards enhancing academic knowledge and awareness about India, through exchange of academicians.
Prof. Wang Gungwu, Ambassador Kesavapany, Dr. Chin Kin Wah, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be present here and am grateful for this invitation to visit the Nalanda Sriwijaya Centre at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore. I have some knowledge about the activities of the centre as also of the Institute and would like to commend the faculties of both for the outstanding academic and scholarly work being done as also the conferences which have been organised. I have also been informed about your research publication on Chola Expeditions to Southeast Asia. This was a landmark achievement and I warmly congratulate all those concerned for this initiative. I would like to give a brief background on the current status of the initiative on the setting up the Nalanda University in Gaya.

The Nalanda University was a great ancient and medieval centre of intellectual activity in Buddhist philosophy, mathematics, medicine and other disciplines. As you are aware, the East Asian Summit endorsed the establishment of the Nalanda University in the State of Bihar in India. This has been the product of many months of hard work put in by the Nalanda Mentor Group, and will be a shining example of cooperative action in the field of education. The land for the University is already acquired and the Nalanda University Bill is being processed for Parliamentary approval during the current session. I am confident of steady progress.

In conclusion I would like to convey that we will be very happy to work with the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies and the Nalanda Sriwijaya Centre in its forthcoming academic and scholarly pursuits. I understand that certain initiatives are already in place. I would like more such activities including conferences, study tours, lectures by eminent intellectuals and publication of research monographs. India has a civilizational relationship with Southeast and East Asia. Cementing these ties in the academic and intellectual fields is an area of fruitful cooperation between India and Singapore and I am sure that many initiatives and activities shall come to fruition in the near future.

Thank You
Minister of External Affairs Shri S.M. Krishna paid an official visit to Singapore from 24-26 March 2010, as part of the high-level bilateral interactions between the two countries.

2. During the visit, the Minister of External Affairs called on Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong, Minister Mentor Lee Kuan Yew, Senior Minister and Coordinating Minister for National Security Professor S. Jayakumar, Deputy Prime Minister & Defence Minister Teo Chee Hean and held talks with the Singapore Foreign Minister Mr. George Yeo. He also visited Nalanda-Sriwijaya Centre at the Institute of South East Asian Studies, National University of Singapore.

3. In his meetings with Singapore leaders, the Minister of External Affairs discussed bilateral relations and exchanged views on developments in the region. Minister for External Affairs also met the Indian community at a reception organised by the High Commissioner.
THAILAND

New Delhi, April 12, 2010.

We are following developments taking place in Thailand and are in constant contact with our Mission in Bangkok. While these developments are related to internal political issues, we regret the loss of lives and convey our sympathies to the families of the deceased. We hope that all will exercise restraint to prevent any further loss of lives and political differences will be tackled peacefully through negotiations. We express our solidarity with people of Thailand during this difficult phase.

The spokesman was referring to massive pro-democracy, anti-government demonstrations in Bangkok which paralyzed the normal life in the country.
VIETNAM

369. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the consultations between Defence Minister A. K. Antony and Vietnamese Defence authorities on enhancing defence cooperation between the two countries.

New Delhi, October 13, 2010.

A day after the successful conclusion of the First ASEAN Plus Eight Defence Ministers’ Meeting in Hanoi, in which India played a constructive role in defining the scope and objectives of the Forum, the Defence Minister Mr AK Antony today announced a slew of measures to expand defence cooperation with Vietnam. The measures were elaborated by Mr Antony at the bilateral meetings with the top Vietnamese leadership including the Defence Minister Gen Phung Quang Thanh and the Prime Minister Mr Nguyen Tan Dung.

Mr Antony said New Delhi will provide support to Vietnam to enhance and upgrade the capabilities of Services in general and Navy in particular. He said India will help Vietnam in its capacity building for repair and maintenance of its platforms. The Armies of the two countries will also cooperate in areas like IT and English Training of Vietnamese Army personnel. Both the armies will also have a joint training in mountain and jungle warfare in India next year. The two sides will work towards developing cooperation among defence institutes and establishing linkages for sharing experience and knowledge. Mr Antony also offered assistance to Vietnamese Forces in UN Peacekeeping operations, in which India has vast experience.

The two sides also discussed global and regional security issues. Mr Antony said Vietnam occupies a strategic position in New Delhi’s policy priorities, both bilaterally as well as under its ‘Look East Policy’.

Gen Thanh thanked India for its valuable contribution to make the ASEAN Defence Ministers’ Meeting a great success. He said India occupies a special position in Hanoi’s foreign policy framework and noted ‘we are indeed moved by your support’. He welcomed more port calls by the Indian Navy to Vietnam and offered maintenance and repair facilities at Vietnamese ports.

Mr Antony also extended an invitation to his Vietnamese counterpart to visit India next year.

(iii) WEST AND CENTRAL ASIA
370. Joint Communiqué issued by the Ministers of the IBSA countries on the Situation in the Middle East.

Brasilia, April 15, 2010.

Please see Document No.88.

371. Address of Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the inauguration of the Conference organised by the Indian Council of World Affairs: "India and GCC Countries, Iraq and Iran: Emerging Security Perspectives".

New Delhi, November 20, 2010.

I thank the Indian Council of World Affairs for inviting me today to inaugurate this seminar on a subject of considerable relevance. The presence of a good number of scholars from many lands testifies to it.

I note that the organisers have riveted attention on the terra firma rather than on a body of water about whose nomenclature dictionaries are sought to be re-written. This is perhaps a good example of the art of evading choices and managing contradictions!

Our focus today is on eight countries that constitute a sub-set of the West Asian region. Their location and contiguities are relevant. Six of them (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates) are members of a regional grouping - the Gulf Cooperation Council while the other two - Iran and Iraq - are physically in the sub-region and share commonalities with all others as also with some countries beyond the region.

Given the geography, security perceptions are unavoidably interlinked and turbulence within or around the area usually has a wider impact.

Some in this audience would recall the title of Ibn Khaldun’s great work on history. It is Kitab al-Ibar (Book of Lessons). It would be no exaggeration to say that in relation to our subject of discussion, lessons of history are of relevance. One of these, pertaining to the concept of dominance and exclusivity, is particularly note worthy. It can be dated to the arrival in the region of the Portuguese in 1498. They were followed by the Dutch who in turn were replaced by the British. The British dominance lasted till 1970. In the past four decades, various bilateral and multilateral, regional and extra-regional, combinations for security have been explored. Like the earlier versions, selectivity and exclusion rather than inclusion have been their dominant trait.

These perceptions have focused on military security aimed at ensuring the safety of the trade routes by sea; they remain a principal impulse for the littoral states as also for their trading partners the world over. An un-stated major premise is maintenance of political stability and, by implication, regime security. In a wider context, however, this view of security is limited and inadequate. A more holistic approach was articulated by the UN Secretary General Kofi Annan in 2001. 'We must,' he said, 'broaden our view of what is meant by peace and security. Peace means much more than the absence of war. Human security can no longer be understood in purely military terms. Rather, it must encompass economic development, social justice, environmental protection, democratization, disarmament, and respect for human rights and the rule of law.'

In such a comprehensive framework, deficit on any of these counts would signal an element of insecurity. A holistic approach of this nature, essential for a fuller understanding of security and insecurity, is perhaps beyond the scope of this conference focused as it seems to be on a more traditional paradigm.

Ladies and Gentlemen

It is evident that given the geo-political imperatives of these eight littoral states of the Persian Gulf, security perspectives and threat perceptions do not converge. Nevertheless, and in relation to this international waterway, some common elements can be discerned. In the first place, the concerned states want to prosper and avail of the benefits of development. Secondly, the Gulf lands are essential for the economic health of the world since they are a principal source of hydrocarbon energy as well as a major market for industrial goods, technology and services. For these reasons, to use Curzon's phrase used in another context in 1903, 'the peace of these waters must be maintained'.
Interestingly enough Gulf security, in the words of a Saudi scholar, 'was an external issue long before it was one among the Gulf states themselves'.

The essential ingredients of such a requirement would be (a) prevalence of conditions of peace and stability in the individual littoral states (b) freedom of access to, and outlet from, Persian Gulf through the Strait of Hormuz (c) freedom of commercial shipping in international waters in the waterway (d) freedom to all states of the Gulf littoral to exploit their hydrocarbon and other natural resources and export them (e) avoidance of conflict that may impinge on the production of oil and gas and on the freedom of trade and shipping and (f) assurance that regional or extra-regional conditions do not impinge on any of these considerations.

In December last year a senior dignitary in the region described the objectives of Gulf diplomacy as 'mutual understanding, coexistence, good relations with our neighbours and the establishment of strong relations based on the principles of reciprocal advantage and the realisation of the good of all.' These principles by themselves are unexceptionable and widely subscribed to. The devil is in the un-stated major premise, and in threat perceptions that do not converge sufficiently.

The challenge, then, lies in seeking this convergence in areas of security, politics and economics and in developing procedures that would help bring it about. Experience shows that convergence is achieved only through a painstaking process of developing a (minimum) common threat perception, in maintaining it over time and in developing the mechanism for minimising risks to common security and maximising the benefits of cooperation. Such a process requires agreement on dialogue procedures.

Record shows that the resources of the region were initially controlled by extra-regional private commercial entities that had played a pioneering role in the discovery and development of these resources. They were strongly supported by their governments. The process of establishing national control over these resources was at times torturous and painful. Eventually, however, the mindset of an earlier era gave way to the common sense approach of inter-dependence of the producer and the consumer. Access to resources thus became more relevant than physical control.

I mention this because some residual perceptions of the earlier period do at times cloud the market vision even now and need to be dispelled.

II

Friends

In this backdrop, I propose to explore answers to three questions: How does the prevailing situation affect India and Indian interests? What should India do to sustain and secure its interests? What could, and should, be the Indian contribution to the promotion of peace and security in the sub-region?

The strategic relevance of the sub-region to India has to be located geographically, historically and in economic terms. The distance from Mumbai to Basra is 1526 nautical miles while Bander Abbas and Dubai are in a radius of 1000 nautical miles. Contact through trade and movement of people has roots deep in history, testified to by archaeological finds and written record. Fascination with India is reflected in Kitab Ajaib al-Hind by Buzurg ibn Shahriyar of Ramhormuz, a tenth century collection of sailor’s tales. Many proverbs pertaining to India are to be found in the colloquial language of the lower Gulf. Familiarity with India and Indians at individual and family levels, Mumbai-Hindustani, Mumbai-Biryani and Bollywood films contribute to it in good measure particularly in the GCC countries.

Given this proximity, it is hardly surprising that in the period after 1975 there has been a significant spurt in economic linkages between the region and India. Changed and changing requirements and capabilities have contributed to it and will continue to do so in the foreseeable future. It is significant that given the affinities of the past and the experience of recent decades, the public and political establishments in the littoral states are India-friendly and Indian friendly.
The quantitative parameters of this relationship can be specified:

- We import over 63 per cent percent of our crude oil requirement from these eight countries of the Persian Gulf. Its worth in money terms, in 2009-10, stood at over $ 49 billion. Given the rate of growth of the Indian economy, these figures can only go up in the future.

- These eight countries account for over 22 per cent of our total trade as of 2009-10 amounting to around $ 105 billion. They account for a quarter of our imports totalling $ 72 billion and 18 per cent of exports totalling around $ 33 billion. Six of these eight countries, barring Oman and Bahrain, figure among the top 25 countries in terms of total trade.

- UAE is our top trading partner with a total trade of $ 43.5 billion, ahead of China at $ 42.4 billion and the US at 36.5 billion. It is our largest export destination accounting for 13 per cent of our exports amounting to $ 24 billion and the second largest source of our imports after China, totalling $ 19.5 billion.

- Saudi Arabia is our fourth largest trading partner with a trade of $ 21 billion, and Iran our ninth largest trading partner at $ 13.4 billion.

- An Indian non-immigrant workforce of around 6 million works in these countries, principally in the GCC states. Of these, 1.6 million are in Saudi Arabia and 1.2 million in the UAE. The composition of this workforce has changed over the years and many more professionals and specialised technical skills are to be found amongst them today. The remittances of this workforce, through banking channels, stands at around $ 30 billion per annum. They help support six million families and contribute in some measure to economic activity in some of the states of the Indian Union.

- The two-way investment profile, modest at present, is expected to grow with the growth of the Indian economy. The GCC countries have become an important destination for Indian projects and IT services.
The sub-region is also within the security parameter of India and within the operational radius of the Indian Navy. The latter’s participation in the anti-piracy operations in the Arabian Sea is a case in point. If needed, it can escort shipping and interdict forces hostile to it.

The focus of Indian interest therefore is, and would remain, on the desirability of having (a) friendly governments (b) regional peace and stability (c) access to oil and gas resources of the region (d) freedom of navigation in the Persian Gulf and through the Straits of Hormuz (e) continued market access for Indian trade, technology, investments and workforce and (f) security and welfare of the Indian workforce, particularly in times of distress emanating from disturbed local or regional conditions.

A state of preparedness for responding to other contingencies should also be catered for, in consonance with the developing dimensions of maritime security.

It would therefore be fair to opine that India is reasonably comfortable with the status quo. However, the apprehension of an unstable status quo also looms over the horizon. Misgivings about intentions motivate it; divergence of perceptions and policy about extra-regional politico-military presence adds to it; so does what had been called “an undeclared arms race.” One may add to this disruptive challenges emanating from non-state actors and new technologies. The requirement clearly is to seek understandings and arrangements that would cater to the threat perceptions and essential interests of all regional and extra-regional stake holders and thus stabilise the regional situation on a longer term basis.

III

Ladies and Gentlemen

Despite the successes of the GCC, attempts to foster a comprehensive Gulf regional cooperation have a history of over three decades and are replete with failed strategies of local or global hegemony. There is therefore an imperative need for developing a security order that is seen as equitable by all the states concerned.
There are ideas and precedents elsewhere that can be drawn upon beneficially. Asian regionalism and community-building has remained, albeit unevenly, an important framework for cooperation and framework within the continent. We thus have strong regional organisations focused on constituent sub-regions such as ASEAN, GCC, SAARC, SCO, BIMSTEC and the MGÇ. The Asian Development Bank, in the context of East Asia, has characterised the challenges of regional cooperation as including "providing regional public goods, managing spillovers among economies, exercising Asia’s influence in global economic forums, liberalising trade and investment, and helping to improve national policies in which the region has a vital stake”.

It is evident, that these challenges exist in the Gulf region too, and that a Gulf regionalism that is outward looking, flexible and dynamic, consistent with regional diversity would contribute to regional and global welfare, peace and security. This would also enable these nations to take advantage of the opportunities emerging from enhanced economic integration, as also to face the common threats of terrorism, proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, securing energy exports, security of sea lanes, tackling pandemics, natural disasters and others.

What could or should be the guiding principles of a Gulf regionalism that is in the interest of all regional and extra-regional stakeholders? A few of its essential ingredients can be mentioned:

It should not, in the first place, be exclusive or exclusionary. It should instead articulate an inclusive, open and transparent process of community building.

Secondly, it should not be a reflection of the emerging redistribution of global or regional power nor should it be a platform for projection of narrow economic and political interests of a nation, an alliance or a group of nations.

Thirdly, soft regionalism based on informal dialogue and consultation mechanisms, consensus building and open structures would help in establishing cooperative and beneficial norms of state behaviour. And Finally, it must not be seen as means to limit state sovereignty but as instrumentalities to address complex regional problems through cooperation and partnership.

Like in East Asia, Gulf regional cooperation and community building should include important stake-holders like India, China and Japan as also all other principal beneficiaries of energy supplies and open sealanes. A Persian Gulf littoral that is integrated through a web of regional cooperative structures will offer more opportunities for socio-economic advancement of its peoples and lay the foundation for eroding political rivalries and harsh nationalist impulses and for bringing about regional stability and peace.

For us in India, a "Look-West" policy towards this part of West Asia, aimed at engaging in this dynamic, would thus be as relevant for safeguarding and promoting India's interests as its Look-East policy that has been in place for some years.

I am confident that this conference would shed useful light on these perceptions and contribute to the effort. I wish it all success.

I thank Ambassador Devare for inviting me to inaugurate this Conference.

372. Valedictory Address by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at the Indian Council of World Affairs Seminar: 'India and the GCC, Iran and Iraq: Security Perspectives'.

New Delhi, November 21, 2010.

Ambassador Sudhir T. Devare, Director General, Indian Council for World Affairs,
Dr. Reena Marwah, Secretary General, Association of Asian Scholars,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be joining you today for the ICWA-AAS Asian Relations Conference 2010. It is an honour to be addressing such a distinguished gathering of eminent scholars, diplomats and experts on the issue of India and GCC Countries, Iran and Iraq: Emerging Security Perspectives.
I wish to congratulate ICWA and AAS for the very important initiative in organizing the Asian Relations Conferences in 2009 and this year. With the economic, political, strategic and cultural focus in world affairs increasingly shifting towards the Asian Continent, it is entirely appropriate and timely that ICWA has sought to revive the buoyant and exhilarating spirit of the Asian Relations Conference held in March 1947 by ICWA itself, on the eve of India’s independence, when India and the Asian Continent as a whole expressed a shared sense of the possibility and the potential of mutual cooperation for benefit of our peoples.

My address today is based on the following premises:

One, that India shares with the countries of the GCC, Iran and Iraq the closest of civilizational, cultural and historical links;

Two, that these links have not been passive but active and alive throughout history and this dynamism energises the relationship even today;

Three, that we share an ocean that has been the pulsating heart of the world, economically and strategically, for over two millennia;

Four, that the dramatic economic growth in India and China and other countries of Asia promise to make this an Asian century;

Five, that the countries of the GCC, Iran and Iraq will be fully a part of the Asian renaissance, given the growing demand from the rest of Asia for energy resources and investible finances, and in light of the increasing diversification and sophistication of West Asian economies as they seek to become financial and knowledge hubs not just of Asia but of the whole world;

Six, that as with Europe in the last century, intra-Asian interdependence will dramatically increase, and the costs of any forced disruption of these linkages will become higher.

Seven, as pressure on our resources increase, and even as science and technology progresses to overcome the challenges posed, India and the countries in its extended neighbourhood will increasingly have to forge common solutions to problems such as those of energy and food security, water scarcity, climate change and instances of drought and flood, and rapid reactions to natural disasters.

Based on these premises, the following conclusions can be drawn: that our countries have a shared interest in the security of the sea lanes that link West Asia to the rest of the Continent; that stability in the countries of the region as well as of those abutting them - Afghanistan, Pakistan and Central Asia have a direct impact on GCC countries, Iran, Iraq and India, and must be an area of cooperation and consultation; that India is a natural partner for the GCC, Iran and Iraq given our rapid economic growth, and limitless opportunities as an investment destination, especially in the infrastructure sector; that our people-to-people exchanges are a largely untapped source of dynamism and strength for our partnership; that India's growing political, military, economic and cultural influence is welcomed in the West Asian region given that India plays a stabilizing role; and lastly, that our partnership would be of mutual benefit, both economically, and in the related realm of cooperation in security-related issues.

India's ties with the countries of the GCC, Iran and Iraq have their origins in history and mythology. There were rich commercial links between the two sides as far back as the Harappan Civilization, and an unending stream of traders and philosophers, scholars and warriors, religious figures and pilgrims have strengthened the ties over the millennia, with scientific, cultural, religious and commercial exchanges that have influenced the lives of ordinary people on both sides. In our art and culture, our language and literature and cuisine, the impact of this interaction can be clearly seen even today. India was known as a source of products of daily life as well as luxuries; in fact the skilled Persian and Arab navigators and boatmakers who traveled to the Indian coast are said to have sourced wood for their boats from the Indian subcontinent. Indian ships carried pilgrims to Jeddah for the Haj pilgrimage. And as I said before, this is a living and dynamic interaction, underlined most starkly by the presence of over 5.5 million Indians in the region. Indians form the largest group of expatriates in each of the GCC countries and have contributed to the remarkable economic transformation of these countries in the last half century. Their remittances to India are also significant. Given our mutual cultural comfort levels and history of interaction, I am confident that the linkages forged at the people-to-people level will further invigorate the vision we have for further enhancing our relationship.

Our economic ties provide a firm foundation for the future. In 2009-10, two way trade with just one GCC country - the UAE - was greater than our trade with China. Our trade with GCC as a whole was almost US$100 billion last year. Add our trade with Iran and Iraq, which was over US$13 billion and US$ 7.5 bn respectively in 2009-10, and the strength of the economic relationship is clear. What is even more exciting is what the future promises. The GCC countries, Iran and Iraq already dominate India’s imports of crude oil. As India’s economy continues its growth of 8-10%, energy imports will inevitably increase, and geography, economics and history dictate that West Asia will remain a preferred partner. India and other Asian countries such as China will also remain major markets for energy exports from West Asia, which is planning to expand its oil production capacity substantially, from an already high base, by 2020. It has been estimated that the oil income of countries of the West Asia region would increase substantially over the next couple of decades; this accumulation of investible surplus provides a perfect match to India’s investment needs, particularly in infrastructure (such as electricity generation, roads, telecom, ports, irrigation). The countries of the region have themselves been looking to diversify their investments for which they increasingly look at Asian countries. The countries of the GCC, Iran and Iraq have emerged as hubs along what has been called a ‘new silk route’ linking the economies of West Asia to the fast-growing economies of East Asia, South Asia and Central Asia. In the new millennia, the mutual ties and interdependence between India and the countries of the GCC, Iran and Iraq will only increase further.

The restoration of stability in Afghanistan and assistance to the people and Government of Afghanistan as they build a peaceful, democratic, pluralistic and prosperous society is in the common interest of all our countries. Recent history has taught us that no country is immune from the acts of terrorist and extremist groups, not even the countries that supported and financed them and continue to provide them safe havens and sanctuaries. India's vision is for Afghanistan to reclaim its traditional role as an economic hub linking West and South Asia with Central Asia, through freer trade, transit, pipelines and movement of people. This is however only possible if the independence and sovereignty of Afghanistan are respected, if the international community shows sustained commitment to defeating the terrorists and extremist groups, and if such groups are denied sanctuary and support beyond Afghanistan's borders.

Other issues where India's cooperation with GCC, Iran and Iraq is essential is countering terrorism, its linkages with narco-trafficking and organized crime, countering money laundering, and dealing with proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the threat of their falling into the hands of terrorists. In our increasingly interconnected and interdependent world, where technology can be used for both good and ill, proactive and dynamic cooperation between the law-enforcement and security related organs is increasingly essential, because the threats posed by terrorist and criminal groups have the potential to undermine all our societies.

Maritime security and free and safe passage of trade, including oil and gas, is of vital concern not just to India and the countries of West Asia, but also to the rest of the world. The problems of piracy in the Indian Ocean has dramatically illustrated potential threats that we all face. India has expressed its readiness to play its part in combatting this menace with the international community under the leadership of the UN. In this, and related issues, India, with its enhanced capacity and ability, can help to play a stabilizing and reassuring role. India's role has been welcomed in the region: apart from India being seen as a neighbouring country, with historical and cultural commonalities, we are also viewed as non-hegemonistic, non-prescriptive and non-intrusive. This will stand us in good stead as we brace ourselves for the security challenges that are emerging this century, both traditional and non-traditional, both direct and those that indirectly flow from issues such as climate change, food insecurity and dealing with natural disasters. India has attempted to promote greater cooperation among Indian Ocean Rim States, which is necessary to take advantage of the opportunities that have opened up for mutually beneficial cooperation. We have sought to encourage economic cooperation in the area through Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC). India has also sought to give greater salience to initiatives such as the Indian Ocean Naval Symposium.

There is perhaps a need for creation of a permanent regional mechanism for dialogue and discussion in which countries of the region and others interested could participate. There are a number of regional initiatives such as the Manama dialogue, or those taken by different think-tanks, including the ICWA. It may however be necessary to consider a more expanded and structured mechanism which could discuss regional issues such as those of peace and stability, weapons proliferation, terrorism, counter-narcotics, etc.

Our most meaningful contribution to regional stability and security may come from enhancing mutually beneficial and high-level interaction. In the realm of economic linkages, creation of regional inter-bank clearance mechanisms, preferential and free trade agreements, regional energy markets and cooperation projects would be mutually beneficial and would enhance confidence. Politically, a greater commitment to dealing together with common problems such as the threat of terrorism and regional stability would send a powerful signal. In addition, countries of the region could give greater importance to enhancing the frequency and level of bilateral interactions, especially in the context of securing sea lanes and to counter piracy.

The issue of Palestine is of abiding concern to all of us. The rights of the Palestinian people remain to be achieved. This situation requires to be resolved at the earliest. Not only does it cause deep harm to the people there, it also has a negative resonance across the region and beyond. India remains convinced that a just and comprehensive solution to the Palestinian question is achievable. We continue to extend our full support to the Palestinian people in realizing their aspirations for a sovereign, independent, viable and united State living side-by-side, and at peace with the State of Israel.
India's stand on the Iran nuclear issue has been consistent. We support the right of all States, including Iran, to peaceful uses of nuclear energy consistent with their international obligations. We also believe that the IAEA provides the best framework to address technical issues relating to Iran's nuclear programme. We continue to support the path of peaceful dialogue and diplomacy to resolve all issues among relevant countries.

While recognizing the growth of India and China, there are some who posit that this will inevitably lead to conflict and competition between the two, including in West Asia, given the increasing demand for energy and other resources. I believe that there is a fundamental flaw in this argument. It is precisely the fact that China and India share similar views on a number of issues of common concern - energy security, food security, climate change and trade liberalization, that avenues open up for cooperation and consultation for the common benefit of all our people.

India looks forward to an enhanced partnership with the countries of the GCC, Iran and Iraq. This is not only a strategic and economic imperative, but would also represent a natural progression from our historical and civilizational ties which have few, if any, parallels in the world.

373. Speech by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at IDSA-IPIS Strategic Dialogue on India and Iran: an enduring relationship.

New Delhi, July, 5, 2010.

Shri N.S. Sisodia,
Ambassador Nabizadeh,
Dr. Mostafa Dolatyar and the distinguished participants from India and Iran in this Strategic Dialogue.

2. Over the years, the IDSA-IPIS Dialogue has become an important forum for in-depth discussion on a wide range of issues concerning the bilateral, regional and global context of our relations with Iran. I am therefore delighted to be here this morning to deliver the keynote address of the IDSA-IPIS Dialogue. Your deliberations today will no doubt, provide important inputs and insights on the India-Iran interaction as also new thoughts and ideas on the future path of this relationship.

3. The question often asked is how we define the importance of Iran for India in strategic terms. I shall attempt to do so. First of all, Iran is part of what has been defined as India’s “proximate neighbourhood”; secondly, it has a strategic position with a long coastline along the Persian Gulf, including the narrow entrance to the Gulf at the Straits of Hormuz - a region within the security parameter of India; thirdly, it is a major source of our energy and hydrocarbon supplies; fourthly, in a globalizing world where there are immense opportunities for Indian business and investment, and as both our societies seek socio-economic transformation, the scope for technical and economic cooperation with Iran is self-evident; fifthly, the threats we face from terrorism and extremism require intensified dialogue and cooperation between our two governments; and to round this off, we share many common interests in the multilateral sphere. The narrative of our relations against the background of our long-standing civilizational ties, is therefore one of fundamental complementarities and natural affinities.
4. It is certainly true that the civilizational relationship between India and Iran is unique in the world. Speaking in Tehran in 1958, India's first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru had said that he doubted if there are any two countries in the wide world which have had such close and long historical contact as Iran and India. It is true that when we look at our monuments, our culture and our language, our cuisine and literature as also our intuitive societal reaction to the world around us, there is much that is in common between our two nations. And, where links between our two peoples are concerned, India and Iran are particularly blessed, because of the close people-to-people connection and constant interaction that has spanned centuries of trade and commerce and cultural exchanges and journeys of the mind. Most importantly, ties at the popular level remain vibrant, driven by not just businessman, students and tourists but also the millions of people in both countries who may have never set foot in the other country, but are conscious of their rich shared heritage, and have an instinctive feeling of goodwill towards the other.

5. This then provides us the bedrock on which to build our contemporary relations. I would argue that the India-Iran relationship will become even more important with the inevitable rise of both India and Iran in this century, which has been dubbed by many as the Asian century. Most scholars foresee a resurgence of the Asian Continent, not just in economic terms, where India’s economy is among the fastest growing in the world, but also in science and technology, in new and renewable energies, and in all the fields that are at the cutting edge of human innovation and progress.

6. The challenge we face is the following: First, how do our two countries grasp the strategic opportunities for cooperation between India and Iran? Second, how do we build a pragmatic, and therefore enduring relationship, rising above hoary ideological positions, ensuring that our multi-faceted ties are not held hostage to merely one or two issues? Thirdly, do we have the tools to leverage such a relationship to benefit our people and their standard of living, which is ultimately the goal of our foreign policy?

7. Let me say that India desires to promote and enhance relations with Iran in a way that serves the interests of our two countries. Our approach to Iran is embedded within the rationale that defines our foreign policy - our developmental priorities, our independent national interest, our commitment to multi-polarity over uni-polarity, our consciousness of the inequities in the global order today. Our relations with Iran are a fundamental component of our "Look West" policy in our immediate region, just as our "Look East" policy has propelled our relations with the countries of ASEAN and East Asia.

8. If we consider the specific areas where our interests converge and potential for cooperation is the greatest, the most important is regional stability. India and Iran shared a common border till 1947. We are both neighbours of Afghanistan and Pakistan and have both long suffered from the threat of transnational terrorism emanating from beyond our borders. India, like Iran, is supportive of the efforts of the Afghan Government and people to build a democratic, pluralistic and peaceful Afghanistan. Neither of our countries wish to see the prospect of fundamentalist and extremist groups once again suppressing the aspirations of the Afghan people and forcing Afghanistan back to being a training ground and sanctuary for terrorist groups. Our vision of Afghanistan as a hub for economic activity, trade and transit linking South and Central Asia is shared by the Iranian side. India and Iran also share an interest in the stability of Central Asia and the Persian Gulf. It is but natural that our assessment of the regional situation is very similar. We need to move beyond mere articulation of positions as the Afghan conundrum deepens and could have a deleterious impact on our two countries and the region in case the forces of extremism and obscurantism are made arbiters of the fate of the Afghan people. Our cooperation and information sharing on counter-terrorism must be the subject of more intensive focus and attention in the future.

9. I had the pleasure of having detailed discussions with my Iranian counterpart, Deputy Foreign Minister Fathollahi, during my visit to Tehran this February for Foreign Office Consultations. I sensed on many of the above issues, a convergence of views with my Iranian colleagues. I would today reiterate the need for structured, systematic and regular consultations with Iran on the situation in Afghanistan. It is also important that we build upon the progress already made on our joint cooperation projects in the region, and put in place mechanisms for carrying forward our cooperation in these areas. I would like to mention, in particular, the Chabahar Port Project, and the need for accelerating our joint efforts to fully realize the potential of the Port as well as the associated railway project. These are projects that are in the common interest of India, Iran and Afghanistan, but also the countries of Central Asia. Improving the connectivity of Chabahar Port to the Zaranj-Delaram Highway (which was built with Indian assistance despite terrorist threats and with the sacrifice of Indian and Afghan lives, and has transformed the economy of Nimroz Province in Afghanistan) will open up the Indian market to Afghan agricultural and other exports. It will also help in combating the scourge of illicit drugs production and export which has affected Iran more than any other country, and assist the trade, transport and transit network of Iran. It will help India transport its goods, including humanitarian supplies, to Afghanistan, Central Asia and beyond.

This project is thus at the heart of the common vision that India and Iran have for Afghanistan and the region as a whole, of increased and easier flow of goods, and creation of a network of transport routes and energy pipelines that will bind our people together in an arc of stability, prosperity and peace. The International North South Corridor Project, which also includes Russia and the Central Asian Republics in addition to India and Iran, is also a concept awaiting operationalization on the ground. We would welcome greater interest on part of the Iranian Government and private sector in realizing these projects, which should be seen not only as commercial but also as strategic in nature, not just for India, but also for all the countries in the region.

10. Iran is a country extremely important to India from the perspective of energy security. There is a natural complementarity between the needs of energy-hungry India which hopes to grow at a rate of 8-10% in the coming years and Iran which is home to third largest proven oil reserves and second largest gas reserves. Iran is not only located relatively close to India permitting transportation of oil and gas at relatively low cost over sea as well as land, it also has the potential of being a transit country for supply of third country energy to India given its increasing links in this field with the landlocked countries of Central Asia. The Iran- Pakistan-India; Turkmenistan-Afghanistan- Pakistan-India and SAGE undersea pipeline projects deserve special mention in this regard. These projects, if realised, have the potential of making Iran an important element of a large energy corridor stretching from Central Asia to India. India has repeatedly made clear the fact that accessing energy resources from all parts of the world is absolutely critical to the continued growth of its economy and Iran has the potential to play an important role in this regard.
11. Economic relationships, including in the energy sector help develop further complementarities and interdependencies, which are, in the modern world, more valuable than any number of political sermons or speeches of goodwill. We must strive to nurture these relationships, with a strategic perspective in mind. Our bilateral Joint Commission, headed by our External Affairs Minister and the Iranian Minister for Economic Affairs and Finance, will be meeting from July 8-9 to discuss a range of bilateral issues which are of direct benefit to our two peoples. The Indian side looks forward to these discussions and the follow up meetings to instill fresh momentum in India-Iran relations, particularly in the strategic areas that I have identified above.

12. Another potential area of cooperation for our countries is in maritime security. Indian interest in the Indian Ocean region and the proximate neighbourhood of which both our countries are a part, focuses on the need for regional peace and stability, mutually beneficial relations with littoral states, accessibility of oil and gas resources, the freedom of navigation through the Persian Gulf and the Straits of Hormuz, and access to regional markets for our goods, technology, investment, labour and services. The Indian Ocean touches both our nations, and we cannot remain immune to the challenges that we face, including an increase in piracy off the coast of Africa, and beyond. We welcome suggestions from the Iranian side on how to carry forward a dialogue on cooperation in this area. We would welcome Iran's participation in the Indian Ocean Naval Symposium.

13. I would like to briefly touch on the Iran nuclear issue. India's position on the issue has been consistent. We support the right of all States to undertake peaceful uses of nuclear energy consistent with their international obligations. We have conveyed to our interlocutors that all concerned should adopt a flexible approach to achieve a comprehensive solution to all issues. India has always supported dialogue and avoidance of confrontation.

14. The IAEA continues to provide the best framework for addressing technical issues related to the Iranian nuclear programme. We are justifiably concerned that the extra-territorial nature of certain unilateral sanctions recently imposed by individual countries, with their restrictions on investment by third countries in Iran's energy sector, can have a direct and adverse impact on Indian companies and more importantly, on our energy security and our attempts to meet the development needs of our people.

15. As in the case of all multi-faceted, constructive relations between old friends, it is natural that we may have differences on one or the other issue, but I would submit that the areas of convergence far outweigh any differences. It is vital that we keep the larger picture of our relations in mind, in particular the strategic potential of our ties. I am confident that in the coming decade, the impulse in both our countries towards similar positions on a whole range of economic, political and strategic issues will remain strong. We are of the region and will belong here forever, even as outsiders come and go. Our region is, moreover, one that is rising, though yet to realize its full potential. It is in this long-term context that we must see India-Iran relations.

16. I look forward to carefully studying and learning from the outcome of your deliberations. I extend to our Iranian guests the warmest good wishes of the people and Government of India and through you to your leadership and your Government. The India-Iran relationship is good for the people of our two countries, for the region and for the world as a whole, and it is our historical responsibility to further enhance these relations.

Thank you.

New Delhi, July 9, 2010.

The 16th Session of the India-Iran Joint Commission was held in New Delhi on July 8-9, 2010.

The Session was co-chaired on the Iranian side by H.E. Dr. Seyed Shamseddin Hosseini, Minister of Economic Affairs and Finance, Islamic Republic of Iran and on the Indian side by External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna. The meeting of the Joint Commission provided an opportunity to review bilateral economic and cultural cooperation. It was agreed that the next Session of the Joint Commission would be held in Tehran.

The following MoUs/Agreements were signed during the Joint Commission Meeting:

1. Air Services Agreement
2. Agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Persons
4. MoU on Cooperation in Small Scale Industry between National Small Industries Corporation (NSIC) and Iranian Small Industries and Industrial Parks Organisation (ISIPO)
5. Programme of Cooperation on Science & Technology
6. MoU on Cooperation between Central Pulp and Paper Research Institute of India (CPPRI) and Gorgan University of Agricultural Science and Natural Resources (GUASNR)

During his visit, Dr. Seyed Shamseddin Hosseini called on Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. He also met Shri Pranab Mukherjee, Minister of Finance and Shri Shivshankar Menon, National Security Advisor, and inaugurated a business seminar organized by FICCI on 'Investment Opportunities in Iran'. The business delegation accompanying Dr. Hosseini also held meetings with ASSOCHAM and CII.
India and Iran have been holding discussions at regular intervals on issues relating to economic cooperation under the aegis of the Joint Commission mechanism, which was established in July 1983. The last session of the Joint Commission was held in Tehran, Iran from October 30-November 2, 2008.

375. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Dr. Mohammad Ali Fathollahi.

New Delhi, August 6, 2010.

At the invitation of Smt. Nirupama Rao, Foreign Secretary, Deputy Foreign Minister of the Islamic Republic of Iran H.E. Dr. Mohammad Ali Fathollahi visited India for Foreign Office Consultations, held on August 6, 2010. The visit was part of the series of regular Foreign Office Consultations between the two countries.

The two sides discussed a wide range of bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of mutual interest, covering, inter alia, bilateral cooperation, the regional situation including Afghanistan, and the menace of cross-border terrorism. During the visit, the Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister called on Hon’ble External Affairs Minister.
376. Media report on the summoning of the Iranian Ambassador to the Ministry of External Affairs to protest Iranian Supreme Leader’s statement on Kashmir.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

India on November 19 summoned the Acting Iranian Ambassador to protest Tehran’s observations on Kashmir even as New Delhi abstained from voting on a U.N. resolution, which alleged human rights violations in Iran, for the first time.

“Our decision on [abstaining from] the vote [on Iran] was made after due deliberation," said a Ministry of External Affairs official.

India issued a demarche to Iran, the third since June, after Iranian Supreme leader Ali Khamenei mentioned Kashmir in his message to Haj pilgrims. On all the three occasions, Iran called on the Muslim community to support the "struggle" in Kashmir and mentioned it with Gaza and Afghanistan.

In the latest instance, Mr. Khamenei said: "the major duties of the elite of the Islamic Ummah is to provide help to the Palestinian nation and the besieged people of Gaza, to sympathise and provide assistance to the nations of Afghanistan, Pakistan, Iraq and Kashmir, to engage in struggle and resistance against the aggressions of the United States and the Zionist regime.

[Informed sources felt India needed to know whether there was any consistency in these statements coming from different wings of the Iranian power structure. Asked if India saw this stand as a setback, they felt the issue should be looked at in a "much larger perspective," especially because there was steady dialogue between both countries at high levels for the past one year and both sides were following up on the MoUs signed by them.]

“We attach high priority to our ties with Iran. We continue to pursue several projects such as development of the Chabar port, a link from there to Bam [a town on the Iranian-Afghan border] and the north-south corridor project. None of them is under the purview of U.N. sanctions which, anyway, are not mandatory for members to observe. We are continuing discussions on them," media quoted an official source to say this.

Officials pointed out that this was not the first time such sentiments were expressed by the Iranian leadership and officials. Two demarches were served on Iran for similar comments by an official and a leader.

"There have been three such instances between June and November. There was this strain of opinion coming forth from Iran. So after due deliberation, the government decided to vote the way it did," they added.

[While 80 countries voted in favour of the resolution, 44 voted against it and 57 countries abstained. As compared to last year, six more countries voted in favour of the resolution. There was no consensus among Organisation of the Islamic Conference (OIC) countries, pointed out the sources.]

KUWAIT

377. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Gas on the visit of a Kuwaiti Oil delegation.

New Delhi, September 28, 2010.

Shri Mulri Deora, Minister of Petroleum & Natural Gas, and his counterpart from Kuwait Mr. Sheikh Ahmad Al-Ahmad Al Sabah emphasized enhancing cooperation between the two countries in a meeting here today. Stating that India would like to further strengthen relationship with Kuwait, Shri Deora said that there are several areas where the two countries can work together in the oil and gas sector. These include long term arrangement of crude oil supply from Kuwait to India and mutual investments in various areas of hydrocarbon sector.

One of the important issues discussed was possible investment of Kuwait in the oil and gas sector particularly in petrochemical complexes and building of crude oil storage hub in India. Indian side invited participation of Kuwait in the E&P opportunities in India with the launch of ninth round of exploration blocks under new exploration licensing policy (NELP-IX) which India is launching soon. The talks also focused on participation of the companies of two companies together in E&P opportunities in third countries. India offered consultancy services of Engineers India Limited, a premier engineering and consultancy firm in the oil and gas sector. The cooperation in providing training facilities and building R&D facilities both in upstream and downstream sector were also deliberated. The two sides further discussed the offer of ONGC-TERI for bioremediation in Kuwait to clean up the soils affected by oil spills.

The bilateral meeting was also attended by Shri Sudhir Bhargava, Addl Secretary and other senior officers of the Ministry of Petroleum & Natural Gas and oil PSUs CEOs from India. Kuwaiti delegation included Mr. Hussain Esmaiel Al Sabah, President, KPI and Mr. Yusuf Al-Qabandi, Deputy MD (International Marketing), Kuwait Petroleum Corporation among other senior officers and executives.

Earlier visiting Minister called on the Vice President Mohammed Hamid Ansari and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. He also met Minister of Information & Broadcasting Mrs. Ambika Soni. The Kuwaiti delegation had detailed discussions with the top executives of Indian Oil and ONGC separately over last two days.
OMAN

378. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (Gulf) on the visit of Foreign Minister of Oman.

New Delhi, October 20, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to all of you. Let me introduce my good friend and colleague Mr. Rajiv Chander who is Joint Secretary (Gulf).

Later today we will welcome the Foreign Minister of Oman, His Excellency Yusuf bin Alawi bin Abdullah, who is coming on an official visit. He would be in India till the 22nd. An experienced diplomat and a senior leader, he has been the Foreign Minister of Oman since 1997.

The Foreign Minister and the External Affairs Minister would be holding delegation-level talks today; and would also be having a joint press interaction at 2000 hours today at Hyderabad House. They will be taking a few questions. All members of the media are cordially invited.

Besides delegation-level talks the visiting Foreign Minister would be calling on the Prime Minister of India tomorrow and would be meeting with Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission.

We have very close, friendly, warm and issue-free relations with the Sultanate of Oman which date back many centuries. Our relationship has been underpinned by very close people-to-people contacts which have only grown over time.

India has always been one of the preferred destinations for Omanis for business, leisure, tourism and education. On the other hand Oman is home to over 550,000 people of Indian origin, some of who have been there for generations. Oman’s population is 3.4 million. Therefore, Indians constitute a sizeable proportion of the population in Oman living and working happily side by side with their Omani brethren. No wonder we have over 125 flights every week between the two countries, and the frequency is likely to be enhanced in due course. I may add that people of Indian origin are held in very high esteem in Oman. They have been contributing diligently and working vigorously in promoting peace, harmony, prosperity and development of Oman and relationship between our two countries.

Oman is one of our strategic partners and the ties are multidimensional. Our strategic dialogue with Oman dates back to 2002, and the seventh round of the Indo-Oman Strategic Consultative Group meeting was held in January 2009.

The ties have been nurtured by regular high-level attention. Prime Minister paid a landmark visit to Muscat in November 2008, which he described as a ‘voyage of discovery’. He was accorded full state honours and received with exceptional warmth. Speaking at Muscat Prime Minister observed that India saw Oman as a "natural partner in progress".

This year we have already seen the visits of our Raksha Mantri and Commerce and Industry Minister to Oman. We have received the Minister of National Economy from Oman who came in July. Now we welcome the Foreign Minister who last paid a visit in December 2008.

During Prime Minister's visit to Oman, inter alia a MOU on establishing an ‘India-Oman Joint Investment Fund’ was concluded. The Fund would have a seed capital of 100 million dollars, and the amount can be raised to 1.5 billion dollars as per requirement. Detailed documents have already been signed in the presence of our Finance Minister and the visiting Omani Minister of National Economy on the 15 July, 2010. The Fund would be established in Mumbai, will operate out of Mumbai, and will be jointly managed by the State Bank of India and the Oman State General Reserve Fund.

At the same time, Deputy Chairman of Planning Commission and Advisor to H.M. the Sultan for Economic Planning, were entrusted with the responsibility by PM and Sultan Qaboos, to thrash out a blueprint to qualitatively raise our economic and business ties. The Committee chaired by them met twice and their report is awaited soon.

Trade and economic relations constitute one of the important pillars of our historical ties with Oman. In 2009 the non-oil trade increased 65% to $ 3.3 billion. It is significant that in this period generally trade, because of the global economic issues had declined with most countries, but with Oman 2009 it saw a sharp increase. Including oil, in 2009 our trade was 4.5 billion dollars and is maintaining an upwards trajectory. While on trade let me note that the GCC countries now have become the second largest global trading partner of India. In 2009 our trade with GCC countries was close to 100 billion dollars.

We also have established good institutional mechanisms to boost our important trade and economic relations. We have the Joint Commission meeting which is chaired by the Commerce and Industry Minister of India, and Omani Minister for Industry and Commerce. The sixth session of the Joint Commission meeting was held in Muscat in September 2010.

Significantly, we already have over 1500 India-Oman joint ventures covering 13 important socioeconomic sectors. Over 7.5 billion dollars have been invested, of which the Indian companies have contributed 4.5 billion dollars. As such sizeable Indian investments have flown into Oman.

One of the biggest public sector investments came from IFFCO which set up the Oman-India Fertilizer Company (OMIFCO) which is a billion dollar company. It was inaugurated in January 2006. Since then the entire production of fertilizers, both urea and ammonia, is imported by India.

Again late last year, Oman scaled up its stake in another billion dollar project, this time in Madhya Pradesh, called Bharat Oman Refinery Limited, to 26%. This year, Jindal Group has acquired one of the Omani steel companies for close to half a billion dollars. This is just to give you a flavour of the nature of our trade and economic ties.

By the same token, the Who’s Who of Indian industries are already operating in Oman in vital sectors like oil and gas, mining, manufacturing, IT and telecom, power, energy, water, construction, healthcare, steel and tourism.

We have a slew of important agreements between the two countries which include the Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement, the Bilateral Investment Protection Agreement, an extradition treaty, and a MOU on defence cooperation, amongst other important agreements.
I mentioned GCC. Oman is one of our most important partners in GCC. You are aware that GCC is home to a large section of the Indian expatriate community which is currently estimated at over 5.5 million. They remit something like 30 billion dollars every year back home. GCC is very important for us to meet our energy needs. About 75% of our crude requirements comes from GCC countries.

2010 is also a very important milestone in the history of Oman. It is being observed as the 40th anniversary of the renaissance under the visionary leadership of HM Sultan Qaboos bin Said Said.

As such we look forward to the important visit of the Foreign Minister of Oman. He will be holding wide-ranging discussions on all aspects of bilateral relations with External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna. The two leaders will also discuss regional and multilateral issues of interest.

The visit marks the continuation of a very happy tradition of regular high-level exchanges which have been adding vigour and dynamism to our relations.

Thank you. We will be happy to take your questions pertaining to the visit of the Foreign Minister of Oman.

Question: Is any business delegation coming with the Foreign Minister? Are there going to be any business-level talk with the Indian business leaders?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you for the question. I would just like to draw your attention to the very recent visit, last month, for the sixth Joint Commission meeting of the Commerce and Industry Minister to Muscat. He was accompanied by a business delegation. JCM as you know, covers the entire gamut of the economic and commercial relationship. Talks also covered the SME sector and looked at various other facets.

Question: He is meeting the Prime Minister tomorrow, right? Is he carrying any letter from the Sultan of Oman? Secondly, can you highlight to us about the maritime relation in this regards because of this activity? You used to have lots of common meetings on the rim countries?
Joint Secretary (Gulf): As regards the call on the Prime Minister, I think it is entirely up to the Omani side if they have any message to convey to our Prime Minister. So, that is something which we will have to wait and see.

As regards the Indian Ocean Rim Association, there was a meeting which was held earlier this year. But in terms of any specifics as regards India and Oman, that may not be the central focus of the discussions over here. But this would form part of the discussions that we would have spread over the two days, starting and over tomorrow.

Official Spokesperson: Let me add that defence and security cooperation is again an important facet of our relationship with Oman.

Question: Sir, the Royal Navy of Oman had a proposal to train their technical sailors in the Indian Naval establishments in India. What is the status of that? Joint Secretary (Gulf): I would not be having a very specific response to that. But what I can tell you is that Raksha Mantri had visited in May of this year, and we also have a Joint Committee which has been set up under the MOU on Defence Cooperation. So, such questions of training, cooperation and other aspects of defence cooperation, deputation of defence personnel, these are part of the ongoing discussions that we have. But if you are interested in any specific aspect, we could get back to you on that.

Official Spokesperson: Under the MoU on Defence Cooperation we have regular port calls, exchanges, training and so on, between our countries. Rajiv mentioned that our Raksha Mantri had paid a very important visit. Also as he mentioned, we have constituted the Joint Military Committee meeting. The 4th round was held in Muscat in May 2010, which was co-chaired by our Defence Secretary and the Under Secretary for Defence of Oman.

Question: Sir, at one point there was a very active proposal of the Indian Air Force to buy slightly used fighters that the Omanis had - I think they were Mirage 2000s - and after some talk it got fizzled out. But apparently it has sort of come back again. Can you tell me where it stands right now? Also, there is a long-term proposal with the Indian Air Force to have a permanent airbase there. Where does that stand?
Official Spokesperson: I did mention that defence and security cooperation is an important facet of our ongoing cooperation. I have also mentioned about the recent visits and exchanges that we have had. Further details, if any, would be available with the Ministry of Defence.

Question: Has Oman or any of the other Islamic country asked any questions on Kashmir? Have there been enquiries? Have there been concerns?

Official Spokesperson: Let me refer to Oman here. We have a very important relationship with Oman. Oman has always been very understanding of our position on the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir.

Thank you very much.

New Delhi, October 20, 2010

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you and welcome to the joint press interaction of Minister of External Affairs Shri S.M. Krishna, and His Excellency Yusuf bin Alawi bin Abdullah, Minister Responsible for Foreign Affairs of the Sultanate of Oman. First the External Affairs Minister would be making an opening statement. Next His Excellency the Foreign Minister of Oman will be addressing the media.

I would like to invite the Minister of External Affairs to please make his opening remarks.

External Affairs Minister of India: Your Excellency, the Minister Responsible for Foreign Affairs of the Sultanate of Oman, Friends

I am extremely happy to have the privilege of welcoming to this interaction His Excellency Mr. Yousuf bin Alawi bin Abdullah, Minister Responsible for Foreign Affairs of the Sultanate of Oman, who is on an official visit to India at my invitation. I am also happy to note that we have just had a most useful exchange of views on various issues of mutual interest.

India and Oman have a historical relationship marked by warmth and cordiality which encompasses all aspects of our multi-dimensional strategic relationship. This relationship has been sustained over the years by regular high-level dialogue between our two friendly countries. The visit of His Excellency Mr. Yousuf bin Alawi bin Abdullah is part of the happy tradition of regular high-level exchange of views in order to share our perceptions on issues of mutual interest and concern.

I conveyed to His Excellency Mr. Yousuf bin Alawi bin Abdullah the warm greetings of the Government and people of India to the Sultanate and the friendly people of Oman on the occasion of the 40th Anniversary of the Renaissance under the guidance of His Majesty Sultan Qaboos bin Said Al Said.

We had broad-ranging discussions on recent developments in our bilateral relations especially in the economic and commercial fields where our relationship has grown exponentially in the last few years. Our bilateral trade now amounts to US$ 4.5 billion and we share bilateral investments worth US$ 7.53 billion stretching across 13 sectors. There are around 1,537 joint ventures between our two countries. Oman is also one of the few countries in the world with which India has signed a Memorandum of Understanding on a joint investment fund. Through this mechanism, we also aim to channelise further investment in each other’s economies for the benefit of our people.

The last few years have also seen enormous progress in our political understanding and dialogue, security & defence relationship and in people to people exchanges.

I also made use of this opportunity to express the appreciation and thanks of the Government of India to the Sultanate of Oman for being such a fine hosts to over 550,000 Indian nationals living in Oman. Through their hard work and dedication, they have enriched our excellent bilateral relations. They also serve as a vital link between our two countries.
I wish His Excellency Mr. Yousuf bin Alawi bin Abdullah and the friendly people of Oman well in all their future endeavours.

I would now like to request my esteemed colleague, the Minister Responsible for Foreign Affairs of the Sultanate of Oman to address the media. Thank you.

Foreign Minister of Oman: Good evening. It is a great pleasure for me to be here in New Delhi. Since we have arrived, we have received warm welcome and have got this opportunity to exchange views with my colleague S.M. Krishna on bilateral matters and the general view of the relationship between Sultanate of Oman and India. We always feel at home when we are in any part of India, particularly in this region and the southern India.

The links historically between Oman and India go deep into the history. That is reflected in our Oman. We are grateful for all the assistance India and the people of India have offered to the Sultanate of Oman to maintain this very ancient relationship between Oman and India not only in terms of business but much more in terms of culture. The culture which has linked Oman and India has been affected positively on this relationship. Indeed we are looking forward to maintaining and building on what we have already achieved.

I have had the opportunity to congratulate India through His Excellency on the success of the Commonwealth Games as well as on India succeeding in getting a seat in the Security Council of the United Nations. We are very happy to see India in the Security Council. We strongly believe that India will play a very positive role through the Security Council in the coming years.

As His Excellency has said, we have discussed the relationship, the projects, the number of exchanges, the number of Indian citizen in Oman, and that it has gone through the period of the last forty years very smoothly with benefits to both countries. We are grateful for all the Indian citizens who have been in Oman and joined us in building a new era of Oman through the forty years of His Majesty the Sultan of Oman, Sultan Qaboos bin Said Al Said. We have no doubt that India and Oman will continue on this work and we will work together to reach the objectives as neighbours, as strategic partners, in every field. Therefore, this visit has offered to me the opportunities to exchange views. We are satisfied with the present level of relationship, but we are working to add more on what we have.

His Excellency has mentioned the Joint Investment Fund. We have done this as a result of the visits of the Prime Minister of India to Oman a few years ago and we hope to see this fund will also participate in joining efforts in helping India building the infrastructure which is going on now in India. Therefore, I look forward Excellency to see you in Oman so that we can continue our discussions once more. Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Excellency, thank you. The Ministers will be happy to take a few questions. You are requested to please indicate whom the question is addressed to.

Question: India always praised the relation between Oman and India as natural strategic partners, and it has been built through the years. How do the Omanis look at this? How do they assess this kind of relation especially the current situation in the Gulf where we have the problem of security and regard to the piracy at one angle and also the turbulent region with the military build-up? Does the Omani Hon. Minister see any role for India in bringing security to this region?

Foreign Minister of Oman: Indeed India has a role to play in the security sector for simple reasons: (a) India has almost something like eight million people working in the GCC countries; and (b) India is a neighbor to the Gulf countries. India has always played a role of peace. So, when time comes to discuss real terms of putting up a security for the Gulf, in our view as a Member of the GCC we see India should be also invited. I have said India but also there are others. There is Iran, there is Iraq, there are the six members of the GCC, there is Pakistan, and there are others who have a great interest in the Gulf. I wish to say that the United States of America as well as a number of European countries, and China, and Russia, we cannot secure that important area of supplying energy to the world without collective efforts to maintain security and peace in the region.

Question: My question is addressed to EAM. What is the current status of India-Pakistan dialogue? When do you think the next round of dialogue would be possible?
External Affairs Minister: I think that question has been answered repeatedly. India believes that a dialogue and continuation of talks that were initiated by me when I went to Islamabad will have to be carried on. The talks were inconclusive. I have invited the Foreign Minister of Pakistan His Excellency Qureshi to visit India. He has accepted my invitation to visit India. Originally it was due to take place by the end of the year. But now I think it will happen hopefully in the first quarter of 2011, and we will take up where we left in Islamabad.

Question: My question is addressed to the Omani Foreign Minister. Sir, this is with reference to the Joint Investment Fund that both you and Mr. Krishna referred to. It was set up two years ago. I was wondering when it is likely to become operational. It had an initial corpus of 100 million dollars with the provision to increase it to 1.5 billion dollars. What is the timeframe for the increase, if there is any? If I could just ask one more question, which sectors of India are Omani companies looking to invest in?

Foreign Minister of Oman: That is, as you said, in place and its seed fund. This was suggested by the Hon. Prime Minister of India when he was in Oman a few years ago. And we agree that this is going to be invested both in Oman and India. But of course we would like very much that fund to participate in the infrastructure projects in India. This money which has been planned for is not the end of that Fund, but depends on the size of projects which the Fund would be addressing in India or in Oman. Besides, we believe that this will initiate public funds from the people to be also supported this Fund for larger projects, big projects, particularly in the road sector. And the power generation sector would be probably the first priority for the Fund and other investors.

Question: Sir, my question is for the EAM. Very recently, Lashkar terrorist David Headley's wife has made some revelations that she had informed the US agencies in advance much before Headley's terror links. This also indicates that perhaps US had prior information on a possible attack in Mumbai, which eventually happened. Do you think, Sir, it casts a shadow on Indo-US Strategic partnership? And would this issue specifically be taken up in Obama's visit to India?

External Affairs Minister: India and USA are strategic partners. Our ties are multifaceted and have been transformed in recent years. We share a common outlook on a host of issues including the scourge of terrorism, that confronts us all. Both sides have very good cooperation on matters of security and counter terrorism. We had received some general and non-specific information from the US Government, prior to the heinous terror attack on Mumbai in November 2008.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you, Sir. This brings the interaction to a close. Thank you for your presence. Goodnight!

380. Statement issued by the Government of India on the incident involving boats carrying supplies for Gaza.

New Delhi, May 31, 2010.

India deplores the tragic loss of life and the reports of killings and injuries to people on the boats carrying supplies for Gaza. There can be no justification for such indiscriminate use of force, which we condemn. We extend our sympathies to the families of the dead and wounded. It is our firm conviction that lasting peace and security in the region can be achieved only through peaceful dialogue and not through use of force.

✦✦✦✦✦

The Gaza flotilla clash occurred in the waters of the Mediterranean Sea, when Israeli naval forces seized a flotilla of six ships carrying international activists, known as the "Gaza Freedom Flotilla", who were planning to break the Israeli blockade of Gaza and deliver humanitarian supplies. According to Israeli sources, IDF soldiers boarded the flotilla after it had declined to change its course to the port of Ashdod, where Israel had promised to inspect the aid and deliver non-banned items to Gaza. Of the six ships, aboard one, the Mavi Marmara, violence had ensued. Between nine and sixteen of its passengers were reported killed by Israeli soldiers who landed on the ship. Israel defended its actions, saying its soldiers were attacked with knives and metal bars. There were strong international reactions. Official responses varied from deep concern over the killings to strong condemnations. The UN Security Council formally condemned "those acts which resulted in the loss of lives". Many countries have called for international investigation.

SAUDI ARABIA

384. Interview of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with Saudi journalists.

New Delhi, February 27, 2010.

Q. 1. Hon. PM Both India and Saudi Arabia have hailed the visit of Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah to New Delhi in January 2006 as a landmark development marking the start of strategic relations between the two countries. Today, nearly four years later, what is your assessment of the progress made in this reinvigorated partnership that was initiated as part of King Abdullah’s ‘Look East’ policy? What are the most significant achievements so far?

Ans.: The visit of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz to India as Chief Guest at our Republic Day in January 2006 was a landmark event. This was the first visit of a Saudi ruler to India after 50 years. The Delhi Declaration signed by His Majesty King Abdullah and me enshrined our commitment to pursue a common strategic vision for promoting regional peace and security and for the enhancement of our relations in the political, economic, security and cultural fields.

We have made considerable progress in realizing our vision to strengthen our bilateral partnership. There have been regular high level Ministerial exchanges as well as intensified interaction among the business community, academia and other sections of society. The meeting of the India-Saudi Arabia Joint Commission took place in November 2009, which has put in place an ambitious agenda for bilateral cooperation. Saudi Arabia is India’s fourth largest trading partner with two-way trade of over $25 billion. The number of joint ventures in the Kingdom is over 500 with an estimated investment of over US$2 billion. We welcome increased investments from Saudi Arabia into India especially in the infrastructure sector where mutually beneficial opportunities exist.

Q. 2. Please give me a brief synopsis of the talks that you intend to have with King Abdullah and other senior Saudi officials during your visit to Saudi Arabia this month. The visit is significant for Riyadh since an Indian PM will be visiting the Kingdom after 28 years.

Ans. India and Saudi Arabia belong to the same extended neighbourhood. In the Delhi Declaration, we had pledged to work together not just for our bilateral benefit, but also to promote peace, stability and security in the region and the world. Both King Abdullah and I reject the notion that any cause justifies wanton violence against innocent people. We are strong allies against the scourge of extremism and terrorism that affects global peace and security.

During my visit, I propose to discuss with King Abdullah how can we promote greater stability and security in the region. We also have a substantial agenda for the advancement of bilateral relations in diverse areas such as trade and investment, energy, defence and security, social and cultural cooperation, and people-to-people exchanges. I look forward to interacting with the members of the business community in Saudi Arabia and inviting them to be a partner in India's rapid socio-economic transformation through major infrastructure, energy, industry and services related projects.

Q. 3. Which are the agreements or MoUs, India will sign with the Kingdom during your visit? Please name them and spell out briefly the features of those agreements.

Ans. Several cooperation agreements are likely to be signed during my visit which will represent a broad range of Indo-Saudi cooperation in the fields of economic cooperation, culture, science and technology and information technology. I am confident these will further enrich our close relations.

Q. 4. Your visit to the Kingdom takes place at a time when that region is in the midst of tension in Iran and also in Iraq and Afghanistan, with the US and the Western countries continuing to exert pressure on Iran over the nuclear issue. What role do you foresee India playing in this context in partnership with the Kingdom?

Ans. We are witnessing significant geo-political developments, which will directly impact on the peace and stability in the region. All these issues need to be addressed through sustained efforts. I believe that India and Saudi Arabia, as two major countries in the region, have an important stake and responsibility in this regard. In my dialogue with the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz, I propose to review the regional scenario, and discuss how we can work together to address the complex issues at hand.

Q. 5. How do you assess India’s partnership with the Gulf states, especially Saudi Arabia, when it comes to fighting terrorism? What collective measures India, with SAARC states and Gulf states, are taking to combat this evil?

Ans.: Terrorism remains the single biggest threat to peace, stability and to our progress. Global efforts are needed to defend the values of pluralism, peaceful co-existence and the rule of law. All the member countries of the GCC share India's concerns relating to extremism and terrorism. We reject the idea that any religion or cause can be used to justify violence against innocent people. We have institutionalised our cooperation with the Gulf countries by putting in place various security cooperation agreements, including extradition treaties.

SAARC as an organisation has committed itself to fighting terrorism. The SAARC Council of Ministers Meeting in February 2009 issued a Ministerial Declaration on Cooperation in Combating Terrorism. Given the fact that today extremist and terrorist activities straddle South Asia and West Asia and constitute a grave threat to our peoples, I agree that the SAARC and GCC anti-terrorism efforts should be more effectively coordinated.

Q. 6. Does India intend to conclude a defence pact with the Kingdom?

Ans.: We do not have a defence agreement with Saudi Arabia. Since the visit of His Majesty King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz to India four years ago, our defence ties have, however, diversified and become more substantial. We have exchanged visits of our service Chiefs and naval ships, and Saudi officers have participated in our training programmes, including at the prestigious National Defence College. We look forward to deepening our defence cooperation with Saudi Arabia.

Q. 7. There is concern in the Middle East about growing Indo-Israeli defense cooperation in recent times, which many fear could be at the expense of India's traditional support for Arab causes. How do you address this concern?
Ans.: I would submit that this concern is misplaced. Our relationship with no single country is at the expense of our relations with any other country. Indeed, India's relations with the countries in West Asia gives us the opportunity to interact in diverse ways with this very important region.

As far as India's support for Palestine is concerned, this is an article of faith for us. Our solidarity with the people of Palestine predates our independence. India supports a peaceful solution that would result in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine living within secure and recognised borders, with East Jerusalem as its capital, side by side at peace with Israel as endorsed in the Quartet Road Map and the relevant Security Council Resolutions. We also support the Arab Peace Plan.

I recently had the pleasure of hosting His Excellency President Mahmoud Abbas and reiterating to him our steadfast support for Palestine and its people.

Q. 8. How do see the future relationship of India with Arab world?

Ans.: India's ties with the Arab world go back several millennia. While we recall our historic ties with great pride, we do recognize that relationships have to be constantly nourished and revitalized so that they respond to new realities and aspirations. India and the Arab world are witnessing a rapid modernization of their societies and economies. The India of today is vastly different from what we were at the time of our independence. The same is true of the Arab world.

There is no conflict of interest between us. To the contrary, our destinies are tied together and we have much to gain by intensifying our cooperation with each other. We have a huge stake in each other's success, and to that extent ours is a relationship that is of strategic importance.

I would like to see a much greater integration of our economies, higher flow of trade and investment, better connectivities and freer flow of ideas and people. This has in fact been our historical legacy, and we should revive that legacy. From our side, there are no impediments to a rapid, sustained and comprehensive expansion of relations between India and the Arab world.

Q. 9. How can India play more active role in enhancing the dialogue between east and west? How do you view king Abdullah's initiative for the interfaith dialogue which started in Madrid? What role can Indian Muslims can play to enhance the inter faith dialogue?

Ans.: India is a 5000 year old civilisation that today represents a confluence of religions, languages and cultures. We deeply value the principles of peaceful co-existence and harmony among nations. We will continue to work with all like-minded countries to create a just and equitable international order that is conducive to meeting the challenges of poverty, illiteracy and hunger.

We deeply appreciate and support the idea of an inter-faith dialogue. The knowledge of religious beliefs and practices of other people is important in itself and can foster greater understanding and tolerance. We have experience of this in our own country. Islam is an integral part of India’s democratic and secular fabric. Muslims in India are part of our national mosaic, and have enriched our society. Like all other Indians, they enjoy the full protection of our laws, and the full rights guaranteed to every Indian under our Constitution.

Q. 10. Some 1.8 million Indians live and work in Saudi Arabia. What steps is your government taking for their welfare?

Ans.: We are extremely proud of the fact that the Indian community in the Gulf region has been contributing to the socio-economic development of the region. There are over 5 million Indian workers in the Gulf, of which almost 2 million live and work in Saudi Arabia alone. We are very grateful for the warm welcome they have received throughout the region.

The welfare of such a large overseas Indian community is a matter of high priority for my government. The Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs, which we had set up six years ago, has worked tirelessly for the welfare of the Indian community in consultation with the host governments. The governments of several GCC countries have themselves set up mechanisms such as grievance redressal bodies and labour courts that are working closely with our officials. In addition, we have signed MoUs on labour and manpower with most of the GCC countries.

At the Indian end, we are in the process of reforming our own procedures, including better regulation of the recruitment process. We have also put in place arrangements in all Gulf countries, including Saudi Arabia, to respond to workers’ grievances. These include a 24-hour helpline, temporary shelters, counseling centres, and strengthened Community Welfare Wings in our diplomatic Missions.

Q.11. Your stated position is that while India is ready to keep talking to Pakistan, the stalled peace process can resume only if Islamabad acts against the alleged planners of the Mumbai attack. With the announcement of resumption of dialogue on secretaries level, does this considered a change in the government stand. What will be the basis of the forthcoming dialogue?

Ans. : There is no change in our position. We seek a peaceful and normal relationship with Pakistan. We should be good neighbours. In that quest we have consistently sought to engage those in Pakistan who are ready to work with us. There is no alternative to dialogue to resolve the issues that divide us. Today the primary issue is terrorism.

Q.12. How serious is the Pakistan Taliban threat to India, especially to Jammu & Kashmir which has bubbled up again. How could the Kashmir issue be solved once and for all?

Ans. : As a neighbour, we cannot remain immune to the rise of extremism and terrorism in Pakistan, or on the border of Pakistan and Afghanistan. Extremism and terrorism are major threats not only to India, but also to Pakistan, and all its other neighbours. It is in our collective interest that we resolutely oppose, resist and overcome terrorism and all those who nurture, sustain and give sanctuary to terrorists and extremist elements.

It is a fact that Jammu and Kashmir and its people have suffered repeatedly at the hands of terrorism from across the border. This has militated against the will of the people of the State, who have time and again voted in large numbers in democratic elections to unambiguously reject violence. We have taken several measures for the development of Jammu and Kashmir, and for its people to live in peace and harmony, as in the rest of the country. In so far as our dialogue with Pakistan is concerned, we are ready to discuss all issues with them in an atmosphere free from terrorism.
Statement issued by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh prior to his departure to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

New Delhi, February 27, 2010.

I am leaving today on a bilateral visit to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia at the invitation of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al Saud.

My visit carries special significance. I am conscious of the fact that this will be only the third visit by an Indian Prime Minister to Saudi Arabia. I, therefore, have a vast agenda for discussions with the Saudi leadership.

My visit reflects the strong mutual desire of both countries to reinvigorate our relations, as manifested in His Majesty King Abdullah's historic visit to India in 2006 as the Chief Guest of our Republic Day celebrations. The Delhi Declaration that we signed on that occasion constitutes a valuable blueprint for our cooperation in the future.

The Gulf region is an area of vital importance for India's security and prosperity. India and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia have enjoyed special relations based on several millennia of civilisational and cultural linkages and people to people exchanges. The Kingdom is India's largest and most reliable supplier of our energy needs from the region. Saudi Arabia is home to an Indian community numbering about 1.8 million. As many as 165000 Indian pilgrims perform the Haj annually. Our trade and investment linkages have grown though they remain much below the potential of our two economies, and must be broad based.

I will have the honour of holding talks with the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al Saud on how can we promote greater stability and security in the region, and impart a strategic character to our relations beyond the traditional areas of our cooperation. There is great scope for opening new frontiers of cooperation in the areas of security, defence, science and technology, space, human resources development and knowledge-based industries. I believe India and Saudi Arabia have much to gain by cooperating with each other in combatting extremism and terrorism. I expect to discuss the situation in Afghanistan and other regional issues of mutual interest.

During my visit I look forward to addressing the distinguished members of the Majlis Al-Shura. A business delegation of CEOs is accompanying me, and I will address the Council of Saudi Chambers of Commerce and Industry. In addition, I will meet members of the Indian community.

386. Riyadh Declaration: 'A New Era of Strategic Partnership' issued at the end of the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Saudi Arabia.

Riyadh, February 28, 2010.

At the invitation of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al Saud, the Prime Minister of the Republic of India, His Excellency Dr. Manmohan Singh paid an official visit to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia from 13-15/3/1431H corresponding to February 27 - March 1, 2010.

During the visit, the Prime Minister of India addressed the Majlis Al-Shoura, and received the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Petroleum and Mineral Resources and Commerce and Industry. An honorary doctorate was conferred upon the Prime Minister by King Saud University.

The Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al Saud and the Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh held in depth discussions on a wide range of issues in an atmosphere of utmost warmth, cordiality, friendship and transparency. They asserted that strong bilateral ties between the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the Republic of India were to the benefit of their peoples and of all humanity.

The two leaders were unanimous that the visit of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al Saud to India in 2006, and the current visit of the Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia heralded a new era in Saudi-India relations, that is in keeping with the changing realities and unfolding opportunities of the 21st century. This would be in accordance with the civilizational, historic and cultural links which bind them and their regions.

The two leaders reviewed the status of implementation of the historic Delhi Declaration signed on 27/12/1426H corresponding to 27 January 2006, and expressed their satisfaction at the steady expansion of Saudi-India relations since the signing of the Delhi Declaration. They re-emphasized the importance of full implementation of the Delhi Declaration through exchange of visits at the ministerial, official, business, academia, media and other levels.

Keeping in view the development of relations between the two countries, and the potential for their further growth, the two leaders decided to raise their cooperation to a strategic partnership covering security, economic, defence and political areas.

The two leaders reiterated their mutual desire to develop as knowledge-based economies based on advances in the areas of information technology, space science and other frontier technologies. They welcomed the agreements signed between the two sides in the field of Research and Education, Information Technology and Services, Science and Technology, and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

Both leaders emphasized the importance of developing a broad-based economic partnership that reflects the ongoing transformation of their economies, and the changes such transformation are bringing about in the global economic order, including continuous coordination within the framework of the G-20 process. They welcomed the outcome of the 8th Session of the Joint Commission for Economic, Trade, Scientific, Technical and Cultural Cooperation held in Riyadh in October, 2009.

The two leaders stressed on continuing to work towards strengthening their strategic partnership by meeting the two countries' vast requirements relating to infrastructure, energy and development, by augmenting the flow of their investments into each other's countries, and enhancing the bilateral trade in accordance with the potential and size of their economies. In this regard, the two leaders invited the private sector in the two countries and the Saudi - India Business Council to increase their efforts to take advantage of the investment opportunities provided by the two countries.

The two leaders further emphasised the importance of strengthening the strategic energy partnership based on complimentarity and interdependence, as outlined in the Delhi Declaration, including meeting India’s increasing requirement of crude oil supplies, and identifying and implementing specific projects for cooperation including in the areas of new and renewable energy. India invited Saudi Arabia to participate in crude storage facilities in India. They directed the Joint Working Group on Energy to continue adopting all appropriate means to achieve the same.

The two leaders agreed on the role and importance of the youth in consolidating and strengthening the relations between their peoples, and directed the concerned authorities to prepare necessary programmes for activating this role in the framework of Memorandum of Cooperation in the educational field signed between the two countries in 2006, and also providing all necessary facilities to their students studying in both countries.

The two leaders mandated the Saudi-India Joint Commission to continue follow up of the implementation of this Declaration to build this strategic partnership.

The Prime Minister of India expressed his gratitude and appreciation for the excellent efforts made and services provided by the Saudi authorities to the Haj and Umra pilgrims from India.

The two leaders welcomed the level of existing cooperation in defence fields between the concerned authorities in the two countries, and agreed to continue strengthening this cooperation in a way that realizes their common interests.

The two leaders noted that tolerance, religious harmony and brotherhood, irrespective of faith or ethnic background, were part of the principles and values of both countries. These are the same principles advocated by the initiative of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques for dialogue among different faiths and beliefs.
The two leaders renewed condemnation of the phenomena of terrorism, extremism and violence affirming that it is global and threatens all societies and is not linked to any race, color or belief. The international community must, therefore, resolutely combat terrorism. The two sides agreed to enhance cooperation in exchange of information relating to terrorist activities, money laundering, narcotics, arms and human trafficking, and develop joint strategies to combat these threats. They welcomed the signing of the Extradition Treaty and the Agreement for Transfer of Sentenced Persons.

In the course of discussions on regional and international issues, the peace process in the Middle East was high on the agenda. The two leaders reviewed ongoing efforts and the latest developments, and expressed hope for the early resumption of the peace process in accordance with the UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, and the Arab Peace Plan with a view to address all the key issues of the dispute comprehensively and within a definite timeframe leading to the establishment of a sovereign, independent, united and viable Palestinian State, in accordance with the two state solution.

The two leaders emphasized that continued building of settlements by Israel constitutes a fundamental stumbling block for the peace process.

The two leaders emphasized the importance of regional and international efforts focusing on making the Middle East and Gulf Region free of all nuclear weapons and all weapons of mass destruction.

The two leaders reiterated their support for ongoing international efforts to resolve the issues relating to Iran's nuclear programme peacefully through dialogue and called for continuation of these efforts. They encouraged Iran to respond to those efforts in order to remove regional and international doubts about its nuclear programme, especially as these ensure the right of Iran and other countries to peaceful uses of nuclear energy according to the yardsticks and procedures of International Atomic Energy Agency and under its supervision.

The two leaders discussed the situation in Afghanistan and called for the preservation of Afghanistan's sovereignty and independence. They expressed their full support for the efforts aimed at helping Afghanistan to develop its infrastructure and achieve social and economic development. They supported the efforts of the people of Afghanistan to achieve stability and security, protected from exploitation by the terrorist organizations, while upholding the values and principles of the Constitution of Afghanistan.

The two leaders discussed the situation in Iraq and expressed hope that the forthcoming elections will enable the people of Iraq to realize their aspirations by achieving security and stability, strengthening territorial integrity and consolidating its national unity on the principle of equality of rights and obligations among all Iraqis irrespective of their faith and sect.

The Prime Minister of India conveyed his deep gratitude and appreciation to the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques for the warm and gracious hospitality extended to him and the members of his delegation during his official visit to the Kingdom.

Signed this Sunday, February 28, 2010 (14 Rabea Alawal, 1431H) in Riyadh.

Prime Minister of the Republic of India

Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al Saud
King of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia
387. Address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Saudi Majlis Al-Shura (Parliament).

Riyadh, March 1, 2010.

Your Excellency Dr. Abdullah bin Mohammed bin Ibrahim Al-Sheikh, Speaker of the Majlis Al-Shura,

Distinguished Members of the Majlis Al-Shura,
Distinguished Guests,

I am deeply grateful and privileged to have this opportunity to address the Majlis Al-Shura. This august body has come to symbolize participative governance in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. The Members of the Majlis Al-Shura have among them some of the best minds in the Kingdom, representing different segments of Saudi Arabia’s rich culture and society. I am, therefore, deeply conscious of the honour done to me and to India by inviting me to address this august House.

Distinguished Members of the Majlis Al-Shura,

Saudi Arabia is the cradle of Islam and the land of the revelation of the Holy Quran. I have come to this ancient land with a message of peace, brotherhood and friendship. I bring to you the fraternal greetings of the people of India.

India regards Saudi Arabia as a pillar of stability in the Gulf region. Under the enlightened and sagacious leadership of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud, the Kingdom has taken rapid strides towards modernization. Its influence today extends far beyond the region.

As I stand before you, I am conscious of the wealth of history behind us, and the promise of a new partnership ahead of us.

We are two nations linked by the waterways of the Indian Ocean. Over 5,000 years ago, ships made with teak from Kerala freely traversed the waters of the Indian Ocean and linked the people of Sindh, Gujarat and Malabar with the different ports of the Gulf and the Red Sea, going up to Basra and Alexandria.
Commercial enterprises and exchange of foodstuffs and cloth for dates and pearls provided the basis for the development of deep people-to-people ties. Indian townships mushroomed across the Gulf. Arab traders established themselves along the coastline of western India. Our languages were influenced by each other. These linkages, over several centuries, have left an indelible mark upon our culture and civilization. This is reflected in the natural empathy and sense of comfort we have when we meet each other.

Islam qualitatively changed the character and personality of the people in Arabia as it enriched the lives of millions of Indians who embraced this new faith. It is said that during the reign of the Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan, Indian pilgrims constituted the largest movement of people by sea.

Indian Muslim scholars went to Mecca in order to learn Islamic theology. Arab Muslim scholars came to India to learn mathematics, science, astronomy and philosophy. These exchanges led to the widespread diffusion of knowledge in the sciences, arts, religion and philosophy.

Today, Islam is an integral part of India’s nationhood and ethos and of the rich tapestry of its culture. India has made significant contributions to all aspects of Islamic civilization. Centres of Islamic learning in India have made a seminal contribution to Islamic and Arabic studies.

Our 160 million Muslims are contributing to our nation building efforts and have excelled in all walks of life. We are proud of our composite culture and of our tradition of different faiths and communities living together in harmony.

Distinguished Members,

The foundations of our relations in the modern era were laid during the visit of His Majesty King Saud to India in 1955 and Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru’s visit to the Kingdom in 1956. These foundations were strengthened by the visit of Prime Minister Smt. Indira Gandhi to Saudi Arabia in 1982.

The tone for our relations in the 21st century was set by the landmark visit to India of His Majesty King Abdullah in January 2006. The participation of His Majesty as the Chief Guest at our Republic Day celebrations was a matter of deep honour for the people of India.
The Delhi Declaration that I signed with the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques enshrines our shared vision for a new relationship. Our two countries pledged to work not just for the development and prosperity of our peoples but for the security and peace of the region as a whole.

My dialogue with His Majesty yesterday and my meetings with the other distinguished leaders of this great country have led to the reaffirmation of our close ties and our common interests.

We have agreed to impart a strategic character to our relations, and have put in place a roadmap for bilateral economic, political and security related cooperation that will constitute the core of our relationship in the coming years.

Distinguished Members,

India is in the midst of rapid socio-economic transformation. Over the last five years, our economy has grown at an average annual rate of 9 percent. Despite the global economic slowdown, we hope to achieve a growth rate of about 7.5 percent in the current financial year.

In the next 25 years we aspire to growth rates of between 9 to 10 per cent annually. This will enable us to lift millions of our people out of poverty and to transform India into one of the largest economies of the world. India looks to the future with confidence and hope.

Saudi Arabia is itself witnessing remarkable progress as the vision of its leaders to modernize and diversify its economy becomes a reality.

There is vast potential for cooperation between our two countries based on our inherent strengths and complementarities.

We seek Saudi investment in a range of sectors from infrastructure and manufacturing to the services and hospitality sector. Equally, Indian industry is ready to take advantage of the many opportunities that are opening up in the IT, banking, telecommunications, pharmaceutical and hydrocarbon sectors in Saudi Arabia.

The Kingdom is one of India’s major trading partners. Our bilateral trade has registered unprecedented growth in recent years and stood at over 25 billion US dollars in 2008-2009. We are looking at ways and means of expanding our traditionally strong collaboration in the energy sector.
Saudi Arabia is home to the largest Indian community abroad numbering about 1.8 million. Indian workers and professionals have participated in the extraordinary development of this region. Indeed, it would be difficult to identify a major project in this region with which Indians have not been involved in some way or the other.

As many as 165,000 Indian pilgrims perform Haj annually. This is the second largest group from any single country. A similar number perform the Umrah annually. We are grateful for the warm welcome that the Kingdom has given to the Indian community and to our pilgrims.

We have noted the high priority given to the development of human resources in the future development of Saudi Arabia. This fits in with our priority as well. We would like to see more contacts among our parliamentarians, scholars, scientists and students to renew the intellectual bonds between India and West Asia.

In addition to these areas of cooperation, there is scope for considerable expansion of our interactions in the political, defence and security spheres.

Distinguished Members,

West Asia is a vital part of India's extended neighbourhood. We have deep and intricate ties with the Gulf countries. We have a high stake in the peace and stability of the region. Neither the countries of the region nor the world can afford fresh turmoil. We sincerely hope that wisdom will prevail and that in the resolution of conflicts and differences, dialogue will triumph over confrontation.

There is no issue more important for peace and stability in the region than the question of Palestine. For far too long the brave people of Palestine have been denied their just, legitimate and inalienable rights, including most of all the establishment of a sovereign, independent and viable Palestinian state. I wish to pay a special tribute to His Majesty for the initiatives he has taken to bring about a just settlement. We applaud and support the Arab Peace Initiative.

I take this opportunity of reiterating the principled, strong and consistent support of the government and people of India for the struggle of the Palestinian people. India has been making a contribution to the development of the Palestinian economy and its human resources and we will continue to do so.

Distinguished Members,

Both our countries are today threatened by extremism and violence. The pursuit of terror in the name of religion or any other cause or grievance cannot be acceptable to civilized societies. It has no sanction in any religion. History teaches us that the scourge of terrorism must be confronted with determination and united effort.

Nowhere is this challenge greater than in Afghanistan. The people of Afghanistan have suffered for far too long. They deserve an atmosphere of peace and the opportunity to pursue a life of dignity and hope.

The government of Afghanistan needs the support of the international community in restoring peace and development in the country. The international community should support all sections of Afghan society who wish to work towards the emergence of Afghanistan as a modern, stable and sovereign nation. No sanctuary should be given to those who promote terror, violence or instability in the country.

India wishes to live in peace and friendship with its neighbours. I believe that all countries of South Asia should work to realize a common vision of peace and inclusive development for the region.

We seek cooperative relations with Pakistan. Our objective is a permanent peace because we recognise that we are bound together by a shared future. If there is cooperation between India and Pakistan, vast opportunities will open up for trade, travel and development that will create prosperity in both countries and in South Asia as a whole. But to realise this vision, Pakistan must act decisively against terrorism. If Pakistan cooperates with India, there is no problem that we cannot solve and we can walk the extra mile to open a new chapter in relations between our two countries.

Distinguished Members,

We live in a world where the interests of peoples and countries are intertwined. As two countries representing old civilizations, India and Saudi Arabia should work together to promote dialogue and peaceful co-existence among nations, religions and societies. We should work together as partners in shaping the global discourse on issues such as energy security, food security, climate change and terrorism. We should cooperate to deal with regional challenges such as maritime security, piracy, narcotics, human trafficking and other non-traditional threats to security.

The Kingdom and the region are blessed with the benevolence and statesmanship of His Majesty King Abdullah. Our two peoples are desirous of peace and goodwill. Together, India and Saudi Arabia can become a potent moral force for a better world and for a more secure future for our children.

I thank you for your attention.

388. Address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the King Saud University.

Riyadh, March 1, 2010.

Your Excellency Dr. Khalid Mohammad Al Angari, Minister for Higher Education

Dr. Abdullah Abdul Rahman Al Othman, Rector of King Saud University

Members of the Faculty, Students,

Ladies and Gentlemen.

I am greatly honoured to address this distinguished gathering at the prestigious King Saud University. I recall my days as a university professor very fondly not least because of the opportunity it gave me to interact with inspiring young minds.

I wish to convey my deep appreciation to the King Saud University for conferring an Honorary Doctorate on me. I consider this as an exceptional honour bestowed on me by one of the premier centers of learning in the Arab world.
The University has been in the forefront of building a knowledge society. Its contribution in promoting fundamental human values, academic freedom, learning and innovation has been second to none.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

The Arab world has a long intellectual and educational tradition. History tells us that the Arabs translated and preserved teachings from Greece, India and Persia. It is these texts that inspired a mass movement in the field of education during the 12th century which produced great Arab mathematicians, scientists and scholars.

India's links with Saudi Arabia and the region go back several millennia. There were regular intellectual exchanges in various fields of human study. These linkages influenced our traditions of learning. Over the years, however, these links weakened and we need to revive such exchanges. The confluence of Arab and Asian ideas and culture will help us to rediscover each other and in the process enrich human civilization.

I am aware of the strong interest of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al Saud in the modernization of education infrastructure. We admire his vision for the development of human capital and for promoting a scientific temper among the youth while preserving cultural traditions.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

We have a similar vision for the development of education in our own country. Like Saudi Arabia, we too recognize the importance of education in social empowerment and progress. Almost 20% of the total expenditure of our current five year development Plan is earmarked for education. We are establishing 30 new Central Universities, of which half will be conceived as world-class institutions. We have laid equal emphasis on the development of our infrastructure for science and technology education. We have plans to build five more national institutes of science and more Indian Institutes of Technology and Indian Institutes of Information Technology.

We are keen to build our human resources for the next generation. Every year India produces among the largest number of scientists and engineers in the world. We wish to expand India's knowledge economy and to build world class facilities for research and cutting edge science in the country.

I am happy that India and Saudi Arabia are seeking closer cooperation in the field of higher education. We signed a bilateral agreement for educational cooperation in 2006.

Yesterday His Majesty and I signed the Riyadh Declaration. In this Declaration we have paid special emphasis on the increasing role and importance of youth in consolidating relations between our two countries. We also reaffirmed our common desire to forge greater cooperation in the areas of education, culture, information technology and frontier areas of science and technology.

We would like to see greater number of students in our universities from Saudi Arabia. We are already receiving Saudi students under the prestigious "King Abdullah Scholarship Programme". These kinds of programmes should be expanded and popularized.

I am happy that the King Saud University has entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with one of the most prestigious institutions in India, the Indian Institute of Science. I hope that this will inspire similar collaborations between other centres of excellence in both countries.

I see many possibilities for cooperation in the area of human capital formation and skill development. We are both countries with young populations and our educational system should be geared to making every student employable. The knowledge economy offers many opportunities for creative young minds and we should collaborate in nurturing them.

I once again thank you for confering this honour on me. I am continually inspired by the creativity, energy and dynamism of the younger generation. I wish all the students gathered here today good luck and continued success in the noble task of building this great country.

Thank you.
March 1, 2010.

Prime Minister: Dear friends, I just had a very productive and fruitful visit to Saudi Arabia. I have met all the top leaders starting with His Majesty King Abdullah, the Foreign Minister, the Oil and Minerals Minister, Commerce and Industry Minister. As a result of our interactions, we have agreed to upgrade the quality of our relationship to that of a strategic partnership and this strategic partnership will cover economic, trade and investment issues. Also it will include issues relating to energy security, investments in each other's country in upstream and downstream energy activities, investment in R&D in renewable energy resources and also it will cover issues relating to security cooperation in dealing with terrorism, strengthening arrangements for provision of information and intelligence.

Question: On whether solution of the Kashmir issue tops the foreign policy agenda of UPA II? If not then what is the main agenda?

Answer: UPA agenda is there for all to see. It is reproduced in the Congress Election Manifesto. That is the broad guideline of what we want to do. In improving of our relations with neighbours, living in a neighbourhood of peace and stability is a very important issue which we will be working hard upon. I do recognize there are difficulties but we have to bite the bullet.

Question: Today in Shura Council address also you had repeated your offer of walking that extra mile with Pakistan; this carries a lot of symbolism since you say that in a land which is seen as cradle of Islam, what are your hopes, as you just said improving relations with neighbours are very important?

Answer: Well I hope that the world community gets the right message that India is a victim of terrorism that we have a situation where our neighbour has promised unambiguously not to allow its territory for perpetrating terrorist attacks directed against India and yet, on the ground, progress has been rather nil. We are living today in an increasing interdependent world and whosoever I meet, the world leaders, I convey to them, that all problems between India and Pakistan can be resolved through meaningful bilateral dialogue, if only Pakistan would take a more reasonable attitude in dealing with those terrorist elements who target our country.

Question: Now Saudi Arabia is also a victim of terrorism, and what is your assessment. Are the Saudis ready to support the Afghan issue, the Afpak question and our problem, to help with Pakistan?

Answer: My feeling is the Saudi Arabian leadership has a better understanding of the predicament that we face both in Pakistan and in Afghanistan. (interruption….inaudible) Well I can't say that but there is great deal of sympathy and support for India's point of view, that what we are asking is very reasonable

Question: Sir there has been a lot of concern over increase in petrol prices, will the government consider any rollback in petrol prices?

Answer: Any increase in prices does hurt some people. We have to take a long term view. We cannot save people from inflation. If we follow all along populist fiscal policies, sooner or later, these populist policies, if persisted with for a long time, will lead to erosion of the investment climate, will lead to erosion of our ability to create new jobs, it will lead to the erosion of our ability to invest in our flagship programmes for the poor people so, we have to balance these factors. The increase in the fuel prices, the direct effect on the wholesale price index will be no more than 0.4 percent. There will be some escalation but my hope is now that the rabi crop is coming into the market, prices which have caused a great degree of concern,--wheat, sugar, oilseeds, pulses, you will see some moderation and that the economy has the capacity to absorb this hike in oil prices without setting in motion an inflationary spiral.

Question: There are about 3000 young people who want to cross over the Line of Control, but there are now some political parties who want them to be turned back. I want to know your views about that?

Answer: Well any misguided young people, if they want to come back to the path of rectitude, we have to provide them an environment. At the same time, one has to recognize that the creation of these facilities also can be misused by terrorists, ideologically motivated people. So our task is to find practical ways and means to encourage those misguided young people who have a change of heart to come back, to enable them to lead a life of dignity and self respect. At the same time, also to ensure that these facilities are not misused by hardcore terrorist elements who want to destabilize our country.

Question: One of the major problems which Indian community is facing in Saudi Arabia is labour issues. Any positive development in this regard?

Answer: Well at various levels, we have hinted at those issues, let me say that at all levels in the Kingdom, right from his Majesty to the various Ministers that I talked to, they showed great appreciation of the working of the Indian community. They described it as a honest community, a hard working community. So the Kingdom is very happy with the large presence of 1.8 million Indian citizens. There are of course problems, which our Embassy is there to address, and I am hoping that as a result of my visit, we have created an environment whereby when some representations have to be made to the Saudi authorities, they may take a more liberal view of the problems of the Indian workers. I have been successful in creating a climate of opinion to that direction.

Question: Given the primacy of place Saudi Arabia has with Pakistan, and given the fact that we are now in a strategic relationship with Saudi Arabia, do you think Saudi Arabia can be a credible interlocutor for some of the issues that we have with Pakistan?

Answer: Well I know Saudi Arabia has close relations with Pakistan. I did discuss the Indo-Pak relations with His Majesty on a one-to-one basis. I explained to him the role that terrorism, aided, abetted and inspired by Pakistan is playing in our country. And I did not ask for him to do anything other than to use his good offices to persuade Pakistan to desist from this path.

390. Suo Motu Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna, in Parliament on "Prime Minister's Visit to Saudi Arabia".

New Delhi, March 4, 2010.

I rise to inform this august House about the historic visit of the Hon'ble Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia from February 27 to March 1, 2010 at the invitation of His Majesty King Abdullah bin Abdul Aziz Al-Saud.

2. The Prime Minister's visit to Saudi Arabia took place 28 years after the last visit by an Indian Prime Minister, that of late Smt. Indira Gandhi in 1982. Prime Minister was accompanied by a high-powered delegation consisting of Ministers of Health and Family Welfare, Petroleum and Natural Gas, Commerce and Industry and the Minister of State for External Affairs apart from senior officials.

3. Prime Minister was accorded an exceptionally warm welcome by the Saudi leadership. In a departure from protocol, the Prime Minister was received at the airport by His Royal Highness Crown Prince Sultan bin Abdul Aziz, the Minister of Defence and Aviation, Crown Prince Naif Bin Abdul Aziz, Second Deputy Prime Minister and Interior Minister, Crown Prince Salman bin Abdul Aziz, Governor of Riyadh and members of the Saudi Cabinet. Prior to his talks with His Majesty King Abdullah a ceremonial arrival with an impressive Guard of Honour was held at His Majesty's residential Palace which is a rare honour. All these gestures reflected the special significance attached to the Prime Minister's visit by the highest levels of the Saudi leadership.

4. The Prime Minister's visit took place after the visit of His Majesty King Abdullah to India as Chief Guest at our Republic Day celebrations in 2006, when the Delhi Declaration was signed by both leaders.

5. The Hon'ble Prime Minister's visit provided an opportunity for the two leaders to review the progress in bilateral relations in recent years, and in particular the implementation of the Delhi Declaration. They also discussed regional and global issues of mutual interest.
6. Saudi Arabia is an important country and a factor of stability in the region. It is the largest country and economy in the GCC. Economic ties constitute a solid foundation of our relations. Our bilateral trade has seen exponential growth exceeding US$ 25 billion in 2008-09. Saudi Arabia is a reliable, valuable and major supplier of crude oil to India. We import about 20% of our energy requirements from Saudi Arabia which may be further increased over time to meet our energy and development needs. We have been assured of continued Saudi understanding and support in this regard.

7. The most important outcome of the visit was the signing of the historic Riyadh Declaration by the Prime Minister and His Majesty King Abdullah, in which India and Saudi Arabia decided to raise our cooperation to a strategic partnership covering security, economic, defence and political areas. In particular, both leaders emphasised the importance of strengthening the strategic energy partnership. It was also agreed that both sides would work towards meeting their vast requirements relating to infrastructure and development by augmenting the flow of investments into each other’s countries.

8. The two leaders renewed their condemnation of the phenomena of terrorism, extremism and violence, affirming that it is global and threatens all societies and is not linked to any race, colour or belief. The international community must, therefore, resolutely combat terrorism. The two sides agreed to enhance cooperation in exchange of information relating to terrorist activities, money laundering, narcotics, arms and human trafficking, and develop joint strategies to combat these threats.

9. The Prime Minister conveyed our gratitude to the Saudi leadership for the arrangements made for Haj and Umrah pilgrims from India.

10. In addition, the following Agreements and MoUs were signed:

i) Extradition Treaty;

ii) Agreement for Transfer of Sentenced Persons;

iii) Memorandum of Understanding between the Indian Space Research Organisation and the King Abdul Aziz City for Science and Technology for cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space;
iv) Agreement on scientific and technological cooperation between the Department of Science and Technology and the King Abdul Aziz City for Science and Technology in Saudi Arabia; and

v) A MOU on Cultural Cooperation between the respective Ministries of Culture.

11. Several other Agreements in the business, trade, research and education, media and information technology sectors were signed on the sidelines of the visit.

12. As a special gesture, the Prime Minister was invited to address the Majlis Al Shoura in Saudi Arabia. The prestigious Government University, the King Saud University, conferred an Honorary Doctorate on the Hon'ble Prime Minister.

13. A high powered CEOs delegation also accompanied the Prime Minister. They had productive interactions with their Saudi counterparts. There was significant interest in directing Saudi investible surpluses to our infrastructure sector and other mutually beneficial projects. The Prime Minister addressed captains of the Saudi business and industry.

14. The Prime Minister also interacted with a cross-section of the Indian community in Saudi Arabia, which numbers nearly 1.8 million and is the single largest population of Indian passport holders outside India. The Prime Minister applauded their hard work and assured them that their welfare was of paramount concern to us. The Saudi leadership expressed their deep appreciation for the contribution of the Indian community to the development of the Saudi economy.

15. The visit of the Hon'ble Prime Minister was highly successful and has underscored the mutual desire of both countries to take our bilateral relation to a higher level.
Today, Hon'ble Vice President of India Shri M. Hamid Ansari received HRH Prince Salman bin Abdul Aziz Al-Saud, Governor of Riyadh, Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, who is on an official visit to India from April 11-15, 2010. Both the leaders underscored the excellent state of bilateral relations, marked by historic and strong ties that are a part of our history and culture.

The two countries have forged a strategic partnership pursuant to the historic and landmark visits of The Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques, His Majesty King Abdullah bin Abdul Aziz, to India in 2006, and Hon'ble Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, to Saudi Arabia this year.

The Vice President mentioned that given our common interests and concerns, our capabilities and needs, the two countries are poised for a qualitatively substantive and stronger relationship. Saudi Arabia figured prominently in India's energy security matrix, he added. The Vice President welcomed Saudi investments in Indian infrastructure. HRH Prince Salman bin Abdul Aziz Al-Saud emphasized the need for increasing economic and business interaction to promote greater mutual investments. He invited Indian business leaders to explore the Saudi market. He also acknowledged the stellar contribution made by the Indian community in the economic development of Saudi Arabia.

Both the leaders reiterated that extremism and terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, are inherently destructive and must be fought irrespective of their source with all available means.

Later in the day, HRH Prince Salman addressed the leaders of the Indian business community urging them to explore possibilities for trade and investment in the Kingdom. It was decided to exchange more business delegations between the two countries.

HRH Prince Salman bin Abdul Aziz Al-Saud also paid a courtesy call on the Hon'ble President Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil.
SYRIA

392. Briefing by Secretary (East) Vijaya Latha Reddy on President’s Visit to UAE and Syria.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to all of you. You are aware that Rashtrapatiji, Hon. President of India, would be leaving very shortly on a state visit to United Arab Emirates and Syria. Secretary (East) Ms. Latha Reddy is here to brief you on this very important visit of Rashtrapatiji. I would like to introduce two of my colleagues who have joined Secretary East. To her right is Mr. Rajiv Chander, Joint Secretary (Gulf) and to my left is Mr. Rajiv Sahare, Joint Secretary (WANA).

May I now invite Secretary (East) to please make her opening remarks?

Secretary (East) (Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy): Thank you Vishnu and thank you friends for being here.

President of India Smt Pratibha Devisingh Patil will be on a State visit to the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and the Syrian Arab Republic (Syria) from November 21-29, 2010. While the UAE visit will be from November 21-25, the visit to Syria would be from November 26-29.

Rashtrapatiji's forthcoming State visit to UAE would be at the invitation of His Highness Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the President of UAE. It would be our Hon'ble President's first State visit to the Gulf region.

During the visit, apart from the President of UAE, she will be meeting the Vice President & PM of UAE & Ruler of Dubai; the Crown Prince of Abu Dhabi & the Deputy Supreme Commander of UAE Armed Forces, and the Ruler of Sharjah. Apart from Abu Dhabi, President will travel to Dubai and Sharjah. She is being accompanied by senior officials and a business delegation drawn from the leading industry associations.

India-UAE relations have been traditionally warm and friendly and based on continuity, trust and confidence without any irritants. India has had social and mercantile contacts with the Gulf and West Asian region since times immemorial. People-to-people contacts and barter trade have existed for centuries. India-UAE relations have flourished after the creation of the UAE Federation in 1971.
UAE is a significant trading and energy security partner. Indo-UAE trade, valued at US$ 180 million per annum in the 1970s, was valued at US$ 43.4 billion in 2009-2010. UAE emerged as the top destination for India's export with 13.41% share of our total export in year 2009-10. UAE also ranks among the top five suppliers of crude oil to India.

There are more than 450 flights per week between various destinations in India and the UAE. Indians have emerged as important investors within the UAE, and the UAE has around US $ 5 billion investment in India and is one of the biggest investors in terms of FDI.

The President will be addressing the captains of business and industry in UAE during her visit, both in Abu Dhabi and Dubai. In Sharjah, the President would be inaugurating the Indian Trade Exhibition Centre the objective of which is to promote two-way trade, tourism and investment between India and the UAE.

There is considerable goodwill for India in the UAE at all levels and our ties are multi-faceted and have benefited with the regular exchanges of high-level visits from both sides. Since the ninth Session of the India-UAE Joint Commission Meeting (JCM) headed by EAM and the Foreign Minister of UAE, which took place in June 2007 at New Delhi, we have had more than 15 exchanges at Ministerial level between our two countries as well as the visit of Prime Minister and Vice President of UAE to India in March 2010.

The President will also be interacting with a wide cross section of the Indian community in UAE, which numbers nearly 1.75 million and is the largest expatriate community in the UAE whose role and contribution for the development of UAE is widely appreciated. The President will launch an Indian Workers’ Resource Centre during her visit, which is designed to provide 24-hour helpline and counselling services to distressed workers. In addition, the President will inaugurate the premises of the Indian Islamic Centre in Abu Dhabi. In Dubai, she will be address the students and faculty of the Dubai International Academic City where several Indian educational institutions have their branches. In Abu Dhabi, the President will also interact with the students of the Abu Dhabi Indian School.

In the second leg of her tour, President will visit Syria from November 26-29 at the invitation of President Bashar Al Assad. Significantly, this will be the first Presidential visit to Syria from India.
India and Syria have ancient historical linkages dating back several millennia. Archaeological findings provide evidence of 4000 year old trade links between India and Syria and there are linkages between the Mauryan Empire and the contemporary rulers in Syria. It is said that Christianity and Islam reached the shores of India from this region.

President Assad paid a State visit to India in June 2008. The visit strengthened our bilateral political and economic ties. President's visit to Syria will provide the opportunity to carry forward our dialogue and engagement with the Syrian President and the leadership of Syria in all areas. Discussions will take place on bilateral issues - political, economic and cultural. Both sides will also explore investment opportunities in each other's country. On the regional and international front, Middle East Peace Process (MEPP) and Syria's relations with its neighbours will be important segment of President's discussions.

India's engagement in the economic sphere has increased substantially in the aftermath of President Assad's visit: An IT Center is coming up with Indian assistance and would be functional soon; MECON is giving final shape to its feasibility study on utilization of phosphatic resources of Syria; the power project awarded to BHEL is partially funded by us through a US$240 million Line of Credit; and Apollo International of India is up-grading a steel plant in Hama, for which we have extended a Line of Credit of US$25 million.

Our engagement in the hydrocarbon sector with Syria has been rewarding. OVL has investments in Al-Furat Petroleum Company and in Block-24 it has struck oil. OVL is now looking for other opportunities for oil exploration, making Syria important to our energy security. As Syria throws its market open and embarks on a massive development programme, there will be opportunities for India expanding economic links.

The two-way trade level stands at a modest $530 million. The Indo-Syrian joint Commission that met in June this year has decided to work towards doubling the trade shortly. The visit will provide us an opportunity to strengthen economic relations, identify areas of mutually beneficial cooperation and to register our interest in sourcing phosphates, which would help us in our aim to achieve food security. The launching of India-Syria Business Council during President's visit should also give further impetus to our economic relations.

President's engagements in Syria include a meeting with the President of Syria followed by delegation-level talks which are expected to cover bilateral relations, regional issues such as the MEPP and international issues as well. The President will, inter-alia, meet the Prime Minister of Syria, Eng. Mohammad Naji Otri and the Speaker of the Syrian Parliament - Mahmoud Al Abrash. President will address the Indian and local businessmen and launch the Syria-India Business Council. President would also be visiting the International Centre for Agricultural Research in Dry Areas (ICARDA) in Aleppo.

I think I have given you a broad outline of what the programme and what the meetings would be in both the countries. I will be happy to take your questions.

Question: Madam, Syria is one of the oldest ancient cultures in the world. Will any officials from the Culture Ministry also be accompanying the President?

Secretary (East): We are hoping to sign a cultural exchange programme with Syria on this visit. I am sure this will enhance our relations. This has already been negotiated between officials on the Indian side and the Syrian side. While we do not have specifically a delegation from the Culture Ministry, we will carry forward our discussions also on cultural cooperation.

Question: Madam, who all are accompanying the President?

Secretary (East): It is Mr. Bharat Singh Solanki, the Minister of State for Power; and Mr. K.A. Ismael from the Rajya Sabha; Mr. Vijay Bahadur Singh from the Lok Sabha, and Mrs. Masoom Noor from the Lok Sabha.

Question: Madam, you mentioned that the President is going to inaugurate the helpline. What would it cater to?

Secretary (East): This is a project which has been taken on through the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs. And the idea is, given the very large number of workers, as you know in the Gulf overall we have over five million NRIs there and a very large majority of them I would say, on an average about 70 per cent in each of the Gulf countries, are people who are working as workers in projects - both skilled and unskilled labour. They very often do run into problems with their contracts and they need to contact the Embassy in a hurry. They may be in distress, they may have injuries, they may need to be repatriated urgently, they may have a problem with the employer. One of the problems is, of course the Embassy is available and open, the Consular Offices are available, but there was the need felt for a 24 hour helpline so that they could call at any time, and for giving wide publicity taking out advertisements, advising them that you can call this number at any time once in 24 hours, funds will be made available for those in distress. The Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs has undertaken a very wide-ranging programme. In fact, they will be calling in the Gulf Heads of Mission to discuss with them further how we can facilitate the life of our Indians there. There will be a meeting at the end of this month with all our Ambassadors here in Delhi. MEA and MOIA are working together on these programmes.

Question: So, in that issue 18 or 20 Punjabis were on death row in Dubai or Sharjah. Will there be any talk on them also? Even in the last month’s meeting you were saying something.

Secretary (East): The matter is still sub judice in the sense that it is still being held in court. It is under appeal. We have provided legal counsel, we have facilitated visits by the family and others to these people. Taking it up with the Government or submitting a mercy petition would come at a later stage once we have exhausted all legal resources. But we are in touch with them and we are extending them all the necessary assistance.

Question: I just wanted to know the MEA and CAS stand over our claim to the United Nations Security Council membership. What has been their stand on Jammu and Kashmir?

Secretary (East): I will answer your second question first. Their stand has been that this is a bilateral issue to be settled by dialogue between India and Pakistan and they recognize our position. As far as the United Nations Security Council is concerned, both these countries supported our non-permanent membership and have expressed support for our permanent membership as well.
393. Statement of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil to media on board her special flight on way to the UAE and Syria.

November 21, 2010.

Please see Document No.404.

394. Statement by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil to the Press.

Damascus, November 27, 2010.

First of all I would like to say that I am very happy to be in Syria, a beautiful country and which like India is an inheritor of an ancient civilization.

I am visiting Syria to carry forward the dialogue that I had with President Assad when he visited India in June 2008. I have just concluded very constructive talks with President Assad and I am glad to share with the media the outcome of these discussions. The meeting today was held in a cordial atmosphere and covered bilateral matters, as well as regional and international issues of mutual interest.

We are happy with the progress in India-Syria bilateral relations over the last few years, and are committed to further strengthening our ties.

The global economic downturn posed serious challenges since early 2008. Both India and Syria were affected, but have recovered and are confident of achieving higher rates of growth in the coming years. In Syria, this is the result of the pragmatic economic reforms being implemented under President Assad's leadership. Economic progress in the two countries would open up several new avenues for engagement between the industrialists and business communities of the two countries. In our discussions we recalled the decision taken at the bilateral Joint Commission that met in Damascus in June this year, to double bilateral trade levels in the next 2 to 3 years and reaffirmed that this target should be achieved. The business delegation that is accompanying me would be discussing these new opportunities with their Syrian counterparts. The India-Syria Business Council to be launched tomorrow will focus on strengthening economic and commercial links. Areas that offer enormous potential for mutually advantageous co-operation are the phosphate sector and tourism.

One of the main reasons for economic engagement not having reached the potential is the lack of awareness of each others’ requirements and capabilities. In the talks today, India has offered $100 million Line of Credit to be used by Syria in sectors to be mutually agreed upon, keeping in view Syria’s priorities. While this will be the third Line of Credit, the purpose behind this offer is to encourage Indian companies to involve themselves in developmental projects in Syria, which will give them good exposure to the Syrian market, and would also showcase to Syria the potential of Indian companies. This, I am confident, will lead to increased economic engagement.

The IT Centre for Excellence, a project of India-Syria co-operation agreed upon during President Assad’s visit to India, will start functioning very soon. India looks forward to closer co-operation with Syria in fields such as IT and training in highly specialized fields. To facilitate this, as also for capacity building in other areas, the number of scholarships for Syria under the ITEC programme will be increased from the present 45 to 90. I call upon Syria to make full use of this offer.

A Cultural Exchange Programme and two agreements on co-operation between media organizations are being signed later today. These would facilitate greater flow of information and bring the people of the two countries closer.

India has consistently supported all just Arab causes. I would like to reiterate India’s unwavering support for a lasting and comprehensive peace to the Middle East problem, based on relevant UN resolutions. I would also like to reiterate our strong support for Syria’s legitimate right to the Golan Heights, and for its very early and full return to Syria.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

Given the commitment of both sides, I am confident that in the coming years, relations between our two countries will continue to flourish. I wish to thank President Assad, the Government and the people of Syria for the great warmth and gracious hospitality extended to me and my delegation. I wish the people of Syria a very prosperous and peaceful future.

395. Statement by Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy on President's engagements at Damascus.

Damascus, November 27, 2010.

As you are aware our President arrived in Damascus yesterday on a State Visit. As a special gesture, HE Syrian President Bashar Al Assad and First Lady Asma Al-Assad made a courtesy call on the President in the same evening. Earlier, President visited Ummayad Mosque which considered to be one of the oldest and largest mosques in the world. Significantly, the mosque also holds the relics of John the Baptist.

President commenced her official programme in Syria today with a ceremonial welcome accorded to her by President Bashar Al Assad at the picturesque Presidential Palace. There was a brief meeting between the two Presidents along with spouses. This was followed by delegation level talks led by both Presidents. From our side, Shri Bharatsinh Solanki, Hon'ble Minister of State for Power; Shri K.E. Ismail and Shri Vijay Bahadur Singh, Hon'ble Members of Parliament; and Senior Officials participated in the talks. The Syrian side included Vice President Farouk Al-Shara; Foreign Minister Walid Al Moualem; Minister of Trade and Economy Lamia Marie Aasi; Minister for Presidential Affairs Monsour Azzam; Adviser to the President for Political and Media Affairs Bouthaina Shaaban and Senior Officials.

At the outset, President Assad extended a very warm welcome to President and the accompanying delegation. He said that this "first visit of the President is symbolic for every Syrian citizen and is a momentous occasion in India-Syria bilateral ties” which both countries have been enjoying since the last six decades. He stated that India and Syria share common vision and have similar values and expressed hope that the visit would be fruitful in every way in strengthening the friendship and the historic ties between the two countries. This is indicative of the warm and cordial atmosphere in which the talks were held.

President Assad fondly recalled his visit to India in June 2008 which laid the foundation for further enhancement and strengthening of historical ties with India. Both leaders dwelt upon the strong civilisational linkages between the two countries dating back several millennia. Our President referred to her visit to the Ummayad Mosque which is a symbol of Syria’s strong secular tradition which India shares as well. They underscored the need for further enhancing of the ties and strengthening the cooperation in all fields to take this relationship to a higher level.

The two leaders held wide ranging discussions on bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest. On the bilateral economic side, both leaders expressed deep satisfaction on the engagement between the two countries in the last two years which led to, inter alia, setting up of an IT Center of excellence in Damascus, a power plant being upgraded by BHEL, feasibility study on utilization of phosphates and upgradation of a steel plant. They also dwelt upon cooperation in the hydrocarbon sector, particularly with reference to OVL’s investments in oil exploration. President Assad also invited Indian expertise and companies in making Syria a pipeline hub by linking Central Asia, Egypt, Jordan, Turkey and Iran. Both sides discussed the possibility of long term arrangements for utilization of phosphate deposits in Syria for mutual benefit. Both sides also agreed to boost tourism in each other’s country.

Responding to Syria’s need for training and upgradation of its human resources in information technology, as also for capacity building in other areas, we offered to increase the number of scholarships under the ITEC Programme from the present 45 to 90.

Both sides also reviewed the level of trade which currently stands at US$ 540 million and agreed to work towards increasing trade and commerce. In this regard, both sides welcomed the proposed launching of India-Syria Business Council tomorrow, which would focus on strengthening of business and commercial relations. We offered a US$ 100 million Line of Credit to be used by Syria in sectors mutually agreed upon. This was welcomed with great appreciation by the Syrian President. It would be pertinent to mention here that this would be the third line of credit extended by India; the earlier two being US$ 240 million which is being utilized for upgradation of the Tishreen Power Plant and US$ 25 million for upgradation of a steel plant in Hama by Apollo International of India. Both sides also discussed cooperation in frontier areas of science and technology such as bio-technology, information technology, pharmaceutical and food technology.

With regard to Palestine and the Middle East Peace Process, the Syrian side appreciated India's principled and unwavering support to the cause of Palestine and the Middle East. President reaffirmed "India's unwavering support for the Palestinian struggle for a sovereign, independent, viable and united state of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders side by side and at peace with Israel. India's solidarity with Palestine struggle for the realization of its fundamental rights is an article of faith for us and enjoys national consensus in India. India has and will always support the Palestinian people in their pursuit of their legitimate goals based on dignity."

President also reiterated India's support for the legitimate right of Syria to the Golan Heights and noted with appreciation the sober and peaceful approach Syria has adopted in addressing this issue.

Condemning incidents of terrorism as global phenomena, Syria reiterated its condemnation of the Mumbai terrorist attacks of 26.11.2008, of which the second anniversary was marked yesterday. Stating that extremism and terrorism must be contained, Syria renewed its support to India in this effort and offered to help in combating terrorism.

India appreciated Syria's support in our election to the Security Council for the term 2011-12 and welcomed Syria's support for India's membership as a permanent member to the expanded UN Security Council which was reiterated by President Assad.
The following three agreements were signed later this afternoon at the State Planning Commission, which would further enhance our bilateral ties:

i) Executive Programme of Cultural Cooperation for the period 2010-2013, which envisages, inter alia, cooperation in the fields of cinema, archaeology, performing arts, libraries, exhibitions;

ii) MOU of Cooperation between the Syrian Arab News Agency and the Press Trust of India for exchange of news, photographs and bilateral visits; and

iii) MOU of Cooperation between Syrian General Directorate for Television and Radio and Prasar Bharati for exchange of TV and radio programmes, joint production of programmes and exchange of visits.

396. Speech of President Pratibha Devisingh Patil at a Banquet hosted in her honour by Syrian President Dr. Bashar al-Assad.

Damascus, November 27, 2010.

On behalf of my delegation and on my own behalf, I would like to express gratitude for the warmth with which we have been received and for the gracious hospitality extended to us. May I say that to be in your beautiful country is a wonderful experience. I bring to you and the friendly people of Syria, the very best wishes of the people of India.

India-Syria relations are marked by warmth, friendship and mutual respect. Our two countries are inheritors of ancient civilizations that have cherished and preserved their age old value systems, including respect for diversity and equal treatment for all religions. Our contacts go back at least 4000 years, when India used to send raw silk and spices to Syria, and receive in return gold and silk fabric. Our trading interaction through the ancient Silk route was accompanied with the awareness about each other's culture and knowledge. These interactions have continued to the present day.

In the first half of the last century, both India and Syria were engaged resolutely in shaking off the yoke of colonialism. As independent nations from around the same time, we have been engaged actively in addressing the problems of our people. It is a matter of satisfaction that both our countries have achieved significant successes. India is hopeful of achieving 8.5 percent growth this year. As a national objective, India is committed to inclusive growth and is taking pro-active steps to ensure that no section of society is left behind.

I am glad to learn that the economic reforms launched in Syria under your guidance and leadership, have started yielding dividends. Your objective of working for a social market economy, is not much different from our approach of inclusive growth. The aim is to address poverty, even as we focus on rapid development.

There is scope for further strengthening of the multi-faceted relations between our two countries. The agreements that were signed today, US $100 million Line of Credit extended by India, and the enhancement of scholarships for Syria under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation programme, from the present level of 45 slots to 90 slots, would greatly facilitate this. I am also confident that the India-Syria Business Council to be launched tomorrow, will identify new areas for mutually beneficial economic engagement. Indian companies are already involved in the energy, petroleum and IT sectors, and are keenly looking forward to contributing and participating in Syria's development programme.

Excellency,

West Asia is of vital importance to us. We enjoy cultural and commercial links with countries in this region. We share the perception that the conflict in West Asia is essentially political in nature, and cannot be resolved by force. In line with our support for UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, India supports a negotiated solution resulting in a sovereign, independent, viable and united State of Palestine, living within secure and recognized borders, side by side at peace with Israel, as endorsed in the Quartet Roadmap and UNSC Resolutions 1397 and 1515. We have supported the Arab Peace Plan, which calls for withdrawal of Israel to pre-1967 borders, along with the recognition of Israel, and the establishment of the State of Palestine with East Jerusalem as its capital. We remain hopeful that the talks and negotiations would lead to a comprehensive peace process for the final resolution of the Middle East conflict.

I would like to convey our sincere appreciation for Syria’s support for India’s election to the UN Security Council for 2011-2012. Membership of the Security Council confers a special responsibility on us. During our forthcoming term in the Security Council, we will seek to discharge our duties and obligations constructively and objectively as a responsible member of the international community. We hope to work closely with other Member States for a balanced approach on peace and security issues. We highly appreciate the consistent support expressed by Syria for India’s permanent membership of the UN Security Council.

Excellency,

Ever since our arrival in your historic and beautiful country, we have been experiencing the feeling of friendship that the people of Syria have for India. I would like to wish you, Excellency and Madame Asma Al-Assad continued success in the coming years. I also wish the friendly people of Syria peace and prosperity. With our commitment to further strengthen bilateral contacts, India-Syria relations will continue to blossom in the coming years.

Thank you.
I am glad to participate in this important event which brings together the business communities of India and Syria. Bilateral trade links date back at least 4000 years. Apart from direct trade, Syria, in the centuries past, was the meeting point of traders from the East and the West and continues to be a hub in contemporary times. We should renew our focus on bilateral economic and commercial ties, which at current levels is far below potential. The Bilateral Joint Commission that met in Damascus in June this year, identified ways of strengthening these ties, including doubling bilateral trade levels in the next 2 to 3 years. We should now take it forward.

Both India and Syria are expanding economies that have successfully weathered the global economic crisis. This was possible due to an effective regulatory framework and a prudent monetary policy. Also, exposure to toxic assets and dependence on exports for growth was low. India is likely to register 8.5 percent growth in the current year, which should offer plenty of opportunities for the Syrian business community. I am confident that this growth rate will be sustained in the coming years also. I am glad to be informed that the Syrian economy has also been doing well, and that the outlook for the future is good. Syria is committed to economic reforms and has ambitious development plans, particularly in the infrastructure sector. I am sure that the India business delegation will identify several avenues to involve itself and contribute to Syria's developmental plans. Indian companies are already involved in the development programme of Syria. OVL is engaged in exploring for and production of oil; BHEL is putting up a power plant; and Apollo International is extending assistance in the modernization of the Steel Rolling Mill in Hama. MECON is close to completing a feasibility report on utilization of phosphatic resources of Syria. This, I am hopeful, would lead to greater Indian interest in this sector.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Over 13 centuries back, in 662 A.D. a Syrian scholar monk Severus Sebokht recognised with appreciation the skill of Indians in computing and said ‘their computing ?? surpasses description’. By way of expressing gratitude to Sebokht for his prescient remarks, we are setting up an IT Centre of Excellence in Damascus. The Centre would become operational very soon. This would, no doubt, contribute to the growth of the IT sector in Syria.

An important item on the agenda for my talks with His Excellency President Assad was strengthening of bilateral, commercial and economic links. I was struck by the keen interest that President Assad evinced in this subject. I am thankful to him for the personal attention that he pays to relations with India. India and Syria are committed to inclusive growth or growth with social equity. The business community can and should contribute in this effort and the Governments would be happy to assist in this process, by creating a conducive environment.

FICCI and CII have signed MOUs with the Federation of Syrian Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Syrian Chamber of Industry respectively. These have facilitated frequent and closer contacts between the business communities of our two countries. Today we are launching the Syria-India Business Council. The formation of this Council would add to efforts to further strengthen trade and economic ties. I am confident that the Council will function effectively, will disseminate information on opportunities in the two countries, work closely with the Governments in addressing the specific problems that hinder the smooth flow of commerce and bring the business communities of the two countries closer, so that they become partners in development efforts. I extend felicitations to the two co-chairpersons Mr. V.R.S. Natarajan of India and Mr. Ali Khwanda of Syria and members of the Council, and wish them every success in what they are setting out to do.

I am sure that all of you would find the interaction that would follow this session fruitful. Let me wish the business persons every success in their efforts to see that the economic and commercial engagement between India and Syria further expands.

I am delighted to visit Syria, the cradle of civilization, and its capital Damascus, which Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru described as a city where every stone tells a story of past history. I am happy to be amidst you this evening. I bring to you greetings and good wishes from India.

India and Syria share many things in common. Both countries are endowed with a rich heritage; we are pluralistic societies with secular credentials; we inherit a vibrant culture. Our time-tested links are civilizational, clocking almost four thousand years treaded via the Silk Route. We take pride in our traditional linkages. Moreover, India and Syria underwent similar experiences in the first half of the 20th Century, and through the sacrifice of their citizens, achieved independence from colonial rule around the same time. Since independence we have had close, friendly and cordial relations with Syria. That Syria highly regards our contribution to freedom movements all over the world is borne out in their decision, to name an important street here after Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, the first Prime Minister of India, and one of the foremost freedom fighters of India, who supported such movements in Asia and Africa.

Since our arrival in Damascus, my delegation and I have been overwhelmed by Syrian warmth and friendliness. All of us fondly recall President Assad's visit to India in June 2008. We attach strong importance to our friendly relations with Syria. I had very cordial and fruitful talks with President Bashar al-Assad. To further enhance our traditional relations, a number of agreements were signed yesterday. I also had useful discussions with Prime Minister Mr. Mohammad Naji Otri and Speaker Mr. Mahmoud al-Abrash.

India and Syria have weathered the global economic crisis. India is expecting to achieve a growth rate of 8.5 percent this year. I was glad to learn that the Syrian economy also has been doing quite well. In the two years between President Assad's visit to India and my visit here, we have made a conscious effort to enhance our economic cooperation. To cite a few cases, BHEL is carrying out a project in the power sector. Apollo International is helping in the modernization of a steel rolling mill; an MOU has been concluded in October 2010 for cooperation in the phosphates sector; an IT Centre for Excellence is being set up in Damascus and will be functional very soon; and ONGC Videsh Limited has investments in the oil sector. Some Indian companies have forged joint ventures and long term contracts with their Syrian counterparts. I am happy to learn that Indian experts were involved in setting up of Syria's first cement plant some decades ago. The India-Syria Business Council launched today should prove to be useful in forging many more business ties. With both countries focusing on development, the future augurs well, and I am convinced that our relations will surely and steadily scale greater heights in the coming years, and that Indian companies will continue to contribute to the growth of the Syrian economy.

I am glad to learn that Indians are participating in many spheres and activities in Syria. Indian scientists in the International Centre for Agricultural Research in the Dry Areas, have made valuable contributions to research. I will be visiting this facility tomorrow in Aleppo. Also Sisters from Missionaries of Charity from Kolkata are running 4 centres in Syria to take care of elderly persons. This evening I was happy to make a contribution to one of the Centres to enable it to enhance its facilities. I was very happy to meet them a few moments ago.

Fellow citizens, wherever my travels have taken me, I have always found Indian nationals commanding respect and assimilating with ease the milieu of the land and culture they live in. Syrian people are warm, friendly and hospitable. This should make it easy for you to adjust to the new environs, and contribute in whatever way you can to enrich Syrian society, and enhance friendly relations between India and Syria.

I convey to you my greetings and wish you all success in your future endeavours.

Thank you.
I am here to provide an update on the meetings and discussions held by our President since my last briefing yesterday. President met the Syrian Prime Minister, Mr. Naji Al Otri yesterday afternoon. The Syrian side included four cabinet ministers i.e. Minister of Industry Dr. Fouad Isa Al Jouni; Minister of Oil & Mineral Resources Sufian Alao; Minister of Electricity Dr. Ahmad Kussai Kayali; Minister for Presidential Affairs Mansour Azzam; and other senior officials. From our side, Shri Bharatsinh Solanki, Hon'ble Minister of State for Power; Shri K.E. Ismail and Shri Vijay Bahadur Singh, Hon'ble Members of Parliament; and senior officials were present.

Prime Minister Otri extended a warm welcome to our President and noted that the diverse and historic bilateral relations have gathered a "new momentum", particularly in trade and economic relations, which PM Otri termed as 'important and strategic'. President thanked PM Otri and the Government of Syria for the excellent arrangements and warm welcome, and conveyed our Prime Minister's greetings. They reviewed the bilateral relations, our current economic engagement and explored new areas of cooperation.

PM Otri expressed satisfaction on the ongoing projects having India's participation and in particular mentioned the upgradation of Tishreen Power plant by BHEL, financed through our line of credit for US $ 240 million and OVL’s participation in exploration of hydrocarbons in Syria. PM Otri invited Indian companies to participate more in the 'expanding and promising' sectors of power and hydrocarbons. In response, MOS Power, Hon'ble Shri Bharatsinh Solanki conveyed our interest in power sector in Syria and said that PSUs like NTPC and Power Grid Corporation could be potential participants. PM Otri also sought Indian participation in phosphates and manufacturing of phosphate based fertilizers especially phosphoric acid. Our President said that long term arrangement for phosphates could be explored.

Our President and PM Otri discussed in detail the possibility of cooperation in agriculture and animal husbandry. The Syrian side also sought our participation in their railways and metro projects.
On cooperation in information technology, our President said that technical education and IT are key components to a knowledge economy and the IT centre for excellence in Damascus being set up by India would contribute towards it. India has strength in this sector and is willing to share it with Syria.

They also discussed regional and international issues of mutual importance particularly the Middle East Peace Process. Our President reiterated India's position of support to Palestine and to Syria on the Golan Heights.

In view of the enhanced engagement between India and Syria and the momentum generated by this visit, our President and PM Otri agreed that there should be more high level ministerial contacts to follow up all issues discussed during the visit. This was also suggested by H.E. President Bashar Al Assad in the meeting earlier. These could be in addition to regular meetings of the Joint Commission meetings chaired by the two Commerce Ministers.

In the evening, President Bashar Al Assad and the First Lady Asma Al Assad hosted a State Banquet in honour of our President and Dr. Devisingh Ramsingh Shekhawat. The banquet was attended by Syrian leaders and included the two Vice Presidents, the Speaker, and Ministers; senior Syrian government officials and representatives from the cultural, business and the civil society communities. You can observe from the banquet speeches, which have already been distributed to you, the warmth and cordiality in our relations.

Today, our President visited the Syrian Parliament and met the Speaker Mr. Mahmoud Al Abrash. From the Syrian side, five members of the People's Assembly, Minister for Presidential Affairs Mansour Azzam and other senior officials were present. They discussed cooperation between the parliamentary institutions of both countries, particularly in the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU). The Speaker informed our President that a Syria-India friendship group has been set up in the Syrian Parliament.

Our President visited a well known NGO "AAMAL" which provides excellent facilities for disabled children and helps them in rehabilitation. The institution also trains the trainers and families in these specialized fields. She was received by the First Madam Asma Al Assad who is also the chairperson of this pioneer institute. President donated two million Syrian pounds (equivalent to Indian Rs.20 lakhs) for the activities of AAMAL.

In the afternoon, President attended the Syria-India ‘Business Summit' and launched the India Syria Business Council. Syrian Minister for Trade and Economy Lamia Aasi was present and delivered an address at the event. You were present there and the copy of our President's address has also been circulated. As you may have noted, economic engagement between India and Syria and the ways and means to further enhance it was predominant in our discussions with the Syrian leadership at all levels. The launching of the Council would provide the forum and the platform to give a fillip to our economic and commercial relations.

I understand that FICCI has prepared a detailed report on their interactions with their counterparts in Abu Dhabi, Dubai and Damascus during this visit.

In the evening, our President will meet the Indian community at a reception hosted by our Ambassador at Hotel Four Seasons. We have a small but active Indian community in Syria. There are approximately 1000 Indian nationals in Syria working in Indian companies, students pursuing religious studies, and officials of the Indian Army who are part of the UNDOF. Before the Indian Community reception, our President will meet the Sisters from Missionaries of Charity who have a number of old age homes in Syria. President would be making a donation of Syrian Pounds 1 million (approximately Rs. 10 lakhs) to meet the cost of equipment for their old age home in Aleppo.

Tomorrow, the President will conclude her State Visit to Syria. She will visit the International Centre for Agriculture Research in the Dry Areas (ICARDA) in Aleppo, another historical city in Syria. A number of Indian scientists are working at and closely associated with ICARDA. Dryland farming is an area of mutual interest.

I understand that ICARDA would be giving a presentation on ICARDA here. I am sure it would be of interest to all of you.
I have just concluded a very successful visit to the United Arab Emirates and Syria, two friendly countries with whom we have enjoyed civilisational ties over the millennia. My visit reinforced these traditional bonds of friendship.

In my discussions with a broad section of the political leadership in the UAE and Syria, I had a useful exchange of views on a wide range of issues of common interest. There is deep appreciation of India's role in global affairs and acknowledgement of its growing importance.

The visit enabled me to put across to the leadership and business communities in both countries the possibilities and opportunities of increasing our economic engagement. The business delegation accompanying me had fruitful discussions with their counterparts. There is strong interest to explore the many complementarities that exist between our economies.

An important and, indeed, a very satisfying aspect of this visit was my interaction with a cross-section of the Indian community. It made me proud when I was told by the leadership of these countries as to how they valued the contributions of our countrymen. Their role adds another element of vitality to our relationship.

In the UAE, my meeting with His Highness Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the President of the UAE, was highly productive. We agreed that our bilateral multi-faceted relationship was progressing well, as also reflected by the fact that the UAE and India are each other's leading trading partners. We agreed on the need to further enhance our strategic partnership by focussing on areas such as education, science & technology, agriculture & food processing, energy security, desalination technology, regional security and many other potential areas for cooperation. Many of these would be addressed by the forthcoming meeting in Abu Dhabi of the Joint Commission headed by the two Foreign Ministers.

It was agreed that to discuss the specific issue of UAE investments in India's petroleum sector, power generation and infrastructure projects, His Highness Sheikh Mansour Bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the Deputy Prime Minister of the UAE and Minister of Presidential Affairs would be visiting India at an early date.

In Dubai, I met the Vice President and the Prime Minister of UAE, the Ruler of Dubai His Highness Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum, who also reaffirmed the commitment of the UAE leadership to strengthen ties with India.

During my visit to Sharjah, the first ever by an Indian President, I was received by His Highness Dr. Sheikh Sultan Bin Mohammed Al Qassimi, the Ruler of Sharjah. He was present in the function where I inaugurated the India Trade and Exhibition Centre that will work to further facilitate Indian business activity in the UAE and the region.

There was strong endorsement of India’s candidature for a permanent seat on an expanded UN Security Council by the UAE leadership at the highest levels. My discussions with them on enhanced security cooperation, particularly to address issues relating to counter-terrorism and maritime security, were productive. Both sides now look forward to the early signing of the Agreement on Security Cooperation during the visit of the UAE Interior Minister to India at the invitation of our Union Home Minister.

In my meetings with the UAE leadership I had the occasion to convey our appreciation for their positive attitude towards the more than 1.75 million strong Indian community that has made the UAE their home. Indians, as the largest expatriate community in the UAE, have on their part been active contributors to the growth and development of the UAE, a fact appreciated by the UAE leadership.

I had numerous occasions to see the vibrant life of the Indian community - whether it was the visit to the Abu Dhabi Indian School; my inauguration of the Indian Islamic Centre whose foundation stone had been laid, fortuitously by the first woman Prime Minister of India, Smt. Indira Gandhi; the function at the Indian Social & Cultural Centre in Abu Dhabi; and the India Club in Dubai where I inaugurated the Indian Workers Resource Centre meant to provide assistance to the large number of Indians working in the UAE. My visit to the Dubai International Academic City showed the growing footprint of Indian academic institutions in the UAE.

The second part of my journey was to Syria, where the entire leadership deeply appreciated the first Presidential visit from India. In the words of President Assad - the first visit was "symbolic for every Syrian citizen and a momentous occasion in India-Syria bilateral ties".

I had a number of meetings with President Bashar Al-Assad. We reviewed our bilateral ties since our last meeting in June 2008 when President Assad visited New Delhi. He expressed satisfaction on India's engagement in sectors of Power, Hydrocarbons, phosphates and the IT sector. President Assad invited Indian companies in making Syria a pipeline hub, by linking Central Asia, Egypt, Jordan, Turkey and Iran. We also discussed cooperation in bio-technology, pharmaceutical and food technology.

We reviewed the level of trade which currently stands at US$ 540 million and agreed to work towards increasing it. India has offered a US$ 100 million Line of Credit to be used by Syria in sectors to be mutually agreed upon. This was welcomed with great appreciation by the Syrian President.

I also had a fruitful meeting with the Syrian Prime Minister, Mohammad Najj Al-Otri, who invited India for enhanced engagement in the power, IT, oil and phosphate fertilizer sectors. We also agreed to explore areas of cooperation in agriculture, animal husbandry, railways and metro projects.

It was agreed that there should be more high-level ministerial contacts to follow up on all issues discussed during my visit. These could be in addition to regular meetings of the India-Syria Joint Commission.

President Assad reiterated Syria's support for a permanent seat for India in an expanded UN Security Council.
The Syrian leadership appreciated India's principled and continuous support to the cause of Palestine and the Middle East. I reaffirmed India's unwavering support for the Palestinian struggle for a sovereign, independent, viable and united state of Palestine living within secure and recognized borders side by side and at peace with Israel.

I also reaffirmed India's support for the legitimate right of Syria on the Golan Heights and noted with appreciation the sober and peaceful approach Syria has adopted in addressing this issue.

Syria reiterated its condemnation of the Mumbai terrorist attacks of 26 November 2008. Stating that extremism and terrorism must be contained, Syria renewed its support to India in this effort and offered to help in combating terrorism.

Three agreements were signed on the sidelines of my visit - two pertaining to cooperation in the field of media and one in field of culture, which would further enhance our bilateral ties. In addition, an MOU was signed setting up the India-Syria Business Council, which would focus on strengthening of business and commercial relations.

I also exchanged views with the Speaker of Syrian People's Assembly, Dr. Mahmoud Al-Abrash on the functioning of our respective Parliaments. We emphasized the importance of interaction between Parliamentarians in strengthening the relationship. He informed that an India-Syria Friendship Group has been set up in the Syrian Parliament.

I visited AAMAL, an institution for the physically challenged, run by the First Lady of Syria, Mrs. Asma Al-Assad and was very impressed with its work. I made a contribution of Two Million Syrian Pounds equivalent to Rupees twenty lakhs, to the institution.

I had an opportunity to meet the Indian community, which although small, is active and vibrant. I interacted with sisters from Missionaries of Charity, Kolkata, and donated One Million Syrian Pounds equivalent to Rupees ten lakhs, to one of their Centres, taking care of the elderly, to enhance its facilities.
Earlier today, I also paid a visit to the International Centre for Research in the Dry Areas (ICARDA) in Aleppo, another historic city in Syria. A number of Indian scientists are working in and are closely associated with ICARDA. Dryland farming is an area of great importance for global food security as well as for a second Green Revolution in India. As 40% of food production in our country is from dry land areas, the work being done in ICARDA would provide valuable inputs for improving our agriculture productivity and food production. ICARDA has agreed to my suggestion to take up, India specific research and development for which project assistance could be provided.

Overall, I am satisfied with my visit to the UAE and Syria, important countries in our extended neighbourhood. The momentum generated should take forward our bilateral relations with both these countries.

Like me, you too would have seen and experienced the affection and goodwill that exists for India in both the countries at all levels. I hope you enjoyed the trip and it was productive.

I thank all of you.

401. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of UAE Vice President and Prime Minister and Ruler of Dubai Mohammed Bin Rashid Al Makhtoum.

New Delhi, March 11, 2010.

His Highness Sheikh Mohammed Bin Rashid Al Makhtoum, UAE Vice President & Prime Minister, Ruler of Dubai paid a working visit to India on March 11, 2010. The visiting dignitary called on Hon'ble Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. He was accompanied by HH Sheikh Maktoum Bin Mohammed Bin Rashid Al Maktoum, Deputy Ruler of Dubai, HE Sheikh Ahmad Bin Saeed Al Maktoum, Head of Dubai Higher Committee for Financial Policy, HE Ms. Reem Ibrahim Al-Hashmi, Minister of State and other senior officials from UAE. During the meeting, issues of mutual interest to both countries were discussed, including greater collaboration in combating the menace of terrorism, and enhancing security cooperation. The two leaders also reviewed the state of bilateral relations in order to take the relationship between the two countries to a higher level, and to increase cooperation in technology, trade and investments so that the full potential existing in the two countries could be realized to their mutual advantage.

In 2009, UAE with $ 45 billion bilateral trade has emerged as India’s largest trading partner. Investments from the UAE also significantly increased, especially in the infrastructure sector.

His Highness Sheikh Mohammed had earlier visited India in March 2007.

New Delhi, September 21, 2010.

India United Arab Emirates Political Consultations were held on 19th September 2010 in Abu Dhabi. The Indian side was led by Ms Vijayalatha Reddy, Secretary (East) and the UAE side by Dr. Anwar Mohammed Gargash, UAE Minister of State for Foreign Affairs.

The high level consultations reviewed the current state of bilateral relations between India and the UAE. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the friendly relations based on historic links and agreed to intensify high level bilateral exchanges to consolidate the excellent relations. In this context the need for early convening of the Ministerial level India-UAE Joint Commission meeting was underscored. The sides also expressed satisfaction at the growth of trade and economic links particularly that they had become largest trading partners for each other. Discussions focused on UAE investments in the aviation, ports, telecommunications and oil and gas sectors. The Indian side proposed that the India-UAE Trade policy forum set up by the two countries to facilitate bilateral trade should be made more active. It requested more investment from the UAE in India especially in the infrastructural areas.

The two sides reviewed the status of proposed agreements, such as on Security cooperation, Transfer of sentenced persons, Mutual Assistance on Customs Matters etc. They agreed to expedite the conclusion of these agreements.

The sides exchanged views on major regional and global issues, including the middle-east peace process, reform of the United Nations, reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan etc. They noted similarity of perceptions and agreed to have regular consultations.

The two sides acknowledged the positive role of the Indian community in the development of India-UAE relations and the Indian side thanked the UAE side for protecting the welfare of the Indian community.
403. Briefing by Secretary (East) Vijaya Latha Reddy on President's Visit to UAE and Syria.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

Please see Document No.392.

404 Statement of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil to the media on board her special flight on way to the UAE and Syria.

November 21, 2010.

Today I commence my first official visit to the Gulf and the West Asia regions, with journeys to the United Arab Emirates and Syria. My visit will, I am confident, reaffirm India's interest to strengthen ties with countries in these regions, which are a part of our extended neighbourhood.

I am visiting the UAE at the invitation of His Highness Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed Al Nahyan, President of the UAE. I will be meeting with a wide cross section of the UAE polity and society during my visit, which takes me to Dubai and Sharjah besides Abu Dhabi.

India has enjoyed historic, warm, friendly and multifaceted relations with the UAE. These relations stretch back over millennia and our civilisational links are well known. The Arabian Sea was the ancient highway across which our ancestors exchanged goods, ideas and much more. It is, therefore, no surprise that our ties which flourished through the ages have deepened and broadened in contemporary times. Since the creation of the UAE Federation in 1971, these links have been nurtured and sustained by exchange of high level visits.

Our relationship with the UAE is free of any irritants which enables us to focus on the many positives that define our relationship. I look forward to my discussions with His Highness Sheikh Khalifa, as well as other dignitaries, so that we can look at ways and means to further strengthen our bilateral ties in order to realize the full potential that exists between our two friendly countries.

I will also be interacting with the business community, both Indian and local, in the UAE. Our bilateral trade which stood at a modest figure of around U.S. Dollars 180 million in the early seventies, is today valued at U.S. Dollars 43 billion, which makes the UAE one of our leading trade partners. While emphasizing the possibilities of further expanding our trade, I will highlight the tremendous scope for investing in India's infrastructure. Our fast growing stable economy with its strong fundamentals, makes India an attractive investment destination.

The UAE is one of our leading suppliers of crude oil, playing an important role in the energy security of India. As a country whose energy requirements will increase significantly in the years to come, continued co-operation in this sector is important.

In particular, I look forward to meeting with our countrymen who, thanks to the welcome and encouragement received from the host Government and people, have through their hard work and dedication, contributed to the development and well-being of the host country. Their positive contribution is no doubt a major factor behind the fact that the Indian community is the largest expatriate community in the UAE. My programme includes several elements, which would give me a glimpse of the various facets of the Indian community in the UAE. I would be interacting with the children of the Abu Dhabi Indian School and meeting with the students at the Dubai Academic City. I would also have the opportunity to inaugurate the new premises of the Indian Islamic Centre in Abu Dhabi. The welfare of the overseas Indian community, particularly our workers, is always uppermost in my mind. I am, therefore, happy that I will be inaugurating the Indian Workers' Resource Centre in Dubai.

In the second segment of my tour, I will be visiting Syria which will be the first Presidential visit from India. India and Syria enjoy traditionally friendly ties and cooperate actively in the UN and NAM. Significantly, Syria has expressed support for India's Permanent Membership of the UNSC. India, too, on its part, has always supported all just Arab causes, and has consistently supported the return of the Golan Heights to Syria, which remains occupied by Israel since 1967.
President Bashar Al Assad visited India in June 2008 when I had the opportunity to have an extensive dialogue with him on bilateral, regional and international issues. During my visit, I look forward to continuing discussions with President Assad ( ), with a view to further strengthening our ties. I will also be exchanging views with the Prime Minister and the Speaker of the Syrian Assembly.

On the economic and business aspects, apart from discussing these with the Syrian leadership, I will be addressing Indian and Syrian business persons and launching the India-Syria Business Council. We seek to increase the level of our bilateral trade which stands at a modest U.S. Dollars 540 million. As Syria intends to open its markets and embark on massive development, there should be plenty of opportunities for India to expand its economic links. Syria is also important to us for our energy security. OVL already has investments there and is looking for more opportunities for oil exploration.

The Indian community in Syria though small compared to our presence in the Gulf countries, is participating in diverse activities in Syria. I will have an opportunity to meet and interact with them. I will be travelling to Aleppo - a historical city in Syria - to visit the International Centre for Agricultural Research in Dry Areas, where many Indian scientists are doing commendable work. I will also meet representatives of the Missionaries of Charity who are doing excellent work in Syria with older persons. I will be visiting AAMAL, a Syrian organization for the disabled managed by Mrs. Asma Al Assad, the First Lady of Syria.

India seeks to further reinforce relations with the UAE and Syria and, it is in this context, that I look forward to my visit to both these countries. I also hope that you have a good trip.

Thank You.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to visit the India Social and Cultural Centre, and address members of the Indian community. The global Indian Diaspora, spread across several continents has made India proud both by their contribution to the country of residence, and to their mother land - India.

Our trade links with the Arab world have seen Indian pearl traders reaching the shores of Dubai, Sharjah and Fujairah centuries ago. From there it has been a long journey for the community. Today, the Indian community is estimated to be around 1.75 million strong, making it the largest expatriate community in the UAE. Besides, with its presence in almost all spheres of economic activity, the Indian community has emerged as an important expatriate community for the host country. Be they skilled workers involved in the construction of modern high tech buildings, or professionals in the knowledge based sectors, or those in health care, hospitality and tourism, they have played a vital role in forging the abiding links between India and the UAE.

Let me congratulate each one of you for this contribution. You have earned a reputation for being disciplined, hard-working and law-abiding. You are a microcosm of India, reflective of its vibrant diversity and its talents. We are proud of your achievements. I am equally happy to note that the UAE Government has been extending support to the Indian community for its socio-cultural needs.

Over time, the profile of the Indian community in the Gulf is undergoing transformation. Though large numbers of Indian skilled workers were employed in the UAE in the 1990s as a result of the construction boom, gradually more and more professionals in the fields of finance, banking, insurance and information technology have gained employment in this friendly country. This transition in the profile of the Indian community is reflective of the UAE economy, which is gaining momentum in the knowledge-based service sector. By providing highly skilled service at a competitive cost, your role has proved to be important for the UAE economy. Your sustained remittances over the years have contributed to the foreign exchange reserves of India. I would also like to mention that India is the biggest recipient of remittances by expatriates.

Despite the global economic downturn, the Indian economy has witnessed rapid and sustained growth rate. The macro-economic fundamentals are sound and we seek to further expand our growth. Our infrastructure financing needs are estimated to be 1 trillion US Dollars in the next five years. India offers a large and a growing market. The UAE is also going through a significant transformation. The space for India to play an increasing role in this transformation is widening. More employment avenues will open up in knowledge-based industries like IT, finance and insurance, as the UAE economy is bracing for a larger role by the service sector. This will ensure that there will be a demand for senior executives and professionals for some more years to come. I urge the Indian community to retune itself and remain responsive to the changing needs of this country. The UAE will remain as one of the largest trading partners for India and a gateway for Indian exports to the region.

I am also aware of the challenges and aspirations of the expatriate Indian community. The Government of India and the UAE Government are engaged in continuous dialogue on various matters concerning Indian labour. There is already an existing Memorandum of Understanding signed between the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs in India and the Ministry of Labour in the UAE. New schemes have been proposed by the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs to ensure the welfare of Indian workers in the UAE. I am happy that during my visit, I will be launching, the Indian Workers' Resource Centre, to provide a 24 hour helpline and counseling services for Indian workers in the UAE. This will be an important step to take the grievance redressal mechanism to the doorsteps of the large number of Indians, who are in distress and in need of urgent assistance.

I am impressed by the Indian Social and Cultural Centre and its facilities. That the Indian community has accomplished this task of establishing an impressive institution, reflects a strong sense of responsibility you feel, as members of the Indian community. While financial status may provide materialistic comforts, it is a sense of belonging to a group, and being a part of a cultural and social identity that generates a sense of well-being and satisfaction.

Let me congratulate the founding members of this institution for having envisaged a viable and a vibrant cultural centre for the benefit of the Indian community. I urge the President and the members of the Board of Trustees of this institution, to continue their earnest efforts in catering to the diverse needs of the Indian community. I would like to emphasize that each one of you as members of the vibrant Indian community has done India proud. Therefore, I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation to each one of you, for your contribution to strengthening our relations with the UAE. I wish you and members of your family all the very best.

Thank You.

Jai Hind!

406. Briefing by Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy on President’s engagements at Abu Dhabi.

Abu Dhabi, November 22, 2010.

Shri Sailas Thangal, Director (XP): Good evening friends. Thank you for coming to this briefing today. We have with us Secretary (East) Ms. Latha Reddy who would be briefing you on today’s events. Let me also introduce officers on the dais. On the right of Secretary (East) is Ambassador of India to UAE Mr. M.K. Lokesh whom all of you I am sure, would know him. To the left of Secretary (East) is Mr. Rajeev Chander, Joint Secretary in-charge of Gulf Division, in the Ministry of External Affairs. Secretary (East) will be making opening remarks after which she will take few questions on the visit of Hon’ble President to UAE.

May I now request Secretary (East) to make the opening remarks please.

Secretary (East) (Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy): Dear friends, thank you for making it convenient to come to this briefing.
Today, the President commenced her official programme in the UAE with a ceremonial welcome accorded to her by H.H. Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the President of the UAE. This was immediately followed by talks and an official banquet hosted by H.H. the President in her honour. Several Ministers were present from the UAE side - Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of Presidential Affairs, Foreign Minister, Education Minister and others.

The talks between the two leaders were warm and friendly reflecting the close ties between India and the UAE. Both leaders dwelt on the long tradition of friendship between the two peoples which are based on historical ties between the two countries. They emphasized the need to further develop and enhance this relationship to a new level of cooperation given the potential that exists.

The two leaders expressed satisfaction that the trade relationship had grown substantially resulting in both countries becoming the largest trading partners for each other in 2009-2010 with bilateral trade crossing the US$ 43 billion mark.

Both leaders agreed to enhance the strategic relationship by focusing on areas such as education, science and technology, regional security and many other areas where there is potential for cooperation. They agreed that specific proposals in this regard should be taken up in detail at the forthcoming meeting in Abu Dhabi of the Joint Commission which is headed by the Foreign Ministers.

Another important area of cooperation discussed was that of food security where our President invited UAE investments in projects for enhancing agricultural production in India and especially in the area of food processing. This received a positive response from His Highness the UAE President who stated that this idea should be pursued.

Our President spoke of India's keenness to further strengthen our energy security ties with the UAE and invited their participation in both upstream and downstream activities in the petroleum sector in India which would further our energy security. The UAE side was also invited to invest in the infrastructure sector including in our railways.
The UAE Minister of Higher Education mentioned that there was an agreement between UAE and India on the plantation of palm trees in India. It was agreed that this could be useful in areas such as Rajasthan.

Another important proposal discussed related to the reduction of the present high costs of setting up of water desalination plants which would provide valuable water resources needed by UAE and by India. Our President's proposal that this could be the subject of a joint research project was welcomed by His Highness.

Discussions were also held on the need for enhanced security cooperation particularly to address issues relating to counter-terrorism and maritime security. Our President emphasized that the agreement on security cooperation should be signed as early as possible by the concerned Ministries on both sides.

The President thanked His Highness for UAE's support for India's recent election to the non-permanent seat in the UN Security Council and sought continued support for a permanent seat for India in an expanded Security Council. His Highness stated that UAE would certainly support India, which had the right to be a permanent member of a reformed UN Security Council.

Our President mentioned the contribution of the Indian community and the positive support extended to them by the UAE authorities. Our President expressed appreciation and thanked His Highness for his Government for extending many facilities to the large Indian community numbering around 1.75 million, which is the largest expatriate community in the UAE. The two leaders agreed that any issues with regard to the welfare of the Indian community, particularly the workers, should continue to be discussed by the UAE Ministry of Labour and the Indian Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs and expressed confidence that these would be resolved and the processes to address these would be further strengthened and streamlined.

Thank you. That brings me to the end of this briefing. I will be happy to take some questions.

Question: Madam, you mentioned that the leaders agreed to develop the relations in various areas. Among the areas you mentioned was regional security. Could you be a little more specific as to what ideas were discussed where the two countries could cooperate with each other? Could you please put it in context?
Secretary (East): I think it was expressed as a desire to enlarge our cooperation in this area. It was mentioned as an area with potential cooperation. I have gone into detail that there is an agreement on security cooperation which is to be signed between our Home Ministry and the Interior Ministry here in UAE, and that will really spell out the details. In other words, cooperation exists. Our desire is that the cooperation should be enhanced and strengthened further.

Question: When is the agreement going to be signed?

Secretary (East): It is due to be signed. Our Home Minister has invited the Minister from the UAE to visit India for the signing of this agreement.

Question: Will it be done within this month?

Secretary (East): I cannot give you a timeframe, I am afraid.

Question: Is there any method of exchange of prisoners between India and UAE?

Secretary (East): No, but again there is an agreement under discussion on exchange of sentenced prisoners. That I believe is also at an advance stage.

Question: Regarding the palm trees, Kerala is one of the areas but Rajasthan is mentioned.

Secretary (East): I think the idea is that because palm trees grow very well in Arab countries, particularly in UAE and other areas, where there are dry desert conditions. And it may not necessarily be palm oil it could be date palms also. It is different varieties of palms that could do well in a desert climate.

Question: Regarding the invitation to invest in food security and agricultural sector, have you any concrete commitment from the UAE?

Secretary (East): I think the real issue which our President mentioned is that of course India has a great need for food security. The second issue is, less than two per cent of our food production goes into processed foods. So, the specific area mentioned was that we would welcome investment and cooperation in the area food processing. So, this would be an important area, and of course whatever technical collaboration is possible on the overall issue of agricultural production.

Question: Madam, I have two questions. First, can you confirm that the UAE has backed India’s bid to UN Security Council? And did the President of the UAE release a statement?

Secretary (East): Yes, I can confirm that there was support extended for India to occupy a permanent seat in the UN Security Council. What I have stated I will say it again. It was that His Highness stated that the UAE would certainly support India which had the right to be a permanent member of a reformed UN Security Council. There was no statement that issued at the end of the meeting but this is what was stated at the meeting.

Question: Just a follow-up question about the food security issue. Is the Indian Government looking for investments into the research and development sector as well?

Secretary (East): We are looking for investment into all sectors, I can say that quite confidently.

Question: Related to food processing.

Secretary (East): That is right, but also to agricultural production. We already have some programmes going on with various countries in the area of agricultural production, how to increase yields, how to adopt more progressive methods, and how to increase productivity. We would certainly be interested in all of that given the fact that we have a very large population.

Question: What was said about furthering energy security?

Secretary (East): I think on energy security what we had said was that we recognize that the UAE is a very valuable partner in ensuring India’s energy security. We had given out the figure, which I believe amounts to US$ five billion last year, of import of crude from UAE. And the idea of inviting investment in the upstream and downstream sectors in the petrochemical industry would be to see how else we can collaborate besides the simple purchase of crude oil.

Question: Madam, you mentioned that there has been a 43 billion dollar trade between India and UAE. Does it include petroleum?
Secretary (East): It does. It includes the five billion dollars of petroleum as well. But if you look at the overall figure of 43 billion, five billion is only a small part. So, unlike what most people imagine, our trade with UAE is very multifaceted in many sectors. Actually, of that 43 billion, I believe we exported 24 billion dollars. So, it was a balanced trade. And in that fiscal year, 2009-10, we actually in fact had a positive trade balance with the UAE.

Thank you.

407. Speech of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Abu Dhabi Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is an honor for me to be amongst the members of the Abu Dhabi Chamber of Commerce and Industry. The UAE in general and Abu Dhabi in particular, have made astonishing economic progress within a generation. Abu Dhabi has been transformed from a fishing village to one of the most-modern metropolises of the world. This has been possible not only because of the oil wealth but also due to the farsighted and visionary policies of the rulers of this country, especially the founding father of UAE, His Highness Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan Al Nahyan. Under the leadership of His Highness Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the UAE has continued to make significant progress on the economic front and the Abu Dhabi Chamber of Commerce and Industry has played a significant role in this regard.

The warmth with which I have been received in this country by its leaders reinforces my belief that our partnership will be an important element of the global economy in the years to come. Our prudent policies helped us to weather the effects of the economic crisis fairly well in comparison to other major economies. But we need to join hands to strengthen the current fragile recovery of the global economy.
India shares historical, trade and civilization links and cultural affinity with the entire Arab world, especially the United Arab Emirates. This makes us natural partners for the economic and social development of our respective countries. The Gulf region as a whole, is important for India not only because of geographical proximity and for meeting our energy needs, but also because of the large Indian Community, which is contributing to the growth of economic and business activities in the region, while acting as a bridge between us. The recent opening of the Sheikh Khalifa Special Economic Zone in Abu Dhabi will serve to enhance Indian economic presence in the Emirate of Abu Dhabi.

With an annual bilateral trade turnover of over US$ 43 billion, India and the UAE are leading trade partners for each other. Considerable potential exists between the two countries for further enhancing the present level of trade and economic cooperation. The UAE has become a gateway for our trade with the rest of the region. Our trade relations are more or less balanced and encompass diverse products. There is an element of complementarity in our trade. These strong fundamentals should be taken advantage of, so as to substantially increase our trade volume. Trade exhibitions are excellent ways of showcasing each other's potential areas for increasing trade and investment. There are large infrastructural projects being undertaken in the Emirate of Abu Dhabi in the transport, communication and energy sectors. There are many competent companies in India, both in the private and public sectors, which are successfully executing such projects abroad. The representatives of some of these companies are present here today. I call upon the members of the Abu Dhabi Chamber to develop joint ventures with these companies to undertake projects here as well as in other countries. There is need for reactivating the India-UAE Joint Business Council and increase the frequency of exchange of delegations between our apex chambers of commerce and industry. India has already started negotiating a Free Trade Agreement with the Gulf Cooperation Council countries, and we are hopeful of finalizing it in the near future.

India has emerged as the fourth largest economy in the world on Purchasing Power Parity basis. It is a trillion dollar economy which is vibrant and expanding. India's growth in the four years preceding the onset of the global financial crisis was around 9 percent. During the global economic crisis it came down to less than 7 percent. It is now expected to grow 8.5 percent in the current financial year and 9 percent in 2011-12. The strong fundamentals of our economy combined with a young population will continue to generate huge demand in every economic sector in India and especially in the area of infrastructure. India is an attractive destination for foreign investment. Therefore, it is only natural that we expect Abu Dhabi, being home to some of the largest sovereign funds in the world, to have a significant presence in the Indian economy. India has embarked upon an ambitious program of disinvestment in its public sector undertakings. India has a huge requirement for developing basic infrastructure like roads and ports, power generation and communications, among others. There are also a large number of Special Economic Zones in India that beckon UAE investors. I call upon the members of the Abu Dhabi Chamber of Commerce and Industry to promote investments from the UAE to India, especially in the area of infrastructure which will be mutually beneficial.

I thank the Abu Dhabi Chamber of Commerce and Industry for giving me this opportunity to meet with all of you. I hope that the Chamber will prove to be a catalyst in enhancing not only trade links, but also the more enduring partnership in long term investments and participation in each other's developmental efforts.

Wishing you all well, thank you.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to inaugurate the Indian Islamic Centre Abu Dhabi. The Center has an illustrious history. Its foundation stone was laid in 1982 by the then Prime Minister of India Smt. Indira Gandhi, who strengthened the secular fabric of India, that we are privileged to witness today.

Historically, India has been the meeting place of diverse races and cultures. Indian civilization shared its richness with other cultures and was itself enriched by this interaction. The coming of Islam to India in the 8th century A.D., and its sustained interface with a vibrant civilization with deep cultural roots, had a profound impact in all spheres of life in India. The Islamic heritage of India is an integral part of Indian culture.

The immense contribution of the Arab world to our heritage is visible in our monuments, literature, language, administration, arts and culture. The translation of many Sanskrit works into the Arabic language during the second Abbasid period of the 8th century A.D., brought to the Arab world, the ancient wisdom of India. The Arabs evinced great interest in Hindu sciences, especially in medicine and astronomy. There was a process of cultural osmosis.

The founding fathers of modern India, recognizing the long-standing tradition of tolerance and respect for diversity so ingrained in our society, chose to enshrine these principles in the Constitution of free India. These have provided the underpinnings for our secular and democratic credentials and have served India well. Given the attempts that we see in the contemporary world to divide and discriminate against people on the basis of their religion, the foresight of our founding fathers more than 60 years ago is, indeed, remarkable. It is part of our core belief that religions are meant to bring peace and harmony amongst humanity, and should not be a source of strife and violence. Mahatma Gandhi, the Father of the Indian Nation said "I believe in absolute oneness of God and therefore also of humanity?..for me the different religions are beautiful flowers from the same garden or they are branches of the same majestic tree".
The Indian presence and influence has been a regular feature of the Arab landscape. Whether it was trade in pearls, which were the major produce of this region before the discovery of oil, or the export of Indian timber from which Arab dhows were constructed, the destinies of our two cultures have been closely intertwined. It is not an exaggeration to say that there is part of both the cultures in all of us, whether Arab or Indian. It is, indeed, very satisfying to see two old cultures forging new links while preserving old ones.

India and the UAE have much in common in their promotion of religious harmony and tolerance towards different shades of thoughts and beliefs. The rulers of this country have adopted benevolent policies, and provided generous support to Indian Community organizations belonging to all religions. I am happy that the Indian community has through its hard work and dedication over the decades contributed very positively to the development of the UAE. I understand that the UAE is home to many nationalities that are living in perfect harmony with each other. This "unity in diversity" is also a hallmark of our society.

The Indian Islamic Centre is a tribute to the collective efforts of community leaders. It is, indeed, a reflection of the strength of character of the Indian Diaspora, in nurturing its links with the mother country, while successfully adapting to the local conditions in the host countries. The Centre will no doubt, prove to be a valuable cultural bridge between the UAE and India, and stand as a symbol of our celebrated links. While inculcating pride among the community members about their Indian heritage, I hope the Centre will also serve to highlight among the Emirati community, the close and friendly ties between our two countries. I would like to commend the leaders of the community, whose hard work and dedication has made the Centre a reality.

Finally, warm words of thanks to our gracious hosts - the Government of the UAE. Their generous assistance has contributed to the realization of this project. I bring with me the greetings of the Government of India to the Government of the UAE and the greetings of the people of India to the people of the UAE.

I wish you well. Thank you.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am very pleased to meet all of you here today. You are all leading members of the Indian Community in the UAE, and your contribution in promoting ties between India and the UAE is greatly appreciated by the Government of India. At the outset, I would like to acknowledge the contributions made by the Indian community to the growth and transformation of this country. In this regard, the role of Indian workers requires special mention, as do their problems and issues, which should receive our careful attention.

I thank the Ministry of Labor of the UAE Government for initiating many welfare measures to help our workers. The Government of India, under the leadership of the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs has initiated programmes for the welfare of Indian workers abroad, including the setting up of the Indian Community Welfare Fund. I am happy to launch today, the Indian Workers' Resource Center which, apart from assistance including counseling, will provide a 24-hour helpline for workers. I hope that the Indian community will extend all assistance to the Indian Mission in the UAE to enable this Center to fulfill its responsibilities.

India is a country with great vitality in political, economic, cultural, educational and other fields. This vitality emanates from our dynamic civilisational heritage. We can be proud that ours is one of the oldest continuous civilizations of the world. Its contribution to human advancement has been as phenomenal as its contribution to the evolution of thinking, and of philosophical approaches of the human race. Our culture has taught us to live with and respect diversity, and to be resilient in the face of adversity. Our adherence and commitment to 'unity in diversity' has strengthened our vitality. As Mahatma Gandhi said, 'a nation's culture resides in the hearts and in the soul of its people'

The cultural exchange between India and West Asia has been going on for centuries, with each drawing from each other's strengths. In the pre-colonial days, the Western coast of India, especially the Malabar Coast had been a major center of world trade. The extensive trade ties between India and the Arab world was reflected in Indian ships with Indian sailors sailing along the Arabian Sea and to the Red Sea, carrying Indian goods which were in great demand. Many of your families came to this part of the world long before oil was discovered here. Indians played an active role in the pearl trade which was a major economic activity in the pre-oil era. The discovery of oil and the resultant growth in economic activities, led to a quantum jump in the arrival of Indians. The Indian community has made vital contributions to strengthen political, economic and cultural contacts between the UAE and India.

You have proved to be valuable goodwill ambassadors for our country and your contributions have been appreciated by the rulers of this country whose benevolent policies have enabled you to make a living here. I appreciate the assistance and attitude of the Government of the UAE. You have been an integral part of the success story in which the UAE has made rapid strides transforming itself, in a single generation, into a global economic powerhouse. Through your collective efforts and hard work, you have built enduring institutions, and this India Club is one such symbol of your laudable achievements.

The Indian community in the UAE is a microcosm of India with diverse cultural backgrounds, but retaining the unique Indian identity. As the popular saying goes, ‘you can take Indians out of India, but you cannot take India out of Indians’. During the years since our independence in 1947, India has achieved much success. Our democracy is deep-rooted and our international profile has shown consistent linear progression. Our voice is heard with respect in major international fora including at the G-20. We have recently been elected to the Non-Permanent seat on the UN Security Council, and we are thankful to the Government of the UAE and the ruler of the UAE, that they have extended support to India’s permanent membership in the reformed UN Security Council. India is currently the fourth largest economy in the world on the basis of Purchasing Power Parity. Having successfully weathered the global financial crisis, our economy is now one of the fastest growing in the world. Our annual growth rate is 8.5 percent, but we are confident of taking it to double digits, sooner rather than later.

With a predominantly young workforce and a vibrant market, India has become an attractive destination for foreign investors. During the last three years, India has received cumulative Foreign Direct Investment worth over 100 billion US Dollars. As our economy expands, it offers opportunities for collaboration between India and overseas Indian communities. I invite you to make use of these opportunities in India.

The Indian community in the UAE has been a strong supporter of our economic growth and through its regular remittances has stood by India in its difficult times. I am aware that the Indian community, with its high emphasis on educational opportunities for its children, would like to have more educational facilities in India than what it offers now. The Government is considering ways to address these demands. Our Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs runs a Diaspora Scholarship Scheme that offers scholarships to PIO and NRI students studying in Indian universities. I note that some educational institutes from India have set up institutes of advanced learning in the UAE. I look forward to seeing your greater involvement in this endeavour.

I wish each of one of you and your families the very best in the years to come, and also hope that the India Club will continue to serve the community for many years to come. I do hope that the India Club will continue to serve the Indian community in the years ahead.

Thank you.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to be able to meet scholars and faculty from not one, but four Indian Institutes, brought together under the umbrella of the Dubai International Academic City. I am happy to note the presence of Principals and faculty members from the over fifty Indian schools in the United Arab Emirates.

The UAE is part of our extended neighborhood. There has been regular exchange of ideas and knowledge between our communities on either side of the Arabian Sea over centuries. When the contribution of Indian community to the growth of UAE is appreciated, we should remember that India has made rapid strides in the field of human resource development, because of the importance we attach to the acquisition of knowledge.

I am aware of the primacy accorded to the education sector by the UAE in the Vision Document 2020. The clustering mode followed initially by the Knowledge Village, and now by the Dubai International Academic City has ensured that the best talent from all over the world is attracted. I am also aware of the focus on quality in education, the emphasis on students and parents making informed choices, and the efforts to ensure affordability of education. We in India empathize with these missions and goals. I wish to felicitate the visionary leadership of the UAE for the successes in their endeavours, and assure them of India's continued support and interest in their initiatives.

Historically, Arabia and India have been recognized as the sources, receptors and repositories of knowledge from the early days of our contacts. We have shared the conviction, since as early as the days of Nalanda, that knowledge is the one treasure that increases manifold by sharing. According to different etymological constructions, Nalanda means “giver of knowledge”. Nalanda was a residential university which attracted students and travelers from all over the world, including from the Arabian Peninsula. Subjects ranging from science, astronomy, medicine and logic to meta-physics, philosophy and scriptures were pursued. The Nalanda University Bill of 2010, and the efforts being made in cooperation with our friends in Asia, are a reaffirmation of our commitment to "borderless knowledge".

We recognize that education is the fastest vehicle for enabling socio-economic mobility and change. India seeks to realize its demographic dividend in a scenario where young persons will outnumber the old for many years to come. To optimize this human resources advantage, India's systems of teaching and learning have also been undergoing rapid changes. The Right to Education Bill seeks to ensure that every child between the age of 6 and 14 has access to free education. We are also expanding our higher education infrastructure. We are confident that the National Mission on Education through Information and Communication Technology, which has recently entered project mode, will bridge the gaps between urban, mofussil and rural India ensuring that every scholar, irrespective of location will be able to access the best academic resources available in India.

We are also aligning our syllabi to globally accepted standards. Teaching methodologies that promote active learning are being encouraged. The accent of our education system has two deliverables - preparing students to become productive forces in the economy, whilst pursuing the quest for pure knowledge. This trend will ensure that the growth of social capital will keep pace with growth of human capital.

Not long ago, it was the brilliance of only some individual Indians which attracted global interest. Thereafter, premier institutes of higher learning like the IITs and the IIMs emerged, and soon became regular by-words for excellence across boardrooms and R&D labs in all continents. I am heartened that such globally recognized Indian brands of education are increasingly venturing outside and setting up bases abroad in clusters like the Dubai International Academic City. Brand India has been served well by our world recognized educational institutes.

The Indian student community in the UAE has the unique privilege of being recipients of knowledge transferred in the Indian way, even as they are exposed to a global milieu. Your campuses undoubtedly pulsate with the intellectual ferment characteristic of multi-cultural and multi-linguistic settings, which makes learning enjoyable. In the coming millennia, the world will see a lot more of India and through your work and conduct, you can contribute to its visibility and growth. Hence, you should aim to be not merely symbols of the success of individuals and institutions, but represent the strengths, potential and future of a resurgent India on the world stage.

Wishing you all well and lots of good wishes!

JAI HIND!

411. Briefing by Secretary (East) Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy and Consul General of India Sanjay Verma on President's discussions with UAE Dignitaries.

Dubai, November 24, 2010.

Archana Datta: Friends, we have Secretary (East) with us. Along with her are JS (Gulf). You have already met both of them. Consul General based in Dubai also is present here. Secretary (East) will brief you about this morning’s activities.

Secretary (East) (Ms. Vijaya Latha Reddy): Good afternoon. I hope you are all comfortable and well in Dubai. If you are not, you know who to blame. I thought I will ask Consul General to join us because being the local person, some of your questions perhaps he could answer in more detail.

I think at yesterday evening’s press briefing I had briefed you in detail about President’s interactions with the Indian community. I thought today would be a good opportunity to meet with you and bring you up to date on the discussions held with H.H. Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum, Vice-President and Prime Minister of UAE and the Ruler of Dubai - this meeting was held earlier today; and with H.H. Sheikh Mansour bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the Deputy Prime Minister of the UAE; and also with the Minister of Presidential Affairs which was held in Abu Dhabi yesterday.
I will begin with the meeting that was held yesterday with H.H. Sheikh Mansour bin Zayed Al Nahyan. For your information, His Highness heads the International Petroleum Investment Company, an entity of the Abu Dhabi Government responsible for all foreign investments in the oil and petrochemical sector. He is also Chairman of the Emirates Investment Authority, one of the leading sovereign wealth funds of the UAE, and also a Board Member of the Abu Dhabi Investment Authority that is considered to be the largest sovereign wealth fund in the world.

In the areas of mutual interests discussed, investment opportunities in India and the UAE were focused in the context of the discussions which had earlier been held between our President and His Highness the President of the UAE on 22nd November, the first day of her visit. These included UAE investments in the energy sector in India including in power generation projects, agriculture, food processing, and infrastructure projects. Our President pointed out that India was looking at one trillion US dollars in investments in the infrastructure sector over the next five years, and that our Government was planning to disinvest up to US$ 8.7 billion in our PSUs, and that these would both present very good opportunities for UAE businesses and for the UAE Government. It was also agreed that H.H. Sheikh Mansour would visit India in the coming months to further discuss investment opportunities in India.

It can also be recalled that the two Presidents had agreed earlier that the next meeting of the Joint Commission, to be headed by the two Foreign Ministers, will be held shortly in Abu Dhabi to take up issues discussed between the two leaders. So, there would be two follow-ups - one at the Joint Commission meeting and perhaps very soon thereafter or around the same time a visit by H.H. Sheikh Mansour.

Hon. President met earlier today here in Dubai with the Ruler of Dubai, Vice-President and Prime Minister of the UAE, His Highness Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum. Other Dignitaries from the UAE who were present on the occasion were: His Highness Sheikh Maktoum bin Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum, the Deputy Ruler of Dubai; H.H. Sheikh Ahmed bin Saeed Al Maktoum, the Chairman of Dubai Airports, and President of the Dubai Department of Civil Aviation, and

Her Excellency Sheikha Lubna Bint Khalid Al Qasimi - whom you would have all seen, the Minister in Waiting - who is the very eminent UAE Minister of Foreign Trade; and H.E. Reem Al Hashemi, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs.

H.H. Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum warmly welcomed the President on her first visit to the UAE and to Dubai. And our President recalled his own state visit to India in 2007 and more recent visit in March 2010. She complimented His Highness on his leadership which had led to the impressive development of this country and particularly Dubai.

Our President recalled the traditional ties between the West Coast of India and Dubai and Sharjah. Based on this foundation, our multifaceted relationship has grown immensely particularly after 1971. Our President informed His Highness that she had brought with her a large Business Delegation of 56 persons from India, and that there were also a large number of local Indian companies who had joined with the Delegation here. She mentioned that she had already had a successful business interaction in Abu Dhabi, and was looking forward to her interaction here with the Dubai Chamber of Commerce.

There were enormous areas and opportunities for cooperation between the countries in education and in infrastructure, particularly roads and the energy sector. She pointed out the scope for Indian PSUs to participate in projects as well as public-private partnership opportunities. One important area discussed was bilateral security cooperation. H.H. Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum mentioned that India and UAE already had very good cooperation in this area. Our President also reiterated that the agreement on security cooperation should be signed early as this would help us concentrate further on counter-terrorism and maritime security issues. She pointed out that we already had agreements on extradition and on mutual legal assistance. H.H. Sheikh Mohamed agreed that we should continue with our cooperation to assist each other with security concerns.
The President once again thanked the UAE Government for their support for India’s election to the non-permanent seat in the UN Security Council. His Highness reiterated that the UAE also supports India's candidature for a permanent seat in an expanded UN Security Council.

Moving on to the question of agriculture, the President reiterated that the area of agriculture, food security would be a good one to further develop joint projects. She also stressed the proposal already discussed with the President for having a joint research and collaboration in creating economical desalination procedures.

The two leaders agreed that there was vast scope to increase our trade which had already reached US$ 43 billion. They also recognized that the UAE acts as a gateway for Central Asia, Africa and West Asia for Indian exports, and offers excellent re-export facilities. His Highness mentioned that there was also excellent scope for India and the Gulf countries to think of having joint ventures in third countries.

The two leaders discussed the question of empowerment of women and took note that both countries had women Ministers in their Cabinet and had been working on the empowerment of women including in the area of higher education.

H.H. Sheikh Mohammed Al Maktoum said that the UAE was very happy with our bilateral relationship which was already very good but has progressed to an even better level and that the President’s visit will give a further impetus to our relations.

Thank you. I will be happy to take some questions.

Question: I believe there was an informal consultation between the local NRI businessmen and the Business Delegation. Could we have something on that?

Secretary (East): The formal business interaction with the Chamber of Commerce will take place tomorrow. As is normal in the President's visit, she normally has an informal internal meeting with our Business Delegation to get an idea from them as to what have been successful projects, where do we need to concentrate more, where do they see untapped opportunities. There is a very good exchange of views. In this case, since we had both our own Indian Business Delegation which came from India - the combined delegation from CII, FICCI and ASSOCHAM - as well as, as I mentioned, a number of local Indian businesses who are already active here, they were able to have a very good exchange, and some of the questions brought up by our Indian Delegation were almost answered directly by them. But certainly they made certain suggestions to the President and through her to the authorities in India of further things that could be considered either for taking up with the UAE Government or in our own procedures. These were different things like for instance that there are some issues with getting long-term business visas or for getting residence visas for some of the Executives. What we have decided is that a list of all the suggestions made would be incorporated by the Embassy and forwarded to us in India, and we would take these up suitably at different levels both in India and with the UAE.

Question: Madam, you said that India and UAE are looking forward to have joint ventures in the third countries. What are the spheres?

Secretary (East): We did not have specific discussions in detail on this. This was a suggestion from the Vice-President and Prime Minister the Ruler of Dubai that this could be an area to explore that India and Gulf countries could look at joint ventures in other countries.

Question: Madam, was there any discussion on the nuclear agreement? The UK Foreign Minister is in Dubai and the Queen is also here. They are going for the same thing again. Did something like that happen?

Secretary (East): No, this was not a subject that was discussed.

Question: Can you give us a little detail of the state of cooperation between India and UAE in various areas?

Secretary (East): What has your experience been, Sanjay? Maybe you would like to say something.

Consul General of India (Shri Sanjay Verma): The ideal type of relationship would be the surplus which UAE generates by selling us oil and the investment opportunities in India, essentially establishing cross investments whether they invest in our midstream or downstream oil sector, that chunk in itself. They are I think in the top five of our oil suppliers worldwide. In that aspect the relationship probably can be tuned further.

Question: What is the magnitude of surplus?

Consul General of India: The trade figures you have are of non-oil trade. All oil they are selling us is surplus for them. The current account surplus is essentially because of the oil. That is one part of the relationship which can be worked out further to mutual advantage, not just to UAE but to the entire Gulf region, the redistribution of wealth, thanks to oil resources and the opportunities available in India in the infrastructure sector or many other sectors for that matter. Yes, we have 43 billion dollars worth of trade. But if you look at the composition of the trade, there is a lot of scope of adding variety because as of now 80 per cent of that trade is essentially jewelry, gold and diamonds. In a sense it is a counter-trade with the jewelry, diamonds, etc., going to India for processing and coming back comes back and sold worldwide. In that sense, when you say US$ 43 billion, the trade can be much more and we all have to work much harder.

Question: Just value addition there and that is all.

Consul General of India: Yes.

Question: We have been talking about cooperation in the agriculture and food processing sectors. Does the UAE have sizeable agriculture, and do they have sizeable companies in order to participate or cooperate with the Indian companies?

Consul General of India: In a very limited way. In food processing, probably fruit juices is one area where they have some strength. They have state of the art facilities in fruit processing, not food processing as such. But they have companies with a lot of surplus which can be used in the agro-processing sector in India. In terms of the agricultural strength of the UAE, it is minimal in that sense. Most of their potable water is through desalination plants, etc. But dates is an area.
Secretary (East): I mentioned also in my briefing in Abu Dhabi, if you recall, that what we would like is for them to invest and to help us to develop our food processing sector. I think that is the way they are looking at it. Incidentally, in answer to your previous question, one area which had been mentioned was that we could look at third country projects in Africa in agriculture, joint ventures between either the UAE Government or private companies and our companies or public sector for that matter. I think there is a fair amount of interest because we must not forget that there are several Arab countries in Africa as well. So, there is a certain organic link between Arab countries and Africa. About eight countries in the 22 countries in the Arab League actually also belong to the African Union.

Question: This is regarding the helpline started yesterday. When you call that number, the answering machine starts. In the case of those persons who do not understand English or any other language, if he does not understand how to operate it, he cannot make use of it. Is it not possible for the consultants to pick up the phone and directly answer the questions?

Consul General of India: That is how it should be. I think there are some teething problems. It was launched yesterday. It is the first initiative. It will also be implemented in phases. Right now they are focusing on a 24x7 helpline and with multiple languages facility. The counseling bit is right now on appointment. Gradually, over the next six weeks, I think you would have counseling services five times or six times a week from 8 to 4. So, it is a build up. These are services which were being done in the Consulate. For instance, we ran free legal counseling every Thursday afternoon for the community, and psychological counseling every Saturday the entire day. We were doing it for the last two-three years. The essence of the IWRC is to ramp up those services, move them up from what was essentially social work, social service, voluntary nature of services provided by the Committee, to a professional basis round the clock, five to six days a week. So, this will take time to come to speed. But we expect in the next three-four weeks things will change. I am surprised actually to hear that people are not getting the response on the phone that you are expecting.
Question: In fact they have got response. They have got fifty calls since yesterday evening till today 7 am. But that problem was still there. If the answering machine answers your call, some people may find it difficult.

Consul General of India: I think these are little creases which will smoothen out over the next couple of days. Before you leave, tomorrow try calling up and I think the act would be in place.

Secretary (East): If there are no more questions, I understand we are standing between you and the Burj Khalifa. May I wish you a very pleasant visit!

Consul General of India: Madam, with your permission I just have one suggestion to make. We have tried to arrange a visit to Shyam Bhatia’s place. I have been to his house. He has converted his outhouse, about 3000 square feet, into a shrine to cricket. He has got an amazing collection of cricket memorabilia. I think outside the Lord’s Stadium this is probably the best. Visual Media especially will get good visuals. He is very passionate about the game. It is a delight. So, you should spend 30 minutes there. It is a good soft side story.
It gives me immense pleasure to address this distinguished gathering representing leaders of business, trade and investment. Your presence here is testimony to the fact that there is deep interest in expanding India-UAE economic and trade ties.

India has been a dynamic partner of the UAE in the trade and economic fields. For thousands of years, our ancestors sailed across the Arabian Sea and the Indian Ocean to exchange goods, ideas and experiences. This interaction over several millennia has left an indelible mark on our history, providing us a fertile ground for accentuating our traditional links in the modern context. Trade and investment will be the cornerstone of our partnership in the evolving global scenario.

The India-UAE bilateral trade, which was dominated by traditional items such as dates and fish, underwent a sharp change after the discovery of oil in the UAE, with India starting to import a sizeable quantity of oil from the UAE. At the same time, with the emergence of the UAE as a unified entity in 1971, our exports also started growing gradually over the years. The real impetus, however, started after Dubai positioned itself as a regional trading hub by the early 1990s and about the same time, the economic liberalization process started in India. The UAE, a long standing commercial and business hub in the region, has also emerged as the third major re-export centre in the world after Singapore and Hong Kong, which is clearly reflected in our growing trade. India-UAE trade, valued at US$ 180 million per annum in the 1970s, is today in excess of US$ 43 billion making the UAE one of India’s leading trading partners.

Both India and the UAE, through their prudent policies before, as well as the stimulus measures after the global economic crisis, have successfully weathered the financial crisis, and are now contributing to the stability of the global economy. It is a matter of some satisfaction that, despite the world economic crisis, although it did affect us to some extent, India has come out as one of the fastest growing economies in the world and is poised to register a GDP growth rate of over 9 percent in the coming years. Our exports are recording impressive growth since November - December 2009, and we have seen a substantial rise in corporate earnings and profit margins. Capital flows and business sentiments have improved tremendously.

As I have already mentioned, India and the UAE are leading trade partners, for which a large part of the credit must go to the persistent efforts of the trading community in both the countries. The visionary policies of the rulers of Dubai in building excellent infrastructure, have transformed this city into a throbbing metropolis and a great hub for international commerce and trade. There is potential for the current level of Indo-UAE trade to be boosted considerably in the coming years. For this we would need to take several measures. The institutional arrangements like the India-UAE Joint Business Council and the India-UAE Joint Commission for Economic, Technical and Scientific Co-operation (JCM) should be reactivated. Both countries should increase their participation in specialized trade fairs and exhibitions. Immense potential also lies for a mutually beneficial partnership in the energy sector and also in the agriculture and food processing sectors. India is one of the leading producers of fruits, despite this only 2 percent our trade is in this area. Both countries must consider more co-operation between their respective oil-industry sectors for establishing a long term relationship in the field of petro-chemical industries, not only in India and the UAE, but in third countries also.

India is a large and growing market with healthy micro-economic fundamentals and robust banking and financial institutions. This makes India one of the most attractive FDI locations in the world. Our plans for expansion of our infrastructure, energy and industrial sectors, presents opportunities for investment. I call upon the investor community from the UAE to participate in the growth story of India. India extends to all of you a hand of partnership, and invites you to participate with us in the new phase of rapid development and prosperity on which we have embarked. Indian companies, on their part, will be able to bring in their technology, manpower as well as capital to partner in the development programme of the UAE.

The large presence of Indian business companies in the UAE can act as a springboard to elevate our economic partnership to new levels. While trade has been the bedrock of our economic partnership, strengthening of the flow of Foreign Direct Investment between the two countries, can be another significant pillar of our relationship. I thank the members of the Dubai Chamber of Commerce and Industry for their immense contribution to promote and strengthen trade and economic links between India and the UAE. I would also like to thank the Chamber for giving me this opportunity to interact with the Dubai business community.

Thank you.
Mr. Edward Nalbandian, Foreign Minister of Armenia, who is on an official visit to India, held delegation level talks with Shri S.M. Krishna, Minister of External Affairs, on November 11, 2010. The two Ministers reviewed the entire gamut of bilateral relations and discussed ways to further strengthen and expand bilateral ties. They also discussed regional and global issues of mutual concern. After the conclusion of the talks, an executive programme on cultural co-operation between the two countries was signed.

The Armenian Foreign Minister called on Vice President, Shri Hamid Ansari on 10th November and conveyed the desire of the Armenian leadership to expand interaction with India. The Armenian Foreign Minister also delivered a lecture on "Armenia and her Neighbourhood: Prospects for New Dynamics" at the ICWA, Sapru House on November 11, outlining the policies and relationships of Armenia.

The visiting dignitary is scheduled to visit Kolkata where he is expected to call on Shri M.K. Narayanan, Governor of West Bengal. He will also meet the members of the Armenian community there and visit the Armenian Holy Church of Nazareth and the Armenian College & Philanthropic Academy, all of which represent the glorious past of the Armenian presence in India and the contribution it has made to India's diverse culture and multi-religious society. He is accompanied by his wife, who was born in India when her father was posted as senior diplomat in former USSR Embassy in New Delhi.

India and Armenia have traditionally enjoyed friendly and cordial relations. There has been understanding and convergence of views on a wide range of issues of mutual concern, bilateral as well as international. Bilateral contacts between India and Armenia date back to the 2nd century BC.
Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you all. I believe some of you went to the Convention Centre and I hope that you found the arrangements up to the mark.

Yesterday, Foreign Secretary had briefed you about Prime Minister's meeting with President Obama. The Prime Minister has since had a number of engagements. I would like to brief you about three of his bilaterals - with the President of Kazakhstan yesterday and the Prime Ministers of Morocco and Canada today.

Let me start with Kazakhstan. The meeting between our Prime Minister and President Nursultan Nazarbayev took place yesterday evening. It lasted about 45 minutes. Prime Minister was assisted by the National Security Advisor and other officials. The President of Kazakhstan was assisted by the Oil Minister and the Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan.

Kazakhstan is one of our key partners in Central Asia and also one of the most important countries in the region. You would recall that President Nazarbayev had visited India in January 2009 when he was also the Chief Guest at the Republic Day Celebrations. During his visit, a Joint Declaration on Strategic Partnership was adopted which foresees comprehensive cooperation in a variety of sectors. The two leaders met again on the sidelines of the SCO Summit in Yekaterinburg on 16th June 2009 and have also maintained telephonic contact.

Yesterday the two leaders reviewed the relationship, the agreements, the initiatives that had been agreed upon since President's visit to India. President Nazarbayev spoke very appreciatively of India's economic development and evinced interest in seeing Indian companies play a greater role, having an expanded presence in Kazakhstan. Both sides evinced an interest to enhance cooperation in a number of areas especially agriculture, civil construction, mining, fertilizers, pharmaceuticals, petrochemicals as well as other sectors. They particularly spoke of concretizing collaborations and having projects and initiatives which could be implemented on ground at the earliest.

President Nazarbayev mentioned to Prime Minister that they were planning 170 major projects in a variety of sectors, to speed up the industrialization of Kazakhstan, and invited Indian companies to participate in these projects. He also noted that there was a Customs Union between Kazakhstan, Belarus and Russia; and that Indian companies present in Kazakhstan could supply their goods, their services within the entire Customs Union.

As you are aware, there are interalia two pillars of our cooperation namely the hydrocarbons sector and the energy sector including the civil nuclear energy sector. During the visit of President Nazarbayev to India an agreement of cooperation was concluded between ONGC Videsh and KazMunaiGas in the Satpayev oil block which is a large oil block and said to be rich in hydrocarbon assets. Also, an MoU of cooperation had been concluded between NPCIL and Kazatomprom envisaging cooperation between the two sides, including for supply of uranium to India and other aspects.

During his meeting with Prime Minister, President Nazarbayev invited Indian companies to establish thermal power plants in Kazakhstan. Kazakhstan is hydrocarbon rich and they are keen on having more thermal power plants. He also told the Prime Minister that a framework for greater cooperation in the hydrocarbons sector would be approved soon by the Kazakh Government. As I mentioned, Indian companies have already evinced interest in E&P contracts in Kazakhstan. It was also agreed between the two leaders that an inter-governmental agreement on civil nuclear cooperation would be concluded soon.

Our External Affairs Minister is likely to pay a visit to Kazakhstan in May this year when a roadmap to implement the agreements and initiatives during the visit of President Nazarbayev is likely to be finalized.
I may add that the two leaders also discussed regional issues of interest including the situation in Kyrgyzstan and Afghanistan. The two leaders agreed on the need for stability, security and economic development of Afghanistan, and also evinced concern at production of narcotics and trafficking of narcotics. President Nazarbayev was very appreciative of India’s role in reconstruction and economic development in Afghanistan, and he remarked that once the situation in Afghanistan stabilizes, that would pave the way for a direct surface link between India and Kazakhstan.

The President invited Prime Minister to pay a visit to Kazakhstan which was accepted with pleasure. He also invited Prime Minister to participate in the third CICA Summit. CICA is the Conference on Interaction and Confidence Building Measures in Asia. You would recall that Prime Minister Vajpayee had represented India in the first CICA Summit in Kazakhstan, which was held in June 2002. That is what I have on Kazakhstan.
Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (ERS) on External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna’s visit to Kazakhstan.

New Delhi, May 10, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon and good to see you all. As you are aware, External Affairs Minister of India Shri S.M. Krishna will be leaving for Kazakhstan tomorrow on a bilateral visit. His visit will be from the 11th to the 13th May. My colleague Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary (ERS) and I wanted to give you a perspective on the visit.

Kazakhstan is one of our most important partners in Central Asia. We are both multi-ethnic and multicultural societies. India and Kazakhstan also have a strategic partnership which was unveiled during the visit of President of Kazakhstan, Mr. Nursultan Nazarbayev, when he had come to India in January 2009. He was also the Chief Guest at the Republic Day Celebrations then. Both countries have an ambitious and forward looking agenda of cooperation.

Let me take you through the programme of EAM and the delegation that would be accompanying him. EAM would be accompanied by Ms. Latha Reddy, Secretary (East); Mr. Jawahar Sarcar, Secretary (Culture); Mr. Raghavendra Sastry, Advisor to EAM, my colleague Mr. Ajay Bisaria, I and a few other members. He would also be accompanied by a delegation of business leaders representing leading organizations and business houses like Tata International Limited, Sun Group, Apollo Hospitals, Punj Lloyd, Tata Motors, BHEL, ONGC, etc. That is a sizeable business delegation that will be accompanying EAM.

In terms of programme, as I said, the Minister will be leaving tomorrow. The day after he has delegation-level talks with his counterpart, Foreign Minister Kanat Saudabayev the Foreign Minister of Kazakhstan. He would be calling on the Prime Minister of Kazakhstan and the President of Kazakhstan. EAM will also address an India-Kazakhstan Business Forum. I already mentioned to you the names of some of the members of the Business Delegation that will be accompanying the External Affairs Minister.
It is, as I said, one of the most important relationships that we have in Central Asia. The leadership of both countries have been paying close attention to the relationship in order to deepen mutual cooperation. I mentioned the landmark visit of President Nazarbayev to India in January 2009. Prime Minister and President Nazarbayev have been maintaining regular contacts. They have also been meeting on the sidelines of the international fora. For example, they met in June 2009 in Yekaterinburg on the sidelines of the SCO Summit. Again they met last month in Washington on the 11th of April on the sidelines of the Nuclear Security Summit.

Vice-President of India has visited Kazakhstan in 2008. Last year, our Petroleum Minister led the Indian Delegation to Kazakhstan for the 7th Inter-Governmental Joint Commission meeting which was held in Asthana. This is just to give you some examples of how at the highest levels attention is being paid to deepen our ties. We have a very broad canvas of cooperation that includes sectors like agriculture, energy including thermal energy, civil construction, mining, fertilizers, information technology, pharmaceuticals, petrochemicals and so on, and of course, the cultural sector, people-to-people contacts. That is a kind of canvas of cooperation that we have been working on.

Kazakhstan has also been very supportive of India’s candidature for the permanent membership of the UN Security Council. Both sides are keen to draw a blueprint of collaboration in diverse sectors so that we have concrete benchmarks of cooperation and we can move ahead rapidly. Just to give you one example, Kazakhstan has been very appreciative of India’s economic development. They have noted with great deal of appreciation the role and the energy of the private sector in India and are keen on investments by the Indian private sector, and of course public sector, in Kazakhstan.

Some of you may also know that there is a Customs Union between Kazakhstan, Belarus and Russia. Kazakhstan has pointed out that Indian companies which are based in Kazakhstan can export to the entire zone, all the three countries in the Custom Union.

It will be of interest for you to know that Kazakhstan has initiated an Accelerated Innovation Industrial Development Programme under which they are planning more than 170 major projects for industrializing Kazakhstan. This is a multi-billion dollar initiative spread over a few years. They have said that they are keen to see active Indian participation. By the way, on the 12th of May when there is the India-Kazakhstan Business Forum Meeting, a presentation would be made to the Indian companies accompanying EAM on this initiative of Kazakhstan.

Amongst others, and I have already enumerated a number of sectors of cooperation, I would like to highlight that two important sectors of cooperation include the hydrocarbon sector and the energy sector including civil nuclear energy. Both countries are actively discussing modalities to take our cooperation forward in these sectors as well as other sectors.

During his visit the EAM will review progress in bilateral relations especially since the visit of President Nazarbayev and discuss regional and international issues of mutual interest. They will particularly discuss a broad-based cultural exchange agreement. You perhaps know that we have an Indian Cultural Centre in Asthana. Both sides would also discuss a roadmap to implement some of the major initiatives taken or outlined during the visit of President Nazarbayev.

In short, we believe that EAM's important visit would further boost our bilateral ties and reaffirm our interest in and the importance that we attach to our relations with Kazakhstan.

Thank you. My colleague and I will be happy to take a few questions relating the visit of the External Affairs Minister to Kazakhstan.

Question: Kazakhstan and India have been having very interesting discussions on the civil nuclear cooperation, as you have mentioned, including on small reactors, uranium mining. Is there any agreement ready to be signed during this visit? Will a delegation of the Department of Atomic Energy also be a part of this visit? Would Russia also be a part of this cooperation in nuclear energy between Kazakhstan and India?

Joint Secretary (ERS) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): Yes, a member of the Department of Atomic Energy will be a part of this delegation. You may be aware that an inter-governmental agreement is under discussion between the two sides. This inter-governmental agreement is a broad-based agreement like the one we have with Russia which envisions cooperation in the complete range of nuclear related activities which means all the things that you have mentioned. It envisions cooperation in fuel, in terms of uranium, mining. And it also mentions nuclear power plants and construction of nuclear power plants. A draft of this agreement has been floating. We expect further discussions to take place. It may not necessarily be signed during the visit. But certainly discussions would take place on this agreement.

As for your other question, we have a separate agreement with Russia which has a whole range of activities envisaged and discussions take place, and a separate one with Kazakhstan.

Question: On Satpayev oil block, are we going to be doing our production agreement with Kazakhstan? Secondly, how do we look at CICA? Prime Minister probably would be going, that is what we were told, to that CICA Summit in June. How do we look initiatives like CICA?

Official Spokesperson: Let me answer your question on CICA and I will request my colleague to take on your question about Satpayev oil block. As you know, CICA has 18 countries as its members. India is one of the member countries of CICA. In the very first summit meeting in 2002, Prime Minister Vajpayee had participated in CICA. We believe that CICA is a very important initiative and we have been very closely associated with it. So, that is the position with respect to CICA.

Joint Secretary (ERS): On Satpayev, you are right. It is certainly one of the most important issues to be discussed during this visit - cooperation in the hydrocarbon sector and particularly on Satpayev. We have accompanying the External Affairs Minister a delegation of experts from the Ministry of Petroleum as well as from ONGC Videsh Limited which is the key corporate involved in these negotiations. We are hopeful that the sides will make progress. There is indeed an exploration and production agreement on Satpayev that is on the anvil. We hope that there would be positive movement on this during this visit.
Question: What about External Affairs Minister's phone call to his Pakistani counterpart?

Official Spokesperson: On the phone call, you know that the External Affairs Minister has already said on the floor of the Parliament that he will be speaking to his Pakistani counterpart. In Thimphu, you are aware, both Prime Ministers asked their External Affairs Ministers and Foreign Secretaries to meet as soon as possible. So, the framework is there. The only thing is to decide, to identify a mutually convenient time slot to have the telephonic conversation. Both sides are in touch with each other to identify that slot.

Thank you.

Astana (Kazakhstan), May 12, 2010.

I am very happy to be here in the elegant capital city of Astana. This is my first visit to Kazakhstan. We are struck by the rapid development and progress that Kazakhstan has achieved since its independence.

India and Kazakhstan enjoy warm and friendly ties going back several millennia. We are part of the same neighbourhood. Both India and Kazakhstan are multi-ethnic, multi-religious and secular societies. We have also forged a strategic partnership to give a qualitative boost to our ties.

The landmark visit of President Nazarbayev to India as the Chief Guest at our Republic Day celebrations last year provided a significant impulse to our bilateral ties. We have rapidly moved to implement the far reaching initiatives taken during his visit, in diverse sectors like energy including hydro-carbon, thermal and nuclear, fertilizers, agriculture, Information Technology, Space, pharmaceuticals, trade and investment, culture. I am here to build further on our mutually beneficial engagement and also to discuss a road map for bringing projects in diverse sectors, to fruition.
I have had a very warm, cordial and fruitful meeting with His Excellency State Secretary-Foreign Minister Kanat Saudabayev. We conducted a comprehensive review of our bilateral ties in all spheres including political, strategic, security, economic, commercial, social and cultural affairs.

I am looking forward to calling on H.E. President Nazarbayev and H.E. Prime Minister Massimov later today.

I am pleased to say that India and Kazakhstan have a strong congruence of views on major regional and international issues. Both our countries are strongly opposed to terrorism. I would like to thank Kazakhstan for its steadfast support to India in our fight against terrorism, particularly after the dastardly terror attack in Mumbai in November, 2008.

I would also like to thank Kazakhstan for its steady support for India’s Permanent Membership of the UN Security Council.

Very good progress has been achieved in our discussions to deepen cooperation in the hydro-carbon sector. I am confident that an Agreement between ONGC Videsh Limited (OVL) and KazMunaiGas on exploration and production in the Satpayev Oil Block will be concluded soon. I would like to thank the leadership of Kazakhstan for earnestly supporting this important initiative which would pave the way for greater cooperation in diverse sectors.

I am confident that an Inter governmental Agreement on Civilian Nuclear Energy cooperation will be finalized soon. This sector has immense possibilities for bilateral cooperation including for supply of uranium ore, investment by Indian companies in mining in Kazakhstan, construction of nuclear reactors and others.

Discussions in several other promising areas like thermal power plants, transportation and banking are in an advanced stage. For instance a premier Indian Bank - Punjab National Bank - will soon commence commercial operations in Kazakhstan.

A large delegation of Indian business leaders is accompanying me. This is testimony to the strong and keen interest that Indian businessmen and industrialists have in strengthening and diversifying relations with Kazakhstan. We would also like to invite Kazakh companies to invest in India and take advantage of the huge market that India has to offer.

Both India and Kazakhstan are factors of peace, stability, development and growth, not only in the region but also in the world. Our cooperation is a win-win proposition and I am happy to see a strong commitment on the part of government and people in both our countries to take the process to a qualitatively higher level.

Thank you.

KYRGYZSTAN
418. Press Releases issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the situation in Kyrgyzstan, evacuation of Indians to Bishkek from Southern Kyrgyzstan and their travel to India and provision of humanitarian aid to Kyrgyzstan.

June 14, 2010.

About 116 Indian nationals are stranded in Southern Kyrgyzstan, due to the ongoing difficult law and order situation. These include around 15 students in the city of Jalal-Abad and around 99 students, a professor and a businessman, in the city of Osh.

Our Mission is in close and regular touch with several of the Indian nationals, as well as with relevant departments of the Kyrgyz Government, including the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and security agencies.

Everything possible is being done to ensure the safety and well-being of the Indian nationals, within the constraints posed by the difficult ground situation. Our Mission in Bishkek is monitoring the developments closely and additional steps would be taken as soon as the situation becomes more conducive.

***************
June 15, 2010

A number of Indian nationals, primarily students were stranded in the towns of Osh and Jalal-Abad in Southern Kyrgyzstan due to civil disturbances. Despite the heavy odds, the Embassy of India in Bishkek, in close coordination with the Kyrgyz authorities, managed to safely evacuate all the Indian nationals to Bishkek late last night.

Hostel accommodation and meals as possible under the circumstances, have been arranged for the students at Bishkek, by the Embassy. Some of the students have lost their passports. Our Mission will issue new passports and other travel documents as required in such cases.

While some of the students want to stay on at Bishkek, some others would like to return to India. Our Mission is making efforts to ensure that the students travel to India over the next few days by commercial or chartered flights, which are operating normally in and out of Bishkek.

The Embassy of India, Bishkek has worked hard to assist the Indian nationals in distress and continues to extend all possible assistance to them.

*************

All the Indian nationals stranded in the southern Kyrgyz towns of Osh and Jalal-Abad were safely evacuated last night by air to Bishkek. They are expected to return to India over the next few days. Flights out of Bishkek are operating normally.

The airlift of the Indian citizens was arranged by the Embassy of India in Bishkek with the active cooperation and support of the Kyrgyz authorities.

*************

105 Indian nationals who were safely evacuated by the Embassy of India from Southern Kyrgyzstan, are in Bishkek. Arrangements for their stay at university hostels and meals have been made by our Mission.
The Government's primary concern in situations of distress for Indian nationals is to get them out of harm's way by the fastest possible means. This is precisely what was achieved when the Embassy chartered an aircraft to bring our nationals from troubled Osh and Jalal-Abad to Bishkek.

Some of these students are planning to stay on in Bishkek, while some others want to come to India for summer vacations. Commercial and chartered flights are operating normally in and out of Bishkek and our Mission is assisting the students with the travel arrangements.

In accordance with established consular procedures, the Mission has offered to buy tickets for those students who may be facing temporary financial difficulties. In such cases, as per Government rules, the passport is handed over to the Mission which issues an Emergency Certificate and procures a one-way ticket to India. The individual, who avails of the facility, repays the money to the Government in due course and gets his passport back. This offer is available to all the students who were evacuated from Osh and Jalal-Abad.

It is understood that a couple of chartered flights are likely to operate within the coming days between Bishkek and India. We are hopeful that all students who wish to travel to India will be able to do so.

Some of the students have left their passports in Osh or have visas that have expired. Our Embassy is providing them with free passport to facilitate their travel.

July 1, 2010

India has been closely following recent internal developments in Kyrgyzstan, a friendly country in our extended neighbourhood. We are happy to note that calm has returned to southern Kyrgyzstan after the unfortunate incidents of violence in mid-June. The events, however, left thousands in need of urgent humanitarian assistance.

In response to the appeal by the Kyrgyz Government, the Government of India has decided to provide urgent humanitarian aid to the people of Kyrgyzstan, in their hour of need. The assistance comprises food items, medicines and tents and will be despatched in two Indian Air Force IL-76 aircraft over the next few days. The supplies will be delivered to the Ministry of Emergency Situations of Kyrgyzstan at Osh, through our Embassy in Kyrgyzstan.*

Ethnic riots broke out in southern Kyrgyzstan where Kyrgyz attacked Uzbeks killing residents and torching their houses and businesses. Russia led defence alliance of seven ex-Soviet states, Collective Security Treaty Organisation (CSTO) meeting in Moscow agreed on a "set of measures" to help stabilise the situation in Kyrgyzstan, said Russia's Security Council Secretary Nikolai Patrushev. Without giving details he said "no options are ruled out" to stop inter-ethnic violence. Meanwhile, a full-fledged humanitarian crisis broke out in the south of Kyrgyzstan as thousands of Uzbek residents of Osh, Jalal-Abad and neighbouring villages were trying to cross the border to Uzbekistan. Authorities in Uzbekistan said they had registered 45,000 refugees, not counting children. Kyrgyz border guards reportedly closed the border, leaving thousands stranded on the Kyrgyz side of the border, without food or water. The official death toll from the clashes that began the previous week rose to 124, but unofficial reports said 700 Uzbek residents had been killed in Jalal-Abad alone.

Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs felicitating Kyrgyzstan on its historic parliamentary elections.

New Delhi, October 22, 2010.

The Government and the people of India felicitate the Government and people of Kyrgyzstan on the successful and peaceful conduct of the recent historic parliamentary elections. We are delighted that Kyrgyzstan, a fellow developing country, is strengthening its democratic parliamentary system to answer the needs of its secular and pluralist society. These values are dear to India and indeed to all liberal democratic societies in the world.

This was the first ever parliamentary election in a Central Asian country.
TURKMENISTAN

420. Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Banquet hosted by her in honour of President of Turkmenistan Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedov.

New Delhi, May 25, 2010.

Your Excellency President Berdimuhamedov,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure in welcoming you and members of your delegation to India. We have been eagerly awaiting your Excellency's first visit to India. I am confident that your visit will further consolidate and strengthen our relations.

Our countries share old historical and cultural bonds, connected on the Silk Route in ancient days. Our multi-ethnic and diverse societies today stand for pluralism, mutual respect and tolerance. Our countries have developed bonds of friendship and cooperation on the basis of shared political perspectives, convergence of interests and our cultural affinities.

Excellency,

We, in India, admire the remarkable progress achieved by Turkmenistan. We admire your commitment to advancement in the education, economic and social sectors. As nations, we have similar priorities - economic development, social justice and creating a skilled human resource.

Cooperation in education holds many promises for our countries. Turkmen students are pursuing their studies and receiving training under our ITEC programme and ICCR scholarships. We will be happy to expand this cooperation. Exchanges in education and learning each other's languages build long term bonds. In this context, we are delighted that a Hindi Chair has been established in the Azadi Institute, Ashgabat and that a proposal to set up an Urdu Chair in a Turkmen University is being considered. We also need to increase people-to-people contacts and cooperation in arts, culture and archaeology. As friendly countries, we should foster and nurture bonds which bring us closer.
India has developed expertise in high technology areas such as Information Technology, Space, Biotechnology and Pharmaceuticals. We are ready to share our skills in these sectors with our partners in developing countries.

Excellency,

A multifaceted economic partnership will further fortify our traditionally close relationship. As the role of the business community in building a stable and strong economic partnership is very important, we must encourage them to explore and avail of all opportunities of trade and investment.

Turkmenistan is richly endowed with mineral resources. India is keen to deepen its engagement with Turkmenistan, especially in the hydrocarbon sector. India is an attractive market and also has expertise, technology and trained manpower in the hydrocarbon sector. We would be happy to invest in Turkmenistan in the hydrocarbon and other high-technology sectors. India is also keen to see progress on the TAPI gas pipeline project.

Excellency,

We congratulate you for your vision and leadership in integrating Turkmenistan with the global community. The Permanent Neutrality policy of Turkmenistan has contributed to regional peace and security.

India attaches importance to its extended neighbourhood and enjoys friendly relations with Central Asian countries, Iran and Afghanistan. With a view to maintaining stability and combating extremism in the region, India is cooperating with all the neighbouring countries.

India is against all forms of terrorism and to firmly deal with this menace which has assumed world-wide dimensions, global coordinated efforts are required. We regard Turkmenistan as a valuable partner in the fight against terrorism.

Excellency,

Our two countries share common perceptions and views on most issues of regional and global concern. We have collaborated in many international fora. We are committed to working with Turkmenistan to achieve the goals of common concern and in building a strong bilateral relationship.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, I would now invite you to join me in a toast to:-

– the health and well-being of President Berdimuhamedov, – the prosperity and well-being of the friendly people of Turkmenistan; and – the strong and ever growing friendship between India and Turkmenistan.

421. Joint Statement issued during the State Visit of Turkmenistan President Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedov.

New Delhi, May 25, 2010.

His Excellency Mr. Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedov, the President of Turkmenistan, paid a State Visit to India from 24 to 26 May 2010. The President of Turkmenistan was accompanied by a delegation comprising members of the Cabinet of Ministers and representatives of mass media.

2. During the State Visit, the President of India and the President of Turkmenistan held discussions on matters of mutual interest. The President of India hosted a State Banquet for the honoured guest. The President of Turkmenistan and the Prime Minister of India chaired delegation level talks and exchanged views on a wide range of bilateral, regional and global issues. The Vice President of India and other senior political leaders called on the President of Turkmenistan.

3. The State Visit reaffirmed the mutual understanding between the two countries at the highest political level and provided an opportunity to exchange views on regional and global issues of mutual interest. The two sides noted with satisfaction the excellent state of friendly relations and cooperation between India and Turkmenistan and expressed their firm commitment to further strengthen bilateral relations and diversify areas of cooperation.

4. The leaders of both countries declared that terrorism, transnational crime and illicit trafficking of narcotic drugs were among the main threats to security and sustainable development of countries of the world. The two leaders reiterated their strong condemnation of the terrorist attacks in Mumbai (in November 2008) and elsewhere in India. The two sides agreed to cooperate with each other in dealing with the scourge of global terrorism. The two leaders emphasized the need for intensifying bilateral and global cooperation in combating international terrorism. Both sides also called for early conclusion of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism within the UN framework.

5. The two sides noted that relations between India and Turkmenistan had roots in history. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the signing of the Cultural Exchange Programme and stated that it was a fitting recognition of the historical and cultural legacy that the two nations share. They expressed confidence that this exchange programme would facilitate exchange of cultural troupes and delegation from educational and other institutes of learning and building vibrant relations between the peoples of the two countries. The two sides agreed to facilitate joint research studies on common historical heritage and developing the historical sites existing in India and Turkmenistan with the objective of their protection and preservation. Both sides also agreed to organize cultural festivals for showcasing their rich heritage in each other's country. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the setting up of a Hindi Chair in the Turkmen National Institute of World Languages named after Dovletmamed Azadi in Ashgabat. The Turkmen side agreed to take forward a proposal from the Indian side to establish an Urdu Chair in one of the higher educational institutions of Turkmenistan.

6. The two leaders agreed on the existence of significant potential in terms of increasing trade volumes between the two countries. They agreed that the Governments and the Chambers of Commerce & Industry need to take necessary measures to strengthen bilateral trade and economic cooperation. A joint study by designated agencies of the two Governments and Chambers of Commerce & Industry was recommended with a view to identify measures, which would deepen economic engagement. The leaders welcomed the signing of the Agreement on Trade and Economic Cooperation and hoped that this would pave the way for enhanced economic engagement. The Indian side also offered complimentary exhibition space to Turkmenistan in the India International Trade Fair in 2010 for promoting their products and services in India. The Turkmen side, on its part, offered to facilitate organizing an exclusive Indian exhibition in Ashgabat.

7. The leaders of the two countries expressed satisfaction on the ongoing discussions between the oil/natural gas companies of India and Turkmenistan under the framework of the Joint Working Group on Hydrocarbons and hoped that this would create conditions necessary for mutually beneficial cooperation in the hydrocarbon sector of Turkmenistan. It was agreed that the Ministers on both sides responsible for oil and gas will take forward ideas for intensifying joint efforts in various projects in the oil and gas sector. The leaders also hoped that the discussions on the Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) gas pipeline project would continue with a view to realize it early. To intensify economic engagement and extend cooperation in areas in which India had gained considerable expertise, the Indian side proposed to conduct a feasibility study on setting up a gas based fertilizer plant in Turkmenistan. The Turkmenistan side agreed to take forward this proposal.

8. The sides expressed satisfaction at the signing of the Education Exchange Programme and the Agreement on Cooperation in the field of Science and Technology, which would facilitate interactions in the spheres of science and technology, organizing visits of students and faculties, development of links between educational and scientific institutions and implementation of joint scientific and research projects. The sides noted with satisfaction the positive experience of cooperation in the field of education within the framework of the programmes implemented by the Government of India and welcomed the establishment of an Information Technology Centre in Ashgabat with India’s developmental and technical support.
9. The two leaders reviewed the functioning of the bilateral mechanisms for cooperation and discussed new areas for intensifying relations. The two sides appreciated the role of the India-Turkmenistan Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific and Technological Cooperation in enhancing trade and economic cooperation as well as cultural relations. The sides noted that the Commission had held three productive meetings and emphasized that the Commission and the Joint Working Group on Hydrocarbons should be held regularly. The sides also welcomed the signing of the Agreement on Exemption of Visa Requirements for holders of Diplomatic Passports and noted that this would help in facilitating and intensifying official level exchanges.

10. The Indian side conveyed that India holds Turkmenistan in high esteem as a partner country in Central Asia and appreciates the overall development of Turkmenistan in a relatively short period of time. The Indian side noted that the President of Turkmenistan had succeeded in increasing the stature of his country by his far-sighted vision and unflinching commitment to nation-building.

11. The President of Turkmenistan conveyed that Turkmenistan values highly the impressive achievements of the Republic of India in its socio-economic development, active policy in the international arena, facilitating the strengthening of peace, stability and mutual understanding between peoples, and its ever-increasing political, economic and scientific potential.

12. The two sides reiterated their call for strengthening the role of the United Nations in international affairs and for utilizing the UN framework in maintaining stability and security in the world. Both sides agreed to work together on all issues related to UN reform. The Turkmen side expressed support for India’s candidature for the non-permanent seat of UN Security Council for 2011-12. The Indian side appreciated initiatives of Turkmenistan in the establishment of the UN Regional Centre for Preventive Diplomacy for the Countries of Central Asia in Ashgabat. The Indian side also appreciated the resolutions initiated by Turkmenistan in the UNGA, on safety and security of energy transit routes and also the organization of a high level conference on the subject in Ashgabat.

13. The President of Turkmenistan expressed his deep and sincere condolences in connection with the tragic plane crash in India on 22 May 2010 which had resulted in the loss of many lives.

14. The two sides expressed satisfaction with the results of the State Visit and stated that it had contributed positively to the strengthening of friendly ties and raised bilateral relations to a qualitatively higher level. The President of Turkmenistan expressed deep gratitude to the President and the Prime Minister of India for the warm reception and gracious hospitality extended to him and his accompanying delegation. The President of Turkmenistan invited the President and the Prime Minister of India to visit Turkmenistan at a mutually convenient time. The invitations were accepted with pleasure.

AFRICA
AFRICA

422. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of a African Union delegation.

New Delhi, March 12, 2010.

A 15-member delegation from the African Union is currently on a visit to India from 10-13 March 2010. The delegation consists of the Members of the Bureau of the Multilateral Affairs Sub Committee of the Permanent Representatives Committee of the African Union and is led by the Permanent Representative of Cameroon to the African Union, H.E. Mr. Jacques Alfered Ndoumbe Eboule and includes the Permanent Representatives of Egypt, Sudan, South Africa and Benin. Ambassador John K. Shinkaiye, Chief of Staff of the Office of the Chairperson of the African Union Commission leads the 9-member Commission delegation as part of the AU Team. The visit was to finalize the Plan of Action of the Framework for Cooperation of the India Africa Forum Summit.

2. At a meeting chaired by Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West), on 10.3.2010, the Plan of Action was agreed upon and the implementation process of the decisions taken at the India Africa Forum Summit was discussed. The meeting was attended by the AU delegation and the African HOM's in New Delhi, as well as senior representatives from various Ministries / Departments of Government of India and representatives of the Institutions, which are partners for the implementation of the Plan of Action. During the meeting, Secretary (West) said that the Action Plan released on 10th March, which was a product of the consultative process which has been undertaken between India and the African Union and its member states, is based on the principles enunciated in the Delhi Declaration and the Framework of Cooperation and reflects our joint commitment to work in a full partnership.

3. During the meeting, the African Union delegation conveyed their appreciation for the manner in which India had engaged with them to implement the decisions. The Chief of Staff of the African Union Chairperson said that they appreciate India for believing in this multilateral relationship with Africa and for putting on the table the resources required to implement the commitments it has made. Throughout the process, India has listened carefully to Africa's views and taken them in full consideration in making its proposals. "Sometimes, the way cooperation is given is better than the content of the cooperation." He further said that in Africa's partnership with India, both the way the cooperation has been given and the content have been exemplary.

4. The AU Delegation called on Dr. Shashi Tharoor, Minister of State for External Affairs on 11.3.2010. In his address, Dr. Tharoor said that the Plan of Action is an ambitious programme of cooperation with the entire African continent. He expressed confidence that concrete results will emanate from it. Dr. Tharoor assured the delegation that India's commitment to Africa was total and sustained by our understanding of Africa as fellow developing countries. Our process of consultation on a regular basis with them would continue and he emphasized that now that the Plan of Action had been readied for implementation and the deliverables laid out, a follow-up mechanism for its regular monitoring must come into play at the earliest.

5. The African Union delegation told the Hon'ble Minister that they would endeavour to select the countries which would host the 19 institutions offered by India at an early date. They conveyed their heartfelt gratitude for the serious intent shown by India in implementing the decisions of the IAFS. The Permanent Representative of Sudan said that the comprehensive Plan of Action was the most clear and detailed document among their partnerships. Other members of the delegation also conveyed their happiness at the meticulous detail and planning with which the Indian side had undertaken the engagement with the African Union for the implementation of the IAFS decisions.

6. In addition to capacity building programmes in a vide variety of areas, the programme also provides for setting up of several institutions in select African countries which will cater for all the countries in the continent. These institutions include five major institutions viz. (i) India Africa Institute of Foreign Trade, (ii) India Africa Diamond Institute, (iii) India Africa Institute of Educational Planning and Administration, (iv)
India Africa Institute of Information Technology, (v) Pan-African Stock Exchange; 10 Vocational Training Centres and five human settlement institutes to support low-cost housing technologies. An important aspect of the capacity building programmes is the offer of 300 scholarships in the field of agricultural education and research over four years.

7. The AU delegation also visited partner institutions like the Telecommunication Consultants India Ltd. (TCIL), the Indian Institute of Foreign Trade (IIFT), the National Small Industries Corporation (NSIC), Education Consultants India Ltd. (EdCIL), and National University of Education Planning and Administration (NUEPA), and had detailed interaction. They also participated in a discussion with academics and scholars at the Indian Council of World Affairs.

8. The African Heads of Mission in New Delhi were also engaged in the meetings with the African Union delegation.

423. Inaugural Address by External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna at the 6th CII EXIM Bank Conclave on India - Africa Project Partnership 2010 "Developing Synergies: Creating a Vision"

New Delhi, March 15, 2010.

Your Excellency, Mr. John Dramani Mahama, Vice President of Ghana, Hon'ble Prime Minister of Togo, Hon'ble Ministers from Burundi, Central African Republic, Republic of Congo, DRC, Ghana, Guinea Bissau, Liberia, Malawi, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Swaziland, The Gambia, Togo, Uganda, Zambia, Zimbabwe,

My colleague, Shri Anand Sharma, Minister for Commerce and Industry,

Your Excellency, Mr. Jonathan Wutawunashe, Dean of Diplomatic Corp,

Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West), Ministry of External Affairs,
Shri Sanjay Kirloskar, Chairman CII - Africa Committee
Shri Chandrajit Banerjee, Director General, CII, Distinguished Guests from African countries,
Excellencies,
Ladies & Gentlemen.

It is an honour and privilege to deliver the inaugural address at the 6th CII EXIM Bank Conclave on India Africa Project Partnership 2010. This Conclave has become a flagship event for promoting entrepreneurship and business between India and Africa. The large numbers of governmental delegations and private sector businessmen from Africa as well as the presence of so many Indian companies and entrepreneurs at senior levels is a manifestation of the success of this Conclave. The Ministry of External Affairs is happy to have been an active part of this process and remains engaged with it in a supportive manner.

Just a few days ago, we had launched the Joint Action Plan between India and Africa to follow up on the important decisions taken at the India Africa Forum Summit (IAFS) in April 2008. We are confident that the implementation of the decisions of the India Africa Forum Summit will substantively contribute to our African partners’ desire to fulfil the millennium development goals.

Excellencies, Ladies & Gentlemen, India will establish 19 Institutions to develop human resources and capacities in Africa under the decisions of the IAFS. These will include the Africa-India Institute of Foreign Trade, Africa-India Diamond Institute, Africa-India Institute of Information Technology and Africa-India Institute of Education Planning and Administration. We will also create 10 vocational training institutions and five human settlement institutes. Our endeavours through these commitments will supplement our ongoing training programmes through the ITEC programme. Many of these proposed institutions will provide support to the creation of skilled professionals in Africa who could either work for themselves or with local companies or with foreign investors including those from India.
I am sure that the private sector who is gathered here in great strength will also contribute to the enhancement of capacity building activities in Africa and I would encourage the CII to use its vast network of partners in Africa to create similar training modules in select African countries to augment what the Government of India intends to do.

On our part, we are now going to work on another programme which will seek to provide internships for African students already in India by engaging with industry in select centres where we have a substantial number of African students. We believe that such new initiatives in association with Indian industry and its institutions like the CII, will allow us to enhance our engagement and provide a better connect between what we as a Government do in Africa and with the efforts of our entrepreneurs.

We are also looking at organising through the Indian Council of Cultural Relations, an African cultural festival later this year, to highlight our age old cultural links. I am also happy that the Indian Council of World Affairs has agreed to re-establish the annual Africa Day Lecture to mark our close and abiding relationship with Africa.

I have mentioned these various efforts in order to emphasise the fact that India remains engaged with Africa at various levels and in a variety of sectors and today when we meet at this Conclave, we remain confident that the overall engagement between India and Africa remains vibrant and full of vitality. In such a positive ambience, there are no hurdles to the enhancement of business and entrepreneurship and in that I would like to wish you full success as you move together for mutual benefit.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, in January this year, the Hon'ble Vice President of India, Shri Hamid Ansari, visited Zambia, Malawi and Botswana. This high level visit at the start of this year is a signal of our desire to sustain and enhance our political level engagement with Africa. We wish to make the positive emotive engagement between India and Africa into a successful economic engagement for mutual benefit and propose to utilise our Government's financial commitments to Africa to catalyse greater trade and investment.

Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh, had in April 2008, announced at the IAFS that India would provide $ 5.4 billion in lines of credit to African countries and institutions to support infrastructure and the development goals of our African partners. We are happy that in the first year of implementation we have nearly attained the annual commitment expected of us and will continue to strive for full engagement in this area.

Similarly, through the grants-in-aid to Africa segment of the budget of my Ministry, we will implement the decisions of the IAFS for creating the capacity building institutions in Africa which were mutually agreed upon through the Joint Action Plan. One of the most significant contributions that we have made is the Pan-African e-Network Project to which 47 African countries have adhered and it is already implemented in about half of them. This visionary project creates networks among African countries and provides them opportunity for tele-medicine and tele-education linkages with Indian hospitals and universities. This project complements the close relationship that India has always had with Africa for human resource development and capacity building. Similarly, efforts at the bilateral level also continue and over the last year, we have signed agreements to establish the India-Lesotho Centre for Advance Education in Information Technology; procurement and supply of medical equipment for Victoria hospital, Mahe, Seychelles; Hole-in-the-Wall Education Project in Namibia; Procurement and supply of Solar Photovoltaic equipment for 35 schools of rural areas of Rwanda; supply of computers and buses to Benin and others.

The India-Africa relationship has evolved and matured into a vibrant one. In this the role of the private sector in particular has acquired larger and significant dimensions. In many parts of Africa we see Indian investors and businessmen enhancing trade, capacity building and contribution to the development goals of our African partners in a visible manner. We in the Government of India, remain committed to continue to support our African partners and the Indian private sector towards these goals. The CII EXIM Bank Conclave will remain an important part of our engagement and I compliment the Confederation of Indian Industry for its continuing efforts to contribute to our growing engagement and develop new ideas and strategies to keep adding vitality to our friendly relations.
424. Address by Minister of State Dr. Shashi Tharoor at the CII-EXIM Bank Conclave on India - Africa Project Partnership.

New Delhi, March 15, 2010.

Excellencies,
Honourable Ministers, Eminent Heads of Institutions, Industrialists,
Ladies & Gentlemen.

I am delighted to be a part of this celebration of India's close and abiding relationship with Africa. Your presence here today and representatives of friendly governments, business organizations and entrepreneurs, is a true symbol of our friendship. I believe that over the years, the India Africa Conclave has acquired an important role in the development of functional collaboration between India and Africa. Your presence here from so many countries and institutions is a tribute to our successful partnership. It has become fashionable these days to ask openly what we expect of each other. This perhaps overlooks the fact that India and Africa have been close to each other over so many centuries that our relationship is not one of imminent give-and-take but has been that of a family where each one provides the best advice, the best support and the best sharing of experience, so that when we walk the same path, we learn from each other and not make the same mistakes.

2. In many ways our path has been common as the trade routes linked us over centuries and kept us in contact. As colonization came, our contacts acquired different dimensions. Some of those remain with us. In the period of decolonization and the fight against apartheid, we stood shoulder-to-shoulder and welcomed an increasing number of African countries into the international comity of nations.

3. In this background, we sought to re-engage in the modern world in the 21st century by redrawing our framework of cooperation and devising new parameters for an enhanced and enlarged relationship commensurate with our new role in a changing world. The renewed vigour in the India-Africa relationship has been a response to the challenge of globalization and what has emerged from it has been immense opportunities for mutually beneficial cooperation.

4. Our model of cooperation, which we now seek to implement, therefore, emerges from the success of the first India Africa Forum Summit held in New Delhi in April 2008. The Delhi Declaration and the Framework of Cooperation both synergized the Indian approach which had been followed so far and gave it a new direction and emphasis in consultation with our African partners.

5. I recall the Delhi Declaration:

“This partnership will be based on the fundamental principles of equality, mutual respect, and understanding between our peoples for our mutual benefit”.

It will also be guided by the following principles:

* respect for the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity of state and commitment to deepen the process of African integration; collective action and cooperation for the common good of our states and peoples; dialogue among our civilizations to promote a culture of peace, tolerance and respect for religious, cultural, linguistic and racial diversities as well as gender equality with the view to strengthening the trust and understanding between our peoples; the positive development of intra-regional/sub-regional integration by complementing and building upon existing/sub-regional initiatives in Africa; recognition of diversity between and within regions, including different social and economic systems and levels of development; and further consolidation and development of plural democracy.”

6. The first point that I would like to emphasize with the model of our cooperation with Africa is, therefore, clearly one seeking mutual benefit through a consultative process. We do not wish to go and demand certain rights or projects in Africa but we do want to contribute to the achievement of Africa's development objectives as they have been set by our African partners. The India Africa Forum Summit and the implementation of its decisions is following this consultative mechanism.
7. We are sometimes accused of being slow in our implementation. It is true that as a democratic country we have to have consultations and build consensus. Sometimes our strong bureaucracy also acts as a check and balance on decision-making. But in all this, the reality is that once we take a decision and go forward, the decision is firm and well thought-out. We believe that the Framework of Cooperation announced at the IAFS in Delhi in 2008, was a result of a similar process both within the country and with our African partners.

8. Besides the consultative process and the spirit of friendship, both of which are clearly linked to our desire to fulfill the developmental aspirations of African countries, there is also the element of a sharing of knowledge and experience for which many African countries often want to relate to us. The multi-cultural, multi-ethnic, multi-party pluralistic democracy that India is, is often an attraction to many of our African partners. So are our Parliamentary institutions and procedures, so also our manner of conducting free and fair elections. Our ability to work with the non-governmental sector and civil society in our quest for inclusive growth are also important lessons which many African countries have wanted to share with us. This sharing of experiences on political cooperation is, therefore, another aspect of our non-intrusive support to the development of democratic institutions in our partner countries.

9. Similarly, areas of human resource development and capacity building have been at the forefront of our partnership with Africa. The over 15,000 African students present in India, many of them on a self-financing basis, and nearly 500 of them per annum coming on scholarships, add to the experience of many African countries with Indian teachers and professors. This partnership in human resource development has been augmented by the tele-education component of the Pan African e-Network project which is visionary in its appeal and impact. The role of ICT, science & technology, research and development, has contributed to the enhancement of our engagement with Africa in this important area of human resource development. The 1600 training positions offered under the ITEC programme to Africa have also become important avenues of capacity building which in turn contribute to the fulfilment of developmental goals in so many countries. India will establish an India-Africa Institute of Information Technology, India-Africa Institute of Foreign Trade, India-Africa Institute of Educational Planning and Administration, India-Africa Diamond Institute, 10 Vocational Training Centres and 5 Human Settlement Institutes in Africa to contribute to capacity building.

10. Thus, sharing of experience of which I have given the two instances in political institutions and human resource development is another important aspect of India’s model of cooperation with Africa. We see this as growing further and becoming a part of our investment in human capital and sustainable political systems.

11. Another important aspect of our model of cooperation is the private sector investment in Africa which has acquired much greater visibility in the last few years. This has been more manifest ever since India liberalised its own economic system in 1991 and in the 21st century, private Indian investment in Africa is giving the relationship a new diversity and advantage. This type of investment is not government-led or government-subsidized. It seeks commercial opportunities and Indian investors are respected because they are reputed to create the maximum employment generation, transfer of technology and contribution to intra-African trade. Entrepreneurship skills for which the Indian private sector has been well known have been matched with India’s growing economic prowess leading to sustained investment flows which are contributing to the fulfilment of domestic demand in African countries, intra-African trade as well as enhancing the foreign exchange earnings through exports. India’s investment in pharmaceuticals in Africa for instance, largely fulfils domestic demand and caters to some intra-African trade. Investment in agriculture and horticulture on the other hand contributes mainly to exports, and investments in manufacturing contribute both to domestic demand as well as exports. The success of the India-Africa Project Partnership is heightened as it provides greater avenues for African countries to seek investment flows from the Indian private sector.

12. These investment flows are matched by a commitment by the Government of India made at IAFS 2008 for up to $ 5.4 billion in new lines of credit in a five-year period. This quantum leap in governmental commitment to support the economic growth of Africa acted like a stimulus package even though such packages became well-known only after the financial crisis in 2009. Under this programme, we are expected to commit about $1 billion annually every year for the five years 2009-2013 and I am happy to say that in the current year we have almost attained that target. The combined net flows from India to Africa emerging from governmental credits and private sector investment, therefore, form another part of our sustainable model of cooperation with Africa which has in turn given huge impetus to many Indian companies to seek opportunities in Africa. The lines of credit besides the asset creation that they provide, also act as a catalytic confidence builder leading to many investment decisions.

13. At the India Africa Forum Summit 2008, we announced a multi-tiered cooperative partnership with Africa. We have had a successful bilateral partnership with most African countries over decades. We started the process of establishing similar partnerships with some of the Regional Economic Communities. At the IAFS, we brought in these two tiers of cooperation and added a Pan-African or continental-tier for enhanced cooperation. This introduction of multilateralism into our relations with Africa brought with it a transparency of its decision-making and reflected our full partnership and respect for our partners. A substantial amount of funds was committed for capacity building in Africa at the IAFS and almost half the allocation is being channelled through AU-led decisions and a similar amount is committed to the bilateral and regional tiers. The action through the AU was concretized through the announcement of a Joint Action Plan a few days ago in which we had shared the decision-making on the allocation of resources, the creation of training programmes and the establishment of 19 institutions in Africa with the African Union Commission and the member states. This is an important feature of our new model of engagement with Africa.
Your Excellencies,

Ambassadors and High Commissioners of friendly countries of Africa
Members of Parliament and Legislative Assembly
The business representatives and farmers from our State,
The members of Assocham
Ladies & Gentlemen.

Today I am delighted to have the Heads of Mission of several friendly countries with us in Patiala. I on behalf of the Government of India and the people of Patiala welcome all of you to the historic city of Patiala. Your presence gives a substantive engagement to our bilateral relations by according an opportunity of establishing a direct contact with agriculturists and potential investors from Punjab.

Friends,

Our relationship with African countries is long-standing. We have walked the same path of seeking independence from colonialism and join the same road for development of our countries and peoples. In many African countries, India is deeply respected for the political support it offered in the period of struggle against colonialists and invaders. Later the role of Indian educationists and businessmen has been greatly valued. The familiarity with which India and Indians are known in Africa is the expression of a true bond of friendship and the creation of strong bonds of our common experience and dreams for our people.

Excellencies,

The State of Punjab which occupies only 1.5 per cent of the geographical area of the country meets two-third of the food grain requirements of our country. Further over 95 per cent of the food grains that are moved interstate to feed deficit areas through the public distribution system are the stocks procured from this state. No doubt Punjab is called India's bread basket. The reason for India becoming a food surplus country from a food deficit country is mainly because of the success of the green revolution in Punjab.

The rising food prices in India and internationally and food shortages, in the recent years, have highlighted the importance of food security for every country. The crisis is more pronounced in the developing world where the food output has not kept pace with the growing population. The food inflation is expected to affect the developing countries, where food constitutes a major portion of the household spending and the rising prices effectively denies access to the millions of poor people.

The initiative, to strengthen our relations with African countries, especially in the field of agriculture, is an important component of our larger vision of close, cooperative and multi-sectoral partnership with African countries. Just a few days ago, we had launched the Joint Action Plan between India and Africa to follow up on the important decisions taken at the India Africa Forum Summit (IAFS) in April 2008. The Action plan which mainly focuses on capacity building in varied fields including agriculture, through training, field visits of Indian professionals, consultancy and sharing of knowledge and information will substantively contribute to our African partners' desire to fulfil the millennium development goals.

The Indian investment in Africa from the private sector is nowadays attracting the largest attention. Our investors have traditionally been important players in the transfer of technology, creation of local employment and the promotion of intra-African trade besides contributing to exports. The Indian investment in agriculture in Africa is a recent phenomenon but due to the commitment and goodwill enjoyed by our private sector entrepreneurs, it has seen a warm welcome in many African countries. The agricultural investment is aimed at utilising the unproductive arable land in many of these countries to provide mutually beneficial food security to all of us. I am sure with the strengthening of our co-operation in agriculture, Africa can become a major export market in agriculture commodities. I would also like to assure that in the process of transferring technology and providing capital, we remain mindful that we want to contribute to the genuine welfare of the farmers of African countries and would like to utilise unutilised-land and not displace people.
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am particularly pleased that several Ambassadors and High Commissioners from the African countries have come all the way to Patiala to participate in this Symposium and highlight the opportunities in the agricultural sector in their countries today. I am confident that our agriculturists, industry bodies and government representatives, will benefit immensely with their country wise presentations and deliberations. Through these forums I would like to demonstrate the sincerity of India’s engagement with Africa that could be seen as harbingers to promote sustainable development on both sides.

Finally, I appreciate ASSOCHAM’s initiative in organising this important event for the first time in Patiala and wish the conference success and hope that the outcome of these brief deliberations could lead to tangible cooperation in times to come.

Thank you

426. 'Africa Day' Lecture  "India-Africa Relations" by the External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna.
New Delhi, May 26, 2010.

Ambassador Balumuene, Dean of the African Diplomatic corps, Ambassador S.J.S.Chhatwal, Governing Body Member, Indian Council of World Affairs (ICWA), Shri Sudhir Devare, Director General, ICWA,
Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary(West), Ministry of External Affairs,
Excellencies, Ambassadors and High Commissioners of African Missions in New Delhi, Learned colleagues from the academia,
Distinguished guests,
Ladies and gentlemen,

At the outset, I extend my heartiest congratulations on the important occasion of Africa Day, which was commemorated yesterday. The founding of the Organisation of African Unity in 1963 marked a resurgence of African identity, to which India's commitment has been steadfast.

I would also like to acknowledge the positive role played by the Indian Council of World Affairs, which has worked closely with the Ministry of External Affairs, to reintroduce the Africa Day Lecture. This is another manifestation of our unwavering commitment to our African brothers and sisters.

Excellencies, Ladies and gentlemen,

Today I wish to share some thoughts on India's relations with Africa. Since our independence, Africa has always occupied a very special place in the minds of the Indian leadership. Pandit Jawhararal Nehru had said in 1955 "it is up to Asia to help Africa to the best of her ability because we are sister continents". He went on to say in 1961 that "I think the whole world owes it to the African people not to hinder them, but to help them in freedom in every way." Our common struggle against colonialism provides the historical underpinning of our special relationship. Africa has always been, and rightly so, a cornerstone of our foreign policy.

Today our relations have transformed into a genuine long-term partnership. With India's sustained economic growth over the last two decades and political consolidation across Africa, our cooperation has flourished and now encompasses all priority sectors integral to the developmental goals of Africa in the 21st century. We have to jointly face the challenges of a rapidly changing, globalised world.

India's relationship with Africa was given a new structure during the First India-Africa Forum Summit held in New Delhi in April 2008. At this Summit, leaders of India and Africa designed a programme of cooperation for a structured interaction in a variety of areas, which include human resources, capacity building, education, science and technology, agricultural productivity and food security, industrial growth including the small and medium enterprises sector, health and communications and information technology.

These programmes were extensively deliberated with our African partners through the African Union and I am happy that we have concluded the Action Plan of Cooperation in March this year. We have decided to establish 19 India-Africa institutions, including (i) India Africa Institute of Foreign Trade; (ii) India Africa Diamond Institute; (iii) India Africa Institute of Educational Planning and Administration; and (iv) India Africa Institute of Information Technology.

Government of India’s Pan African e-Network Project is another good example of India-Africa partnership. I am very happy to learn that 47 countries have already joined this Project to provide quality tele-education and tele-medicine.

Our bilateral trade with Africa is on the upswing, having grown from US$3 billion in 2000-01 to US$39.3 billion in 2008-09. I feel that there is considerable potential for further growth and expansion. Through the Government’s ‘Focus Africa programme’, we are actively encouraging the private sector to seriously look at the African market. We are also encouraging enhanced Business-to-Business interactions between the Chambers of Commerce and trade bodies on either side. On our part, we have offered a Duty Free Tariff Preference (DFTP) Scheme for Least Developed Countries, 34 of whom are in Africa, to enable them to gain preferential access to the Indian market. 16 of these countries have already started availing benefits under this Scheme.

Our Official Developmental Assistance in the form of concessional Lines of Credit (LOCs) and Grants-in-Aid continue to be important instruments for supporting infrastructure and development projects as prioritized by the African nations themselves. Over the next five years, an amount of US$5.4 billion, i.e., US$1.1 billion per year has been earmarked for Africa in the form of credits and another US$ 500 million as Grants.

Excellencies, Ladies and gentlemen,

In a rapidly changing world, an important dimension of India-Africa Partnership is our meeting of minds on pressing global issues. These issues include the reform of the United Nations, combating International Terrorism, Climate Change, WTO, reform of international financial institutions, combating diseases, eradication of hunger and poverty and promotion of inclusive democratic societies and polities.

The current global architecture is many decades old and is no longer capable of adequately meeting the increasing challenges before us. The United Nations, in particular, needs to be reformed and strengthened. The absence of Africa and countries like India from the permanent membership of the UN Security Council makes the body unrepresentative and undemocratic. India strongly supports Africa's demand to get its due role as permanent members of the Security Council. We appreciate the widespread support of African countries for India's permanent membership of the Security Council.

Both India and the African Union have advocated expansion of the Security Council in both its permanent and non-permanent categories. We both emphasize that the new permanent members of the Security Council should have the same rights and responsibilities as the existing permanent members, though the G-4 proposal envisages this to be a step-by-step process. Given that text-based inter-governmental negotiations on UN reform will start in the UN General Assembly on 1st June 2010, we now need, more than ever, to work together to ensure stronger presence of the developing world in the UN Security Council.

Excellencies, Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, all of us are living under the shadow of the threats posed by the scourge of International Terrorism. No part of the world can claim to be immune from its tentacles. Continuing terrorist attacks in various parts of the world are a reminder that the international community needs greater cooperation and stronger collective action to defeat terrorism. India had proposed a draft for the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism in 1996, whose adoption will demonstrate the strong will of the international community to act unitedly against terrorists. Most of the differences over the draft have since been reconciled. The remaining issues can be resolved if the international community shows sufficient political will. We particularly look forward to working with Africa for early adoption of the Convention. We also need to evolve a coordinated response for tackling the menace of Piracy in the Indian Ocean in order to safeguard our sea routes and ensure uninterrupted movement of goods and people.
The WTO has the responsibility to ensure that developing countries, especially the least developed countries, secure a proper share in the growth of international trade, commensurate with the needs of their economic development. That is why the development dimension of the Doha Round is especially important and the reason why market access gains cannot be the sole touchstone of the Round. Early, balanced and successful conclusion of the Doha Round, with development at the core of its heart, will benefit developing countries which is particularly important in the wake of the global economic and financial crisis of unprecedented reach and its concomitant adverse effects on the availability of trade finance.

The recent global economic meltdown points towards the urgent need for bringing about reforms in the international financial institutions, in which the interests of the developing countries should be fully safeguarded. The resilience of the economies of Asia and Africa even in these turbulent times could offer some lessons to global financial planners.

Excellencies, Ladies and gentlemen,

Let me conclude by saying that I am deeply convinced that together with the rise of Asia, it is the emergence of Africa that will bring about the most far-reaching changes in the existing world order. Back in 1963, Pandit Nehru had said that the emergence of Africa is "a major event in history and, what is more, it is going to play an ever-growing part in the coming years. We in India have naturally welcomed it." I only need add here, on Africa Day today, that I find Africa's revival and growth an extremely gratifying and happy development that augurs well for India and the world. We in India are proud to be partners in Africa's growth. It is a privilege to cooperate and work with Africa's developmental projects, and I would like to particularly thank my African friends present here for giving us the opportunity to do so. We remain firmly committed to working closely with Africa in order to help fulfill Africa's developmental targets, and the aspirations of its people. We also look forward to working together on major global issues.

As we rejoice in Africa's growth and development, let us pledge to make the coming decade the 'Decade of India-Africa Partnership'.

Thank You.

Kampala, July 26, 2010.

An Indian delegation led by Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West) in the Ministry of External Affairs, participated in the Executive Council Session of the 15th Summit of the African Union held in Kampala, Uganda. This was in keeping with India’s consistent engagement with the African Union multilaterally and its Member States bilaterally.

During the Summit, Shri Vivek Katju and the delegation called on H.E. Mr. Jean Ping, Chairperson of the Commission of the African Union. Various aspects of the continuing engagement with Africa and the follow-up of the decisions of the India-Africa Forum Summit (IAFS) of April 2008 were discussed. The Chairperson expressed immense satisfaction at the model of engagement created by India and said it was the most unique and preferred of Africa’s partnerships. He also expressed satisfaction at the determined pace at which implementation of the proposals of the IAFS had been undertaken. The Action Plan of the Framework of Cooperation of the IAFS was announced in March 2010 and among the decisions currently under implementation are the placement of the first batch of 75 scholars under the Special Scheme for Agriculture Sciences in the Institutions of ICAR; the initiation of the CV Raman fellowships for Scientific Research; the implementation of several new training programmes, including the holding of capacity building courses by the Indian Institute of Foreign Trade in 9 African countries so far.

India is to establish 19 institutions for building African capacities of which 4 are at the continental level and the others on a regional level. The African Union has decided on the locations of some of these institutions in West and Central Africa and communicated those decisions to the Indian delegation at the meeting.

During the Summit, Shri Vivek Katju also met with several Foreign Ministers on a bilateral basis to review the existing level of bilateral engagement and to further the agenda set at the IAFS in April 2008. These include the Foreign Minister of the host country of the Summit - Uganda; the Chair of the African Union - Malawi; Rwanda; Burundi; Ethiopia; Kenya; Lesotho;
Mauritius; Seychelles; Zambia; Namibia; South Africa; Djibouti; Republic of Congo; Cote d'Ivoire; Liberia; Sierra Leone; Senegal; and the forthcoming Chair of the African Union - Equatorial Guinea.

The issue of UN reform and the common African position was a subject of discussion at the Summit and was also discussed with the Foreign Ministers, particularly the Committee of 10 of the African Union.

On the sidelines of the Summit, the delegation also met with the Deputy Chairperson of the African Union Commission, several Commissioners and representatives of the Regional Economic Communities.

428. Remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the inauguration of the second-phase of Government of India’s Pan African e-Network project.

New Delhi, August 16, 2010.

Your Excellencies the High Commissioners and Ambassadors;
Secretary (East);
Senior officers of Ministry of External Affairs and TCIL;
Members of the Media;
Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen;

It is my proud privilege to inaugurate the second phase of the Pan-African e-Network Project today in respect of 12 African countries - Botswana, Burundi, Cote d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, Eritrea, Libya, Malawi, Mozambique, Somalia, Uganda and Zambia - along with senior Ministers of these countries.

I had useful interactions with all the Ministers during which we not only exchanged views on the issues relating to the implementation of the Project but also on other aspects of our bilateral relations.
Friends, the Pan-African e-Network Project is one of the finest examples of the growing partnership between India and Africa. I understand that this is the biggest project of distance education and tele-medicine ever undertaken in Africa.

It is a matter of great pride for India to be the driving force for such an ambitious project, which is fully financed by the Government of India and has an approved budget allocation of Rs 540 crores (US$ 125 million).

Conceptualized on the vision of India's former president Dr. A P J Abdul Kalam of connecting India with all the fifty three (53) countries of the African Union with a satellite and fibre optic network for sharing India's expertise in education and health care, the project is being implemented in 47 African countries, of which actual commissioning has been completed in 34 countries.

Under this Project we have made available the facilities and expertise of some of the best universities and super-specialty hospitals in India to the people of Africa. The project is also equipped to support e-governance, e-commerce, infotainment, resource mapping and meteorological and other services in the African countries, besides providing VVIP connectivity among the Heads of State of the African countries through a highly secure closed satellite network.

I am happy to learn that more than 1700 students from several African countries have already registered with the Indian universities for the various courses being offered by them under the tele-education component of the Project.

Regular tele-medical consultations have also started between the African doctors and the Indian specialists through this network. Likewise, nearly 700 CME lectures have been held delivered by our doctors from the Indian Super Specialty hospitals.

Taking into account the enthusiastic and encouraging response from our African partners, we have decided to offer training at the regional level by conducting workshops in the tele-medicine and tele-education modules for the benefit of African participants to facilitate better utilization of different aspects of this Project. I am confident that at the end, both sides would find themselves enriched through mutual exchanges and interactions.
It is a matter of deep satisfaction that the Pan-African e-Network Project has been conferred with 'The Hermes Prize for Innovation 2010' by the European Institute for Creative Studies and Innovation for its contribution in the field of sustainable development. I would like to congratulate all the participating countries on this shared achievement.

I would also like to congratulate all the 47 countries which have joined this Project and especially the 12 countries represented by Your Excellencies where the second phase of the Project was formally inaugurated today.

I commend officials of the TCIL for the sincerity and dedication shown by them while implementing this gigantic project.

Thank you!

New Delhi, August 16, 2010

The External Affairs Minister Sh. S.M. Krishna, , inaugurated the second phase of the Pan-African e-Network Project covering twelve countries at TCIL Bhawan, New Delhi, in the presence of High Commissioners and Ambassadors of African countries and senior officers of MEA. The twelve countries include: Botswana, Burundi, Cote d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, Eritrea, Libya, Malawi, Mozambique, Somalia, Uganda and Zambia.

EAM held online interaction on bilateral matters with senior ministers and other high-ranking dignitaries in each of the twelve countries individually through the network. He urged all the countries to take full advantage of the complete range of services offered by India in the tele-education and tele-medicine fields.

After the inauguration, EAM addressed the participants including members of the media, when he described the Pan-African e-Network Project as one of the finest examples of the growing partnership between India and Africa. He noted that this is the biggest project of distance education and tele-medicine ever undertaken in Africa. The project is also equipped to support e-governance, e-commerce, infotainment, resource mapping and meteorological and other services in the African countries, besides providing VVIP connectivity among the Heads of State of the African countries through a highly secure closed satellite network.

A total of 47-countries have already joined the project. The network already covers 34-countries and the remaining would be progressively brought within its scope. The first phase of the Pan African e-Network Project was inaugurated in February 2009 in respect of eleven countries by the then External Affairs Minister. (These countries included: Benin, Burkina Faso, Gabon, The Gambia, Ghana, Ethiopia, Mauritius, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal and Seychelles.)

The basic objective of the Pan-African e-Network project is to assist Africa in capacity building by way of imparting quality education to 10,000 students in Africa over a 5-year period in various disciplines from some of the best Indian Universities/Educational Institutions. Besides, this would provide Tele-Medicine services by way of on line medical consultation to the medical practitioners at the Patient End Location in Africa by Indian Medical specialists in various disciplines/specialties selected by African Union for its Member States.

The Pan African e-Network Project was conceived by former President Hon'ble Dr. A.P.J. Kalam and approved by the Union Cabinet on 5th July, 2007 at a budgeted cost of Rs.542.90 crores (US$ 125 million) which covers the cost of supply, installation, testing and commissioning of hardware and software, end-to-end connectivity, satellite bandwidth, O&M support, and providing the tele-education and tele-medicine services to 53 African countries for 5-years. The Ministry of External Affairs is the nodal ministry for the project while Telecommunications Consultants India Limited (TCIL) is implementing the project on a turnkey basis.

Regular Tele-Medicine & Tele-Education services have already been started on this network. At present, the Tele-Medicine consultations are regularly being conducted from Super-Specialty Hospitals from India to the African countries on need basis. Moreover, regular Continued Medical Education (CME) sessions have been started with effect from 22nd April, 2009 from 11 Indian Super-Specialty Hospitals. So far 654 CME sessions have been conducted on this network.

Regarding Tele-Education services from India, more than 2000 students from Africa have been enrolled in 5 different top ranking universities in India in various disciplines like MBA, Master in Finance Control, PG Diploma in IT, M.Sc. in IT and Bachelor in Finance & Investment Analysis and many others. Regular Tele-Education live sessions are being conducted from India and students have shown great interest in the courses.

TCIL has established the Network with a Data Center in TCIL Bhawan, New Delhi that acts as a gateway to the Hub Station in Dakar for connectivity of Indian institutions on the African side.

Complete details on the project are available on Pan-African website www.panafrican-Netword.com 430. Opening remarks by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna during his interaction with journalists from Africa.

New Delhi, October 12, 2010.

1. It is a pleasure to welcome you to India. I hope you are having a professionally fruitful and pleasant stay in New Delhi.

2. I am particularly happy that for the first time ever, we are hosting distinguished journalists, from ten of our closest friends in Africa.

3. We have historical linkages with the African continent, having shared many trials and tribulations together. It is gratifying that our relationship has transformed in recent decades and years. We have now become developmental partners, looking out for each others interests and well being.

4. India, the largest democracy in the world, is a developing country with numerous challenges and strengths to bring a better life to our people, particularly the most vulnerable among them. We have the vision, determination and ability, to overcome our principal challenge, that of poverty alleviation. For this purpose, we have to address all that which stands in the way including infrastructure bottlenecks.

5. We have accumulated a host of developmental experiences, which are perhaps more relevant to fellow developing countries. We are privileged not only to share them, but also to share our limited resources with friends in Africa.

6. The India-Africa Forum Summit held in April 2008 was based on the new architecture, the common vision we share with African countries. It is based on the Banjul Formula and is not an unilateral exercise. In order to implement the decisions taken at the first summit, a joint action plan has been developed which focuses on capacity building, human resource and infrastructure development, bridging the information gap and forging closer media contacts.

7. We are committed to go by the priorities and wishes of our African friends, in crafting programmes of cooperation through a consultative process.

8. This is greatly facilitated by regular high level political exchanges. We have had the honour of hosting a number of African leaders in the last couple of years. I paid a most fruitful visit to Seychelles, Mauritius and Mozambique last July.

9. We look forward to the second India Africa Forum Summit in Africa in 2011.

10. I am also pleased to note that a number of initiatives jointly agreed to in 2008 are already taking shape including, the 20,000 scholarships over a five year period, a Pan-African E-Network, infrastructure projects including Pan-African Centers of Excellence, as well as two billion dollars in fresh lines of credit.

11. Last but not the least, India and Africa need to infuse new vigour in our cultural and people to people ties. We have been fascinated by each other's cultural traditions and have a lot to offer in both directions.
12. In this pleasant task, I seek the support and partnership of our media friends from Africa and India, without which this objective cannot be achieved. India is an open book. I would like you to read a few leaves from this book and draw your own conclusions during the few days of your stay in India.

432. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of a delegation of African Regional Economic Communities.

New Delhi, November 19, 2010.

In order to further enhance institutional engagement between India and Africa, the first ever meeting between India and the African Regional Economic Communities (RECs) was held in New Delhi between 14 and 16 November 2010.

It was attended by the Secretary Generals of Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA) and East African Community (EAC), the President of the Economic Community of West African States
AFRICA

(ECOWAS), the Deputy Executive Secretary of Southern Africa Development Community (SADC), Adviser in-charge of Political Affairs of Community of Sahel-Saharan States CENSAD, the Director of Political Affairs of Union of the Arab Maghreb (UMA/AMU) and senior officials from their delegations.

Africa has a large number of Regional Communities and eight of them are recognised by the African Union. These include the above and the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) and Inter-Governmental Authority for Development (IGAD). These eight RECs are an integral part of the India Africa Forum Summit structure based on a decision of the African Union Summit taken at Banjul in July 2006. The countries that Chair these eight RECs were invited to the first India Africa Forum Summit in April 2008.

India's multi-layered cooperation with Africa works through the traditional bilateral engagement, with the rapidly involving engagement at the continental level through the African Union and also at the regional level through the RECs.

There has been active engagement with some of the RECs and MOUs have also been signed but on this occasion, an initiative was taken to engage all of them together so that the implementation of the India Africa Action Plan for the Framework of Cooperation could be discussed in detail and implementation procedures worked out.

The RECs were welcomed by Smt. Preneet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs, who said that they were an important element of the India Africa partnership structure and India looked forward to work with them to implement the decisions of the IAFS. The RECs expressed their deep appreciation for the Government of India's initiative in inviting them as integral partners of India in Africa. A detailed wrap-up session was held under the Chairmanship of Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West), where results of the process of consultation and how to take it further were discussed.

The representatives of the RECs met with several Ministries and agencies of the Government of India who are engaged in implementing jointly agreed programme and projects. These include: the Bombay and National Stock Exchanges and Ministry of Finance with whom developing capacities of regional stock exchanges in Africa was discussed; with the Ministry of Food Processing where the handling of post harvest issues and food processing in Africa was discussed and with the National Small Industries Corporation, who arranged a visit to Techmart at the India International Trade Fair where economic development through engagement with small industries was the focus of discussion. India is to establish 10 small industry incubators in Africa, two in every region under commitments of the Action Plan of the IAFS. A presentation by TCIL on the Pan-African e-Network project led to significant discussions on implementing the regional dimensions to this project and to enhance its usage in many of the countries covered by the RECs.

The delegation also received presentations from the Education Consultants India Limited (EdCIL) on setting up of the India Africa Institute of Information Technology in Ghana; National University of Educational Planning & Administration (NUEPA) on setting up of the India Africa Institute for Education Planning & Administration in Burundi; the National Institute for Training of Highway Engineers on computer aided design for roads and bridges; Building Materials Technology Promotion Council on establishment of Human Settlement Centres and related issues under the IAFS and by the Indian Diamond Institute on the India Africa Diamond Institute to be established in Southern Africa. They also met with representatives of the Ministry of Railways and RITES to discuss ideas for regional railways networks.

The delegation had an occasion to interact with the Director General of the Indian Council for Cultural Relations and appreciate India’s cultural diplomacy in Africa.

Two special sessions were organised, one by CII and other by FICCI, to provide a private sector interaction for the delegation from the RECs. A cross-section of Indian investors and entrepreneurs met with the delegates to discuss opportunities in their region, to learn about the growing market size, i.e., from about 130 million people in the EAC to nearly 400 million in COMESA.
Africa’s Regional Economic Communities’ movement towards harmonisation of standards and laws and to create common markets, have an important bearing on the development of India’s trade and investment. They are also seeking to harmonise better movement of goods and services through enhanced infrastructure development and integration as well as the development of processing facilities, particularly in agriculture, mining and oil and gas. They are keen to engage with India’s private sector to attract them to the greater opportunities for trade and investment and sensitise the Indian agencies on their capacity building, human resource development, food and agriculture processing requirements as well as their desire to have greater investment for the development of their own resources.

The representatives of the Regional Economic Communities expressed their gratitude to India for taking such an initiative to engage with them and recognise the regional dimension of Africa’s development. They considered India an important partner and were happy to have a structured dialogue in this format. Some of the RECs who already have MOUs with India (EAC, COMESA, SADC) were keen to intensify the dialogue on a regular basis and to review implementation of decisions taken. Other RECs were keen to move towards bilateral MOUs so that an enhancement of their engagement with India could occur. All of them expressed appreciation for the detailed programme and interaction arranged for them through which they got briefings from a variety of implementing agencies and Ministries.

It was agreed that the dialogue with the RECs would continue with them periodically and appropriate action plans including all decisions taken through the Joint Action Plan with the AU would be pursued together.
BOTSWANA
433. Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice-President's visit to Zambia, Malawi and Botswana.

New Delhi, January 4, 2010.

Director (XP) (Shri Sailas Thangal): A very good afternoon to you, ladies and gentlemen. Welcome to this special briefing on the forthcoming visit of Hon'ble Vice-President of India to three African countries - Zambia, Malawi and Botswana - by Secretary (West) Shri Vivek Katju. Also present on the dais are: Shri Gurjit Singh, Joint Secretary, and Shri P. Harish, JS and OSD to Hon'ble Vice-President.

After making his opening remarks, Secretary (West) will be happy to take a few questions on the visit only. Let me also take this opportunity to introduce myself. I am Sailas Thangal, Director (XP), standing in for Joint Secretary (XP) who is out of station. May I now hand over the floor to Secretary (West)?

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Thank you Sailas. Good afternoon and a very happy New Year to all of you.

The Hon'ble Vice-President will be visiting Zambia, Malawi and Botswana from tomorrow, the 5th to the 11th of January. The visit is the highest level visit from India to these countries in recent years and it only serves to emphasise the commitment that India has to continue to foster, a multi-faceted and a mutually beneficial relationship with Africa.

The Hon'ble Vice-President will first visit Zambia from the 5th to the 7th of January where he would meet with the Zambian leadership. Vice-President His Excellency Mr. George Kunda will be the Vice-President's host. The Vice-President will be received by the President of Zambia His Excellency Mr. Rupiah Banda. He will also meet with senior Ministers, and call on Dr. Kenneth Kaunda, who, you will recall, was the first President of independent Zambia and with whom India had a very special relationship. The President of Zambia, His Excellency Mr. Rupiah Banda had visited India in April 2008 for the India-Africa Forum Summit in his then capacity of Vice-President of his country.
From Zambia, the Vice-President will make the first-ever visit by an Indian dignitary to Malawi from the 7th to the 9th of January. He will be received by His Excellency Mr. Bingu wa Mutharika, the President of Malawi. We have had interaction with Malawi at the Ministerial level. A group of Ministers from Malawi had visited India in May 2006, and that group had included the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Finance, Transport and Public Works, and Local Government and Rural Development. The main objective of the visit of this group of Ministers was to develop linkages with India in all spheres of economic and development cooperation.

On the final part of his tour, the Vice-President will visit Botswana from the 9th to the 11th of January, where he will be hosted by His Excellency Lt. Gen. Mompati S. Merafhe, the Vice-President of Botswana. To give you the background, the previous President of Botswana, His Excellency Mr. Festus Mogae had visited India in 2006.

Our relations with Africa are increasing. Our trade with these three countries, for instance, has high growth potential. Indian investors have shown an interest in several areas of activity in these countries. There is now a Duty Free Tariff Scheme which gives opportunities for a larger number of African products to access the Indian market. This Scheme was announced at the India-Africa Forum Summit in 2008 and we remain firmly committed to enhance our functional cooperation with Africa in the spirit of the Delhi Declaration and of the framework of cooperation which was agreed upon at that Summit. The proposals for expanding our relationship with Africa was focused in a major way on building African capacities through the establishment of institutions of excellence, enhancing training programmes, and contributing to capacity-building in Africa in sectors in which India has core competencies. This approach will continue in our interaction with African countries and will form the bedrock of the Vice-President’s discussions with his African counterparts and the leadership of these three countries that he will be visiting.

You know, ladies and gentlemen, that our engagement with Africa is of a historical nature and is founded on a firm partnership of shared values and shared struggles for human dignity and worth, and we will always be guided by the choices made by our African partners for their own development. I would like to underline this point because this is the spirit in which we approach our development programmes in Africa. We are not prescriptive. We seek to ascertain from our African partners what is their need and then we seek to respond to those needs.

To give you further background, private sector investment and Government of India backed financing are important elements of our engagement with Africa. We have extended Lines of Credit to many African countries. For instance, so far we have extended Lines of Credit of 30 million US dollars to Malawi, 20 million US dollars to Botswana. We have provided Zambia with a Line of Credit of 10 million US dollars. And there is an agreement, which we hope will be signed during the Vice-President's visit, for a Line of Credit of 50 million US dollars for the Itezhi Tezhi Hydropower Project in Zambia. Additional funds, both as credits as well as grants, will be available to support the development aspirations of Zambia, Malawi and Botswana. The grants in particular will focus on the sectors of agriculture, health and education.

I may also mention that the decisions that were taken during the India-Africa Forum Summit are now in the process of implementation. And we will undertake, in the three countries that the Hon'ble Vice-President will be visiting, to announce the bilateral component of our cooperation which will be in line with the decisions that were taken at the Summit in 2008. We are also discussing with our African partners the regional components of that strategy which was decided at the Summit. These discussions are ongoing with Regional Economic Communities in Africa. Finally, we are in the process of working out a Joint Action Plan with the African Union Commission that we hope we will be able to announce soon.

During the Vice-President's visit we hope that we will be able to sign agreements for mutually beneficial cooperation in sectors like agriculture, small and medium enterprises, foreign office interaction in the areas of health and power. Naturally other agreements will emanate from the discussions that the Vice-President will have with his counterparts.

In brief, our engagement with Africa is traditional. We are committed to imparting a continuous momentum to this relationship for mutually beneficial cooperation whether it be in the area of development assistance or in trade, in investments, in capacity-building, etc.

I will be happy to take a few questions on the visit.
Question: What is India's total trade with Africa?

Secretary (West): If you take the entire continent, it is about 39 billion US dollars.

Question: What about the total investment in these three African countries? Do you have the figures?

Secretary (West): I have some figures. In Zambia the total investments is of the order of 1.6 billion US dollars. There is a very large investment in copper mining and copper industry. But some of this investment may have been routed not directly from India but by Indian groups from outside India. But there is a substantial presence in Zambia in the mining sector. It is also there in other areas. For example, in banking, it is there in hotels, in the hospitality industry. In Malawi, we do not have any investments at the moment. But this visit, we hope and indeed we are confident, will lead to a greater interest. I should have mentioned that a business delegation will be accompanying the Vice-President. That delegation will naturally explore further business opportunities in all these three countries. In addition, there will be of course a Minister accompanying the Vice-President as is usual in such tours. And three Hon'ble Members of Parliament will be there with the Vice-President on this tour.

With Botswana, there is a small investment of three and a half million US dollars. I think in Botswana it is in automotive parts. Here we are looking forward to a substantial degree of interaction with Botswana in different areas of commerce especially in diamonds. Botswana is a major diamond-producing country. We have some Indian groups in the diamond industry which are already in Botswana. But we will be discussing various opportunities that we think will be possible through a greater degree of interaction between our companies and Botswana entities, during the course of the visit.

Question: Who is the accompanying Minister?

Secretary (West): Mr. Harish Rawat, the Hon'ble Minister of State for Labour and Employment will be accompanying the Vice-President.

Question: Chinese are acquiring large tracts of agricultural land in these countries. Is India also encouraging Indian agriculturists to go there?
Secretary (West): We are aware that there are Indian groups that have made investments in the area of agriculture, in floriculture in some African countries. That is a process which we feel is mutually beneficial. At the same time in investments dealing with land, we have to be cautious that such investments must be completely transparent and acceptable in the host country. But yes, I think cooperation in the area of agriculture is an important part of our interaction with Africa. Such cooperation has to be mutually beneficial. The strengths that exist in India in the area of agriculture have always been available to African partners.

Question: Apart from trade, will there be any political issues which will be discussed, for example, the expanding footprint of China in Africa, or the position on Zimbabwe at the moment?

Secretary (West): As far as the first issue is concerned, let me say straight away that we are not in competition with any country in Africa, or I believe elsewhere. We have, as I mentioned in my opening statement, a firm historical relationship with Africa. Again as I mentioned, we have been partners with Africa in shared struggles for human dignity, for freedom. We have shared values. I do not need to mention to this group the connections we have had with Africa in the past. So, we have our own relationship with Africa. That relationship was greatly strengthened through the India-Africa Forum Summit that was held in 2008. As far as political issues generally are concerned including issues in Africa, naturally when the political leaders meet they discuss among other things political issues. I do expect that the Vice-President in his interaction with the African leadership will touch upon these issues.

Thank you.

Director (XP): Thank you, ladies and gentlemen.
434. Media briefing by Secretary (West) in the Ministry of External Affairs Vivek Katju during Vice President's visit to Botswana.

Gaborone, January 9, 2010.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): As you know, the Vice-President arrived this afternoon. He held official talks with his counterpart, the Vice-President of Botswana His Excellency Lt. Gen. Mompati Merafhe. The talks were held in a very warm and cordial atmosphere and also in an atmosphere of great friendship. The Vice-President of Botswana was appreciative of the fact that Botswana had been included in the Vice-President's tour of southern Africa.

The discussions covered bilateral issues. There was focus also on some regional situations and on some areas of international concern. In so far as bilateral issues are concerned, the Botswana side expressed great gratitude for the assistance that Botswana has received through the decades in its efforts at capacity-building in different areas including the training of its defence forces. We have had a team of defence officers in Botswana for many years now, which is involved in imparting training. The quality of training that has been given to the armed forces of Botswana was recognised by the Vice-President of Botswana. The Vice-President also noted the participation of Indian professionals in the fields of education and health. He was also appreciative of the role that has been played by the Indian community in this country.

Our Vice-President on his part assured the Botswana side that our capacity-building programmes would continue and would be available to our friends in Botswana in areas which they consider to be priority areas. As you know, our entire approach to matters relating to capacity-building or in terms of assistance is based on sharing of experience, and it is never prescriptive. This is an important fact. We never seek to influence the planning processes or the socioeconomic priorities that our friends and partners determine. These are areas where they have to make choices and we respect those choices. Such experience that we have gathered, we are always willing to share with them. This is a point which our Vice-President underlined to the Botswana side. One specific area that was mentioned was that of vocational training, and we have agreed that we will send our experts on deputation to assist in this area.

As part of the implementation of the India-Africa Forum Summit's decisions, as I have told you earlier in our interaction, we are in the process of undertaking an exercise with the AU for the location of the four Pan-African Institutes that India has offered to establish. There was focus on this subject and we mentioned to the Botswana side what these institutes were. I mentioned this to you in the past. We also underlined that it was for the African Union to take a decision in this respect.

Our Vice-President also mentioned the strength that we have acquired in the area of agriculture, and conveyed to his Botswana counterpart that we will be very happy to share this expertise that we have gathered. Among international issues, two subjects came up. One was the need for a reform within the UN system including the reform of the United Nations Security Council. The Botswana side once again reiterated its support for India's bid for permanent membership of the Council or of an expanded Council.

The other issue that was briefly touched upon was that of climate change. It was recognised by both sides that climate change is the pressing global issue; that developing countries will bear the brunt of climate change, and that in all international efforts to meet the challenge of climate change the principle that has to be kept uppermost is that of differentiated responsibilities according to the capacities of different countries. Two agreements were signed. I would request my colleague Gurjit to give you details.

Joint Secretary (E&SA)* (Shri Gurjit Singh): One was a Memorandum of Understanding on Cooperation in the Field of Agriculture and Allied Sectors. It was signed by the High Commissioner from our side and the Minister for Agriculture on the side of Botswana. The thrust of this agreement is to identify areas of cooperation as agricultural research, agricultural machinery, livestock, crops and horticulture. A Joint Working Group will be established to review these and how they are implemented. The second one is an Exchange Programme on Cooperation in the Field of Education. In 1997 we had this agreement on cooperation in the field of culture under which various exchange programmes can be undertaken. And as you notice, education is one of the foremost sectors and so this was selected. In this area exchange of research materials and information, organisation of joint seminars, joint research programmes, training programmes for educational administrators and teachers, exchange of academic staff, scholars, teachers, students, twinning arrangements between institutions of higher learning; bilateral programmes in technical, vocational and higher education, possibility of mutual recognition of educational qualifications, setting up of Chairs on contemporary studies, providing scholarships and mutual assistance in the field of IT, computer science, mathematics and science, and any other activities. It was an umbrella agreement.

Secretary (West): We will give you a write up on this.

Joint Secretary (E&SA): They also specifically noted that NIIT was doing a very good job in the field of IT education.

Question: Were any regional issues discussed?

Secretary (West): There was a very brief discussion on the situation in Zimbabwe and in the Democratic Republic of Congo.

Question: A follow-up on Zimbabwe. The position of the Government of Botswana is slightly at odds with that of the African Union in that the Government of Botswana is far more critical of Mugabe. Does the Indian Government share that or does it disagree with the Government of Botswana in favour of the African Union?

Secretary (West): It is not for the Government of India to comment on the positions of other States. We were told that Botswana seeks that there should

* Zimbabwe, has been under severe criticism from the international community for the political crisis following the disputable elections of 2008. The issue came up for discussion when Vice-President Hamid Ansari called on Botswana President Seretse Khama Ian Khama. India was however of the opinion that it was a domestic issue of Zimbabwe. But for Botswana it was a major issue being a neighbour since it bore the brunt of the problem. A large number of illegal migrants were trickling into Botswana on a regular basis, creating an economic problem. During the on-board briefing at the start of the African tour soon on January 5 Mr. Ansari had said India subscribed to the African Union position on the issue. The African Union, after much debate, confined itself to urging the warring political parties of Zimbabwe to negotiate a solution to solve their differences. During his meeting with the President of Botswana, Mr. Ansari noted that both countries were well-established democracies and the two leaders called for greater participation of women in all areas of national and public life. Later, at a reception hosted by the Indian High Commissioner, Mr. Ansari said both countries shared a common and abiding commitment for democracy, rule of law and respect for human rights. be a democratic Zimbabwe, that there should be free and fair elections. It is my impression that this is the position that is shared by the African Union. It is also obviously a position that is shared by the Government of India.

Question: What about diamonds? Did you talk about direct access to Botswana's uncut diamonds?

Secretary (West): No, we had no discussions on diamonds. Our Vice-President did indicate the interest that we have in the area of mining in Botswana and that many Indian companies are showing an interest in this area, and that is a process that we are entirely comfortable with.

Question: Was there any specific discussion on diamonds?

Secretary (West): No.

Question: Vice-President has spoken of the need of sourcing diamonds directly while avoiding the diamond cartel when it comes to prices. But De Beers is the monopoly when it comes to production.

Secretary (West): As part of his programme he is visiting a diamond trading company. The role the diamonds play in the economic life of Botswana is evident and the Vice-President is visiting a facility which is an important facility in this area. I do not see any contradiction between what the Vice-President had mentioned to you earlier and the Vice-President's proposed visit to this facility.

Question: Is Botswana still critical of Indo-US Civil Nuclear Deal?

Secretary (West): We did not discuss nuclear issues. My friend correctly reminds me that there was great appreciation expressed by the Botswana side about the role that India is playing in international fora and he praised India as a dependable and trusted economic partner.

Question: Have you a list of the possible institutes where these Chairs in Contemporary Studies will be opened?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): Both the Education Ministries are here. There would be a Joint Working Group which will meet and then go over the various issues.

Secretary (West): This is an umbrella agreement. Under this, work will now take place on specifics.

Thank you.
435. Address by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Banquet hosted in his honour by Vice President of Botswana Lt. General Mompati S. Merafhe.

Gaborone, January 9, 2010.

Your Excellency, Lt. Gen. Mompati S. Merafhe, Vice President of Botswana, Hon'ble Ministers,
Hon'ble Members of Parliament,
Distinguished guests, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

My wife and I are delighted to be in your beautiful country. I bring the greetings and good wishes of the Government and people of India to the government and people of Botswana. The warm welcome and gracious hospitality extended to us is reflective of the close bonds between our two countries.

India’s partnership with Botswana is an important component of our larger vision of close, cooperative and multi-sectoral partnership with African countries encompassing political, security, economic, science and technology, human resource development and cultural sectors. At the first ever India-Africa Forum Summit held in New Delhi in April 2008, African leaders and our Prime Minister jointly adopted a Framework for Cooperation to strengthen our engagement.

Our partnership with Africa is based on equality and mutual benefit for our peoples. India respects the sovereignty and territorial integrity of African states and commitment to deepen the process of African integration. We, along with our African partners, wish to promote a culture of peace, tolerance and respect for religious, cultural, linguistic and racial diversities as well as for gender equality.

India feels an affinity with Botswana. We are both committed to the ideals of democratic governance, of accountability and transparency, of respecting fundamental freedoms and human rights, and of upholding the rule of law. We are both engaged in the task of economic development with inclusive growth so that we can provide a better life and opportunities for fully developing the potential of our peoples. It is through our mutual cooperation and cooperation among the countries of the south that we will successfully address our concerns.

Excellency,

We have watched with great interest the initiative for economic diversification and economic growth launched by the Government of Botswana, with a specific focus on addressing poverty and unemployment. It is significant that your National Development Plan scheduled to begin in April this year is basing such diversification efforts on promoting the six hubs of agriculture, transport, the diamond industry, health, education and innovation. I would like to assure you that the government and people of India have the capacity and desire to partner with Botswana in each of these sectors.

The cutting edge expertise achieved and technologies developed by India in agriculture, pharmaceuticals, small and medium enterprises, information technology, engineering and the various aspects of the diamond industry would be made available to our friends in Botswana as you continue on your journey of growth and development.

We would like Botswana to take advantage of the new initiatives announced at the India-Africa Forum Summit particularly in regard to capacity building and development. We propose to establish several Pan African institutions including African Institutes of Information Technology, Diamonds, Foreign Trade and Educational Administration. I am sure Botswana will benefit from some of them.

The grant of US $ 8 million made available by India to the Government of Botswana for the social sector projects in agriculture, health and education would deepen our mutual cooperation based on our complementarities and will greatly benefit the friendly people of Botswana. We believe that our Line of Credit of US $ 20 million can be utilized for development of infrastructure or industrial projects in Botswana.

Excellency,
Our recently commissioned pan-African E-Network Project is yet another milestone of South-South Cooperation. This project will facilitate tele-education and tele-medicine services and video-conferencing with all the Heads of State in Africa. This is an example of our efforts to bring the benefits of our technological development to our partners in Africa.

Botswana has emerged as an influential player on the regional as well as the global stage. Our two nations share common approaches on many issues on the international agenda. We are committed to working towards a safer and more equitable world order that is responsive to change and the realities of today.

Your Excellency, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, May I request all of you to join me in a toast.

• To the health and personal well-being of His Excellency, the President of Botswana, Lt. General Seretse Khama Ian Khama;
• To the continued progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Botswana;
• And to lasting friendship, affection and cooperation between India and Botswana.

Thank you.
"I am delighted to be here with you this evening and to meet you all. Since our arrival in this friendly country, my wife and I have enjoyed the warm welcome and kind hospitality of the Government and people of Botswana.

India and Botswana have long standing and close bilateral ties dating back to several decades. Both countries share a common and abiding commitment for democracy, rule of law and respect for human rights. We also share similar challenges to address the developmental needs of all of our citizens and provide opportunities to develop their potential.

India is committed to partner with Botswana in its initiative for economic diversification and economic growth in consonance with the Framework for Cooperation adopted by our leaders at the first ever India-Africa Forum Summit held in New Delhi in April last year. Such partnership would cover various areas including capacity building, agriculture, diamond industry, infrastructure development, health, food security and technology cooperation.

The efforts made by various Indian Trade Promotion Councils and Chambers of Commerce and Industry, in tandem with the Botswana Export Development and Investment Authority (BEDIA) and Botswana Confederation of Commerce, Industry and Manpower (BOCCIM) have broadened the possibilities of establishing joint ventures and of investment opportunities and bilateral trade.

The growing economy of India has given greater opportunity for Indian entrepreneurs to invest in Botswana which has huge reserves of minerals. Let us take this opportunity to further strengthen bilateral trade and commerce.

I am glad to know that many Overseas Indians have extensively contributed to the development of Botswana. Your hard work, diligence and talent have earned a reputation. Your achievements and good work are a source of immense pride and happiness for us.

We are keen to deepen our engagement with Overseas Indian communities, including with you in Botswana. The government of India has created the Ministry of Overseas Indians Affairs the nodal ministry to implement its initiatives for the welfare of the Overseas Indians.

During my visit I have been received with great warmth and affection. I am overwhelmed by the generous hospitality that was shown to me, my wife and the delegation accompanying me.

I am extremely thankful to all of you for having come here this evening. I wish you all every success in your professional and personal lives."

New Delhi, June 19, 2010.

At the invitation of the Vice President of India, the Vice President of Botswana, His Honour Lt. Gen. Mompati S. Merafhe visited India from June 16-19, 2010. Vice President Merafhe's delegation included the Assistant Minister for Agriculture and senior officials. It was Vice President Merafhe's first visit to India as the Vice President of Botswana. The Vice President of India had visited Botswana in January this year.

The Vice President Shri M. Hamid Ansari had discussions with and hosted a banquet for the visiting dignitary on June 17, 2010 in Hyderabad House. The Vice President of India hosted a personal dinner as a special gesture towards Vice President Merafhe. Vice President Merafhe called on the President and had a meeting with the Prime Minister. He had business interaction with CII.
Vice President Merafhe visited Mumbai on June 18-19, 2010. He had a meeting with the Governor of Maharashtra on June 18, 2010. He addressed a Press Conference and inaugurated the Liaison office of Botswana Export Development and Investment Authority (BEDIA). The delegation led by Vice President Merafhe also visited Shrenuj Diamond Jewellery Manufacturing Unit on June 19, 2010, one of the Indian companies working on site in Botswana.

India’s relations with Botswana have been close and friendly. India being one of the fastest growing economies in Asia, it has created renewed interest in Botswana, both at Government and business levels. The two nations share similar perceptions on various issues including democratic values, reforms and expansion of the United Nations Security Council (UNSC). Both sides also cooperate at WTO and in the framework of India’s relations with Southern African Development Community & Southern African Customs Union (SACU) (of which Botswana is a founding member).

During the visit, an MOU on Cooperation in the Field of Small Medium and Micro Enterprises, and an Agreement on Cooperation in the fields of Science and Technology were signed.

India is supporting Botswana both financially and through training. A grant of US$ 10 million for the education and health sectors for a period of five years has supported school education programmes in Botswana. The Pan-African e-Network Project of the Government of India is implemented in Botswana is an important aspect of capacity building and support to the education and health sectors. Following the India-Africa Forum Summit in April 2008, CV Raman Fellowships have been instituted in the area of scientific research and development and Botswana is a beneficiary of such fellowships.

Both sides are now renewing the relationship in a contemporary context and trying to find mutuality for cooperation in the fields of MSME sector, defence, agriculture, trade and investment. Both sides reiterated their resolve to continue bilateral dialogue and cooperation at various international fora. The visit was an opportunity to underline our commitment to South-South cooperation with a friendly country in Africa.

ETHIOPIA

New Delhi, March 30, 2010.

The first India-Ethiopia Foreign Office Consultations were held on 30 March 2010 in New Delhi. The Ethiopian delegation was led by Ambassador Mahadi Ahmed, Director General of the Middle East, Asia and Oceania Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia, and the Indian delegation was led by Shri Gurjit Singh, Joint Secretary (E&SA), Ministry of External Affairs.

2. Both sides held extensive discussions bilateral issues as well as shared information on the regional and international issues of interest to both the sides.

3. It was decided to hold the first India-Ethiopia Joint Ministerial Commission after the elections and formation of a new Government in Ethiopia later this year. Ethiopian side requested for engagement with India for the training of a large batch of recently-recruited young diplomats. Indian side responded positively and on their advice, the Ethiopian delegation discussed the matter with Dean, Foreign Service Institute. During the meeting in FSI, it was decided to cooperate in the establishment of the new Foreign Affairs Training Institute in Ethiopia.

4. It was also agreed that the Foreign Office Consultations be held at least annually, alternatively in New Delhi and Addis Ababa.

5. Both sides shared information on situation in Somalia, Sudan, Darfur and Eritrea as well as India’s relations with its neighbours. UN reforms and Climate Change, being issues of common interest to India and Ethiopia, were also discussed.

6. Ambassador Mahadi paid a courtesy call on Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West). Bilateral relation issues were reviewed and discussed during the meeting. Stressing on the importance of training of young diplomats, as proposed by the Ethiopian side, Secretary (West) promised all possible assistance from Government of India.

7. India and Ethiopia enjoy close and friendly bilateral relations which are diversified and have depth. There is greater understanding in bilateral matters and excellent cooperation in regional and international fora. India-Ethiopia engagement has developed through capacity building programmes, training and sharing of experience and has reached the threshold of high volume of bilateral trade and increased investment by Indian entrepreneurs in Ethiopia. India has also assisted Ethiopia with soft credit lines for helping its sugar industry.

441. Extract relevant to Ethiopia from the Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on Prime Minister's bilateral meetings on the sidelines of the G-20 Summit.

Seoul, November 11, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening. As you are aware, the Prime Minister of India, who arrived at Seoul yesterday to participate in the G20 Summit, had a number of important engagements and bilateral meetings today. His bilateral meetings include those with the Prime Minister of Ethiopia, the President of Mexico, and the Prime Minister of UK. I would endeavour to share with you some details of these three important bilateral meetings.

In the morning, he had a meeting with the Prime Minister of Ethiopia His Excellency Mr. Meles Zenawi. They had a very warm meeting, a very friendly meeting which is reflective of our excellent ties with Ethiopia. Prime Minister Zenawi was very appreciative of India’s support to Ethiopia in its economic development, capacity-building. They are, as you know, beneficiaries of the ITEC programme. We are setting up a large vocational training centre in Ethiopia, and also offering a number of scholarships amongst other things.
year period to strengthen and expand the sugar industry in Ethiopia. A sizeable chunk of the line of credit has already been released. The funds have been transferred and they are being utilized very effectively.

The Pan-African e-Network Project was launched from Addis Ababa a year and a half ago. Seeing the efficacy, the efficiency of the e-network project, Ethiopia recently signed MOUs of Cooperation on commercial terms with IIT Delhi and IIT Kanpur to provide tele-education to twenty regional universities in Ethiopia.

I mentioned that the Prime Minister of Ethiopia had come to India in April 2008 for the first India-Africa Forum Summit. The Second India-Africa Forum Summit is likely to be held in Africa next year. The two leaders also exchanged views on holding the Summit. I mentioned that the Ethiopian Prime Minister warmly welcomed India's partnership with Africa and has also hailed it as a model of cooperation. So, the two sides discussed ways and means to take the India-AU partnership further.

He mentioned that the African Union was currently considering the proposal, and preparations will be initiated once a decision is taken about the date and venue of the Summit in Africa. They also briefly discussed Africa's priorities in G20.

* * *

Question: Today our Prime Minister has told the PM of Ethiopia that we Indians would be contributing a Vocational Training Centre which is going to open in Ethiopia and offer scholarships. Can you highlight on the areas in which scholarships will be given like in education or medical or engineering, and the vocational training centre which we have offered?

Official Spokesperson: Happily. Capacity-building and human resource development is one of the very important areas of cooperation between India and Africa. We have what we call the ITEC (Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation) programme which is as old as about 50 years now. If I remember offhand, it was initiated in 1962. Under that ITEC programme we have been offering about six thousand training slots every year, and the entire cost is borne by the Government of India, to about 155 of our partner countries worldwide. Out of six thousand, one/third have traditionally been going to Africa. But during the India-Africa Forum Summit it was decided to enhance the efforts of capacity-building significantly. We had offered 20,000 scholarships over a five-year period for Africa. These are in different areas including medical, high-technology, engineering, and there is Raman Fellowship which is at postgraduate level, and so on. We have also launched the Pan-African e-Network Project of which already the second phase has been initiated and over 35 countries have already become part of. Under that we are offering tele-medicine and tele-education programmes which also has been found very useful by our African partners.

442. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the meeting between Commerce Minister Anand Sharma and Ethiopian Deputy Prime Minister to discuss bilateral trade.

New Delhi, December 2, 2010.

Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce and Industry during the bilateral meeting with Mr. Hailemariam Desalegn, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Ethiopia here today, expressed satisfaction at the impressive growth in bilateral trade, which has grown from US $ 83 million in the year 2005-06 to US $ 272 million in 2009-10, registering a growth of 227% in the last 4 years. He informed that India’s exports to Ethiopia have increased from US $ 74 million in 2005 - 2006 to US $ 253 million in 2009-2010, and India’s imports from Ethiopia have grown from US $ 8 million in 2005 -06 to US $ 18 million in 2009- 2010.

Shri Sharma also conveyed that there was potential to further increase the bilateral trade between both countries, especially the Ethiopian exports to India, in view of the Duty Free Tariff Preference (DFTP) Scheme announced by India. The Scheme provides for duty free market access on 85% of India's total tariff lines and Margins of Preference (MOP) on 9% tariff lines. "There is scope for increased trade and joint ventures in areas such as agriculture & agro-processing industries, floriculture, textile and garments, leather and leather products, IT sector, drugs and pharmaceuticals etc.

Interacting with the visiting Minister, Shri Sharma said that India is the largest foreign investor in Ethiopia with approved investment of US $ 4.4 billion. Of this, approximately US $ 1 billion is already on ground or in the pipeline. About 40% of Indian investment is in the field of commercial agriculture.

Major items of export to Ethiopia were machinery & instruments; electronic goods, transport equipments, manufacture of metals, paper wood products etc. while major item of imports from Ethiopia were pulses, oil seeds, leather, spices, non-ferrous metals, raw hides & skins etc.

The Ethiopian delegation was led by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia, H.E. Mr. Hailemariam Desalegn. The Indian delegation was led by H.E. Mr. S.M. Krishna, Minister of External Affairs of India.

2. The two heads of delegations hailed the existing warm and cordial relations between the two countries. They emphasized the significance of this first Joint Commission meeting as another milestone of meaningful and growing cooperation between the two countries. Both the leaders also agreed to infuse the close political relationship with greater economic content. Both sides agreed that the relationship will expand in many more ways in diverse sectors.

3. The Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, in his opening remarks, mentioned that the relations between Ethiopia and India are based on mutual respect and benefit which is a classical example of South-South Cooperation. Ethiopia draws meaningful lessons from India’s experiences and expertise in the areas of democratization, federalism, election, and others.

4. Both sides reviewed the bilateral relations and expressed their satisfaction over the progress made in the last five years and exchanged views on regional and international issues of interest to both sides.

5. The Ethiopian side expressed thanks to the Government of India for extending Lines of Credit for US$ 705 million (US$ 640 million for sugar development and US$ 65 million for power transmission). An agreement for release of third tranche of US$ 213.31 million to support the sugar development was signed between EXIM Bank and Government of Ethiopia during the meeting on 1st December, 2010.
6. The Ethiopian side expressed gratitude for providing training under Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation, long-term scholarships under ICCR, scientific and special agricultural scholarships and other training programmes emanating from the decisions of the India Africa Forum Summit, and mentioned that these trainings are very useful for capacity building and human resource development of Ethiopia. Further he referred to the Pan African e-network for tele-education & tele-medicine and mentioned that after the successful implementation of the pilot project in Ethiopia in 2007, they have expanded this to various universities in Ethiopia in collaboration with IIT Delhi. To enhance cooperation in Science & Technology sector, a programme of cooperation on Science & Technology was signed after the meeting on 1st December, 2010.

7. Ethiopia reiterated its support for Permanent Membership for India on a reformed UN Security Council.

8. The Ethiopian side mentioned that the India Africa Forum Summit (IAFS) was a unique initiative and had contributed to African development. They welcomed the decisions and implementation of the first India- Africa Forum Summit and looked forward to work closely with India for the successful conduct of the second IAFS to be held in Africa in 2011.

9. During the visit, the Ethiopian Deputy Prime Minister & Foreign Minister also met with H.E. Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, Minister of Finance and H.E. KENYA

445. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the visit of Commerce Minister Anand Sharma to Kenya.

New Delhi, October 14, 2010.

India and Kenya have decided to enhance the level of cooperation between the two countries in the spirit of South-South cooperation. This was decided in a meeting between Mr. Anand Sharma, Minister of Commerce and Industry, Government of India and Mr. Raila Amolo Odinga, Prime Minister of the Government of Kenya, held at Nairobi, Kenya on 14th October, 2010. Mr. Sharma recalled the historical relationship between the two countries and the support provided by India to Kenya in its freedom struggle.

It was pointed out by Mr. Sharma that following the Delhi Declaration of 2008, which had set the roadmap of cooperation, there had been a deepening and strengthening of ties between India and the African continent. In recent years, Indian companies from the private and public sector had shown a growing interest in Kenya. The level of Indian investment in Kenya had reached a figure of US $ 1.5 billion. Mr. Sharma reiterated that India was focusing on human capital development, and Kenya was a partner in this as a large number of students from the country were studying in India.

The implementation of the Pan Africa e-network project was also discussed. Mr. Sharma pointed out that the project was already making a significant contribution in fields of tele-education and tele-medicine in many African countries. 47 African countries have signed the Agreement for implementing this project. It was acknowledged that this project had bridged the digital divide. Kenya had signed the Agreement with TCIL, India in July, 2010 and very soon the system will be operationalized. Mr. Sharma, Commerce and Industry Minister of India informed the Kenyan Prime Minister that as part of its commitment to contribute to the economic growth of Kenya, India had recently extended a Line of Credit (LoC) of US $ 61.6 million for executing a Power Transmission project.

Mr. Odinga, Prime Minister of Kenya recalled the historical contribution of Mr. Appa Pant, India’s first High Commissioner to Kenya, in laying a strong foundation of India-Kenya relations. Mr. Odinga further pointed out that his father had visited India in the early 1950s to observe the functioning of democracy in the newly independent nation. The Kenyan Prime Minister acknowledged the significant role that India had played in enriching the Human Resource Development of Kenya. Mr. Odinga informed Mr. Sharma that he planned to visit India in mid-November, 2010 to participate in the World Economic Forum's 'India Economic Summit'.

Mr. Sharma highlighted the contribution of the Indian pharmaceutical industry in making available life saving medicines at affordable prices, especially through generic medicines. He conveyed India's concerns on the attempts being made outside the WTO and WIPO Forums to confuse Indian generic medicines with counterfeits. With respect to the global standards and benchmarks, Indian pharmaceutical companies are the best. The largest USA FDA approvals for non-US companies are of Indian companies. He requested that Kenya may keep this in view while implementing the Kenya Anti-Counterfeit Act and the proposal to have a similar legislation at the East African Community (EAC) level.

Mr. Anand Sharma, Minister of Commerce and Industry, Government of India and Mr. Raila Amolo Odinga, Prime Minister of the Government of Kenya agreed that there was a great potential for increasing the scope of cooperation between the two countries in the areas of Information Technology; agriculture including agro-processing; infrastructure development sectors like road, rail, and energy including generation, transmission and distribution of power; oil & gas; manufacturing; and healthcare. Following the 6th India-Kenya Joint Trade Committee Meeting (JTC) held on 13th October, 2010, these sectors would get focused attention.

Mr. Anand Sharma inaugurated on 14th October, 2010, the 'Namaskar Africa' event being organized by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) in association with the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, Government of India during 14 to 15th October, 2010 at Nairobi. The event comprises of an 'India Exhibition' and the 'India-East Africa Business Forum' with participation of business delegations from 12 East African countries. The Forum had the largest ever business delegation from India. The Forum will consider in its deliberations issues pertaining to increasing agricultural productivity and local value additions.
through advance technologies; multilateral funding mechanisms; India's Duty Free Tariff Preference (DFTP) Scheme for Least Developed countries (LDCs) and specific sectors of power, health and ICT. 'Namaskar Africa' is an exclusive networking forum of African and Indian enterprises offering trade, investments and joint venture opportunities across the sectors of mutual interest to both the sides. 'India- East Africa Business Forum' has brought together the policy makers, businessmen, financial institutions, multilateral funding agencies, procurement agencies, investment bodies, regional bodies and sectoral nodal institutions from India and the 12 countries of East Africa for a business dialogue, to share their experience and learnings for mutual growth and discuss the project specific opportunities in identified sectors for mutual collaboration.

While inaugurating the 'Namaskar Africa' event, Mr. Sharma stressed the fact that India's relationship with the African continent was a unique and distinct partnership based on trust, friendship and respect for each other's cultures. He emphasized that we need to find ways to further deepen and strengthen our engagement with the African continent.

Earlier on 13th October, 2010, Mr. Anand Sharma, Hon'ble Minister of Commerce and Industry of the Government of India co-chaired the 6th India-Kenya Joint Trade Committee Meeting (JTC) with Mr. Chirau Ali Mwakwere, Hon'ble Minister of Trade of the Government of Kenya, at Nairobi, Kenya. The Indian and Kenyan delegations discussed a host of bilateral economic and trade issues and many important decisions were arrived at.

Mr. Sharma informed that during the 6th India-Kenya JTC Meeting, the two sides had set a target of bilateral trade of US $ 2.5 bn in the next three years, i.e. by Financial Year 2012-13, and also identified the steps to be taken towards this objective. Current level of bilateral trade is US $ 1.5 bn (in F.Y. 2009-10).

The JTC reviewed the implementation of the Pan Africa e-network in Kenya and Kenya has agreed to identify the site locations by the end of October, 2010. The network enables sharing of India's expertise in the field of healthcare and education with all the members of the African Union. 47 countries in Africa have already signed the Agreement with TCIL and 119 sites/centers have been commissioned / integrated with the e-network.
Mr. Sharma highlighted that India offered to collaborate in the Kenyan efforts for revival of its textiles sector, which accounts for 30% of Kenya's industrial workforce, by providing technical assistance in skill building for the entire value chain, transfer of technology in ginning and processing, collaboration with Indian Textiles Research Association and exploratory visits for businessmen and Buyer-Seller Meets.

JTC took note of the offer of a Line of Credit (LoC) of US $ 61.6 million made by India to Kenya for ‘Power Transmission Lines’, which would help in augmenting Kenya’s infrastructure.

During the JTC meeting, the Kenyan side appreciated India’s concerns on the Kenyan Anti-Counterfeit Act and stated that the legitimate Indian trade concerns in this regard would be addressed.

Mr. Sharma said that India and Kenya had agreed towards greater engagement between the ‘Kenya Investment Authority’ and ‘InvestIndia’, which would help in trade and investment flows between the two countries. Decision was taken to fast-track the finalization of a Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement (BIPPA) and a revised Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement (DTAA) between the two countries. Functioning of MoU in the Medium and Small Scale Industries sector was reviewed. The two sides also agreed to take steps towards early signing of Agreements/MoUs in the field of Tourism and Civil Aviation and finalization of MoUs in the areas of Human Resource Development, Standards and Scientific/Industrial Research.

According to Mr. Sharma, the key sectors identified for bilateral cooperation were agriculture including agro-processing; drugs and pharmaceuticals; infrastructure development sectors like road, rail, and energy including generation, transmission and distribution of power, airport; Information and Communication Technology (ICT); oil & gas; manufacturing; and healthcare.

Mr. Sharma hoped that the JTC and the ‘Namskar Africa’ event at Nairobi, Kenya would provide further stimulus to the growing relationship between India and Kenya.
LESOTHO

Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Visit of Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Relations of the Kingdom of Lesotho Mohlabi Kenneth Tsekoa.

New Delhi, March 9, 2010.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Relations of the Kingdom of Lesotho, Hon. Mohlabi Kenneth Tsekoa is visiting India during March 8-11, 2010. This is the first visit by the Foreign Minister of Lesotho to India in over five years. Minister of State for External Affairs Dr. Shashi Tharoor hosted a working lunch for the visiting dignitary on March 9, 2010 in Hyderabad House. Minister Tsekoa also called on our Minister of Rural Development.

Lesotho is a friendly southern African nation with which India shares excellent relations. Lesotho's leadership is well disposed towards India and holds a favourable view of India's role in Africa. Lesotho has consistently supported our candidatures to various international bodies as well for our permanent membership of the United Nations Security Council. Lesotho has been fully supportive of our aspirations to play a role internationally. The visit is a useful occasion to express our appreciation in this regard and to seek a continuation of Lesotho's support in future. The visit also offers an opportunity to underline our commitment to South-South cooperation.

The inaugural meeting of the India-Lesotho Joint Commission was held in New Delhi in March 2009. This meeting laid the ground work for bilateral cooperation between the two countries in a host of areas.

An agreement between the EXIM Bank of India and the Lesotho government for the Line of Credit of US$ 4.7 million offered by India for setting up vocational training centres in Lesotho was signed during the visit.

During the visit of Prime Minister Mosisili of Lesotho to India in August, we had offered a credit line of US$ 5 million for promoting trade among other objectives. Most of the LOC has been utilized for purchase of tractors and irrigation equipment.

India is also supporting both financially and through training, the setting up of a full-fledged IT Centre at the Lerotholi Polytechnic in Maseru, Lesotho.

Following the India-Africa Forum Summit in April 2008, we have evolved a comprehensive blueprint for our future cooperation with Africa in several sectors. Lesotho has decided to join the Duty Free Tariff Preference (DFTP) scheme, announced at the IAFS.

Lesotho is also a signatory to the Pan-African e-Network Project initiated by India in African countries in the areas of tele-education and tele-medicine. The project is already underway in Lesotho.

India is keen to share the benefits of its growth and technological development with its partners and friends in the developing world especially in Africa and sees itself as a long term development partner of these countries. We propose to implement our own partnership programme which includes seeking African choices for their development and contributing to the fulfillment of Africa’s own development options. This consultative approach is valued by our African partners.

MALAWI

447. Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice-President’s visit to Zambia, Malawi and Botswana,

New Delhi, January 4, 2010.

Please see Document No.433.
448. Speech of Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Banquet hosted in his honour by the President of Malawi Dr. Bingu Wa Mutharika.

"Your Excellency Ngwazi Dr. Bingu Wa Mutharika, President of the Republic of Malawi,

Hon'ble Ministers,

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

My wife and I, and indeed my entire delegation, deem it a privilege to visit Malawi and thus renew our historically friendly and close relations. I am also deeply touched by the sentiments of goodwill that have been expressed towards me and my country. Allow me, Excellency, to thank you for the warmth of your hospitality that we have enjoyed since our arrival in your beautiful country.

The ties of friendship and cooperation between India and Malawi are built upon shared values and traditions. We share a common commitment to democratic governance, rule of law, respect for human rights and inclusive development. Our bilateral cooperation in agriculture, trade, investment, small and medium industries, culture and education needs to be stepped up significantly and new areas of cooperation explored.

We are committed to provide all possible assistance to Your Excellency in your efforts to improve the economic situation of the people and bring about overall development of the country. The Government of India has today announced the grant of US $ 1 million as emergency relief for rehabilitation following the series of earthquakes that caused loss of life and property in Malawi. In addition, we have also announced US $ 4 million in grants to support Malawi's development in agriculture, health and education sectors.

I am happy to note that Malawi has utilized the Indian Line of Credit of US $ 30 million extended to it in 2008 for irrigation, grain storage and tobacco threshing projects. We believe that our contribution building of Malawi's own capacities, infrastructure and food security is a valuable component of our partnership. As part of the commitments made by India during the India-Africa Forum Summit, we would also like to extend a Line of Credit of US $ 50 million to support the development goals of Malawi.

We encourage the private sectors of both the countries to explore possibilities of forming partnerships to realise the potential for cooperation. The opportunities under the unilateral tariff concessions to the Indian market should be utilized to enhance access of Malawi’s produce to the growing Indian market.

Our cooperation with Malawi under the Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) programme in the field of human resource development is a matter of satisfaction. India has been providing training positions to Malawians under the ITEC programme and these have increased substantially over the years.

The presence of the 7000 strong vibrant Indian community in Malawi serves as a vital link which has strengthened the bonds of friendship between the two countries. We see an important role for the Overseas Indian community in building our relationship further.

India and Malawi share common perceptions on major international and multilateral issues of mutual interest. We are determined to work with your great country on the issues of UN reforms, the ongoing multilateral trade negotiations, fight against terrorism and the issue of climate change. We would work together to ensure that the vital interests of developing countries are protected and no barriers are placed that could constrain their developmental aspirations.

It is heartening to note that during your term in office the Malawian economy has performed creditably with an average growth of 7 per cent in the last five years. This is eloquent testimony of your record of good governance. We see responsible and responsive economic governance as a requirement not only within national boundaries but also in the global context. Financial profligacy in other parts of the world have an immense impact on our development plans and reminds us that while globalisation is an opportunity, it also calls for responsible economic behaviour by all partners.

Free and fair elections are the backbone of democracy. Both India and Malawi successfully held general elections in May 2009. It is a credit to the strength of democratic institutions and maturity of our peoples. It is necessary for functioning democracies and countries with similar worldviews to interact frequently. My visit to your friendly country is intended to initiate this process. Our effort must be to make such exchanges more frequent. May I take this opportunity to invite Your Excellency President Bingu wa Mutharika to visit India. A warm welcome awaits you there. It will give you an opportunity to see how much India has changed since your college days in New Delhi four decades ago.

Our partnership with Malawi is an integral element of our larger vision of close and multi-dimensional engagement with African countries. At the first ever India-Africa Forum Summit held in New Delhi in April 2008, African leaders and our Prime Minister jointly adopted a Framework for Cooperation to strengthen our engagement.

We are confident that along with our partners in Africa, we would announce this year a joint plan of action at the continental level and a follow up mechanism to implement our Framework for Cooperation. We would like Malawi to take advantage of the new initiatives announced by India at the Summit, particularly the capacity building opportunities and the concessional lines of credit.

I am happy to learn that India's Pan African E- Network project has been commissioned in Malawi. This project, which is fully funded by Government of India, aims to connect the 53 African countries for the purpose of tele-education and tele-medicine and video-conferencing among all the Heads of State in Africa. This visionary project will endeavour to bridge the digital divide, and contribute to building technical, education and health sector capacities in Malawi. This is a shining symbol of South-South cooperation.

Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen, May I now request you to join me in a toast to:-

— the personal good health and happiness of His Excellency, President Bingu wa Mutharika — to the continued well-being and prosperity of our two friendly peoples; and — to the continuing friendship, prosperity and cooperation between our two countries."

★ ★ ★ ★
I am delighted to be in Malawi on the first ever high level visit from India since Malawi's independence. My wife and I have thoroughly enjoyed the warm welcome and kind hospitality extended by the President of Malawi, Dr. Bingu Wa Mutharika and people of Malawi since our arrival in this beautiful city of Lilongwe. My entire delegation is touched by the expression of warm sentiments towards me and our country. We also enjoyed our trip to Lake Malawi and were impressed by its sheer size and magnificence. My visit is an expression of the commitment and determination of India to enhance high level engagement with the entire African continent, especially Malawi.

Ladies and gentlemen

We have historical relations with Malawi based on shared values and common experience of our struggle against colonial rule. Both the countries are multi party democracies, multicultural and multi religious societies with strong commitment to rule of law and respect for human rights.

India is committed to provide all possible assistance to the Government of Malawi and to President H.E. Mr. Bingu wa Mutharika in his efforts to improve the economic situation of the people and bring about overall development of the country. The Government of India has today announced the grant of US $ 1 million as emergency relief for rehabilitation following the series of earthquakes that caused loss of life and property in Malawi. In addition, we have also announced US $ 4 million in grants to support Malawi's development in agriculture, health and education sectors.

The Indian community has been living in this friendly country for about a century and has contributed in significant measure to its development and to the evolution of the multicultural fabric of Malawian society. The cultural affinity and affection for India among you and other Overseas
Indian communities has prompted the Government of India to establish the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs with a mission to intensify engagement with Overseas Indians and work for their welfare. The Ministry provides information, partnerships and facilitation for all matters related to Overseas Indians.

The Government has also introduced the Overseas Citizenship of India (OCI) scheme to facilitate your travel to and interaction with India. We would encourage you to take advantage of these initiatives and work for deepening economic partnership between India and Malawi. We must utilise every opportunity and undertake every initiative to harness the potential for cooperation that exists in the areas of agriculture, mining, power, science and technology, education, information technology and Small and Medium Enterprises.

After the global economic turbulence of the last two years, I am happy to inform you that the Indian economy is on track towards recovery. We are committed to undertaking our economic reforms and are confident of reclaiming economic growth rates that existed prior to the crisis.

I thank you very much for this opportunity of meeting you all. I wish you all the very best in your work and stay in Malawi and for your endeavours to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the two countries.
Joint Communiqué issued on the conclusion of the visit of Vice President M. Hamid Ansari to Malawi.

Lilongwe, January 8, 2010.

1. At the kind invitation of the President of the Republic of Malawi His Excellency Ngwazi Dr. Bingu wa Mutharika, the Vice President of India, Right Honourable Shri M. Hamid Ansari undertook an official visit to Malawi, from 7th to 9th January, 2010. The Right Honourable was accompanied by his spouse, Smt. Salma Ansari and a delegation including the Minister of State for Employment and Labour, Shri Harish Rawat, Members of Parliament and senior government officials.

2. His Excellency Ngwazi Dr. Bingu wa Mutharika warmly welcomed the Right Honourable Vice President at the New State House in Lilongwe, and a State Dinner was organized in his honour on 7th January, 2010.

3. The purpose of the Official Visit was to strengthen and enhance the bilateral relations that currently exist between Malawi and India, and discuss other possible areas for more cooperation.

4. Right Honourable Shri M. Hamid Ansari visited the Civic Offices in Lilongwe where he signed the Visitors Book.

5. Malawi and India held bilateral talks on 8th January, 2010, at Capital Hotel in Lilongwe. The Malawi delegation was led by Right Honourable Joyce Banda, Vice President of the Republic of Malawi, while the Indian Delegation was led by Right Honourable Shri M. Hamid Ansari, Vice President of the Republic of India.

6. The two sides discussed issues of mutual interest, and identified more areas of possible cooperation.

7. The Right Honourable Shri M. Hamid Ansari announced the grant of US $ 1 million as emergency relief for rehabilitation following the series of earthquakes that caused loss of life and property in Karonga District of Malawi. He also announced US $ 4 million in grants to support Malawi’s development in agriculture, health and education sectors.

8. The Vice President of India expressed his happiness that the Indian Line of Credit of US $ 30 million extended to Malawi in 2008 for irrigation, grain storage and tobacco thrashing projects has been utilized. As part of the commitments made by the Government of India during the India-Africa Forum Summit, the Vice-President of India also announced a new Line of Credit of US $ 50 million to Malawi in support of its development goals.

9. The Government of Malawi thanked the Government of India for its development assistance made available, mainly through the EXIM BANK, Indian Technical and Economic Cooperation Programme, and the Commonwealth African Assistance Plan.

10. The Government of Malawi also expressed satisfaction with the granting of duty free access to India, on various products within the framework of the Duty Free Tariff Preference Scheme for Least Developed Countries, announced at the India-Africa Forum Summit, held in New Delhi, in 2008.

11. The two parties signed a Protocol for Consultations between the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Malawi and the Ministry of External Affairs of the Republic of India in order to further strengthen diplomatic relations between the two countries.

12. The two Parties also signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU), on Cooperation in the Field of Agriculture and Allied Sectors.
The MoU focuses on various areas including Agriculture research;
Agricultural extension management; Agricultural marketing, horticulture; animal husbandry and dairy; Watershed development; Agricultural implements and machinery; and Agro-processing.

13. The two parties also signed an Agreement between National Small Industries Corporation of India and One Village One Product of Malawi for mutual cooperation for the development of small enterprises in Malawi.

14. The two parties agreed to expedite negotiations to finalize proposed Memoranda of Understanding on Mineral Resources*; Exemption of Visas

* During the visit the two countries explored the possibility of entering into a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on the development of the southern African nation’s mineral resources, particularly uranium and coal. According to media reports Malawian Vice-President Joyce Banda specifically sought India’s assistance in the development of its recently discovered uranium resources. When journalists asked about the kind of help Malawi wanted from India vis-à-vis development of uranium, Ms. Banda said energy security was of paramount importance to her country. “Mining of uranium is just a component in energy generation and we are trying to use all sources, including uranium, water, wind and coal for this.” Malawi had only a few years ago discovered uranium.
for holders of Official and Diplomatic passports; Rural Development; and Health and medicine.

15. The two Parties agreed to sign the remaining MoUs during the next high level visit.

16. The two Parties agreed to establish a joint implementation and monitoring mechanism to ensure expeditious implementation of decisions of the Agreements and Memoranda of Understanding (MoU) and decisions of the bilateral talks.

17. The discussions were held in a cordial atmosphere which reflects the excellent relations that exist between Malawi and India.

18. Right Honourable Shri M. Hamid Ansari expressed gratitude for the warm hospitality extended to him and his entire delegation during the official visit to Malawi, and he, on behalf of Her Excellency the President of India, conveyed an invitation to His Excellency Dr. Bingu wa Mutharika, President of the Republic of Malawi, to visit India, on dates to be mutually agreed upon between the two governments.

451. Joint statement issued during the visit of Malawian President Ngwazi Prof. Bingu Wa Mutharika.

New Delhi, November 3, 2010.

1. At the invitation of the President of India Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil, the President of Malawi His Excellency Ngwazi Prof. Bingu wa Mutharika undertook a State Visit to India from November 2 - 7, 2010. H.E. Prof. Mutharika was accompanied by Madame Callista Mutharika & 6 ministers and a 45-member business delegation. During the visit H.E. Prof. Mutharika held fruitful discussions with the President of the Republic of India, the Vice President Shri Hamid Ansari, and the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. During talks, the two sides discussed issues of mutual interest- bilateral as well as regional and international.

2. During the visit, both sides agreed to strengthen the historical and friendly relations between India and Malawi. The Indian Prime Minister announced the reopening of the Indian mission in Lilongwe. The Malawian side welcomed this initiative of India and saw in it the manifestation of a clear desire to enhance engagement between India and Malawi. Malawi had opened its Mission in Delhi in February, 2007.

3. The Malawian side recalled the recent visit of the Vice-President of India, Shri Hamid Ansari, to Malawi in January 2010. That visit served to revitalise India's relationship with Malawi by establishing high level political contact, increasing development cooperation and creating a larger matrix of economic engagement. Grants of US $ 5 million offered at that time to support Malawi's development of the social sectors are under utilisation. Projects under the line of credit of US $ 50 million have been identified and a loan agreement could be signed soon. A protocol for Consultations between the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Malawi and the Ministry of External Affairs of the Republic of India was signed to strengthen diplomatic relations between the two countries. Consultations under this were held between the two Foreign Ministries in October 2010.

4. The Indian leaders felicitated the President of Malawi for his successful leadership of the African Union. India committed itself to continue to enhance cooperation and support the development of Africa. The Malawian side noted with satisfaction the strengthening of ties between India and the African Union, especially after the India Africa Forum Summit -2008. The Indian Prime Minister emphasised that India looks forward to the next India Africa Forum Summit (IAFS) to be held next year in Africa. The Malawian President welcomed the initiative and its next summit in Africa. He noted that India's capacity building support to Africa was contributing to the development of Africa's future and the growing economic engagement for mutual benefit was widely welcomed in Africa. It was also noted that India has offered to establish 20 capacity building institutions in Africa including 4 Pan African institutions.

5. India and Malawi attach great importance to the expansion of opportunities for human resource development in Africa. Malawi welcomed the doubling of scholarships, the increase in India Technical and Economic Cooperation (ITEC) training positions, the introduction of C.V. Raman Science Scholarship Scheme emanating from the decisions of India-Africa Forum Summit. India committed itself to further expansion of such facilities in the future.
6. India supports human resource development and capacity building in Malawi through the ITEC/SCAAP Programme. After the India-Africa Forum Summit 2008, India enhanced the training slots for Malawi from 15 to 30 in 2008-09 and subsequently to 36 in 2010-11. Since 2002-03, over 100 Malawian nationals have availed of the civilian training facilities in India, including through the Special Courses organised during IAFS-2008. India has also offered several new scholarships to Malawi under the decisions of the India Africa Forum Summit for use by Malawian students.

7. Malawi thanked India for extending two lines of credit totalling US $80 million so far to support its developmental goals. It was using the credit for developing agriculture, the greenbelt initiative and the one-village-one-product schemes which have contributed to the fulfilment of Malawi’s development goals. India has offered a special credit line of US $100 million to further support Malawi’s developmental priorities. India has also offered a special grant of US $5 million for capacity building in Malawi including the establishment of a small industry incubator.

8. The Indian Prime Minister stated that he was happy to note that Malawi had acceded to the Duty Free Tariff Preference Scheme offered by India for 33 Least Developed Countries in Africa to provide greater market access. Malawi welcomed this opportunity to enhance her exports. It was particularly noted that Malawi had increased its capacity to produce pulses which were finding greater market access in India. It was agreed to pursue sustainable trading relationships by finding complementarities among our economies.

9. The bilateral trade between India and Malawi in 2009-10 has increased by almost 100 per cent since 2008-09. Imports from Malawi to India have shown a remarkable growth during this period, increasing from US $7 million in 2008-09 to US $103 million in the year 2009-10. Both sides reiterated the need to further increase trade between the two countries as well as expand the trade basket of products and to increase bilateral trade to $300 million by 2013.

10. The Malawian side commended the Pan Africa e-Network Project of Government of India to facilitate tele-education, tele-medicine and video-conferencing facilities between India and Africa. This project has been completed in Malawi at three sites - VVIP Video Conferencing facility in Lilongwe, Tele-medicine facility at the Kamuzu Central Hospital, Lilongwe and Tele-education facility at the Chancellor College, Zomba. The project was officially launched on 16 August, 2010.

11. Leaders on both sides noted with satisfaction the strengthening of the growing partnership between the two countries with the signing of the following Bilateral Agreements / MoUs during the visit:

   a) General Cooperation Agreement;
   b) MOU on Cooperation in the field of Mineral Resources Development;
   c) MOU on Cooperation in the field of Rural Development;
   d) MOU on Cooperation in the field of Health and Medicine.

12. Both sides noted that in a rapidly changing world, an important dimension of India-Africa Partnership is our meeting of minds on pressing global issues. These issues include the reform of the United Nations, combating international terrorism, Climate Change, WTO, reform of international financial institutions, combating diseases, eradication of hunger and poverty and promotion of inclusive democratic societies and polities.

13. The Indian Prime Minister expressed his gratitude to Malawi for its support to India for the non-permanent UNSC seat for the 2011-2012 term and for India’s candidature for a permanent seat in the expanded UNSC.

14. Both India and Malawi underlined that terrorism cannot be justified in any form, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purposes. The two sides agreed on the need for greater cooperation among states in the fight against terrorism. In this context, the two sides urged for early finalization of Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism, which is under discussion at the UN since 1996.

15. His Excellency Prof. Bingu wa Mutharika expressed sincere gratitude to the Government and people of the Republic of India for warm hospitality extended to him and his delegation and the excellent arrangements made for their visit to India. The President extended an invitation to the President of India to visit Malawi on mutually agreed dates.

New Delhi, November 3, 2010.

Your Excellency Ngwazi Prof. Bingu Wa Mutharika
President of the Republic of Malawi,
Madame Callista Mutharika,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you on your first State Visit to India. The links between India and Malawi are historical and marked with cordiality and long-standing friendship. My pleasure is all the greater because of your long standing association with India; an association which goes back to the early 1960s when you were a student of the University of Delhi.

Excellency, you have led Malawi to remarkable achievements in the last few years including the implementation of policies leading to the attainment of food security. I take this opportunity to also congratulate you on your appointment as the Chairman of the African Union, which has not only given Malawi an opportunity to play an influential role in Africa, but also globally. We applaud Malawi’s leadership role. As Mahatma Gandhi said, “the history of the world is full of men who rose to leadership, by sheer force of self confidence, bravery and tenacity.”

I am convinced that there is a genuine mutual desire to revitalize and recharge the bilateral relationship. Your State Visit will impart a new momentum to our ties and further broaden our relationship. The decision to re-open the Indian Mission in Lilongwe is an indication of our desire to give a fresh impetus to our bilateral co-operation.

We would encourage the private sector in both the countries to explore possibilities of forming public private partnerships, to realize the potential for co-operation that abundantly exists in several areas. I am confident that the utilization of the concessional Line of Credits offered by the Government of India to Malawi, would further boost economic and commercial co-operation between the two countries.
I am happy to note that Malawi has completed all formalities for accessing the Indian market under the Duty Free Tariff Preference Scheme for Least Developed Countries announced at the India - Africa Forum Summit in 2008. The Government of Malawi may like to encourage Malawian exporters to take further advantage of this scheme. We should also look at greater complementarities to enhance our bilateral trade.

The India Africa Forum Summit held in April 2008 designed a new architecture for a structured engagement, interaction and co-operation between India and Africa. We are committed to assist African countries in capacity building, human resource development and other pillars of our co-operation. The Pan African e-network project offers a platform for India to share its expertise with countries in Africa. Your role, Excellency, as the Chairman of the African Union, is very important as we plan for the next India-Africa Summit to be held in Africa next year.

India and Malawi share common perceptions on major international and multilateral issues of mutual interest, and work together in several international fora such as the United Nations, the Non-Aligned Movement, the Commonwealth, the WTO and at the African Union. We look forward to working with Malawi on the reform of global institutions of governance, the fight against terrorism and climate change, and our common endeavour for inclusive growth and sustainable development.

India attaches a great importance to its relations with Malawi. Excellency, the agreements reached during your visit will further strengthen the institutional framework and increase the depth of the bilateral co-operation between the two countries. We share with you a vision of partnership based on friendship and mutual understanding and co-operation.

Distinguished Guests, may I now request you to join me in a toast to:- — the good health and happiness of His Excellency, President Prof. Bingu Wa Mutharika and Madame Callista Mutharika; — the continued well-being and prosperity of our two friendly peoples; and — close friendship and co-operation between our two countries.

MAURITIUS

453. Letter from Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to the Mauritian Prime Minister Navin Ramgoolam on the Labour Party led alliance's success in the elections.

New Delhi, May 7, 2010.

"I take this opportunity to extend my heartiest congratulations on the electoral victory of the L'Alliance de L'Avenir led by the Labour Party under your wise and able leadership.

Relations between India and Mauritius are unique, historical and have stood the test of time. Our cooperation is multifaceted and comprehensive. I look forward to working closely with you to further strengthen, diversify and enrich our mutually beneficial relationship in the coming years.

I would like to take this opportunity to extend a cordial invitation to Your Excellency to visit India on mutually convenient dates, which could be worked out through diplomatic channels.

Please accept Excellency, my best wishes for your continued good health and well-being and for the progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Mauritius.

With renewed assurances of my highest consideration."

454. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of External Affairs Minister to Mauritius, Mozambique and Seychelles.

New Delhi, July 7, 2010.

Mauritius

External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna paid an official visit to the Republic of Mauritius from July 2-4, 2010. He was accompanied by Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West) and other senior officials of the Ministry of External Affairs. The visit was a part of the regular ongoing high-level bilateral exchanges between India and Mauritius. This was also EAM's first visit to Africa.

2. During his visit, EAM called on President Sir Anerood Jugnauth and Prime Minister Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam. He met Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Energy and Public Utilities Dr. Ahmed Rashid Beebeejaun, Vice Prime Minister and Minister of Finance and Economic Development Mr. Pravind Kumar Jugnauth. EAM also met his counterpart Dr. Arvin Boolell, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade and discussed issues of mutual interest. EAM laid a wreath at the Samadhi of the Father of the Mauritian Nation Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam.

3. EAM's discussions with his interlocutors covered the entire canvass of bilateral cooperation between India and Mauritius and touched upon regional and international issues of mutual interest and concern. The views of the two sides on all these subjects were identical.

4. EAM and Prime Minister Navin Ramgoolam recalled the nature of the "special relationship" which bound the two countries together. EAM remarked that "the cooperation between India and Mauritius is comprehensive and multidimensional". He thanked Mauritius for its consistent support to India's candidature to the UN Security Council as well as its support to India's candidature for the non-permanent seat of the UNSC for 2011-12. EAM also noted that Mauritius had stood with India all along on issues relating to terrorism and had been unwavering and unequivocal in condemning the 26/11 Mumbai attack. Mauritian leaders expressed their gratitude for India's consistent support at all times of need and otherwise and noted India's continued assistance to Mauritius in various sectors. Prime Minister Navin Ramgoolam and Foreign Minister Arvin Boolell expressed their satisfaction over the technical assistance received from India in anti-piracy patrolling and EEZ Surveillance of Mauritian waters to improve security in this region of the Indian Ocean.

5. The following documents were signed during the visit:

(i) Memorandum of Understanding on the supply of an Offshore Patrol Vessel;

(ii) Agreement on Early Warning of Coastal Hazards between Indian National Centre for Ocean Information Services (INCOIS) and The Meteorological Services, Mauritius;

(iii) Programme of Cultural Cooperation between India and Mauritius for 2010-2013;

(iv) Agreement between Standardisation, Testing and Quality Control Directorate (STQC), Department of Information Technology, Government of India and the National Computer Board, Government of Mauritius;

(v) Agreement between Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and Mahatma Gandhi Institute (MGI), Mauritius on the establishment of a Visiting Chair of Sanskrit and Indian Philosophy at MGI.

6. EAM invited the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade of Mauritius Dr. Arvin Boolell to pay a visit to India. EAM also invited Vice Prime Minister and Minister of Finance and Economic Development Mr. Pravind Kumar Jugnauth to visit India for the 11th Session of the India-Mauritius Joint Commission on Economic, Technical and Cultural Cooperation; EAM and Vice Prime Minister Jugnauth co-Chair the Joint Commission.

7. Relations between India and Mauritius in the political, economic and cultural fields are comprehensive and extensive. EAM's visit provided yet another opportunity for further consolidation and development of the traditional, time-tested and historical relations between India and Mauritius.

Mozambique

External Affairs Minister, Shri SM Krishna, paid an official visit to Mozambique on July 4-5, 2010. The Minister was accompanied by Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West), Ministry of External Affairs, and other senior officials of the Ministry. He was also accompanied by a 22-member Indian Business delegation from Confederation of Indian Industry (CII).

2. During his visit, EAM called on the President of Mozambique, H.E. Armando Guebuza and discussed issues of bilateral, regional and international interest. President Guebuza appreciated various assistances provided by GOI to Mozambique and underlined the need for closer cooperation between the two countries. EAM also called on the Prime Minister H.E. Mr. Aires Ali. He also had a Tête-à-Tête with his Mozambican counterpart Mr. Eldemiro Baloi before holding extended delegation level talks with him, where a broad range of bilateral, regional and international issues was discussed. EAM conveyed Government of India's decision to provide US$40 million credit for setting up of a training institute for coal in Mozambique. A grant of US$5 million was also announced by EAM for project based proposals in health and education sectors. An agreement was also signed between EXIM Bank of India and the Mozambican Finance Ministry providing for a US$25 million Line of Credit (LOC) given by the Government of India for rural electrification projects in Cabo Delgado, Niassa and Manica provinces of Mozambique. Earlier, Mozambican Foreign Minister Mr. Eldemiro Boloi hosted dinner in honour of EAM on the day of his arrival. EAM also met prominent members of Indian community in Mozambique at a function held at the residence of the High Commissioner on 4 July, 2010. EAM also addressed a Business Seminar "Mozambique and India - Creating a New Paradigm" organized by Investment Promotion Centre (CPI) on 5 July, 2010 which was attended by Indian business delegation as well as Mozambican businessmen. It was inaugurated by the Minister for Planning and Development HE Mr. Aiuba Cuereneia. The Indian business delegation also had meetings with Mozambique's Minister for Mineral Resources HE Ms Esperança Bias, Minister for Energy HE Dr Salvador Namburette, Minister for Agriculture HE Mr Soares Bonhaza Nhaca, and Vice Minister for Trade and Industry HE Mr Kenneth Viagem Marizane.

3. India's relations with Mozambique have been characterized by close and friendly relations since Mozambique's independence from colonial rule in 1975. Close personal relations between the leadership of the two countries added to the warmth of bilateral ties. India's political and moral support for Mozambique during its struggle for independence and its economic assistance over the years has been appreciated by the Government and people of Mozambique. India is one of Mozambique's larger trading and investment partners. In fact, India was the fourth largest investor in Mozambique in 2009. Indian companies are active in the transport, minerals, energy and infrastructure development sectors in Mozambique. The visit of accompanying Indian business delegation is expected to further contribute to economic cooperation between the two countries.

4. This was the first bilateral visit of EAM which took place more than a decade after the last multilateral visit. EAM's visit is expected to further strengthen the close bilateral relations between the two countries and accelerate the ongoing programme of cooperation.

Seychelles

While transiting through Seychelles on 6th July 2010, on his return from the visit to Mauritius and Mozambique, EAM took the opportunity to call on President of Seychelles, H.E. Mr. James Alix Michel. President of Seychelles recently paid a state visit to India on 1-3 June 2010. EAM and President Michel discussed issues of bilateral cooperation and reviewed follow up of the decisions announced during the Seychelles President's state visit.

To establish a Visiting Chair of Sanskrit and Indian Philosophy at the School of Indological Studies, MGI. The Chair will be responsible to teach Sanskrit and Indian Philosophy at B.A./M.A./M.Phil. levels at MGI.

Mauritius: Mr. S. Ramgolam, Chairman, National Computer Board of the Republic of Mauritius

India: H.E. Shri M. Ganapathi, High Commissioner of India in Mauritius, Mrs. V.D. Koonjal, Director (MGI) & Officer-in-Charge (MGI & RTI)

Port Louis
July 3, 2010

Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding between the Indian Council for Cultural Relations and Mahatma Gandhi Institute, Moka in Mauritius for the establishment of a Mahatma Gandhi Chair.

New Delhi, July 9, 2010.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and Mahatma Gandhi Institute, Moka, Mauritius have signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) for establishment of Council’s Long-Term Chair of Sanskrit & Indian Philosophy at the Mahatma Gandhi Institute. High Commissioner of India in Mauritius, Shri M. Ganapathi and Director of the Mahatma Gandhi Institute, Prof. V.D. Koonjal signed the MoU on July 3rd, 2010 in the presence of the our External Affairs Minister and Mauritian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade.

Under the terms of agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the Institute, shall appoint a suitable Indian academician to hold the Chair for a period of one year. During this period, the Visiting Professor would contribute to the academic life of the Mahatma Gandhi Institute by engaging in teaching, research and mentoring. The Chair would commence from September 1st, 2010. The MoU would remain valid for two years from 2010.

The establishment of this Chair is expected to be an important step in furthering ICCR's larger mandate of fostering and strengthening educational and cultural bonds and towards enhancing academic knowledge and awareness about India, through exchange of academicians.

MOZAMBIQUE

456. Press Release issued by the Embassy of India in Maputo on the visit of Minister of State Dr. Shashi Tharoor to Mozambique.

Dr. Shashi Tharoor, Minister of State for External Affairs visited Mozambique on January 13 & 14, 2010 to attend the inauguration ceremony of His Excellency Mr. Armando Emilio Guebuza, President of Mozambique at the commencement of the President's second term of office.

On his arrival in Mozambique, Dr. Tharoor called on the President of Mozambique. The meeting enabled a discussion of issues of bilateral, regional and international interest. The President expressed interest in imparting greater vigour and momentum to the close and cooperative relations between India and Mozambique in his second term of office. Dr. Tharoor's separate meetings with the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Interior and Science & Technology of Mozambique allowed for discussions on specific areas of bilateral interest and India's economic and scientific projects in Mozambique. The Foreign Minister Mr. Eldemiro Boloi hosted a dinner in honour of Dr. Tharoor. Earlier that evening, Dr. Tharoor met leaders of Indian community associations at a function held at the residence of the High Commissioner. On January 14, Dr. Tharoor attended the elaborate inauguration ceremony of the Mozambique Presidency along with a number of Heads of State and Government and leaders of delegations from invited countries.

India’s relations with Mozambique have been characterized by close and friendly relations since Mozambique’s independence from colonial rule in 1975. Close personal relations between the leadership of the two countries, including Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and President Samora Machel and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and President Joaquim Chissano, added to the warmth of bilateral ties. India’s political and moral support for Mozambique during its struggle for independence and its economic assistance over the years has been appreciated by the Government and people of Mozambique. Since the establishment of a Joint Commission for Economic, Cultural, Scientific and Technical Cooperation between India and Mozambique in 2002, India has extended five Lines of Credit to Mozambique worth US$ 115 million for projects in the areas of rural electrification, water management and Information Technology. Mozambique greatly values the S&T park and research incubator financed under a Line of Credit and to be completed in two years. Capacity building support in several sectors is underway and the Pan African e-network project has been commissioned.

India is one of Mozambique’s larger trading and investment partners. Indian companies are active in the transport, minerals, energy and infrastructure development sectors. Dr. Tharoor’s visit is expected to further strengthen the close bilateral relations between the two countries and accelerate the ongoing programme of cooperation.
458. Briefing by Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs and Joint Secretary (E&SA) on the visit of President of Mozambique.

New Delhi, September 29, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to all of you, and delighted to see you.

[I am particularly happy to welcome our friends from Myanmar. A 25-member media team representing a cross section of the Myanmarese media, is here in India, for a familiarization tour and also for a sabbatical with the Indian Institute of Mass Communication. Please join me in welcoming them.]

My colleague Joint Secretary (East & South Africa), Mr. Gurjit Singh, and I would give you a perspective on the important state visit of President of Mozambique, HE Armando Guebuza, who will be arriving in New Delhi later today and would be in India till the 4th of October. This would be his first visit to India as the President of Mozambique, although he has been to India in 2003 when he was the Minister of Transport.

Let me briefly take you through the programme. He arrives later today. Tomorrow, the day starts with a ceremonial reception at Rashtrapati Bhavan. There will be a call on him by our Minister of State Shrimati Preneet Kaur. He next meets with the Prime Minister of India, and holds delegation-level talks. That will be followed by signing of agreements.
Our apex business houses - CII, FICCI and ASSOCHAM - would be organizing a luncheon meeting for him and his delegation. He is leading a high-level delegation which includes four Cabinet Ministers - Foreign Minister, Minister of Interior, Minister for Mineral Resources, Transport and Communications - and a large business delegation. The business luncheon will see the participation of the Indian business leaders and those from Mozambique.

There will calls on him by the Vice-President; Chairman UPA, Shrimati Sonia Gandhi and Leader of Opposition Shrimati Sushma Swaraj. In the evening he would meet Rashtrapatiji, who also hosts a banquet in the honour of the visiting dignitary.

On Friday, he will visit the Indian Agricultural Research Institute, Pusa. Then he emplanes for Ahmedabad where he would be visiting the famous Sabarmati Ashram, and the Gujarat Chamber of Commerce and Industry which would also host a business meeting. He will be meetings the Governor and Chief Minister of Gujarat.

His next stop would be Mumbai where he would be staying at the iconic Taj Mahal Hotel. He would be soaking in the sights of Mumbai including visiting the Gateway of India, the Elephanta caves. Again an important business meeting would be organized by the Indo-African Chamber of Commerce, plus meetings with the Governor, and the Chief Minister of Maharashtra, and a dinner that the Governor would be organizing. The dignitary leaves for home on Monday, the 4th of October.

As you are aware, Mozambique is a key Indian Ocean Rim country in the South Eastern Africa with a 2470 kilometres long coastline having excellent ports. It is also a natural gateway to some of the landlocked southern African states like Zimbabwe, Zambia, Malawi, Swaziland, and hence a crucial window for us for trade with all these countries.

We have traditionally enjoyed an issue-free and a close, cordial and friendly relationship with Mozambique. These ties have predated their Independence in 1975. During their struggle against the colonial rule, India extended wholehearted support to Mozambique. That affinity and warmth in the relationship has endured.
After Independence of Mozambique in 1975, the then Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi and the first President of Mozambique Mr. Samora Machel developed a very good equation, which cemented the ties further. Our cooperation, besides in the trade and economic spheres, has expanded in other areas including HRD, energy, minerals, defence, railways, IT, science and technology, agriculture and so on.

We also have a happy tradition of regular high-level exchanges at official and political levels. In July this year, just two months ago, EAM visited Mozambique, and had excellent meetings with President Guebuza, Prime Minister Ali, his counterpart and a number of other leaders. EAM also announced the decision of Government of India to establish a training institute in coal in Mozambique.

We are now the third largest trading partner of Mozambique with bilateral trade inching towards the half a billion dollar mark. It has doubled in under five years to over 427 million dollars in 2009-10. India has also become the fourth largest investor in Mozambique. We have been investing in sectors like energy, mineral resources, agro industries, transport and communications, food processing, coconut and cashew processing industries, and so on.

We have a framework of important agreements with Mozambique including the Bilateral Investment Protection Agreement (BIPA), which have been conducive to deepening our trade and economic relationship. President Guebuza and his delegation, as I have already mentioned, would be meeting our business leaders in New Delhi, Ahmedabad and Mumbai. Mozambique has also decided to be the partner country at the CII - Exim Bank - India Africa Conclave in 2011.

We have been a partner of Mozambique in its developmental efforts and have been assisting them in HRD and in capacity-building. They have been utilizing 30 ITEC training slots every year and also 15 scholarships made available by ICCR, besides scholarships in the area of agro sciences. Mozambique is also a member of the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR-ARC), which was formally launched by Mauritius in March 1997. The country has since decided to take advantage of the offer made by the Prime Minister of India in April 2008 to avail of duty-free tariff preference access to the Indian market. This will further spur trade relations between India and Mozambique.
On the 16th of August this year Mozambique formally joined the Pan-African E-Network Project. You are aware that this is one of our important initiatives in the African continent. EAM welcomed Mozambique to this project through videoconferencing on the 16th of August, 2010.

A MOU on defence cooperation was signed in 2006 between our countries. From time to time we have had Joint Working Groups on defence cooperation which extends to areas like training, port calls by our ships, and so on.

We believe that the visit will provide an opportunity at the highest level for two sides to have exchange of views on bilateral and international issues of mutual interest, and would give an added impetus to our cooperation. We expect a Joint Statement to be issued after the conclusion of the talks tomorrow, and also expect a number of agreements to be signed during the visit.

My colleague Joint Secretary Gurjit Singh and I would be happy to take questions, if you have any, on the visit of President of Mozambique to India.

Question: Does Coal India have some blocks in Mozambique? What will the partnership be like? Will they need a local partner?

Joint Secretary (E&SA) (Shri Gurjit Singh): It is a pleasure seeing you all again. Coal India has two blocks among the eight companies from India which have 22 blocks in Mozambique so far. It is not necessary to have a local partner, you can have direct FDI. But we are expecting this to be one of the major points of discussion when Mozambique will explain its FDI policy to India Inc., when it meets them in Delhi, Ahmedabad and Mumbai over the next few days.

Question: Can you give us the details of the agreements to be signed? Also, this Association of Indian Ocean Rim Countries seems to be a government organization. What are the current activities of this Association?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): As you know, the relationship with Mozambique is pretty old and we have had frequent visits. So, a lot of agreements have been signed on the political side. Right now the main engagement that we are seeking to diversify is the economic and capacity-building areas. So, we both Governments are trying to create a matrix where greater facilitation of Indian trade and investment engagement to enhance economic cooperation takes place. So, we are looking at agreements in the sector of small and medium enterprises, in mines and minerals cooperation, as well as in providing the further framework to what Vishnu said over the BIPA, now the Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement. These will put in place a full matrix to promote more trade and investment in the near future.

The Indian Ocean Rim Association, you are right I guess, has been a bit dormant. But in the last few months, if not years, at least something is happening. I believe India is soon going to be taking over the Chair. So, there are several things which are happening on this count. And new project ideas will be taken up under that plan as well.

Question: Between India and Mozambique, there is an old railway project, that is, the Beira railway line in which our company RITES is involved. It seems to be facing a problem. By when is it likely to b commissioned? Secondly, I had traveled with the delegation when Mr. Krishna traveled to Mozambique. Indian business community is facing serious visa problems. Many of the Indian business executives have been returned from Maputo airport. Is this issue likely to be taken up during this visit?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): On the railway line, you are right it does go to Beira but it is called the Sena line. It comes from the Tete Province which is the Province in which the first coal concessions by Mozambique were given to a Brazilian and Australian company. In the Australian company, Tatas are a 30 per cent shareholder. That line, which runs for about 550 kilometres, links the coal producing area with the port of Beira. The line was rehabilitated by Indian companies IRCON and RITES, who came together and had a consortium with a local company promoted by the Government of Mozambique. These three are shareholders in CCFM which runs the concession. The concession is for 25 years. The rehabilitation of the line has been completed. I think trial trains have also run.

What is the next step is to decide on the commercialization of that venture by providing services to the coal producers and making sure that efficient services allow the evacuation of coal and take it to the port in time. The first production of coal is expected to go on stream by mid 2011. Just before this meeting I have just come from a meeting between the Transport and Communication Minister of Mozambique and our Railway Minister. There, these issues were discussed because the focus of both sides now is to how to commercial this issue. You may see it as a problem; I see it as an issue. Because the rehabilitation is over and the line runs, now you have to work out the nitty-gritty of commercialization. That means, what is the kind of wagons you will use, what is the speed you will run at, how much you can evacuate, do you need to invest more to take it beyond the current capacity of the line, these kinds of issues. I think that is what is being tackled by both Governments, more than the Governments it is the companies. They are looking at making sure that when the coal in the mines is ready for evacuation, the railway system is in place. That is how we view it.

On the business visas issue, I believe there has been a considerable easing up since the last visit. We have not heard any complaints. But there are so many occasions for interaction between the Indian business community and the visiting dignitary in three cities that if there are issues, I am sure they will be taken up and the Mozambique side will respond to them.

Official Spokesperson: If I may add, the very fact that our trade and economic links are growing the way they are growing, and the trade has doubled in less than five years, is significant. You have been to Mozambique, and know that we have a sizeable presence of people of Indian origin and members of the Indian community. So, we are cruising along. It is a very important relationship. We are moving ahead. But as my colleague said, if there are any wrinkles that need to be ironed out, certainly between two friendly countries there are any number of mechanisms to do that.

Question: Several years ago, during an international conference that Mozambique was holding at Maputo they had requested the Indian Navy to patrol the waters outside that area as a security measure. Has any similar request come from the Mozambique Government’s side recently, or is one likely to come for the future meeting?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): I think you are referring to the African Union Summit in 2003 which was held in Maputo and the Mozambiquan Government showed immense faith in the friendship and the capabilities of us and we provided that cover. Recently, I think last month, four Indian Naval ships have visited Mozambique. They were on a goodwill visit. They have visited several countries in the region ending up with the IBSA exercises with South Africa and Brazil. We have the Joint Defence Mechanism with Mozambique which met I think in August, as JS(XP) has mentioned. They are looking to us for capacity-building to make their Navy more potent particularly in things like English-speaking courses and to allow them more training courses. We are responding positively. Thereafter these four Indian Naval ships had gone. Specifically answering your question, there has been no such event in Mozambique which required a security cover. Perhaps that is why nothing happened. But exchanges are continuing.

I would like to add here something new. A large number of African countries have approached us since the India-Africa Forum Summit for training their police forces. Mozambique is one of them. In August we had sent what is called a scoping delegation from the Ministry of Home Affairs to Mozambique and Lesotho to look at their training requirements. They have come back. Reports will be prepared. We will act on them. Meanwhile, under the India-Africa Forum Summit agreed programmes, we are going to launch four training programmes which deal with some aspects of modern police training and enforcement which will be open to all African countries. At the moment we are in the process of announcing it to all our Missions. These courses are approved and Mozambique will also be able to use them. This is just to say that it is not only the traditional defence system, but it is also the police which is now attracting the attention of the African countries including Mozambique to see and work with us and use our experience and our training capacities.

Thank you.
459. Remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the media briefing during the visit of President of Mozambique.

New Delhi, September 30, 2010.

Your Excellency,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the media,

It is a great honour for me to welcome His Excellency President Armando Guebuza on his first visit to India as the President of Mozambique. The President has shown great leadership in taking his country on the path of economic development within the framework of a democratic polity.

India's relations with Mozambique go back in time to the pre-colonial period. India extended its full support to Mozambique in its struggle for independence and emergence as an independent sovereign nation.

We both belong to the same Indian Ocean community and we share common concerns. It is in our mutual interest to ensure the safety and security of sea lanes of communication in the Indian Ocean. Our relations are therefore warm, cooperative and marked by deep mutual understanding and friendship.

President Guebuza and I have decided to build upon the solid foundations of the past, and create a partnership based on the following four pillars:

- Greater political engagement;
- Deepening economic cooperation;
- Strengthening defence and security cooperation; and,
- Cooperation in capacity building and human resource development.

We have agreed to exploit our mutual complementarities in areas of trade and economic cooperation, transportation, railways, mining, coal, agriculture, small and medium enterprises and science and technology.

I conveyed India's readiness to be a partner in Mozambique's development efforts. India will provide a line of credit of 500 million US dollars for infrastructure projects, agriculture and energy. India will support the
The establishment of training and planning institutions in Mozambique to support capacity building in the coal industry. India will also support capacity building for the defence and police forces of Mozambique.

The Agreements that have been signed today on avoidance of double taxation, cooperation in mineral resources and between middle and small enterprises will strengthen our partnership. We have decided to set a target of bilateral trade of one billion US dollars by the year 2013.

As one of Africa’s foremost leaders, President Guebuza’s leadership and guidance will play an important role in shaping India’s partnership with Africa. We will work closely with Mozambique on regional and other issues, as well as in preparations for the next India-Africa Summit in Africa in 2011.

I deeply appreciate President Guebuza’s commitment to India-Mozambique friendship and to take our bilateral relations to a higher trajectory. Based on our discussions, and the bilateral agreements that have been concluded today, I can say with confidence that President Guebaza’s visit to India has opened a new chapter in our bilateral relations.

460. Joint Statement issued during the visit of President of Mozambique Armando Guebuza.

New Delhi, September 30, 2010.

1. At the invitation of the President of India, Her Excellency Smt Pratibha Devisingh Patil, His Excellency Mr. Armando Guebuza, the President of the Republic of Mozambique undertook a State Visit to India from Sep 29 to Oct. 4, 2010. During the visit H.E. Mr. Armando Guebuza held fruitful discussions with the President of the Republic of India, the Vice President Shri Hamid Ansari, and the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh.

2. During the visit, both sides

   a) Commended the extent of bilateral relations and the exchange of high level governmental visits between the two countries. In this context, Mozambique appreciated the participation of India at the Reaffirmed the importance of strengthening relations between the two countries. India and Mozambique cooperate in various areas, including social and economic, defence and security, and human resources. Both sides agreed that this bilateral cooperation should be enhanced for the mutual benefit of the people of the two countries.

c) Agreed that there is immense scope to further enhance this cooperation and particularly increase the level of economic content for the mutual benefit of both countries. The Mozambican side appreciated the assistance and sharing of experience provided by India in various forms.

d) Noted with satisfaction the growth in mutual trade. India is among the top five major trading partners of Mozambique. India was Mozambique's fourth largest importer and third largest exporter in 2009. The trade between India and Mozambique has more than doubled since 2005-06 from US $ 178.15 million to US $427.13 million 2009-10. Both sides agreed that there is considerable scope for further increase in bilateral trade between the two countries as well to expand the trade basket. A target of US $ 1 billion by 2013 has been accepted by both sides.

e) Recognised that Mozambique is rich in mineral resources and has large reserves of untapped minerals, ores and coal and will become a major producer soon. Moreover, most of the cashew produced in the country is exported to India. Both sides agreed to develop such complementarities to expand trade. It was agreed that greater efforts to diversify and expand trade will be made. India welcomed Mozambique’s accession to the Duty Free Tariff Preference (DFTP) scheme for Least Developed Countries (LDCs) offered by India to provide greater market access.

f) Reiterated their desire to strengthen bilateral relations based on the traditionally close ties of friendship and cooperation between the two countries, and work to raise the relationship to a strategic partnership based on common interests and mutual benefits.

g) Have identified specific areas of common interest that will allow the establishment of an India-Mozambique partnership and agreed that high official delegations should meet to discuss ways to build a sustainable and mutually beneficial partnership.

3. The Prime Minister of India reiterated the Indian Government’s commitment to contribute to the economic development of Mozambique including human resources, agriculture, infrastructure and science & technology. He announced a line of credit of US $ 500 million for Mozambique. In this context, it is noted that in May 2010, India announced a Line of Credit of US $25 million for rural electrification, and in all, six LOCs amounting to US $ 140 million are operational or have been completed. The Indian Prime Minister stated that India would be happy to continue to support Mozambique’s developmental goals. A grant of US $ 4.5 million to provide equipment to build capacities of Mozambique’s police force was also announced. The President of Mozambique thanked the Prime Minister for India’s invaluable support for their development.

4. Noting that India is ranked as the fourth largest investor in Mozambique in 2009 with investments of US$64.17 million in the sectors of energy, mineral resources, agro-industries, transport and communication, food processing, and coconut and cashew processing, it was decided that greater investment promotion efforts will be made to encourage Indian FDI in Mozambique.

5. India welcomes the decision of Mozambique to be a partner country at the CII-EXIM Bank India-Africa Conclave in 2011 and considers that this would be a good event to highlight the opportunities of increasing Indian FDI in Mozambique.

6. The Government of India assured Mozambique of its continued support for both human resource development, and for imparting a new impetus to increasing economic engagement, given the closeness and economic complementarity of the two countries. This will also include support by India for Mozambique's infrastructural and mineral development and the development of an India-Mozambique Coal Partnership keeping in view the potential for growth and optimal utilization of resources in Mozambique for its development.

7. India is committed to support capacity building in the coal sector and has announced, during the visit to Mozambique of the Minister of External Affairs, Shri S.M. Krishna, that India will establish an apex institute for training in the coal sector and an apex planning institute for the coal industry in Mozambique, which will be open to the countries of the SADC region. This was welcomed by the Mozambique side.

8. Recalling that an MoU on defence cooperation was signed between the two countries in March 2006 during the visit of the Mozambican Defence Minister to India and that the second Joint Working Group on Defence between them met in New Delhi on 16 June, 2010, the two sides have agreed to enhance defence cooperation between the two countries in the areas of training and capacity building.

9. To support human resource development, under various schemes, Mozambique is now offered long-term and short-term scholarships. This includes scholarships for undergraduate, graduate and research studies in India annually. 8 new Scholarships are offered under the C V Raman Fellowship, 30 training courses are offered to it under Indian Technical & Economic Cooperation (ITEC) programme, and it also has access to special scholarships in agricultural sciences offered as a part of the decisions of the India Africa Forum Summit. Mozambican students are also eligible for scholarships under the Pan-Africa e-network Project wherein a total of 10,000 scholarships are offered to Africa.

10. In addressing wider areas beyond the bilateral realm, and in recognition of the historical and civilisation links between the African continent and India, the leaders committed themselves to strengthening the India-Africa Forum and to the advancement of the seven pillars of the Action Plan of the Framework for Cooperation launched in Delhi in March 2010. The Action Plan will intensify India-Africa cooperation in various fields including Commerce, Politics, Social Development and Capacity Building; Science, Technology, Research and Development;
Tourism; Infrastructure, Energy and Environment and Media and Communication. With this in mind, the leaders undertook to work even more closely to reinvigorate their cooperation for Africa's development. The Indian Prime Minister emphasised that India looks forward to the next India Africa Forum Summit (IAFS) to be held next year in Africa. The Mozambique President welcomed the IAFS initiative and its next summit in Africa.

11. Leaders on both sides noted with satisfaction the strengthening of the growing partnership between the two countries with the signing of the following Bilateral Agreements / MoUs during the visit:

a) MoU between India and Mozambique on Cooperation in the fields of Mineral Resources;

b) MoU on Cooperation in the field of Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSME) between India and Mozambique

c) Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement (DTAA) between India and Mozambique

12. It was agreed that the Ministerial Joint Commission will meet in the next six months to take the proposals forward.

13. Mozambique has been very politically active in all the regional forums. It is seen as an important member in the Southern African Development Community (SADC) and African Union (AU). India is increasing its engagement and cooperation with SADC and the AU and appreciates Mozambique's role in these organizations.

14. India and Mozambique noted the progress and achievements made in the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation (IOR ARC). They welcomed the adoption of a revised charter of IOR ARC and agreed to continue working together along with other Member States of IOR ARC, to revitalize the organisation and pursue cooperation in various areas for the common benefit of their peoples. They noted that the greater involvement of the business, scientific, and academic communities was essential to revitalize the objectives. Both countries have denounced and condemned firmly the acts of piracy that are occurring in parts of the Indian Ocean and reiterate the need for a regional common position against this phenomena.

15. Both India and Mozambique reaffirmed their desire to continue their mutual support and cooperation at international fora, including at the United Nations. Mozambique reiterated its support of India’s candidature for the non-permanent seat in the United Nations Security Council for the 2011-12 term.

16. Both sides, stressed their call for an urgent reform of the UN and expansion of the Security Council in both permanent and non-permanent categories. As a prominent member of the African Union, Mozambique has been playing an important role in defending the African position for comprehensive reform of the UN as expressed by the Ezulwini Consensus. Mozambique reiterated its support for India for a permanent seat on the UN Security Council. India reiterated its support to the African position.

17. Both India and Mozambique underlined that terrorism cannot be justified in any form, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purposes. The two sides agreed on the need for greater cooperation among states in the fight against terrorism. In this context, the two sides urged for early finalization of Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism, which is under discussion at the UN since 1996.

18. In view of the broad impact of climate change and the particular vulnerability of countries in the African continent due to underdevelopment and unique geographical disadvantages, the Indian side expressed its willingness to cooperate with the Mozambican side in providing assistance for urgent adaptive actions to protect against the impact climate change. Both sides also agreed to closely coordinate their positions in multilateral climate change negotiations to safeguard the legitimate interests of developing countries.

19. The Mozambican side commended the Government of India for the hosting and organisation of the Commonwealth Games and expressed its confidence on the success of this important festive event of the Commonwealth family.
20. The Mozambican side expressed its sincere thanks to the Government of the Republic of India for all the hospitality extended to them and the excellent arrangements made for their visit to India.

21. The President of the Republic of Mozambique has extended an invitation to Her Excellency Smt Pratibha Devisingh Patil, President of India and to H.E. the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to visit Mozambique. The invitation was kindly accepted and dates will be determined through diplomatic channels.

461. Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Banquet in honour of President of Mozambique Armando Guebuza.

New Delhi, September 30, 2010.

Your Excellency President Armando Guebuza,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I warmly welcome Your Excellency and the distinguished members of your delegation to India. Our countries have a warm and long-standing friendship based on a shared history.

When India became independent in 1947, many countries of Asia and Africa were still under colonial yoke. Given our own experience of the struggle for independence led by Mahatma Gandhi, it was natural for India and its people to share the aspirations of the people of those countries, which had still not been liberated. Thus, our support for the people in their struggle for freedom, including in Mozambique became a cornerstone of our engagement with Africa.

Since the independence of Mozambique in 1975, our bilateral relationship was nurtured by your predecessors and by Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and later by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. It has been growing rapidly and is now on the threshold of becoming a strategic partnership. Excellency, your predecessor President Chissano had visited India in May 2003 and I understand that this is your first visit to India as Head of State. I am confident that your visit would give further impetus to our age-old ties of friendship and brotherhood.

There have been wide-ranging changes in the political and economic landscape of our two countries. It is our common challenge to see inclusive growth in our countries. In this regard, your open and inclusive Presidency to reach out to the people at the grassroots throughout the country, and your Government's efforts to fight poverty are exemplary and commendable. I can assure you that India remains committed to support Mozambique, including through capacity building efforts like the S&T Park, the Pan African e-Network, bilateral training programmes, and the special scholarship schemes for Agriculture Sciences and scientific research, announced after the India-Africa Forum Summit in 2008.

Our economic relationship at present though substantial is still below potential. We feel that long term and durable economic relations between our two countries can be built by supporting complementarities in our economies. There is scope for cooperation in several fields, including infrastructure, minerals and hydrocarbons, agro and food processing, and in the development of small scale industries, which are ideally suited to generate employment.

Excellency,

We acknowledge the growing role and stature of your country in the regional affairs of Africa. You have been in the forefront in the African Union (AU) and the Southern African Development Community (SADC). We remain enthusiastic about our growing engagement with the SADC and the AU for mutual benefit. India, being aware of the need for a transformation from political emancipation to economic development, has revitalized its own policies towards Africa. At the India Africa Forum Summit in 2008, the Indian Government announced multi-faceted support to Africa’s aspirations. As part of this commitment, India would establish several Institutions in Africa.
India and Mozambique have also been working together in various international fora including the United Nations, the Commonwealth, the Non-Aligned Movement and the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation. We share a common commitment to pluralism, inclusiveness and creation of an equitable world order.

The scourge of terrorism has emerged as a global problem. Our country has been a victim and has lost innumerable lives as a result of cross-border terrorism. The terrorist attack on Mumbai in November 2008 was the worst kind of attack. Terrorism sponsored across borders by States is a threat to international peace and security. We must work together to see that these forces of terrorism are dealt with firmly and eradicated.

Excellency,

I have no doubt that the new areas of cooperation that have been identified during your present visit, will bind us even further in an enduring partnership that will prove to be a model for development cooperation.

With these words, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen may I request you to join me in raising a toast:-

— to the health, happiness and well-being of His Excellency President Armando Emilio Guebuza; — to the well-being and prosperity of the people of Mozambique; and — to lasting friendship between India and Mozambique.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★
At the invitation of the President of India, the President of Mozambique, H.E Mr. Armando Guebuza was on a State Visit to India from September 29- October 4, 2010. President Guebuza's delegation included 4 Ministers of his Cabinet including the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Interior, Mineral Resources, and Transport & Communications. A large business delegation as well as senior officials were part of President Guebuza's delegation.

This was President Guebuza's first visit to India as the President of Mozambique. President Guebuza had earlier visited India in 2003 as Minister of Transport and Communications.

President Guebuza called on the President who also hosted a banquet in his honour. He also met the Hon'ble Vice President of India, Shri. M. Hamid Ansari and held delegation level talks with Hon'ble Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India. The Minister of State for External Affairs, Smt. Preneet Kaur called on President Guebuza. The Chairperson of the UPA, Smt. Sonia Gandhi and the Leader of the Opposition, Smt. Sushma Swaraj, also called on him.

The discussions were held in a cordial atmosphere. The two sides expressed satisfaction at the state of bilateral relations, and agreed to work to raise the relationship to a strategic partnership. They discussed a wide range of subjects of bilateral interest covering economic cooperation, trade and investment, infrastructure, mining, coal, agriculture, micro, small and medium enterprises, human resources development, science and technology, defence and security cooperation. It was agreed that the Ministerial Joint Commission meeting will take place in next six months to take the proposals forward. A Joint Statement containing the key understandings reached during the meetings was issued during the visit.

The Prime Minister of India announced that India would provide Lines of Credit of US$ 500 million to support infrastructure projects, agriculture and energy. In this context, it is noted that in May 2010, India announced a Line of Credit of US$ 25 million for rural electrification, and in all, six LOCs amounting to US$ 140 million are operational or have been completed.
India has also extended a grant of US$ 4.5 million for capacity building of Mozambique’s police forces.

The following MOUs/agreements were signed during the visit: (i) MOU on Cooperation in the Fields of Mineral Resources, (ii) Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement (DTAA), and (iii) MOU on Cooperation in the field of Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises.

The two sides noted that bilateral trade has more than doubled since 2005-06. It has grown from US$ 178.15 million in 2005-06 to US$ 427.13 million in 2009-10. India today is one of the five largest trading partners of Mozambique. India was Mozambique's fourth largest importer and third largest exporter in 2009. In order to exploit the true potential of bilateral trade in a more diversified area, a target of US$ 1 billion by the year 2013 has been set. India ranked the fourth largest investor in Mozambique in 2009 with investments of US$ 64.17 million.

India welcomed the decision of Mozambique to be a partner country at the CII-EXIM Bank India- Africa Conclave in 2011. It would be a good event to highlight the opportunities of increasing Indian FDI in Mozambique.

The two sides reaffirmed their desire to continue their mutual support and cooperation at international fora, including at the United Nations. Mozambique reiterated its support to India's candidature for the non-permanent seat in the United Nation's Security Council for the term 2011-12 and Permanent Seat of the UNSC.

President Guebuza and his delegation met Indian business leaders during a Business luncheon meeting organised by Confederation of Indian Industry, Federation of Indian Chambers of commerce and Industry and ASSOCHAM on September 30, 2010. President Guebuza also visited the Indian Agriculture Research Institute in Delhi.

President Guebuza visited Ahmadabad on October 1, 2010. He visited Indian Institute of Management, Sabarmati Ashram, and had meeting with the Mozambique nationals in Gujarat. He had meeting with the Governor and Chief Minister of Gujarat.

President Guebuza also visited Mumbai from October 2-3, 2010. He had meeting with the Governor of Maharashtra and also had business meetings.
NAMIBIA

Windhoek, July 15, 2010.

Smt. Preneet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs visited Namibia from 12-14 July 2010. Her visit coincided with the 13th CII EXIM Bank Regional Conclave on India Africa Project Partnership 2010. A 21 member business delegation was present in Namibia during the visit.

During the visit, Minister of State called on the Founding President of Namibia, Dr. Sam Nujoma. He fondly recalled his long association with India which he had visited 11 times and received Indira Gandhi Peace Prize. He has used the Prize money for establishing a maternity ward named after late Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. He also expressed gratitude to India for its support in their independence struggle and later for its development. In a special gesture the Founding President hosted Smt. Preneet Kaur and her delegation for a private lunch.

Smt. Preneet Kaur also called on the President of the Republic of Namibia, H.E. Mr. Hifikepunye Pohamba during which they discussed issues of mutual interest. The visit served as a useful follow-up to the successful visit of President Pohamba in August/September 2009. The visit of the business delegation was seen as a successful implementation of the ideas discussed during that visit. In the interregnum the first Joint Working Group on Geology and Mineral Resources had met in October 2009 and several Indian business houses have visited Namibia to look at emerging prospects, particularly in the context of the development of Walvis Bay as a major port in the South Atlantic which links Namibia and SADC counties. The President also praised the capacity building initiatives and support provided by India to the development of Namibia particularly NIPAM (Namibian Institute of Public Administration and Management). Namibia has also signed PAN-African E-Network and is in the process of its implementation.

Smt. Preneet Kaur also called on the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Namibia, Mr. Utoni Nujoma and discussed issues of mutual interest.
During the visit, opportunities in the agriculture sector were also discussed and there is a desire on the part of Namibia for developing ventures utilising their vast land resources with India’s technology and investment. Namibia would be taking advantage of the special scholarships for agricultural scientists offered by India through the African Union. They were also informed of the opportunities arising out of the newly established C.V. Raman Fellowships for Scientific Research.

The delegation that accompanied Minister of State for External Affairs, Smt. Preneet Kaur covered a variety of sectors including agriculture, infrastructure development, mining, power and electricity, telecommunication, transportation, pharmaceutical and health care, IT and education and many others.

The Conclave was inaugurated by Hon'ble Immanuel Ngatjizeko, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare of the Republic of Namibia on behalf of Namibian Minister of Trade and Industry and by Smt. Preneet Kaur, Minister of State for External Affairs. They called for enhancement of India-Namibia economic engagement through a higher level of investment, capacity building and trade. The business delegation had enthusiastic response from a large number of Namibian businessmen. The visit was supported by the Ministry of Trade and Industry, the Namibian Chamber of Commerce and Industry and SME Compete of Namibia.

The visit served as an important follow-up to the State Visit of President Hifikepunye Pohamba to India last year and showed a commitment on the part of India to engage with one of its closest friends in Africa in substantive terms.
NIGERIA

464. Press Release on the visit of the Indian Delegation led by Minister of State for Minority Affairs Salman Khurshid to Nigeria to participate in the 50th Independence Day celebrations of Nigeria.

New Delhi, October 3, 2010.

Shri Salman Khurshid, Minister of State for Minority Affairs and Corporate Affairs unveiled the foundation stone of India-Nigeria Friendship Hospital Project in Nigeria Capital Abuja yesterday. Nigerian Minister of State for Federal Capital territory Abuja, Navy Captain Caleb Olumolade and Dr Shabihul Hassan, Chairman of this project, were also present on the occasion. The ceremony was also attended by Dr Okwesilieze Nwodo, National Chairman of Nigeria’s Ruling Peoples’ Democratic Party. The Project will be completed in two years and will be the biggest healthcare project of its kind in West Africa.

Shri Salman Khurshid, as the head of an official Indian delegation, paid a 4-day visit to Abuja from September 29 to 2nd October 2010 as representative of India at the 50th Independence Day celebrations of Nigeria. He strongly condemned the bombings in Abuja that took place on 1st October, the very day Nigeria was celebrating its Independence Day. Shri Khurshid delivered a letter of condolence and solidarity to the President of Nigeria in which he said that India expresses its heartfelt sympathy to victims and their families and that India is ready to assist Nigeria on security issues too.

The unveiling of India-Nigeria Friendship Hospital Project will further strengthen the already robust Indo-Nigerian friendship, as Nigeria is the largest trading partner of India in Africa. Bilateral annual trade turnover exceeds US $ 9 billion. Both share common perspectives on international political, social and development issues and these have manifested in various meetings at UN, WTO, etc. Nigeria, like India, is strongly opposed to all forms of terrorism. India and Nigeria have regularly exchanged visits at governmental and commercial levels to strengthen bilateral economic and commercial relations. Indian companies have sizeable investments in Nigeria in textiles, chemicals, electrical equipment, pharmaceuticals, plastics, fishing etc.
SEYCHELLES

465. Press Release issued by the High Commission of India in Seychelles on the 7th Indo-Seychelles Joint Commission Meeting.

The 7th Indo-Seychelles Joint Commission Meeting was held in Victoria (Seychelles) on May 10-11, 2010. The Indian side was led by H.E. Mr. Vivek Katju, Secretary (West) in the Ministry of External Affairs and the Seychelles side was led by H.E. Mr. Barry Faure, Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. There were exchanges of views on wide range of subjects, including the danger from piracy and at the conclusion of deliberations, several new areas of cooperation were identified.

466. Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (ESA) on the visits of President of Seychelles James Alix Michel and President of South Africa Jacob Zuma.

New Delhi, June 1, 2010.

Please see Document No.472.
Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at a Banquet hosted in honour of the President of Seychelles James Alix Michel.

New Delhi, June 2, 2010.

Your Excellency, Mr. James Alix Michel, President of the Republic of Seychelles,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me immense pleasure to welcome you and your delegation to India. We are delighted by the visit of a valued friend of India. We fondly remember Your Excellency's State Visit in August 2005. We also fondly remember your earlier visits to India as Vice-President of Seychelles in 1999 as well as a Minister in 1994 and in 1987. I wish you and the distinguished members of your delegation a very pleasant stay in India.

Your Excellency, you lead a country with strong democratic and cultural traditions. We, in India, have great admiration for the economic reforms you have successfully carried out in Seychelles, as also for the immense courage and conviction you have shown in tackling the problem of piracy, which affects us all and requires international co-operation.

The safety and security of the Indian Ocean is a shared objective of our two countries. In fact, the waters of the Indian Ocean have helped in connecting our two nations and brought us together since ancient times. The bonds between us are rich and infused with history. The links between us extend to every aspect of human life, be it social, economic, cultural, intellectual or political. Since your last State visit to India in 2005, we have moved forward a long way in our bilateral cooperation and engagement. We meet today as two vibrant democracies that share common values and common goals; and when our bilateral relations have reached a new dimension. India stands ready to be a full and equal partner in the realisation of your vision of economic development of Seychelles and in contributing to your security, especially in the face of piracy.
The enhancement of human capital is essential for progress. We have sought to contribute to the efforts of our partner countries in this direction. Thus, we have been assisting Seychelles in capacity building through scholarships for studies in Indian universities, and by providing training to your civilian and defence officers. We will continue to enhance our cooperation in this area.

We have opened a new chapter to diversify relations with Africa. The India-Africa Forum Summit was held in New Delhi in April 2008, when with African leaders at that Summit, we added a new impetus and dynamism to our partnership. We remain committed to working with our partners in Africa, for a more cohesive engagement in the present century. A milestone in our bilateral cooperation is the Pan-Africa E-Network. I am happy that Seychelles was one of the first countries to fully operationalize this project, which provides for tele-education and tele-medicine. I remain confident that the people of Seychelles will benefit from its use.

Your visit, Mr. President, will open a new chapter in our relations. We have finalised several initiatives to build a true partnership of friendship and cooperation.

Ladies and Gentlemen, I invite you to join me in a toast to: - — the health and happiness of His Excellency, Mr. James Alix Michel, President of the Republic of Seychelles; — the progress and prosperity of the friendly people of the Republic of Seychelles; and — the everlasting and ever growing friendship between India and Seychelles.

468. Press Release on the Visit of President James Alix Michel of Seychelles.

New Delhi, June 4, 2010.

At the invitation of Smt. Pratibha Devisingh Patil, President of India, His Excellency Mr. James Alix Michel, President of the Republic of Seychelles, paid a State Visit to India from 1-3 June 2010. His delegation included Ambassador Barry Faure, Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and other senior officials and a business delegation.

President Michel met the President of India who also hosted a banquet in his honour. He also met Hon'ble Shri Hamid Ansari, Vice President of India. President Michel held official discussions with Hon'ble Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India, during which both sides were accompanied by senior delegation members.

The Leader of Opposition, Smt. Sushma Swaraj, called on the visiting dignitary.

The delegation level talks, led by Prime Minister, were held in a cordial atmosphere reflecting the close and friendly relationship between the two countries. Both sides expressed happiness at the special relationship and friendship that has developed between the two countries which is leading to an even greater mutually beneficial partnership. A wide range of issues of bilateral cooperation and future areas for partnership were discussed. These included economic cooperation, capacity building, defence and security cooperation, enhancing trade and investment, cooperation in the fight against piracy and the like.

India has offered a Line of Credit of US$ 10 million to Seychelles. In order to assist Seychelles to develop self-sustaining and revenue generating projects, based on the request from Seychelles side, the Government of India has agreed to extend this LOC as a two-step loan to the Development Bank of Seychelles.

Seychelles is currently going through economic reforms aimed at recovery of its economy with the help of IMF. Seychelles had requested Government of India to reschedule the repayment terms of the US$ 8
It was agreed that India will continue its commitment in building of Seychelles’s infrastructure. It was also agreed that Indian side will consider extending all assistance in the areas identified during the 7th India-Seychelles Joint Commission Meeting held in Mahe in May 2010. India will continue to assist Seychelles in capacity building efforts through short and medium term training courses through the ITEC program as also through long-term scholarships.

Both sides agreed that there is large potential for increasing the volume of bilateral trade as well as enhancing Indian investments in Seychelles, particularly in the sectors of tourism, fishing, financial sector, fibre optic cables etc. The Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement (BIPPA) was signed during the visit. This is aimed at giving a necessary boost to Indian investment in Seychelles.

Both sides agreed that climate change issues affect both countries and action needed to be taken by global community to reduce its impact.

A business delegation from Seychelles accompanied the Seychelles President. They interacted with their Indian counterparts during a business event organized by FICCI together with CII and ASSOCHAM, during which presentations were made on investment opportunities in Seychelles.

The Seychelles President visited The Energy Research Institute (TERI) and Tata Consultancy Services (TCS) on June 3, 2010.

New Delhi, July 7, 2010.

Please see Document No.454.

470. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence to extend cooperation to Seychelles for help in Maritime and Exclusive Economic Zone surveillance operations and capacity building force.

New Delhi, July 19, 2010.

India and Seychelles today agreed to take forward their cooperation to tackle the spread of piracy in the Indian Ocean Region (IOR). On the request of the Seychellois leadership, India also agreed to extend help for maritime and Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) surveillance operations and capacity building of its Forces.

The decisions were taken at the series of meetings that the visiting Defence Minister Shri AK Antony had with the President Mr. James Alix Michel, the Vice President Mr. Danny Faure, the Minister for Home Affairs Mr Joel Morgan and the Foreign Minister Mr. Jean Paul Adam in Mahe. Shri Antony is leading a high-level delegation, which included the Defence Secretary Shri Pradeep Kumar and the Vice Chief of Naval Staff Vice Admiral DK Dewan.

Shri Antony said the problem of piracy in the Gulf of Aden affects all countries of the world. He shared the concerns of Seychelles on the increasing reach of the pirates. "This is a problem which calls for cooperation among all countries. The Indian Ocean links us all and is critical for our economic interests. We must cooperate to ensure peace and stability in this region", he said.
Shri Antony reiterated New Delhi’s assurance, as conveyed by the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during President Michel’s visit to India earlier, for continued cooperation in all fields particularly in the field of Defence and Security. The Prime Minister had announced a $ 5 million assistance for Defence related projects for Seychelles. Over and above this, on a specific request from the Seychelles, Shri Antony agreed to provide one new Dornier and two Chetak helicopters from the Hindustan Aeronautics Limited for maritime surveillance, at the earliest. Although the normal delivery time is 18 to 24 months, he said, New Delhi will try to supply the aircraft in 15 months. During this period, India will provide one of her in-service Dornier Aircraft to carry out maritime surveillance. Agreeing to a request from the Seychellois side, Shri Antony said India will help them to carry out EEZ surveillance as frequently as possible. He said the Indian Navy will also make additional visits this year to conduct surveillance and hydrographic survey. During these visits, Seychellois personnel can embark on board the Indian Navy Ships for maintenance training and conduct drills and exercises. Shri Antony also agreed to offer help for capacity building of the Seychellois Forces.

SOUTH AFRICA

The Sixth Round of Foreign Office Consultations (FOCs) between India and South Africa were held in Pretoria, South Africa on May 18, 2010. The Indian side was led by Mr. Vivek Katju, Secretary (West) in the Ministry of External Affairs and the South African side was led by Mr. Sisa Ngombane, Deputy Director General in the Department of International Relations and Cooperation of South Africa.

The two sides discussed a wide range of bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest. The meeting provided a useful opportunity to impart further content and dynamism to the bilateral strategic partnership.
India and South Africa share extensive cooperation based on a positive legacy of historical ties and political cooperation. The contemporary relationship covers economic and commercial relations, educational and academic exchanges, cultural cooperation as well as scientific and technological partnerships. In particular, it was agreed to take necessary measures to further facilitate economic and commercial ties, which were developing well, to address issues raised by businesses on both sides.

The FOCs also provided an opportunity to exchange ideas and views on major international issues of mutual interest. South Africa is an important partner for India in different frameworks such as IBSA, G-20, BASIC, etc. Both sides would continue their cooperation in endeavours to reform key international institutions, including the United Nations and the Bretton Woods Institutions.

472. Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (ESA) on the visits of President of Seychelles James Alix Michel and President of South Africa Jacob Zuma.

New Delhi, June 1, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to you all. As you know, we are expecting two important dignitaries during this week, - the President of Seychelles and the President of South Africa. My colleague Joint Secretary (ESA) Shri Gurjit Singh and I would attempt to give you a brief perspective on these two important state visits.

Let me start off with the visit of the President of the Republic of Seychelles. His Excellency Mr. James Alix Michel, who at the invitation of Rashtrapatiji would be arriving today. He would be in India till the 3rd of June. He has earlier visited India in 2005. Seychelles is a fellow Commonwealth country and also an Indian Ocean state, and as such it is a part of our neighbourhood. We enjoy close, friendly and cooperative ties with Seychelles underlined by very good mutual understanding and cooperation which has been growing over the years.
The Seventh Joint Commission Meeting which was chaired by Secretary (West) Mr. Vivek Katju - and Joint Secretary Mr. Gurjit Singh participated in that - was held in May, just a few days ago. Also preparatory to the important visit of the President of Seychelles, a number of new initiatives were considered which would now be operationalised including a school library project, supply of buses, technology development centre in Seychelles for small and medium enterprises, human resource development. We have been cooperating closely with Seychelles, assisting them in training, including of diplomats.

India has been extending wholesome support and cooperation to Seychelles including in development of infrastructure and enhancing its security capabilities. In fact, security and defence cooperation is one of the important aspects of our engagement which extends to assistance in training, supply of defence hardware and so on. I would like to particularly note that an IT centre at the request of the Government of Seychelles, is being set up at the cost of Rs.4 crore which would be operationalised soon.

Seychelles has also put the Pan-African E-Network to very good use, effectively utilizing the tele-medicine and tele-education facilities which connect them to designated Indian super-specialty hospitals and universities. They are also utilizing close to two dozen ITEC training slots annually.

I would particularly like to note that there is a lot of goodwill for India in Seychelles. Close to ten per cent of the population in Seychelles is of Indian origin. Their currency is called Seychelles Rupee. We are also exploring now possibilities to enhance our synergies. A business delegation from Seychelles is accompanying the President to precisely do so. By the way, Bharti Telecom Group has been in Seychelles since 1998 providing telecom services through Airtel Seychelles. Some agreements are likely to be signed during the visit.

Let me then move to the visit of the President of South Africa, His Excellency Jacob Zuma. South Africa is one of our key partners, our very important partners, in the African continent. The state visit of President Zuma is taking place in the 150th anniversary year of the arrivals of Indians in South Africa.
President Zuma is leading a very high-level delegation to India comprising of several Cabinet colleagues, and what we are told, the largest ever business delegation to accompany a President during his visit abroad. There will be some 200 businessmen and CEOs accompanying him representing various sectors of the South African economy. It is also President Zuma’s first visit to any Asian country as a President of the country. He had earlier, you would recall, visited India in 2008 as the President of the African National Congress.

Let me take you through the delegation and the programme. As I said, a number of his Cabinet colleagues are accompanying him including the Minister for International Relations and Cooperation, Minister of Defence, Minister of Public Enterprises, Minister of Trade and Economy, Minister of Agriculture, Minister of Transport, Minister of Communications, and a number of other very senior officials.

Prime Minister would be assisted in the delegation-level talks by our Union Minister of Agriculture; Raksha Mantri ji; our Commerce and Industry Minister; Minister of Civil Aviation; Minister of State for External Affairs Shrimati Preneet Kaur; Shri Sachin Pilot, Minister of State for Communications and IT; besides of course Principal Secretary to Prime Minister; National Security Advisor; Shri Vivek Katju, Secretary (West); Shri Gurjit Singh; and other officials.

Mr. Zuma reaches Mumbai tomorrow where he will be meeting with the Governor. Next day, he would be having meetings with the business fraternity and also have breakfast with the South African Business Forum, and the Business Unity South Africa. He reaches Delhi on the 4th and will have substantive delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister where they are likely to cover all issues of bilateral and international interest.

A number of agreements will be signed. He would be also having an important business meeting here. The Leader of Opposition calls on him. There will be calls by the Vice-President, and Chairperson of UPA. President of India would be hosting a banquet in the honour of the visiting dignitary.

Let me say that India and South Africa today share a wide-ranging and mutually beneficial relationship, spanning a number of sectors. We have a tradition of regular high-level exchanges. Just to enumerate a few, the President of South Africa last visited India in 2008. That was President Motlanthe, who is now the Vice-President. Our President, our Vice-President, Prime Minister on two occasions, Chairperson UPA, amongst other leaders, have visited South Africa in the last few years.

Fellow democracies, our relationship is based on a strong sense of political solidarity, as well as, a common understanding and outlook on a range of international issues. You are aware that we are both members of a number of very important international organizations and bodies including NAM, G77, IBSA, BASIC, G20. In fact, South Africa is the only African country to be a member of G20. We are also members of the G8 plus G5 Outreach initiative. That itself is indicative of the wide slate of our cooperation and reflective of the similarity in our thinking.

The vibrant economic and commercial partnership is literally at the heart of this relationship. We have become one of the ten largest trading partners of South Africa. Trade which was 2.5 billion dollars in 2002, rose to 7.5 billion in 2008-09. What is even more significant is that in 2009-10, while we are still compiling the figures, in the first ten months the trade touched 6.4 billion dollars and would perhaps exceed the figure of 7.5 billion dollars. If you see the graph, trade with all countries practically, and the global trade due to the global economic crisis, tended to dip in 2009-10. With South Africa it has been at the same level or even there has been a spike, which I think tells its own story.

India and Southern African Customs Union have been negotiating a Preferential Trade Agreement to give a further boost to our ties. Investments in both directions are growing. In fact, Indian companies and the largest Indian companies that are present in South Africa, are in the process of investing something like 3.5 billion dollars in diverse sectors. Some of the biggest names from the South African companies are already operating in India, they have invested in India.

We are also negotiating a Bilateral Investment and Promotion Agreement to boost our economic relationship further. As significantly, we are in the process of launching a bilateral CEO’s Forum to provide an institutional mechanism for business leaders on both sides to engage closely. The Forum will be chaired by Mr. Ratan Tata on our side and Mr. Patrice Motsepe on the South African side, who is the Chairperson of African Rainbow Minerals and Business Unity South Africa. As such one of the focuses of the visit will be on deepening our economic engagement. We also have good cooperation in other areas like culture, academia, human resource development, science and technology, tourism, defence and so on.

It is noteworthy that South Africa is home to one of the largest concentrations of people of Indian origin anywhere in the world. It is estimated that there are over 1.5 million PIOs in South Africa which constitutes about two and a half per cent of the South African population.

Again, a number of agreements are likely to be concluded during the visit of President Zuma. We expect our warm, cooperative and multi-dimensional ties to be further enhanced during the visit.

Thank you. My colleague and I will be happy to take a few questions.

Question: Many years ago India had banned the South African defence firm Denel. Is there any possibility of India reconsidering its position and lifting the ban and of resumption of bilateral defence trade with South Africa?

Joint Secretary (E&SA) (Shri Gurjit Singh): Thank you. It is good to see you all. The question of Denel is being discussed. I cannot comment on which direction it will take for the moment.

Question: And the resumption of bilateral defence trade?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): It is all linked to that. It is under discussion.

Question: Can you give us an idea about investments of both China and India in South Africa, if it is possible?

Official Spokesperson: About Indian trade and Indian investments in South Africa we have shared details with you. About Chinese trade and investments, I think either China or South Africa can tell you. We do not have any information. What we know is about our relationship with South Africa, what we are doing with South Africa. If Gurjit knows …

Joint Secretary (E&SA): Let me give you something which will interest you. We have already given you the broad trade figure and how there has been a zoom up. In 2003, when South Africa exported 70.5 million metric tonnes of coal, India imported two per cent. Last year, South Africa exported 67 million... metric tonnes of which India imported 20.5 million metric tonnes. So, we are now importing close to 30 per cent of South Africa's total coal exports.

Coming back to your question, I have here a figure on China. Chinese purchase is more sporadic. I understand that they have imported 143,000 metric tonnes in 2003 rising to 920,000 metric tonnes in 2009 compared to the Indian figure that I gave you of two per cent to 20.58 million metric tonnes. So, the Chinese trade with South Africa overall is not as big as some of China's trade with other African countries. In fact, 75 per cent of China's trade is with four countries - Sudan, Nigeria, Angola and the DRC. South Africa is not one of the top trading partners.

Question: Has South Africa expressed interest in joining BRIC grouping? Also, can you give us a sense of the kind of agreements which India and South Africa are going to sign?

Official Spokesperson: You know the ground rules. We will share details of the Agreements with you the when they happen. At this moment since it is still work in progress we would not like to get into those details.

As far as your other question is concerned, I have already mentioned that India and South Africa are members of diverse international fora from NAM, to G77, to G20, to BASIC, to IBSA, to G8 plus G5. You can see the range. That is on the one hand. Two, look at the history and background of Indian and South African ties, look at our historical relationship. We have both struggled against colonial powers. Gandhi's experiments with nonviolence, with Satyagraha began in South Africa. Our support to South Africa's freedom struggle has been very steadfast. We have taken you through the nature of cooperation that has since obtained.

IBSA which has now almost become an institutional mechanism for the three democratic countries, has been in place since 2003. What does this indicate? What it indicates is that India and South Africa are very keen to engage with each other bilaterally, regionally, in international fora and so on. I think that is how we approach the relationship that is how we look at the relationship. As far as BRIC is concerned, the first summit took place in 2009, just about a year ago, and the second summit was held recently. It is at a nascent stage. The agenda is evolving, the thinking is evolving. That is where BRIC is at the moment.
Question: Sir, this was related to the question that Ranjit asked. Can you tell me at what level is this discussion, as you spoke, about Denel going on in the Government? When did this discussion begin? Has the Government of South Africa requested that this ban be lifted?

Official Spokesperson: What could be shared has been mentioned. JS ESA has already responded to the question. I am afraid at this juncture we do not have any further details to share.

Question: Gurjit Sir, the issue of nuclear cooperation with Angola and South Africa; and secondly, is there some talk of cooperation in UNSC that is going on?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): The nuclear cooperation is largely between our companies and their companies. How that evolves and what framework will have to be seen. It is something that will emerge once the cooperation takes off. I think it is too early to speculate what the impediments could be. I think we need to put the companies to take this forward.

On the UNSC, there are two wheels which are rotating. One, as you all know, is the common African position called the Ezulwini Consensus. Ezulwini is a place in Swaziland which literally translates into the word heaven. That the African Group has maintained and which India has fully endorsed and said fine we respect this. There are deviations between the Ezulwini Consensus and the G4 position. For instance, the African side wants two permanent seats but they want them with full powers as enjoyed by the permanent members today. That is one point of slight deviation from the G4 position. The second thing that they say is that they want three rotating nonpermanent seats to be added whereas I think in the G4 proposal it is two. So, there are differences of nuance but the Ezulwini Consensus has not really gone beyond whatever positions were adopted around 2005. On the other hand there is considerable movement in New York, and South Africa has been working closely with our Mission and with India and with other countries. As you know, about 144 countries signed a request to the facilitator to start a text-based negotiation. In the 144 countries there are a large number of African countries. I think at last count I thought there were 37 or 38, or maybe more by now. As I said, there are two wheels and we do not necessarily want to connect them right now. Let them carry on. Once the text-based negotiation starts, then we will see what the African countries have to present in their position. They have of course presented the African position to the facilitator. India and South Africa are collaborating closely in New York and during other discussions like when their Foreign Minister came here in November last year and when recently Secretary (West) and I went to Pretoria for the Foreign Office Consultations, this issue was discussed. I think there is a fair amount of commonality of views and the desire to work together.

Question: Sir, we are talking for a long time about the Organisation of the Indian Ocean Rim Countries. Seychelles, India, South Africa are a part of the ring actually. But they always seem to be quite dormant in the sense that no activity is there. Is there going to be any kind of revival of the organization or any kind of activity is going to be there in future in the wake of these consultations, or is it going to remain just like that?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): I will take your question with regard to Seychelles. I would not comment on the organization as a whole. To the best of my knowledge, Seychelles withdrew from this organization as it did from some others a few years ago when it reassessed its economic engagement and what the cost, benefits were. I do not think they are back as members as yet. Having said that, Seychelles is a very important country in the Indian Ocean and they are severely threatened by piracy which is flowing out from Somalia. As you know, the heavy concentration of the world's Navies around the Gulf of Eden has pushed the pirates into wider oceans. And now that they use mother ships and then the skiffs, they are able to cover a wider area much further away from land. So, Seychelles is feeling terribly threatened by piracy. They have had I think two actions against piracy by their coastguard in the space of two months. Some of their nationals who were taken hostage were rescued. Seychelles has basically two industries - tourism and fisheries. Tourism has again two parts. One is shore-based, land based tourism wherein people come by air, stay in a hotel, and go away. That part seems to be alright. But then there was the huge amount of cruise or boat tourism when people landed and went off. That has taken a big hit. I understand when I went to Seychelles recently that they are suffering almost eight billion Euros a year negative impact from the piracy. Similarly, their fishing boats are suffering as well. So, two of their most important economic assets are taking a big hit in the centre of the Indian Ocean. This is where their concern is. They want a wider collaboration to help them to overcome the threat of piracy which is impinging on their economic situation in a very severe manner.

Question: Talking of piracy, have we institutionalized some sort of anti-piracy cooperation with Seychelles? Secondly, on UN reforms how many African countries so far have expressed support for India for nonpermanent seat and permanent seat in the UN Security Council?

Joint Secretary (E&SA): The first one was on piracy. Vishnu has already told you that we have a steadfast engagement in the security set up of Seychelles, and we have been supporting them over a period of time. The security set-up arrangements are basically that the coastguard vessels that they have were gifted by India in 2005. Then we have some ITEC experts there. One of them is a legal officer, one is a maritime security advisor, one is a technical naval advisor, one is I think a guy who looks after the army. These are all open ITEC posts which are over there. Our people on deputation to them help them to plan their anti-piracy and general security strategy. In this they are assisted by many other countries as well.

When it comes to the second part of your question - I am very poor at math, I have not got down to writing but - there are only let us say a very few countries which have not openly come out in support of our nonpermanent candidature. There are I think even some countries who we thought had some doubt have in the last week or so sent out written confirmations. Seychelles has of course been supporting us at both levels consistently. With South Africa, they are also a candidate for a nonpermanent seat along with us. So, I think there is a kind of a mutual support to enter the Council together.

Question: Is India considering transfer of any new defence hardware to Seychelles for helping them in anti-piracy operations?

Official Spokesperson: Security and defence cooperation is a process. Already my colleague has elaborated on what I remarked about the nature of cooperation. So, this is dynamic thing. Depending on your needs, depending on the challenges, depending on how the situation evolves, you constantly review your security arrangements, defence arrangements, and you take the process forward. So, you can very well appreciate that there cannot be any calendar to say that in the year of the Lord 2015 this is what we will do. Suffice it to say that, and I did mention, this is one of the important aspects of our relationship with Seychelles.

Joint Secretary (E&SA): And of course you must all remember that our entire policy towards Africa is request-based.

Question: South Africa is hosting a major sports event this month, the FIFA World Cup. Has any official invitation come to India? Is anybody representing India either in the Opening or Closing Ceremony?

Official Spokesperson: We will come back to you on that.

Question: I wanted to ask what the current position on Headley is. When will India be allowed to interrogate him?

Official Spokesperson: On the question on Headley, you know that the matter is being coordinated by the Ministry of Home Affairs and you may like to address this question to them to ascertain further details.

Question: Is the President bringing his spouse?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, Sir, His Excellency President Jacob Zuma will be accompanied by his spouse and as I said a very high-level delegation.

Question: Mr. Prakash, this is an issue which MEA has partly responded to earlier. This is about Canada asking very serious questions to India's visa seekers. After the consultation with the Foreign Office has India taken up the issue with Canada and is there any response from that country?

Official Spokesperson: On the issue involving some letters that were issued by the Canadian High Commission to some of the individuals, you have already heard what the External Affairs Minister said. He said that the content in some of the letters that were issued by the Canadian side to Indian individuals were not acceptable. We are a democracy. We have the highest regard for the valour, professionalism of our security forces. This is something which was unequivocally shared with the Canadian side. Please understand, Canada is a friendly country. We have a very important relationship. Thereafter you are aware, I think if I remember right, on the 27th of May, the Minister of Immigration of Canada issued a statement regretting what was said and conveying that they have the highest respect for the Indian security forces. So, that is where the matter stands.

Question: My supplementary to that question is, today there were some news reports that Canada sought security related information from visa seekers.

Official Spokesperson: We have seen reports now and earlier that during processing of visa certain questions have been asked. It is the individual country which decides what kind of questions that they want to ask and it is for the individual concerned to decide whether or not to give a response to that question. I would like you to appreciate that it is a prerogative of any country to issue or not issue a visa. It is an Indian prerogative and it is a prerogative of any other country. There are factors of reciprocity that also kick in, that is a separate matter. But some letters were issued, certain questions were asked, we know about it. How many letters, we do not know for the simple reasons that over the past couple of years, as it is coming to light now that certain letters have been issued to individuals. That is where the matter is. What I would like to underscore is that national security, national interest are the paramount considerations for any country, as it is for India. Whatever it takes to secure these aspects, to safeguard these aspects, will be done and is being done.
473. Statement of Prime Minister to media during the visit of South African President Jacob Zuma.

New Delhi, June, 4, 2010.

It gives me great pleasure to welcome His Excellency President Jacob Zuma on his first State Visit to India. We are honoured by the fact that President Zuma has chosen India as his first destination in Asia.

The links between India and South Africa are rooted in history. We can never forget that South Africa was the land of the awakening of the Father of our Nation, Mahatma Gandhi, for which we owe a deep debt of gratitude to its people.

President Zuma has led South Africa with great distinction in the last one year. South Africa plays an influential role in world affairs. Its voice is heard with respect not only in Africa, but also on all major global issues.

In a week from now South Africa will host the Football World Cup. On behalf of the people of India, I have conveyed our best wishes to President Zuma for its grand success.

Our strategic partnership with South Africa is based on a mutuality of interests, common aspirations and close mutual understanding.

Today, President Zuma and I have decided to impart a forward-looking character to these ties, and to further broadbase our cooperation. We have agreed to focus on the expansion of our economic, trade and investment relationship. Our economies have come of age. A growing number of companies are investing in each other's countries, and South Africa has become one of the most significant economic partners for India in Africa.

We have also decided to provide fresh impetus to our cooperation in the areas of science and technology, agriculture, human resource development, people to people exchanges and security. India remains willing to work with South Africa in addressing the shared challenges of capacity-building, skill development, job creation and combatting disease, which are essential for achieving inclusive growth.

We have tasked the next meeting of the Joint Commission to develop concrete plans for implementation of the decisions we have taken today.
India and South Africa work closely in several international forums such as the United Nations, Non-aligned Movement, Commonwealth, WTO, G-20 and the IBSA and BASIC groupings. We have agreed to intensify our coordination in these bodies.

We will step up our efforts for the reform of global institutions of governance, including of the United Nations Security Council. We have agreed to support each other's candidatures for the non-permanent seat for the 2011-2012 term.

President Zuma’s visit marks a new milestone in India’s relations with South Africa. I thank him for his friendship to India.

Thank you.

474. Joint Declaration issued on the occasion of the visit of President of South Africa Jacob Zuma.

New Delhi, June 4, 2010.

At the invitation of the President of India, Her Excellency Smt Pratibha Devisingh Patil, His Excellency Mr Jacob Zuma, President of the Republic of South Africa, paid a State Visit to India from June 2-4, 2010. During the visit, President Zuma met the President of India, the Vice President Shri Hamid Ansari and the Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh.

The Prime Minister of India and the President of South Africa reaffirmed the vitality of the India-South Africa strategic partnership, based on their commitment to a global order built upon the principles of peace, justice and equality, upon the two countries’ shared history of solidarity and partnership in the struggle against colonialism, imperialism and apartheid and encouraged by the legacy and stature of Mahatma Gandhi and former President Nelson Mandela.

Both leaders underscored the importance of making the strategic partnership more result oriented and of greater direct benefit to the peoples of South Africa and India. They emphasised their commitment to cooperation towards raising the existing level of friendship and partnership between South Africa and India to even higher levels.

The leaders recalled the defining documents of the South Africa - India relationship, the Red Fort Declaration of 1996, the Joint Declaration of 2003 and the Tshwane Declaration of 2006, and expressed satisfaction with the progress that had taken place. Both leaders welcomed the continued interaction between India and South Africa at the highest political levels. Such interactions are marked by an exceptional degree of cordiality, understanding, mutual trust and confidence. They expressed satisfaction at the consolidation of bilateral relations and underscored that the visit of President Zuma would contribute to consolidating the practice of regular political-level consultations.

The leaders recognised that South Africa and India draw their strength and inspiration from the diverse, multi-cultural societies constituting their respective nations; and stated that the best assurance for continued peace and prosperity lies in the adherence to democratic governance that is rooted in respect for human dignity and the fundamental rights of all people in accordance with their respective Constitutions.

Recognising that since the establishment of bilateral relations in November 1993, the two countries had established a framework for cooperation through bilateral and multilateral agreements and Memoranda of Understanding. President Zuma and Prime Minister Singh committed their Governments to the fullest implementation of these milestones of the bilateral relationship. They noted with satisfaction the strengthening of the growing partnership between the two countries with the signing of the following bilateral agreements / MoUs during the visit:

— Air Services Agreement;
— MoU on Cooperation in the field of Agriculture and Allied Sectors; and — MoU between the Diplomatic Academy of the Department of International Relations and Cooperation of South Africa and the Foreign Service Institute of India.

They expressed satisfaction at increasing cultural exchanges between the two countries and agreed to further promote educational exchanges including through University-to-University linkages. President Zuma and Prime Minister Singh agreed that a more extensive and active network of cooperation in Science and Technology would be promoted by the concerned Departments, which would focus on cooperation between designated agencies and specialised institutions. Towards this end, the two leaders noted that the MOU for cooperation in the field of Communications and Information Technologies has expired in September 2009 and called for an early renewal of the MOU and a meeting of The Joint Working Group to identify projects for joint cooperation in the ICT sector.

Both leaders reaffirmed the importance of strengthening relations under the aegis of the India-South Africa Joint Ministerial Commission (JMC) which affords both sides an opportunity to address a range of bilateral, as well as multilateral political and economic issues. They confirmed that the 8th Session of the JMC will take place in Delhi in 2010, allowing both sides to evaluate the implementation of bilateral agreements and decisions taken during the State Visit.

The two leaders noted with satisfaction the progress recorded in developing a multi-faceted strategic partnership. They welcomed the fact that bilateral trade had grown to the extent that India was now one of the top ten trading partners of South Africa. The two leaders noted that there has been a healthy growth in two-way investment flows, which have increased substantially during the past five years. The two leaders welcomed the reconstitution of the India-South Africa CEOs’ Forum as an institutional mechanism for closer business interaction with Government support. They look forward to its first substantive meeting in South Africa along with an India Show in August 2010.

In the area of economic cooperation, the leaders underlined the need to utilise their respective strengths to mutual advantage through greater cooperation between respective business entities. In this regard, they agreed that the focus should be upon sectors such as infrastructure and manufacturing, energy, mines and minerals, oil and natural gas, banking and financial services, tourism, pharmaceuticals, automobiles and auto components, textiles and garments, fertilisers, information technology, small and medium enterprises and forestry-based produce.
The leaders urged Indian and South African industry to work towards raising bilateral trade to US $ 10 billion by the year 2012. They expressed satisfaction at the significant increase in investment flows in both directions, as businesses on both sides recognised complementarities and benefited from opportunities. In this context, the leaders recognised that the vast latent potential in the relationship was yet to be fully exploited.

In the regional context, President Zuma affirmed the importance of India as a partner of the African Union in the consolidation of peace and stability in the Continent, through its contributions to peacekeeping, and as a partner in the development of Africa through its support for the objectives of the New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD).

In addressing wider areas beyond the bilateral realm, and in recognition of the historical and civilisational links between the African continent and India, the leaders committed themselves to strengthening the India-Africa Forum and to the advancement of the seven pillars of the Action Plan of the Framework for Cooperation launched in Delhi in March 2010. The Action Plan will intensify India-Africa cooperation in various fields including Commerce, Politics, Social Development and Capacity Building; Science, Technology, Research and Development; Tourism; Infrastructure, Energy and Environment and Media and Communication. With this in mind, the leaders undertook to work even more closely to reinvigorate their cooperation for Africa’s development.

Both leaders acknowledged the increasing contribution of their countries in Africa towards the achievement of peace, security, stability, development and economic prosperity. President Zuma took special note of India’s active participation in all United Nations sponsored peace missions in Africa, and the role it continues to play in peace and security on the Continent. They noted the progress made in bilateral defence cooperation, and underlined the need to expand cooperation in areas of potentiality, such as military training and cooperation in UN peacekeeping.

Recognising the importance of the strategic partnership, the two leaders agreed on the need to expedite the ongoing negotiations on the India-Southern Africa Customs Union (SACU) Preferential Trade Agreement so as to provide a significant incentive to business to explore mutually beneficial commercial opportunities and contribute to growing trade and investment relations.
The leaders recognised the importance of the emerging economies of the South, the structural changes taking place in the global economy and the importance of strengthening trade and investment relations with these new poles of economic growth. They acknowledged that new economic relationships will be based on the principles of partnership, complementarity and mutual benefit.

The leaders expressed satisfaction at the outcome of the 4th IBSA Summit in Brasilia on 15 April 2010. They reaffirmed the importance of IBSA as an effective instrument for promoting closer cooperation and coordination on global issues between the three major and diverse democracies of Africa, Asia and South America.

Both leaders reiterated their commitment to intensify consultations and cooperation at multilateral fora such as NAM, Commonwealth, G77+ China and G20. They share the view that developing countries, need to have a greater voice and vote in the international financial institutions. The two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to increase the voice, vote and representation of emerging and developing economies, including those in Africa, in the decision-making bodies of multilateral institutions.

The two Leaders emphasized the need for the reform of the United Nations (UN) to render it more democratic and consistent with the priorities of the developing world. They emphasised that no reform of the UN would be complete without the reform of the UN Security Council, including an expansion in both permanent and non-permanent categories of membership, with increased participation of developing countries in both, for the Security Council to have the representativeness and legitimacy it needs to face contemporary challenges. The two leaders undertook mutual support for their candidature for non-permanent Security Council seats for 2011-2012.

The leaders reaffirmed that people must come first in the formulation and implementation of public policies, allowing for fair, equitable and sustainable development. They considered this issue a priority in the context of an increasingly globalized world, in which the economic and financial crisis, and the need for restructuring of the international financial architecture directly affect the welfare of people, particularly of vulnerable groups. In this regard, they stressed the need to strengthen social policies and to fight hunger and poverty, especially in times of global economic crisis. The leaders also reiterated the need to promote a job-intensive recovery from the downturn and create a framework for strong, sustainable and balanced growth. Sustainable recovery and growth will also depend on several factors such as enhanced investment for infrastructure development, stable capital flows to the developing markets, appropriate macroeconomic adjustments, and avoiding complacency in the area of financial sector reforms. Financial inclusion will be a major determinant of success.

The leaders stressed the need to reform the Bretton Woods Institutions to increase their effectiveness and to enhance their accountability, credibility and legitimacy. They underlined the importance for a greater voice and participation by developing countries in these institutions.

The two leaders stated that a positive outcome of the Doha Round of trade talks within the World Trade Organisation would be instrumental in economic recovery, particularly in job creation, as international trade has experienced its sharpest decline in several decades. A development oriented, balanced and successful conclusion of the Round at an early date would bolster the credibility of the multilateral trading system in the face of increased protectionist pressures. The Leaders confirmed their intention to continue to work to strengthen the alliances of developing members that have effectively changed the negotiating dynamic in the World Trade Organisation, placing developing countries, for the first time in the history of the global trade system, at the centre of the negotiations.

The leaders reiterated the unwavering commitment of South Africa and India to the goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons in a comprehensive, universal, non-discriminatory and verifiable manner and urged immediate efforts towards the realization of this goal. They reaffirmed the inalienable right of all States to the peaceful application of nuclear energy, consistent with their international legal obligations.

The leaders condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed by whomever, wherever and for whatever purposes, as it constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security. President Zuma condemned attacks in India that resulted in the loss of innocent lives. The two leaders agreed on the need for greater cooperation among States and regional organizations in this regard. They emphasized the urgent need to finalize the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism, and called upon all States to cooperate in resolving outstanding issues with the objective of an expeditious conclusion of negotiations and adoption of this Convention. They note that the fight against international terrorism must be done with full respect to the UN Charter and International Law.

The leaders reiterated the importance of a positive result for the current climate change negotiations at the 16th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and the 6th Conference of the Parties serving as the meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, in Mexico. They stressed that the result should be reached in an inclusive and transparent manner, and should effectively address the challenge of climate change, in accordance with the principles of the UNFCCC, especially the principles of equity and common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. They urged developed countries to take ambitious action to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions, and to provide adequate international financing and transfer of technology to support the efforts of developing countries to mitigate and adapt to the impact of climate change.

The leaders agreed to work closely together in the field of sports cooperation and on sharing experiences on upcoming events such as the 2010 FIFA Soccer World Cup and the Commonwealth Games. They expressed confidence that this would form the foundation for enhanced partnership in their sporting relations.

The President of South Africa conveyed his deep gratitude and appreciation to the President and Prime Minister of India for the warm hospitality extended to him and the members of his delegation during the visit.
475. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs during the visit of South Africa President Jacob G. Zuma.

New Delhi, June 4, 2010.

At the invitation of the President of India, the President of South Africa, H.E Mr. Jacob G. Zuma, accompanied by Mrs. Zuma was on a State Visit to India from June 2-4, 2010. President Zuma's delegation included 7 Ministers of his Cabinet including the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Defence, Public Enterprises, Trade & Industry, Agriculture, Forestry & Fisheries, Transport, and Communication. A 200 member strong business delegation as well as senior officials were part of President Zuma's delegation.

This was President Zuma's first visit to India as the President of South Africa. This was also his first visit as the President of South Africa to any country in Asia.

President Zuma will be calling on the President who would be hosting a banquet in his honour. He has met the Hon'ble Vice President of India, Shri. M. Hamid Ansari and held delegation level talks with Hon'ble Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India. MOS for External Affairs called on President Zuma. The Chairperson of the UPA, Smt. Sonia Gandhi and the Leader of the Opposition, Smt. Sushma Swaraj, also called on him.

The discussions were held in an atmosphere reflective of the fraternal warmth, affection and strategic partnership that characterize the bilateral relations. The two sides expressed satisfaction at the state of bilateral relations, and the mutually beneficial cooperation and partnership that was developing between the two countries. They discussed a wide range of subjects of bilateral interest covering economic cooperation, trade and investment, agriculture, education, information and communication technology, health, science and technology and culture. A Joint Declaration containing the key understandings reached during the meetings was issued during the visit.
The following MOUs/agreements were signed during the visit: (i) MOU on Cooperation in the Field of Agriculture and allied sectors, (ii) Air Services Agreement and (iii) MoU on cooperation between the Foreign Service Institute of India and the Diplomatic Academy of South Africa.

The two sides noted that while bilateral trade has grown from US$ 2.5 billion in 2002 to US$ 7.5 billion in 2008-09, it needs greater diversity. India today is one of the ten largest trading partners of South Africa. In order to exploit the immense potential, a target of US$ 10 billion by the year 2012 has been set. At the same time, increasing Indian investments made South Africa one of our most significant partners in the African continent.

President Zuma and his delegation met Indian business leaders in Mumbai on June 2, 2010. An India-South Africa CEOs' Forum has been established, which is chaired by Mr. Ratan Tata on the Indian side and Mr. Patrice Motsepe, CEO of African Rainbow Minerals and Chairperson of Business Unity South Africa (BUSA) on the South African side. The Forum includes senior representatives of the Indian and South African industry. The Forum aims at increasing interactions between business persons from both countries.

Both sides also discussed ways of implementing the many agreements that both countries have concluded in the past, to further broaden the base of bilateral partnership. The Joint Commission between the two countries, which meets later this year, will include these views.

The two leaders highlighted the importance of high level bilateral visits, including at the level of Heads of State and Government. They also decided to promote other high level ministerial visits. Vice President Shri. Mohammad Hamid Ansari visited South Africa during May 8-10, 2009 to attend the inauguration of Mr. Jacob Zuma. South Africa’s Minister of International Relations and Cooperation Ms. Maite Nkoana-Mashabane visited India from 12-15 November 2009. The Finance Minister of South Africa Mr. Pravin Gordhan visited India during January 6-9, 2010 for the Pravasi Bharatiya Samman. Ms. Buyela Sonjica, Minister of Water and Environmental Affairs of South Africa attended the BASIC Ministers Meeting during January 23-25, 2010.
Both sides exchanged views on international and regional issues of mutual interest like UN reforms, IBSA, climate change and G-20. They reiterated the resolve to continue bilateral dialogue and cooperation at various international fora.

India expressed its willingness to work with South Africa in addressing the shared challenges of capacity-building, skill development and job creation, without which inclusive growth is inhibited.

Both sides have pledged to support each other's candidacies for the elected seats of the UN Security Council, elections for which would be held later this year.

476. Speech of President Pratibha Devisingh Patil at a Banquet in honour of the President of South Africa Jacob Zuma.

New Delhi, June 4, 2010.

Your Excellency, President Jacob Zuma,
Her Excellency Mrs. Zuma,
Distinguished Guests,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to extend a warm welcome to Your Excellency President Zuma, Her Excellency Mrs. Zuma, and the distinguished members of your delegation to India. You represent a nation and a people with whom India’s links are historical, precious and special.

India-South Africa friendship is rooted in our common historical experiences of colonial exploitation, as also in our struggles against the injustice and deprivation under the abhorrent system of apartheid. India was privileged to be pro-actively associated with the struggle of the South African people, and to be the first country to raise its voice against racial segregation at the UN in 1946, before we had achieved our own independence.
I recall the words of Mahatma Gandhi that, "It is my unshakeable belief that India's destiny is to deliver the message of non-violence to mankind." It was in South Africa that Mahatma Gandhi first gave expression to the path of non-violent struggle. It was in South Africa that he evolved the methods of political action with which he led India's freedom movement. It is the foundation of this deep emotional linkage that makes our ties so unique and extraordinary.

Today, our common vision of global challenges and our dynamic partnership based on mutual respect and equality have brought us closer, as we work for inclusive socio-economic growth and the collective upliftment of our peoples. India's engagement with South Africa is a true partnership - multi-sectoral, multi-dimensional, embracing sectors vital to the lives of all our peoples such as health and food security, infrastructure, and energy, generic medicines and industrial development.

The firm basis of our cooperation is our commitment to share our developmental experience, expertise and technology in identified areas of mutual priority for mutual benefit. India has and always will, remain steadfast in supporting capacity building and human resource development initiatives in South Africa.

Our two countries have strived hard to further broaden and deepen our bilateral trade and economic engagement. The volume of bilateral trade and investment has grown rapidly in the past decade and shows promise. We can further harness the existing potential through the establishment of an enabling framework that encourages our business people to seek greater avenues of collaboration.

The India-Africa Forum Summit, held in New Delhi in April 2008, has helped forge a blueprint for future partnership between India and Africa. In order to operationalize the decisions of the Summit, an Action Plan was launched recently with the African Union. The Plan has provisions for enhanced cooperation in various sectors like agriculture, capacity building, Science and Technology, security cooperation and tourism among others. The bilateral and regional components are also being implemented in consultation with our partners. We hope to carry this process forward with the active support of South Africa.
Our excellent bilateral relations are well supplemented by the IBSA Forum, which has provided a unique framework of cooperation among the three vibrant democracies and developing economies from three different continents. Through IBSA, our shared values and similar aspirations are getting channelized towards pooling of material and intellectual resources. This is not only beneficial for our common causes, but is also contributing to the shaping of the global agenda by voicing the issues of concern to developing countries.

India and South Africa share a commonality of views on major international issues. Both our countries agree on the need for reform of the United Nations, including expansion of its Security Council. We wish to ensure a better representation for developing countries and correct the historic injustice done to developing countries in general and Africa in particular. Both our countries stand united in our common objective to ensure a political and financial international architecture which is fair, equitable and takes into account the changing geopolitical realities. We have co-ordinated our positions on climate change under the BASIC grouping at the Copenhagen Summit.

Your visit comes in a special year when people of Indian origin in South Africa commemorate and celebrate the 150th anniversary of their arrival on the shores of your country. We would like to join you in this commemoration. South Africa remains the home to one of the largest communities of Indian origin in the world, many of whom are significant actors within South Africa, giving yet another significant dimension to our relationship.

We are confident that a resurgent India and a strong and confident South Africa will together make a major contribution in the world in the 21st Century.

Excellencies and Distinguished Guests may I now request you to join me in raising a toast to:-

— the good health of His Excellency President Zuma and Her Excellency Mrs. Zuma; — to the prosperity and well-being of the people of South Africa; and — to further strengthening of the bonds of cooperation and friendship between India and South Africa.

SUDAN

477. Intervention by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna at the High Level meeting on Sudan.

Mr. Secretary General, Foreign Ministers, Excellencies,

At the outset permit me to compliment you for convening this very timely Conference on Sudan. The United Nations has been at the forefront of the international community’s attempts to stabilise the situation in Sudan. As one of the prime contributors to the United Nations Mission in Sudan (UNMIS), India shares the principles and purposes behind the United Nations involvement in the country. I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate India’s commitment to contribute fully to the shared goals we have for this troubled region.

Sudan today is on the threshold of profound change. The Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed by the warring Sudanese parties has brought peace, after a prolonged and bitter civil war, to Sudan. The culmination of the CPA process will take place in a few months with the referendum of 9 January 2011 when the people of Southern Sudan will decide whether they favour unity of the country or opt for secession. We are happy to note that the referendum process is on track and is expected to be concluded by the stipulated date. I would like to take this opportunity to compliment the Government of National Unity in Khartoum and the Government of Southern Sudan in Juba for their statesmanlike approach in resolving the difficulties at hand and in ensuring that the referendum time schedule is maintained.

We trust that the referendum will be conducted in a timely, transparent and credible manner and the outcome of the referendum will be respected by all parties in accordance with the provisions of the CPA as also the international community. India hopes for a peaceful resolution of the issue.

Insofar as the situation in Darfur is concerned, we would like the issue to be resolved in a manner consistent with Sudan’s unity and territorial integrity. We are aware that there are several sets of on-going efforts in progress at achieving peace in Sudan and we wish the efforts, including the Doha Peace Talks, to bring peace and prosperity to Sudan.

India is extensively engaged with Africa and highly values its relations with the region. The Pan-Africa E-Network Project, the 2nd phase of which was inaugurated by me recently, is one of the finest examples of the growing partnership between India and Africa. We value Sudan’s participation in the Project. It is the biggest project of distance education and tele-medicine ever undertaken in Africa. Extension of concessional lines of credit to countries in Africa, including Sudan, has been another way of assisting our partners in the development process.

India and Sudan share the most cordial of relations. Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru successfully argued for Sudan’s inclusion at the 1955 Bandung Conference even before Sudan became independent. Our age old ties have been cemented in modern times with people to people contacts, trade and commerce, investments and a broad commonality of outlook on global issues. India is, therefore, deeply committed to the stable development of Sudan. India looks forward to peaceful development of this region which will depend, irrespective of the outcome of the referendum, on maintaining close cooperation between Southern and Northern Sudan and its neighbours, and the world community.

Thank you.
478. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Finance on the operationalization of the Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement between India and Sudan.

New Delhi, October 18, 2010.

Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement (BIPA) between the Republic of India and the Republic of Sudan has become effective from today with the exchange of Instruments of Ratification (IoR) between them. Shri Govind Mohan, Joint Secretary (Infrastructure & Investment), Department of Economic Affairs, Ministry of Finance, Government of India and H.E Mr. Khidir Haroun Ahmed, Ambassador of the Republic of the Sudan in New Delhi exchanged the Instruments of Ratification in a ceremony, here today.

India has so far signed BIPA with 79 countries. Of these, 68 have already come into effect. BIPA seeks to promote and protect investments from one country in the other country. BIPAs facilitate bilateral investment flows and grant benefits of National Treatment (NT) and Most Favoured Nation (MFN). With the exchange of IoR today, Sudan becomes the 69th country with which our BIPA has become effective.

BIPA between India and Sudan was signed on 22nd October 2003 by the Minister of Disinvestment and Communication and Information during his visit to Khartoum, Sudan. Indian model text was the basis of negotiation. Our Cabinet had approved signing and ratification of BIPA with Sudan in January 2003.

The Agreement requires both the countries to encourage and create favourable conditions for investors of each other to make investments in their territory and to admit investments in accordance with their laws. Investments from either country in the territory of the other country are to be accorded National Treatment and Most Favoured Nation Treatment implying that the investment shall be provided a treatment which is not less favourable than that provided by the home country to investments of its own investors or investors from any other country. Besides, investors are to be provided Most Favoured National Treatment in respect of their investment. It also provides an elaborate dispute resolution mechanism which includes recourse to negotiations, conciliation and international arbitration.

479. Briefing by Secretary (West) On Vice-President’s visit to Zambia, Malawi and Botswana.

New Delhi, January 4, 2010.

Please see document No.433.

480. Speech by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Banquet hosted in his honour by the Vice President of Zambia.

Lusaka, January 5, 2010.

Allow me to say at the outset how happy my wife and I are to be in your beautiful country. I bring the greetings and good wishes of the Government and people of India to the government and people of Zambia. My wife and I, and indeed my entire delegation, greatly appreciate the gracious hospitality extended to us since our arrival.

We in India have great admiration for Zambia, its rich history and cultural heritage and its leading role in the pan-African and regional organizations. Zambia is an example of how people can live in peace and seek development within a plural democratic polity. Zambia and India have historically been close allies in the struggle for independence, equality, human rights, freedom and democracy for the Southern African and other developing countries.

Our support for decolonization and the fight against apartheid and racial inequalities contributed to the creation of a more just and equitable international order. Our mutual commitment to democratic governance and the furtherance of multi-ethnic and multi-religious societies has been a cornerstone for regional peace and global stability. Our close engagement has extended to regional and global fora including the UN, the Non Aligned Movement, SADC, COMESA and the African Union.
India’s partnership with Zambia is an important component of our larger vision of close, cooperative and multi-sectoral partnership with African countries encompassing political, security, economic, science and technology, human resource development and cultural sectors.

The India-Africa partnership is based on the fundamental values of equality, mutual respect, and understanding between our peoples for our mutual benefit. It is guided by five basic principles:

- Respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of states and commitment to deepen the process of African integration;
- Promotion of a culture of peace, tolerance and respect for religious, cultural, linguistic and racial diversities as well as gender equality;
- Development of intra-regional/sub-regional integration by complementing and building upon existing/sub-regional initiatives in Africa;
- Recognition of diversity between and within regions, including different social and economic systems and levels of development; and
- Development and consolidation of plural democracy.

India and Zambia share common perceptions on the major issues before the international community today. We are committed to work together for the maintenance of global peace and security, United Nation reforms, universal disarmament, fight against terrorism, establishment of a fair and equitable global trading regime and addressing the vagaries of climate change.

Both our countries seek to ensure that in all these matters, the interests of developing countries are kept uppermost and the socio-economic developmental requirements of our countries are guaranteed. As responsible nations in a changing international order, we are committed to work together to foster the ideals of equitable representation, democratization of international institutions and to continue the struggle for our own development by seeking an international order which is responsive to our needs.
Bilateral relations between India and Zambia have developed in multi-faceted areas. Cooperation in the economic, commercial and technical fields is progressing. This seeks to be energized. We need to exploit our synergies and complementarities and utilize the enormous opportunities of cooperation that exist in areas of agriculture, irrigation, trade, investment, power, small and medium industries, education, telecommunication and tourism. We would encourage public private partnerships to realize this potential to the fullest and further deepen our economic engagement.

We were honoured by the gracious presence of His Excellency President Rupiah Banda at the first ever India-Africa Forum Summit held in New Delhi in April 2008. We would like Zambia to take advantage of the new initiatives announced at the India-Africa Forum Summit particularly in regard to concessional credit lines so as to promote trade between the two countries. Zambian companies could also access the funds provided by India through the COMESA PTA Bank to finance purchase of technology, equipment and consultancy from India.

The Government of India has in 2008 approved US $ 50 million Line of Credit for the Itezhi Tezhi Hydropower Project. We will continue with the process of extending our Line of Credit for infrastructural and industrial projects that would contribute to Zambian development. The Government of India would also make available grants for the social sector for projects covering agriculture, health and education sectors in Zambia. This is a signal of our commitment for cooperation and partnership with the people and government of Zambia.

The Indo-Zambia Bank which celebrated 25 years of its successful operations in Zambia last month, was the brainchild of our two visionary leaders, Dr. Kenneth Kaunda and Smt. Indira Gandhi.

Our recently commissioned pan-African E-Network Project is yet another milestone of South-South Cooperation. This project will facilitate tele-education and tele-medicine services and video-conferencing with all the Heads of State in Africa. This is an example of our efforts to bring the benefits of our technological development to our partners in Africa.

I am happy to note that Zambia has been a major beneficiary of our ITEC programme with around 2300 civilians trained in India so far. In addition, several Zambian defence chiefs and over 325 other defence officers have been trained in Indian defence institutions. Our Military Advisory Team has also assisted in the setting up and running of the Defence Services Command and Staff College (DSCSC) in Lusaka. India stands committed to human resource development and building Zambian capacities.

The 13,000 strong Indian community in Zambia represents a vital aspect of our bilateral relationship. They have helped build bridges of cooperation and bonds of friendship between the two countries and peoples. I wish to express our deep appreciation for their effort.

I am looking forward to my discussions with His Excellency the President, Your Excellency and Hon’ble Ministers of Zambia. I am confident that continued high level exchanges between our countries would give a new impetus to our bilateral relations.

MULUNGU ADALISE ZAMBIA (GOD BLESS ZAMBIA)

Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen, May I now request you to join me in a toast to:-

— the good health and happiness of His Excellency the President, Mr. Rupiah Bwezani Banda
— the good health and well being of Your Excellency, Vice President George Kunda and his gracious wife, Madam Ireen Kunda — to the continued well-being and prosperity of our two friendly peoples; and — to the ever deepening friendship between our two countries.

Media Briefing by Secretary (West) Vivek Katju on the engagements of Vice President M. Hamid Ansari in Lusaka.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Good afternoon. This morning the Vice-President was received by His Excellency the President of Zambia. Prior to that meeting, the Vice-President met with his counterpart, the Vice-President of Zambia.

After the meeting with the Vice-President, an agreement on a Line of Credit was signed between the Government of Zambia and EXIM Bank to extend a loan of 50 million dollars on concessional terms for the construction of the Etezhi Tezhi hydropower project. This project is designed to have an output of 120 MW of electricity which will contribute to the energy sector in Zambia. The partners in the project are Zisco, which is a Zambian company, and Tata Africa Holdings. The 50 million dollars that we have extended as a Line of Credit will go to Zisco's equity participation in this project.

Both meetings with the President and the Vice-President were characterised by great warmth and friendship. The leaders of Zambia and the Vice-President recalled the friendship that has existed between our two countries. This friendship predates the independence of Zambia. The Zambian leadership expressed gratitude for the assistance that India gave them during the period of decolonisation. On a number of occasions, reference was made to the inspiration which the founding fathers of Zambia received from Mahatma Gandhi's nonviolent struggle and his philosophy of nonviolence. It was recognised that India's contribution to the process of decolonisation in Southern Africa was very substantial. But it was also recognised that times have changed and there is now need, as our Vice-President put it, to reinvigorate and reenergise the relationship between the two countries.

That process, as you know, began in 2008 with the India-Africa Forum Summit. It is now our intention, as the Vice-President informed the Zambian leaders, to generally focus on three areas as we take our relationship forward with Zambia. The first is the bilateral area; the second is an engagement in the context of Pan-Africa; and the third is our cooperation in multilateral fora.

In the bilateral area India’s capabilities and capacities in the human resource development field were focused upon and it was decided that this process of our training assistance which has been fruitful for Zambia will continue.

The second area was on extension of our Lines of Credit. As the Vice-President said, we have already signed an agreement today for 50 million dollars for the Itezhi Tezhi hydropower project. In addition, we have decided to extend a Line of Credit for 75 million dollars over the next two years. To activate these Lines of Credit for 75 million dollars, we will now await proposals from the Zambian authorities. These proposals could be in different fields, in the areas of health, infrastructure, education, etc.

At the Pan-African level, India is engaged, as you know, in giving effect to the decisions which were taken at the India-Africa Forum Summit in 2008. It was then decided that we would be setting up Pan-African institutes, also vocational centres throughout Africa. This is an engagement which India is undertaking with the African Union. There has been a tradition of consultation between India and Zambia in multilateral fora in the area of trade, development, terrorism and climate change. So, this process too will continue.

Finally I may mention that it was decided that the Joint Commission between the two countries will meet soon so that a full agenda can be worked out at the appropriate level for the engagement between the two countries and to take this process of engagement further.

Forgive me, I should have also mentioned, as I have been correctly reminded, that in addition to the Line of Credit of 75 million dollars, we will also be giving a grant of five million dollars to Zambia. We will await proposals from Zambia for activating this grant component. The grant is generally available for the social sectors, which include health, education, etc.

If you have questions, please feel free to ask.
Question: Was the UNSC reform issue discussed?

Secretary (West): Yes, it was focussed upon. It was recognised that there is need for reforming the international architecture so that it is in tune with contemporary realities. Our cooperation with Zambia in this area will be significant. The Vice-President of Zambia reiterated Zambia's support for India's bid for permanent membership of an expanded UN Security Council. I may also mention that the Vice-President's meeting with His Excellency the President of Zambia was marked with great warmth. In fact they had a one-on-one meeting for almost half an hour before they met with the delegations. This was a very special gesture on the part of the President which our Vice-President appreciated.

Question: Does this 50 million dollar loan mean that orders of this amount would be placed on an Indian firm?

Secretary (West): There are certain characteristics which are associated with a Line of Credit and those conditions will be fulfilled by the recipient of the Line of Credit. I think you are right. One of the characteristics is that about 85 per cent of all the material, the equipment, etc., is sourced from India. So, that will apply.

Question: What is the total Line of Credit that would have been extended by India to Africa as a ...(Inaudible)..

Secretary (West): The commitment that was made at the India-Africa Forum Summit was for 5.4 billion dollars over a period of five years. In addition there was a grant component of 500 million dollars. In fact at the signing ceremony of Line of Credit agreement today a reference was made to this by the Finance Minister of Zambia.

Question: Of the 5.4 billion dollars which has been committed over a period of five years starting 2008, how much has already been given?

Joint Secretary (Shri Gurjit Singh): Of the total offers and agreements, about close to a billion which is the target for a year has been more or less met for the current fiscal.

Secretary (West): I would say in conclusion that these two meetings of the Vice-President with the leadership of Zambia were fully in keeping with the tradition of warmth, of friendship, of cooperation which has continuously marked the relationship. As the Vice-President said, we have a good and vibrant relationship without any problems and we are committed to work substantively to raise this relationship to a higher plane. I will ask my colleagues if they wish to add anything.

Question: I think the Business Delegation is meeting the Minister of Commerce. Is there any information available on that?

Secretary (West): I am afraid not. I do not have a feedback. We have been busy with these meetings.

Secretary (West): I am advised that nature has not been very kind to some members of the Business Delegation. Apparently, fog prevented some flights. But most of them have reached and meetings will be taking place. The reference material that has been given to you would show you the range of investments that have already taken place from India. It is our conviction that the opportunities to raise Indian investments here for mutual benefit are immense. I think I should also mention that the entire approach that we have is an approach of responding to needs. We are not prescriptive. We have capabilities. These capabilities are growing and these capabilities are available to our friends. There are major Indian groups that are involved here. This involvement we will encourage.

Thank you.
482. Speech by the Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Reception for the Indian Community hosted by the High Commissioner.

“I am happy to be in Zambia and to meet you all. Since our arrival in this friendly country, my wife and I have enjoyed the warm welcome and kind hospitality of the Government and people of Zambia. We have also enjoyed the natural beauty and greenery of Zambia and were wonderstruck to see the magnificent Victoria Falls during our trip to Livingstone yesterday. This was indeed a memorable experience.

The relations between India and Zambia are historical, based on shared experience of the struggle against colonial rule and our mutual commitment to a democratic polity, a multicultural society, rule of law and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Indian community in Zambia that has been here for over a century and made Zambia home, represents a vital aspect of our vibrant bilateral relationship. They have helped build bridges of cooperation and friendship between the two countries and peoples. While Zambia has embraced you with open arms, you too have adapted to the local situation and contributed immensely to the development of this great country.

In this increasingly inter-connected and globalised world, Overseas Indians are global citizens. However, the Indian Community in Zambia, as elsewhere, is as pluralistic a community as India. Our shared culture and shared values bind us. We are keen to deepen and diversify our engagement with Overseas Indian communities numbering about 26 million spread all over the world, of which you in Zambia are a significant part. The government of India has put in place a number of initiatives to realise this vision. The Ministry of Overseas Indians Affairs has been created as the nodal ministry to look into these matters.

The visa regime has also been liberalised in tune with the Government’s deep commitment towards fulfilling the aspirations and expectations of Overseas Indians. The Overseas Citizenship of India (OCI) Scheme was introduced in August 2005 and greatly facilitates your travel to and engagement with India. We would like you to take advantage of these initiatives and contribute to the economic and commercial cooperation between India and Zambia. I am confident that our economic development would continue on a high growth path as a result of the entrepreneurship and initiative of citizens and Overseas Indians.

I wish you all the very best in your stay and work in Zambia and in your endeavours in building bridges of cooperation between the two countries".

483. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice-President's Visit to Czech Republic and Croatia.

New Delhi, June 5, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to you all and welcome to the briefing.

As you area aware, Vice-President of India, Hon'ble Hamid Ansari, would be leaving for Czech Republic and Republic of Croatia tomorrow. Secretary (West), Shri Vivek Katju, is here to brief you about the visit. Let me also introduce two of my colleagues who have joined us for the occasion. To the right of Secretary (West) is Mr. T.P. Seetharam, our Joint Secretary handling Europe West and Central Europe. To my left is Mr. P. Harish, Joint Secretary in the Office of Vice-President.

May I invite Secretary (West) to make his opening remarks? He will be happy to take a few questions thereafter.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Thank you Vishnu, and sorry ladies and gentlemen for dragging you out on a rather dusty Saturday afternoon. I have a brief statement which will give you an idea of the two visits.

Hon'ble Vice-President of India is visiting the Czech Republic and the Republic of Croatia from June 6 to June 11, 2010. The Vice-President would be accompanied by the Minister of State for Communications and Information Technology Shri Sachin Pilot, and four Members of Parliament. The Members of Parliament are Shri Tiruchi Siva, Shri Prasanta Chatterjee, Shrimati Maya Singh from the Rajya Sabha; and Shri Mohammed Azharuddin from the Lok Sabha.

During his visit to the Czech Republic from the 6th the 9th of June 2010, the Vice-President will meet with President His Excellency Mr. Vaclav Klaus, the Prime Minister His Excellency Mr. Jan Fischer; and the President of the Senate His Excellency Dr. Premysl Sobotka. The Vice-President will also deliver an address on some aspects of global governance in the 21st century at the Prague Security Studies Institute. Vice-President's visit to the Czech Republic will be the first visit from India at the VVIP level after the visit of President Dr. Shankar Dayal Sharma to that country in 1996.
India has friendly, cordial and cooperative relations with the Czech Republic. The relationship covers political, economic and commercial fields as well as cooperation and technology, and cultural exchanges. A regular exchange of views between India and the Czech Republic has been maintained on bilateral as well as global issues. This dialogue is sustained through visits at the Ministerial levels as well as at the mechanism of foreign office consultations. High-level visits have also been exchanged between the two countries. Czech President His Excellency Mr. Vaclav Klaus paid a state visit to India in November 2005. The President of the Senate Dr. Sobotka visited us in December 2007.

The Czech Republic has supported India's permanent membership in the UN Security Council. It is also supporting India's bid for a non-permanent seat at the Security Council for the 2011-2012 term. As you know, elections for this non-permanent seat will take place later this year.

Bilateral trade between India and the Czech Republic is a little over US$ one billion. Two-way investments by companies are also being made. Czech investments in India are in the automobile and power sectors, whereas from India companies in the automobiles and the IT sector, in textiles, and pharmaceuticals have been making investments in the Czech Republic.

The Czech Republic has a strong tradition in science and technology as well as in engineering. Indian and Czech institutions are exploring possibilities of cooperation in these areas. The Indian institutions that have shown an interest in cooperating with their Czech counterparts in science and technology are the CSIR as well as the Indian Institute of Technology at Mumbai.

During the visit of the Vice-President three agreements are likely to be signed. These are: (1) an agreement of the economic cooperation, (2) a social security agreement, and (3) a protocol on amending the Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement.

During the visit to Croatia from June 9 to 11, 2010, the Vice-President will meet with President His Excellency Ivo Josipovic and the Speaker of the Croatian Parliament His Excellency Mr. Luka Bebic. Croatia, as you know, was part of the former Yugoslavia with which India enjoyed excellent relations. Following Croatia’s independence, the two countries have cooperated in multilateral fora. Croatia has expressed its support for India’s permanent membership of the UN Security Council, and Croatia is also supporting India’s bid for a non-permanent seat for the 2011-2012 term.

Vice-President’s visit will be significant for it will be the first visit at the VVIP level from India to Croatia. However, the process of interaction at official and political level between the two countries is continued since Croatia’s Independence. The former Croatian President Mr. Stjepan Mesic paid a state visit to India in November 2002, and the Speaker of the Croatian Parliament Mr. Luka Bebic led a delegation of Croatian Parliamentarians to India on a bilateral visit in March this year.

Croatian scholars have a strong interest in indology and Indian culture. A Centre for Indology was established in the University of Zagreb in 1962. I understand that at the moment there are around 80 Croatian students who are studying at the Centre. Their studies include courses in Hindi and Sanskrit. Croatia has also been a beneficiary of our ITEC programme.

Bilateral trade between India and Croatia is still limited. We will make efforts to see that it grows. At the moment the two-way trade is around US$ 160 million. The sectors that have been identified as promising for the purposes of cooperation are energy, infrastructure, IT and tourism.

During the visit, an agreement on cooperation health and medicine, and a programme of cooperation in the field of culture are expected to be signed. The Vice-President, during his visit to Croatia will, of course, apart from visiting Zagreb the capital, also visit the historic city of Dubrovnik which is a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

I will stop here. If there are any questions, I will be happy to try to answer them.

Question: Will the Vice-President be accompanied by any trade delegation?
Secretary (West): No. I could add that we have had this interaction especially with the Czech side in the field of trade. We had an Economic Committee meeting recently. There was also a seminar held in India on technologies available in the Czech Republic. As I mentioned, the Czech Republic has very strong traditions in science and technology, and Indian institutions, Indian companies are exploring the acquisition of technologies across a wide range from the Czech Republic. This process is on but specifically during the visit we do not have a delegation.

Question: Please tell us something about the Social Security Agreement we are expected to sign with the Czech Republic.

Secretary (West): The essential purpose of the social security agreement is to ensure that the contributions that are made by Indian nationals who are working in the country are able to safeguard these contributions. Often we find that states make it obligatory for our people working in there to make contributions for social security. But once our people return on leave the country, then these investments or these contributions really - how should I put it - are 'lost' in the sense that there is no way of retrieving them. So, one of the purposes of a social security agreement is to see that a mechanism is devised whereby these contributions are protected.

Joint Secretary (CE&EW) (Shri T.P. Seetharam): What happens is that people from India who go to work in these countries have to make a contribution from the salary towards social security. If they move to some other country or return to India, they do not get the benefits of it. This agreement will ensure that their benefits are carried forward to whenever they return to India. And if they are going for a short period, for less than five years, they do not have to make those contributions; they are exempted from making those contributions from the salary. This is an agreement that we are in the process of signing with several countries.

Question: Is this one of the first?

Joint Secretary (CE&EW): We have already signed this with some other countries including Denmark, Netherlands, Sweden and so on. It is a process. Wherever we have large numbers of Indians working this would be a useful arrangement.

Question: Just one question on David Headley. Yesterday India was allowed access to Headley to interrogate him for one hour and forty minutes. Could you please update us on that?

Official Spokesperson: This briefing is, as I said, on the visit of Hon'ble Vice-President to the Czech Republic and the Republic of Croatia. But since you raised it, and that would be the last question, you are aware that the two sides are in touch with each other. And I mentioned in the past also that it is the Ministry of Home Affairs which is the nodal Ministry. The best would be for you to check with them about the progress in the matter.

Thank you.

---

484. Toast by Vice-President M. Hamid Ansari at the Banquet hosted in his honour by the Croatian President.

Croatia, June 9, 2010.

My wife and I are deeply touched by the warm reception and gracious hospitality that has been extended to us and members of my delegation since our arrival. We are delighted to be in Croatia, renowned as much for its beauty as for its contribution to art, literature and culture.

Excellency

Relations between India and Croatia have been friendly since the days of the former Yugoslavia when our leaders, Jawaharlal Nehru and President Josip Tito, along with others established the Non Aligned Movement. Non-Alignment was a powerful idea that served the interest of all nations that refused to join confrontational power bloc politics of the great powers of the time. It is a concept that is extremely relevant in the multi-polar scenario that is emerging today.
I would also like to pay tribute to Paulinus a Sancto Bartholomaeo, better known as Filip Vesdin, who stayed in Southern India for 13 years from 1776 and pioneered the Croatian tradition of Indological Studies. He was a versatile scholar who travelled widely in the Malabar region and met all sections of society, from fishermen to the Kings of Travancore. He published several books and papers on Indian culture, ranging from Sanskrit grammar to Indian botany. I am happy to note that the Centre for Indology at University of Zagreb is encouraging such studies actively.

Our friendly relations have strengthened over the years and have been given substantial content with the signing of several bilateral agreements and cooperation in multilateral fora. The recent visit of a parliamentary delegation to India led by your Speaker has added yet another dimension to the multi-faceted cooperation between our two democracies. It is my sincere hope that the deliberations we have had today and those that are scheduled during the rest of the visit would open further avenues of cooperation and strengthen our friendly relations.

Excellency

I am privileged to witness the rapid progress made by Croatia in recent years as it is engaged with the European Union, with which India has a strategic partnership. There are many opportunities for us to enlarge our engagement as we noted during our discussions. Our management of the economy over past two years helped us to minimise the effect of the unprecedented global financial crisis on our growth momentum. After growing at an unprecedented average of 9 per cent per year for four years, the economy slowed down to 6.5 per cent in 2008-09 and then recovered to 7.4 per cent in 2009-10. In the current financial year 2010-11, the economy is expected to grow at 8.5 per cent. This reflects the strong fundamentals of our economy.

It is my earnest hope that our two countries would forge a meaningful and mutually beneficial partnership in the coming years based on our respective strengths and capabilities.

Excellency

The challenges of today defy borders. Recent incidents of terrorism in India and other countries serve as a grim reminder that the scourge of terrorism is disruptive of all civilized life. It knows no boundaries and seriously threatens international peace and security. We must continue and reinvigorate our collective efforts to strengthen international cooperation to eradicate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. Swift and credible steps must be taken to eliminate terrorist safe havens. There is an urgent need to strengthen the global consensus and the legal regime against terrorism, including early adoption of the long overdue Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the United Nations.

Distinguished guests, May I now invite you to rise and join me in a toast:

• to the good health and continued success of His Excellency President Ivo Josipovic and Madam Tatjana Josipovic;

• to the peace and prosperity of Croatia; and

• to the friendship between India and Croatia.

485. Briefing by Secretary (West) Vivek Katju on Vice President's Meetings in Zagreb.

Zagreb, June 10, 2010.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): There had been two substantive meetings so far. The first was with His Excellency the President of Croatia, which was held yesterday evening. And this morning there was a meeting with the Speaker of the Croatian Parliament. It is my understanding that you have been given copies of the speech that was made yesterday by the Vice-President at the dinner hosted by the President of Croatia, and that you were also given an account of the agreements that were signed yesterday. So, I will not go into those aspects.

Both these meetings were held in an atmosphere which was warm, which was welcoming. The President as well as the Speaker underlined the importance that they attached to a visit at the VVIP level from India to this country. On his part, the Vice-President said that the objectives of his visit were to strengthen existing areas of cooperation between India and Croatia, to explore new areas of cooperation, and to put in place structures that would sustain this cooperation. Finally, he said that there was need to look at a much wider agenda between the two countries. Both the Vice-President's interlocutors agreed with these objectives.

In respect of specific areas of cooperation, it was felt that there was great scope for enhancing cooperation in the areas of science and technology. Within the realm of science and technology, there was focus on possibilities in biosciences, in physical sciences, in environmental sciences and information technology. The idea is that scientists from both countries should get together and identify common projects which can then be pursued between the two countries. Croatia too has a fine tradition of scholarship in the bio and the physical sciences, as well as environmental science. So, there is a great scope for cooperation in these areas.

In addition, the Vice-President as well as the hon'ble Minister of State for Communications and Information Technology - who as you know was with the Vice-President yesterday - emphasized that India has embarked on a very ambitious programme of development of its infrastructure, and in this context we recognize that there is a considerable experience and skills in some specific areas like the road construction, in Croatia. It was, therefore, mentioned that we would welcome the participation of Croatian companies in India's infrastructure development. As you know, there are companies from different parts of the world that would participate in our infrastructural development. So, as part of that process we would welcome companies from Croatia too.

The President of Croatia as well as the Vice-President remarked that the level of trade between the two countries was low and that there was scope to improve this level of trade. On our part, while Croatia itself because of the relatively small size of its population offers a limited market, but Croatia is placed at the gateway of Eastern and Central Europe. Therefore, it does offer access to a wider market. It was felt that business people from both countries could explore the opportunities that Croatia offers as a gateway. In this context the Croatian side has been interested for some time in promoting the Rijeka Port which is on the Adriatic and which can serve as access for the export of our goods to this part of Europe.
Among the other areas that were mentioned was health. The President of Croatia said that India had excellent medical facilities, that India's experience and skills in the areas of health and medicine were very advanced and, therefore, this did provide opportunities for cooperation between the two countries. In addition, an industry associated with health is pharmaceuticals and the quality of our pharmaceutical products was also underlined in the meeting. The two other areas that were mentioned were education and culture. As you know, we have signed a cultural exchange programme yesterday. There is a long tradition of Indology in this country. You would have noticed the remarks that the Vice-President had made yesterday about Father Filip Wesdin who had worked on Sanskrit grammar in the 18th century and had been based in what is now a part of Kerala and perhaps was the first European to really work on Sanskrit grammar. In addition there were other Indologists too.

From the Croatian side there was recognition that tourism offers opportunities for greater people-to-people contacts. On our side we mentioned that for success in tourism as well as in business, movements of people had to be facilitated. You will recall that this was the point that was also mentioned by the Vice-President in his interactions with the Czech leadership. Like that, here too this point was made.

In the meeting with the President, there was an exchange of views on the regional situations as obtaining in the neighbourhood of Croatia as well as in India's neighbourhood. Specifically in our context there was an exchange of views on Afghanistan and the situation prevailing there. The Vice-President emphasized that India's relations with Afghanistan are long-standing, that in addition to being relations between Governments, they are relations rooted among the people of the two countries. An account is also given of what India is doing for reconstruction in Afghanistan, and that was greatly appreciated. Vice-President also drew attention to the need for greater international cooperation against international terrorism, and that was recognized by the President of Croatia.

In the meeting with the Speaker this morning, the Vice-President and the Speaker both mentioned that there was need for greater support from Parliaments and Legislatures for the work being done by Governments in promoting people-to-people contacts. In this context the Speaker of the Croatian Parliament drew attention to a Friendship Group which has been established in the Parliament of Croatia. During the meeting the Head of the Friendship Group, Member of Parliament Marija Lugaric, was present. She gave an account of the activities of this Group. They are seventeen Members of the Croatian Parliament out of a total strength of 154, who are a part of this India-Croatia Friendship Group. Not only are they focused on promoting friendship between the two countries and strengthening ties, but also in bringing different aspects of India culture, of India's success in the field of economy and commerce to the Croatian public.

The Speaker of the Croatian Parliament also remarked that India was the world's largest democracy, that India's all-round development and the development of India's democracy was important for the world, and given India's important role in the world it was only logical to have India as a permanent member of the UN Security Council, and that Croatia supported India's permanent membership of the Security Council. It is also noteworthy that the Speaker of Parliament said that the Croatian Parliament celebrates the birthday of Mahatma Gandhi. He said in fact that time could be divided in a sense on pre-Gandhi and post-Gandhi lines on account of Gandhiji's enormous contribution to democracy, to independence, and to freedom in the world. He also recalled the strong bonds that existed between India and the former Yugoslavia, and the role that was played by Jawaharlal Nehru and Tito who, as you know, was a Croat, a person from this part of Yugoslavia. The Speaker went down memory lane and recalled that he was 18 years old when in 1955 Panditji and Shrimati Indira Gandhi had visited his hometown in Yugoslavia.

Just as a matter of curiosity, the Speaker drew a comparison between the word for Parliament in Croatian language which is Sabor, he said this was derived and was similar to Sabha. He said that there is this commonality between us.

The last point I will make is that there was recognition of the role that the Non-aligned Movement had played, of course, in a different era. Our Vice-President said that through the Non-aligned Movement we had tried to put better structures in the world in another age and in different circumstances, and that there was need today to have better structures, structures that would reflect contemporary realities. I think that thought was accepted by his interlocutors.
I will conclude here. I think we will need to have a wrap-up briefing session because this evening the Vice-President will be meeting with the Prime Minister. We can decide when it will be a good time to tell you something about that meeting. If there are any questions, I will be happy to answer.

Question: Is there some agreement also on the movement of paramedics and medical support personnel?

Secretary (West): I think there is an agreement generally that there has to be greater cooperation in the field of health. But I do not think that as of now there is any specific protocol on movement of people. Of course, as I mentioned it would be excellent if our own skills in the field of health - whether it be doctors, or paramedical people, or the strengths that exist in terms of research in India in this field - are recognized.

Question: Is it a fact that Croatia has enough uranium reserves? Can you tell us if any discussion took place on the energy sector?

Secretary (West): No, there has not been any focus here on the energy sector.

Question: I wanted to ask about Afghanistan. We heard similar comments when the Vice-President visited Prague, basically giving an account of India's assistance in Afghanistan, and we have a similar thing coming here. So, is this something that our dignitaries when they travel abroad are doing on purpose? Are we trying to tell the world of our involvement in Afghanistan?

Secretary (West): No. On the other hand there is a great awareness of India's positive contribution to Afghanistan. These countries, the Czech Republic as well as Croatia, have contributed troops to NATO. So, there is an awareness of Afghanistan and there is also an awareness about who is doing what on Afghanistan. In terms of India's contribution, there is recognition of the positive and constructive role that India has played and is playing in Afghanistan. So, it is not something that we need to say. A discussion begins with your playing this role and then as part of that discussion, it is a logical thing that you then tell them what you are doing because there is interest in knowing precisely what you are doing. There is a general awareness. So, it is not something which we need to publicize in a manner. It is known.
Question: Is there any proposal to have cooperation between our Parliament and the Croatian Parliament?

Secretary (West): I think there is a proposal.

Question: When will it take place?

Secretary (West): The Speaker of their Parliament had visited India and I think that the process of setting it up is on.

Thank you.

486. Remarks by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the reception hosted by Mayor of Dubrovnik, Andro Vlahusic.

Dubrovnik (Croatia), June 11, 2010.

Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is a great pleasure for me to be in the beautiful historic city of Dubrovnik. I wish to express my gratitude to you for your gracious reception and extend my greetings and best wishes to you and the friendly people of your city.

I have just concluded my visit to Zagreb where I have held extremely constructive and friendly meetings with the President of Croatia, H.E. Mr. Ivo Josipovic, Speaker of Sabor H.E. Mr. Luka Bebic and Prime Minister H.E. Mrs. Jadranka Kosor. I am confident that the friendly bilateral relations between our two countries would grow further for the mutual benefit of the peoples of our two countries.

Excellency

Dubrovnik has been an active trading centre throughout history and has produced many explorers, merchants, bankers and mariners of repute. I must compliment you for the excellent manner in which the
The rich historical legacy of this beautiful city, spanning many centuries, has been maintained. The fact that Dubrovnik attracts millions of tourists every year from all over the world is testimony to the glory of Dubrovnik’s past and the friendliness of its residents.

The city of Dubrovnik is in my thoughts at work, as a beautiful painting of the city adorns my Chamber in the Indian Parliament.

I am also happy to learn that despite its distance, Dubrovnik has left its imprint on India. Seafarers from this city have been known to travel to Goa in the middle of the 16th century for trade and ship-building. They also constructed a church in the village of Gandaulim, replicating the church of St. Blaise or Sao Braz, the Patron Saint of Dubrovnik. It is said that the church bell was brought from Dubrovnik. In recent times, we have had high level interaction between our countries and former President of India Mr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan visited Dubrovnik in 1965. I am happy to maintain this important and historical link between Dubrovnik and India.

I take this opportunity to once again thank Your Excellency and the friendly residents of Dubrovnik for your hospitality today and extend my best wishes for your good health and success.

487. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice-President’s Visit to Czech Republic and Croatia.

New Delhi, June 5, 2010.

Please see Document No.483.
488. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice President's meeting with President of the Czech Republic.

Prague, June 7, 2010.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Good afternoon. I hope you are comfortable here and you have had an opportunity to see a little bit of the city since our arrival yesterday.

This morning the Vice-President met His Excellency Mr. Vaclav Klaus, the President of the Czech Republic. Vice-President was accompanied by the hon'ble Minister of State for Communications and Information Technology, and the four hon'ble Members of Parliament who are accompanying the Vice-President on this visit.

The meeting with the President was characterised by the warmth and cordiality which always marks India's interaction with the Czech Republic. The President recalled his visits to India and both leaders expressed a very strong desire to enhance the content of the relationship which, as you know, is already strong in every way.

The relationship is marked, the two leaders noted, by political understanding and by a level of economic and commercial activity. The two leaders expressed the desire that this level of economic and commercial interaction between the two countries should increase. They also were of one mind with respect to an increase in both the volume as well as the content of India-Czech interaction in the field of science and technology, and engineering. As the Vice-President had briefed you yesterday, the Czech Republic has strengths in these areas and there is a desire on our part to interact with them in these areas of their strengths. This was noted in the meeting today.

At a political level it was significant that the President again reiterated the support of the Czech Republic for India's candidature for the nonpermanent seat of the UN Security Council for the 2011-2012 term, as well as support for India's permanent membership of the UN Security Council.
There was also a focus on India-Czech cultural interaction. The Vice-President remarked that there was a strong tradition of Indology in the Czech Republic and that we could take this interest in Indology to build in new directions relating to Indian culture and cultural interaction. The Czech President welcomed this desire. So, at the bilateral level there was agreement on the need and there was agreement also and interest in enhancing of ties.

During the meeting there was also a focus on certain current international issues. There was some discussion on the evolution of the European Union. The Vice-President noted that India has strong ties with the European Union and India would like to develop these ties for mutual benefit. In this context the current developments in the European Union were also discussed, but this was really a discussion at the level of concepts between two leaders who are statesmen in their own right and who have perspectives on what is happening in the world and the way the world should go for the benefit of all.

That in brief was the nature of the interaction today between the Vice-President and the President of the Czech Republic. In the afternoon the Vice-President is addressing the Prague Security Studies Institute.

If you have any questions, I will be happy to answer.

Question: What was the duration of the meeting?

Secretary (West): About half an hour. That was what was slated. Then the Vice-President and Shrimati Ansari had a tour of the Castle which, as you know, is a very celebrated castle not only in Europe but perhaps in the world. They spent about an hour touring the Castle.

Thank you.
Some Aspects of Global Governance in the 21st Century

I claim to be resident of a city of considerable antiquity. It is one of eight cities built successively on the same stretch of land on the banks of a river. I, therefore, cannot but be fascinated by another city of ancient vintage. Legend has it that the founding deity of Prague visualised 'a large town whose glory shall reach the stars'. The beauty and architectural splendour I see here testify to this prophesy.

Geography and history have bestowed on Prague a centrality that is evident. It has for centuries witnessed ideological and political contestations in central Europe and is today an active participant in the making of a new Europe.

For all these reasons it gives me great pleasure to be here today at the Prague Security Studies Institute. The Institute's formidable reputation for contributing to policy debates makes it an appropriate venue to think aloud and explore policy options for the world of tomorrow. I thank the Institute for inviting me to address this distinguished gathering today.

Ladies and gentlemen

Ours is an era of great change - political, economic and technological. Humankind has benefited from it, though in unequal measure. Some live in affluence and prosperity unmatched in history; others are less fortunate. The levels of disparity between peoples, nations and societies are starker than ever before.

The impact of change is pervasive. Concepts, values and systems are in flux. The sanctity of the Westphalian Order of State sovereignty has been dented by international covenants and practices. Globalisation has accelerated it by the imperatives of what the historian Philip Bobbitt has called the 'Market State'; technology has added to it. Clarity nevertheless evades us; the sociologist Anthony Giddens has described the present day world as "puzzling, strange, elliptical" in which ‘we are far from being fully in control of the forces we have unleashed’.

It is evident that we need a new global consensus, a new paradigm for assessing performance.

Many in this audience would recall that in 1992 Vaclav Havel had called for a redefinition of modernity. ‘Man’s attitude to the world’, he said, ‘must be radically changed’. He then went on to elaborate the concept:

It is my profound conviction that we have to release from the sphere of private whim such forces as natural, unique and unrepeatable experience of the world, an elementary sense of justice, the ability to see things as others do, a sense of transcendental responsibility, archetypal wisdom, good taste, courage, compassion and faith in the importance of particular measures that do not aspire to be a universal key to salvation. Such forces must be rehabilitated.

I concede it may not be altogether easy to implement such a vision in its totality. Nevertheless, today we have the objective conditions for economic and political emancipation of a majority of humanity since technology and political evolution have exponentially multiplied the strands of connection, movement and circulation between States of peoples, ideas, goods and services.

We are also in a better position than ever before to suggest for observance, norms of social behaviour appropriate for the requirements of the age, remembering Aristotle’s dictum that moral virtue does not emanate from nature and has to be imbibed by habit.

Converting this potential for change into reality represents the most significant governance challenge, nationally and internationally.

Ladies and gentlemen

Governance has been a subject of debate since the advent of civilisation. Greek philosophers dwelt on it. In the 4th century BC, the Indian strategic thinker and administrator Kautilya maintained that the objective of governance was "the happiness and welfare" of the subjects of a state: 'in the happiness of his subjects lies his happiness; in their welfare his welfare'. An 11th century medieval scholar wrote that the God-ordained duty of the king was "to close the doors of corruption, confusion and discord" so that people may live in constant security.

Global Governance is today understood as a minimum acceptable framework of norms, principles and rules needed to tackle global problems and achieve global objectives, and that are upheld by a broad institutional framework, including multilateral, regional and international organisations, national governments, the private sector and civil society. These objectives include eradication of poverty, mitigation of conflict, achieving minimum standards of health and education, environmental sustainability, upholding human rights and addressing the problem of hunger. Good governance is about leadership, sensitivity to the concerns of others, and upholding of basic norms of equity, justice and fairness. It is essentially about humanity defined in universalistic terms.

The dimensions of the problem, and the complexity of the task, unavoidably bring forth disjuncture and challenges. Allow me to mention a few of these.

We know, in the first place, that while the primacy of nation-states has not ended, their absolute control over their territory and their citizens has been partly ceded to trans-national, multilateral, global and regional institutions and mechanisms. This upward power shift is still a work-in-progress as exemplified by the experience of the European Union.

Secondly, governance at the global and national levels confronts the old dilemma of a choice between normative standards and realpolitik. The unacceptability of a chauvinistic concept of the nation-state must go hand in hand with a similar undesirability of an unequal global order. The latter is most evident in the institutional inadequacy of the global political and financial institutions. A sustainable argument for global governance cannot overlook David Held's observation that 'a theory of legitimate power is inescapably a theory of democracy in the interlocking processes and structures of the global system. It is a theory of the
A third reality to be registered is the state of flux characterising the contemporary world order. The past two decades have witnessed bipolarity ceding ground to unipolarity and then to multipolarity. Affiliations and identities are no longer exclusive, and overlapping multiplicity has become a necessity rather than an option. Alongside, globalization and homogenization have had an adverse impact on cultural distinctiveness of peoples and nations. The articulation of who a people are, and what the quintessential values of their culture and civilization are, is a more difficult process today. This is more so in multi-ethnic, multi-lingual and multi-religious states, or groupings of states, when identifying snycretic threads from the past has become important in building a broad-based framework of national identity.

A fourth point to be noted is that unknown to the casual observer and undocumented in its minutiae, the disparate elements of global governance are welding treaty-based global and multilateral organisations and national governments with the evolving global discourse on rights, democracy, legitimacy, and international cooperation. National governments, peoples, corporate entities and civil societies, who may or may not have similar value systems, are cooperating in transnational networks for achieving common objectives. Some are old, strong and cross-cutting alliances, while others are recent loose groupings focused on limited themes. The future evolution of this process has important consequences for all of us.

Ladies and gentlemen

Even when there is a convergence of views and recipes, the experience of individual societies remains critical to correctives. It is in this context that I wish to speak of my country. India is one-sixth of the world in terms of population, is a vibrant democracy and is a microcosm of the diversities that characterise our world. It has been rightly called 'the largest multicultural society in the world.'
I wish to highlight three aspects of our experience for your consideration.

First, and the most important, is the accommodation of diversity and acceptance of multiple identities. We have been fortunate in implementing it due to our civilisational heritage and innate capacity for synthesis. In the words of a distinguished academic, 'the Indian Constitution was well ahead of its time not only in recognizing diversities but also in providing for representation of the collectivities in the formal democratic structures.' The special provisions for guarantees or affirmative action in eight broad categories - caste, class, tribe, backwardness, religion, region, sex and language - is evidence of this approach for securing justice and ensuring cultural autonomy in a composite culture within a framework of a quasi-federal structure. Accommodation of diversity has thus been consciously incorporated as a distinctive feature of the Indian state. It implies that a standardized image of an Indian cannot be constructed.

Second, rapid economic and human development has raised new issues of identity and integration. Living in isolation is not an option in the era of globalisation; there are, however, many ways of living together. Integration is necessary and desirable; assimilation is neither desirable nor practical. Throughout our history, we have seen identities being built on a series of inclusions and exclusions reflective of ground realities. The challenge for us in the future, as in the past, would be to maintain a balance in favour of inclusions.

Third, it has been said that societal "conflict is written into the idea of India" and that some of the dimensions of such conflict include caste injustice, religious differences, economic inequality, environmental degradation and competition for resources, internal migration, political rights and recognition, issues arising out of a federal structure and competing claims of rural-urban populations, present and future generations, and rival perceptions of nationalisms. The constant effort of our polity, through its democratic churning, has been to address societal conflict through accommodation and good governance and realise the vision of an India that is more prosperous, more inclusive, more accommodative and more confident of its ability to resolve complex social issues.
The Indian approach to multiculturalism is to ‘aspire towards a form of citizenship that is marked neither by a universalism generated by complete homogenisation, nor by particularism of self-identical and closed communities’.

Ladies and Gentlemen

At a basic level, global governance is deeply impacted by the quality of governance of nations. I would like to conclude by noting that both of our countries have been fortunate to be blessed with vibrant democratic polities and dynamic economies. Our peoples and leaders are committed to peace, freedom and justice for all. Our mutual cooperation and our role in the various regional and global groupings would substantially contribute to better profiles of global governance in this century.

No discussion of global governance in the contemporary context would be complete without attention being paid to what has been called the ‘Hydra-Headed Crisis’ confronting the world. The reference, of course, is to the overlapping, even interlinked, economic and financial, security, and environmental threats that have emerged so sharply in the past year or so. They are interlinked and impact the capacity of players on the global stage. They also reflect on national and global governance, demonstrate the limitations of national governance and the inadequacy of existing global mechanisms.

The experience reiterates the imperative need for restructuring institutions of global governance to make them more representative, more effective and more dedicated to the common, rather than sectional, good.

I thank the Director of the Prague Security Studies Institute Mr. Oldrich Cerny and Deputy Foreign Minister Mr. Hynek Kmonicek for their kind words.
Speech by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the banquet hosted in his honour by the President of the Senate of the Parliament of the Czech Republic Premysl Sobotka.

Prague, June 7, 2010.

Thank you for your warm words of welcome and your gracious hospitality.

As I stand here I am reminded of the ties which bind our two countries. These are based not only on our commitments to the values and principles of democratic and parliamentary governance but are rooted in our civilisational legacy, linguistic affinity and contact between men of letters. Our great poet Rabindranath Tagore visited Prague in 1921, and again in 1926, at the invitation of his friend Professor Lesny, the celebrated Czech Indologist who had translated his poems and novels. Jawaharlal Nehru visited Prague in 1938, accompanied by his daughter Indira. Long before our independence, we had established institutions in our countries to foster friendship between our peoples.

My delegation includes members of the Indian parliament representing different political parties. Exchanges between our parliaments reinforce the growing multi-faceted relations between our countries. Your Excellency’s visit to India in December 2007 was instrumental in consolidating our cooperation.

The challenge before us in India is to attain and sustain rapid and inclusive economic growth within the framework of parliamentary democracy. Our management of the economy over past two years helped us to minimise the effect of the unprecedented global financial crisis on our growth momentum. Economic growth recovered to 7.4 per cent in 2009-10 and in the current financial year 2010-11, the economy is expected to grow at 8.5 per cent. This reflects the strong fundamentals of our economy.

We believe that there exists an ideal synergy between India’s growing market and Czech technology. There is already bilateral trade and investment in sectors as diverse as software, pharmaceuticals, infrastructure, textiles and engineering goods. The meeting in New Delhi last month, between industrial users and R&D organizations of our two countries, points to further areas of mutually beneficial cooperation.

The challenges of today defy borders. Recent incidents of terrorism in India and other countries serve as a grim reminder that the scourge of terrorism is disruptive of all civilized life. It knows no boundaries and seriously threatens international peace and security. We must continue and reinvigorate our collective efforts to strengthen international cooperation to eradicate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. Swift and credible steps must be taken to eliminate terrorist safe havens. There is an urgent need to strengthen the global consensus and the legal regime against terrorism, including early adoption of the long overdue Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the United Nations.

We have opportunities to further intensify cooperation between our two countries. The agreements to be signed tomorrow relating to Economic Cooperation, Social Security and Bilateral Investment Promotion and Protection provide additional frameworks for our bilateral engagement. We are also working together in the context of the broader India-EU strategic partnership.

Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Please join me in a toast to:

The good health and success of His Excellency Senate President Dr. Premysyl Sobotka and Madam Radmila Sobotkova closer cooperation between our elected representatives and enhanced engagement between our two governments; and stronger bonds of friendship between our countries and peoples.

491. Remarks by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Ceremony hosted by Lord Mayor of Prague Pavel Bem at Old Town Hall.

Prague, June 8, 2010.

My wife and I and my entire delegation are delighted to be in your beautiful and renowned city, so rich in culture and tradition.

Prague is one of the great cities of the world, and I am happy to be back here, having visited it several years ago. We in India have great admiration for the Czech Republic and its capital city in particular. We admire its history, cultural heritage and its accomplishments in all the fields of human knowledge. Prague lies at the intersection of Europe. It was here that tradesmen, politicians, scholars and artists from all over the world have met. Prague has witnessed the unfolding of events that have impacted the course of history.

Czech Republic and India have historically been close partners in our quest for equality, human rights, freedom and democracy. The leaders of India's freedom struggle, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose, visited your beautiful city in the 1930s. Gurudev Rabindranath Tagore visited Prague in the 1920s. Both Pandit Nehru, as well as Tagore, raised their voices against Czechoslovakia's occupation.

I thank you very much for this honour that you have extended to me and my delegation and through us to the people of India.
492. Remarks by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Toast at the Working Lunch hosted by Czech Prime Minister Jan Fischer.

Prague, June 8 2010.

Excellency

Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen

I am delighted to be here today. I am touched by your gracious hospitality and your warm words of welcome.

Our relations go back to the period before our Independence. Tagore, our national poet, came here twice in 1921 and 1926 and the translation of his works into Czech had nurtured a close cultural and historical link with India.

Jawaharlal Nehru visited your country in 1938 at a critical juncture in your history in an act of solidarity with the Czech government in their resistance to Hitler. He wrote about this visit in his newspaper.

Prague has been the intellectual centre of Europe. You also have a rich cultural tradition. This has made your capital an important centre for globally significant events.

In modern times, our economic engagement has intensified to the mutual benefit of our peoples and countries. Czech engineers have contributed to India's industrialization and BATA, Yezdi and Skoda are well known brand names in India. Many Indian companies are present in the Czech Republic in diverse sectors such as software, trucks, pharmaceuticals and textiles.

Our countries are bound by our commitment to democratic and parliamentary governance, human rights and our tradition of pluralism. My delegation includes Members of Indian Parliament representing different political parties. They represent the diversity as well as the unity of India.

We have attempted inclusive economic growth within the framework of a Parliamentary democracy, so that all sections and groups have a stake in the growing prosperity of the nation.
We believe that there is an ideal synergy between Czech technology and India’s growing market. There is also scope for cooperation between our universities and cultural institutions.

I look forward to working with Your Excellency to strengthen ties between our two peoples and governments.

493. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) on Vice-President’s Meetings in Prague.

Prague, June 8, 2010.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Good afternoon. Yesterday I had briefed you after the Vice-President’s meeting with the President, and you had also covered the Address of the Vice-President to the Prague Security Studies Institute. What I propose to do today is to cover the meetings that have taken place since the Address to the Institute. Let me first tell you what these meetings have been and then I will try to give you a kind of a wrap up so that one does not become repetitive.

Yesterday evening the Vice-President met with the President of the Czech Senate, who also hosted a dinner for the Vice-President. This morning there was a formal ceremony at the Czech Senate premises where the signing of two agreements and an amendment to one agreement took place. After that there was a meeting with the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee. Finally, there was also a meeting and a working lunch with the Prime Minister of the Czech Republic. Before that, this morning began with a reception hosted by the Lord Mayor of Prague at the Town Hall of the Prague. The Mayor also gave the Vice-President the key of the City of Prague which was an indication of the kind of relationship this city wishes to develop with India.

In all these meetings there was one theme which was going right through. That was the desire to take the relationship forward in a comprehensive manner, to build on the kind of cooperation that already exists between the two countries, to utilize all the untapped potential that exists - whether it be in the area of economic and commercial relations, or in investments, or in science and technology, in engineering, in research and development.

The Vice-President conveyed to his interlocutors that it was the business of the government to create a conducive atmosphere which would facilitate the growing contacts between the two sides. For example in economic and commercial matters or in investment, it was actually for the players themselves, for businessmen, for industrialists, to take the things forward, to develop projects and to take them forward. In this context, as with the President so also with his other interlocutors, the Vice-President emphasized that it was important to ensure that the people were free to come and go, that mobility of people was an important ingredient in creating and facilitating business and commercial contacts in particular.

New areas were also mentioned. For example, the Czech Prime Minister mentioned that agriculture was also an area where the two countries could cooperate, and this was accepted by the Vice-President. There was some discussion in the meeting with the President of the Senate on specific technologies. The President of the Senate pointed out that the Czech Republic had developed strengths in nanotechnology. He spoke of the nanofibres that had been developed in the Czech Republic and we thought that this was a good area to pursue contacts.

In discussions with the President of the Czech Senate, the Vice-President and his counterpart said that contacts between the Parliaments of the two countries could facilitate, assist and support the work being done by Governments or being done by the executive branch of both countries to take the relationship forward. So, they did see that there was a specific role which the Parliaments could perform in this process.

The Vice-President also conveyed to his interlocutors, in particular to the President of the Senate, about the dangers that terrorism posed to the international community, the threat of terrorism and the difficulties that we have been facing on account of terrorism for two decades now and the need to combat this through international cooperation. There was also discussion, especially with the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, on our region, on the situation in Afghanistan in particular. There the Vice-President gave an account of the assistance being given by India to Afghanistan. This was appreciated by the Czech side.
There was also a discussion on developments in Europe. The Czech leadership gave its perspectives on what is happening in Europe. The one point that the interlocutors of the Vice-President made was that there is need now for Europe to undertake steps that would be fiscally prudent.

I would sum up recalling what the Vice-President told to his interlocutors. He said that the operative words for the world of today and tomorrow were coordination and cooperation between nation states. I will stop here. I would be happy to answer questions.

Question: What was discussed... (Inaudible) ...terrorism?

Secretary (West): The Czech side appreciated the perspective given by the Vice-President on the threat that India faces from terrorism and agreed that there was great need for the international community to cooperate meaningfully to combat international terrorism. Terrorism in particular was discussed with the President of the Senate.

Of the three agreements that were signed today, one was an agreement on cooperation in economic matters, and the second was an agreement on cooperation in social security issues. Both these agreements were signed on our side by the hon'ble Minister of State for Communications and Information Technology Shri Sachin Pilot. The Czech signatory was the Minister for Labour Affairs.

Indian Ambassador in Prague (Shri D.P. Srivastava): The agreement on social security was signed on the Czech side by Minister for Social Affairs and Labour. The agreement covers exemption for Indian professionals who come for short periods, specifically for less than five years. For those who are here for longer periods, beyond five years, this will ensure portability of pensions which means that they can take their pension benefits to the next destination. There is also a provision that in case the term of service in either of the two countries falls below the minimum eligible period, then it can be combined so that they cross the threshold and do not lose their benefits. This will help both our software professionals who come for short periods as well as people who are here in connection with Indian companies, who are stationed for a longer period.

Secretary (West): The other agreement which is on economic cooperation was signed on the Czech side by their Deputy Minister of Industry and Trade Mr. Milan Hovorka. Finally the third, which is the protocol on amendment of the agreement between India and the Czech Republic on promotion and protection of investments, was signed on our side by Ambassador Shri Srivastava. On the Czech side it was signed by Mr. Jan Milic, the Deputy Minister for Finance.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): The economic cooperation agreement lists out a large number of areas in which the two sides will cooperate. These include industry, technical and technological areas. It specifies that the two countries will develop bilateral economic cooperation through business contacts, will facilitate investments etc., will exchange information, will identify opportunities and facilitate investment flows, will cooperate in science and technology. And for these purposes and others a Joint Commission on Economic Cooperation will be established, which will be led at senior official levels, on our side by the Ministry of Commerce and on the Czech side by the Ministry of Industry and Trade. This Joint Commission can set up working groups as required.

Question: Has any target been set for the Commission?

Secretary (West): No, I think the Commission will set its own targets after studying the situation.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): I think the Czech side has some strengths in various areas including genetics, etc. We have, as you know, a large network of research and development institutions in agriculture. The idea was at a preliminary stage at the moment. But the idea was that both the countries should get their concerned people together so that they can discuss research in different areas of agriculture. There was some discussion on food-processing. I think the Czech side again has some strengths in food-processing. So, our people can look at opportunities in food-processing.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): I think it is difficult to give you a precise number. But the Ministry of Overseas Indian Affairs that anchors this subject has been in the process of signing these agreements with different countries where Indian professionals and others are working. I think these agreements are important for the reasons that the Ambassador mentioned about this particular agreement.

Ambassador: There are, at any point in time, 600 to 700 Indians here. I think they will benefit either in terms of short-term exemptions or portability benefits to those who are here for longer periods.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): On the mobility issue, the idea is that there has to be greater ease in terms of travel of business people so that they can go where they are needed and when they are needed. The Vice-President mentioned to one of his interlocutors that there is a competitive market today, and naturally if a person who is working, or a company that is going to make investments finds that it is difficult for its people to come and go, then that acts as a disincentive. So, mobility would mean that the facilitation for the people who need to travel to be able to do so.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): I do not think on such occasions you look for a concrete working out of an administrative arrangement. When leaders meet, they discuss and accept certain principles and then those principles, as you know, are implemented by bureaucracy. And it will now be our endeavour to pursue what has been accepted. Now if you ask me if the process will be easy, perhaps no. It is something that we will keep working at.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): I think this protocol on the amendment was required because the Czech Republic has, since the actual agreement was signed, become a member of the EU, they had to bring in line certain things which flow from the EU membership. Seetharam reminds me that the original agreement was signed in 1996, and as you know, the Czech Republic joined the EU in 2004. So, these are the consequent things.
Question: How would you rate this visit?

Secretary (West): I would rate it as a great success. This was, as the Vice-President mentioned to you on the flight, an engagement with old friends in new circumstances. And that engagement has been a substantive engagement, it has been a comprehensive engagement. I think the Czech Republic is, in a manner of speaking, at the heart of Europe. This is an engagement with a country with which we have significant contact in the past. It is a visit at the VVIP level which has come after 14 years from India. We have renewed ties. We have given an indication that India values this relationship and wishes to take it forward in a comprehensive manner across the board. Finally it was also shown and profiled once again that there are significant opportunities that has to be tapped. I think it has been a success in any manner that you seek to define success.

Question: What was discussed with the EU?

Secretary (West): This was not the EU. This was what his interlocutors were saying. When the Vice-President asked them what is happening in Europe, they were giving their perspectives of the processes under way in Europe. In this context, as you know, there had been a certain amount of turbulence in the financial sphere in Europe. So, I think it is in this context that his interlocutors were saying that there is need.

Question: ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (West): I think science and technology is a vast area. The Czech Republic has strengths in different aspects of science and technology. Its engineering skills for example are well-known. Its skills in manufacturing precision instruments are also well-known. It has a base of laboratories. Its universities are excellent. And our own institutions in science and technology are now feeling that there will be a mutual benefit if our people and their people collaborate. When scientists and technologists will get together, then they will decide on the kind of projects that can be undertaken.

Question: Have you identified ...(Inaudible)....specific areas of cooperation in Science and Technology?
Secretary (West): For example, one of the areas which had come up, as I mentioned to you, was nanotechnology, nanofibres. These are ideas that are emerging and these ideas then are explored by experts to determine precise projects. The basis would be that. From visits like these at the VVIP level ideas are thrown up and those ideas are then later carried forward and are implemented.

Thank you.

495. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on Prime Minister’s meeting with French President Sarkozy on the sidelines of the Nuclear Security Summit.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. I hope you have received the address of Prime Minister at the Nuclear Security Summit. You would have also seen this brief write-up by the Department of Atomic Energy outlining the Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership that Prime Minister has offered to set up in India. You would have also seen the text of remarks by President Obama welcoming the initiative by Prime Minister of India.

A bilateral meeting between Prime Minister and President Sarkozy has just concluded and I would like to share with you some salient details of the meeting. Today’s meeting, as in the past, was held in a very warm and friendly atmosphere given the convergence of views, convergence of interests between India and France. Prime Minister reiterated a warm invitation to President Sarkozy to visit India along with the First Lady. The visit is likely to take place in the last quarter of this year.

Both sides expressed satisfaction and happiness at the relationship of strategic partnership which was forged in 1998 and over the last decade or so has moved from strength to strength. The canvass of our ties is broad and expanding steadily which is a matter of satisfaction for both Governments, both countries; and this has been happening under successive Governments in both the countries.

President Sarkozy, many of you would recall, visited India in January 2008 within eight months of his assuming office when he was also the Chief Guest at India’s Republic Day celebrations. The Prime Minister held the second summit in 2008 with France on the 30th of September at Paris. I would like to point out here that practically within three weeks of the decision taken by NSG and IAEA to lift restrictions on civil nuclear cooperation between India and NSG, which was in early September, the first IGA on civil nuclear cooperation was signed in Paris on the 30th of September 08 between India and France.
Prime Minister again visited France in July last year when he was the Guest of Honour at the French National Day Celebrations. The two leaders have kept in regular touch, have regularly met on the sidelines of international conferences and fora. In 2009 they had at least four meetings - in April at London during the G20; in July at L'Aquila during the G8 plus 5 process; at Pittsburgh in September 2009 during the G20; and finally in November in Port of Spain during the Commonwealth Summit. That has been the manner in which the two countries and two leaders have been engaging each other.

As I mentioned, our bilateral relations have been growing in strength and vitality in practically all fields. Within this framework of strategic partnership we are collaborating in vital areas like energy, space research, defence, industry and commerce, science and technology, education, culture, tourism, etc. Earlier this year on 14th January, Foreign Secretary and the Ambassador of France in New Delhi exchanged instruments of ratification of the Inter-Governmental Agreement on the peaceful use of nuclear energy. India and France intend to develop multifaceted civil nuclear cooperation covering a wide array of areas including nuclear power projects, fuel supply, research and development, nuclear safety, education, training, etc.

During the meeting today between the two leaders which lasted close to 50 minutes President Sarkozy reiterated French support for the permanent membership of India at UNSC. He remarked that India should get its rightful place in the international comity of nations. They had a very good discussion on regional issues of mutual interest including the situation in Afghanistan and Pakistan. They particularly agreed to beef up the efforts of the international community on counter terrorism which touches everybody, affects everybody.

The two leaders also had detailed discussions on G20, especially in the context of the upcoming French Presidency of EU. President Sarkozy shared his views with Prime Minister on the role of G20 in the post-economic recovery phase. He spoke of his desire to push towards a new world monetary order. The two leaders exchanged views on commodity price regulation. Prime Minister of India opined that the G20, in order to continue to remain relevant and enhance its relevance should formulate concrete steps to sustain the global economic recovery; and G20 should also decide what aspects it should maintain its focus on. He cautioned against complacency. These briefly are some of the important aspects that the two leaders touched upon.

Question: Did the French President raise the question of the Civil Nuclear Liability Bill in India so that the India-France nuclear trade can begin?

Official Spokesperson: I am not sure whether that was specifically raised, but what was mentioned was the satisfaction by both sides at the manner in which both sides are proceeding in operationalising the IGA. That is something which is of considerable interest to both countries.

Question: As far as a permanent seat for India in the UN Security Council is concerned, has this issue ever come up among the discussions between India and the US officials or with President Obama? What is the position of the United States on this?

Official Spokesperson: Our membership of the UN Security Council is a matter of very high priority for India. We are very clear that by any yardstick, by any measure, India is eminently qualified to be a permanent member of the UN Security Council. The international architecture which was framed in 1945-46 needs democratisation. The ground realities have changed. We are actively pursuing that matter. We are closely working with our friends in the G4, and outside that framework with key players internationally, and with the international community to move forward on that matter so that India assumes its rightful place in the international comity or international organisations.

Question: Would you just elaborate a little as to what actually formed the core of the discussion on Pakistan and Afghanistan. You mentioned that the President and the Prime Minister had a brief interaction on that.

Official Spokesperson: I told you, and I can repeat it, basically they had an exchange of views on this. In the past also we have noted a similarity of viewpoint between our two countries on the issue of terrorism, on the issue of counter-terrorism, about how we view the situation in the region. It is in common interest to see peace and tranquillity return to the region. It is important to see that the international community stays the course in terms of helping to bring about stability in Afghanistan, security in Afghanistan, economic development in Afghanistan. That is how India sees the situation.
And France, in our interaction we find, has a similar outlook. That is speaking in general terms. Specifically on Afghanistan and Pakistan I have already mentioned that in today's meeting both sides spoke of the need for a concerted action on the part of international community to boost counter-terrorism efforts.

Question: What was French President's reaction to the Global Nuclear Centre which India is going to be setting up?

Official Spokesperson: I do not have the specific reaction of the French President to that but my understanding is that this initiative of India has been warmly welcomed by the Summit. I have already mentioned the reaction of President Obama immediately after Prime Minister had made this offer. It would also find a reflection in the Joint Communique which will be released. As far as I know, it has been welcomed by the international community.

499. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (Europe West) on visit of French President.

New Delhi, December 1, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. My colleague Joint Secretary (Europe West) Mr. T.P. Seetharam and I would like to brief you about the forthcoming working visit of President of France H.E. Nicholas Sarkozy.

The President would be arriving at Bangalore on the 4th of December on a four-day working visit. His delegation would include his spouse Madame Carla Sarkozy; seven Ministerial colleagues who are: the Minister of Defence and War Veterans; Minister of External and European Affairs; Minister of Ecology, Sustainable Development, Transport and Housing; Minister of Economy, Finance and Industry; Minister of Higher Education and Research; Minister of Agriculture, Food, Fisheries, Rural Affairs and Town and Country Planning; and the Minister of Culture and Communications. His delegation will also include a number of Parliamentarians, senior officials, industrialists and business leaders.

Let me take you through the important engagements during his stay in India. At Bangalore, he would be visiting ISRO where he would see the Indo-French Megha-Tropiques Satellite being jointly developed by ISRO and CNES, the French counterpart of ISRO. Later in the day he leaves on a private visit for Agra. On Sunday the 5th, he would visit the Taj Mahal as well as Fatehpur Sikri, and arrive at New Delhi in the evening.

At New Delhi he would have a restricted meeting with the Prime Minister of India who would also be hosting a private dinner in the honour of the visiting dignitary and his spouse.

On Monday, the 6th December, there will be delegation-level talks at Hyderabad House followed by signing of agreements and a Joint Press Conference. Prime Minister would host a working lunch in honour of President Sarkozy. The President would also be meeting with the President of India.

On Tuesday, 7th December, he would leave for Mumbai where he would be visiting the Police Memorial honouring the victims of the heinous terrorist attack on 26th November. He would also visit Taj and Oberoi hotels to pay tributes to those who were killed. In the second half of the day, he would be addressing a business meeting jointly organized by FICCI and CII. In the evening he departs for Paris.

This is President Sarkozy's second visit to India in two years. You would recall that in January 2008 he was the Chief Guest at India's Republic Day Celebrations and his visit had taken place just eight months after assuming office of the President.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh paid a return visit to Paris in the same year on the 30th of September. At the invitation of President Sarkozy and as the Guest of Honour at the National Day Parade in Paris, Prime Minister again visited Paris on 14th July 2009. President Sarkozy had made the special gesture of inviting a 400-strong Indian Armed Forces contingent to lead the French National Day Parade on the occasion.

The two leaders have been in close touch and have been meeting regularly on the sidelines of the international fora. The high-level attention and the robust cooperation in an array of vital areas have further cemented our strategic partnership that was established in 1998.

France is an important global power and the fifth largest economy in the world. We attach a great deal of importance to our relations. As fellow democracies and pluralistic, multicultural societies, our relations have traditionally been close, warm and friendly.

The last decade has witnessed significant progress in wide-ranging political, economic, commercial, technological and cultural cooperation. We are pleased that our enhanced partnership in strategic areas as defence, civil nuclear energy, space, science and technology has been growing steadily.

Defence cooperation with France is one of the key aspects of our overall bilateral partnership. We have a High Level Committee on Defence Cooperation, which is headed by the Defence Secretary from our side. The Committee has been meeting regularly to monitor developments and to review all aspects of defence cooperation. The 13th meeting of the Committee took place in Paris on the 18th and 19th of November this year.
Similarly, France is a key partner of India in the area of civil nuclear cooperation. We have been cooperating in the civil nuclear energy sector for many decades. Our scientists have a long history of cooperation in nuclear sciences. I may note that France played a very important role at the IAEA and NSG during the negotiations on lifting restrictions on civil nuclear cooperation with India.

A landmark Inter-Governmental Agreement on Civil Nuclear Cooperation was signed during the visit of our Prime Minister to Paris in September 2008. This was the very first agreement of its kind that India signed with any country after the NSG waiver. The Inter-governmental Agreement has since been operationalised. NPCIL is discussing with AREVA construction of a number of EPRs in Maharashtra.

We also have an annual strategic dialogue between the two National Security Advisors. Their last meeting was held in New Delhi in October this year.

Moving on to the space sector, I would like to note that France is again a very important partner of ours for the last four decades. ISRO is closely collaborating with its counterpart National Centre for Space Studies (CNES) in research and development, sourcing of high-technology items, as well as fabrication and launch of satellites.

Our cooperation in the field of science and technology is expanding rapidly particularly through the Indo-French Centre for Promotion of Advanced Research which in the last 20 years supported 380 scientific collaborations. Medical research is yet again an important element of our cooperative endeavour. You are perhaps aware that India is a partner country in the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor (ITER) which is located in France. Indian scientists have been making significant contribution to the ITER project.

In the important area of counter-terrorism, India and France believe that there is need for stepped up action. We have been closely cooperating with each other. France has been supportive of India’s proposal for a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the UN. We also have a Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism. Thanks to the French support, India became a full member of the Paris-based Financial Action Task Force during its Plenary Meeting in June 2010 at Paris.
France is our fifth largest trading partner in Europe. The trade and economic relations while important has yet to attain its full potential. Energetic efforts are under way in that direction. Bilateral trade which had declined somewhat in 2009 due to the global economic woes stood at Euro 5.36 billion. This year we have already seen a 27 per cent increase in the first eight months. A trade target of Euro 12 billion has been established for the year 2012.

France is also the ninth largest investor in India with cumulative investments of Euro 2.34 billion. We have more than 950 technical and financial collaborations that were approved till April 2010. Indian companies are also looking at France quite closely and our investments are currently estimated at over Euro 1 billion.

An Indo-French Joint Committee on Economic and Technical Cooperation has been established at the level of the Minister of Commerce. The 16th session of the Committee was held in Paris on 24th and 25th June this year, which was co-chaired by Commerce and Industry Minister from our side and the Minister of Economy, Industry and Employment from the French side. It regularly reviews measures to enhance trade and investments.

A decision was also taken during the state visit of President Sarkozy to India in January 2008 to establish a CEOs Forum which was duly set up by mid 2009. It is led by Mr. Narayana Murthy from India and by Mr. Bertrand Collomb, the former Chairman of Lafarge from the French side. The first meeting was held in New Delhi in November 2009 and the second meeting in June 2010 in Paris. It has been undertaking deliberations in sessions on important areas like energy, water and infrastructure, green growth, education and research, SME collaborations, as well as investments both bilaterally as well as in third countries.

Yet another area of promise and cooperation is educational exchanges as well as research and training. This is being done within the framework of the India-France Educational Exchange Programme which is respectively overseen by the Ministry of HRD and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in India and France.

A consortium of Indo-French universities has been created which has brought together 70 universities in both countries. Discussions are also under way on the French assistance for a newly established IIT in Rajasthan at Jodhpur. This decision was again taken during the visit of our Prime Minister in September 2008.

We are pleased that Indian culture enjoys wide interest and a discerning audience in France. A number of cultural events have been organized all over France and in India which has intensified interest in cultural exchanges in both directions.

The French Festival called Bonjour India ended in February 2010, and Indian Festival called Namaste France was launched on the 14th of April 2010 and will go on till mid 2011. The Festival features events covering the entire diversity of Indian culture including art, music, dance, fashion, tourism, films, literature, and so on. We are also planning an exhibition in Paris and other events to celebrate the Tagore Centenary in 2011. We are actively working towards establishing an Indian Cultural Centre in Paris.

Indian cinema, the Bollywood, is finding new appreciation in France and often France has been chosen as a location for shooting of Indian films. We are looking at initiatives for co-production of films.

In sum, France is an important EU, G8 and G20 nation. It has since assumed Presidency of G20. France is also a key permanent member of the UN Security Council. It is one of the first countries with which we established a strategic partnership which has been deepening in content and scope. France has been supportive of India's candidature for a permanent membership of UN Security Council. The visit of President Sarkozy is an occasion to reaffirm and enhance our close and dynamic ties. Wide-ranging discussions on a whole range of issues and matters of common interest are likely to take place. Some agreements are also expected to be signed during the visit of President Sarkozy.

Thank you. My colleague will be happy to take a few questions pertaining to the visit of President of France to India.

Question: Recently the Nuclear Power Corporation of India has released a booklet in which it said that AREVA will supply uranium and reactor units, and an agreement between AREVA and NPCIL is expected to be signed during Sarkozy's forthcoming visit. Can you tell us anything on that? Is it going to be signed?
Joint Secretary (Shri T.P. Seetharam): I believe one or more framework agreements between NPCIL and AREVA are currently under negotiation. If they manage to wrap it up over the next couple of days, we will have those signed. These would be a framework agreement on early works as it is called. So, these are possibly concluded and maybe signed.

Question: Supply of uranium agreement, will that be signed?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): I am not aware of those specific details. I know that some kind of framework agreement would be signed.

Question: Can you just explain broadly what this framework agreement is? What does it entail?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): The proposal is for supplying two European Pressurized Reactors initially, which will gradually increase to six in number. When it is called a framework agreement, it would mean that more details will have to be worked out subsequently. But it would facilitate further negotiations relating to specifics. The location of this Facility is to be in Jaitapur in Maharashtra which has been in the news recently because of the environmental clearances.

Question: What other agreements are likely to be signed?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): The agreement between AREVA and NPCIL is likely to be a commercial kind of agreement. But in addition, for all this to be facilitated, it may be necessary to have some government-to-government agreements for such arrangements, such as the confidentiality agreement and intellectual property rights, etc., which are also being looked at. In addition to agreements in the area of civil nuclear cooperation, it is possible that agreements on cooperation in space will be looked at, and as already mentioned on co-production of films, these are under consideration shall I say. Till it is actually finally ready I cannot give you an …

Question: Does space cooperation involve development of new satellites?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): The space cooperation would be in terms of what they call an Earth Systems Science and Climate Programme, which is science-oriented which would naturally have the requirement for a satellite launch. But there is already an ongoing cooperation in space, as mentioned, like Megha-Tropiques and Saral which relate to again study of climate change, ocean surface and so on. So, that is already in progress.

Official Spokesperson: I may just add that space is a very important sector of cooperation between us. ISRO and CNES have been cooperating quite closely. We have been using European satellite launch vehicles for launch of Indian satellites. There is also an agreement between Antrix Corporation and EADS Astrium for use of Indian satellite launch vehicles to launch small European satellites. So, we have a number of areas in which we are cooperating.

Question: Sir, in the area of defence is there any likelihood of new agreements?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): It is not our practice to have defence supply agreements to be signed during such high-level visits. So, there may be agreements that you mentioned which are under negotiation, but they will not be put under the pressure of a deadline for such high-level visits. So, that will have an independent process of its own. We do not anticipate any defence deals to be signed during the visit.

Question: On nuclear issue, have the issues relating to liability provisions been sorted out?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, we have already operationalised the Inter-Governmental Agreement on Civil Nuclear Cooperation, and commercial negotiations are under way. My colleague has already indicated that active negotiations are going on. So, I guess all aspects that need to be looked at have been looked at or are being looked at.

Question: You have mentioned defence. . .(Inaudible). . . the long-awaited agreement on the . . .(Inaudible). . . of the . . .(Inaudible). . . Is it not going to be signed?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): It will not be signed during the visit, but I am sure that negotiations and discussions on such programmes are ongoing. It does not require an agreement to be signed during the visit.

Official Spokesperson: And also it is not our practice to speak about the outcome before the outcome happens. You can well appreciate that till the last minute, agreements are discussed. We are in very close touch. We are energetically looking at all aspects of cooperation because it is one of our vital relationships. Therefore, my colleague and I have spent some time to take you through different facets of cooperation which are all very significant for both of us.

Question: Can we ask a couple of important questions not relating to this visit? We have this important release from the Wikileaks on Pakistan today essentially affirming India’s fears about the Army and its role vis-à-vis terror groups. Do you have a reaction to that?

Official Spokesperson: On the issue of Wikileaks I would just reiterate what I had stated yesterday that we would prefer not to comment on the issue of Wikileaks. It is basically supposed to be an account of privileged internal US Government assessments and correspondence. We have a multifaceted and forward-looking strategic cooperation with the United States. We also have regular, open and candid dialogue between the two countries on a number of issues of mutual interest. That is what would be my reaction to the issue of Wikileaks.

Question: Also anything you have heard about the residents staying here, again people ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: We have seen these reports. We will ascertain details.

Thank you.
It is a great pleasure to welcome President Nicolas Sarkozy to India. President Sarkozy's visit is the fourth in a series of high level exchanges between India and France in the last three years. This reflects the high importance that both our Governments attach to our Strategic Partnership.

The strengthening of this partnership owes a great deal to the personal commitment of President Sarkozy. It is because of his inspiring leadership and unqualified support that relations between India and France are today underpinned by warmth, dynamism, strong mutual trust and confidence.

My discussions with the President were wide-ranging and extremely productive. We have made significant progress on all issues that are part of our bilateral agenda.

In the field of nuclear energy, negotiations have reached an advanced stage to pave the way for the launching of nuclear power reactors in Jaitapur in partnership with Indian industry. Several other agreements to expand interaction in the nuclear sector to areas such as research and training of scientists and students, nuclear safety, nuclear waste management and regulatory practices have been concluded.

France is one of India's most important and reliable defence partners. We deeply appreciate France’s willingness to supply us advanced defence technologies in a way that contributes to the modernisation of our own defence industry. Counter-terrorism is a significant area of cooperation, where we are making good progress.

The areas of space, science and technology, research and development and green technologies are emerging as the new sources of growth which can drive our relationship forward in the coming years. France has been highly supportive of India's space capabilities in Europe which we value immensely.
President Sarkozy and I have renewed our determination to achieve the trade target of 12 billion Euros by 2012. We value the role being played by the India-France CEOs Forum. We will examine their recommendations on increasing investments in the energy, water and infrastructure sectors, establishment of joint ventures in third countries, and enhancing collaboration in areas of R&D and higher education.

We discussed our cooperation in the fields of education and culture. India will soon establish an Indian Cultural Centre in Paris. France will collaborate with us in the creation of a centre of excellence in the Indian Institute of Technology, Rajasthan.

I congratulated the President on France's assumption of the Chairmanship of the Group of 20. We will work closely with France to push forward the process of global economic recovery, better regulation, and financial sector reform. France has been a consistent advocate of India's permanent membership of the United Nations Security Council. It has also been an active supporter of India in other international forums, for which we are grateful.

We discussed other regional and global issues of common concern, including the situation in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Iran and Myanmar, terrorism and climate change. We have agreed to work closely with each other on all these issues during our membership of the UN Security Council.

President Sarkozy's visit has provided further impetus to our partnership and reconfirmed its strategic nature. Ours is a relationship that rests on shared democratic values and is an essential part of the global peace and development architecture.

I once again extend a very warm welcome to President Sarkozy and Mrs. Carla Bruni Sarkozy and wish them a very pleasant stay in India, a country where they have many admirers and are held in the highest esteem.
501. Joint Statement issued during the visit of French President Nicolas Sarkozy-"INDIA-FRANCE: PARTNERSHIP FOR THE FUTURE".

New Delhi, December 6, 2010.

At the invitation of the Prime Minister of India, the President of the French Republic paid a working visit to India from 4 to 7 December, 2010. Mr. Nicolas Sarkozy and Dr. Manmohan Singh had detailed and useful discussions on bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest.

Reaffirming their shared vision and values inspired by multilateralism, justice, freedom, equality and fraternity, France and India reiterated their determination and confirmed their commitment to work together towards peace and global security.

As the Strategic Partnership between France and India enters its 12th year, the French President and the Prime Minister of India, recognizing India’s growing role on the international stage, have shown their determination to give a new impetus to the Indo-French Strategic Partnership.

1. Global and regional challenges

France and India would like to work together to make the G20 as effective as possible and help it find its place within an international system that will better reflect today’s world and challenges. Monetary instability, major macroeconomic imbalances, volatility of the price of commodities including agricultural food products, development gap especially infrastructure and lack of food security are tangible threats which our two countries refuse to ignore. The G20 has become and must remain the premier forum for international economic cooperation with a view to laying new foundations for strong, sustainable and balanced growth and the international economic system. In respect of multilateral trade, the two countries are looking forward to the ambitious, comprehensive and balanced conclusion of the Doha Development Round of Negotiations in 2011.

India and France reiterated the need for in-depth reform of the United Nations, including of its Security Council, to make it more representative of today’s world. France reaffirmed its support for India to become a permanent member of an expanded Security Council without further delay.

With the French Presidency of the G20 which has just started, India's dual participation in the G20 and the Security Council for the 2010/2011 timeframe present an historic opportunity to step up joint work in these two bodies. Both countries will look to all members and groupings, including G20, to make clear support for reform of the Security Council.

France and India reaffirm their wish to continue and expand their dialogue and concrete cooperation in multilateral bodies, especially in UNSC during the 2011-2012 biennum, so as to address threats such as regional crises, terrorism, climate change and proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems, as well as to promote arms control and global disarmament.

International Terrorism is a common threat that needs to be countered jointly. Today, it has become one of the core issues in our bilateral strategic cooperation. International cross-border terrorism needs to be addressed at the global multilateral level by supporting initiatives in the framework of the United Nations such as the draft Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. We need to work together in international bodies like the FATF to counter financing of terrorism and money laundering.

France and India reaffirm their determination to work for peace, democracy and development in Afghanistan. The French President and the Indian Prime Minister welcome their countries' contribution and efforts towards the reconstruction and security of Afghanistan. The two countries underline the need for adequate development of the Afghan National Security Forces to enable Afghanistan to defend its sovereignty and independence.

They expressed concern at the continuing existence of safe havens and sanctuaries for terrorist groups beyond Afghanistan's borders and resurgence of terrorist groups. They agree that terrorism must be combated firmly by the international community. The two countries call on the neighbours of Afghanistan to play a constructive role conducive to the country's stabilization and development in its regional environment.

India and France have pledged to enhance cooperation at bilateral and global level to effectively address climate change. The two countries have decided to pursue this objective by working to achieve ambitious outcomes in Cancun in the form of balanced operational decisions on mandated issues in accordance with the Bali Road Map. France and India have also reaffirmed their determination to continue to work in the framework of the bilateral working group on environment established in 2008 which is to convene in Paris in the first quarter of 2011.

Recognizing India's non-proliferation record as well as its willingness to further contribute to global non-proliferation efforts and with a view to enhancing the international non-proliferation regime, France favors and will jointly work with India towards India's increased participation with international non-proliferation initiatives and full membership of multilateral export control regimes NSG, MTCR, AG, WA in a manner consistent with procedures and objectives of these groups.

In the context of their shared commitment to universal and general disarmament and to the reinforcement of the non-proliferation regime, India and France affirm the need for a meaningful dialogue among all states possessing nuclear weapons, in particular those holding the largest arsenals, to build trust and confidence and promote international stability, peace and security. They support international cooperative efforts to reduce the risk of terrorists acquiring nuclear weapons or material. The two countries reiterate their support to starting immediate negotiations in the Conference of Disarmament for a multilateral treaty banning the production of fissile material for use in nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices.

France and India reaffirmed their commitment to diplomacy to resolve the Iranian nuclear issue, and discussed the need for Iran to take constructive and immediate steps to meet its obligations to the IAEA and the UN Security Council.

India and France also expressed concern about the situation in the Korean peninsula and urged DPRK to comply with UNSC and IAEA BoG resolutions.

France and India will continue to support the development of relations between the EU and India more so when India and EU are enhancing cooperation as reflected in the deepening of the strategic relationship as well as the entry of the Lisbon Treaty into Force. The two countries welcome the holding of the EU-India Summit on 10 December 2010 in Brussels call for renewed efforts to achieve the mutually beneficial conclusion of the EU-India Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement.

2. Indo-French Strategic Partnership

Civil nuclear energy

The two States welcome the entry into force on 14 January 2010 of the India-France Cooperation Agreement on the Development of Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy and the signing of Agreements on the protection of Confidentiality of Technical data and information relating to cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and concerning intellectual property rights on the development of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy which supplement it.

Noting the innovative, broad-based and dynamic nature of their partnership in the field of civil nuclear energy cooperation, France and India welcome the progress towards further strengthening cooperation between the two countries including in research and development and in setting up joint nuclear power projects. In this context the signing of the General Framework Agreement between NPCIL and AREVA represents a significant milestone.

Following India’s enactment of a civil nuclear liability legislation, both countries stand ready to further exchange views on this issue so as to ensure the appropriate framework for the sound development of their cooperation.

The "Commissariat à l'Energie Atomique et aux Energies Alternatives - CEA" for France and the "Department of Atomic Energy - DAE" for India have concluded on December 6 a Cooperation Agreement in the field of Nuclear Science and Technology for peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy with the aim to establish a general framework to enhance their collaboration and signed a specific implementing agreement in the field of education and research.

The CEA expressed its interest in cooperating with India’s Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership (GCNEP), as a means to contributing to multilateral cooperative efforts to promote peaceful uses of nuclear energy.
The fight against terrorism

Terrorism strikes not only the people and the interests of our two countries but also imperils peace and stability of our respective regions and the world. We reaffirm our irrevocable condemnation of this scourge in all its forms and our will to intensify our cooperation to counter it.

Since our Joint Statement of 25 January 2008, we have aimed at intensifying bilateral consultations and exchanges with the objective of better assessing these threats and sharing relevant information. Today, we have decided to make this cooperation a priority of the Indo-French security relationship.

With the tragic losses suffered in the November 2008 terrorist attacks in Mumbai particularly in mind, we call for the active prosecution of the authors of such crimes and their accomplices, and urge that they be brought to justice expeditiously.

In our common fight against terrorism, we will continue to enhance our operational cooperation as far as possible and will seek to ensure that the widest possible measure of mutual legal assistance is rendered, and that extradition requests are processed expeditiously.

Our two governments will coordinate their endeavours in international bodies such as the Financial Action Task Force in order to define common positions and promote concrete initiatives.

In the pursuance of our efforts to strengthen the international legal framework against terrorism, we resolve to intensify our efforts to urgently conclude the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the United Nations. France and India call on all countries to become part, as a matter of urgency, of all international counter-terrorism conventions.

Both sides reiterated the importance of adhering to sanctions regime against Al Qaeda and Taliban as established by UNSCR 1267 and subsequent Resolutions and the need to preserve its credibility.

Security and defence

France and India reaffirm their common interest in continuing to strengthen their defence relationship, which is an important pillar of their Strategic Partnership and reflects their common determination to work for global peace and security.
The two States agree to continue and intensify their cooperation on counter piracy and maritime security. France and India recognize the need for an intensified cooperation in combating piracy in the Gulf of Aden and other areas.

The two states welcome the ongoing exercises between their Navies (Varuna) and Air Forces (Garuda) and have confirmed their interest towards extension of their cooperation through exercises between the two Armies.

The two States also welcome the on-going efforts and future prospects for joint programmes in defence industry, which would include joint research and development and transfer of technology. In this regard and as a first step, the two States expect to launch soon the SRSAM and Kaveri program. Discussions concerning the upgrading of Mirage 2000 aircraft are expected to be finalised soon.

Space Cooperation

Acknowledging the essential nature of cooperation in the field of space, which is a key sector for scientific cooperation between the two countries, India and France intend to broaden the scope of their exchanges and further develop their joint efforts in this field. In the spirit of the Framework Agreement signed between Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) and French National Space Agency (CNES) on a wide range of issues related to use of space for peaceful purposes, they applaud the Space establishments of both nations for the progress made in developing the Megha-Tropiques and SARAL satellites, due to be launched in 2011 timeframe.

The two governments reaffirm their determination to pursue space cooperation in the fields of Earth Observation for climate change studies and space exploration.

India and France also acknowledged the ascending trend of the industrial cooperation over the years nurtured by space industries of both countries. In this regard, they gladly welcome the recent breakthroughs made by Astrium and Antrix Corporation in the joint development and marketing of communications satellites, following their 2005 Agreement. They also welcome continuing this promising collaboration in the coming years.
3. Bilateral cooperation

Development of economic and trade exchanges

France and India welcome the outstanding development of their bilateral economic exchanges in recent years. The two countries welcome the contracts signed in the latter part of 2010 for aircraft leasing, satellite launching, biometric technology, energy and urban transportation.

Aware of the potential for the development of their bilateral exchanges and investments, and confident about the opportunities afforded by the dynamism of their economies - ranking among the leading global economies - the two governments reiterate their objective of doubling their trade exchanges in a balanced way despite the crisis, over the period 2008-2012.

Beyond that, the liberalization of exchanges provided for by the EU-India Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement, combined with ongoing cooperation in the field of civil nuclear energy and the resumption of aviation industry contracts, will further boost trade between the two countries.

France and India welcome the significant development of cross-investments between the two countries and large-scale investment by India-based French companies in the car industry, building materials, electrical equipment, public water utilities and rail transport. They also welcome prospects for Indian investments in France.

They welcome the private sector’s involvement in boosting bilateral trade and call on the Indo-French CEOs Forum to continue to play a decisive role in identifying new avenues for cooperation and facilitating the business climate between the two countries.

Cooperation in the field of Agriculture and Food Processing

France and India recognize the strategic importance of the agricultural and food processing sector in addressing the needs for affordable, healthy, high quality and sustainable food products in both countries.

They express in particular their will to double and balance exchanges of agricultural products as part of comprehensive cooperation including food products logistics, the distribution sector and agrifood research.
The two sides expressed satisfaction at the on-going cooperation between the two countries through the Indo-French Joint Working Group on Agriculture. The areas identified for further cooperation include strengthening the post-harvest management capacities (e.g. cold chains, storage...), wine/Vineyards, research and training and exchange programmes, animal identification and tracing and genetic improvement of dairy cattle breeds.

Cooperation in the field of sustainable development (town planning, transport, housing)

Both parties expressed their commitment to the continuation of bilateral exchanges in the field of standards, best practices and capacity building in order to further enhance cooperation between Indian and French institutional structures as well as business partnerships.

Cooperation in the field of human exchanges

France and India, reiterating the importance they attach to encouraging people to people contacts and human exchanges in accordance with the joint declarations of 25 January 2008 and 30 September 2008, reaffirm their determination to cooperate closely in the field of migration, with a view to encourage legal and orderly migration of students, professionals and skilled workers to each others’ country, depending on opportunities available, to assure the return to their country of illegal migrants who have been properly identified as their nationals and to combat irregular migration.

Welcoming the preliminary talks held in New Delhi in November, 2009 and which led to beginning of negotiations on a bilateral partnership agreement on migrations under this comprehensive approach to migration, the two States agreed to swiftly launch these negotiations between the two countries based on a draft text submitted by France with a view to conclude them as soon as possible.

University and scientific cooperation

The two States reaffirm their determination to pursue efforts in order to ensure that human exchanges permeate and stimulate all areas of bilateral cooperation, including in the fields of research, education and cultural exchanges. They encouraged the trend of increasing number of Indian students studying in France and French students studying in India. More than 200 framework agreements for promoting student mobility have been signed by French and Indian higher education institutions. The five scholarship programmes established under the "Quai d'Orsay / Entreprises" scheme have helped welcome 101 Indian students to the best schools and universities in France since 2006. A total of almost 400 scholarships were awarded in 2009. France and India call for an increase in bilateral student exchanges and pledge to facilitate the academic stays of French students in India and Indian students in France.

France and India support the launch of an ambitious cooperation at the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Rajasthan, which is to allow a consortium of French higher education institutions, to initiate a partnership and joint works on sustainable development and on green accounting project. This project will ultimately make it possible to incorporate the environment into the daily business of enterprises and to develop the territory and urban heritage targeted by decentralized cooperation actions.

Recognizing the essential contribution of education and scientific research to global prosperity and stability, they welcome the success of the Franco-Indian Centre for Advanced Research (CEFIPRA) which has been steering closely science and technology-related projects since 1986. They welcome the ambitious initiatives envisaged to increase its outreach and develop its partnerships. They further reiterate their common determination to strengthen Indo-French cooperation in the field of innovation. They welcomed research collaborations in the areas of solar thermal technology, ICT in health lab, systems and designs for automobiles and aerospace, robotics and control systems, art, culture and heritage restoration.

India and France recognize that with the 21st century being hailed as the century of knowledge, alliances in the knowledge economy will be critical for both countries, especially by leveraging Information and Communication Technology. Based on their shared endeavour to strengthen democracy, transparency and accountability, France and India wish to start an initiative on Democratising Information and Open Government as a way to use Information and Communication Technology to modernize the relationship between the State and the citizen.

The two governments welcome the action of the French Development Agency (AFD) which contributes through concessional financing for supporting projects in the field of renewable energies and energy efficiency, sustainable forest management and biodiversity conservation. As a key instrument of our cooperation in the field of sustainable development, the AFD’s level of intervention is to increase significantly over the next few years.

Cultural exchanges

France and India welcome the holding of the cross cultural seasons Bonjour India and Namaste France which meet the desire for understanding and exchange on the part of the Indian and French peoples. They welcome the launching of the news channel France 24 in India. They reaffirm their determination that an Indian Cultural Centre should be established at 3 Avenue de Lowendal in Paris and intend to finalize the necessary arrangements to that end.

The two governments welcome the signing of the film Co-Production Agreement which is to inspire our future joint co-operation projects in the film industry and will be viewed as an example in terms of co-production.

503. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on India-Georgia Foreign Office Consultations.

New Delhi, April 1, 2010.

India-Georgia Foreign Office Consultations were held on 29th March 2010 at New Delhi. The Indian delegation was led by Shri Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary, Eurasia Division, Ministry of External Affairs. From the Georgian side, the delegation was headed by Ms. Khatuna Salukvadze, Director, Political Department, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Georgia. The two sides discussed bilateral relations with particular focus on the possibilities of strengthening cooperation in the fields of trade, economy and culture.

Separately, on 30th March 2010, the following three Agreements (which had been in the pipeline for some time) were signed: (i) Agreement on the establishment of Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific and Technological Cooperation; (ii) Agreement on Cooperation in the fields of Culture, Education, Science, Sport and Youth; and (iii) Agreement on Cooperation in the fields of Science and Technology. The Agreements were signed by Mr. Alexander Nalbandov, Deputy Foreign Minister of Georgia, on behalf of the Government of Georgia, and Ms. Latha Reddy, Secretary (East), Ministry of External Affairs, Mr. Jawhar Sircar, Secretary (Culture) and Dr. T. Ramasami, Secretary (Science & Technology) respectively on behalf of the Government of India.
New Delhi, February 2, 2010.

Your Excellency, Dr. Horst Kohler, President of the Federal Republic of Germany, Madame Eva Luise Kohler,

Excellencies,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is a privilege to have you, Mr. President, in our midst today. I extend a very warm welcome to you and Madame Eva Luise Kohler and to the distinguished members of your delegation.

The ties between India and Germany are long standing. Some of India’s finest accomplishments in art, literature and philosophy, were introduced to Europe and to the wider world, through the great German tradition of scholarship and pursuit of academic excellence. Indologists from your country have helped many, to discover and rediscover India. As far back as 1818, the University in Bonn set up the first Department of Indology, and who can forget the pioneering work of Fredrich Max Mueller in advancing the study of Indology? The Max Mueller Bhavans have become the cultural calling card and a very popular address for Germany in India.

Today, Indo-German relations are based on shared values of democracy, pluralism, diversity and respect for individual freedoms and the rule of law.

Since the establishment of our Strategic Partnership in 2001, the relationship between India and Germany has touched new heights. We, in India, see Germany amongst our most important interlocutors and as one of the pillars of the future multilateral order. We cooperate closely in the international fora and on important issues, like the reform and expansion of the United Nations Security Council. Our cooperation extends to focused groupings such as the G-20. On issues such as the global economic crisis, international terrorism, poverty alleviation and food security among others, our political leaderships remain in touch.

We are happy at the pace and direction of our economic and commercial interactions. The global slowdown notwithstanding, we remain confident of achieving the target set during the visit of Chancellor Merkel in October 2007 to India, to raise bilateral trade to Euro 20 billion by 2012. Investments by our businesses and companies are growing in both directions. Our economic imperatives, centered on inclusive growth and sustainable development, require ambitious strategies for development of our country's infrastructure, in areas such as ports and shipping, railways and energy, and we see major opportunities for cooperation with Germany.

And going beyond, we seek to transform the parameters of our bilateral relationship in education, scientific and technological research and development and in innovation. I welcome the steps that are being taken in this area, particularly initiatives such as the Indo-German Science and Technology Centre that bring in industry partnerships for targeted research in technology and the applied sciences as well. We will be celebrating the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries in 2011. I am informed that preparations are afoot to mark this occasion with a "Year of Germany" in India and a "Year of India" in Germany in 2012.

Mr. President, we join you in celebrating this year, the 20th anniversary of German re-unification. This was a momentous achievement that caught the imagination of the world and transformed it. It threw away the shackles of an adversarial and conflict-ridden approach to international politics and opened new opportunities.

As we consider our world of tomorrow and seek a better world for our people and future generations, there is much that India and Germany can contribute together. With the quality of our human resources and the dynamism and aspirations of our youth, we will use our two nations' capacity for enterprise, innovation and research to foster a peaceful, progressive and secure world.
Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, may I request you to join me in raising a toast:-

— to the good health of His Excellency, President Dr. Horst Kohler and Madame Eva Luise Kohler; — to the prosperity and well-being of the German people; and — to friendship and cooperation between India and the Federal Republic of Germany.

505. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on collaboration between India and Germany in the Knowledge Sector and Cooperation in Infrastructure.

New Delhi, October 8, 2010.

Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce and Industry, during his 3-day (6-8 October) visit to Düsseldorf and Berlin (Germany), emphasised on the strategic partnership in innovation between India and Germany. Discussions focused on taking Indo-German collaboration forward in key areas such as knowledge sectors like ICT, energy including renewable energy, cutting edge technology including environmental and green technology, life sciences and biotechnology, nano-technologies, small city and integrated townships, besides further enhancement of ongoing cooperation in infrastructure, manufacturing and engineering.

In Düsseldorf, Shri Sharma inaugurated the "India Goes to Germany Mission" and attended interactive meetings with the Chamber of Commerce of Düsseldorf and with select CEOs besides the meetings with the Minister of Economic Affairs, Energy, Construction, Housing & Transport of the State of North Rhine Westphalia.

In Berlin, Shri Sharma held a bilateral meeting with Federal Minister of Economics & Technologies, Mr. Rainer Brüderle and also inaugurated the FICCI-Fraunhofer Roundtable on "Innovation as a Driver of Indo-German Economic Relations". Both the Ministers agreed on the establishment of a hotline between the Commerce & Industry Ministry in India and the Federal Ministry of Economics & Technology in Germany to facilitate resolution of any business-related visa issues that may arise from time-to-time. Both sides agreed on cooperating in multilateral fora on combating protectionist tendencies that have emerged recently.

Shri Sharma suggested further strengthening of institutional linkages especially between economic research and policy institutes in India and their German counterparts. Such linkages could be established between institutes such as German Institutes of Economic Research in Berlin, the Ifo Institute of Economic Research in Munich, Kiel Institute for World Economy and the Halle Institute of Economic Research Partners and, on the Indian side, the National Council of Applied Economic Research (NCAER), Indian Council for Research on International Economic Relations (ICRIER), and the Gokhle Institute of Economic and Politics in Pune. Shri Sharma also endorsed linkages between National Institutes of Design in both countries and between the Indian Institute of Foreign Trade and an appropriate German counterpart.

Shri Sharma delivered a special address as part of the Konrad Adenauer Lecture Series on "An Emerging India: Expanding Economic Frontiers" at Humboldt University.
506. Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (Europe West) on the visit of German Foreign Minister Dr. Guido Westerwelle.

New Delhi, October 15, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening and welcome to the Media Hall.

I would like to introduce my colleague Joint Secretary (Europe West) Mr. Seetharam. We would like to brief you about the official visit of the Vice-Chancellor and Foreign Minister of Germany Dr. Guido Westerwelle, who arrives on Sunday the 17th and would be here till the 19th. This would be his first official visit to India. He is accompanied by an important delegation comprising of five parliamentarians, a number of officials, businessmen and others.

Besides holding delegation-level talks with EAM the the Foreign Minister of Germany would be meeting with our Commerce and Industry Minister. He would be delivering an address at IIT Delhi. EAM would be assisted by Secretary (West) Mr. Vivek Katju; our Ambassador in Germany; Mr. Seetharam our Joint Secretary (Europe West); and a number of other officials.

As you are aware, we have warm and friendly relations with Germany. In 2001 we decided to elevate our relationship to the level of strategic partnership. Germany is also our largest trading partner in Europe. Last few years have witnessed a steady expansion of our bilateral relations especially economic ties, S&T cooperation and so on.

This relationship has been driven by regular high-level exchanges. German President Dr. Horst Kohler had paid a state visit to India in February 2010. Earlier, Chancellor Merkel was in India on a state visit in October-November 2007 when she was accompanied by a number of her Cabinet colleagues and a large business delegation.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh paid an official visit to Germany in April 2006 when he along with Chancellor Merkel inaugurated the Hannover trade fair in which India was a partner country. Prime Minister again visited Germany in June 2007 for the G8-O5 summit. He and Chancellor Merkel have been meeting regularly on the sidelines of international fora.
This year has seen the important visit already of the German Minister for Economics who came for the Joint Commission meeting. Our Commerce and Industry Minister had led a delegation of SMEs to Germany. Our parliamentary exchanges have also intensified in recent years. I mentioned that German FM is being accompanied by five parliamentarians.

Germany is the fifth largest trading partner of India besides being our largest trading partner in Europe. Bilateral trade in 2009 had crossed Euro 13 billion. Despite the global economic difficulties, the level of our trade was sustained in 2009. In the first five months of 2010, there has been a 26% increase in bilateral trade. And I may add that we are well on the way of attaining the 20 billion Euro trade target that has been set for the year 2012.

Germany is also the eighth largest investor in India. In recent years their investments have been increasing rapidly. Cumulative investments are estimated at $ 3.5 billion. We understand that another 6 billion dollars of German investments are in the pipeline. Leading auto majors like BMW, Daimler, Audi, Volkswagen have either manufacturing or assembly facilities in India. Other well-known German companies like Siemens, Bosch, Bayer, Deutsche Bank, Bombardier, etc., have a presence or have announced investments in India.

I may also note that Indian companies in recent years have been gravitating towards Germany in numbers. In particular I would like to mention Bharat Forge, Ranbaxy, Dr. Reddy’s Laboratories, NIIT, Mahindra, Reliance and Biocon. As such leading lights of Indian industry are heading towards Germany, have acquired German companies or have established subsidiaries.

The momentum to our economic and trade ties is provided by the Joint Commission on Industrial and Economic Cooperation which is led by our Finance Minister and the German Minister for Economics and Technology. This very important forum, has been meeting every two years. The 17th session, was held in New Delhi on 23rd September 10. They have been particularly focusing on sectors like infrastructure, coal, automotives, vocational education - vocational education and training is another very important sector of cooperation for us - and other areas.
During the visit of Chancellor Merkel in October 2007, S&T was termed as a central pillar of our strategic partnership. Our S&T dates back to 1971. We already have more than 150 joint S&T research projects and a number of direct partnerships between our universities. Good work is being done in sectors like nano materials, space and sustainable development.

You would recall that during her state visit to India in 2007 Chancellor Merkel and Prime Minister flagged off the Indo-German Science Express on the 30th of October, which visited 56 towns and cities in India. PM had described it as a symbol of our new relationship with the ‘superpower of technology in the world’. Defence cooperation is yet another area which holds promise.

We have traditionally enjoyed close cultural ties. For the last few years five ICCR rotating Chairs are being set up in different German universities, and we also find a growing interest in Bollywood. To mark the 60th anniversary of establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries - I may note here that India was one of the first countries in the world to recognise FRG after the World War II - a Festival of Germany will be held in India in 2011, next year. The following year we expect to have a gala Festival of India in Germany.

We are fellow G4 countries and have a similarity of views and hold consultations on a regular basis on global issues of mutual interest. Both Germany and India have just been elected as non-permanent members of the UN Security Council for the years 2011 and 2012. India and Germany are also members of G20. In addition, we find considerable potential for increasing synergies in sectors like renewable energy, IT, biotechnology, the small and medium enterprises, infrastructure and entertainment.

We greatly value our strategic partnership, our relationship with Germany. EAM and German FM would be holding in-depth consultations on bilateral issues to expand, to add more dynamism to all facets of our cooperation. They will also have an exchange of views on regional and international issues of mutual interest.

My colleague and I will be happy to take questions relating to the visit of the Vice-Chancellor and Foreign Minister of Germany. Thank you.
Question: Our strategic relations with Germany, what does it entail basically? What do we talk about there? On terrorism and what else? What is there of mutual interest between India and Germany? What will be on the table this time apart from business?

Official Spokesperson: We have a very broad canvas of bilateral cooperation. Therefore, I gave you a feel of the relationship. While trade and economic aspects are very important so are, science and technology, vocational training, energy, investments, defence and cultural. Then, we have a similarity of views on global issues, whether it is terrorism or on other aspects. As fellow members of G4 we are consulting closely, we are working closely. Both the countries are going to be, non-permanent members of the Security Council. My colleague may like to add more.

Joint Secretary (Europe West) (Shri T.P. Seetharam): We have strategic partnerships with several countries for instance UK, France and Germany. That encompasses a very broad range, as was just mentioned by Vishnu. It is not only economic, economic issues are important, technology is a very important component in our relationship with Germany. As you know, their technological capabilities are very well-known. Training of our people, upgradation of skills, is again something Germany has an excellent system of training their people in terms of vocational training. That is something that we require if we are to maintain high growth rates we need to have employable skilled people of a very large number. So, that is an area where we can work together. Defence, of course, energy, renewable energy sectors, green technologies, it is a very broad area. Most critically, we will both be on the UN Security Council initially temporarily, hopefully in the long-term permanently.

Question: Can you tell us something more about the UNSC expansion programme with Germany and India? Also, what is the stand of other two permanent members that come under your Division regarding the election? I am referring to France and UK.

Joint Secretary (EW): We already have the support of several countries. France and UK have already indicated their support for India's permanent membership. Germany being part of G4 is part of a coordinated effort for that permanent membership. So, we are working towards that. But as you know, we require the support of all five permanent members before we see results.

Official Spokesperson: And you are already aware of the details. India has just been elected with one of the highest ever numbers of 187 votes. Text-based inter-governmental negotiations have already commenced in UNGA. We believe that we have impeccable credentials for playing the role and assuming the responsibilities as a permanent member of the UN Security Council. We are engaging with our G4 friends and all our interlocutors in order to achieve that objective as soon as possible.

Question: You have already answered this question in a certain sense. But in the past few weeks, Europe and particularly Germany have had very specific terror alerts - the Hamburg cell being restarted as well as Paris and other cities being under threat. At the same time India had faced a certain threat perception over the Commonwealth Games. How much is that kind of terror alerts, cooperating on terror, intelligence going to be a part, if any, of this?

Joint Secretary (EW): To counter terrorism and working jointly to deal with the threats of terrorism is very much part of our strategic relationship. That can take many forms whether it is financing of terrorism which requires joint working together, sharing of information real time, and very close interaction between the agencies which are actually engaged in this kind of work. All that is part of our framework for cooperation. There is also the support that we seek in the United Nations framework for the Comprehensive Convention on Internal Terrorism (CCIT). This is again an area in which we work together. Wherever there is information on specific impending threats, there again it is a question of sharing of information and the agencies working very closely with each other. There will be, of course, meetings between the National Security Advisors also on a regular basis which is part of the structure of any strategic relationship.

Question: You said defence cooperation holds promise. I would like to know if we have some kind of sophisticated armaments supply from Germany.
Joint Secretary (EW): Yes, definitely there is already cooperation in defence areas. But this is an area where there is always room for more given our future plans, as you are aware, in various fields. So, there is ongoing cooperation but there are prospects for far more given their technological capabilities. Here we are not looking merely at acquisition of equipment but joint production and joint research and development, so that there is actual transfer of technology which is crucial for us.

Official Spokesperson: I would just like to add here that a framework for annual consultations for defence cooperation was concluded in 2006. Under that framework we have had regular exchanges including that of the Service Chiefs, consultations and training. Again, like with any other major country, we have a broad canvas and are looking at different aspects of cooperation in the area of defence and security.

Question: What is the trade basket of exports from India? Earlier textiles was something like 63 per cent.

Joint Secretary (Europe West): Major Indian exports, a lot of it is traditional, are cotton and textile products, leather and leather products, chemicals, pharmaceuticals, metal products and more recently automobile components. Textiles still remain significant portion of our exports. Nontraditional exports include electrical goods, electronics, automobile components which have been increasing its portion. Imports to India are very obvious - machinery, electro-technical goods, aircraft, metal goods, chemicals and automobile components for the large investment in the auto sector that they have in India.

Question: Is there a likelihood of any agreements being signed during the visit on defence cooperation? Business delegation is also there.

Official Spokesperson: You know the standard operating procedure. We will certainly let you know of the agreements signed once they are concluded.

Question: Sir, just recently we finished the Indo-French Strategic Cooperation dialogue where you sort of briefed them about the performance of the Rafale. Now that the German Foreign Minister is going to be here and this issue is going to come up, will you brief them about the performance of the Typhoon?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): Actually the Ministry of External Affairs does not brief them about the performance of such specialized equipment. I think the Ministry of Defence is conducting its tests and evaluations, and they would be the ones who should be doing that.

Question: But you already have during the Strategic Dialogue. So, I was wondering if similar ...

Official Spokesperson: All aspects of cooperation that the Ministry of External Affairs is engaged in, we have tried to give you a feel for that. Thank you very much.

507. Media Briefing by Secretary (West) Vivek Katju on the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Belgium for the India-EU Summit and Germany.

New Delhi, December 7, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. As you are aware, Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh will be leaving shortly for Brussels to participate in the 11th India-EU Summit, and also to hold a bilateral summit meeting with his Belgian counterpart. The Prime Minister of India would also be going to Berlin for a summit meeting with Chancellor Merkel.

Secretary (West) Shri Vivek Katju is here to brief you about the important visit of the Prime Minister of India. I would also like to introduce my colleague Mr. T.P. Seetharam, Joint Secretary (Europe West) who is to the right of Secretary (West). I will invite Secretary (West) to make an opening statement. Thereafter, he will be very happy to take a few questions.

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. I have a brief introductory statement.
Hon'ble Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh is visiting Belgium for the 11th India-European Union Summit which is being held in Brussels on December 10, 2010. The EU side will be represented at the Summit by Mr. Herman Van Rompuy, President of the European Council and Mr. Jose Barroso, President of the European Commission. Prime Minister will also have a bilateral meeting with the Belgium Prime Minister Yves Leterme in Brussels on the same day. On December 11, 2010, Prime Minister will visit Germany where he will have meetings with the German President H.E. Christian Wulff and with Chancellor Angela Merkel.

The 11th India-EU Summit is the first to be held after the Lisbon Treaty came into force on December 1, 2009. It will provide an occasion to discuss the expansion of the India-EU engagement as EU itself evolves and takes on more and diverse responsibilities. The leaders will hold discussions on bilateral, regional and global issues of mutual concern.

The India-EU engagement is rooted in the shared values of democracy, the rule of law and respect for fundamental rights and civil liberties. These values and commitments are reflected in the India-EU interaction at different levels, including governmental, institutional and people to people. India-EU relations cover political, economic, commercial, cultural, educational, science & technology, transportation, energy among other areas. They have expanded significantly over the years and especially since the First India-EU Summit which was held in Lisbon in 2000. At that Summit, a decision was taken to hold annual Summits. It will not be out of place to recall that India and EU decided to elevate their relationship to the level of strategic partnership at the Fifth Summit in 2004. A Joint Action Plan, setting out a road map for India-EU interaction and diverse sectors, was adopted at the Sixth Summit in 2005.

EU is an important trading partner of India and also a significant source of investment. The bilateral trade in goods in 2009 was $53 billion in value while services traded in the same year at $16.3 billion. The two sides have been in discussion to conclude a Broad-Based Trade and Investment agreement. Negotiations are progressing well and we are hopeful of concluding the agreement in early 2011.

An India-EU Business Summit will be held on the margins of the Summit on the theme "EU-India Partnership Opportunities for Sustainable Development”. It would have 2 sessions on “Clean Technologies in Energy” and “Transport and Infrastructure” and a CEO Round Table on “Growth and Partnership Opportunities”.

A Joint Declaration on culture is expected to be signed between the Department of Culture and the EU Commission.

Our relations with Belgium are cordial and friendly and there has been regular interaction at the highest levels. The King of Belgium visited India in November 2008. The Crown Prince of Belgium has visited India four times, most recently in March 2010 leading a large business delegation. The Prime Minister of Belgium Guy Verhofstadt had visited India in November 2006. During his visit to Brussels to attend the ASEM Summit in October 2010, the Vice President of India had a bilateral meeting with the Prime Minister of Belgium.

Bilateral trade turnover is about US$ 7 billion, of which 75% is in diamonds. Several Indian companies, particularly in IT and software sectors, such as Aricent, HCL, TCS and Infosys have established a base in Belgium.

There is potential for diversification of trade, cooperation in the field of transport, and in steel, bio-technology and pharmaceuticals, aeronautics, science and technology, automotive parts etc. There is potential to develop investment in areas such as energy, ports, construction, banking and finance, solar energy and bio-technology.

India and Germany have traditionally enjoyed warm and friendly relations. The strategic partnership forged between the two countries in 2001 has further strengthened the ties. There has been close interaction between the leadership of the two countries over the past few years. PM last visited Germany for G8+5 Summit at Heiligendamm in June 2007, Chancellor Merkel visited India in October, 2007. Former German president Dr. Horst Koehler visited India in February 2010. German Foreign Minister, Dr. Guido Westerwelle visited India in October, 2010. This will be PM’s third visit to Germany after April 2006 (when India was partner country at the Hanover Fair) and June, 2007 (G 8+5 Summit).

The talks of PM with the German leadership are expected to focus on bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of mutual concern.
The Indo-German relations are also marked by rapidly growing economic and trade ties. Germany is our largest trading partner in EU, one of the top investors and a source of technology. Bilateral trade has been growing in the recent years to reach Euro 13.4 billion in 2008, in 2009, due to global economic crisis, it decreased marginally to Euro 13.09 billion. This year, bilateral trade has revived and is growing by over 15% and has reached Euro 9.80 billion during January-August, 2010. Germany was the eighth largest investor in India in 2009 with FDI inflows of US$ 599.93 million. For the period April, 2000 - August 2010, Germany was the eighth largest investor cumulatively with FDI inflows of US$ 2868 million.

India and Germany cooperate well in various multilateral fora such as G4 and G20 and have close consultations and engagements through institutionalized dialogue mechanisms in areas as diverse as energy, vocational education, urban infrastructure, health and science & technology. PM’s forthcoming visit to Germany will further enhance our strategic partnership.

Question: Sir. My first question is, would the Prime Minister and Chancellor Merkel be discussing in some detail their strategy for pushing forward the G4 bid at the UN? Related to this, we have heard Obama endorse India’s candidature as a permanent member in a reformed Security Council. Such an endorsement for Germany has not come through from the US side. Does India believe that Germany could be a bit of a drag in the joint campaign?

Secretary (West): India and Germany are firm partners in the G4 process. When the two leaders meet they will be discussing a host of issues. Certainly, the reform of the Security Council is an important international issue presently.

Question: Sir, can you give us an idea of where exactly the FTA talks are? You have just mentioned that it is early next year that we would be looking at an agreement. Which are the areas where there are possible impediments?

Secretary (West): Negotiations are in progress on the Bilateral Trade and Investment Agreement. I do not think it will be proper to discuss various aspects of the negotiations when these are in progress. There has to be certain confidentiality in the process.
Question: I was just going to ask that if the FTA comes through early next year, as you said, what would be the enhanced trade and investment between India and Europe that is expected to flow out of it?

Secretary (West): I think it is our expectation that the BPIA, as we call it, will reach a conclusion, as I said, in early 2011. Some estimates indicate that the level of bilateral trade well might go up to Euro 100 billion. Certainly it will be a big fillip to the trade.

Question: What are the areas that are still awaiting agreement in the FTA?

Secretary (West): I have already answered that question that there is certain confidentiality to the process of negotiations and that confidentiality be maintained. The negotiations are going well. They are making progress. There has been a fairly regular and good contact between the negotiators. I will stop at this.

Question: The sectors?

Secretary (West): I will not go beyond what I said.

Question: Is there any proposal to have a nuclear agreement with Germany?

Secretary (West): There is no specific proposal on this issue. But, you are aware that the Germans played an important role in the discussions that took place leading to the NSG decision which enabled India to become a full participant in the civil nuclear energy matters.

Question: Will international terrorism or Indo-Pak relationship be discussed?

Secretary (West): I think international terrorism is a very significant issue these days. It is an issue of world-wide concern. And certainly when leaders meet there is a focus on all issues of international concern.

Question: And Indo-Pakistan relations?

Secretary (West): India-Pakistan relations are bilateral relations. But it is also possible and it happens that when leaders meet, then discussions about the regions where countries are situated are discussed.
Question: Sir, I have a question on a different subject. Could you please give us your response on the statements recently made by Gen. Musharraf in a TV interview about you being responsible for the failure of Agra Summit?

Secretary (West): Yes, I have seen that statement.

Question: Are you amused? How do you react?

Secretary (West): I will only say that I have seen that.

Thank you.

508. Statement by the Prime Minister before his departure for Belgium for the India-EU Summit and Germany.

New Delhi, December 9, 2010.

I leave today on a visit to Belgium and Germany. In Brussels, I will attend the 11th India-EU Summit jointly hosted by the President of the European Council, Mr. Herman Van Rompuy, and the President of the European Commission, Mr. Jose Manuel Barroso. India and the European Union have a Strategic Partnership, with Annual Summits and a Joint Action Plan reflecting the intensity and breadth of our interaction.

Our partnership with the European Union has evolved from economic and development cooperation to a broader strategic engagement. This will be the first India-EU Summit since the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty of the European Union which recast its structures for strengthening the European Union's external relations. India welcomes the enhanced role that the European Union seeks to play in global affairs pursuant to this Treaty.

India and European Union share common values of democracy, pluralism, tolerance, the rule of law, respect for fundamental human rights, freedom of the press and independence of the judiciary. There is a high degree of convergence of our views on global issues. I will seek to deepen our political and strategic cooperation, including in the area of counter terrorism and other non-traditional threats to security.

The European Union is India's largest trading partner and a significant source of investment and technology. It is also increasingly a destination for Indian investment. Negotiations on a Broad Based Trade and Investment Agreement are underway, and we hope to review the progress of the negotiations during the Summit.

I will also attend the India-Belgium Summit in Brussels at the invitation of Prime Minister of Belgium, Mr. Yves Leterme. Belgium is a key partner in Europe, and has been supportive of India on issues of importance to us. Our discussions will explore ways of diversifying our trade basket and promoting cooperation in high-technology sectors.

I will pay a working visit to Germany at the invitation of the Chancellor of Germany, Mrs. Angela Merkel. Our engagement with Germany is strong and multi-faceted. I look forward to reviewing with Chancellor Merkel the developments in our bilateral cooperation in the areas of high technology, trade, investment, energy, education, vocational training, skills development and culture. I look forward to the opportunity of meeting the President of Germany, Mr. Christian Wulff. Germany and India will serve together on the United Nations Security Council as non-permanent members during 2012-13.

My discussions in both Belgium and Germany will also include a review of the major regional and global issues we face today. These include the situation in Afghanistan and climate change, as well as the state of the global economy and the role of the G-20 in the recovery process.
Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Joint Press Interaction in Berlin.

Your Excellency Chancellor Merkel,

Ladies and Gentlemen

I thank Chancellor Merkel for her very warm words and for her gracious hospitality. It is a great pleasure for me to visit Germany once again, and to meet with Chancellor Merkel. I have great personal admiration for Chancellor Merkel and for her leadership.

India's relations with Germany are excellent. There are no bilateral irritants and I believe that the sky is the limit for our cooperation. This happy state of affairs has been made possible due to the Chancellor's personal guidance of our partnership, for which we are most grateful.

Germany is the economic powerhouse of Europe, and India's largest trading partner in Europe. It is playing a key role in ensuring financial stability and economic recovery in the Eurozone. I conveyed India's full support to Chancellor Merkel in this endeavour.

The economic resurgence of Europe is critical for a balanced recovery of the global economy. We have agreed to continue our close consultations within the G-20 framework to work towards such an outcome.

India and Germany will both be on the United Nations Security Council in 2011 and 2012. We will work closely with Germany both bilaterally and within the G-4, to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council, as well as in support of the expansion of the permanent and non-permanent categories of its membership.

The world must continue to build upon the progress has been made at the Cancun Conference on Climate Change. India will play its part in arriving at a pragmatic and balanced solution within the framework of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change.

On the bilateral side, we deeply value Germany’s consistent support, including in the Nuclear Suppliers Group, for the opening of international commerce for India in the field of civil nuclear energy. We have discussed the possibilities of entering into bilateral cooperation in civil nuclear energy.

German excellence in the manufacturing and infrastructure sectors is well known. We welcome the steady growth of German investments in India. Despite the economic downturn, we are hopeful that the target of achieving bilateral trade of 20 billion Euros by 2012 will be achieved.

There is vast untapped potential for high technology trade between India and Germany, and I conveyed to Chancellor Merkel that relaxation of German export control laws will open new horizons for such trade. This will be to our mutual benefit.

In 2007, we had identified science and technology as a central pillar of our partnership. We have agreed today to continue to enhance our cooperation in the fields of higher education and renewable energy and energy efficiency.

Vocational training and skill development has emerged as a high priority for our Government. It is critical for the success of our socio-economic development plans. We have chosen Germany as our preferred partner in this field and I am happy to announce that we have agreed to significantly scale up our cooperation in this sector.

Next year marks the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and Germany. Germany will organize a Year of Germany in India beginning September 2011, and India will organize the Days of India in Germany during 2012-13. I have invited Chancellor Merkel to visit India next year, and I look forward to hosting her in Delhi.

Relations between our two countries are based on the strong foundations of shared values of freedom, democracy and respect for fundamental rights. Our strategic partnership has evolved tremendously in recent years. I look forward to working with Chancellor Merkel to further strengthen and deepen this partnership.

Thank you

512. Address by Vice President M. Hamid Ansari at the Presentation of the Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding for the year 2007 to the President of Iceland Dr. Olafur Ragnar Grimsson.

New Delhi, January 14, 2010.

I had the privilege as the Chairman of the jury of this Award, to be part of the unanimous decision of the members of the Jury to confer the Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding for the year 2007 on H.E. Dr. Olafur Ragnar Grimsson, President of Iceland.

It is indeed a great honour to have you, President Grimsson, in our midst today to receive this prestigious Award that bears the name of the great statesman and architect of modern India, Jawaharlal Nehru. Time, Nehru once said, “is not measured by the passing of years but by what one does, what one feels, and what one achieves”. It is by a similar yardstick that you have been found worthy of this award.

You had first visited India as a young parliamentarian in 1983 and have ever since been closely associated with India and her leadership and in promoting true international understanding. We have witnessed your exemplary work in building international peace and understanding as the Chairman and later the International President of the Association of Parliamentarians for Global Action, in the Six Nations Peace Initiative as well as your significant contribution to the Parliamentary Conference of the Council of Europe which created the basis for work on North-South relations.

You have brought together elected representatives from over a hundred parliaments around the world to focus their energies and talents on issues of global concern such as peace, democracy, rule of law, human rights, sustainable development and population issues.

You have by your personal example encouraged political leaders to go beyond the issues that divide peoples and parties to demonstrate statesmanship in the interest of our common good.
You lead a nation that is reputed for its valuable role in promoting democracy in the world.

Excellency

Jawaharlal Nehru engaged in the task of consolidating democracy in the fledgling republic by drafting necessary constitutional and statutory provisions, creating and respecting democratic institutions and scrupulously ensuring that a developing country such as India did not lapse into the temptation of dictatorship. You have over the years similarly and consistently pursued your commitment to democratic practice, global peace and freedom.

I now invite the Director General of the Indian Council of Cultural Relations and Secretary of the Jury of the Award to read the citation and request the President of India to present the Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding for the year 2007 to H.E. Dr. Olafur Ragnar Grimsson, President of Iceland.

５１３．Speech by President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Banquet in honour of the President of Iceland Olafur Ragnar Grimsson.

New Delhi, January 14, 2010.

Your Excellency President Olafur Ragnar Grimsson,

Madame Dorrit Moussaieff,

Distinguished Guests,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is with immense pleasure that I welcome you and Madame Dorrit Moussaieff as well as your delegation to India.

Mr. President, you are a long-time friend of India. We have with great respect and admiration observed your deep knowledge and interest in our country.
You have personally played an important and active role in promoting friendship between our two countries from the early 1980s, as the President of the Iceland-India Friendship Society.

In the words of Har, in the Norse Poems of EDDA,

“If you know that you have a friend and that he is true, and that you will get good from him, share your mind with him, exchange sincere thoughts, and visit him often”

Mr. President, we are delighted to have you, our friend, in our midst once again. We are particularly happy that you are with us as the recipient of the Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru had a unique role in the making of India as a nation and how India is perceived by the world. He constantly strove for establishing harmony amongst countries. By accepting the Award that bears his name, Mr. President, you have honoured the memory of that great Indian visionary and statesman, who has a special place in our hearts. We also recall that you earlier received, on behalf of the Parliamentarians for Global Action, the first Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development. You richly deserve the awards conferred on you.

It is also deeply satisfying that our two countries have had a very friendly and warm relationship. Iceland is acknowledged as the world's oldest functioning democracy and India as the world's largest democracy. We share the cherished values of democracy, human rights and personal freedoms and hold similar views on a wide variety of regional and international issues.

Iceland which was classified as a developing country until the 1970s, today occupies a high rank in the global Human Development Index. This remarkable achievement has made Iceland a model for the world, to learn about how innovation and renewable energy can improve the economy and environment, in a single generation. Mr. President, your deep commitment to environmentally friendly measures has played a significant role in this. Iceland’s achievements in Science and Technology cover a wide spectrum from genome mapping to hydrogen cell research. India has also had successes in agriculture, Information Technology, pharmaceuticals and space research, among others. We are confident that your visit will further enhance our relations by strengthening bilateral trade and investment, as well as by opening up new mutually beneficial opportunities for both our countries.

We believe that our cultural, educational and youth exchanges should be expanded. The splendours of nature that Iceland is gifted with, coupled with our traditional and holistic health approaches such as Ayurveda, can create a new dimension in the area of wellness tourism. Mr. President, the major role you have played in the international drug prevention campaign, can contribute to promoting the cause of the well being of our peoples.

Both India and Iceland are committed to the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations. We believe that there is an urgent need to reform the United Nations, to make it more in unison with contemporary realities. We greatly value Iceland's support for our just aspirations to be represented in a reformed United Nations Security Council.

We deeply appreciate Iceland's unequivocal condemnation of the terrorist attacks in Mumbai in November 2008. International terrorism poses a major threat to global peace and security. The international community must fight the scourge of terrorism unitedly.

Mr. President, we look forward to continued friendship and cooperation with you and your country, to further strengthen our relationship and to open up new vistas of further opportunities of working together. It is significant that you are with us on a day when we are observing Makar Sankranti in India, a festival in which we rejoice as we celebrate friendship and mutual understanding. We traditionally share sesame sweets as tokens of goodwill. I invite all to taste the sesame sweets on the table, as a symbol of friendship between our two countries.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, join me in a toast to:-

— the health and well being of President Olafur Ragnar Grimsson and Madame Dorrit Moussaieff;

— the progress and prosperity of the friendly people of Iceland; and — friendship and cooperation between India and Iceland.

514. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs during the visit of the President of Iceland.

New Delhi, January 15, 2010.

President of Iceland, H.E. Dr. Olafur Ragnar Grimsson and First Lady, Mrs. Dorrit Moussaieff are on a State visit to India from January 11-17, 2010. He is accompanied by a 20-member strong business delegation of prominent Icelandic companies. President Grimsson arrived in Mumbai on 11th January, 2010 where he met the Hon'ble Governor of Maharashtra and had meetings with Indian businessmen and industrialists.

On 14th January, 2010 President Grimsson had meetings with Hon'ble Rashtrapati, Vice President, Prime Minister, External Affairs Minister, Leader of Opposition and Chairman of UPA. He was also conferred the Jawaharlal Nehru Award for International Understanding for the year 2007 by Rashtrapati. A State Banquet was hosted by Rashtrapati in honour of President Grimsson. President of Iceland also participated in a workshop on renewable energy and paid a visit to Jawaharlal Nehru University.

In their meeting, Prime Minister and President Grimsson discussed bilateral and international issues, including cooperation in the field of geo-thermal energy, IT, carbon sequestration and recycling, glaciological studies, earthquake prediction and, oil exploration by Indian companies of Iceland's coast. They also discussed the way forward on Climate Change after the COP-15 Conference.

President Grimsson now travels to Bangalore where he will meet Hon'ble Governor of Karnataka and also visit the facilities of some Indian companies, including Wipro. President of Iceland will depart from India on 17th January, 2010.
KOSOVO

New Delhi, August 8, 2010.

In response to query on Unilateral Declaration of Independence by Kosovo, the Official Spokesperson said, “We are studying the Opinion of the ICJ (International Court of Justice) on the Kosovo issue. Our position on Kosovo’s UDI (Unilateral Declaration of Independence) has not changed.”

NETHERLANDS

516. Press Release issued by the Embassy of India in the Hague on the MoU signed between Indian Council for Cultural Relations and the LEIDEN UNIVERSITY, Netherlands for establishment of Council’s Long-Term Chair for the study of Contemporary India.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and Leiden University, The Netherlands signed on June 3rd, 2010 a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) for establishment of Council’s Long-Term Chair for the study of Contemporary India at the Leiden University, The Netherlands. The Chair will function under the aegis of the LEI Faculty of Humanities. H.E. Mr. MANBIR SINGH, Ambassador of India in the Netherlands on behalf of ICCR and Prof. Mr. P.F. VAN DER HEIJDEN, Rector Magnificus and President on behalf of the Leiden University, signed the MoU.

Under the terms of agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the University, shall appoint a suitable Indian academician to hold the Chair for a period of two years. During his/her term, the Chair would contribute to the academic life of the University by engaging in teaching, research and mentoring at various levels. The Chair would commence from September, 2011. The MoU would remain valid for five years until June, 2017.
Leiden University is the oldest and foremost amongst the institutions of higher learning in the Netherlands with over 18,000 students. Leiden University has a unique combination of excellence in the fields of international law, political science, and a specialized department of South Asian Studies with a focus on India through the unique Kern Institute. It has an international reputation as a leading research university. This makes Leiden University an ideal Dutch partner to host an India Chair in the politics and economy of modern India. The establishment of Chair of Contemporary Indian Studies would be an important step in furthering ICCR’s larger mandate of fostering and strengthening educational and cultural bonds and towards enhancing academic knowledge and awareness about India, through exchange of academicians.

New Delhi, March 2, 2010.

Please see Document No.265.
Condolence Message of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the death of Polish President Lech Kaczynski in an air crash.

New Delhi, April 11, 2010.

"I have received with great shock and sadness the news about the death of President Lech Kaczynski, in a plane crash today. In President Kaczynski’s death, Poland has lost an outstanding statesman. It is a special loss to India as President Kaczynski was personally committed to strengthening bilateral ties between our two countries. India mourns with you at this tragic hour.

On behalf of the Government and the people of India and, on my own behalf, I extend my deepest condolences to Your Excellency and to the friendly people of Poland at this most unfortunate and grievous loss."

Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (Central Europe) on the visit of Polish Prime Minister.

New Delhi, September 6, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon.

Today, my colleague Mrs. Banashri Bose Harrison, who is the Joint Secretary (Central Europe), and I would like to brief you about the visit of the Polish Prime Minister His Excellency Donald Tusk, who is already here on a state visit at the invitation of the Prime Minister of India along with his spouse. He arrived today morning in Bangalore.

Let me take you through his programme. He would be meeting with the Governor. He would also be inaugurating and addressing a session of the India-Polish business organizations. This evening he comes to New Delhi.
Tomorrow, there is the ceremonial reception at the forecourt of Rashtrapati Bhavan by the Prime Minister of India.

There will be calls on him by the External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna; Leader of Opposition Shrimati Sushma Swaraj. He calls on the President of India and the Vice-President of India. There is a meeting with the Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi. Later in the evening tomorrow, he would hold delegation-level talks with Prime Minister, who is also hosting a banquet in the honour of the visiting dignitary, his spouse and the delegation. The day after he visits Agra, and thereafter he departs from New Delhi.

His delegation includes, besides his spouse, the Ambassador of Poland; the Head of Prime Minister's Office Mr. Arabsky; senior officials from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Economy, Ministry of Defence, Foreign Investment Agency, and so on.

Joint Secretary (Central Europe) (Shrimati Banashri Bose Harrison): The Indian Delegation for the talks will include our Defence Minister. It includes Commerce and Industry Minister. Of course it includes the External Affairs Minister. And it also includes other senior officials, including Culture Secretary because the only agreement which will be signed, though there were several in the pipeline, is the cultural exchange programme tomorrow.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you. We are both flourishing democracies. India-Poland relations are deep-rooted; have been traditionally close and friendly. These contacts have been nurtured by regular people-to-people exchanges and close cultural interactions which date back to the 15th century.

We appreciate by the strong tradition of Indology that has prevailed in Poland. Polish people have always evinced interest in Indian culture, spirituality and traditions. Polish scholars have been visiting India over the centuries to study Sanskrit, religion, philosophy; and some Sanskrit classics have been translated into Polish.

The first Chair of Sanskrit studies was established in Krakow more than a century ago in 1893. The Indology Department in the Oriental Institute of the University of Warsaw has been functioning since 1932. Our Indian Council for Cultural Relations has been supporting the Chair and been sending teachers for Hindi and Tamil. Chairs on Indian studies have also been established in other cities of Poland. Similarly, Polish is being taught in Delhi University since 2009.

We established diplomatic relations in 1954, and the ties have flourished over the decades. We have had regular high-level exchanges. The President of India, paid a state visit to Poland in April last year, when amongst others she also met with Prime Minister Tusk. A Parliamentary Friendship Group has been constituted between the two countries.

Poland, is also our largest trading partner and export destination in the Central-European region. It has been a member of EU since 2004, and is one of the important gateways into the European Union and CIS. By the way, Poland will assume the Presidency of EU in the second half of 2011.

Our bilateral trade has maintained an upward trajectory, having grown seven times in the last ten years. It touched an all-time high of over 1.2 billion dollars in 2008, but dipped slightly in 2009 due to global economic downturn.

More than 20 Indian companies, have invested in Poland. These include Videocon, Escorts, Reliance, Ranbaxy, Essel Propac. In IT services, all our IT majors are there including Infosys, TCS. We have Tata Tetley, Berger Paints, Arcolabs, and so on, just to give you a few examples which are indicative of the robust economic and trade relations between India and Poland.

Polish companies too have manufacturing facilities in India in areas like hygiene and sanitary products, metal packaging, air-conditioning systems; and they have been offering services in oil exploration and extraction.

A number of important bilateral agreements underpin our relationship. These include the Bilateral Promotion and Protection Agreement on investments, the Double Taxation Avoidance Agreement, an extradition treaty, a defence cooperation agreement and agreement on science and technology.

Currently, we have good cooperation in other important sectors like science and technology, defence, culture, people-to-people exchanges. And there is good potential which both sides want to harness, in furthering cooperation in areas like energy, engineering, mining, and so on.
Our agreement on science and technology cooperation was signed in 1993 and is doing well. Our Defence Minister visited Poland in November 2004 when a Joint Working Group of Defence Cooperation was established and has been meeting regularly. The last meeting took place in Warsaw in April this year.

We have also a cultural exchange programme. I have already alluded to some of the important facets of our cultural exchanges. Interestingly we find that Bollywood is becoming popular in Poland.

Poland has also committed support for our candidature of the permanent membership of the UNSC. During this important visit, Prime Minister Tusk and the Prime Minister of India with their Delegations, will hold in-depth exchange of views on robust bilateral relations and also discuss bilateral and multilateral issues of mutual interest.

Thank you. We will be happy to take a few questions.

Question: Can you tell us more about bilateral defense cooperation?

Joint Secretary (Central Europe): Defence cooperation with Poland began in early 1970s when, as you know, much of our defence equipment is of Soviet origin. So, Poland had at that time supplied us spares as well as technology for maintaining and upgrading several kinds of equipment, including something that they are currently interested in supplying to us also is tank recovery vehicles. They have expertise also in aircraft, some specific kinds of Soviet aircraft, again for which the upgradation technology as well as maintenance technology is something that Poland has.

I would like to mention a particular positive feature that Poland, unlike some of our business partners, is not interested only in selling the equipment to us but is also ready to have joint ventures and transfer technology. A Polish company is in collaboration already with an Indian company for some items and there are discussions under way for expanding that cooperation further.

Question: Are there any agreements expected to be signed in the defence area? What other agreements are expected to be signed during the visit?

Joint Secretary (Central Europe): None in defence. While there are a number of agreements on the table, the one agreement which will be signed during the visit is the cultural exchange programme for 2010 to 2012. In the area of defence, as my colleague mentioned, after 2004 a Defence Working Group has been established which has been discussing cooperation in various fields including, I would like to highlight, training which is under way.

Official Spokesperson: Just to add here, this is ongoing cooperation. The fifth round of JWG discussions had taken place in Warsaw in April this year.

Question: Madam, you just mentioned about an Indian company being in discussion with a Polish company for defence equipment. Can you give us some details what this equipment is and at what stage we are? About the tank recovery vehicle, has New Delhi sent any request for information? Is there any RFP in the pipeline?

Joint Secretary (Central Europe): As you are aware, I think it would not be appropriate for me to mention the names of any companies in a government briefing.

Question: You said that defence cooperation would be expanded to other areas. Can you tell us to which other areas defence cooperation is likely to be expanded?

Official Spokesperson: I think my colleague and I have already covered this matter at some length. We have an important relationship, a multifaceted relationship, of which defence cooperation is also an important area. We have already shared with you how the defence cooperation has been progressing. She explained that. It is an ongoing process, and it certainly covers all elements including exchanges, training, technology transfer, procurement of defence equipment, and so on. So, suffice it to say that it is an important relationship and it is a process that is ongoing.

Question: Poland is a member of the EU. How do you think during the visit of the Prime Minister of Poland the issue of the Free Trade Agreement between EU and India will be discussed? And what are the chances of signing this agreement this year?

Joint Secretary (Central Europe): I would be going I think beyond my remit to be able to answer the last part of that question about the signing of the agreement. But certainly Poland, as you are aware, is an active member of EU, and we would be discussing each other’s activities in various multilateral organizations in which the other has an interest. So, we would certainly I think be hearing from Poland. Poland would be sharing with us its experiences within the EU, its perceptions of the priorities of EU and so on. And, I would imagine that this agreement would also be something that would be touched upon.

Official Spokesperson: I would only like to add here that EU is our largest trading partner. We have regular India-EU Summits. We have been working closely with each other. On the India-EU agreement, active discussions are ongoing.

Thank you very much.

520. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs during the visit of Polish Prime Minister Donald Tusk.

New Delhi, September 7, 2010.

The Prime Minister of Poland, Mr. Donald Tusk and his wife Mrs. Malgorzata Tusk are currently on a State Visit to India from September 6 to 8, 2010.

On the morning of 7th September, the Prime Minister of Poland was received ceremonially by the Prime Minister of India in the forecourt of the Rashtrapati Bhavan. In the evening, the Prime Minister and the visiting dignitary held delegation level talks in which they reviewed bilateral relations including enhancement of bilateral economic engagement. It was agreed that both sides would endeavour to enhance trade and investments in both directions with the target of doubling the value of bilateral trade by 2014. The Prime Minister and his Polish counterpart also discussed global issues like reform of the UN Security Council and climate change. They agreed to expand cooperation in the field of clean coal technology. They also exchanged views on regional issues of common concern, including Afghanistan.

Prime Minister Tusk reaffirmed the support of Poland for India's candidature for the non-permanent seat in the UN Security Council for 2011-12 as well as for a permanent seat in an expanded Security Council.

The Cultural Exchange Programme for the years 2010-13 was signed after the talks and is expected to give a further boost to exchanges in this field.

Prime Minister Tusk was received by the President and the Vice President. Earlier in the day, Minister of State for External Affairs and the Leader of the Opposition called on the Prime Minister of Poland.

Prime Minister Tusk's delegation includes the Minister of State in Prime Minister's Office and a number of senior officials including, among others, the Under Secretaries in charge of the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Economy and Defence and the President of Polish Information and Foreign Investment Agency. Representatives from the Polish media and from a number of Polish companies are also part of the accompanying delegation.

The Prime Minister and his delegation arrived in Bangalore yesterday. After a meeting with the Governor of Karnataka, Prime Minister Tusk inaugurated the Polish-Indian Investment Forum, in which more than 100 participants were present.

In his keynote remarks on the occasion as well in his meetings with Indian leaders, the Polish Prime Minister recalled the inspiration that Poland's Solidarity movement had drawn from the non-violent struggle of India's independence movement.

On 8th September 2010, Prime Minister Tusk and Madame Malgorzata Tusk would be travelling to Agra, before departing for Vietnam in the afternoon.

RUSSIA

Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (Eurasia) on the visit of Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin.

New Delhi, March 11, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. My colleague Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary (Eurasia), who inter alia looks after affairs pertaining to Russia, is here today along with me to brief you about the very important visit of Prime Minister Putin which commences later this evening.

A warm welcome awaits Prime Minister Vladimir Putin, an old and very special friend of India, who is also the co-architect of the India-Russia Strategic Partnership. He is coming on a working visit at the invitation of the Prime Minister of India.

Let me take you through his programme. Tomorrow he will be calling on the President of India. He would be having a meeting with Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi. Then he has talks with the Prime Minister who would also be hosting a dinner in honour of the distinguished guest. Both sides will be signing a number of agreements.

Prime Minister Putin is leading a high-powered delegation comprising of several Ministers and senior officials including Deputy Prime Minister Sergei Ivanov, Deputy Prime Minister Mr. Sergei Sobyanin, the Minister for Economic Development Mrs. Elvira Nabiullina, Minister of Energy Mr. Sergei Shmatko, the Ambassador of Russian Federation to India, and a number of senior officials from various Ministries, Departments and agencies including space and atomic energy agency.

Prime Minister of India will be assisted by Defence Minister Mr. A.K. Anthony, the Minister of External Affairs Mr. S.M. Krishna, Minister of Petroleum and Natural Gas Mr. Murli Deora, Commerce and Industry Minister Mr. Anand Sharma, Principal Secretary to Prime Minister, National Security Advisor, Foreign Secretary, Defence Secretary, Secretary of Department of Atomic Energy, Secretary of Department of Space and other officials including Joint Secretary (ERS) who is present here. That broadly is the composition of the delegation. In addition, a 15-member Business Delegation will be accompanying the Russian Prime Minister which has interests varying from diamonds to aviation.

Russia, as you know, is a valued partner and friend of India. Our ties with the Russian Federation are time-tested, based on continuity, trust and mutual understanding. We are both democratic and pluralistic societies having a similarity of outlook, a similarity of views on a host of regional and international issues. There is national consensus in both countries on the need to preserve and strengthen the fundamentals of India-Russia relations.

Both sides are engaged in further consolidating the strategic partnership which was announced during the landmark visit of the then President Putin to India in the year 2000. You would recall that during the very successful visit of our Prime Minister to Russia last year in December, the sides adopted a ‘Joint Declaration on Deepening the Strategic Partnership to meet Global Challenges’. Our PM’s visit had taken place within the framework of the mechanism of annual summits agreed upon in the year 2000. Since then there have been regular summit visit level meetings. Many of you would remember that President Putin last visited India on 25 and 26 January 2007, when he was also the Chief Guest at India’s Republic Day Celebrations.

President Medvedev paid a state visit to India on 4 and 5 December 2008 when he participated in the Closing Ceremony of the Year of Russia in India along with the President of India. A number of important documents were signed including the agreement on construction of additional nuclear power plants at Kudankulam site and construction of Russian designed nuclear power plants at new sites in India. I may add that recently it was decided to offer an additional site to Russia at Haripur in West Bengal. Furthermore a Memorandum of Understanding between ISRO and Russian Federal Space Agency on joint activities in the field of human space flight programme was also concluded.

In fact, I am happy to note that high-level visits and exchanges have become a hallmark of our relations, and the year 2009 saw a further intensification of these high-level exchanges. You would recall that Rashtrapatiji, President of India, paid a state visit to Russia in September last year. The External Affairs Minister was in Moscow for the 15th Session of the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation.

Deputy Prime Minister Sergei Sobyanin, who is the co-chair of the Commission, was in India in November 2009 and again in February this year. He would be accompanying Prime Minister Putin. Commerce and Industry Minister Mr. Anand Sharma visited Russia in September. We have also institutionalized a defence cooperation mechanism between the two countries at Defence Minister level which took our Defence Minister Mr. A.K. Anthony to Moscow in October for the 9th meeting of the Indo-Russian Inter-Governmental Commission on Military, Technical Cooperation.

Our defence cooperation is no longer restricted to a buyer-seller relationship but includes joint design, research and development, joint production, training, and service-to-service contacts. We are also holding joint naval exercises and counter-terrorism exercises.

And finally we saw the very successful visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Moscow when again a number of agreements were signed, which are on the website and you may like to take a look. I would just refer to two of them. One is the agreement on military and technical cooperation for the period 2011 to 2020, and also the sides initialed an agreement of cooperation in peaceful uses of atomic energy.

PM held intensive discussions with President Medvedev and Prime Minister Putin on taking our relationship to a higher level, and the outcome of that was the Joint Declaration on deepening strategic partnership, which I just referred to.

Following the talks between our Prime Minister and Prime Minister Mr. Putin, the two leaders addressed the India-Russia CEO Council’s meeting which is an important mechanism for boosting private sector cooperation between the two countries. You know that Mr. Mukesh Ambani co-chairs the Council. I also mentioned that Prime Minister Putin is going to be accompanied by a 15-member Business Delegation. Efforts are under way to increase the trade turnover between the two sides which has already touched 7.5 billion dollars in 2009, which was an increase of eight per cent over the previous year despite a global slowdown.
I just wanted to give you a few snapshots of the ties for you to see that ours is truly a multifaceted strategic partnership spanning a whole range of areas including defence, nuclear energy, hydrocarbons, science and technology, space, economic and trade aspects, culture - we have very old cultural ties with Russia - and parliamentary exchanges, etc.

This is the background in which the visit, a very important visit, of Prime Minister Vladimir Putin is taking place. During the visit both the sides will review the entire range of bilateral ties and exchange views on how to nurture and further expand our strategic partnership. We are aiming to take forward our bilateral cooperation in strategic sectors like hydrocarbons, civil nuclear energy, space and defence. The two leaders will also be holding discussions on energizing our trade and investment ties. Our expectation is that the visit will set the tone for the bilateral exchanges for the rest of the year.

Several documents are likely to be concluded during the visit. Certainly we will share the details with you in due course. The two Prime Ministers are also likely to jointly address the media tomorrow upon conclusion of delegation-level talks. We will be happy now to take a few questions relating to the visit of Prime Minister Vladimir Putin.

Question: How many agreements would be signed?

Official Spokesperson: We expect a number of agreements to be signed in areas like energy, fertilizers and so on. Discussions are ongoing on some. So, you will please bear with us. We will be more than happy to give you the details, as we always do, once the agreements are concluded tomorrow.

Question: When will the deal on the Gorshkov be finalized? Would you see that as the biggest takeaway from this visit in terms of deals? Secondly, what is happening to the NTPC project? Is a political clearance expected during this visit?

Joint Secretary (ERS) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): On Gorshkov, you have seen it and we have seen it, essentially the position in terms of background is that over today and tomorrow we expect to sign several supplementary agreements. These are supplementary to the basic contract of Gorshkov which was signed in 2004. This includes a range of issues like costing and technical details. But the point in terms of background to remember is that Gorshkov is a big contract which has had its own impetus in terms of discussions which have been ongoing in Technical Committees and with technical visits being exchanged for a long period. What we expect to sign tomorrow are some supplementary agreements on a basic understanding that is already reached.

NTPC project has been an issue that has been under discussion for a while because it is a commercial dispute between two parties. This has been discussed in the past and will continue to be discussed. But we do not expect any clear resolution at this point.

Question: At one point of time the Russians used to give us 70 per cent of our defence needs. What is the percentage now? Has the so-called Rupee-Ruble arrangement, been sorted out for good? The businessmen from India have had problems getting visas to go to Russia. Has that also been sorted out?

Joint Secretary (ERS): Let me take those three questions one by one. On the percentage, I am not very sure but it hovers near 60 and 70. We are not very sure of the exact number because the calculations are based on different bases and so on.

On the issue of visas, yes this has been under discussion. We have had a number of delegations being exchanged. Our businessmen have complained of problems. We have discussed various ways of making the systems more efficient, for instance by allowing letters from Chambers of Commerce to serve as facilitating letters on issue of visas. But this is under discussion still and it all plays into domestic legislation which is very complex. So, there is no final decision on that as well.

On Rupee-Ruble trade, you would recall that this was the norm of trade till the 80s when we based our trade on Rupee-Ruble arrangements, based on annual protocols of goods which were canalized through state agencies. But that system ended in 1992 when we signed a new trade agreement for hard currency based trade. We did have residual issue of accumulated Rupee balances which were permitted to be used for exports of goods from India to Russia as well as later, with some amendments, for Russian investments in India. This system is nearing its end and the Rupee-Ruble balances are about to get over.
Official Spokesperson: I may just like add here that, as I mentioned, the very fact that trade is rising, the very fact that investments on both sides are increasing is indicative of the fact that we are on the right track.

Question: What is the status of the Haripur project? Has the land been acquired?

Joint Secretary (ERS): The status is that we have made an announcement of the decision to award Haripur as a site to the Russian side for creation of nuclear power plants. That is where it rests. It is very early days.

Question: Somebody said environmental clearance was given. Is that right?

Joint Secretary (ERS): I am not aware of that. I think it is a decision in principle at this point of time and there are no specifics yet.

Question: Russia has been seeking India’s support for membership in WTO. What is India’s stand now?

Joint Secretary (ERS): WTO accession of Russia is an issue. There are ongoing discussions on a series of issues related to this. There is no clear yes or no at this point.

Question: What will India discuss with Prime Minister Putin about Afghanistan? Is India at a stage where it wants to intensify dialogue with Russia, Iran and the Central Asian states about what the strategy should be after NATO pulls out of Afghanistan?

Official Spokesperson: During the visit of Prime Minister Putin, besides bilateral issues the two leaders are likely to discuss a range of regional and international issues of interest. What specifically they would discuss, I am not in a position to predict or to specify. But specifically in respect of Afghanistan, what I would like to say is that Russia and India have common concerns with regard to situation in Afghanistan, the Af-Pak region. We both agree on the need for strong international cooperation against terrorism and financing of terrorism, the need for sustained international efforts to effectively combat production and trafficking narcotics in the region. India and Russia would also like to see rapid economic development in Afghanistan, rapid reconstruction in Afghanistan, return to normalcy in Afghanistan. We both agree that this has to be a concerted effort on the part of the international community. Russia has been appreciative of India’s developmental efforts in Afghanistan. You are aware that we have already invested over 1.3 billion dollars in a range of infrastructure projects and small development projects in Afghanistan. Russia and India also have a similar outlook on the menace of terrorism which confronts both our countries and the international community. I would like to note here that Russia has been supportive of India’s draft text at the UN on the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

Question: We have cooperation with Russia so far as the blocks of oil were concerned. What is exactly happening on this cooperation so far as the oil blocks are concerned?

Joint Secretary (ERS): As you mentioned rightly, one of India’s most significant overseas investments was in Sakhalin-I in the year 2000. At its peak the investment was almost 2.8 billion dollars. Since then India has also invested more in that region through ONGC Videsh Limited - 2.1 billion dollars was the investment for buying a British company called Imperial Energy in the Tomsk region in Siberia. So, India has had energy strategy of investing in equity in that region and this continues to be the strategy. We have had ongoing discussions with the Russian side on several more investments where ONGC Videsh Limited is willing to go along with Russian oil and gas majors like Gazprom and Rosneft to invest in different regions of Siberia and even North Russia. In Siberia the regions are Sakhalin-III and there is a region on Timan Pechora, as also there is an interest on the Indian side in the Yamal peninsula which is a gas-rich area in Northern Russia. So, these talks are continuing. As you observed, the Energy Minister of Russia will be here and Mr. Murli Deora, the Minister for Petroleum will have a conversation on that issue.

Question: There was also talk on developing the Fifth Generation Fighter Aircraft. Is there a final agreement or just discussions?

Joint Secretary (ERS): I understand there are ongoing discussions on this subject. You would have seen at the Defexpo there were various exhibits on that subject. We have ongoing discussions on the Fifth Generation Fighter Aircraft.
Question: In Indian press there were reports about signing the agreement for more MiG-29Ks during the visit. What about this agreement?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, we will certainly let you know. We have already shared with you that a number of agreements are likely to be signed. That is why I also took you through the very important agreements that have been concluded in the past at different stages. I have also mentioned that we regard Prime Minister Putin's visit as a very significant visit. We are likely to have a number of agreements, some of which are still under finalization. Tomorrow, once the agreements are signed, we will be in a better position of course to share with you specifics. I will appreciate if you bear with us till then.

Thank you very much.

523. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the media during the visit of Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin.

New Delhi, March 12, 2010.

His Excellency Prime Minister Vladimir Putin,

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media,

We are delighted to have in our midst today a great friend of India, His Excellency Prime Minister Putin of Russia. We attach the highest importance to his visit.

Prime Minister Putin has been the architect of the strategic partnership between India and Russia, and we owe a deep sense of gratitude to him for bringing our two countries so close to each other.

We have just concluded very comprehensive and indepth discussions on bilateral, regional and global issues. I conveyed to Prime Minister Putin that relations with Russia are a key pillar of our foreign policy, and we regard Russia as a trusted and reliable strategic partner. Ours is a relationship that not only stands independent of any other, but whose significance has grown over time. Our partnership covers areas such as defence, civil nuclear energy, space, science and technology, hydrocarbons, trade and investment.

In the run-up to, and during Prime Minister Putin’s visit, we have finalised several important and long pending defence cooperation projects which will deepen our longstanding partnership in this vital sector. We have signed the Inter-Governmental Agreement on Cooperation in Atomic Energy and agreed upon a Roadmap for construction of nuclear power plants. A Memorandum of Understanding for bilateral cooperation in Russia’s satellite navigation system has been agreed upon.

We have agreed to strengthen our cooperation in hydrocarbons through greater collaboration between our oil and gas companies. Agreements have been signed in the areas of fertilisers. We have identified information technology and telecommunications as focus areas for our future economic cooperation.

The outcomes of Prime Minister Putin’s visit are therefore rich and very substantive.

We had a detailed discussion on regional and global issues. There is much that India and Russia can do together to advance global peace and stability and the process of global economic revival. We have agreed to intensify our consultations on Afghanistan and the challenges posed by terrorism and extremism in our region.

I am very happy to state that my discussions with Prime Minister Putin have reinforced the strong ties of friendship that bind our two countries together.

Thank you.

India & Russia yesterday (March 12, 2010) agreed on a Roadmap for construction of reactors of Russian design in India. The road map outlines the timelines for steps to be taken for the construction of Kudankulam units 3 & 4, provides for construction of two more reactors at Kudankulam (Units 5&6) and two reactors at Haripur, West Bengal during 12th Five Year Plan. Construction of more reactors of Russian design will be considered during formulation of the 13th Five Year Plan. Besides, the road map calls for progressive indigenisation of supplies for the reactors to be constructed in collaboration with Russia beyond the level already envisaged in Kudankulam Units 3 & 4.
526. Condolence Message from Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Russian President on terrorist attack in Moscow.

New Delhi, March 29, 2010.

Your Excellency,

It is with great anguish that I have learnt of the bomb blasts in Moscow, which have led to the loss of so many innocent lives. This is a most tragic and horrific act of violence. At this difficult hour our thoughts are with you, the people of Russia and the families and friends of the victims of this terrible tragedy. On behalf of the Government and people of India, I convey our deepest condolences. I wish to assure you that India stands united with Russia in combating the forces of violence and terrorism.

Please accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

His Excellency Mr. Dmitry A. Medvedev
Manmohan Singh
President of the Russian Federation Moscow

---

On the same day the Ministry of External Affairs also issued a press release condemning the bomb blasts and expressing its “solidarity with the Government and the people of Russia”. It also expressed the conviction that “only collective efforts by the international community can combat the scourge of terrorism that the world is facing today.”
527. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the 10th meeting of the India - Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Military, Technical Cooperation.

New Delhi, October 7, 2010.

The Tenth Meeting of the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Military Technical Cooperation (IRIGC-MTC) was held here today. The Defence Minister Shri AK Antony and the Russian Defence Minister Mr. AE Serdyukov headed the respective delegations. The Indian delegation included Defence Secretary Shri Pradeep Kumar, Secretary (Defence Production) Shri RK Singh, Shri VK Saraswat, Scientific Adviser to Defence Minister and other senior officials of the Ministry of Defence and the Armed Forces. The Russian delegation included representatives from the Russian Ministry of Defence and the Russian Defence Industry.

In his opening remarks at the IRIGC-MTC meeting, Shri Antony said that India values the strong and multifaceted friendship with Russia and noted that the defence relationship between both countries is based on convergent and complementary interests and has been mutually beneficial. He also observed that the bilateral defence cooperation with Russia is a comprehensive partnership, in which both countries have moved beyond the buyer-seller relationship and are collaborating in joint R&D and production of defence equipments and systems.

The Commission took note of the progress on several major projects since its last meeting, which was held in Moscow in October 2009. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the conclusion of the Shareholders Agreement for formation of a Joint Venture Company for the development and production of the Multirole Transport Aircraft (MTA). Further, both sides agreed to expedite modalities for the proposed project for the joint design, development and production of the Fifth Generation Fighter Aircraft (FGFA).

"India hopes to get 45 MTA and also finalize the FGFA, ... all the issues we have discussed and solved between our two countries... now it is in the final stages of the Indian government, some technical formalities between the governments is needed and I am sure we will be able to complete very soon...within a few months," Shri Antony later told a joint press conference. "As per this agreement India will receive approximately between 250-300 most modern FGFA. These two projects are the major achievements of this year and for the next ten years these two projects, MTA and FGFA, will be a shining example of India and Russian defence cooperation," he added.

"We have very good big plans and we have very serious projects and work before us. And this, as I said, will be a big challenge and we will try to do our best in order to prove that our bilateral cooperation can give us very good practical results," said Mr. Serdyukov.

The Joint Commission also reviewed the status of several other ongoing and proposed projects, including the licenced production of T-90 Tanks and the establishment of the repair and overhaul facilities for various Russian origin defence equipment in India.

The IRIGC-MTC was established in 2000, with a view to further bilateral defence cooperation between India and Russia. Russia is the only country with which India has such an institutionalized mechanism at the level of the Defence Ministers of both sides, which highlights the strength and importance of the bilateral defence relationship. The Commission is supported by two Working groups - on Military Technical Cooperation and Shipbuilding, Aviation and Land Systems respectively and seven sub-groups.

The scope for military technical cooperation between both countries is defined through an umbrella inter-Governmental agreement; and Agreement on a long term programme for military and technical cooperation for the period 2011-2020 was signed during the visit of the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Russia in December last year.

Prior to the IRIGC meeting today, both Defence Ministers also held separate discussions on various issues of regional and global security. Both Ministers agreed on the need to enhance interactions between the Armed Forces of both countries. Noting that a joint exercise between the Armies of both sides is due to be held in India this month, both Ministers also decided that a joint exercise between the Armed Forces would be held in Russia in 2011. The Russian Defence Minister also stated that the Chief of Defence Forces of Russia would visit India in November this year and that the Russian Navy Chief would visit in January 2011.
528. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (Eurasia) Ajay Bisaria on India-Russia Joint Economic Commission Meeting.

New Delhi, November 16, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon. My colleague Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary (Eurasia), who is responsible for our relations with Russia, and I would like to brief you on the 16th Inter-Governmental Joint Economic Commission meeting which is to take place on the 18th of November.

The Economic Commission which is formally called the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation, had last met on 21st of October in Moscow. The Commission which guides the conduct of economic cooperation was set up in May 1992, and the first session was held in Moscow in September 1994. It is co-chaired by External Affairs Minister Mr. S.M. Krishna and Deputy Prime Minister Mr. Sergei Ivanov of Russia.

Mr. Sergei Ivanov is an old friend of India. He has been to India on several occasions. He has met with senior Indian leaders. He is also one of the senior leaders in the Russian Government. He was Defence Minister for quite a few years, and in May 2008, was reappointed as the Deputy-Prime Minister of Russia. He is currently responsible for areas including industrial development, the defence industry complex, transport and communication, science and innovation, border issues, military reserves, and export control.

India and Russia are time-tested friends. It is easily one of the most important relationships for us. There is the broadest possible consensus in India for close, cooperative relations with Russia. Our ties are based on trust, continuity and mutual understanding.

During the visit of President Vladimir Putin in 2000, both sides decided to elevate the relationship to the level of strategic partnership. In fact, we are observing the tenth anniversary of our strategic partnership this year. During the last ten years we have witnessed steady growth in bilateral cooperation in all areas including political, economic, strategic, and other aspects of cooperation.
Later this year in December 2010 we are preparing to welcome President Dmitry Medvedev, who will be here on a state visit to India. The practice of annual summits between Indian Prime Minister and the Russian President also goes back to 2000. You would recall that Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh had visited Moscow last year in December. In March this year, we had also hosted and welcomed Prime Minister Putin who had visited India at the invitation of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. As I mentioned, he is a co-architect of India-Russia Strategic Partnership. During his visit a number of important agreements were signed between the two sides.

It is fair to say that our bilateral relationship has always received the highest level attention. You would also recall that Rashtrapatiji, had paid a state visit to Russia in September last year, which was a significant event for both sides.

It is our practice to very carefully prepare the groundwork before the annual summit meetings, and this is primarily done through the two Inter-Governmental Commissions - one on the Economic, Cultural, Scientific, side, which as I said will be meeting on the 18th of November; another Commission is the Inter-Governmental Joint Commission on Military Technical Cooperation, which is led by the Defence Ministers. That Commission had met last month on the 7th and 8th of October. These two Commissions constitute a vital institutional mechanism to infuse greater momentum in our relationship, and oversee practically all aspects of our significant bilateral cooperation.

Ours is truly a multifaceted strategic cooperation spanning a wide spectrum of areas including defence, civil nuclear energy, hydrocarbons, science and technology, space, economic and trade matters, culture, parliamentary exchanges, people-to-people exchanges, and so on.

Energetic efforts are afoot on both sides to give a further boost to our bilateral trade. It is significant that in 2009 despite the global economic slowdown, bilateral trade grew to almost 7.5 billion dollars from less than $7 billion in 2008. In the first seven months of this year, our trade has registered a robust growth of close to 24%, which is very encouraging. As such, a trade target of $20 billion has been set for the year 2015.

Valuable Indian investments, especially in the hydrocarbons sector have been made by OVL and other companies in Russia, which are estimated at US$ 4.25 billion, which include Indian investments in Sakhalin-I and Imperial Energy. Other investments are by Tata Motors, Tata Tea, and in the banking sector. In fact, one of the areas which needed attention was banking linkages and we are happy that now both countries have good banking links.

Russian investments are estimated at about US$ 1 billion, primarily in the telecom sector. There is clearly a lot of untapped potential which both countries are trying to bridge. Particularly efforts are underway to enhance direct business-to-business links in addition to Government-to-Government exchanges.

In that direction a Memorandum of Understanding was signed between the Confederation of Indian Industries (CII) recently with St. Petersburg International Economic Forum (SPIEF) for regular Indian participation in this important economic forum. CIM led the biggest ever Indian business delegation to participate in the Forum on 18th and 19th of June this year. This participation was preceded by the first ever India-Russia Business Dialogue, a very successful business dialogue, which took place in St. Petersburg on the 17th of June this year.

In the same vein, an India-Russia CEO’s Forum was set up in 2008. It is led by Chairman of Reliance Group Mr. Mukesh Ambani, and the Chairman of Sistema, Mr. Vladimir Yevtushenkov. In addition we also have the India-Russia Trade and Investment Forum which was established in 2007. It is led by the Commerce and Industry Minister from our side.

By way of background I may add that the India-Russia Joint Economic Commission integrates inputs from six important Joint Working Groups which meet regularly. These are the working groups on trade and economy, energy, modernization and industrial cooperation, science and technology, information and communications technology, culture and tourism. In addition to these six Joint Working Groups there is also a subgroup on banking and financial matters which met in June this year.

Both sides have identified a number of priority areas of cooperation having a lot of potential, which include energy including nuclear and hydrocarbons, information technology, pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, metals and minerals, fertilizers - by the way fertilizers are emerging as a very important item of import from Russia into India and we are looking at further expanding our cooperation in this important sector - food processing, construction and engineering services, financial services, telemedicine, and so on. We have also been witnessing good cooperation in the energy sector, both in the civil nuclear energy sector as well as in the hydrocarbons sector.

In sum, the Co-Chairs or the Inter-Governmental Joint Commission will review progress since the last meeting of the Joint Commission, and also take on board the recommendations of the Joint Working Groups for closer economic engagement between the two countries. The Commission will also prepare for the very important forthcoming state visit of President Dmitry Medvedev to India.

My colleague and I will be happy to take a few questions pertaining to the Inter-Governmental Joint Commission.

Question: I would like to know which Ministers will be present for this Inter-Governmental Commission on Indian side, which new projects may be discussed, and whether the titanium project in Orissa would be discussed in this meeting.

Official Spokesperson: The programme of the visit is being finalized. Deputy Prime Minister is arriving on the 17th. Besides the Joint Commission meeting he would also be calling on the Prime Minister of India and meeting other dignitaries. As the name itself of the Joint Commission suggests, the canvas is very broad. I have already mentioned that there are six Joint Working Groups. So, representatives of Ministries from both sides in the said areas, will be participating in the Joint Commission meeting. We are in the process of finalizing the list of participation and we will be sharing that further. Would you like to add something?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): Sure. This is a mechanism which comprehensively views the relationship. The Deputy Prime Minister would be calling on our Prime Minister and also meeting other senior leaders on a programme that is still being finalized. You mentioned one particular project of cooperation which is titanium dioxide.

Question: Will that be on the agenda?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): Yes, certainly. There will be a comprehensive review of all ongoing projects, as well as a number of future projects are likely to be identified. So, there would be a discussion on this as well as other issues.

Official Spokesperson: And the outcome you will see in the Joint Statement that will be put out.

Question: Sir, what is the state of play on the nuclear cooperation that we are working on with Russia? And are we expecting any agreements during the visit of President Medvedev?

Official Spokesperson: Civil Nuclear cooperation is not covered by this particular Joint Commission, but I will request my colleague to give you a perspective.

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): Nuclear cooperation is an ongoing issue between India and Russia. There was a very important Inter-Governmental agreement which was a framework agreement on nuclear cooperation which was signed during the visit of Prime Minister Putin in March. That provides the basis for ongoing discussions on this issue. We would expect some more agreements to be reached, or understandings to be reached before December. But this is all an ongoing process.

Question: Have we made any headway in investments in the oil sector after Sakhalin-I? Has there been any bidding process? What is the status on that? And if I could just ask one more thing, this is not really with reference with the Joint Commission meeting, the Russian position on the UN Security Council seat according to me seems to have taken a slight change. Earlier the thing was that they would sort of back us completely along with the veto power. It seems to have changed right now.

Official Spokesperson: When did you see the change? What are you referring to in particular?

Question: There was a reference to the fact I think in the RIC meeting or on the sidelines of that. There was a report which said that not a complete backing.

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): Your first question was on hydrocarbons cooperation. Again that is an ongoing sector of cooperation. As you mentioned, there was an important investment by India’s OVL in Sakhalin-I when they got 20 per cent equity in Gazprom. After that a whole series of developments have taken place. Notably, India invested more than two billion dollars in buying a company called Imperial Energy which was a British company. That is a significant investment. Even after that there continues to be a great deal of discussion on specific projects in Russia including specific oil fields which are becoming available in Siberia in Northern Russia, places like the Yamal Peninsula, there are blocks called the Trebs and Titov blocks in the Teman-Pechora region. So, this is an ongoing process. And there is discussion as well on signing or agreeing upon some kind of umbrella understanding in this sector. So, it continues and a discussion in this area is ongoing at the expert level.

On the Security Council seat, of course, you referred to the recent trilateral meeting where there was some discussion on this issue. As you are aware, Russia has welcomed India into the Security Council for the period 2011-12 when India takes on a position as non-permanent member. So, they have welcomed India's entry into the body and also look forward to constructive participation. And Russia's position, which they have enunciated several times, is very clear on India's case for a permanent membership of the Security Council and that basically is that Russia considers India a deserving and strong candidate for a permanent seat in an expanded UN Security Council. This is a position Russia has repeatedly expressed. But as we go along and discuss this issue at various bilateral fora, the discussion continues on various nuances of India's bid for a permanent seat as well.

Official Spokesperson: I may just add that the two sides have also decided to maintain close coordination, close consultation at New York between the two PRs and also certainly between the two countries.

Question: You mentioned Mr. Ivanov being in charge of export control also. Does this forum deal with export control? And is it true that Russia recently lifted some export controls imposed since 1965?

Official Spokesperson: This forum does not deal with that.

Question: Sir, Kashmir has been removed from the UN list of unresolved disputes, and Pakistan says this is an inadvertent omission. What is your reaction?
Official Spokesperson: Our position is very clear. The issue of Jammu and Kashmir is a bilateral issue between India and Pakistan. We have and are prepared to have consultations, discussions on all bilateral issues with Pakistan. This position of India is widely accepted and appreciated by members of the international community.

Question: Are you confirming this report that we have taken off the list of unresolved disputes?

Official Spokesperson: I am just confirming what I just said.

Question: Will Kashmir being removed from the list help us in any way for the permanent seat in the UNSC?

529. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the 16th Session of the India-Russia Economic Joint Commission meeting.

New Delhi, November 18, 2010.

The Sixteenth Session of the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation (IRIGC-TEC) was held in New Delhi on 18 November 2010. The Indian side was led by the Minister of External Affairs and the Chairman of the Indian side of the Commission, H.E. Mr. S.M. Krishna. The Russian side was led by the Deputy Prime Minister of the Government of the Russian Federation and the Chairman of the Russian side of the Commission, H.E. Mr. S. B. Ivanov.

The entire spectrum of India-Russia trade, economic, scientific, technological and cultural cooperation was reviewed during the meeting. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the recent increase in bilateral trade and investments while recognizing that the level of economic engagement remained below its potential give the size of the two economies. In this context, both sides identified concrete steps to further develop economic relations in priority areas of cooperation. The main outcomes of the discussion are summarised in the enclosure. The next session of the IRIGC-TEC will be held in Moscow in 2011.

DPM Ivanov is on an official visit to India from 17 to 19 November 2010. He is accompanied by senior officials of the Russian Government and business representatives. During his visit, DPM Ivanov is scheduled to call on the Prime Minister and have bilateral meetings with other Indian dignitaries. The discussions will contribute to the preparations for the forthcoming visit of the President of the Russian Federation, H. E. Mr. D. A. Medvedev to India in December 2010 for the Indo-Russian Annual Summit.

*****

Salient outcomes of the 16th Session of the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation (IRIGC-TEC)

Bilateral Exchanges

• The Commission expressed satisfaction at the continuation in the momentum of high-level bilateral contacts in the past one year which have delivered concrete results in the further development of bilateral economic relations. Both Sides resolved to work in tandem to proactively follow up on these discussions with a view to finalising some key Agreements/ MOUs in the economic sphere to be signed during the forthcoming visit of the President of the Russian Federation, H. E. Mr. D. A. Medvedev to India in December 2010 for the Indo-Russian Annual Summit.

• Recognising the importance of establishing direct B2B contacts in achieving a quantum leap in bilateral trade and investment levels, the Commission underscored that the Indo-Russian Trade and Investment Forum (IRTIF) and the CEOs’ Council have to play a lead role in this regard. The Sides noted with satisfaction the considerable interest of business circles of both countries in the Fourth Session of IRTIF, which will be held in December 2010 in New Delhi. They also welcomed the holding of first-ever India-Russia Business Dialogue within the framework of the prestigious St. Petersburg International Economic Forum in June 2010 and expressed confidence that the MOU entered into by CII and SPIEF Foundation would pave the way for regular institutionalized B2B interactions and exchanges.

Review of Bilateral Trade and Economic Cooperation

- While reviewing the bilateral trade & economic cooperation, the Commission observed that trade and investment between India and Russia has been growing but is still modest compared to the sizes of the two economies and their potential. Both Sides agreed to make sustained and enhanced efforts to achieve the bilateral trade turnover target of USD 20 billion by 2015. The Commission called upon relevant Working Groups and agencies on both sides to identify new and innovative joint projects in priority areas of cooperation in order to increase the level of bilateral economic engagement and to speedily achieve the economic targets set by the two countries.

- The Commission agreed that with its proven competence in the fields of IT, financial services, pharmaceuticals and hydrocarbon processing, India can be a strong and reliable partner in Russia's pursuit of modernization of its economy. The Commission asked for the preparation of a forward-looking bilateral programme on cooperation in the areas of modernization and innovation.

- The Commission noted the strong interest of Indian companies to participate in the privatization programme of the Government of the Russian Federation and called for organizing B2B interactions in this regard inter alia within the framework of India-Russia Forum on Trade & Investment and CEOs Council.

Priority Areas for Cooperation

Energy

- The Commission expressed satisfaction at the progress achieved in bilateral cooperation in the civilian nuclear energy sector. It welcomed the signing of the Inter-Governmental Agreement on Atomic Energy Cooperation for Peaceful Purposes and the Roadmap for Serial Construction of Russian-designed Nuclear Power Plants in India, during the March 2010 visit of the Russian Prime Minister to India.

- The Commission agreed on the need to enhance bilateral cooperation in the hydrocarbon sector which could be an excellent vehicle to achieve a quantum increase in bilateral trade and investment ties. While noting that India and Russia have made a good beginning in this direction with the collaboration in Sakhalin-I, and the acquisition of Imperial Energy by ONGC Videsh Ltd. (OVL), both Sides called for tangible steps to move forward on new project proposals.

Diamonds

- Recognizing the strong complementarity between Indian and Russia in the area of trade in rough diamonds, the Commission welcomed the signing of long-term contracts between Russian and select Indian companies and called for sustaining this positive momentum through conclusion of additional contracts.

Agriculture/ Food Products

- Recognising the large scope for export of food commodities and processed food products from India to Russia, both Sides resolved to work towards early finalisation of the agreement on mutual recognition/equivalence of standards and conformity assessment procedures for facilitating trade in goods between India and Russia.

Pharmaceuticals

- Both Sides welcomed the growth in bilateral trade in the pharmaceuticals sector and called for bilateral investments and establishment of JVs. The Commission noted the huge potential for participation by Indian companies in the realization of Pharma 2020 programme of the Government of the Russian Federation. The Russian side conveyed its interest in joint activities for developing new pharmaceutical products and technologies.
IT

- Recognising the huge potential for mutually-beneficial cooperation in the IT sector, the Commission emphasized the need to identify specific projects for collaboration between Indian and Russian companies in development of Techno Parks (including Skolkovo Innovation Centre), e-governance, BPO/KPO, IT learning and tele-medicines.

Fertilizers/ Chemicals/ Mining

- The Commission expressed satisfaction at the steady growth in the fertilizer trade between India and Russia amounting to a value of over USD 2.1 billion in the period April 2009 - March 2010. The Sides also welcomed the signing of the MOU between the Ministry of Industry and Trade of the Russian Federation and the Ministry of Chemicals and Fertilizers, Government of India on cooperation in the field of mineral fertilizers, and also signing of the framework agreement on supply of fertilizers between Russian and Indian companies. The Commission identified specific steps to enhance cooperation in this sector including through establishment of JVs in Russia for setting up fertiliser manufacturing units and possible participation of Russian fertilizer entities in the revival of closed urea plants in India.

Mining & Metallurgy

- The Commission recognized the interest shown by Indian and Russian companies for collaboration in the area of mines and metallurgy including through conclusion of long-term supply contracts.

Banking and Finance

- The Commission welcomed the strengthening of banking linkages between India and Russia through opening of Representative Office/Branch by several Indian and Russian banks in each other's countries. It called upon banks and financial organisations of the two countries to work towards providing appropriate banking services, which is critical for developing trade and economic cooperation.
Science & Technology

- Recognizing the large benefits that have accrued from scientific cooperation under the Integrated Long-term Program of Cooperation in Science and Technology (ILTP) so far, the Commission noted with satisfaction that the Agreement to extend the program for next 10 years had been finalized.

Tourism & Culture

- The Commission noted the considerable growth in the number of Russian tourists visiting India, and agreed to work towards creating an environment for two-way growth of tourist traffic, including favourable visa regimes. In this context, the Commission welcomed the finalization of bilateral visa-facilitation agreement.

- The Commission agreed to continue providing support for holding of exhibitions, conferences, lectures, film shows and artistic performances between the two countries. The Commission also agreed to finalise at earliest the programmes of the Festival of Indian Culture in Russia in 2011 and the Festival of Russian Culture in India in 2012.

- Both Sides noted the importance of large-scale celebrations planned by the Government of India to commemorate the 150th birth anniversary of Rabindranath Tagore in 2011. The Russian side confirmed their intention to organize commemorative events in different regions of Russia.

- Both Sides agreed to facilitate further development of cultural linkages through direct contact between cultural institutions of the states and regions and city authorities.

Next Session of the Commission

- The Seventeenth Session of the Commission shall take place in 2011 in Moscow.
530. Felicitations from External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to the Russian Foreign Minister on the 110th anniversary of Mumbai Consulate.

New Delhi, November 21, 2010.

In a letter to Foreign Minister Sergey V. Lavrov of the Russian Federation the External Affairs Minister S M Krishna, conveyed warm wishes and felicitations to all personnel and staff of the Consulate, on the 110th Anniversary of the establishment of the Russian Consulate in Mumbai. He termed it as a 'momentous occasion' and a 'reminder that the India-Russia Strategic Partnership is rooted in a historical and diplomatic relationship spanning over more than a century'.

EAM noted that 'Mumbai serves as India's financial and business capital and will continue to play an important role in forging closer trade and investment ties between our two countries'. He expressed confidence that the Russian Consulate will continue to play an outstanding role in building bilateral ties

531. Briefing by Official Spokesperson and Joint Secretary (Eurasia) on visit of Russian President Medvedev.

New Delhi, December 19, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good afternoon to all of you and nice to see you in numbers.

My colleague Mr. Ajay Bisaria, Joint Secretary (ERS) and I would like to brief you about the most important official visit of President Medvedev who is arriving in the early hours on Tuesday, 21st of December.

New Delhi has played host to a number of high-level dignitaries in the course of this year, including from the P5 nations. But our ties with Russia have always stood apart. We now prepare to accord a very warm welcome to the Russian President who would be arriving on an official visit for the 11th India-Russia Summit meeting.
This would be President Medvedev's and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's third standalone summit meeting, and overall the eleventh annual summit meeting. As such, it acquires a historical significance since it also marks the completion of a decade of our strategic partnership which was announced in the year 2000 during the visit of President Putin to India. So, we are really saving the best for the last.

Let me take you through the programme. On Tuesday, EAM Shri S.M. Krishna will call on the President. It be followed by a restricted meeting between President Medvedev and the Prime Minister of India. Next would be delegation-level talks, followed by signing of a number of agreements and a joint press interaction.

Prime Minister would be hosting a private lunch in the honour of the visiting dignitary. There will be calls on him by Leader of Opposition Shrimati Sushma Swaraj, the Vice-President of India, Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi. In the evening President Medvedev will call on Rashtrapati ji who would be hosting a banquet in his honour.

On Wednesday the 22nd, President Medvedev departs for Agra and then flies into Mumbai where he would visit IIT Powai, and also the Film City. In the evening of Wednesday the 22nd he emplanes for Moscow.

President Medvedev will be accompanied by a very important delegation that includes Deputy Prime Minister Sergei Ivanov who is also the co-chair of the India-Russia Joint Economic Commission; Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov; Minister of Education and Science Andrei Fursenko; Minister of Energy Sergei Shmatko; Chairman of the Central Election Commission of Russia Vladimir Churov; Governor of St. Petersburg Ms. Valentina Matvienko; the Ambassador of Russia to India; Members of the Duma or Parliamentarians; Deputy Ministers; senior officials and a large business delegation.

We have a very special strategic partnership with Russia which has stood the test of time over the last half a century. In the preceding decade, our multifaceted bilateral cooperation and our political coordination at the international level have grown and deepened significantly. As such it has in a large measure fulfilled the vision of the declaration of strategic partnership in 2000, to raise ties to a higher and qualitatively new level. I would like to underline that our ties are founded on mutual trust, understanding and continuity.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh had paid a visit to Moscow for the tenth India-Russia Summit in December 2009. At his invitation, Prime Minister Putin had visited India in March this year. Prime Minister Putin, then as the President, is the co-architect of India-Russia Strategic Partnership. Year 2010 has also seen a number of other high-level exchanges from both sides which have given a qualitative boost to our ties. We have always had extensive defence cooperation limited not just to a buyer-seller relationship but extending to joint development and research in advanced defence systems. As importantly, we have several ongoing cooperation projects in the area of civil nuclear cooperation and space sectors, which will also be discussed during the visit of President Medvedev.

Both sides are exploring ways to expand cooperation in the important hydrocarbons sector. We are working on developing a roadmap for such cooperation. The energy security interests of India and Russia are very well matched. India is a large consumer of hydrocarbons and Russia is a large producer. Russia is looking for a assured market, and we for a stable supplier. Therefore, there is a natural synergy in this area between the two sides. Both sides see hydrocarbons as well as civil nuclear energy cooperation as the twin pillars for a long-term strategic energy partnership.

Our cooperation in the field of science and technology covers the full range of activities from basic scientific research to developing frontline technologies including industrial technologies in the fields of biotechnology, nanotechnology and bioinformatics. We are currently working on a new integrated long-term cooperation that will outline our collective vision for cooperation in this field in the next decade. The new mandate is for establishing an innovation-based technology partnership.

We are also focusing very strongly on further expansion of trade and economic ties which have yet to attain their potential. Bilateral trade was close to US$ 7.5 billion in 2009 and has registered a growth rate of 24 per cent in the first seven months of this year. We have a trade target of US$ 20 billion for the year 2015.
Investment cooperation is another area that will be discussed between the two leaders. Russia’s economic modernization and privatization programme offers unique opportunities to world-class Indian companies with frontline technologies and capacities. Similarly, India’s own economic transformation and our ambitious plans to expand our infrastructure offer very good opportunities for the Russian entrepreneurs. These matters will be discussed during the Indo-Russian Trade and Investment Forum which is likely to be held tomorrow at New Delhi. This Forum, established in 2007, is led by the Commerce Ministers from both sides. Hundreds of Indian and Russian businessmen are expected deliberate on specific projects at the Forum.

Already some US$ 4.25 billion of Indian investments have been made in Russia. More are in the pipeline. We have received about US$ 1 billion of Russian investments. Recent noteworthy investment agreements include a Memorandum of Understanding for cooperation signed on the 10th of December this year between NMDC and Severstal to establish a joint venture for setting up an integrated steel plant in Karnataka. We also expect a number of agreements to be signed by the private sector in the next few days including in the pharmaceuticals sector.

Prime Minister and President Medvedev will also focus on strengthening coordination on a number of regional and global issues. The issue of terrorism and the security situation in Afghanistan and Pakistan, amongst others, are likely to figure in the discussions. India and Russia have a similar perspective on the problem of terrorism as both countries have enunciated on several occasions, including through the Moscow Declaration on International Terrorism, during the November, 2001 Summit.

India and Russia are both members of G20. We work closely bilaterally as well as through BRIC to push for reforms of the international financial system. Thus the canvas is large. I have only shared with you some facets of our cooperation but would like to add that adequate groundwork, as is the practice, has already been done for this very important visit. We have, as you are aware, two high-level Inter-Governmental Commissions which basically provide the framework for the entire range of cooperative endeavours - (i) The Sixteenth India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technological and Cultural Cooperation met on the 18th of November in New Delhi. This is co-chaired by EAM and Deputy Prime Minister Sergei Ivanov who is a member of President's delegation. (ii) The Tenth Meeting of the Inter-Governmental Joint Commission on Military Technical Cooperation was also held in New Delhi on the 7th and 8th of October this year. It is chaired the Defence Ministers of both countries.

As such we are quite satisfied that the first decade of our strategic partnership has imparted a qualitatively new character to our bilateral ties and has deepened cooperation in a vast number of areas which are vital to our relationship. The Eleventh Summit meeting will be a step towards developing a blueprint for the next decade. Several agreements and Memoranda of Understanding in diverse areas, are likely to be concluded during the visit both between the Governments as well as the private sectors.

The two leaders will review all facets of our bilateral cooperation and also have an exchange of views on regional and international matters of interest. Thank you. We will be happy to take your questions.

Question: The Russian Ambassador in a press conference the other day talking about the nuclear liability Bill said that while Russia awaits an explanation note from India as to how it would be applied for future projects, but he also expressed his view that the home laws in India should be married to international obligations in a way that international commitments dominate. Could you react to that? Also, could we know just some of the Bollywood celebrities that he is expected to interact with when he visits Film City?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia) (Shri Ajay Bisaria): On the nuclear issue, as is being talked about in the media, there is a discussion ongoing for the technical and commercial deal for Kudankulam-3 and 4. As you know, the nuclear cooperation has extended for the last ten years. Very soon Kudankulam-1 will go critical in the next few months. Soon after that, within a few more months, Kudankulam-2 will go critical. Both these nuclear power plants were based upon technical commercial agreements that were signed before they went on steam. Similarly, during the visit of Prime Minister Putin we have signed a framework agreement which determines nuclear cooperation across a whole range of sectors including the setting up of nuclear power plants and exchange of technologies. So, we see the current conversation on technical, commercial terms for Kudankulam-3 and 4 as part of a process. This is purely a technical discussion that takes place between experts on both sides, is currently taking place. It includes a whole range of areas which includes cost and liability issues among them. I am sure we would reach a resolution to all the issues that are on the table.

Question: Sir, this is a follow-up on the liability issue. Do the Russians also have the same problems like the Americans or France or is it any different? Could you throw some light on if their problem also arises out of the supplier liability clause and Article 46?

Official Spokesperson: My colleague has already answered this question in great detail. Let me reiterate what I mentioned in my opening remarks that our cooperation in the energy sector, especially hydrocarbons and civil nuclear cooperation, are two important pillars of our cooperation. The civil nuclear cooperation is a very important sector. My colleague has already enumerated a number of steps that have been taken. We have the inter-governmental agreement which was concluded during the visit of Prime Minister Putin in March 2010, which provides a framework for active cooperation in this regard. We are two partners, we work together, and we are actively looking at all aspects to take this process of cooperation in this very important sector further.

Question: Sir, can you throw some light on the likely agreements on defence sector? The Russian Ambassador mentioned the fifth generation strike aircraft.

Joint Secretary (ERS): We are not right now speaking of outcomes naturally because this is a process of discussion. But overall in the defence relationship, you know that it is a continuous process and it is not really structured around the annual summit. There was a Military Technical Commission that met recently and a number of issues were discussed including agreements that had to be finalized. Even in the last annual summit where there was a very important agreement on after-sales services that was signed. There were a couple of agreements signed close to the visit of Prime Minister Putin, but agreements are signed even without the summit. You mentioned the talk of the fifth generation fighter aircraft. There is a discussion ongoing on that issue. But again that is a very long-term project for manufacture of advanced defence systems in India. It will have a number of milestones along the way and we do not know whether one or two of them will be achieved right now.

Question: We are not signing the agreement?

Joint Secretary (Eurasia): We are not saying that.

Official Spokesperson: We are saying precisely this that it is a very important sector and we are constantly discussing different facets of it, and it does not hinge on having a summit meeting. It is an ongoing process. We have had the meeting of the Military Technical Commission in October. We are actively looking at different facets.

Question: Do you expect some declaration or announcement on the next site for reactors for the Russians?

Joint Secretary (ERS): Again this is one of the nuclear issues that is being talked about and has been talked about for a while. But this is a very complex issue, the whole issue of sites for a nuclear power plant. As you know, after Kudankulam Russia has been offered the site at Haripur. Various technical issues related to this continue to be discussed at the technical level. So, that is the situation. As of this moment there is no change in that.

Question: I would like to ask about the very important agreement on people-to-people contacts regarding the students. There are problems of the medical specialists ...(Inaudible)... their diplomas from Russia are not being acknowledged in India. Can we expect that these discussions would result in any documents? Secondly, on the migration issues can we anticipate anything to be signed? And on the visa facilitation also.

Joint Secretary (ERS): On all the three very important areas you have mentioned there has been substantial progress. As you recall, this issue was discussed between Prime Minister Putin and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh of mutual recognition of degrees for higher educational degrees and for medical degrees. These are complex issues. They continue to be discussed and will be perhaps discussed at the summit as well. But we are not expecting any specific documents on these issues to be signed because particularly on medical issues there are complex issues of exchange of standards and exchange of details that are involved before we get down to signing a document. On other degrees, non-medical degrees, we already have a 1987 agreement with the USSR, and as you know Russia as the continuity state honours that agreement. So, we do have some legal framework in place. But we are continuing a conversation on this issue. On visa issues we have moved ahead and we are hopeful we will reach an understanding during the summit. On the issue illegal migration or the issue of migration in general there has been a lot of discussion and we are hoping to reach some understandings during the summit.

Question: In the year 2008 when our President made his first visit to India it was agreed that by the year 2013, the first Indian astronaut will go to the space from the Russian facilities in Kazakhstan ...(Inaudible)… by Russia; and in the year 2015 with the help of Russian specialists the first Indian astronaut will be launched from the Indian space launch platform. At what stage is this project right now? Has there been any progress? Is any such kind of project going to be discussed in this summit?

Joint Secretary (ERS): On space, as you know, it is a continuing collaboration of many years. We signed an agreement on GLONASS, as you may recall, in 2004. And we have a whole range of follow-up agreements on that. The two projects you have mentioned are extremely important - (i) the Lunar Exploration as we call it and (ii) the Human Space Flight. I am not sure about the timelines of when specific subprojects would be executed. But these are extremely important projects. There would be a substantive discussion on cooperation in the space sector. We are very satisfied with the kind of progress that we have achieved in cooperation in the space sector.

Question: How many agreements are you going to sign and what are they? Also, could you tell us a little bit about the economic side of the summit? The figures that you have given us sound very low. What is the reason for that?

Joint Secretary (ERS): On the agreements, as we said a number of them are going to be signed, but as we speak some are being discussed. So, we can naturally not predict how many of them will finally be signed. For that you would have to wait for the outcome briefing of the summit. But a number of agreements are expected in a whole range of areas including space, defence, and economic sectors. Coming back to economic issues, we do recognize that among all the strategic sectors in which this relationship spreads, the economic relationship continues to be somewhat weak. We have a strategic focus on trying to improve the level of trade and investment. That is the reason why a very ambitious target has been fixed of US$ 20 billion by 2015. The current statistics do show, the ones we have from the Russian side, that there has been a healthy increase in the trade levels over this year, 2010, as well of almost 20 per cent. But the short point here is that both sides recognize that trade is not commensurate to potential and we need to do a lot more to get the trade to a higher level. Two sectors which we have identified specifically are cooperation in IT and cooperation in pharmaceuticals and we expect some discussion to take place on both these sectors. In the IT sector there is huge opportunity also particularly in the Skolkova project that Russia has identified in Moscow, as well as in outsourcing, in telemedicine, and various identified sectors in Russia. Pharmaceuticals is also seen as a large US$ 15-16 billion market in Russia. That is again a huge opportunity. So, we have identified a number of sectors. Tomorrow the Trade and Investment Forum will meet. The primary purpose of that Forum is to develop more business-to-business contracts which we hope will be signed, and new directions to this particular aspect of the relationship.

Question: But why, what is the problem that it is so low?

Official Spokesperson: We have the figures for you for the last few years and I can take you through the figures. If you look at the graph, it points upwards. We find that there is an accelerating trend now. For example, this year the 24 per cent growth that we are seeing should take the bilateral trade close to US$ 10 billion. I think it marks a significant increase. And it is not a onetime thing; we expect this trend to continue. New areas are being identified, for example fertilizers. We are importing now large quantities of fertilizers from Russia. We are looking at taking this relationship even further. Not a buyer-seller relationship but we are even looking at joint ventures. We are looking at joint investments. The point that Ajay made was very significant. We are in fact now focusing very big time on B2B links. Hitherto it was more G2G. But through the Forum that is going to meet tomorrow, basically business people from both sides are coming together and looking at specific projects. Simultaneously a conducive environment is being created through facilitating or easing the visa process which has been a bit of a damper. Hopefully this should be behind us. The banking links, which were not very strong between the two countries, have been strengthened. I think we should look at the systematic manner in which we are addressing this aspect. Look at the Russian privatization programme for example. It is believed that something like US$ 32 billion worth of privatization opportunities would be available. There are business opportunities in India’s infrastructure development. So, you have a whole range of areas in which you can work together to try and develop synergies.

Question: Sir, two questions. One is this Nepa class boat which is supposed to be transferred from Russia to India. Can you tell us when it is likely to be coming in and if there will be discussions on the transfer during this visit? The other does not relate to Russia but if you can just give us an idea of why there is a discrepancy between the Chinese version of the LAC and the Indian, of 1500 kilometres, if it relates to the 1963 agreement between China and Pakistan?

Official Spokesperson: We will be very happy to take questions pertaining to the visit of President Medvedev. On the first about cooperation in the defence sector, again we have taken you through various facets of it to the extent that we could. Obviously, the timelines and details, when they are being discussed, can not be shared with the media, which you can very well appreciate. But suffice it to say that we have robust cooperation. It is not just a buyer-seller relationship but we are looking at joint development, R&D and so on. As and when the initiatives fructify we will bring it into the public domain.

Thank you very much.
532. Interview of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to the Russian News Agencies.

New Delhi, December 20, 2010.

Q 1. This year, we mark the 10th anniversary of signing the historic and ground-breaking in terms of international diplomatic practice Declaration of Russia - India Strategic Partnership. India has established strategic partnership with a number of other major countries ever since. Do you think there is difference in the understanding of the concept "strategic partnership" as applied to Russia? And in this context - what does New Delhi expect from the forthcoming visit of President Dmitry Medvedev?

Ans. The Annual Summit that will take place in New Delhi will mark the first decade of the India-Russia Strategic Partnership. Over the last ten years, there has been a significant expansion, and deepening, in our bilateral cooperation. There is confidence on both sides that neither country will seek to develop ties with third countries at the expense of the other's vital interest. Overall, therefore, I feel we are in a position to chart an even more ambitious path for the India-Russia Strategic Partnership in the coming decades, and this will raise our bilateral ties to an even higher level.

The discussions on international issues will include the situation in the Afghanistan-Pakistan region that impacts the security of both India and Russia. We need to understand why terrorist infrastructure in the region has continued to survive despite the best efforts of the international community. We will discuss the expansion of the UNSC, in both permanent and non-permanent categories, which we feel is an important item in the ongoing discussions taking place on reforms of global governance structures that were created in the 20th Century, so that they are capable of meeting the challenges of the 21st Century.

We have intensive cooperation programmes in the space, nuclear and defence sectors that will also be discussed. India is also keen to establish a strategic energy partnership with Russia, based on nuclear energy and oil and gas, that will further the energy security interests of both countries. Economic modernization in Russia and the economic transformation in India have thrown up tremendous opportunities for both countries that must be explored. We have tremendous scientific talent in both countries that can help forge an innovation-based technology partnership between the two countries.

These are broadly some of the important areas that the Prime Minister will cover in his discussions with President Medvedev.

Q 2. Russia is geared up for modernization and innovatively higher level of the country’s industrial, scientific and technical basis. This programme draws in razor-edge international experience including that from India. How do you assess the opportunities for broader India-Russia collaboration in the innovative field?

Ans. All the ingredients for a dynamic economic partnership, based on technology and innovation, are already in place.

Russia and India have both launched ambitious economic modernization programmes. Russia seeks outside capital and technology, and there are many Indian companies that have acquired good financial and technological capacities and want to expand their global operations. In the hydrocarbon sector, our energy security interests are perfectly matched; India is a large and growing consumer of oil and gas; Russia, as one of the world’s largest producers of oil and gas, seeks long term and reliable customers in this area. We have an extensive programme of S&T cooperation in place, which ensures continuous interaction and collaboration among our scientific communities; a new Integrated Long Term Technology Programme (ILTP) for cooperation in the field of Science and Technology is likely to be signed at this Summit. We also have the CEO’s Council and the India-Russia Trade and Investment Forum that are functioning well, and providing platforms for our business communities to interact with each other.

In the coming decades, we, therefore, need to ensure that these elements come together, and create the conditions required for a substantial growth in our economic ties so that they begin to reflect, not just the size of our respective economies, but also the special closeness of our bilateral ties.

Q 3. For many years, international terrorism and drug trafficking have remained serious factors of instability in South Asia and the neighbouring region. Russia and India have the first-hand knowledge of the danger that international terrorism poses to the world and we are well aware where it has built its nest. What initiatives including those based on Russian and Indian approaches could contribute to faster elimination of the existing hotbeds of tension?

Ans. Both India and Russia share common concerns about the threat posed by terrorism emanating from our shared neighbourhood, i.e. Afghanistan and Pakistan radiating into the region, including Central Asia, as also to Russia. We are also aware of the nexus between drug trafficking and terrorist financing. We have an ongoing multi-layered dialogue mechanism with Russia through which we seek to exchange views and information on these issues.

Q 4. Russia and India are on the threshold of another remarkable date; August 2011 will see the 40th anniversary of the Treaty of Peace, Friendship and Cooperation which laid a sound foundation for comprehensive development of our relationship. You are among the statesmen who have built these ties. What kind of personal associations our country has for you? What emotions and thoughts occur to you at the mention of Russia?

Ans. I welcome particularly this question. Though we often refer to the India-Russia Strategic Partnership as being ten years old, we must never forget the rich heritage and history of our ties spanning over half a century. The Treaty of Peace, Friendship and Cooperation between the Republic of India and the Soviet Union signed by External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh and Minister of Foreign Affairs A.A. Gromyko in August 1971, is a landmark event in the historical strategic partnership that has existed between the two countries.

I belong to a generation of Indians that has not forgotten your country's direct contribution to India's quest for security and self-sustained economic development. President Medvedev is meeting students from the Indian Institute of Technology in Mumbai. This is an institute that was built with the assistance of the Soviet Union, and has trained thousands of young engineers and researchers that are today contributing to the Indian economy. There are many other such temples of development throughout our country, covering different sectors that were built with the assistance of your country.

For me, it has always been a great privilege and honour to be associated with the India-Russia relationship.
Q 5. You were a close friend of famous artist and public figure of India and Russia Svyatoslav Roerich and his wife Devika Rani and personally contributed to immortalizing the memory of him in Bangalore. Now as Co-chairman of the Indo-Russian Inter-Governmental Commission, you perform the honorary patronage of the International Roerich Memorial Trust and the Roerich museum estate in the Himalayas. How do you view the prospects for cooperation in preserving the Roerichs’ spiritual, scientific and cultural heritage in India which is unique not only for our peoples, but the civilization as a whole?

Ans. Roerich heritage has a very special meaning for both India and Russia. Nikolai Roerich was an intellectual giant of his age and a multifaceted personality. He was a great painter, philosopher, writer, educationist and thinker. His inner urge led him to embark on his celebrated Central Asian expedition of 1920s and finally it was India, in the surroundings of Kullu where he chose to live. Svyatoslav Roerich, his son, followed in the footsteps of his father and was a genius in his own right, and a world-renowned painter. Married to screen idol Devika Rani, the couple were famous and much adored in India. The Roerich family’s heritage is a great symbol of friendship between peoples of India and Russia.

Along with Deputy Prime Minister Sergey Ivanov, I co-chair the International Roerich Memorial Trust. The Trust is doing great work in propagating the memory of the Roerichs and furthering their works. Both India and Russia attach great importance to the work of the Trust and we hope to impart renewed vigour to its activities.
533. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the meeting of the Fourth India - Russia Forum on Trade and Investment and signing of India-Russia Protocol on Trade and Investment.

New Delhi, December 20, 2010.

The Fourth India-Russia Forum on Trade & Investment was organized by the Ministry of Commerce & Industry and Ministry of Economic Development of the Russian Federation, held here today. Mr. Sergei Ivanov, Deputy Prime Minister of the Russian Federation, and Shri Anand Sharma, Minister of Commerce & Industry of India, participated in the meeting of the Forum.

During the Forum, the following was agreed and a Protocol was signed by Shri R.P. Singh, Secretary, Department of Industrial Policy & Promotion, Ministry of Commerce and Industry and Mr. S.S. Voskresensky, Deputy Minister of Economic Development, Russian Federation.

1. Both sides expressed satisfaction at the growth of bilateral trade and investments while recognizing that the level of economic relations still remained modest compared to the sizes of the two economies and their potential. In this context, both Sides noted the positive contribution of the Forum in strengthening bilateral economic engagement through establishment of direct B2B contacts.

2. Both sides agreed that enhancement of bilateral investment and trade cooperation is one of the main ways to widen the ambit of and further strengthen the strategic partnership between India and Russia.

3. Both sides noted with satisfaction the signing during the Forum of agreements between Russian and Indian companies in different sectors.

4. Both sides also welcomed the decisions taken during the 16th session of the IRIGC-TEC held in New Delhi on 18 November 2010.

5. During the Forum, presentations on bilateral investment opportunities and prospects for cooperation in the IT sector as well as sectoral business round tables were organized. Salient points of the discussions are given below.
Chemicals and Fertilizers

6. Both sides recognized the complementarity between the resources in Russia and the growing demand for fertilizers in India. Both sides also agreed that they must pursue possibility of joint investment in the fertilizers sector in two countries as well as in other resource-rich countries with the possibility of buy-back arrangement. There are sufficient opportunities for the manufacture of nitrogenous fertilizers using natural gas feedstock from Russia. Steps should also be taken for setting up of the joint venture for mining of potash and phosphate and production of phosphatic fertilizers for consumption in India.

7. In line with this Forum’s desire during its last Session, it was noted with satisfaction that an inter-governmental MoU was concluded on cooperation in the mineral, fertilizers sector during the visit of Russian Prime Minister to India in March 2010, and that fertilizer had become one of the largest items of trade between India and Russia.

8. Indian side proposed to the Russian business entities that they should leverage the conducive investment atmosphere in India and invest in the Indian chemical industry. Indian Government is setting up the Petroleum, Chemicals and Petro-Chemicals Investment Regions (PCPIR) in Vishakhapatnam, Dahej in Gujarat and Haldia in West Bengal. Russian companies may consider investing in these regions.

Pharmaceuticals and Life Sciences

9. Both sides expressed satisfaction over the progress made in cooperation in the pharmaceutical sector, called for investment in the joint ventures in two countries and agreed that there exists huge potential for participation by Indian companies in the Pharma 2020 program of the Government of the Russian Federation.

IT & Communication

10. Both sides agreed that there is enormous potential for cooperation in the IT Sector for mutual benefit. The Forum also recognized the need to identify specific projects for collaboration between Indian and Russian companies in areas such as, establishment of techno-parks, BPO, KPO, IT Skills and telemedicine. Both sides also felt that finalization of the framework inter-governmental MoU on Cooperation in the area of IT would lead to increased interaction between the two countries in IT Sector.

11. The Russian side invited Indian companies to participate in the Skolkovo Innovation Center.

12. Both sides expressed satisfaction on increasing cooperation between two countries in the area of telecommunication. Indian Telecom industry is one of the fastest growing in the world and this sector offers consideration potential for investment by Russian companies. Further, there is also scope for Indian companies in Russia in the area of E-governance, since Russia is targeting to provide all State services electronically by 2015. Other potential areas for cooperation include, telemedicine, IT training and education.

Industrial Co-operation

13. Both sides noted that India and Russia have been long-standing partners in steel sector and this partnership has yielded excellent results over the period. There is considerable scope for participation in modernization and establishments of steel manufacturing facilities in two countries, which needs to be explored.

14. Indian companies like SAIL and MMTC have expressed interest in procuring coking and thermal coal from Russia. Indian companies can also participate in development of coal projects in Russia to meet the demand for coking coal for India’s increasing steel production.

15. Both sides noted the important role played by Russian companies in setting up industrial units in core sectors in India during the post-Independence era. This was largely in the Government sector. In the current environment, while this process will continue, the private sector in the two countries has to assume a greater key role in promoting industrial cooperation.

16. Both sides expressed satisfaction over conclusion of long-term contracts between Indian and Russian companies for direct trade of rough diamonds. Indian side requested that in view of the potential of the Indian market, signing of such long-term agreements with MMTC Limited, Hindustan Diamond Company Private Limited (HDCPL) and Surat Rough Diamond Sourcing India Limited would greatly promote cooperation in this sector.

17. Both sides emphasized the need for identification of mutually agreed areas of cooperation in the mining sector. It was also proposed that both sides identify respective partner organizations from the two countries and work out a mechanism for contact and information.

Energy

18. Both sides outlined the prospects for enhanced cooperation between Indian and Russian companies in the Oil and Gas Sector in the following areas:

(i) upstream - oil and gas field

(ii) downstream - construction of refinery

(iii) joint projects in third countries both in upstream and downstream projects

(iv) participation of Russian companies in such projects in India.

19. Both sides agreed to contribute to cooperation in the trade and investment area at the regional level, especially in the area of energy efficiency, new technologies.

Banking and Finance

20. Both sides urged financial organizations including banks of the two sides to work towards providing banking services to further trade and investment relations between the two countries. Both sides also welcomed the opening of representative office of Gazprombank in India.

Trade & Investment relations

21. Both sides agreed on the need for proactively enhancing the investment climate, as well as furthering mutual trade in accordance with their respective relevant legislations.

22. Indian business representatives in the Forum urged that the proposed agreement on mutual recognition/equivalence of standards and conformity assessment procedures for facilitating trade of goods especially agriculture... and animal products between India and Russia be expedited. They also called for necessary measures to be taken to enable export of meat products from India to Russia including through recognition of the Indian certification mechanism.

23. Both sides intend to continue the useful and regular dialogue, placing special emphasis on the further development of bilateral cooperation on issues regarding modernization.

24. The two sides agreed that strengthening the contacts of businesses between India and Russia is very critical and underlined that all existing mechanisms should be utilized effectively for this purpose. Both sides re-expressed that India Russia CEO Council is an important mechanism available for B2B contract between two countries and it has an important role to play in identifying specific areas of cooperation and impediments faced by the businesses of the two countries.

25. Both sides agreed to expand cooperation to implement the decisions made in this Forum for furthering of bilateral investment & trade relations.

26. Noting the success of "Russia-India Business-dialogue" held within the framework of Saint Petersburg International Economic Forum (SPIEF) 2010, the Russian side invited participation of Indian companies in the 15th session of SPIEF in June 2011.

27. The next meeting of the India-Russia Forum on Trade & Investment would be held in 2011 in Russia on a mutually agreed date.
534. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the speech of Commerce Minister Anand Sharma to the India-Russia Forum on Trade and Investment.

New Delhi, December 20, 2010.

Addressing the Plenary Session “Prospects of Russian-Indian Trade and Investment Relations Development” of 4th India-Russia Forum on Trade and Investments, here today, Shri Anand Sharma, Union Minister of Commerce and Industry, said that the target of US $ 20 billion trade by 2015 is achievable provided all stakeholders put in concerted high efforts to meet it and added that “let us work together for a renewed thrust on bilateral trade and investment”. Speaking on the occasion, Shri Sharma said that there is need to expand the trade basket to include value added items in areas of applied technologies, information technology, telecommunications, automobile components, gems and jewellery and energy. There are ample opportunities for investment in two countries and both have us to exploit in our mutual benefit, he added. The session was attended by the Deputy Prime Minister of the Russian Federation Mr. Sergei Ivanov; Minister of Economic Development and Trade of the Russian Federation Ms. Elvira Nabiullina; Shri R.P. Singh, Secretary, Department of Industrial Policy & Promotion, apex chambers and senior officials from both sides.

During the interaction, Shri Sharma stressed that “we need to make concerted efforts to reinvigorate our economic cooperation and integrate it with market forces. While the political responsibility for expanding ties with other countries is the primary task of governments, business to business relations have become a critical element in the overall architecture of interaction between countries in this age of increasingly de-regulated economies, private sector dynamism and globalization”.

Shri Sharma stated that Indian and Russian economies have natural areas of synergy and India is ready to share its experience and expertise in setting up Information Technology parks. “We need to focus the possibilities of cooperation in the IT sector as the scope is immense. Now it is up to the business communities to seize the initiative”, he added.
Regarding infrastructure, Shri Sharma underlined that India’s quest for new facilities in power, transportation, urban development, communication, etc has truly taken off. In the next seven years, India will be spending $1.7 trillion to meet its infrastructure requirements. The government has instituted friendly policies for inviting FDI in these sectors and has addressed many areas to promote public private partnership as a plank of infrastructure development.

"Both countries should make available to each other the investment regulations and ways of doing business. At the same time, I would urge industry associations to increase their presence in each other’s countries", Shri Sharma said.

The India Russia Intergovernmental Commission on Trade and Economic Cooperation has been a dedicated facilitator of promoting bilateral economic ties. The 16th meeting held in November this year, addressed a number of roadblocks to increasing trade and it was stressed that the trade level of less than $5 billion in 2009-10 was substantially below the potential that can be attained by two large and rapidly growing economies such as India and Russia.
535. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the signing of the Contract to Design and Develop the Fifth generation Fighter Aircraft.

New Delhi, December 21, 2010.

A Contract for Preliminary Design of the Indo-Russian Fifth Generation Fighter Aircraft was signed between Hindustan Aeronautics Limited (HAL), Rosoboronexport and Sukhoi here today. The Project involves design and development of a Fifth Generation Fighter Aircraft that will have advanced features such as stealth, supercruise, ultra-manoeuvrability, highly integrated avionics suite, enhanced situational awareness, internal carriage of weapons and Network Centric Warfare capabilities.

The aircraft to be jointly developed is termed Perspective Multi-role Fighter (PMF). PMF draws upon the basic structural and system design of the Russian FGFA Technology Demonstrator with modifications to meet IAF specifications which are much more stringent. The broad scope of bilateral cooperation during the joint project covers the design & development of the PMF, its productionization and joint marketing to the third countries. Programme options include the design & development of a twin seater variant and the integration of an advanced engine with higher thrust at a later stage.

Today's contract is only the first in a series of such contracts which will cover different stages of this complex programme. The total cost including options and the value of production aircraft will make this the biggest Defence programme ever in the history of India involving production of over 200-250 aircraft.

The Contract was signed by Mr. A Isaykin, General Director, Rosoboronexport and Mr. M Pogosyan, General Director RAC MiG & Sukhoi from the Russian side and Mr. Ashok Nayak, Chairman, HAL and Mr. NC Agarwal, Director (D&D), HAL from the Indian side at Delhi.
Joint Statement issued during the visit of the Russian President Dmitry Medvedev: 'Celebrating a Decade of the India-Russian Federation Strategic Partnership and Looking Ahead'.

New Delhi, December 21, 2010.

1. The President of the Russian Federation H.E. Mr. Dmitry Medvedev paid an official visit to India on 21-22 December 2010 at the invitation of the Prime Minister of the Republic of India H.E. Dr. Manmohan Singh for the 10th Annual Summit meeting under the India Russia Strategic Partnership. The sides noted that the decade which passed since signing of the Declaration on Strategic Partnership between the Republic of India and the Russian Federation on 3 October 2000 in New Delhi had proved the historical significance of this document. Reviewing the breadth and depth of India-Russia relations, the sides observed that in the last 10 years the relationship between the two countries had been built up to the level of a special and privileged strategic partnership. They stressed that this partnership had been marked by close coordination of foreign policy approaches to a wide range of international and regional issues; large-scale trade and economic interaction involving modernization and deployment of high-technology; greater military and technical cooperation, including in the joint manufacture of modern armaments and the transfer of technologies; and a warm traditional friendship between the peoples of the two countries, particularly manifested in cultural and people-to-people bonds.

2. During their discussions in New Delhi, the Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation reviewed the rapid progress that had been achieved in all principal areas of bilateral cooperation, including in the military-technical, energy, and high technology sectors of space and tele-communications. The sides also noted the strong congruence of their views on regional and international issues of importance to the security of both countries.

Intensifying Trade and Investments

3. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation noted the substantial progress that had been made in bilateral trade in recent years despite the considerable potential of our trade and economic cooperation which is still to be fulfilled. The sides agreed to continue their efforts to achieve the strategic target of bilateral trade volume of US $ 20 billion by 2015. The sides recognized that considerable potential exists for mutually beneficial investments by the Russian Federation and India in the privatization programmes and programmes aimed at fostering technological innovation in their respective economies. They emphasised the important role that the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Trade, Economic, Scientific, Technical and Cultural Cooperation and its Co-Chairs play. They also noted that the conclusion of the agreement on simplification of visa procedures for nationals of the Republic of India and the Russian Federation, at the Summit, would help enhance contacts between the business communities of the two countries. Both sides agreed to consider the possibility of a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement taking into account the implementation of the agreements on constituting the Customs Union between Russia, Kazakhstan and Belarus, after due consultation with all parties involved.

Deepening the Energy Partnership

4. The sides noted that the Russian Federation as a major energy producing country and India as a major energy consuming country viewed bilateral energy cooperation as an important pillar of the Strategic Partnership. Both sides expressed satisfaction with the progress in bilateral cooperation in the nuclear energy sector and looked forward to further broadening and strengthening ties in this area. They reviewed the progress that has been made for the commissioning of Units 1&2 of the Kudankulam Nuclear Power Project and the discussions for setting up additional units at Kudankulam including Units 3&4. India and the Russian Federation also agreed on the need for collaboration in scientific research in nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. The Russian side welcomed India's decision to set up a Global Centre for Nuclear Energy Partnership and agreed to discuss future cooperation with this Centre. The sides also agreed to consider cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy with third countries.

5. The sides also reviewed the ongoing efforts to establish joint cooperation ventures between Indian and Russian companies in the oil and gas sectors. It was agreed that the inter-governmental agreement on cooperation in the hydrocarbon sector signed during the Summit, must serve as an effective enabling legal mechanism to expedite governmental clearances on both sides to facilitate the creation and operation of such joint ventures. The sides agreed to promote specific projects to encourage direct business-to-business dialogue between Indian and Russian oil and gas companies, to ensure that the contacts result in concrete and mutually beneficial commercial agreements between the companies including joint ventures in upstream and downstream activities in India, Russia, and third countries.

Innovation as the Driver of S&T Cooperation

6. The sides reviewed progress made in bilateral scientific and technological cooperation. They expressed satisfaction at the extension of the Integrated Long Term Program (ILTP) for scientific and technical cooperation for another decade and its focus on identifying innovation-led technology programs. The creation of new and innovative technologies would be at the heart of the respective economic modernization programs in the two countries. Continuous efforts would be made to identify programmes that would be built on the existing linkages between the Indian and Russian scientific establishments. The new Indian-Russian S&T Centre would facilitate such programs.

New Prospects in Space

7. The sides agreed to intensify cooperation in a broad range of flagship cooperation projects in the space sector, including the lunar exploration, human space flight and Youth Sat projects. They also appreciated the progress being made in India's utilisation of Russia's Global Navigation Satellite System, GLONASS.

Stepping Up Military Technical Cooperation

8. Both sides acknowledged that the traditionally close cooperation between the two countries in the military-technical field is a major pillar of the India-Russia Strategic Partnership, and a reflection of the trust and confidence that has built up between the two countries over the last half century. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation reviewed the outcomes of the Tenth Meeting of the India-Russia Inter-Governmental Commission on Military Technical Cooperation held in October 2010 in New Delhi, and shared the assessment that the Agreement on a Long Term Program for Military and Technical Cooperation for the period 2011-2020 signed in December last year would further accelerate progress of our interaction transforming it from a buyer-seller format to a more substantive engagement that includes joint research and development, manufacturing and marketing activities. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation also expressed satisfaction at the regular service-to-service interactions, and joint exercises that have taken place between the defence forces of the two countries. They noted with satisfaction that the third India - Russia Joint Military Exercises held in India on October 13-23, 2010 focused on counter terrorism operations and had concluded successfully. The sides agreed to make efforts to continuously upgrade joint military exercises in all forms including in the field of counter terrorism.

Coordination of Approaches to International and Regional Issues

9. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation observed that coordination of approaches of India and the Russian Federation to various international and regional issues was an effective way of raising contribution of both the countries to strengthening global peace, security and stability and to building a just and democratic world order. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation agreed that the changes taking place in the international system provide an opportunity to build an international order that is inclusive and democratic, based on the supremacy of international law, and adhering to the goals and principles enshrined in the UN Charter. They reiterated the view that by further intensifying the bilateral India -Russia strategic partnership both countries would be able to better respond to the challenges thrown up by these changes.

Strengthening the Central Coordinating Role of the United Nations

10. Both sides noted that an important element of the India - Russia Strategic Partnership is their joint activities that are aimed at strengthening the central coordinating role of the United Nations Security Council in the maintenance of global peace and security as well as to increase the efficiency and authority of the United Nations in other areas of global governance. In this context the sides agree to further strengthen their cooperation on issues related to the reform of the UN and its Security Council. The reform of the UN Security Council should be carried out in a manner that reflects contemporary realities and makes this body more representative and effective in dealing with both present-day and emerging challenges. The Russian Federation supports India as a deserving and strong candidate for a permanent seat in an expanded UN Security Council. The two sides also decided to work closely in the UN Security Council during the 2011-12 period when India occupies a non-permanent seat in the Council.

Promoting Disarmament and Non-Proliferation Efforts

11. India and the Russian Federation, as responsible states, possessing advanced nuclear technologies, share the objective of preventing proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, including preventing their possible acquisition by terrorist groups. Both sides agreed on the need for all states possessing nuclear weapons to accelerate concrete progress on the steps leading to global nuclear disarmament in a way that promotes international stability, peace and undiminished and increased security for all. India welcomed the signing of the Treaty between the Russian Federation and the United States of America on Measures for the Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms. India and the Russian Federation are interested in strengthening multilateral export control regimes as an important component of the global non-proliferation regime. In this regard, the Russian side expressed readiness to assist and promote a discussion and positive decision in the NSG on India's full membership in the NSG, and welcomed India's intention to seek full membership. India underscored its determination to actively contribute to international efforts aimed at strengthening nuclear non-proliferation regime. Russia also took into positive consideration India's interest in full membership in MTCR and the Wassenaar Arrangement.

While recognizing the inherent right of states to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, India and the Russian Federation stress the need for all states to comply with their respective obligations on non-proliferation. The sides support the central role of the IAEA and its safeguards system in the promotion of peaceful uses of nuclear energy, in accordance with its statute. The sides intend to support international efforts aimed at promoting peaceful uses of nuclear energy as part of a proliferation-resistant architecture of international cooperation, based on strict implementation of non-proliferation obligations. As supplier states, the sides support multilateral approaches to the nuclear fuel cycle at the IAEA.

Strengthening Security Cooperation in Asia and the Indian and Pacific Ocean Regions

12. The sides noted that there were already several examples of successful regional economic and security cooperation formats operating in Asia and the Indian and Pacific Ocean regions. In this context the sides noted the successful interaction between India, Russia and China in the IRC format and the importance of this regional format in fostering dialogue and cooperation on global and regional issues between these three major states and great civilizations of the region in accordance with the Joint declaration of the 10th IRC Ministerial meeting held on 15 November 2010 in Wuhan.

13. The sides noted that South Asian Association of Regional Cooperation (SAARC) member states have moved forward to a stage of successful implementation of regional economic integration projects, bringing development benefits to the entire region. Russia will consider the possibility of establishing cooperation with SAARC.

14. The sides noted that the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) had emerged as an important factor for regional security and cooperation in the Eurasian region. The President of the Russian Federation welcomed India's intention to join the organisation as a full member, which he said would significantly increase the SCO's political weight and give a new quality and dimension to cooperation in this association. The Russian Federation agreed to make efforts along with other SCO members to accelerate the process of India's entry into the organisation.

15. In their discussions on Asia, the Indian and Pacific Ocean regions, the Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation noted that the economies in the regions were increasingly becoming the main drivers of global economic growth and prosperity and that it was important for India and Russia to work towards the creation of a transparent, open, inclusive and balanced security and cooperation architecture in the Asia Pacific region based upon universally agreed principles of international law and giving due consideration to the legitimate interests of all states. In this regard, the sides agreed to consult further with each other. The sides stressed the need for international cooperative measures to counter both traditional and non-traditional security threats such as terrorism, extremism and weapons of mass destruction proliferation, drug trafficking, organized crime as well as the need for strengthening maritime security and freedom of navigation in accordance with the universally accepted principles of international law, including combating piracy at sea, and to address the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters. The sides resolve to enhance confidence-building amongst all States of the region with a view to promoting regional peace and stability.

16. The sides noted that the mechanism of the East Asia Summits (EAS) provides new opportunities for strategic dialogue on all aspects of security and cooperation in the Asia-Pacific Region. The Prime Minister of India welcomed Russia's joining the EAS, which is now encompassing all key States of the region.

17. Russia affirmed that India joining the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Forum (APEC) would enhance the APEC potential and effectiveness and expand trade and investment cooperation in the region. Russia supports India's application to join the APEC and intends to work in this direction when the moratorium on the new membership is lifted.

18. The sides noted the importance of the mechanism of Defence Ministers of ASEAN and ASEAN dialogue partners (ADMM-Plus) as a key component of a robust, effective, open and inclusive regional security architecture that would enable the ADMM to cooperate with the eight “Plus” countries to address our common security challenges.

Promoting Cooperation among Emerging Economies

19. The sides noted that BRIC plays an important role in promoting a multi-polar world order as also a more harmonious international system based on international law, equality, mutual respect, cooperation, coordinated action and collective decision-making. BRIC has also played an important role in promoting international economic and financial stability. The sides observed that meetings of BRIC Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors have been useful. The sides welcomed the proposed inclusion of South Africa into the BRIC process in 2011.

Combating the Scourge of Terrorism

20. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation recalled the bilateral Moscow Declaration between India and Russia on International Terrorism signed on 6 November 2001 in Moscow. Both sides reaffirmed that international terrorism is a threat to peace and security, a grave violation of human rights, and a crime against humanity. They agreed that there is no justification whatsoever for any act of terrorism, and that multi-ethnic democratic countries like India and Russia were especially vulnerable to acts of terrorism which are attacks against the values and freedoms enshrined in their societies. The sides strongly condemned those who support terrorism noting that States that aid, abet or shelter terrorists are as guilty of acts of terrorism as their actual perpetrators. Both sides reaffirmed the need for all States to combine efforts to vanquish this evil. India and the Russian Federation reaffirmed the central role of the United Nations in the combat against international terrorism and in this context called for an early completion of the negotiations on the UN's draft Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. The sides agreed that all terrorist networks must be defeated. They called upon Pakistan to expeditiously bring all the perpetrators, authors and accomplices of the November 2008 Mumbai attacks to justice. India expressed sympathy for the victims of the terrorist attacks in the Moscow metro stations in March 2010, and expressed support for the Government of the Russian Federation's efforts to eliminate terrorism from Russian soil.

Stabilising the Afghan Situation

21. The sides expressed concern at the deteriorating security situation in Afghanistan, where successful stabilization will be possible only after the elimination of safe havens and infrastructure for terrorism and violent extremism that are present in Afghanistan and Pakistan. In this context the two sides also underscored the importance of stepped up action by the International Security Assistance Force in combating production and trafficking of illegal narcotics in Afghanistan. The sides welcomed the Afghan Government's policy of reintegrating those individuals who agree to give up violence, adhere to the Afghan constitution and do not have ties with al Qaeda and other terrorist groups. Both sides highlighted the need for strict observance of the sanctions regime against persons and entities listed by the UNSCR 1267 Sanctions Committee.

Iran's Nuclear Energy Program

22. India and Russia reiterated that all possible efforts should be made to address the Iranian nuclear issue through dialogue and negotiations and agreed that Iran has the right to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in conformity with its international obligations. The sides call on Iran to comply with the provisions of the respective UN Security Council resolutions and extend full cooperation with the IAEA.

Recovery and Strengthening of Global Economy, Reforming the International Financial Architecture

23. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation agreed that while a global economic recovery was discernible, it remained fragile, and characterized by wide disparities in the experiences of individual countries. To progress towards the shared goal of strong, sustainable and balanced growth it is essential for G20 countries to fully implement the Seoul Action Plan adopted at the recent G20 summit. The sides welcomed the reform of the World Bank and reiterated their commitment to the successful completion of the reform of the International Monetary Fund as agreed to at the G-20 Seoul Summit which will be a significant achievement in the general reform of the international financial architecture.

Countering Climate Change

24. The sides stressed the importance of enhancing international efforts to combat climate change under the aegis of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change. They expressed satisfaction with the outcome of the Cancun Climate Conference and agreed that the post
Cancun negotiations should be part of a comprehensive package covering all the pillars of the Bali Action Plan.

25. The Prime Minister of India and the President of the Russian Federation expressed satisfaction with the deepening engagement between the two countries, which they agreed was in keeping with the vision enunciated in the "Declaration of Strategic Partnership between the Republic of India and the Russian Federation" signed on 3 October 2000. They resolved to continue their efforts to shape and advance the India-Russia Privileged Strategic Partnership to an even higher qualitative level. The President of the Russian Federation extended an invitation to the Prime Minister of India to visit Russia for the next Summit; the invitation was accepted with pleasure.

538. Opening statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Joint Press Interaction with Russian President.

New Delhi, December 21, 2010.

Your Excellency Mr. Dmitry Medvedev, President of the Russian Federation, Distinguished Representatives of the Media.

I am delighted to welcome His Excellency President Medvedev to India for the 11th India - Russia Annual Summit. Our Summit this year marks the completion of ten years of the India-Russia Strategic Partnership. This is also the third Annual Summit meeting that I have held with President Medvedev. We deeply value the role that President Medvedev has played in taking forward our relationship.

The tradition of Annual Summits with Russia symbolizes the richness of our ties with Russia. Russia is a time tested friend of India that has stood by us in our times of need in the past. Ours is a special and privileged strategic partnership. It is a partnership that has and will continue to develop independent of our relations with other countries.

Our talks have been comprehensive and result oriented. We have signed several important agreements covering a large number of sectors. This reflects our mutual desire to bring our cooperation in other areas at par with our traditionally strong cooperation in the defence and nuclear fields.

I am particularly glad that we have concluded an inter-governmental agreement on cooperation in the oil and gas sector. This is the result of a lot of hard work put in by both sides, and reflects the complementarities between our two economies. We will work towards its implementation through a mutually agreed roadmap.

We welcome the increasing role being played by the India-Russia Forum on Trade and Investment and the CEOs Council. We have signed agreements in the pharmaceuticals and information technology sectors. These are areas which have immense possibilities for expansion. The agreement on visa simplification that has been signed will help in ease of travel of citizens of our countries. We have also decided to enhance cultural exchanges.

Long before other countries it was Russia which helped us in the development of our scientific and industrial base. I am therefore happy that we have renewed the Integrated Long Term Technology Programme with a mandate to establish an innovation based technology partnership.

In the field of defence cooperation, we reviewed the ongoing projects, including those relating to joint design, development and production.

Discussions have progressed on the construction of additional Russian designed nuclear reactors at Kudankulam, and we have signed an agreement to broaden scientific and technical cooperation in the field of nuclear energy.

We also reviewed the situation in our region and ways and means to further strengthen our coordination on international issues. We have agreed to intensify our consultations on Afghanistan. We look forward to working with Russia in the United Nations Security Council during our term over the next two years. We will work closely within the BRIC and G20 framework.

Our relations with Russia are a factor of peace and stability in the region and the world. This Summit has added even more substance to our cooperation, for which I once again thank President Medvedev and the government and people of Russia.

Thank you.
SOLVENIA

539. Remarks by Minister of State Shrimati Preneet Kaur at the Bled Strategic Forum on 'Global Outlook for the Next Decade'.

Bled (Slovenia), August 29, 2010.

Excellencies, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen,

I feel privileged to be here with you today for the Bled Strategic Forum 2010. I am thankful to the organizers, particularly the Hon'ble Minister for Foreign Affairs of Slovenia, Mr. Samuel •bogar for having invited me. India attaches great importance to the Bled Strategic Forum and that explains why I am here for the second consecutive year. I look forward to being enriched by the discussions of this year's Forum.

If the global outlook for the next decade had to be summarized in one word, it would be ‘Challenging’ and among the major challenges which call for global collaboration, the most immediate which would need to be tackled within the next decade are sustainable development, energy security, the water challenge and last, but not the least, international terrorism. Furthermore, these challenges impact on global development, prosperity and security.

There is an old Indian saying: "The World is one Family" - (Vasudhaiv Kutumbakam). Indeed the world is linked today and the inter-dependence leaves us no choice but to find common solutions for the benefit of mankind. Our natural resources are finite and are depleting fast. It is imperative that they not only be utilized judiciously but we also reduce our reliance on them. Decades ago, the Father of our Nation, Mahatma Gandhi, had said: "The earth has enough resources to meet peoples’ needs, but will never have enough to satisfy peoples’ greed".

Energy is necessary for the development process and developing countries require reliable access to competitively priced energy supplies to plan their economic growth to uplift their citizens out of poverty. Given their effect on pollution and the dwindling supply of fossil fuels, it has become imperative for both the developed and the developing countries to seriously pursue renewable sources of energy. Simultaneously, efforts should be made to enhance the efficiency of existing energy systems.
In India, we adopted a National Action Plan to combat Climate Change which is based on a multi-pronged approach. Our vision is to make India's economic development energy-efficient. Over a period of time, we want to pioneer a graduated shift from economic activity based on fossil fuels to one based on non-fossil fuels and from reliance on non-renewable and depleting sources of energy to renewable sources of energy. In this strategy, the sun occupies centre-stage, as it should, being literally the original source of all energy. India plans to pool its scientific, technical and managerial talents, with sufficient financial resources, to develop solar energy as the principal source of abundant energy to power our economy and to transform the lives of our people. Our success in this endeavour will change the face of India. We hope that it would also enable India to help change the destinies of people around the world. We have launched an ambitious Solar mission in January this year and the aim is to deploy 20,000 MW of solar power by 2022.

While exploring new technologies, we should simultaneously focus on existing energy technologies also. This focus should be on efficiency of operations at the plant level, reducing transmission and distribution losses and use of fuel efficient delivery and consumption systems.

The challenge of Water is obviously important. Our focus therefore is to increase the efficiency of water use, exploring efficient operations to augment water supply and ensure more efficient management of water resource. The challenge is to ensure optimum water utilization in both agriculture and industry.

Notwithstanding the fact that India has large river systems, ground water accounts for nearly 70% of our total available water resource. Nearly 55% of our irrigation requirements and 50% of urban and industrial requirements are taken care of by ground water. To optimize the use of ground water, various measures have been put in place. In urban areas, mandatory water harvesting and artificial recharge is in place. Sewage treatment plants are now mandatory for all industrial and commercial buildings and residential apartments. These measures have helped in bridging the gap between availability and requirement and more importantly on recharging the ground water table.

Climate Change is another major global challenge. India is prepared to play its role as a responsible member of the international community and make a contribution to mitigate its impact. India has engaged actively in multilateral negotiations in the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change, in a positive, constructive and forward-looking manner. Our common objective should be to establish an effective, cooperative and equitable global approach based on the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities, enshrined in the UNFCCC.

On our part we are doing all that is possible within the limits of our resources. Our recent announcement to take a voluntary target of reducing the emissions intensity of India's GDP by 20-25% by 2020 together with our commitment that our per capita emissions would never exceed those of the Developed countries is a manifestation of the seriousness with which we seek to address the Climate Change issue.

Terrorism poses a serious danger to any civilized society. It subverts the economic and financial environment for growth and deprives ordinary men and women of their basic needs, livelihood and even their lives. It also necessitates enhanced military and security expenditure which under more conditions could have been devoted to tackling the problems of poverty, ignorance and disease.

Having large financial and material resources at their disposal, terrorist groups are today able to use modern communication systems and state-of-the-art technology to pursue their agenda. They have become far more sophisticated, better networked and are also highly motivated in carrying out their nefarious designs. A matter of extreme concern is also their linkage with organized crime, like drug trafficking, gun running, counterfeit currency, and money-laundering.

Terrorists have no religion or faith. They do not belong to any community. No community or religion can and should be blamed for irresponsible and violent acts of a few individuals. Terrorists break the Law of the land and deprive innocent persons of their Fundamental Right to live. No cause or grievance can justify terrorism. The scourge of terrorism must be resolutely opposed, and measures to combat terrorism have to be comprehensive and sustained. In this regard there is an urgent need to seek the expeditious conclusion of negotiations on the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the UN, which has been pending in the UN since 1996. Terrorism knows no borders; hence its solution also has to transcend boundaries.

It is only the strength of our resolve and the ever expanding frontiers of our knowledge, supported by science and technology that can help us meet these challenges. Sharing experiences and best practices holds the key to addressing them. We may not find all the solutions, but nevertheless, we should not be found wanting in spirit of cooperation and sincerity of our purpose. And these are two of the qualities that the Bled conference has come to be associated with.

Thank you.

540. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the establishment of ICCR Chair at Lund University, Sweden.

New Delhi, July 13, 2010.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) has signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) with the Lund University, Sweden for establishment of a Chair of Contemporary Indian History/ Indian Social Sciences at the Lund University. Ambassador of India in Sweden, Shri Balakrishna Shetty and Vice Chancellor of the Lund University, Mr. Per Erikson signed the MoU on June 22nd, 2010.

Under the terms of agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the university, shall appoint a suitable Indian academician to hold the Chair for a period of nine months. During this period, the Visiting Professor would contribute to the academic life of the University by engaging in teaching, research and mentoring. The Chair would commence from September 1st, 2010. The MoU would remain valid for four years from 2010.

Lund University; one of the oldest Universities in Sweden founded in 1666, has a distinguished position in the highest ranking Universities of the world.
for its research. Besides this, having a good number of international students every year makes it a suitable place to establish an India Chair. The establishment of this Chair is expected to be an important step in furthering ICCR's larger mandate of fostering and strengthening educational and cultural bonds and towards enhancing academic knowledge and awareness about India, through exchange of academicians.

SWITZERLAND

541. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the Telephonic conversation between External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna and Minister of Foreign Affairs of Switzerland.

New Delhi, March 31, 2010.

External Affairs Minister received a telephone call from H.E. Ms. Micheline Calmy-Ray, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Switzerland on the afternoon of Wednesday, 31st March.

The Ministers reiterated their resolve to further strengthen the excellent bilateral ties which exist between the two countries, particularly in the areas of economy and commerce and allied fields.

External Affairs Minister extended an invitation to the Foreign Minister of Switzerland to visit India at a mutually convenient time, to be decided through diplomatic channels. The visit would help both sides review the areas of cooperation and identify new sectors for enlarging the engagement between the two countries.
TURKEY
542. Joint Declaration between the Republic of Turkey and the Republic of India during the visit of the Turkish President on Terrorism.

New Delhi, February 9, 2010.

On the occasion of the visit of the President of the Republic of Turkey to India, both sides:

Recognising that terrorism poses a grave threat to global peace and security;

Noting that the forces of terrorism are nourished by extremist ideologies;

Stressing that terrorism should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group;

Recognising further that terrorism seeks to weaken, in particular, democratic societies and polities that are based on the rule of law and committed to inclusive growth;

Denouncing those who sponsor, abet and instigate terrorism and provide them safe havens;

Affirming their common commitment to fight terrorism and recognising that their counter-terrorism efforts constitute an important part of the international community’s efforts to eradicate terrorism;

Calling upon the international community to comply with all the provisions of international counter-terrorism conventions and protocols as well as other related international instruments and strengthen international cooperation in this regard;

Recognising the need for the conclusion of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism as a vital component of the international legal framework in the global struggle against terrorism; calling on the international community to conclude the Convention without further delay;

Decided to enhance their cooperation in this field;
To this end, their officials have been tasked to work towards developing an action plan with timelines and specific measures. For this purpose, the officials will take into account the existing structures of cooperation such as the Joint Working Group against Terrorism;

Agreed to work together and with other like-minded States for the finalization of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism at the earliest.

543. Joint Declaration on Scientific and Technological Cooperation between the Republic of Turkey and the Republic of India.

New Delhi, February 9, 2010.

On the occasion of the visit of the President of the Republic of Turkey to India, both sides:

Considering the importance of science and technology for the economic and social development of our countries,

Desiring to develop and expand cooperation in the field of science and technology in areas of common interest,

Noting that, together with economic and commercial relations, cooperation in science and technology offer great potential as a driver of bilateral relations,

Recognizing that cooperation in science and technology will not only advance the state of science and technology to the benefit of both countries but also strengthen the bonds of friendship and understanding between our peoples, Reaffirming the Agreement on Cooperation in the field of Science and Technology between the Government of the Republic of Turkey and the Government of the Republic of India signed on 17 September 2003.

Declare that, the two countries, hereby launch an Advanced Science and Technology Dialogue which:

Will strive to promote the maximum use of the opportunities that have risen for mutually beneficial interaction in the field of science and technology which would add to the strength of the two national economies, and to the welfare and prosperity of the two peoples,

Will strengthen this interaction with special emphasis on high-technology and frontier areas of research and application,

Will encourage and support broadened and expanded relations between the scientific and technological communities in both countries by creating favorable conditions for cooperation,

Will encourage cooperation through exchange of ideas, information, skills and technologies; exchange of scientists and technical experts; the convening of joint seminars, scientific conferences, and meetings; training and enhancing the skills of scientists and technical experts; the conduct of joint research projects and studies and other forms of scientific and technological cooperation as may be mutually agreed upon,

Will actively study the possibilities of working together in mutually identified projects in areas such as telecommunication, computerisation, information technology, space research, biotechnology and environmental technology.

Will actively explore the possibilities for joint research and development activities making use of best practices in this field,

Will encourage, facilitate and support the development of direct contacts and cooperation between government agencies and organizations, universities, science and research centers, institutes and institutions, private sector firms and other entities of the two countries.

We also agree, therefore, that Turkey and India convene a joint workshop in 2010 among designated representatives to elaborate and bring into being the Advanced Science and Technology Dialogue in accordance with this Joint Declaration.
Speech of President Shrimati Pratibha Devisingh Patil at the Banquet hosted by her in honour of Turkish President Abdullah Gul.

New Delhi, February 9, 2010.

Your Excellency, Your Excellency Mr. Abdullah Gul, President of the Republic of Turkey, Madame Hayrunnisa Gul,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to welcome you on your first official visit to India, which we are confident, will cement and deepen our bilateral relations.

Our countries have deep and rich historical connections. The influence of the Turkic civilization on Indian art and architecture is well known. The exchange of embassies between the Mughal and the Ottoman courts in the 15th and 16th Centuries, and the enthusiasm of the people of India in supporting the foundation of the Turkish Republic, testify to the longstanding links between our two countries. The Sufi tradition of Islam represented by Mevlana Jelaluddin Rumi has always had a deep resonance in our country. Both our countries draw inspiration from his mystical poetry on universal love and brotherhood, and his cosmopolitan outlook, at a time of strife and upheavals. Rumi said and I quote:

"Come, come, whoever you are.
Wanderer, worshiper, lover of living,
It doesn't matter.
Ours is not a caravan of despair."

Both India and Turkey are modern democracies based on ethnic, religious and linguistic plurality. We believe that it is time to translate these historical assets and contemporary synergy, to work together to enhance bilateral cooperation, and address contemporary global challenges.
Excellency,

Economic and commercial ties between India and Turkey have gained momentum in recent years. However, the volume of bilateral trade and investment remains much below the potential of our two economies. To some extent, this is due to the impact of the recent global financial crisis. As members of the G-20, India and Turkey worked together for a coordinated response to the global downturn, and are contributing to a new architecture for international economic and financial interaction.

As the world comes out of this financial crisis, we are confident that India-Turkey trade will once again begin to flourish. India and Turkey have started exploring the possibility of negotiating a free trade agreement. We hope that this process will be expeditious and smooth. We should increase investment levels. There are great opportunities for Turkish business and industry in India in sectors like infrastructure development, energy and services. Indian companies are investing in mining, steel, irrigation equipment, tractors and automobiles in Turkey.

Both India and Turkey have developed centres of excellence in Science and Technology, as well as in higher education. We are happy that recently a first-ever micro satellite from Turkey was launched by an Indian space vehicle. We look forward to more such cooperation in the future and also welcome the exchange of students, scholars and scientists.

The foundation of India-Turkey bilateral relations can be consolidated by institutional linkages such as between Parliaments and political parties of both countries. I am happy that a multi-party delegation from the Indian Parliament led by the Indian Minister of Parliamentary Affairs visited Turkey recently and was warmly received by you.

As victims of international terrorism, both India and Turkey, have a vital stake in eradicating this menace and threat to our democracies. We both firmly believe that terrorism is a crime against humanity and it should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group. Our bilateral mechanism in this regard could be further enhanced and updated by developing an Action Plan with timelines and specific measures. Fighting terrorism at various levels requires active international co-ordination amongst like-minded countries. I am happy that India and Turkey will work together in convincing others to come on board for the early finalization in the UN of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen, I would request you to join me in raising a toast:-

— to the continued health and well being of His Excellency President Abdullah Gul and Madame Hayrunnisa Gul; — to enhanced cooperation between India and Turkey, and;
— to the further strengthening of friendship between our peoples.

545. Message of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the newly elected British Prime Minister David Cameron congratulating him on his assumption of Office.

New Delhi, May 12, 2010.

*Dear Mr. Prime Minister,

Please accept my heartiest felicitations and congratulations on your assumption of the office of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. The elections in the United Kingdom and your stewardship of the Conservative Party reflect the best traditions of parliamentary democracy. I wish you the very best in your leadership of the United Kingdom in the years ahead.

I recall with great pleasure our meeting in New Delhi in September 2006. Over the years, our bilateral relations have diversified into a vibrant and multi-faceted strategic partnership encompassing almost all areas of human endeavour.
We are today well-placed to build upon this strong edifice not just for the welfare and benefit of our two peoples, but also to work together to address the pressing global challenges that we face today, and to harness the growing inter-dependence among nations for the good of humankind. I look forward to working with you to further advance and strengthen our bonds of friendship, to which India attaches the highest importance.

It gives me great pleasure to extend a most cordial invitation to you to visit India at your convenience.

546. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's meetings with British Prime Minister and French President on the sidelines of the G-20 Summit.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good evening. I know that you have had a long day; I know you are tired and sleepy. But I thought that I will quickly give you some details about two very important bilateral meetings that the Prime Minister has had today with British and French leaders.

First, there was a meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and the newly-elected British Prime Minister Mr. David Cameron. Prime Minister congratulated Mr. Cameron on his electoral victory. An invitation has already been extended to Prime Minister Cameron to visit India in July, next month. Prime Minister said that he looked forward to the visit of Right Hon'ble David Cameron to India.

As the Leader of the Opposition, Prime Minister Cameron had visited India in 2006 and he fondly recalled his visit. The two leaders went on to review the status of bilateral relations and expressed their satisfaction, their happiness at the trajectory of our ties. India and UK had elevated the relationship to the level of a strategic partnership in the year 2004. The British Prime Minister underscored his party's and his country's deep commitment to further strengthening and deepening ties with India.

Prime Minister Singh and Prime Minister Cameron noted that there was tremendous potential for cooperation in areas like trade and economic relations, human resource development, and so on. Many of you know that trade with UK is over 13 billion dollars. The trade between India and UK is by and large balanced. UK is also the fourth largest investor in India and similarly Indian investments in UK have been sizeable and growing.

The Indian Prime Minister said that he would welcome more British investments in India. The British Prime Minister noted that Indian students were the second largest among foreign students studying in the UK, and said that he would like to see more Indian students to studying in the United Kingdom.

The two Prime Ministers briefly exchanged views on G20. You would recall that in April 2009 UK had hosted the G20 Summit. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh observed that India would like to see continued concerted efforts by all countries to ensure that global recovery gets further consolidated, as the process was still somewhat tentative. Also that slack in private demand could be compensated by fiscal measures and stimulus packages.

They went on to exchange views on the regional situation including that in Afghanistan, and agreed to remain in touch. The British Prime Minister reaffirmed the desirability, the need for reforms in the international financial institutions including the UN. He reiterated UK's support for India's candidature for permanent membership of the UN Security Council.

Next, Prime Minister had a very warm meeting with President Nicholas Sarkozy of France. We have been strategic partners since 1998. The two leaders, as I said, had a very warm meeting as old friends. Prime Minister recalled the visit of President Sarkozy to India in January 2008 as the Chief Guest for the Republic Day Celebrations in India. An invitation has already been extended to President Sarkozy and Madame Carla Brunei. Prime Minister said that he looked forward to their visit later this year and that a very warm welcome awaited the French President and his spouse. They went on to discuss outcomes of the visit of President Sarkozy to President Sarkozy recalled Prime Minister’s own visit to France for the French National Day on the 14th of July 2009 when Prime Minister Dr. Singh was the Guest of Honour. It would be recalled that President Sarkozy had also made a special gesture of inviting a four hundred strong Indian Armed Forces contingent on that occasion which had led the military parade in Paris.

President Sarkozy said that France regarded India as a most important partner of France in the world and saw India as a country that plays a critical role in world affairs. He added that India should play a bigger role not just in G20, but in all institutions of global governance. He reiterated France’s full support for India’s candidature for permanent membership of the UN Security Council. He also was fully supportive of India's efforts on counter-terrorism.

The two leaders then exchanged views on G20. You know that after the Seoul G20 Summit in November this year, France will assume Presidency of G20. President Sarkozy shared with the Prime Minister some of the major priorities of France, and French vision of G20 once it assumes the Presidency. He pointedly said that he would like to consult closely with India in crafting his vision for G20. They discussed bilateral issues and reiterated the importance of cooperation in areas like technology, defence cooperation, science and technology and so on. I would like to note that France is India's fifth largest trading partner among the EU countries.

This was briefly what was discussed during the two meetings that Prime Minister had today.

Question: So, there was no meeting of the BRIC nations as has been expected.

Official Spokesperson: You are aware that because of domestic situation in Brazil, particularly the floods that have taken place, President Lula could not visit. Accordingly it was decided not to have the BRIC meeting that was envisaged.

Question: Would it be correct to assume, from what we have been told about the Indian Prime Minister's comments about global recovery and the slack in private demand, that India is in fact urging the developed world to not cut back sharply and, therefore, impact growth? Can that be taken as one of the key messages that the Indian Prime Minister gave his counterparts?

Official Spokesperson: What the Indian Prime Minister told today, I have shared with you. You will also see his intervention tomorrow which spells out Prime Minister's vision, his thinking on the matter.

Question: Did he say anything on the bank tax?

Official Spokesperson: With these two leaders what he discussed, I have already given you a flavor of. On the issue of bank tax, you already have a perspective.

Question: Prime Minister was to discuss issues with the Chinese President in case that BRIC meeting would have taken place. Is there any meeting of Prime Minister scheduled tomorrow?

Official Spokesperson: As far as I knew there was no structured meeting as such with President Hu Jintao of China. Prime Minister has had a bilateral meeting with President Hu Jintao in April this year in Brasilia on the sidelines of the BRIC Summit. Today what had been envisaged was a meeting of the BRIC leaders in the context of the G20 Summit.

Question: Thank you for the late evening briefing. I just wanted to ask two questions. One is, in the past I believe in several bilateral meetings with Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper Prime Minister Singh has raised the questions of Sikh militancy in Canada and asked for Canada to crackdown on that. Is this likely to be a topic of discussion amongst other topics tomorrow when he meets Prime Minister Harper? And also, with regard to the whole question of not cutting back on spending in order to keep the economies invigorated, Britain believes in cutting back on some amount of spending. They were actually putting forth some cut backs. So, was this discussed in any way between Prime Minister Cameron and Dr. Singh?

Official Spokesperson: Thank you. Both very valid questions.

On the second question, the reading that I have, I have shared with you. I was not physically present at the bilateral meeting. So, at this juncture I cannot add more to what I have already told you.
As far as your first question is concerned, there is going to be the meeting tomorrow - as you know that is the bilateral component - between the Prime Minister of India and the Prime Minister of Canada. What I understand is that the leaders will discuss all issues of bilateral interest as well as regional and international issues. We will certainly give you a flavor of what has been discussed tomorrow. But on the issue that you mentioned, I think you were present in Washington in April when I briefed you on the sidelines of the Nuclear Security Summit. There was a meeting between Prime Minister Singh and Prime Minister Harper, and I had given you a perspective on that meeting. It is on the website and you may want to take a look. At that time Prime Minister Singh had drawn the attention of Prime Minister Harper to this issue. We have been in touch with each other on this and other issues of common interest and concern. Thank you very much.

547. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Prime Minister of U. K. David Cameron.

New Delhi, July 28, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good morning to all of you. My colleague Joint Secretary (Europe West) Mr. Seetharam and I will endeavour to give you a perspective on the very important state visit of the Rt Hon. David Cameron, the Prime Minister of UK, who is currently visiting India.

He arrived last night at Bangalore and today in the evening he would be reaching New Delhi. He leads a very high-level delegation. In fact, in recent memory, a delegation at this scale from UK has not been to India. His delegation includes a number of his Cabinet colleagues including British Foreign Minister; Chancellor of the Exchequer; Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills; Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport; Minister of State for Universities and Science; National Security Advisor; Vice-Chancellors of a number of key universities; a number of CEOs of leading business houses in UK; senior officials; and others.
Let me quickly take you through the programme. As I said, he arrived last evening. Today he would be meeting with the Governor of Karnataka; visiting Infosys and Hindustan Aeronautics Limited. Later in the evening he would be arriving at New Delhi. Tomorrow there would be a ceremonial welcome by Prime Minister at Rashtrapati Bhavan. There would be a call on him by the External Affairs Minister Shri S.M. Krishna; a meeting with Chairperson of UPA Shrimati Sonia Gandhi. He would be calling on Rashtrapatiji and Hon'ble Vice-President and meeting with the Leader of Opposition Shrimati Sushma Swaraj.

In the afternoon tomorrow there will be a business luncheon which will be organized by the three apex business chambers in India for the delegation including the CEOs that are accompanying the Prime Minister. Tomorrow evening he holds delegation-level talks with the Prime Minister. There would also be a joint media interaction that is slated around 1930 hours. The two Prime Ministers would have an interaction with the UK business delegation that is accompanying the Prime Minister.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh will be assisted by our External Affairs Minister in the talks; Commerce and Industry Minister; Minister of Road Transport and Highways; Minister for Human Resource Development; Minister of State for External Affairs Shrimati Preneet Kaur; Principal Secretary to Prime Minister; National Security Advisor; Foreign Secretary Smt. Nirupama Rao, a number of other senior officials and of course our High Commissioner to London.

Prime Minister Cameron visited India in October 2006 as the Leader of Opposition, when he had a number of very useful interactions including a meeting with the Prime Minister of India. It is indeed significant that within weeks of assuming office he is paying a state visit to India which is reflective of the importance that both sides attach to this vital relationship. The two Prime Ministers also had a very good meeting at Toronto on the sidelines of the G20 Summit on the 26th of June.

India enjoys multifaceted relations with UK which have intensified in the recent years. During the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to UK in 2004 it was decided to elevate our relations to the level of a strategic partnership. There has been no looking back. Regular high-level exchanges have become a hallmark of our ties. To just give an example, last year in 2009 the two Prime Ministers had four meetings and had a number of telephonic conversations.

President of India paid a state visit to UK in October 2009 which gave a very useful momentum to our bilateral ties. The series of meetings that she had also included a call on her by present Prime Minister David Cameron, who was then the Leader of Opposition. I would like to say that our vibrant ties encompass a variety of sectors of mutual interest including trade and investment, human resource development, energy, high technology, science and technology, tourism, culture, defence, counterterrorism and the others.

UK is one of our major trading partners. Our bilateral trade, which was about 3.6 billion dollars equivalent in 2003-04, has since surged to over $12.8 billion last year in 2008-09. UK is also the fourth largest investor in India. According to my figures, the cumulative FDI equity inflows have been of the order of close to six billion dollars. By the same token, recognizing that UK is an attractive investment destination, Indian companies have been actively investing in UK. In fact, Indian companies have become the second largest investor in London. And close to 600 Indian companies are already based in UK of which close to half are in London.

In recognition of the tremendous potential, an India-UK Joint Economic and Trade Committee (JETCO) was set up at the level of Commerce Ministers, in 2005. It has since emerged as a very useful mechanism to impart more content and depth to our economic and trade ties. The sixth JETCO meeting was held in London in February this year.

UK also plays host to over 30,000 Indian students who go to UK for higher education. This is the second biggest foreign student body in UK. Again to give our cooperation in the HRD sector, which is a very vital area of cooperation, a boost an India-UK Education Forum at a Ministerial level has been established. The second meeting of the Forum, which was co-chaired by our Minister of HRD from the Indian side, was held in London earlier this year in January. The interaction has thrown up a number of useful ideas and initiatives which the two sides are actively working on.

Similarly, tourism has now emerged as an important area of cooperation. We have close to 130 weekly flights connecting cities between the two countries and ferrying more than a million tourists in both directions. Defence sector is also an important area of cooperation, with regular bilateral visits, training courses and other contacts.

We have a sizeable Indian community of close to two million in the UK, which comprises of almost three per cent of the population of UK. The community is doing well economically, politically and is well assimilated. Presently there are eight Members of Parliament in the House of Commons, and 22 Peers in the House of Lords.

I would like to note that UK has been steadfast in its support for India’s candidature of permanent membership of the UN Security Council. It has also been a valuable interlocutor for us at a number of international fora including the G20, EU, Climate Change talks, and so on.

The two Prime Ministers are expected to hold wide-ranging discussions on bilateral, regional and multilateral matters of common interest. The visit is expected to give a further fillip, further boost to our robust and multifaceted bilateral relations.

Thank you. My colleague and I will be happy to take a few questions pertaining to the visit of the Rt Hon. David Cameron.

Question: We saw in January at the Kabul Conference where India's position was not taken as seriously by Britain regarding its role in Afghanistan. Now with this visit will you take the opportunity to raise the issue of Afghanistan perhaps looking at a more meaningful role for India?

Official Spokesperson: As I said, UK is a very valuable interlocutor of India. I did mention that during the visit, especially the delegation-level talks between the two Prime Ministers, we expect a whole range of bilateral, regional and multilateral issues of common interest to be discussed. What actually would be discussed, I do not know and I cannot speculate.

Question: I just wanted to know what are the agreements - I know most of them might be in discussion stage at this point - that are expected, in what areas.

Joint Secretary (Europe West) (Shri T.P. Seetharam): In Delhi the only agreement, or rather the Memorandum of Understanding that is to be signed is on culture. You will be surprised to know that after all these years we do not have a cultural agreement with UK. So, for the first time we will have a Memorandum of Understanding on cooperation in areas of culture that will be signed in New Delhi after the talks.

Question: Would it be possible for you to give a little more detail about what the MoU on culture might actually involve. I understand that you are going to have one. What would that mean? Secondly, I understand that you do not want to go into details or speculate but there is a very wide divergence between the Indian position on Taliban and the UK, US and other European states' position. Similarly there is a wide gap in US and Indian positions. Can you tell us whether both positions will converge perhaps during the talks today?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): On culture, I believe immediately after the signing of the agreement there will be a joint press interaction. So, details of the agreement would be shared with the media as soon as it is signed. But as you know, it is in the nature of these agreements that there will be sharing of information, organizing events in each other's countries, exchange of scholars, organizing seminars, exhibitions, performing events. So, it is in that nature a broad cultural cooperation agreement. The specifics will be made available as soon as it is signed.

Official Spokesperson: I can spell out for you the Indian position and thinking on this issue. Government of India is supportive of the initiative of the elected Government of Afghanistan to integrate such elements into the national mainstream which abjure violence, abide by the Constitution of Afghanistan, and are respectful of the economic and political gains that Afghanistan has made in the past several years. We also are of the view that any such initiative should be Afghan-led and Afghan-driven. That is our position on Afghanistan, on this issue in particular which is well-documented and which has been unequivocally put across to our interlocutors. Just a word on our role in Afghanistan - which you are aware of perhaps, but let me briefly touch upon that - we are actively engaged in the reconstruction, development and providing economic assistance to our friends in Afghanistan in keeping with the wishes of the friendly people of Afghanistan, of the Government of Afghanistan. And till this date India's assistance has been of the order of about 1.3 billion dollars. So, that is our position on this issue.
Question: Visas have been a huge issue. You said that you have got 30,000 Indian students in UK, and a lot of Indian business leaders have raised the issue when they were in London. What is the position now? Does the Government intend to discuss it?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): As you would be aware, there have been reports that the Government of the United Kingdom proposes to restrict non-EU emigration to UK. So, naturally this is an issue related to movement of people and it is possible that such an issue would be among the various items that could come up. Exactly how it would be taken up or what would be discussed, I am not able to comment on.

Question: Britain is giving millions of dollars in aid to Pakistan. The recent intelligence leaks have revealed for the first time the stunning scale of ISI’s involvement in Pakistan. Are we going to ask the British Prime Minister ...(Inaudible)... allegation about the need for some sort of monitoring mechanism of their aid to Pakistan? Secondly, Britain has been tom-toming this visit as forging a special relationship. What is there in it for us? From India's point of view what is so special about this visit apart from the huge delegation?

Official Spokesperson: As to your first question, we have always maintained and we believe that a stable, secure and prosperous Pakistan is in India’s interest. We have no difficulty, obviously stemming from that, with economic assistance or cooperation being extended to Pakistan by any country. As far as the issue of WikiLeaks is concerned, my response is already on the website and I am sure you have seen that.

Joint Secretary (Europe West): Yes, we have naturally seen reports and are aware of the intention of the Government of UK to have a 'new special relationship' with India. This was actually a term used when Mr. David Cameron had come to India earlier. Subsequently this also became part of the coalition document in UK. There has also been talk of 'enhanced partnership' with India. I guess the discussions will naturally throw light on what these terms mean. So, we will have to wait till tomorrow for the joint press interaction by the two Prime Ministers. Some of you would have already seen perhaps an article written by the Rt Hon. David Cameron in one of the Indian newspapers today which also gives some idea of his views on these aspects.

Question: I want to share with you the case of the passenger plane crash in Islamabad and would like to know if there are any Indians on the flight, if the High Commission is aware of it, and if the manifest and the names of passengers can be given to us. That is one thing. The second thing is, Sir, you would have seen what Keith Vaz had to say about the Kohinoor. Is that something either country is looking at?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): On the Kohinoor, I think it is something which has been going on for a long time. I believe the ASI is in the process of compiling a large number of cultural items of a similar nature. This is a process that is ongoing and not necessarily specific to this particular visit.

Official Spokesperson: As to your first question, we will ascertain the facts and will come back to you.

Question: You mentioned that India and UK are looking to broaden their defence cooperation. Is there any defence deal going to be signed? There have been reports of the deal being signed when the Prime Minister is here? Can you give us some details on that?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): Yes, there are discussions on for an additional 57 Hawk Jet Trainer aircraft. I believe it is all ready to be signed and may be signed this afternoon in Bangalore. Since the Prime Minister of UK is visiting HAL it is quite possible that it would be signed there.

Question: There is one question on educational links. We have also been hearing reports of several Memoranda of Understanding being signed between British Universities and the Ministry of HRD here. Any elaboration on that? Can we expect some MoUs?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): Yes, education is a very important area of cooperation. As was mentioned, our Minister of Education had gone to London earlier this year. There is already an ongoing programme called the UK-India Education and Research Initiative (UKIERI) which was started in 2008. The first phase is ending in 2011. So, there is some discussion on both sides about extending this for another five years. This will include a large number of projects, research awards, scholarships, and interactions between say about 300 schools in India with an equal number of schools in UK, collaborative research projects between universities, and a massive interaction at all levels in education. This is something that is being looked at. There could be other projects also in the education field.

Question: A follow-up question on the foreign university campuses. We know that Imperial College, Oxford, Cambridge are also coming with Mr. Cameron's delegation. Any concrete MoUs between them and the Government of India?

Joint Secretary (Europe West): I think a law relating to this aspect of permitting foreign universities to open campus etc., is still to be adopted in Parliament. So, I do not think there will be specific concrete agreements at this stage. But these are ideas that will be explored and we are happy to see that reputed universities in UK are represented in this direction.

Official Spokesperson: All that I would like add, as I said, is that this is a very important sector of collaboration to which both sides attach the highest importance. That is precisely why you have a high-level mechanism led by the Ministers of Education, and we would very much want to see rapid progress in cooperation in this vital sector.

Thank you very much.
548. Remarks of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at his meeting with the UK Business Delegation.

New Delhi, July 29, 2010.

I would like to extend a very warm welcome to all of you here today. I am delighted that Prime Minister Cameron has brought with him a truly distinguished business delegation, which represents the best of British industry, including companies which are household names in India.

Economic and commercial ties are a major driver of any strategic partnership between nations. I hope your visit will be a forerunner of a greatly strengthened business relationship between India and Britain.

The United Kingdom is one of our important trading partners and the fourth largest investor in India. I am happy to say that Indian investors have also taken a keen interest in investing in the UK. More than 600 Indian companies are based in the United Kingdom, and around 70 are listed on the London Stock Exchange. Indian investors also see the United Kingdom as the gateway to the European Union and beyond. Our bilateral trade has increased from 6 billion US dollars in 2003-04 to over 12 billion dollars last year.

While these figures are encouraging, they also indicate that the levels of both trade and investment are lower than they could be. Prime Minister Cameron and I have decided that we should aim at the doubling of our bilateral trade turnover in the next five years.

We have also decided to establish an India-UK CEOs Forum. We hope that the Forum will look at the practical aspects of barriers to trade and investment, and explore innovative ways to leverage partnership and collaboration.

I hope your visit will give you a direct feel of economic developments and prospects in India. India offers a large market, a young and creative population and a stable investment climate. It also offers the prospect of a steadily expanding market. Despite the global economic downturn, we are poised to return to a growth trajectory of 8 to 9% per annum. Our economic growth agenda is complemented by a firm commitment to inclusive social policies that will make our growth sustainable and broad based.
Our infrastructure has lagged behind the acceleration in growth and presents a major challenge. We need much more investment in infrastructure sectors such as power, roads, railways, ports and aviation. We have outlined an ambitious programme of investment in these areas to meet the deficit. This is based on a combination of public investment and public private partnership.

The public private partnership route should offer attractive opportunities for British investors and financiers. Of course, the rest of the Indian economy is also open for investment by British Investors and we welcome you in a wide range of activities. Collaboration in the areas of industrial innovation, R&D, vocational training, bio-technology, green-technology, design and quality are other major areas of mutual interest.

The Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor and the Chennai-Bangalore industrial clusters offer new avenues for foreign investors wishing to participate in the India story.

Over the years, we have progressively relaxed our guidelines for foreign direct investment to encourage and facilitate foreign direct investment. I can assure you that we will do all that is necessary to make doing business in India easy and hassle free. We are determined to create a stable, transparent and predictable investment environment in India.

Ladies and Gentlemen

The global economy is at a stage of profound transformation. India is a part of the shifting global economic landscape, and its economic weight is set to increase in the years ahead. I invite you to join us in our socio-economic transformation as investors, financiers and traders.

Our Government, in partnership with the Government of the United Kingdom, will continue to encourage close business ties between our two countries.

I thank you.
549. Joint Press Statement issued during the visit of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom David Cameron.

New Delhi, July 29, 2010.

India and the UK: An Enhanced Partnership for the Future

UK-India Summit talks were held on 29 July 2010 in New Delhi, during the State visit to India of the British Prime Minister Rt. Hon. David Cameron, MP.

2. The British Prime Minister expressed his gratitude for the warmth of the welcome which had been extended to him and his colleagues on his visit to India, and set out his hope to achieve a transformation of the relationship between the two countries over the coming years.

3. The two Prime Ministers and their colleagues had a detailed and fruitful discussion. They agreed that the India-UK relationship had great potential for growth, to the benefit of both countries, and that both Governments should invest further effort in working to take it to a new level in the future.

Trade, Investment and Energy

4. The two sides agreed that we should be ambitious in seeking to substantially increase trade and significantly increase investment between the UK and India.

5. They agreed to establish a new India-UK CEOs Forum to help achieve this. This will be a small, high-level body, co-chaired by Peter Sands (CEO of Standard Chartered Bank) and Ratan Tata (Chairman of Tata Group). It will meet alternately in India and the UK and will make recommendations to the two Governments on how to increase levels of trade and investment in each others’ economies.

6. Both sides also agreed to review the mandate, composition and structure of relevant existing bilateral bodies in the area of trade, investment and economic cooperation, in order to re-energize our joint efforts.

7. Both sides discussed India’s particular interest in attracting international as well as domestic investment in infrastructure over the next decade, and how best the two Governments could enable and encourage this. They agreed to establish an India-UK Infrastructure Group, led by the two Governments and drawing on the expertise of the private sector, which would help identify barriers to investment and potential solutions.

8. Discussions were also held on a Memorandum of Understanding between Government of India and UK Trade and Investment to enhance investment in the Roads sector, and the two sides looked forward to its early finalisation.

9. Both sides agreed to explore initiatives that will create resources and incentives to help businesses deploy renewable energy, particularly for the poor.

10. They also welcomed the new opportunities that had opened up for co-operation in the civil nuclear power sector, following the signature earlier this year of the UK-India Civil Nuclear Cooperation Declaration. This has created opportunities for wide ranging cooperation between the countries in the nuclear field including with regard to nuclear trade and exchanges between scientific institutions.

11. The two Prime Ministers agreed on the importance of international trade in supporting recovery in the global economy. They expressed their strong support for the conclusion of a Broad-based Trade and Investment Agreement between India and the European Union by the end of 2010. They also agreed on the importance of pressing for a conclusion of the Doha Round at the earliest opportunity.

Education Science and Research

12. Both sides agreed that India and the UK had much to gain from co-operation in Education, Science and Research, and a new emphasis on jointly funded collaborative research programmes. The two Governments had agreed to launch a new phase of the successful UK-India Education and Research Initiative. The first phase of this jointly-funded initiative had helped establish over 400 collaborative ventures between Indian and British universities and schools between 2006 and 2011. The new phase will run for a further five years, from 2011 to 2015, and as before, both Governments will contribute to it.
13. Both sides welcomed the initiative of Department of Biotechnology (DBT), Government of India and the Wellcome Trust, London to come together in a new collaboration to support the development of innovative healthcare products at affordable costs.

Defence and Security

14. The two sides welcomed the development of broad-based UK-Indian co-operation in the Defence sector. They noted the joint Army exercise, Shamsheer Bugle, which took place in India in June, and the joint Naval exercise, Konkan, which is presently underway in India. They looked forward to the joint Air exercise, Indra Dhanush, which would take place in India in October.

15. The two sides noted the threats both our countries faced from terrorism, and welcomed the strong growth in our co-operation in countering it. They noted the excellent co-operation between the Delhi Police and Metropolitan Police in preparing for the 2010 Commonwealth Games, and looked forward to a safe and successful Games in October. They resolved to continue this relationship in preparation for the 2012 London Olympics and 2014 Glasgow Commonwealth Games.

16. The two Prime Ministers had a detailed discussion of global security challenges. They agreed on the importance of achieving stability in Afghanistan, so that it did not again become a source of security threats to the region and the world. Both Prime Ministers agreed on the importance of reforming the UN Security Council, with the aim of a permanent seat for India. Similarly, the two sides discussed the need to work together in international economic fora, including the G20. They agreed to work together to strengthen the Commonwealth.

People To People Contacts

17. The two Governments agreed on the need to boost dialogue and exchanges between our two national Parliaments, and warmly welcomed the planned visit by the Honourable Speaker of the Lok Sabha and a delegation of Members of the Indian Parliament to the UK this autumn.
18. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the creation of the UK-India Future Leaders Network, which will help create and sustain links between some of the most dynamic young leaders in our societies.

19. The two sides announced the signature of an India-UK Memorandum of Understanding on Cultural Co-operation, which will provide a framework for a significant expansion of the rich cultural exchange between India and the UK. This expanded activity will include the first-ever exhibition in India of the Indian-born sculptor Anish Kapoor, in Delhi and Mumbai. Complicit Theatre will bring its acclaimed production of 'A Disappearing Number', inspired by the life of the Indian-born mathematical genius Ramanujan, to Mumbai and Hyderabad. And the first edition of the Hay Literary Festival in India will take place in Thiruvananthapuram in November. The UK-India Museums and Galleries Partnership Agreement, signed in June, will see closer collaboration between museums in India and the UK in knowledge sharing, exhibitions, education and conservation; a joint initiative by all of Edinburgh's Festivals to develop India-focused programming from 2012 to 2014; and 'Shard', a new programme to support the digitization of records of common interest to both India and the UK.

20. Both sides welcomed plans by the concerned Indian agencies for the manifestation of the year long celebration in the UK of Rabindranath Tagore's 150th Birth Anniversary, commencing in May 2011.
Opening Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh during Press Conference with UK Prime Minister.

New Delhi, July 29, 2010.

Your Excellency Prime Minister David Cameron

Ladies and Gentlemen of the media

It is my great privilege to welcome the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom His Excellency David Cameron on his first visit to India.

Prime Minister Cameron has a distinguished political career. He brings with him the finest qualities of leadership and a bold vision for Britain and a better and safer world. His presence here, so soon after his election victory in May this year, indicates the strength of the bonds that tie India and the United Kingdom. It also demonstrates the Prime Minister's strong personal commitment to take our partnership to an even higher level of understanding and purpose.

Our discussions, this afternoon, were wide ranging, warm and extremely productive. We share the same vision for a renewed and enhanced partnership between our two countries. To this end we have agreed on specific initiatives in the areas of economy and trade, science and technology, energy, education, defence, culture and people to people contacts.

We have decided to constitute an India-UK CEOs Forum and an India-UK Infrastructure Group. We will work towards doubling our trade in the next five years. Building upon past experience, we have also agreed to launch a new phase of the UK-India Education and Research Initiative. We will intensify bilateral exchanges at all levels.

India and the United Kingdom are natural partners to shape a better world. If we join hands together, we can make a meaningful contribution to addressing the challenges of global poverty and development, reform of global institutions, terrorism and climate change.

We also reviewed the regional security situation and developments in Afghanistan. There was agreement between us that today terrorism constitutes the single biggest threat to the region and to open and pluralistic societies like ours. We have agreed to further intensify our cooperation in the area of counter-terrorism.

Finally, I have conveyed to the Prime Minister that the people of India look forward to the Commonwealth Games in Delhi which we hope will further strengthen the spirit of the Commonwealth.

With Prime Minister David Cameron's visit we have set, ladies and gentlemen, in place a new momentum to drive our strategic partnership forward. I have no doubt that this will be good for both our countries, and it responds to the wishes and aspiration of both our peoples.

I thank you.

551. Remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the banquet hosted by him in honour of the UK Prime Minister David Cameron.

New Delhi, July 29, 2010.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Cameron
Distinguished Guests
I am delighted to welcome Prime Minister David Cameron and his distinguished delegation to India. We are truly honoured by their presence here today.

I wish to thank you for paying a visit to India so soon after becoming Prime Minister. This reflects your deep personal interest in building a special relationship between India and the United Kingdom, on the strong foundations of our strategic partnership.

We fully and warmly reciprocate your friendship and your commitment.

Ladies and Gentlemen:
Prime Minister Cameron's meteoric rise in political life is testimony to the faith of the British people in the values he upholds in public life, his endearing qualities of head and heart and his inspiring vision of a new Britain.
His voice articulates the hopes and ideals of the next generation that is taking leadership of global politics, business and society. It is a generation that will carry forward the legacy of our ties that are rooted in our history, culture and consciousness.

After our discussions today, I am convinced that there is a genuine mutual desire to renew, revitalize and recharge the bilateral relationship. A strong and diversified economic partnership is the key to a mutually beneficial special relationship. But there is much we can do in other areas such as education, scientific research, counter-terrorism, clean energy and culture. We need to work to increase the depth and mutual understanding in our strategic and security partnership.

Nearly two million people of Indian origin have made Britain their home. Their achievements are a tribute to the vibrant and inclusive cultural ethos of modern day Britain and a source of strength for our relationship.

We applaud the United Kingdom’s leadership role in global affairs. It is an indispensable factor for promoting a stable and prosperous international order.

Our two countries can play an important role in strengthening global governance. We could do more, working together, to respond to challenges such as hunger, disease, terror and climate change.

In a few months from now, we will celebrate the spirit and fellowship of the Commonwealth family during the Commonwealth Games in Delhi.

It will be an occasion to recall the shared values of freedom, pluralism and tolerance that bind us.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

I am convinced that a strong partnership between India and the United Kingdom is a force for global good.

Prime Minister, the best wishes of the people of India are with you as you lead Britain to an even brighter future.
Distinguished Guests,

May I now request you to join me in a toast to:

• The good health and happiness of the Rt. Hon. David Cameron, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and members of his distinguished delegation;

• The continued well being and prosperity of our peoples; and

• Closer friendship between India and the United Kingdom.

552. Press Release on the Establishment of India Chair at the University of Toronto.

New Delhi, January 8, 2010.

The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and Faculty of Arts and Science, University of Toronto, Canada, have signed a Protocol of Intentions and an Implementation Agreement for establishment of an Indian Chair at the University, to foster international cooperation and research between India and Canada.

Under the terms of the Agreement, ICCR, in consultation with Faculty of Arts and Science, University of Toronto, shall appoint an ICCR Visiting Professor* in the South Asian Studies Programme at the University. Further, there is a commitment to explore other areas of cooperation including establishment of post doctoral fellowships and faculty exchange. The Protocol of Intention will remain in force for a period of three years beginning January 1, 2010.

A Joint Statement issued during the visit of Mr. Stephen Harper to India in November 2009, recognized education as an area of new momentum in the bilateral relationship, the need to facilitate mutually beneficial linkages in science, technology and innovation, and build synergies between institutions of higher learning in Canada and India.

On November 30, 2009, the Canadian government announced the Pan-Canadian Framework for Assessment and Recognition of Foreign Credentials which will enable by the end of 2012 a fast-track system of foreign-credential recognition for 15 occupations.

There are 7300 Indian students studying in Canada presently.

* Under this programme, Prof. Ms. Nonica Datta of the University of Delhi was given the honour of inaugural appointment.
Today at about 6 p.m., Prime Minister had a very pleasant and fruitful exchange of views with his Canadian counterpart. You would recall that Prime Minister Harper had paid an official visit to India in November 2009 and the two Prime Ministers met within a couple of weeks thereafter again, at Port of Spain on the sidelines of the Commonwealth Summit. They discussed a number of bilateral, regional and global matters of mutual interest. They reviewed our cooperation in the trade and economic area. During the visit of Prime Minister Harper last year a target of 15 billion dollars in bilateral trade had been established. This is a target that we would like to achieve within a period of five years.

You would also recall that an MoU was signed on setting up a Joint Study Group to explore the possibilities of concluding a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) between India and Canada. The two Prime Ministers today expressed a hope that the report of the Joint Working Group would be available by May this year. During the visit of Prime Minister Harper to India in November 2009, an MoU of cooperation in the area of energy had also been concluded. Today the two Prime Ministers noted with satisfaction that the discussions on an intergovernmental agreement on civil nuclear cooperation had been concluded and hoped that the agreement could be finalized and signed soon.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh also noted that the 25th anniversary of the Kanishka bombing and crash fell in June this year. He remarked that there were continued concerns about the activities of extremist groups and hoped that their activities would be monitored by the Canadian side. Prime Minister Harper assured that they will do their best. The sides agreed that the officials would remain in touch.
Prime Minister Singh and Prime Minister Harper also exchanged views on the important issue of climate change and the prognosis of the next conference which would be held in Mexico towards the end of this year.

They had a substantive exchange of views on the forthcoming G20 summit which would take place in Toronto in June this year. Our Prime Minister is expected to attend the summit.

Prime Minister Harper sought our Prime Minister's views on the agenda of the forthcoming summit and what could be its focus. Prime Minister Singh observed that the G20 framework or mechanism had helped overcome the immediate financial crisis, but had now to move ahead to deal with the larger issue of global imbalances and reforms of the international financial institutions.

Prime Minister also outlined a need for a stable and predictable regime of capital flows especially for the developing countries. He spoke about the nature of the Indian economy, its strong fundamentals, the growth path that we have charted out for ourselves, the expectation that within a couple of years we will re-attain a growth rate of nine per cent or even get into a double-digit growth rate for which we needed a conducive and enabling international environment. Prime Minister particularly underlined that India was not contributing to global imbalances as we were not a mercantile economy.

Prime Minister Harper spoke about Canadian interest in using G20 to develop a framework to encourage balanced and sustainable growth internationally. Their meeting lasted more than half an hour. This was as far as the exchange of views between Prime Minister of India and Prime Minister of Canada is concerned.

Statement by External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna reacting to letters written by the Canadian High Commission in India to some retired/serving officers of the Indian security forces while denying them a Visa to visit Canada.

We have conveyed to the Canadian Government that the letters issued by the Canadian High Commission to serving or retired officers of our security forces and agencies, who had applied for Canadian visa, are entirely unacceptable. India is a democracy. All institutions function under our Constitution. We are proud of our security forces and agencies and the services rendered by them to the nation. We expect the Canadian authorities to address the situation appropriately.

When first reports of this nature came to the Government's notice the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs had said on May 21 that the matter had been taken up with the appropriately with the Canadian side.

As a result of the Indian demarche the Canadian Government regretted the issue of the letter on this account. Subsequently a question on the subject was raised with Secretary (West) by a journalist at the media briefing on June 26 on the eve of the Prime Minister's visit to Canada:

Question: This question is for Secretary (West). As you know, the Canadian Government has denied visas to a large number of senior Government officials from India. While they have apologized, even after the apology no visas have been granted. Is the Prime Minister going to take that up in the bilateral meeting? And the issue of the pro-Khalistan elements and their activities in Canada even now?

Secretary (West): We are cognizant of the activities of what you term as pro-Khalistani elements. We have drawn the attention of our Canadian interlocutors to such activities, and the fact that they are undesirable and do not contribute to the relationship. As far as the visas issue is concerned, we have taken up this matter. As you have rightly recalled, the Canadian authorities regretted the letter that has been issued by their officials. And the External Affairs Minister thereafter said that the matter is closed.

The issue of Canadian visa also figured in the media briefing of the Foreign Secretary for President's visit to China on May 25, 2010 and following questions and answers took place;

Question: I have a little different question. The Canadian Embassy (high commission) has refused visa to two police officer - ADG (Crime) Rajan Gupta and SSP Patiala, R.S. Hatta-on the pretext that they were involved in terrorist related activities. What is the Indian Government thinking about it? (Original question was asked in Hindi)

Question: If I may add to this, this is not the first time, Madam, this has happened. This has happened with serving officers of the Indian Government earlier as well.

Foreign Secretary: I will reply in English because the second question is in English.

The matter, when it was brought to the attention of the Ministry of External Affairs, was taken up immediately and appropriately with the Canadian High Commission and, of course, the Canadian Government. We take this matter very seriously. That is what I wanted to say. Of course, the Canadian Foreign Minister has, in a public statement, stated that Canada has the highest regard for India's democratic institutions and processes, and also respect for India's armed forces and related institutions. But let me once again say that we did take up the matter, we expressed our serious concern, and we continue to take this matter very seriously.
Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao and Secretary (West) Vivek Katju on Prime Minister’s visit to Canada.

New Delhi, June 22, 2010.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon and good to see you all in numbers. As you are aware, Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh would be leaving shortly for Toronto to participate in the G20 Summit and also to have a bilateral Summit meeting with his Canadian counterpart. Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao, and Secretary (West) Shri Vivek Katju are here to brief you about the G20 Summit and also about the bilateral component. Let me also introduce Mrs. Vani Rao, Director (AMS), who has joined us, and is to the right of Secretary (West). Foreign Secretary and Secretary (West) would be making their opening remarks and thereafter would be happy to take a few questions. May I request Foreign Secretary to kindly make her opening remarks?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you, Vishnu. Good afternoon to all of you. The Fourth G20 Summit is being held on June 26th and 27th 2007 in Toronto, Canada. This is the fourth Summit of the international grouping within a span of 20 months, starting with the Washington Summit in November of 2008, the London Summit in April 2009, and the Pittsburgh Summit in September 2009. We believe this is indicative of the dynamism and importance of this grouping which since Pittsburgh has been designated as the premier forum for international economic cooperation.

As the host, the Prime Minister of Canada will preside over this Summit. Leaders of the G20 member countries are expected to attend. Canada has also invited Spain, Netherlands, Malawi (as Chair of the African Union), Ethiopia (which holds the Chair of NEPAD), and Vietnam (as the Chair country of ASEAN), to the Summit. In addition, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the President of the World Bank, the Managing Director of the IMF, the Director-General of the WTO, heads of the ILO, the Financial Stability Board, etc., are likely to be present.

Our Prime Minister will participate in the G20 Toronto Summit. PM's delegation will include the Deputy-Chairman of the Planning Commission
Dr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, who is the G20 Sherpa from India. In addition, there will be other senior officials attending as part of Prime Minister's delegation including the National Security Advisor.

Prime Minister will arrive in Toronto on June 26th and has a very busy schedule. The G20 Summit starts with an Official Welcome and Reception followed by Working Dinner by the Prime Minister of Canada and the day's programme concludes with a cultural event. On June 27, the programme includes the Summit Opening Plenary followed by other plenary sessions, a G20 Family Photograph, a leaders' working lunch, and finally the concluding Final Plenary in the afternoon.

After the Summit, Prime Minister will attend to the bilateral component of his visit to Canada on which my colleague Mr. Vivek Katju will brief you immediately following my opening statement.

Prime Minister will interact with leaders of participating countries in the G20 Summit on a range of bilateral, regional and global issues of mutual interest. Some bilateral meetings are envisaged on the sidelines of the Summit and we will keep you informed of them.

The host country Canada is organizing some side events in conjunction with the G20 Summit. There is firstly a G20 Business Summit, or B20, as it has been called, which will be held on June 25th and 26th 2010, to which each country has been invited to send two business persons. India will be represented at the B20 by CII and FICCI and it is event is being organised at the invitation of the Canadian Finance Minister.

The other event is the G20 Youth Summit called 'MY Summit' for which each country will be sending up to seven persons. India will be represented by a youth group selected by our Department of Youth Affairs. Select participants from the Youth Summit will also interact briefly with the G20 leaders on June 27 afternoon.

The forthcoming Toronto Summit's theme is, “Recovery and New Beginnings”. The Summit's main focus will be on implementation of the previous Summit decisions. Therefore, the leaders are expected to take stock of where we are and to chart the future direction. They can be expected to review the current status of the global economic recovery, as well as, the progress of implementation regarding the past G20 Summit decisions.

In the light of the above, the leaders will decide on the mandate and direction of the G20’s future course of action. Without trying to prejudge the deliberations of the Summit, broadly speaking some of the areas the leaders can be expected to address are: global recovery, its prospects and challenges; the framework for strong, sustainable and balanced growth; international financial institutions (IFI) reform; financial regulatory reform; protectionism; and looking ahead to Seoul the venue of the Fifth G20 Summit in November 2010.

As in the past, a Toronto Summit Declaration or Communiqué is expected to be issued, although I would refrain from speculating on the outcome of the Summit or the contents of the Communiqué. I am sure all of you are aware of the background of the G20, the previous G20 Summits, the discussions that have taken place at the previous Summits. So, I am not going to go into those details. But what the G20 has sought to focus on in its previous Summit meetings and the meetings of the Finance Ministers is to evolve a common understanding on the causes of the global financial and economic crisis, a reaffirmation of commitment to financial and economic stability and growth, to evolve common principles for reforming the financial markets, and launching of the national plans for information.

As you know, the Pittsburgh Summit, which is the last Summit held before the Toronto Summit, had designated the G20 as the premier forum for international economic cooperation and had noted the success achieved in tackling the international financial and economic crisis by prompt and effective measures. It had mandated a framework for strong, sustainable and balanced growth in the 21st century through sound macro-economic policies; emphasised the need for sustained strong policy responses to growth until a durable recovery was secured; and to avoid any premature withdrawal of stimulus while preparing for coordinated exit strategies. It had called for implementing regulatory measures governing banks, financial institutions, capital markets, compensation standards, risk taking, over-the-counter (OTC) derivatives, credit rating agencies, hedge funds, non-cooperative jurisdictions, as well as, reiterated the fight against protectionism and all its forms. It was also decided to hold a Summit at Toronto and thereafter at Seoul, and to have Annual Summits thereafter starting with France in 2011.

As you also know, the G20 comprises the following countries: Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, the EU, France, Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Russia, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, South Korea, Turkey, UK and the United States. Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: May I now invite Secretary (West) to make his opening remarks?

Secretary (West) (Shri Vivek Katju): Thank you, Vishnu. The Prime Minister’s visit to Canada for the G-20 Summit provides an opportunity for a substantive bilateral engagement between the Prime Minister and his Canadian counterpart, Mr. Stephen Harper. The interaction between the two Prime Ministers is scheduled for the evening of June 27 in Toronto.

India and Canada share a commitment to democratic and constitutional governance and to the values which are associated with such governance: the rule of law, the protection and promotion of civil liberties and personal freedom, inclusive growth and pluralism. These form a firm foundation for the bilateral relationship. The two countries have been engaged, over the past few years, in enhancing the substance of the bilateral relationship in areas that can directly contribute to the welfare of the people. Thus, there has been a focus on economic and commercial cooperation and cooperation in the field of science, technology, innovation, education, health and agriculture among others. The visit of Prime Minister Stephen Harper to India in November, 2009 provided an opportunity to the two countries to impart momentum to their cooperation in these areas. Prime Minister’s discussions with Prime Minister Harper in Toronto will give another impetus to our cooperation.

A number of Agreements and Memoranda of Understanding are under discussion and negotiations with the Canadian side. Some of these have made substantial progress and if concluded before the visit in all respects, may be signed during the visit. These are the Agreement for Cooperation in Civil Nuclear Energy, an MOU for Cooperation in Mining, an MOU for Cooperation in Higher Education, an MOU for Cooperation in Culture and a Social Security Agreement.

Official Spokesperson: Foreign Secretary and Secretary (West) will be happy to take questions on PM's visit for G20 Summit and the Canadian bilateral component.

Question: My question is with regard to the likely stance that India is going to take on the proposal of a financial transaction tax. This has been spoken about in the past. What sort of stance could India take at the G20 Summit?

Foreign Secretary: The Finance Secretary has addressed this in a recent interview. This is really a question within the ambit of the Finance Ministry. I think suffice it to say that our banking sector is extremely healthy. While we have spoken in the G20 context about the importance of financial regulations, on the issue of the bank tax I think as far as India is concerned, the health of our banking sector speaks for itself.

Question: Madam, as Mr. Katju just pointed out, one of the agreements that are likely to be signed between India and Canada is the one on civil nuclear energy. Last week you began negotiations with South Korea. This week you are going to do something with Canada. How do you look at this expansion of India’s nuclear energy portfolio?

Foreign Secretary: Positively. I think the universe has opened up for India as far as cooperation in nuclear energy is concerned. And as far as Canada is concerned, Vivek will answer your question.

Question: This is a supplement. In 1974 when India conducted its first nuclear test, Canada sort of went back on the agreement that it had with India. How do you see this now?

Secretary (West): We do not look back: we look to the future. Well, the agreement under consideration is on cooperation in civil nuclear energy. This covers the areas of research, of development of nuclear energy applications in the field of agriculture, healthcare industry and environment, in cooperation in the field of nuclear waste management, nuclear safety, radiation safety, and environmental protection, etc. It covers a large ambit in the area of peaceful nuclear issues.
Question: This question is for Secretary (West). As you know, the Canadian Government has denied visas to a large number of senior Government officials from India. While they have apologized, even after the apology no visas have been granted. Is the Prime Minister going to take that up in the bilateral meeting? And the issue of the pro-Khalistan elements and their activities in Canada even now?

Secretary (West): We are cognizant of the activities of what you term as pro-Khalistani elements. We have drawn the attention of our Canadian interlocutors to such activities, and the fact that they are undesirable and do not contribute to the relationship. As far as the visas issue is concerned, we have taken up this matter. As you have rightly recalled, the Canadian authorities regretted the letter that has been issued by their officials. And the External Affairs Minister thereafter said that the matter is closed.

Question: You have mentioned that we are going to have talks regarding cooperation in higher education, mining and agriculture. Why are we not going to tackle the important issue of terrorism which the whole world is facing today?

Secretary (West): India and Canada are cooperating in the field of counter-terrorism. There is a regular structured dialogue between the two countries and the discussions are held on a periodic basis. There is also continuing cooperation between the two sides in this regard.

Question: Just a clarification on the civil nuclear energy cooperation. Will this agreement pave way for Canadian nuclear companies setting up nuclear reactors in India or supplying nuclear fuel to India? Also, since Canada is a member of the Nuclear Suppliers Group, will the Prime Minister raise the issue of Sino-Pakistan nuclear cooperation?

Secretary (West): As far as the Sino-Pakistan nuclear cooperation issue is concerned I think Foreign Secretary may like to say something. To answer the earlier part of your question, yes I think the agreement does cover the supplies of uranium and natural resources. As far as cooperation is concerned, I think that would be decided by the concerned authorities here which is the Department of Atomic Energy.
Foreign Secretary: I had anticipated that you would ask this question. As you are aware, we have been following reports about the supply of two additional nuclear power reactors by China to Pakistan. Now there are reports that all of us have seen, which mention also the issue of the supply of these reactors in the context of the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) guidelines. As you know, India is not a member of the NSG. But we are monitoring the debate and the developments in this regard as they relate to this subject of supply of nuclear reactors by China to Pakistan.

Question: In view of the recent oil leak in the Gulf, is there going to be any discussion with Canada, apart from the nuclear energy, on cooperation in non-conventional energy sources like solar energy, for example?

Secretary (West): We have a bilateral Energy Panel and there was a meeting of the Energy Panel a few weeks ago in Canada. Within the ambit of this panel are all areas of energy including the areas that you have mentioned such as solar energy and other non-conventional energy. There are also discussions which are taking place on matters relating to energy efficiency.

Question: There was a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) that was being discussed. Has there been some progress on that? Is it likely to be signed or is there still some area to be covered?

Secretary (West): During the visit of Prime Minister of Canada a Joint Study Group was set up to look into this matter that you have mentioned, a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Partnership Agreement. The officials who are responsible for the Joint Study Group have met and they submitted their report. And these are being studied by the two countries.

Question: What would India's stance be vis-à-vis the Yuan and its role in re-balancing the world economy, especially considering that the US is pressing for the Yuan to be revalued because that would reduce the deficits on one side and these excess of surpluses on the other side. What would India's stance be?
Foreign Secretary: Here again I will draw reference to what the Finance Secretary has also said on this issue, I think it was yesterday, that we will wait and we will watch the impact of China's move to de-peg the Yuan. We have to wait and watch and see what the impact will be on the economy of the region. China is, of course, an important trading partner of India. So, we would carefully assess the impact of these recent developments.

Question: The Indian Air Force has sought permission to pull out its helicopters from the UN Missions in Democratic Republic of Congo and Sudan. MEA being the nodal agency, has the MEA taken a decision on that? Has it written the UN on this issue?

Foreign Secretary: Yes, the Ministry of Defence has raised the issue with us. We are in touch with our Permanent Mission to the UN in New York. We are working with the Ministry of Defence on the one hand here in New Delhi and also with the UN authorities to organise a phased withdrawal.

Question: A few weeks back the Canadian Parliament accepted a motion to declare the 1984 Sikh riots as genocide. What is India’s reaction to this? On Kanishka also, what are we doing about it?

Secretary (West): We are aware of this petition. We are also aware that the leader of the party to which the Member of the Canadian Parliament belongs, has disassociated himself from it. It is, of course, preposterous to make any such allegation. And, as far as the Kanishka matter is concerned, yes we have seen the report; we are studying its findings. We do note that the findings include the fact that extremism which led to this terrible tragedy, the terrorism that led to it, was not getting proper attention, both prior to the tragedy and later. That I think is part of the findings.

Question: Madam, on the issue of extradition for Warren Anderson, you said earlier that you would wait for the GoM's recommendations. Now since the Group of Ministers has signalled that fresh attempts would be made at his extradition, during the course of any of your bilateral meetings in this Summit would you be raising the issue? Or how soon would MEA set the ball rolling?
Foreign Secretary: The reconstituted Group of Ministers on the 1984 Bhopal gas disaster has submitted its report in a sealed cover yesterday to the Prime Minister, as stated by the Group of Ministers Chairman, Shri P. Chidambaram, our Home Minister, to the media yesterday. The Union Cabinet is expected to meet shortly to examine this report. We will await the decision of the Cabinet in this regard.

Question: Madam, you are going to Pakistan tomorrow. India and Pakistan have exchanged 19 dossiers so far after the 26/11 Mumbai attacks but the investigations there seem to be tardy. How hopeful are you that with the visit of the Home Minister things will move forward? Do you think that it is time for Pakistan to take some credible action to actually prosecute the 26/11 perpetrators?

Foreign Secretary: We have always emphasised the need for credible action on the part of Pakistan, in regard to the evidence that we have provided on the Mumbai terror attacks, the additional information that has been provided over the last few months. We have underlined the need for Pakistan to take this evidence seriously, to take it onboard and to take substantive action in response to what we have conveyed to them. Obviously, this issue will form a part of our discussions with the Pakistan Government during the forthcoming visit. I will be meeting with my Pakistani counterpart Mr. Salman Bashir in Islamabad day after tomorrow. Also, our Home Minister Shri P. Chidambaram, who is going to Islamabad for the SAARC Interior Ministers meeting, will have a meeting with his Pakistani counterpart Mr. Rehman Malik. Obviously, our core concerns about this issue will be conveyed and will be discussed.

As far as the firing, it is extremely unfortunate. Over the last few months we have pointed and we have conveyed to Pakistan our concerns about the rise in infiltration, about the ceasefire violations, and the fact that such incidents which have been provoked for no reason at all do not contribute to a positive atmosphere between India and Pakistan.

Official Spokesperson: Thank you very much.
The Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and the York University, Toronto have signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) for establishment of a Chair of Indian Studies at the York University. Consul General of India in Toronto Ms. Preeti Saran and Dr. Mamdouh Shoukri, President and Vice Chancellor of the York University signed the MoU.

Under the terms of the Agreement, ICCR, in consultation with the York University, shall appoint a Professor who would be visiting the University for a period of 13 weeks during each academic year. The Indian Professor would contribute to the academic life of the York University by engaging in teaching and research in his/her respective specialization.

York University is Canada's third-largest university with a student population of approximately 51,000 and 2,00,000 alumni worldwide. This makes York University a suitable University to host a Chair of Indian Studies. The establishment of a Chair of Indian Studies would be an important step in furthering ICCR's larger mandate of fostering and strengthening academic and cultural bonds and towards enhancing knowledge and awareness about India, through exchange of academicians.
557. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the media after his talks with the Canadian Prime Minister Harper.

Toronto, June 27, 2010.

Your Excellency Prime Minister Harper, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Media

Thank you, Prime Minister Harper, for your very warm words of welcome, and for your generous hospitality and friendship.

I would also like to congratulate you for your most successful chairmanship of the G 20 Summit.

I am extremely satisfied with my bilateral meeting with Prime Minister Harper today. Our discussions have carried forward the momentum that has characterized our relations in the last few years. India fully reciprocates Canada's desire to intensify our bilateral relations in all areas. Prime Minister Harper's visit to India in November 2009 was a major step in this direction.

Today, we have added fresh vitality and content to our cooperation.

The Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement that we have signed breaks new ground in the history of our cooperation in this sector. It reflects the change in international realities and will open new doors for mutually beneficial cooperation in nuclear energy.

We have identified renewable energy, clean technologies and energy efficiency as other priority areas of cooperation. The newly constituted Canada-India Energy Forum has already begun its work and has our full support. We have also decided to focus on mining and agriculture as the other priority areas of cooperation.

We have reaffirmed our resolve to achieve the annual bilateral trade target of 15 billion dollars within the next five years, and to encourage two-way flow of investments. The submission of the report of the Joint Study Group to study the feasibility of a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement marks an important step in bringing our two economies closer together. We have directed our officials to examine the report and expedite the next steps.

The strong people to people links between our countries are a unique asset for both of us. We have agreed to intensify exchanges in the fields of higher education, culture, science and technology and innovation, so that together we can build the knowledge economy of the future.

My visit to Canada coincides with the 25th anniversary of the Kanishka air crash. This terrible disaster and the suffering it has led to will forever remain a stark reminder of the need for all of us to work unitedly to eliminate the scourge of terrorism. The victims of this tragedy deserve full justice.

I am convinced that a strong India-Canada partnership will facilitate solutions to global challenges such as energy and food security, sustainable development, climate change and the fight against extremism and poverty. Towards this end, we have agreed to promote and maintain a high level dialogue between India and Canada.

I reaffirm India’s commitment to strengthening this very important and key relationship.

Thank you.
558. Joint Statement issued during the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Sing to Canada.

Ottawa, June 27, 2010.

The Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, visited Canada from June 26 to June 28 at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Stephen Harper. During his visit, Prime Minister Singh participated in the G-20 Toronto Summit and held bilateral discussions with Prime Minister Harper.

The two Prime Ministers, in reviewing the state of bilateral relations, welcomed the enhanced interaction in a broad range of areas, visits and other exchanges between the two countries. They expressed their desire to broaden and deepen economic, diplomatic, educational, scientific and cultural ties between India and Canada.

The two Prime Ministers also solemnly observed the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the bombing of Air India flight 182 "Kanishka" on June 23, 1985, in which 329 lives were tragically lost. They strongly condemned terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and agreed to direct their respective Governments toward greater cooperation in counter-terrorism and security-related matters.

Reiterating the need for intensifying global cooperation in combating international terrorism, they called for an early conclusion and adoption of the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism within the UN framework.

Prime Ministers Singh and Harper welcomed the signature of the Agreement for Cooperation in Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, which will help facilitate civil nuclear cooperation between the two countries. They both committed to the ratification of the agreement and the completion of all remaining steps necessary to ensure its early implementation. They underscored the potential for mutually beneficial civil nuclear cooperation and trade.

The two leaders committed to expanding a range of activities and institutional frameworks that will contribute to the shared goal of increasing bilateral trade to $15 billion annually in the next five years. During Prime Minister Harper’s visit to India in November 2009, both countries had signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) to establish a Joint Study Group to explore the possibility of a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement between India and Canada. The two Prime Ministers welcomed the conclusion of that report, in which the Joint Study Group identified substantial potential economic gains that both countries could achieve through such an agreement. The two Prime Ministers noted that the recommendations in the report will be examined by both countries and necessary processes for obtaining approvals will be initiated immediately and will aim to be completed by the end of October.

The Prime Ministers also announced their commitment to an annual dialogue* on trade and investment between Canada’s Minister of International Trade and India’s Minister of Commerce and Industry. They also welcomed the possibility of an India-Canada CEO Roundtable later this year.

The two Prime Ministers looked forward to the early signing followed by ratification and implementation of the Social Security Agreement. They noted that the Foreign Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement was under negotiation and looked forward to its early conclusion.

These two agreements will make a significant contribution to the commercial and economic interaction between the two countries.

The Prime Ministers welcomed the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding on Earth Sciences and Mining and looked forward to signing a Memorandum of Understanding on Transportation, noting the scope for bilateral collaboration, trade and investment in the natural resources and infrastructure sectors.

Agriculture and agri-food cooperation represent another area of enhanced exchange and both leaders looked forward to the progressive implementation of projects identified under the January 2009 MOU.

The Prime Ministers recognized some of the greatest strengths in the relationship lie in the vibrant and longstanding people-to-people ties. In that regard they encouraged the expansion of linkages in key areas including education, academic relations, arts, culture, sports and tourism.

To further enhance the considerable momentum achieved in exchanges and collaboration amongst a broad range of higher education institutions in both countries, the Prime Ministers welcomed the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding on Higher Education Cooperation. This framework will facilitate academic exchanges, partnerships and mobility between higher educational institutions in the two countries.

The Prime Ministers also noted initiatives to link Canadian and Indian universities and colleges, including in curriculum development and the creation of Chairs and Centres for Indian studies at a number of Canadian universities, such as, for example, those in the process of being established at Carleton University and McGill University.

They also welcomed the initiative to organize the Festival of India in Canada in 2011, which would present a comprehensive range of Indian culture through performing arts, exhibitions, film festivals, food festivals, among others, as well as the upcoming exhibition of masterworks of Inuit Art from the National Gallery of Canada, which will be presented at the National Museum in New Delhi in the fall of 2010. They look forward to the Commonwealth Games in India in October 2010. To facilitate further cooperation in these areas, the Prime Ministers welcomed the signing of an MOU on Cultural Cooperation.

To achieve the goals set out in this joint statement, the two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to sustained political engagement and a structured exchange of high-level visits and regular dialogues between their officials. Building on the existing annual India-Canada Foreign Policy Consultations, Strategic Dialogues, Trade Policy Consultations, the Joint Working Group on Counter-Terrorism, the Agriculture Working Group, the Joint Science and Technology Cooperation Committee, the Environment Forum and the Energy Forum, they agreed to promote further policy exchanges between ministries and departments of both Governments.

The India-Canada Agreement for Cooperation in Peaceful Uses of Nuclear-Energy which was signed today provides for cooperation in areas as design, construction, maintenance, sharing of operating experience and decommissioning of nuclear reactors, supply of uranium, projects in third countries, nuclear fuel cycle and nuclear waste management. The two countries may promote cooperation in the development and use of nuclear energy applications in the fields of agriculture, health care, industry and environment; and nuclear safety, radiation safety and environmental protection.

2. India and Canada are friendly States with comprehensive capabilities in advanced nuclear technologies. They recognize that nuclear energy is a safe, environment friendly and sustainable source of energy. Taking into account their respective strengths with regard to Pressurized Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs) and CANDU Reactors, there is considerable scope for joint work between the two countries.

India-Canada Memorandum of Understanding for Cooperation in Mining

An India-Canada Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) signed today will establish cooperation between the two countries in the fields of mining and earth sciences. The MoU envisages cooperation in the specific areas of:

a. exploration geochemistry and geophysics;
b. geo-hazards;
c. geo-science information and related informatics;
d. environmental geology;
e. cooperation in improved dialogue on mining and related activities at various international fora;
f. encouragement of improved market access and bilateral investment in relation to mining in both countries where appropriate; and

g. other areas of mutual interest to be decided upon by the participants.

2. Canada is a major mining nation with state-of-the-art technology, expertise in the mining sector. India will benefit from this MoU by way of education, training, and human resource development in geosciences as well as minerals and metals; transfer of technology in support of collaborative projects; and exchange of information on research and development.

India-Canada Memorandum of Understanding for Cooperation in Culture

The India-Canada Memorandum of Understanding on Cultural Cooperation signed today will strengthen and promote better mutual understanding in art, literature, history, sports and other cultural disciplines, and enhance protection and promotion of cultural diversity;

2. Encourage arts and cultural festivals, holding of exhibitions and special events and exchange programmes, particularly during major international events in both countries;

3. Encourage and facilitate exchanges of professionals/experts, knowledge, technical support and expertise in Archaeology, Museums, Cinematography, Arts, Libraries, Archives, Mass media, Tourism and exchanges of exhibitions of artistic, informative, historic and archaeological nature including fine arts, crafts, photography, new media arts, human and social history and heritage;

4. Share expertise on issues related to creation, production, distribution and dissemination of Indian and Canadian cultural goods and services, and facilitate participation in cultural and trade events to promote various cultural goods and services from both countries.

5. Canada will organise an exhibition on 'Inuit Art' in the National Museum, New Delhi in 2010. India will organise a Festival of India in Canada in 2011.
India-Canada Memorandum of Understanding for Cooperation in Higher Education

The India-Canada Memorandum of Understanding for cooperation in Higher Education signed today provides for:

2. Exchanges of students at undergraduate, graduate and post-doctoral level, and short-term awards for faculty and students for research and curriculum development including doctoral studies at Indian and Canadian universities;

3. Joint workshops, seminars, special technical programs and professional/academic development activities, exchange of research materials, publications, educational literature, teaching aids, demonstration material and information;

4. Twinning arrangements between institutions of higher learning and promotion of teaching and research about India and Canada. It will bring together institutions of educational excellence in technical, vocational and higher education through education and training programmes;

5. Allows both countries to explore possibilities of mutual recognition of educational qualifications; and reciprocal internship programs in areas of mutual interest.
It is a singular honour for my wife and me to be here this evening. We are most grateful to Prime Minister Harper and Madame Harper for their gracious invitation to this magnificent dinner tonight.

We are indeed overwhelmed by the warmth of the hospitality accorded to us by the Government and people of this great country.

I convey to each and every one of you the greetings and good wishes of the people of India.

India and Canada share much in common. We are separated by distance but we are united in our values. We both cherish our freedom, our democratic way of life, our pluralism and our spirit of tolerance.

The beautiful city of Toronto, which I am aware is also the birth place of Prime Minister Harper, is a living embodiment of the vitality, energy and diversity that defines both our nations.

Addressing the Joint Session of the Canadian Parliament thirty seven years ago Prime Minister Indira Gandhi had observed that the greatest achievement of the Canadian people was not the high economic standards they have attained but, and I quote: "the fact that the international community regards Canada as a nation of friends and as a factor for international harmony and peace. Canadians stand for a broad liberal outlook on life. They have fought for peace and racial justice," unquote.

These words ring true even today, and I fully endorse them.

Over the years, Canada has reinforced these values, and become a beacon of hope for all those who believe in justice, equality and opportunity. Canada plays an influential role in global affairs - in the maintenance of international peace and stability, protection of the environment, and the promotion and protection of human rights and the rule of law.
I compliment Prime Minister Harper for his superb leadership in the G-20 Summit. The success of the Summit is a tribute to the outstanding intellectual and organizational skills of Prime Minister Harper and his team.

Despite the global economic crisis, the Indian economy has shown resilience and is well on its way to return to an annual growth rate of 8 to 9 percent. We wish to aim higher, and are confident that all the conditions are in place to achieve such an outcome.

The socio-economic transformation of a country of the size of India within a democratic framework will have enormous repercussions for the rest of the world. India today seeks an external environment that is peaceful and conducive for achieving our development goals. It is within this framework that we see new and exciting possibilities for India and Canada to work together to build a better future for ourselves.

In recent years, the Premiers of Quebec and Ontario have visited India. Other Canadian provinces like Manitoba and Saskatchewan have shown interest in expanding business ties with India. Canada has opened new Trade Offices in India.

A growing number of Canadian investors are coming to India in areas like telecommunications, environment, energy, financial services and transportation. Indian investment in Canada has increased ten-fold in the last decade. These are all very encouraging signs.

Prime Minister Harper and I have also identified education as an area of high priority. In India we have embarked upon a massive education and skill development programme. Canadian Universities and academic institutions are renowned for their excellence and world class education. We should aim to collaborate in the cutting edges of technology and build the knowledge economy of the 21st century.

One of the greatest strengths of Canada is its ability to welcome and assimilate peoples from across the world. The Indian origin community in Canada today numbers approximately 1.1 million. The community constitutes a bridge between our two countries that has remained strong and unshakeable even in the most difficult circumstances. We applaud the opportunities they have been given to contribute to their social and economic advancement.

I would like to especially acknowledge their presence here today and wish them even greater success as citizens of Canada.

To foster closer cultural bonds between India and Canada, I am happy to announce that we will organize a year long Festival of India in Canada in 2011. This will showcase India's rich cultural and art heritage, and promote greater tourism and travel.

India will be hosting the Commonwealth Games in Delhi in October this year. I take this opportunity to invite the people of Canada to celebrate the spirit of the Commonwealth with us.

Indians and Canadians enjoy a natural empathy with each other. Let us build upon this foundation to create a more just, fair and equitable world and one which upholds human dignity.

I once again thank the Prime Minister and Madame Harper for their hospitality, and all the distinguished guests for honouring us with their presence this evening.

I thank you.

My dear friends,

I am very grateful to each one of you for having honoured me for being present here today. My first words are going to be words of gratitude, words which speak of the immense pride and joy we have in the achievements of the Indo-Canadians in this country. You are a community of 1.5 million people. The name and fame that you have earned through your hard work has helped to change the people's perspective in the Western world of what India has earned, what India stands for and what India can do and this alone I think entitles you to earn our gratitude. I am very happy that you have flourished in this land. That is the pride we have in your achievements. When I was Finance Minister what I learnt was that the people of India were very keen to prove that given the appropriate environment Indians were second to none. We have to ensure that people don't have to go out of India to Silicon Valley for this to happen. I would like to say that you have distinguished yourselves in all walks of life, whether it is politics, whether it is industry, whether it is trade and whether it is science and technology. In each of these areas people of Indian origin have done us proud.

I have only one word to say that we should not bring to this country some of the divisive elements of politics back at home. You would well know that it does not help to advance the cause of the community. It does not help by living in the past. We take pride in the fact that your roots make you feel emotional about various provinces, about various states but there is still a need to present a united image of the Indo-Canadian community. I have only this request to make.

There are several issues which you have raised and others might have similar issues. I promise you that when I get back home, I will set up some mechanism to deliberate on the issues that have been raised here or raised elsewhere in the Indo-Canadian community.
With regard to events of 1984, these were horrible and they should never have happened. I have on behalf of the Government of India apologized, on behalf of the nation apologized for what happened in 1984. There are concerns about those who perpetrated these crimes must be brought to book. There are possible weaknesses in the Indian legal system, as there may be in the Canadian system. We are trying to address these issues. Our Government, the UPA Government, has opened up all cases for compensation, we are open to provide relief, succor to victims, the relatives so they can once again lead a life of dignity. It is futile to stay in the past. We can't get away from our past but the challenge is to look ahead in a world increasingly globalised, integrated whether you are here or in India.

We are part and parcel of a united India, a country of great diversity where the Sikhs are an honoured part, where I am the Prime Minister of India. Two years back we had J J Singh as the Sikh Commander of the Indian Army, we have Sikhs as Ambassadors. Punjab is today run by Shiromani Akali Dal. Sikhs have made a name and achieved fame. Sikhs want to move ahead from 1984. Some times unwittingly we create an atmosphere which sets the unhappiness of the Sikh community. Therefore it is incumbent on the Sikh diaspora to strengthen the bonds of India-Canada relations. You are vitally involved and must accept all the changes in a globalised world. Divisive elements have no place in an increasingly integrated world. I would urge all of you to remain united and respect each other. You are Indians, you have deep rooted links. You can use your unity to forge ahead and take advantage of the opportunities that India and Canada both offer. We are committed to offer the best relationships with both the countries. India is proud of your achievements and I would like to express my joy at your achievements. If you have any issues our High Commissioner is here and I ensure that these subjects are suitably addressed in India.

561. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the First Annual India - Canada Ministerial Dialogue on Trade and Investment.

New Delhi, September 25, 2010.

The Minister of Commerce and Industry, Shri Anand Sharma, co-chaired the First Annual India-Canada Ministerial Dialogue on Trade and Investment in Ottawa, Canada on 24th September, 2010 with the Canadian Minister of International Trade, Mr. Peter Van Loan. The Indian delegation for the Dialogue also comprised the Commerce Secretary, Dr. Rahul Khullar along with other senior government officials.

While reviewing Canada-India bilateral trade and investment relations, the Ministers encouraged the continued strengthening of economic ties between the two countries. The Ministers agreed that there is significant potential for sustained growth in trade and investment flows between the two countries, and reiterated their Prime Ministers’ commitment to increasing trade from the current level of $ 4.5 billion to $ 15 billion annually in the next five years.

During the meeting, the Ministers released the Canada-India Joint Study Group Report that examined the feasibility of a comprehensive economic partnership agreement (CEPA). They welcomed the Joint Study Group recommendation that negotiations be initiated towards a substantive and ambitious CEPA to the mutual benefit of each Party.

The Ministers looked forward to the early signing followed by ratification and implementation of the Social Security Agreement. They noted that the Foreign Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement was under negotiation and looked forward to its early conclusion. These two agreements will make a significant contribution to the commercial and economic interaction between the two countries. Under the umbrella of the Ministerial Dialogue, both sides agreed in principle to establish working groups on PPP model, focussing on infrastructure, Energy, Mining, Agro-processing, ICT and Education.
Both the Ministers also looked forward, signing Memorandum of Understanding on Cooperation in Road Transportation later this year.

The Ministers also reviewed the current status of bilateral cooperation in critical sectors such as energy, environment, mining, information and communication technology, science and technology, education and training, tourism, financial and other services, agriculture, and infrastructure. They noted the opportunities for private sector to work together in these sectors in third markets.

The Ministers also underlined the importance of greater contact between Canadian and Indian businesses. In this regard, both sides agreed to expedite the establishment of a Canada-India CEO Forum, a high level representative body that would recommend policy initiatives and identify impediments to the enhancement of investment and trade between the two countries.

Shri Anand Sharma also met the Industry Ministry of Canada, Mr. Tony Clement, both the Ministers stressed upon the need to enhance investment and technological collaboration between businesses in the two countries.

Shri Anand Sharma, addressed the India Canada CEO Roundtable meeting, jointly organised by the Canadian Council of Chief Executives and the Confederation of Indian Industry. He also had an interactive session with the Canada-India Centre of Excellence at Carleton University.
Keynote Address by Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao at the India Initiative at the Centre for a New American Strategy and the ASPEN Institute 'The United States and India: Charting the Future Course'.

New Delhi, January 12, 2010.

Mr. Richard Danzig, Chairman of the Board of the Governors of the Centre for New American Strategy

Mr. Nicholas Burns, member of the Board

It is indeed a pleasure to meet you all today and to address such a distinguished Group.

I want to thank you, Mr. Burns, for your kind remarks. I would like to acknowledge your personal contribution to the transformation of the India-US relationship in your capacity as the Under Secretary for Political Affairs in the State Department from 2005-2008.

The launch of the India Initiative by the Centre for a New American Security and the ASPEN Institute is a welcome development. I have always felt that the India-US dialogue and interaction is in need of more forums such as these that can provide the intellectual ferment that yields ideas on a regular basis that can add further value to the relationship as the two governments work to deepen and expand bilateral cooperation.

Before I go to the topic of today's discussion, allow me briefly dwell on our foreign policy objectives. These objectives involve both economic and security-related dimensions, dictated both by India’s ongoing transformation into a globalized economy increasingly connected with the world, the compulsions of balanced and inclusive development within the country, and the environment on India’s periphery. In the sixty years since India’s independence, the national identity of the country which finds expression in harmony and unity in diversity, as a billion people-strong democracy, a secular, non-sectarian republic, non-hegemonic in its regional aspirations, and a responsible global player, has in essence defined its foreign policy.

The task of transforming India so that we are able to eliminate poverty and want, through a sustained increase in the rate of growth of our economy is our paramount concern and focus. As our Prime Minister has noted on many occasions, the emergence of India as a major power house of the evolving global economy, is an idea whose time has come. Even as the world has faced an unprecedented global economic crisis and recession, India still happens to be the second fastest growing economy in the world after China. After a fall in the growth rate of our economy from 8-9% to around 6.5% last year, following the global economic crisis, there are signs of an economic revival with growth touching 7.9% in the third quarter of 2009 and provisional estimates suggesting growth around 7% in the last quarter of 2009. We must, however, regain a growth rate of 8-9% per annum so that our developmental goals and priorities are fully realized in the years to come. One of the goals of India's foreign policy is to create an external environment that promotes the fulfilment of our economic growth, targets and ambitions. And, these include the three dimensions
- capital inflows, access to technology and innovation, as well as the promotion of a free, fair and open world trading system. Central to these tasks therefore is the need to shape a world order that helps the promotion of our developmental interests. It is, therefore, the overriding priority of ensuring India's economic transformation and development in an atmosphere of peace and security that dictates the basic premise of India's foreign policy today, and will continue to dictate our approach in the years to come.

India's land and sea borders present both a challenge and an opportunity. The challenge is security-related, as it involves addressing the clear and present danger of terrorism and religious extremism from across our borders, illegal immigration, smuggling of arms and fake currency, as also unsettled boundaries, the last being particularly the case with our largest neighbour, China. The opportunities present themselves in the form of greater connectivity, increased prospects for freer trade in goods and services, cooperation on climate change, preservation of the environment in a regional cooperative framework such as SAARC, and the prospects for a common market and regional cooperation to promote sustainable development and poverty eradication. Our long sea borders position India uniquely in our region as the one country with the geographical orientation that is both East and West, equally contiguous to the Gulf and the Near East as it is to South East Asia and the Far East. This makes India a natural partner in any serious venture involving maritime cooperation and security, and a logical constituent in regional architectures designed to promote closer interaction on security issues.

Let me now turn to our bilateral relations and how we see them developing in the years ahead.

We have indeed come a long way. We are at a very important juncture in a transformed India-US relationship. If we look at the world today and our relations, it is clear that never before has there been such a convergence of interests or a need for a coordinated approach between India and the USA on some of the biggest challenges facing us: whether they are global, on economic revival, the challenge of terrorism, climate change, pandemics, etc. And this is also reflected in our strategic cooperation which today encompasses and provides for institutional dialogue mechanisms in several areas of convergence such as strategic issues; energy and climate change; education & development; economics, trade and agriculture and science, technology, health and innovation.

The transformation of India-US relations is best symbolized by the Civil Nuclear Energy Cooperation that the two sides are pursuing. The bilateral 123 Agreement concluded in July 2007 and the September 2008 NSG decision for full international cooperation in this area were forward looking and momentous decisions. These decisions were not only long overdue recognition of India’s standing as a country with advanced nuclear technology and our responsible behaviour in this regard, but also opened up significant opportunities for technical collaboration.
The new US Administration has, indeed, focused on continuity in the bilateral relationship. In this, is the inherent recognition of India’s place in the world, our regional role, and our demonstrable economic strength and potential. There has been regular consultation on issues of mutual concern. In many ways, as Prime Minister Manmohan Singh has said, this is an essay in mutual comprehension. It is a partnership based both on principle and pragmatism that has become increasingly more durable and multi-faceted. There is a strong desire to work with each other on a number of issues of mutual concern and interest. During our Prime Minister’s visit to Washington in November 2009, President Obama and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh agreed to provide added meaning and thrust to our relationship. Bipartisan support in the US Congress and Senate for a strong and durable relationship with India was evident throughout the visit. The discussions between President Obama and Prime Minister Singh on the regional situation, the problem and threat of terrorism in our region, Af-Pak issues, our respective relations with major regional players, the global financial situation, were all reflective of the trust, transparency and openness that increasingly marks our dialogue with each other.

An expanded, multi-faceted relationship between India and the United States would naturally entail a focus on military cooperation including joint visits and exercises, cooperation in the protection of sea lanes and the control of piracy - all areas which can work to our mutual advantage. We have been told by the U.S. Administration that they are engaged in efforts to bring significant reform to their export controls so as to free up opportunities for defence cooperation with India. We look forward to these outcomes. In our view, the removal of export controls on the supply of high technology and dual use items would inspire an even greater degree of confidence in our bilateral relationship and understanding.

On the regional situation, we appreciate the commitment of the United States to the stabilization of the situation in Afghanistan, to emphasise the need to grow Afghan capacity to deal with the problems in that country, to intensify efforts to eradicate terrorism so that the terrorist groups in both Afghanistan and Pakistan cannot have field days in the future. Our cooperation with the United States in counter-terrorism is an important dimension of our bilateral relationship and it has come into sharper focus in the wake of the Mumbai terror attack of November 26, 2008.

Let me elaborate on this theme. There are several other security related issues where greater cooperation and more frequent consultations between our two countries are necessary. These include the threat of international terrorism, the evolving security architecture in Asia, etc.

Terrorism in our immediate neighbourhood and cross-border terrorism faced by India is a pivotal security challenge. There is a growing consensus that the increase in terrorist activities in Afghanistan is linked to the support and sanctuaries available in the contiguous areas of Pakistan. Increased terrorist violence in our neighbourhood is a cause for grave concern. That these forces operate across boundaries with impunity was evident in the November 2008 terrorist attack on the city of Mumbai.

The phenomenon of cross border terrorism has also illustrated the difficulties that we face in dealing with Pakistan. We face hostile forces across our border with Pakistan, although we have consistently stressed our support for the advancement of democracy, the growth of civil society, and economic development in an atmosphere of peace, in Pakistan - goals that the United States also identifies with. The groups, who direct such attacks against India, have received the patronage of powerful forces and institutions within that country. It is vital that this support must stop forthwith. Any viable process of normalization of our relations with Pakistan is essentially dependent on this requirement since it is unrealistic to think otherwise.

The initiation of a coordinated AF-Pak strategy by the new U.S. Administration in a sense, highlights a situation that India has witnessed, and been affected by, for over two decades now. It is equally critical for the United States and the international community to pay adequate attention to and realize that the situation both in Afghanistan-Pakistan and the cross-border terrorism that emanates from Pakistan against India are manifestations of the use of terrorist ideologies to promote unscrupulous political or institutional agendas.
Pakistan's concerns of the perceived threat in the East and on Indian activities in Afghanistan need to be unequivocally rebutted. It is also essential to ensure that the international aid that Pakistan receives including that from the United States is not diverted for anti-India purposes as had happened in the past. We have reiterated a number of times that we harbor no aggressive designs on Pakistan. With regard to Afghanistan, India is an important neighbour and our focus there is on development activity with the aim to build indigenous Afghan capacities and institutions for an effective state system to improve delivery of goods and services to Afghan people. We are clear in our determination to work with the world to devise strategies to control terrorism, and to sensitize our friends and partners to the challenges that we have faced in tackling terrorism.

Turning to another country in our region - Myanmar - to understand our policy on Myanmar, you will have to understand the context. Myanmar is a close neighbour with which we have a border of more than 1640 kms. Consequently, it is important for India to ensure a peaceful periphery with Myanmar given the fact that we have several Indian Insurgent Groups which will take advantage of any instability on the border. Any political reform process in Myanmar should, therefore, be peaceful and not cause instability either within Myanmar or on our borders.

We have, therefore, followed a policy of engagement with Myanmar while, at the same time, emphasising to the Government of Myanmar that the process of national reconciliation and political reform initiated by them should be taken forward expeditiously and should be broad-based to include all sections of the society, including various ethnic groups. It is in this context that we have fully supported the UN Secretary General Good Offices and the visits of his Senior Adviser Ibrahim Gambari to Myanmar - some of the visits we even helped facilitate.

Given the overall context of the situation, we believe that sanctions against Myanmar will not be useful and may well affect the very people they are designed to help and become counter-productive. It is therefore with interest that we have noted the recent review of Myanmar policy by the US Administration and the acknowledgement that US sanctions have not worked and that there is a need for the US to engage with the Government of Myanmar.
On the Iranian nuclear issue, India’s position has been consistent. India supports the right of all states to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy consistent with the respective obligations that they have undertaken. As Iran is an NPT member, it has the right to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. At the same time, we also underline the importance of full and effective implementation of all safeguard obligations undertaken by Iran as member State of the IAEA.

While India has voted in favour of the recent IAEA resolution in end-November 2009, we do not believe that the adoption of this Resolution should divert the Parties away from dialogue. This Resolution should not be the basis for a renewed punitive approach or new sanctions. All concerned must expand the diplomatic space to satisfactorily address all outstanding issues.

Turning to Asia, it is clear that with the rapid rise of China and India, as two economic powerhouses in the region, there will be increasing opportunities for economic integration, as also a realignment of forces. With Japan we are developing the foundations of "strategic global partnership" with a strong economic and strategic content. Similarly with China, we have established a strategic and cooperative partnership. We have a multi-faceted relationship with China - it is now our largest trading partner, we consult with each other on global issues, and we share a common commitment to maintain, peace and tranquility on our border. We have good working relations with all major countries in Asia. The key to ensuring long-term security and equilibrium in Asia will be best ensured by building mutual economic stakes in which people, goods, services and even, ideas, can travel with ease across borders. I believe that India’s economic growth offers fresh opportunities for development and prosperity of the region. The rise of China is of course observed with close attention in our region. China’s demonstrable economic strength and its growing military capabilities are a matter of fact and we must incorporate such factors into our calculus of the emerging 21st century scenario in the Asia Pacific. This is where a mature and evolving dialogue between India and the United States will be of considerable relevance in clarifying approaches to the regional situation and the policy approaches of roles of our two countries in these new circumstances.
On the security architecture for the region, there is need for Asian countries and major non-Asian players in Asian security to interact and cooperate. The United States has a major presence in the region. We need to work together to evolve a balanced, open and inclusive framework. The ASEAN Regional Forum has provided a useful model of such interaction and cooperation based on dialogue and consensus in such areas as counter-terrorism, transnational crime, maritime security, disaster relief, pandemics and non-proliferation and disarmament.

Our two countries are cooperating in myriad ways that directly contribute to our development agenda. For example, food and nutritional security is critical for our development. India has emerged as a surplus food producer, and our ability to manage food security both in terms of availability and price level is recognized. We, however, cannot afford to slacken our efforts on this front. We have agreed to bring our scientists to work together towards improving weather forecasting and risk management for agriculture production. Our ongoing cooperation also focuses on research to increase food productivity, prolong the shelf life of the agricultural produce, capacity building, etc.

Similarly, we are working together towards establishment of a regional Disease Detection Centre in India to deal with the problem of pandemics and provide an impetus to research, capacity building and connectivity in the region.

Over the past few years, we have successfully collaborated on specific second and third generation bio-fuels, wind and solar energy pilot projects. This process to create adaptable and affordable technology would not only be relevant to us but would find resonance in several other countries in the region, Asia and Africa.

President Obama and Prime Minister Singh have launched the "Obama-Singh 21st Century Knowledge Initiative" to tap innovation and ideas of the two knowledge-based societies. Similarly the launch of the Women's Empowerment Forum will provide an opportunity to share ideas and best practices in promoting women's participation and equality in society.
On the issue of nuclear disarmament, we feel encouraged by some recent positive steps. President Obama’s administration has signaled US willingness to reduce the role of nuclear weapons in its nuclear strategy and to work towards a nuclear weapon free world. The renewed debate underway on this issue is in line with our long held positions on achieving a universal, non-discriminatory and verifiable nuclear disarmament.

We are today also faced with the challenges of nuclear terrorism and nuclear security. India has been affected by the clandestine nuclear proliferation in its neighbourhood and given the challenges of terrorism in our region, we are naturally concerned about the possibility of nuclear terrorism. We welcome the initiative taken by the President Obama to host a summit on Nuclear Security in April 2010. India is working together with its international partners to ensure that this Summit would be an important milestone in our efforts to prevent nuclear terrorism.

Our civil nuclear energy cooperation is equally critical from the perspective of the twin challenges of meeting energy requirements of our rapidly growing economy and imperatives of dealing with climate change. From the latter perspective, nuclear energy is green energy.

We have been co-operating on the issue of climate change both bilaterally and multilaterally. India took an active part in the negotiation of the Copenhagen Accord in December 2009. The Copenhagen Accord reaffirmed the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. The Copenhagen Accord will undoubtedly serve as a significant input into the post-Copenhagen negotiating process leading up to CoP-16. It, however, cannot supplant the UN Framework Convention of Climate Change and the Kyoto Protocol.

We need to uphold the multilateral process, the principle of consensus, even while we take forward the key elements of the Accord into the ongoing UNFCCC negotiations. We also need to take note of the fact that CoP-15 decided, by consensus, to continue multilateral negotiations on the two parallel tracks i.e. the Bali Action Plan and the Kyoto Protocol tracks, with no change in their mandates.

At the same time, irrespective of the outcome of the negotiations, India stands by its voluntary domestic target of reducing the energy intensity of its GDP growth by 20-25% by 2020 in comparison to the level achieved in 2005. This reflects India's readiness to address the issue of climate change with commitment and focus, even as it seeks to meet the challenges of economic and social development and poverty eradication.

Reverting back to the topic of my address - ours is a relationship with boundless possibilities for mutual benefit. There are no real irritants in our relations. All indicators point to a strong desire to work with each other, in both countries. Through the surge in trade, services and investment that we have witnessed in both directions, our entrepreneurs and corporate have already demonstrated that India-US ties are creating jobs and benefits in both countries. Our governments are working to put in place a better enabling environment to facilitate movement of capital and human resources. And the role of the Indian American community in promoting the positive transformation of our relations must be acknowledged fulsomely.

To conclude, in an increasingly complex world, neither India nor the United States can achieve their goals on their own; nor will our partnership exclusively suffice to address our problems. But, our collaboration and cooperation will be indispensable for shaping the character of the 21st century. It is also natural that we will not always agree on everything. But, increasingly, I believe there is the maturity and confidence in our relationship to address areas of divergence with openness, and also promote convergences in our approaches to global challenges. We share common values and common strategic interests.

I look forward to the discussions this afternoon. I am certain that they would provide a useful input for policy makers.

Thank you.
563. Press Release issued by the Ministry of Defence on the visit of US Defence Secretary Robert N. Gates.

New Delhi, January 20, 2010.

The US Secretary of Defence Dr. Robert N Gates met the Defence Minister Shri AK Antony in New Delhi, today. Dr. Gates was accompanied by senior officials from the US Department of Defence. The Defence Secretary Shri Pradeep Kumar and other senior officials from the Ministry of Defence were also present during the meeting.

During the meeting, both sides exchanged views and perspectives on a number of issues including the regional security situation and global security challenges. Shri Antony and Dr Gates both expressed satisfaction about the improvement in bilateral defence relations since the signing of the bilateral cooperation agreement in 2005. Both sides also expressed optimism about the prospects for enhancement of bilateral defence relations in all areas, including military to military interactions and in the area of defence trade. The two Ministers also discussed prospects for cooperation between both sides in the protection of the global commons and in the area of maritime security and counter-terrorism.

Shri Antony conveyed to Dr. Gates the Indian concerns regarding denial of export licenses for various defence related requirement of the Armed Forces and also regarding the inclusion of some Indian Defence PSUs and DRDO labs in the 'Entity List' of the US Government. Shri Antony expressed the view that such restrictions were anomalous in the context of the steady improvement in the bilateral defence relations between both countries. The US Secretary of Defence informed Shri Antony that President Obama has intiated a comprehensive reform of US export control regulations and assured that this would involve facilitation in the supply of defence technology and equipment to India.

Defence Minister Shri AK Antony convyed the view that the bilateral defence trade relations between India and the USA should move from a purely buyer-seller relationship to a more comprehensive relationship covering transfer of technology and co-production. Further referring to the US Government’s proposal to conclude certain umbrella agreements like CISMOA, etc. Shri Antony expressed the view that the proposed agreements would need to be assessed from the view point of the benefits which would accrue to India.

564. Press Release issued by the Prime Minister’s Office on the telephone call by President Barack Obama to Prime Minister to condemn Pune blast.

New Delhi, February 18, 2010.

US President Barack Obama called the Prime Minister earlier this morning to condemn the blast that took place in Pune on Saturday and to condole the loss of lives. In a brief conversation, the two leaders took the opportunity to review developments in Indo-US relations.

565. Address by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao at the Woodrow Wilson Centre on "Two Democracies - Defining the Essence of India-US Partnership".

Washington (D. C), March 15, 2010.

Mr. Lee Hamilton,

Thank you for your kind words of introduction.

It is a particular privilege to be at the Woodrow Wilson Centre - amidst the distinguished men and women who are here today - many of whom have put in years of dedicated work and study in subjects that are of immense relevance to the India-US discourse. I am grateful for your interest and will, I am sure, be enriched by your thoughts and views in the course of this afternoon meeting.
I also want to recognize the role of the USIBC and the Indian federations and associations of business and industry that have reached out and worked successfully with partners across the United States to build the economic linkages and the people to people bonds - that are the bedrock of the India US relationship.

Strong Fundamentals

It was President Woodrow Wilson who said "I believe in...democracy...because it releases the energies of every human being." This is what democracies seek to do - in essence, to harness the energies, and enable the empowerment of all their citizens, regardless of colour or creed, ethnicity or economic status. Our two robust and vibrant democracies believe and act on the basis of such ideals. I am therefore, particularly enthused by the choice of theme for my address this afternoon. Particularly as we commence the second decade of this century, it is appropriate that we reflect on the essence and the potential of the unique partnership between two of the world’s greatest democracies - the oldest and the largest.

Geographically, India and America are separated by almost ten thousand miles. Yet, we are nevertheless connected in a very direct and obvious way by the kind of similarities that we share - our respect for fundamental democratic freedoms, our strong and enduring democratic institutions, the rule of law, our culture of debate and discussion, the stress on accountability and transparency in governance, our autonomous institutions that are constitutionally empowered to safeguard fundamental rights and our shared commitment to preserve the pluralistic and secular nature of our diverse and open societies. It was therefore no accident that the Constitution that India adopted in 1950 was also inspired in great measure by the ideals of freedom, equality and justice that formed the bedrock of the United States Constitution. Yet, for several decades after our independence, relations between our two democracies failed to realize their potential because of estrangements derived from the atmosphere of the Cold War and its manifestations in our region.

We have come a long way, however, in the last decade and a half. Today, as India has grown to be one of the leading economies of the world, and a responsible nuclear power, we are cooperating at the global level on a range of issues. Bilaterally, our ties have become truly broad-based. The conclusion of the India-US Civil Nuclear Agreement in 2008 marked a major definitive milestone in our relationship. That our ties are marked by both popular and political support was underlined in 2009 by the reaffirmation by our newly elected governments that they would encourage the further positive transformation of our strategic partnership for mutual benefit. In July 2009, we launched a Strategic Dialogue process that covers a number of areas of convergence under the five pillars of: Strategic Cooperation, Energy and Climate Change, Education and Development, Economics, Trade and Agriculture and Science, Technology, Health and Innovation. This is the sentiment that was expressed by President Obama when he told Prime Minister Manmohan Singh last year that “obstacles once thought insurmountable are now well-springs of new cooperation” and that ours is “one of the defining partnerships of the 21st century”.

The strong support in both countries for a robust bilateral relationship is, to quote our Prime Minister, based on both principle and pragmatism. Not only are we natural partners in addressing strategic issues of regional or global concern but there are very direct linkages on a day to day basis: the US is our largest trade partner - if we count goods and services - with a total bilateral trade of USD 65.9 billion last year; the United States is one of the leading sources of Foreign Direct Investment into India and recently, many US companies have announced major expansion plans in India. US businesses have increased their competitive advantages and innovation drive through their operations in India. Indian investment flows to the US were estimated at US $ 13 billion in 2007 and continue to steadily increase. Statistics show that 70% of urban Indians believe relations between India and the US have improved in recent years, and of them, 91% consider this to be a good thing.

Ladies and Gentlemen, it is these fundamentals that are the essence of the partnership between our democracies.

Priorities and Convergences

And there is another key contributing factor today: the foreign policy priorities of the United States and India seem to converge now as never before - and both Governments recognize the validity of their cooperation in helping to craft solutions to the foremost challenges of our times - the threat of terrorism as it affects both our nations, the dangers of religious extremism, promoting development in Afghanistan, the global financial and economic crisis that has given new content and meaning to the work of forums like the G-20, the common challenges of addressing the impact of global climate change or disaster relief, pandemics or piracy at sea: our partnership has increasing relevance and meaning.

Challenges and Opportunities

These convergences create the global strategic partnership in which India and the USA have launched a new phase of cooperation across a broad spectrum of human endeavor - based on our common ideals and complementary strengths - to address the global challenges of the 21st century. And in India, the United States must see an anchor for stability in our region, a nation that is wedded to the principles of responsible behaviour and mature restraint, is a powerful and rapidly growing economy, and that can, as one analyst noted recently, be "potentially America's most important partner in Asia". Our Prime Minister sees the India-US relationship as an "essay in mutual comprehension".

Today, the challenge is how we take our economic and political partnerships to a higher level of achievement and provide as it has been said, "more passion" to energize our relationship further. What are the constraints to our relationship? Often the question influential opinion makers in India ask is has the United States sufficiently visualized the importance of its relationship with India, and freeing it of the hyphenations that have somehow tied it down, and stunted its normal growth.

Why India? Today, when the world, and the United States look at our region, they are witness to the rise of India as a democratic nation with proven abilities to manage diverse developmental challenges within its territorial borders, that has increasing ability to promote economic development beyond its borders in its neighbouring countries and farther afield, in Africa, whose skills in the knowledge economy place it in the front ranks of global excellence, is an acknowledged nuclear power with a record of responsible behaviour and adherence to MTCR and NSG guidelines, and whose rapid economic growth place it in the trajectory of becoming the third largest economy in the world.
Our economic performance against the backdrop of the international economic and financial crisis serves as a useful illustration of the discipline and prudence with which India has managed its financial and economic policies. India’s growth in the four years preceding the onset of the global financial crisis was around 9%. In late 2008, India’s growth slowed down to 6.7% but recovered to a level of 7.2% in the last financial year. Projections indicate 8.2% in the next financial year and in the next 4-5 years we anticipate a return to 9% based on a revival in exports, manufacturing, infrastructure investment and private consumption demand along with a favourable capital market. In a knowledge- and technology-driven world, India has demonstrated certain unique strengths - our IT exports for the current year are poised to touch the $50 billion figure; India currently exports generic medicines worth USD 11 billion; our leading steel companies have posted double digit growth in sales volume; the December 2009 index of industrial production surged month-on-month by a record 16.8%. Cumulative industrial growth is pegged at around 9%. The most noticeable feature of India’s economic growth is that it is driven primarily by domestic demand. In the recent budget, 46 percent of the total Plan allocation was earmarked for infrastructure development - which implies significant business and investment opportunities. Our youthful demography with a projected average age of 29 years in 2020, will drive economic expansion in our country, particularly the expansion of our urban sector well into the second half of this century.

To achieve an external environment that promotes the fulfillment of our economic growth, targets and ambitions, we have identified three key pre-requisites - capital inflows, access to technology and innovation, as well as the promotion of a free, fair and open world trading system. Central to these tasks is a world order that helps the promotion of our development interests. And here again, the partnership between India and the United States can provide a creative impulse and momentum that builds a global environment that is conducive to the realization of these goals. Turning to India’s immediate neighbourhood, I believe that there should be deeper awareness and understanding of India’s objective to work for stability and peace in its neighbourhood. Just as the tackling of terrorism is a policy priority of the US Administration, India, too, is concerned at the terror infrastructure that has been allowed to be established, take root and be used as an instrument of state policy in our immediate neighbourhood.
Our heartland, our cities and our people, are exposed to the threat of terrorism in a constant and almost unremitting way in a manner that the United States well understands, given the similar threats that are directed against the American people.

Defining restraint

India's approach has been to deal with this challenge with restraint. Despite the brazen and malignant nature of the threats we face, India has made several genuine efforts to restore trust and confidence. Aggressive pronouncements by persons identified by the world as terrorists continue to be made openly against India. Distinctions made between the various terrorist outfits are now meaningless, since they are now in effect fused both operationally and ideologically. We have consistently emphasized the need for Governments concerned to act decisively to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism and to effectively deal with groups that perpetrate it. However, our restraint should not be confused with weakness or unwillingness to act against those that seek to harm our people, create insecurity, and hamper our developmental goals. We are a strong country and we possess the capacity to deal effectively with those that pursue destructive agendas against India and its people.

We have, time and again, made genuine attempts to address outstanding issues, most importantly, the issue of terrorism through dialogue with Pakistan. My meeting with my Pakistan counterpart represented the latest such move. Despite the provocations we have faced constantly from terrorists whose linkages we have traced back to Pakistani soil, we have not abandoned the path of dialogue. And in our recent meeting, India's approach was to focus on our concerns regarding terrorism, pending humanitarian issues, and some bilateral visits that have been planned or spoken of, but have not taken place. But it continues to be our conviction that for this dialogue to really make progress, Pakistan should take meaningful steps to address our concerns on terrorism, and cease the encouragement of terrorism targeted against India. In January 2004, the then Pakistani leadership had made such an assurance on the basis of which we resumed our Composite Dialogue to discuss various outstanding issues in our relationship. Today, Pakistan claims that it is in no position to give us such a guarantee that terrorism can be controlled by its authorities. In such a situation, the people of India who are already bitterly affected by the series of terrorist attacks directed against them, can hardly be expected to support the resumption of a full-blown Composite Dialogue with Pakistan. It is also important that there are strict accountability criteria that apply to defence assistance rendered to Pakistan for operations against terrorists and insurgents on the border with Afghanistan. Our past experience regarding such assistance has taught us to be vigilant to the possibility of it being used for purposes that generate tension and hostile actions against India. We do not have aggressive designs against Pakistan and we want it to be a stable and prosperous country. But we will be vigilant about our security. That is our sovereign right.

The deteriorating situation in Afghanistan is one of the foremost security related challenges faced by our region. We feel that it is vital for the international community to stay the course in Afghanistan. India has, at the request of that country, worked on infrastructure creation, and capacity building in key developmental sectors, with a total investment of 1.3 billion US dollars across several provinces and in very difficult terrain. Our assistance is provided in a transparent and fully accountable manner, and has underscored our commitment to Afghan democracy and inclusive development. At the recent London Conference, we have announced new initiatives in the agriculture sector and in institutional capacity building. In all these areas we have responded to the felt needs of the Afghan people.

We believe it is imperative for the international community, in its new initiatives on security, reintegration, and reconciliation in Afghanistan, to approach these issues carefully - and with caution. We believe that any reintegration process should include only those who abjure violence, give up armed struggle and terrorism and are willing to abide by the values of democracy, pluralism and human rights. There is every risk, otherwise, that the Taliban could resurrect themselves as they have done in the past even when we think they have been defeated or we are rid of their hardcore elements.

The barbaric attack against Indians engaged in humanitarian and development work in Afghanistan on February 26 was an attack by those who do not wish any other future for that country except one that suits their sinister ambitions. The international community should understand that such attempts, if unchecked, will only embolden the same forces that held sway in Afghanistan in the 1990s and caused the tragedy of 9/11. One cannot stress enough the need to avoid compromises or differentiation between the so-called shades and hues of the Taliban. That would be disastrous for Afghanistan and for the world. In short, there is no quick solution to the Af-Pak situation. It is important for the international community, in its own interest, to stay the present course for as long as it is necessary.

New areas of partnership

Speaking in Washington last November, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh said "our relationship will see a new emphasis on five Es - economy, energy, environment, education and empowerment - even as we further strengthen our ties in defence, security and counter-terrorism. We will also harness our natural synergies in science and technology, education and research to advance food security, improve healthcare, develop green technologies and create the human resources for the future".

Both our Governments are agreed that the India US partnership is important for addressing the challenges of an increasingly interdependent world - our cooperation could cover different fields - for example, the critical area of agriculture and food security, especially with regard to Africa. This Indo-US cooperation is envisaged by us as a net additionality over and above what India is doing bilaterally with Africa. One possibility is the mechanism of 'triangular cooperation' where India's experience and expertise as an emerging market economy, could be relevant to Africa.

In the Joint Statement issued on the occasion of our Prime Minister's visit to Washington, Dr. Manmohan Singh and President Obama announced their intention to develop a Framework for Cooperation on Trade and Investment to foster an environment conducive to technological innovation and collaboration, promote inclusive growth and job creation, and support opportunities for increased trade and investment - including for small and medium-sized enterprises. They also agreed to launch the US-India Financial and Economic Partnership to strengthen engagement on economic, financial and investment-related issues.

An important facet of our relations is our growing interaction in the defence sector. We hold a regular dialogue on defence issues, and joint exercises. Our defence trade is growing. There is potential for it to grow further as we look at diversified sources of defence systems as also allow private sector participation in our defence production. It is our hope that the US Government will adjust its export control regulations to facilitate more efficient defence trade. This would be in line with growing mutual confidence and the long-term strategic partnership that we seek to build. The visit of Defence Secretary Gates in January 2010 enabled a sharing of perspectives on this crucial sector of our cooperation.

Both our democracies are committed to the protection of the global commons: maritime, space or the cyber high ways. The Indian navy plays a major role in facilitating maritime security across vital sea lanes of the Indian Ocean. They have been deployed in anti piracy escort operations in the Gulf of Aden. Co-operation between India and the United States for the security of sea lanes is now all the more relevant. Similarly, India has provided more than 100,000 troops, observers and police officers to 43 UN Peace keeping Missions over the last 60 years.

On countering terrorism we have bilaterally reaffirmed our shared determination to cooperate in unprecedented ways - from sharing intelligence and best practices to training and increased exchanges between our security agencies. This has been effectively demonstrated in the wake of the Mumbai terror attack.

The ongoing meeting of the High Technology Cooperation Group is demonstrative of our efforts to gradually reduce and eliminate the controls on export of high technology from the United States to India, and to liberalize export licensing requirements and whittle down entity lists that seem anachronistic in the vastly changed environment of India-US relations today.

Our strategic dialogue today has an important developmental focus covering areas such as agriculture, health, education, energy, women’s empowerment. In health, our cooperation especially in promoting R&D to combat diseases like drug-resistant tuberculosis that continue to affect the poorer sections of the population in India and other developing countries is particularly important. Agriculture remains an important sector of the Indian economy accounting for almost 18 % of GDP and supporting around 60% of the workforce. In recent years, this sector has recorded an average growth of 2.5% annually compared to 8% in other sectors. Achieving rapid growth in agricultural productivity is therefore a national priority. The government has allocated substantial funds for improving infrastructure in the agrarian sector and expanding irrigation. It is in this context that our ongoing cooperation in this sector is so vital. Through our partnership in this sector, we hope to strengthen our food processing capacities, improve farm-to-market linkages, provide better agricultural extension services, and weather forecasting with emphasis on monsoon modelling. Our cooperation is also focusing on research and capacity building to increase food productivity, and to enhance food security.

Education is a key to empowering and transforming the lives of our people. Our Government is working on expanding and restructuring various educational sectors including higher education, vocational education and skills development infrastructure. We are also in the process of setting up several new world class universities, including setting up of the legal framework to allow us to tap the best talent in the world to participate in the academic activity of these new centres of excellence. President Obama and Prime Minister Singh launched the "Obama-Singh 21st Century Knowledge Initiative in November last year. The Fulbright-Nehru scholarship programme launched last year has been augmented by additional contributions by both our Governments.

Similarly, through the Women’s Empowerment Forum where we will share ideas and best practices in promoting women’s participation and equality in society, and the CEOs Forum which will inform the India US Economic Dialogue, we intend to build greater synergies and productive bilateral collaborations. The “Framework for Co-operation on Trade and Investment” and the negotiations for the Bilateral Investment Treaty would contribute significantly to this process. This is a relationship with boundless possibilities for mutual benefit. Through the surge in trade, services and investment that we have witnessed in both directions, our entrepreneurs and corporate have already demonstrated that India-US ties are creating jobs and benefits in both countries.

I now turn to the issue of Climate Change where the steps that we take will need to be intrinsically linked with the growth prospects and developmental aspirations of our people. India along with United States actively participated in the negotiation of the Copenhagen Accord. India has agreed to being listed in the Chapeau of the Accord on certain conditions, including that the Accord is a political document and not a legally binding document. It is not a template for outcomes. Further, it is not a separate, third track of negotiations outside the UNFCCC. The significant points of convergence in the Accord should help all Parties to reach agreed outcomes under the UN multilateral negotiations.

India needs to sustain an economic growth of at least 9% if it is to eradicate poverty and meet its larger human development goals. This will require in the short to medium term, a quadrupling of our power generation capacity. We are seeking to expand our nuclear energy from 4000 MW to 20,000 MW by 2020; add nearly 20,000 MW of solar energy by 2020; substantially expand the base of wind and biomass energy; increase energy efficiency and expand our forest cover from 22% to 33% of our landmass. At the same time, coal would remain a key component of our energy mix. India is, therefore seeking to access clean coal combustion technologies and new coal extraction technologies. India and the United States are working together in this important area. Our companies, and scientists are working on specific projects in the sector of second and third generation bio-fuels, wind and solar energy. Our joint endeavour should be to create adaptable and affordable technology as also to institute better practices that could then be replicated in other countries in Asia and Africa with similar climatic or developmental conditions.

An important dimension of the landmark agreement on civil nuclear cooperation between our two countries is the substantive role that the United States nuclear power companies can play in the addition of more nuclear energy to India’s energy mix. We are in the process of operationalising the Agreement through close coordination between our two Governments.

Dealing with new challenges

Ladies and Gentlemen, both our Governments are agreed that the new global realities require that we revisit and reorganize existing governance models which were put in place over six decades ago. We see our case for permanent membership of the Security Council as valid and legitimate and we seek the support of the United States in this endeavour.

In another context, we see the G-20 process as a useful representative mechanism to manage global economic and financial issues. The Group has conceptualized and defined many constructive measures to deal with the financial crisis, its causes, and steps to mitigate its effects through better regulation, supervision and international financial governance.
President Obama outlined his vision of a nuclear weapon free world last April. This has been consistently espoused by the Indian leadership for about six decades. In 2006, India presented specific proposals in the UNGA as possible building blocks of a new global, verifiable nuclear disarmament framework. These include: a global agreement on “no-first-use” of nuclear weapons and non-use against non-nuclear weapon states; measures to reduce nuclear danger through de-alerting, reducing salience of nuclear weapons in security doctrines and preventing unintentional or accidental use; a Nuclear Weapons Convention prohibiting development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and on their destruction etc. Presently, we wish to see the emergence of a consensus in the Conference on Disarmament on issues that the international community considers essential, including negotiations for a fissile material cutoff treaty.

We are committed to global efforts for preventing the proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction. We have a law-based system of export controls that has stood the test of time. We have updated it in accordance with international best practices. Our lists and guidelines are harmonized with the Nuclear Suppliers Group and the Missile Technology Control Regime even though we are not as yet members of these regimes.

Driven by common concerns about the security of nuclear assets - particularly in the backdrop of the increasing threat of terrorist access to them, India and the US are partners in the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism. Next month, Prime Minister Singh would participate in the Nuclear Security Summit hosted by President Obama. We believe that the Summit can be milestone in addressing the threat of nuclear terrorism. We also hope that India and the US can find other opportunities to work for the safe, secure and proliferation resistant expansion of nuclear energy around the world.

Ladies and gentlemen, having traversed the broad canvas of the partnership envisaged and endorsed by our democratic processes, I would hasten to recognize that in an increasingly complex world, while neither India nor the United States can achieve their goals on their own and nor will our partnership exclusively suffice to address our problems, our respective peoples have strong reason to believe that our collaboration and cooperation will certainly be crucial for shaping the character of the 21st century.
As two proud and independent democracies, we may not always fully agree on everything. The future of our relationship will depend - not only on the momentum that our strategic dialogue will attain - and sustain - and its outcome, but, eventually on how our respective peoples perceive our cooperation as safeguarding their aspirations and sensitivities.

But, we have the maturity and confidence in our relationship to make sure that we can expand and deepen areas of convergence, and that we have the capacity, in a clear eyed way, to turn our varying perspectives into a search for more creative solutions to our global challenges. That must be our mission. If we simply choose to employ our complementary strengths, protect and promote our synergies and pursue initiatives that respond to the legitimate aspirations of our people, we can be confident that our partnership will acquire further substance and relevance. As Mahatma Gandhi said, "You must be the change you want to see in the world".

Once again, I thank you all.

566. Media Briefing by Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao on Prime Minister’s meeting with the U. S. President Barack Obama.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Vishnu Prakash): A very good evening to you all again. As you are aware, the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh arrived in Washington yesterday to attend the Nuclear Security Summit. Today, Prime Minister of India met with the President of the United States. Foreign Secretary Mrs. Nirupama Rao is here to brief you about Prime Minister’s meeting with the President of USA. She is also joined by the Media Advisor to Prime Minister Dr. Harish Khare, who is to the left of Foreign Secretary. Ma’am, may I invite you to please make your opening remarks?

Foreign Secretary (Shrimati Nirupama Rao): Thank you. The meeting between our Prime Minister and President Barack Obama at Blaire House this afternoon lasted approximately fifty minutes. The meeting was extremely positive and very constructive. Both the Prime Minister and the President referred to the good progress that had been made in bilateral relations between India and the United States since their last meeting here in Washington in November 2009. They said they were looking forward to the strategic dialogue between Foreign Ministers of the two countries, External Affairs Mr. Krishna and Secretary Hillary Clinton, which will take place here in this city in Washington on the 3rd of June this year.

They expressed their happiness that the agreement on arrangements and procedures relating to the Civil Nuclear Deal has been completed. They were satisfied with the good cooperation on counter-terrorism issues. President Obama said that he understood India's deep concerns in regard to this issue as also on the situation in Afghanistan. He said that India's interests were consistently on the mind of the United States.

The President said that there was no country in the world where the opportunities for a strong, strategic partnership are greater and more important to him personally or to the United States, than that with India. He referred to the relations between two great democracies in this context, their common values and the people-to-people relationship.

Our Prime Minister said that we in India were looking forward eagerly to the visit of President and Mrs. Obama to India later this year. He said that the President had caught the imagination of millions around the world including the people of India who were anxious to see him soon in our country.

Prime Minister said he was convinced that the two Governments could begin a new chapter in their relations. He referred to the role of the United States of America in strengthening growth impulses in the world economy, particularly in developing countries, in the post-war world - he was referring to the period after the Second World War - and he said that that experience could be repeated. Countries like India needed an international environment that does not allow protectionist forces to gain ascendancy. He said that we should rewrite the architecture of the global economic system. In this context the G20 could play an important role in ensuring that global economic recovery is sustainable. He said that the United States was uniquely placed to work out a plan for sustainable recovery in a globally integrated financial system. He also said there was a synergy of interests between India and the United States in this regard.
In response, President Obama said that the United States would welcome the suggestions of India as preparations for the next G20 meeting are on their way. He mentioned the common interest of both countries in seeing an early conclusion of the Doha Round. Food security and energy security, he said, were other areas for cooperation especially since the experience of India in these fields was particularly very valuable and of global relevance.

Prime Minister said that in ensuring this architecture of high economic growth for countries like India what happens in our neighbourhood is of crucial importance. The terrorist onslaught in our region, if it persisted, could affect our growth prospects. This terrorist menace should be tackled and this was an issue on which India and the United States stood on the same side. He said this with specific reference to what is happening in Pakistan and Afghanistan. How this menace was tackled would determine the future of the South Asian region, Prime Minister said. He mentioned in this context the issue of David Coleman Headley and also the tremendous rise in infiltration across the Line of Control.

The activities of the Lashkar-e-Tayyiba and persons like Hafiz Saeed and Ilyas Kashmiri were also mentioned, as also the fact that unfortunately there was no will on the part of the Government of Pakistan to punish those responsible for the terrorist crimes in Mumbai of November 2008. This was where the partnership of India and the United States could make the difference.

President Obama said that India had the goodwill and the understanding of the United States in this regard. He said he shared Prime Minister's vision of South Asia. He said the United States fully appreciated India's interest in Afghanistan and recognised the enormous sacrifices that India has made in helping to stabilise that country. He expressed support for India's continuing contributions to Afghanistan's development. On India-Pakistan relations, President Obama said that the United States favoured the reduction of tensions between the two countries. And again Prime Minister stressed the need for Pakistan to take convincing action against those accused for involvement in the Mumbai attacks.

As I mentioned earlier, President Obama fully understood our concerns about the LeT and other terrorist groups in Afghanistan and Pakistan. He said the United States was engaging Pakistan on these issues. He also said that the United States would be sensitive to the issues that we have raised in the context of security assistance provided to Pakistan.

I referred earlier to President Obama's remarks about the positive cooperation between India and the United States on counter-terrorism, and he said in this context that they were working through their legal system on the issue of provision of access to David Coleman Headley.
He was fully supportive of our request for provision of such access.

I would also like to add that President Obama was appreciative of our contributions to the preparations for the Nuclear Security Summit which, as you know, begins tomorrow here in Washington. Prime Minister congratulated him on his initiative in convening this Summit.

Thank you.

Official Spokesperson: Foreign Secretary will be happy to take a few questions.

Question: Foreign Secretary, did the issue of Iran come up in this bilateral mini-summit? Even if it did not and the fact that it is not on the formal agenda of the Nuclear Security Summit either - obviously the US is trying to mobilise support to isolate Iran - how is India in this instance going to walk this tightrope? When you were at the Woodrow Wilson Centre that became sort of a lead question and even India's friends in Congress sort go ballistic on this whole Iran issue. So, how is India going to walk this tightrope even if it did not come up in the discussions?

Foreign Secretary: I believe our views in this regard are very well-known to the United States. Yes, the issue of Iran did figure in the discussions. This was especially with reference to the ongoing discussions in New York on the possibility of a UN Security Council Resolution to deal with the Iranian nuclear issue. So, the President briefed the Prime Minister on these discussions. Our Prime Minister made known India's position very clearly in this regard. You are aware of the fact that we have always stressed that Iran has certain obligations to fulfil as a member of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty on the nuclear issue as it concerns Iran. Also, on the issue of sanctions, our position that sanctions when they target ordinary people have always been counter-productive was mentioned by the Prime Minister. Both sides agreed to keep in touch on this issue and to continue their discussions.

Question: Madam, you mentioned the issue of access to David Coleman Headley which was part of the discussion that took place between the President and the Prime Minister. Madam, you also said that Obama was supportive of what India has said. Do we take it that now there seems to be a green signal from the US authorities that Indian authorities can actually have access because that is very crucial to the investigation in 26/11? Or are we just one step closer to that cooperation between India and the US on this issue?

Foreign Secretary: I meant exactly what I said. I said that they are working through their legal system on the issue of provision of access to David Coleman Headley, and that they were fully supportive of our request for provision of such access. I will stop at that.

Question: You have said that Headley subject was mentioned. But talking to the US lawyers and knowing about how the things are moving here, they have given clear three ways you can approach Headley- through video teleconference, or through some agents coming here, or through documentation. Which approach is India taking? Can you just clarify exactly?

Foreign Secretary: I am not here to discuss that issue. I am here to brief you on the meeting between our Prime Minister and President Obama. The issue of Mr. Headley did come up in that discussion and I briefed you on that also.

Question: Madam, you said that the issue of the Lashkar and Hafiz Saeed was brought up in the meeting. What exactly did President Obama say on the LeT and the fact that Hafiz Saeed can freely make speeches in Lahore and Rawalpindi even today?

Foreign Secretary: I said that he was very sensitive to these concerns that we expressed and that the United States was aware of the issues that we have consistently been raising on this and the activities of other individuals and groups that have advocated violence against India. What he conveyed to Prime Minister was that the United States was sensitive to these concerns.

Question: Madam, my question was about this security assistance that the US is giving Pakistan. What exactly did the Prime Minister discuss with the President? Was it something to do with the US-Pakistan strategic relations agreement?

Foreign Secretary: Security assistance is security assistance that is being provided to Pakistan by the United States. That was the context in which this issue was discussed.

Question: Madam Foreign Secretary, when President Obama expressed his desire for reduction of tension between India and Pakistan - that is the phrase you used - did he make a connection between reduction of tension between the two countries and the ongoing American military effort in Afghanistan? Was that link made by him?

Foreign Secretary: No, it was not.

Question: When you spoke about the security assistance what was President Obama’s response in the sense of would they take India’s sensitivities or concerns onboard, would that lead to a reduction in security assistance, or what did he say?

Foreign Secretary: That the issue would be monitored and would be kept under observation keeping India’s concerns in mind.

Question: Madam, talking of remaining steps on the nuclear deal front, did President Obama take up the issue of Civil Nuclear Liability Legislation with the Prime Minister? Secondly, there is an impression that there is a disconnect between India and the United States on Af-Pak issues on some of issues relating to Af-Pak. Can we say that following this meeting there is a greater harmony in our views or are we at the same pitch?

Foreign Secretary: The President did refer to the pending Civil Nuclear Liability Bill and expressed the hope that this could be concluded as expeditiously as possible. In response to your second question, there was absolutely no disconnect in evidence. As I mentioned, the President was very appreciative of the role that we have played in Afghanistan, the sacrifices that we have made, and the contributions that India has made to the development of Afghanistan. He added that the United States would like to see India continuing to be involved in these activities in Afghanistan.

Question: Madam, the whole focus of the Summit is securing nuclear arsenal. Did India raise any concerns about the security of the Pakistan nuclear arsenal during this meeting? If not now, then do they plan to raise any of these questions in future sideline meetings?

Foreign Secretary: We did not raise it at this meeting and I will let you know if anything transpires on this issue in the next few days.

Question: Madam, coming back to the question of reduction of tensions between India and Pakistan, what is India planning to do now after President Obama has talked specifically about reduction of tensions? Are we planning another round of talks? In terms of specifics what is this going to translate into?

Foreign Secretary: I am not able to understand, you are making some connection between what was discussed at today’s meeting and what we should do next. I do not think that connection should follow from what we discussed today. As far as we are concerned, our policy in regard to dialogue with Pakistan has been very clearly enunciated and it is there for all the world to see. I believe our friends, our partners, especially the United States, fully understand the approach that we have followed on this issue.

Question: I wanted to know whether there is any chance that your Prime Minister would meet the Pakistani Prime Minister while they are both here, or perhaps at some other level there could be some other encounters between the two delegations while you are here.

Foreign Secretary: Not here in Washington. No, I do not believe any meeting is on the cards.

Question: Madam Foreign Secretary, we have been listening since long time that President Obama is expected to visit India this year. Did he give any indication about the dates? It is understood that Mr. Obama wants to take his children also with him. If that is the case, he has to come to India before September when the schools start.

Foreign Secretary: The President of the United States has been invited to visit India. Prime Minister said we were greatly looking forward to this visit. A visit is definitely planned for this year. We do not have dates as yet but both Governments are working on that.

Question: Has Pakistan extended any invitation to our Prime Minister for meeting on the sidelines of the SAARC Summit? Are we looking forward for a meeting between the two Prime Ministers there?

Foreign Secretary: The answer to your question is, no. There is no invitation. As I said, as of now I cannot tell you whether there will be any meeting planned for the SAARC Summit. They are not meeting here in Washington.

567. Press Release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of U. S Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs William Burns.

New Delhi, May 24, 2010.

Mr. William Burns, Under Secretary for Political Affairs, US Department of State visited New Delhi on May 24, 2010 for meetings with his counterpart, Foreign Secretary, Smt. Nirupama Rao.

Foreign Secretary and Under Secretary Burns reviewed the India-US bilateral agenda and, specifically, the progress made in the India-US Strategic Dialogue announced on July 20, 2009 by External Affairs Minister and US Secretary of State, Mrs. Hillary Clinton during the latter's visit to New Delhi.

The substantive issues relating to the forthcoming visit of External Affairs Minister to USA from June 2-3, 2010 for the inaugural meeting of the India-US Strategic Dialogue in Washington were at the core of their discussions.
Intensified India-US co-operation in the five focus areas of strategic cooperation, energy and climate change, education and development, economic trade and agriculture constituted their main agenda. They also exchanged views on regional and global issues of shared interest and common concern.

Under Secretary Burns also called on Dr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission, H’ble Shri Prithviraj Chavan, Minister of State for Science and Technology and Shri Shivshankar Menon, National Security Adviser.

666. Press Release issued by Prime Minister’s Office on the telephonic talk between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and President Barack Obama.

New Delhi, May 28, 2010.

The Prime Minister spoke this evening with United States President Barack Obama. The two leaders discussed the forthcoming Strategic Dialogue between the two countries scheduled next week in Washington. Both sides attach great priority to the dialogue as a means to strengthen bilateral engagement on a wide range of issues including high technology trade, science & technology, civil nuclear cooperation, agriculture, human resource development, security and other strategic issues. The two leaders took the opportunity to discuss regional and global issues of mutual interest. President Obama conveyed condolences on the loss of lives resulting from the air crash in Mangalore last week. The Prime Minister said that a warm welcome awaited the President and his family when they visit India.
569. Media Briefing by Official Spokesperson on visit of External Affairs Minister S. M. Krishna to USA for Strategic Dialogue.

Official Spokesperson (Vishnu Prakash): Good afternoon and thank you for joining even on a Sunday. My colleague, Joint Secretary (AMS) Shrimati Gaitri Kumar, and I would give you a perspective on the External Affairs Minister's forthcoming visit to Washington for the first Strategic Dialogue with USA, which would take place on the 3rd of June this year.

You would recall that in July 2009, during the visit of Secretary Clinton, EAM and Secretary Clinton had decided to launch the Strategic Dialogue between the two countries. It will be held alternately in the capitals of both countries. The Strategic Dialogue will enhance the Global Strategic Partnership between India and the US, by serving as a very important mechanism to review, enhance and coordinate our broad-based cooperation.

At the Strategic Dialogue on the 3rd of June in Washington, EAM will be joined by Deputy-Chairman, Planning Commission, who is also the Co-chair for the India-US Economic Dialogue, for the India-US Agricultural Dialogue, and the India-US Energy Dialogue. The Minister of Human Resource Development Mr. Kapil Sibal will also be travelling to Washington, and he is the Co-chair of the Education Dialogue. Minister of Science and Technology Shri Prithviraj Chavan will be there too. As you know, science and technology is a very important facet of our bilateral cooperation.

The aforementioned dignitaries will have their separate programmes and meetings with their US counterparts, as a part of their ongoing dialogue processes and would join the Strategic Dialogue on the 3rd of June. EAM will be assisted by Foreign Secretary Shrimati Nirupama Rao; Secretary of the Department of Biotechnology; Special Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs; Joint Secretary Shrimati Gaitri Kumar; and other officials.

Secretary Clinton would be joined by the National Security Advisor, the Commerce Secretary of the US, the Education Secretary and a number of other senior leaders and officials. Composition of the delegations and the high-level participation on both sides, should give you a fair idea of the scope and nature of the first Strategic Dialogue between our two countries. Regular high-level contacts and bilateral dialogue on a wide range of subjects of mutual interest, are reflective of the qualitatively transformed relationship between our two countries.

It would be recalled that Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh had paid a state visit to the USA in November 2009, which was the very first state visit under the new Obama Administration. The Joint Statement - called 'India and the United States - Partnership for a Better World' - issued after the talks, outlines the main focus of the discussions and a roadmap for taking the relationship forward in this new phase of our strategic ties.

Prime Minister stated that rapid socioeconomic development under way in India, the transformation that is under way in India, offered several opportunities for mutual cooperation between our countries in a vast number of areas, including important areas such as infrastructure, communications and information technology, healthcare services, educational services, energy, environmental friendly technology sectors, and so on. Prime Minister Dr. Singh and President Obama had another very important meeting on 11th of April in Washington just prior to the Nuclear Security Summit. President Obama had observed during the meeting that there was no country in the world where the opportunities for a strong strategic partnership were greater to the United States than that with India.

Friends, that is the brief background in which the first Strategic Dialogue is going to take place in Washington. It will focus on a wide range of bilateral, regional and global issues of shared interest and common concern. It would give direction to the programmes currently under implementation and take initiatives to further the Indian and US developmental, security and economic interests.

Currently our interaction, our exchanges, our dialogue is being undertaken in eighteen areas comprising of five pillars of cooperation, under the Strategic Dialogue. These are: strategic cooperation; energy and climate change; education and development; economic, trade and agriculture; and lastly science, technology, health and innovation.

EAM and Secretary Clinton will consider an approach to operationalise the Obama Singh Knowledge Initiative aimed inter alia at increasing University linkages, faculty exchanges, and so on. A memorandum of understanding on agricultural cooperation and food security was also signed in November 2009 during the visit of the Prime Minister, to increase cooperation in agricultural research, human resource capacity development, natural resource management and collaborative research for increasing food productivity. This will also be discussed.

Energy, as you are well aware, is a vital sector of cooperation for both the countries. As part of the Energy Dialogue, both sides are working on establishing a joint Clean Energy Research Centre and we are accelerating efforts to deploy clean energy technologies in both countries. India and the US have also taken crucial steps towards full implementation of the Civil Nuclear Cooperation Agreement. The Agreement on Arrangements and Procedures for Reprocessing pursuant to Article 6(iii) of the India-US Agreement on Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, has been concluded, which will allow for India’s reprocessing of US-origin spent fuel.

A Joint Working Group on Counter Terrorism was established in 2009. A number of meetings have taken place under that framework.

These are just a few snapshots of some of the very important facets of our ties. I would like to add that since the decision to launch the Strategic Dialogue in July 2009, both sides have held comprehensive discussions on bilateral, regional and global issues of shared interests. We have discussed regional issues including those related to security and our common objective of promoting peace, stability and economic development in the region and beyond.

EAM and Secretary Clinton will also discuss cooperation within multilateral fora and exchange views on how international organizations can better address the 21st century challenges. The Dialogue will serve to reaffirm our bilateral commitment to further deepen our Strategic and Global Partnership. The meeting will also help lay the ground for the visit of US President to India later this year.

Thank you.
570. Inaugural Address by External Affairs Minister at the 35th Anniversary Summit of the US-India Business Council on "India-US Partnership: Shaping the future through Innovation".

Mr. Terry McGraw, Chairman of the India -US Business Council,

Srimati Indra Nooyi, CEO of PepsiCo,

Mr. Ron Sommers, President of the USIBC,

Mr William Cohen, Chairman, Cohen Group ,

I am glad to be here among you all in Washington D.C., which brings back nostalgic memories of long years back. Many of those who witnessed those years are still excited about those times.

Mr. Shephard Hill, President of Boeing International,

Thank you for your warm words of introduction.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am especially pleased to join you in celebrating 35 years of the US India Business Council - and in recognizing the contribution of many pioneering entrepreneurs like those present here today, who have built the strong, resilient edifice of the India US bilateral economic partnership. Their vision and leadership achieved a mutually beneficial synergy that bridges distances, spans the oceans that lie between us and enriches the bilateral economic discourse in a way that just was not imaginable 35 years ago. Mr. Terry Mc Graw, I congratulate you and the past and present members of the USIBC.

As Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh said in this very building a few months ago, "In today's economically integrated world, economic relationships constitute the bedrock on which social, cultural and political relationships are built."
The India-US example, similarly, draws its strength not merely from engagement and understanding between governments, but from the vitality of private partnerships and the warmth of ties between our peoples.

Ladies and gentlemen, the 20th century was a century of capital accumulation; the 21st Century will be the Century of innovation.

We see this in India - where we are presently witnessing a revolution of entrepreneurship, creativity and innovation. It has made our manufacturing sector modern and globally competitive through market-induced "frugal engineering". It has made our services sector a powerful instrument of modernization and a major source of exports. And, it is turning India into a global hub for innovation, design and development and manufacturing.

India's responsible corporate sector is a key player in our innovation initiative. Three years ago, the State Bank of India found a low cost and easy-to-operate solution for banking in remote areas of India. The "Tiny Branch", as the State Bank of India called it, costs a little over US $ 300 per branch and is made up of a mobile phone and a fingerprint scanner. This set can hold data of up to 50,000 customers, can record details in 11 languages and is operated by women recruited at village level. Furthermore, the devices work on battery using solar energy. State Bank of India hopes to install 250,000 of these tiny branches across Indian villages.

Around the same time one of our foremost Indian corporates came out with a no profit rice husk based water purifier. At a onetime cost of 20 US Dollars and a recurring expense of 6 US Dollars every 3000 litres, this is an example of an affordable innovation for safe drinking water across village and middle class urban homes in India, reducing cost but increasing efficiency as well. Being natural, it is a 'green' filter. Even the advertising is door to door and by word of mouth in order to keep the project cost low. They are, of course, presently fielding inquiries from developed and developing markets.

Ladies and gentlemen, India has already created successful business models and price innovations; for example, when designing the Nano, Tata was able to save production costs with their "design to cost" strategy, by challenging its vendors to come up with supplies under pre-set price caps. Similarly, Titan produced the World's slimmest water resistant watch, and I believe even the Swiss are very impressed! A product like the small car or a portable low cost ECG machine are powerful examples of global capabilities applied to local needs, and have great potential in other markets.

Governments in India have ensured that the rural and agriculture sectors are prioritised in our developmental plans for inclusive growth - and today, we see the fruits of that policy - as some of the most exciting developments are taking place in the extensive rural markets of India, and a significant part of the growth impulse is coming from this sector.

Using satellite imagery, internet and computers and supported by novel financing methods, villages and rural communities in India are developing better resource mapping, better prices for their products and they are improving their access to a range of services from farming know-how and education to healthcare and insurance.

The focus in all the above has been towards innovation with a specific purpose. The net result is a broader outreach and inclusion from the grass-roots upwards, making India the ideal place for locating such innovation which depends on technology and a broad based and diverse spread in all sectors of the economy and market.

Encouraging innovation and entrepreneurship, by engaging the medium - sized companies in US and India is another priority. Foreign Direct Investments now are a two-way traffic, with United States being one of the leaders in investments in India. A growing number of patents of US companies are coming out of their Indian operations. And, the nature of our business ties has brought people together in an unprecedented manner that has had a profound impact on overall relationship. I observed the transformation at its earliest stages from close quarters as Chief Minister of Karnataka.

The present opportune environment has been recognised early by the private sectors in both our countries. Drawing on India's substantial knowledge base, U.S. high-technology firms are increasingly finding it attractive to conduct advanced research and development in India. Out of Fortune 500 companies, around 200 have set up research and development base in India. India looks to USA for its unmatched scientific output and the ability of converting this strength into wealth-generating innovations. USA also values Indian partnership in the areas of information technology and its applications, biotechnology, nanotechnology, medicine, advanced material, high-energy physics etc.

India-US partnerships are now looking at providing low cost, efficient healthcare services to remote areas through mobile clinics, tele-medicine etc. Both countries can work together in streamlining health based IT solutions such as digitizing health records, joint research and collaboration in drug discovery, medical research and clinical trials.

Several institutional mechanisms exist such as the Indo-U.S. Science and Technology Forum, established in 2000, and Indo-US S&T Umbrella Agreement signed in 2005 and the India-US Bi-National S&T Commission.

In recognition of the importance of innovation in meeting our economic goals, Government of India has declared the decade of 2010-2020 the decade of innovation. Our Ministry of Commerce has recently announced a single FDI policy document to facilitate foreign investors.

Ladies and Gentlemen, as the Indian economy grows, as the global economy recovers and the US economy regains its momentum, our trade and investment figures can multiply exponentially. We must go beyond that, make innovation the defining principle of our cooperation, and achieve its true potential. Indian and American businesses have a proven track record of partnership in innovation. From civil nuclear cooperation to ‘Chandrayaan’ and FutureGen, the bonds between our engineers, scientists, entrepreneurs and innovators can make a major contribution to shaping the 21st century in every area of human endeavour - in science, in tracking monsoons, for warning of natural disasters, guiding cultivators and farmers with environment predictability, crossing frontiers in e-learning, e-health and bringing about the e-revolution that one had only imagined a few decades ago.
While we explore the immense opportunities for collaboration, I would also say that we must explore new designs that reduce resource intensity and have a low environmental impact. Clean energy, healthcare, agriculture, science and technology, space and security are just some areas on which we are working to step up India-US collaboration. I would especially emphasise the importance of innovation that places products and services within reach of the weakest and poorest in our societies.

To quote the late Prof C.K. Prahalad whose untimely passing we deeply mourn, the prospective rewards would be, "growth, profits and incalculable contribution to humankind".

As a young law student in this country, who witnessed the historic 'Apollo' launch to the moon, and having personally expedited the IT revolution from Bangalore, I am absolutely confident that the emphasis, going forward, must be on the India-US partnership in high technology cooperation and innovation that will generate prosperity for both our peoples in the years to come.

years now - and have, last year, agreed to a Technical Safeguards Agreement in space co-operation. We also have the End Use Monitoring arrangement for defence acquisitions. We have given a number of written assurances that US technology will enjoy the level of security stipulated by the relevant US laws and not be diverted in contravention of US regulations.

With this background and the trust that we have built as strategic partners, we should be able to create an environment for a robust two way trade in advanced technology products.

I have received some feedback on areas of particular interest to members present here - foremost is the implementation of the historic Civil Nuclear Agreement between our two countries signed in 2008. We are well within the agreed timelines. Of course, the Government is committed to put in place a nuclear liability regime. We look forward to US companies investing in India. Many of you are in dialogue with our companies already. We would like it to be as robust a partnership as we have both envisioned.
I am confident that our economic partnership holds immense potential for the prosperity of our two countries and for invigorating the strategic partnership between our two countries.

Tomorrow, I will join Secretary Hillary Clinton, for the first India-US strategic dialogue at the ministerial level. We will discuss many areas in which we have shared interests-ranging from countering terrorism and extremism, advancing nuclear security, working to secure the global commons, seeking to build a developed and cooperative Asia, and succeeding in Afghanistan to dialogues for co-operation in science and technology, research for clean energy and monsoon prediction, health and education, and a dialogue on women's empowerment. That will be an important occasion for us to reflect on the remarkable journey that our two great democracies have embarked upon, and to set our sights on new milestones.

Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you all for your exceptional contribution to the splendid successes that we have been able to achieve due to your efforts, and due to your goodwill. I would like to assure you that it is heartily reciprocated in India. We look forward to ever more brilliant achievements and joint successes as our scientist, engineers and business and industry forge new paths as they progress in their co-operation.

Mr. Terry McGraw, ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for your patience.

Thank you, Madam Secretary.

Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen.

I am particularly pleased to be co-chairing this dialogue with Secretary Clinton, whom we consider as a dear and longstanding friend. She is a true believer in the vast potential of the India-US partnership. I want to thank her for her gracious hospitality and the splendid co-ordination by her colleagues that has, no doubt, gone into the preparations for this inaugural meeting of the India-US Strategic Dialogue. This dialogue, as Secretary Clinton said, is a unique forum that really brings together all the different threads of our extraordinarily wide agenda and allows us to look at the entire relationship in an integrated, strategic fashion.

I would like to emphasise the importance that our Prime Minister attaches to India-US Strategic Dialogue, and to India-US relationship. He and President Obama reaffirmed, when they last met, their commitment to taking this relationship to a new level of co-operation - a global strategic partnership for the 21st century between India and the United States.

We consider our strategic partnership with the United States as one of our key foreign policy priorities. The United States is the largest economy in the world. India is emerging as one of the world’s largest - and one of its fastest growing - economies. The relationship rests on a solid bedrock of shared values. There are few relationships in the world that have so much potential as India-US relations. Therefore, I believe, that our cooperation is not only for great mutual benefit, but we can work together to make a significant contribution to global peace, prosperity and stability in the 21st century.

Secretary Clinton and I, joined by senior colleagues, have had a very comprehensive and productive discussion today. Our discussions covered a broad range of global economic and security issues. We agreed to continue the practice of close and regular consultation, and to remain sensitive to each other's interests and concerns.

We expressed the hope that the G-20 meeting in Canada later this month will stimulate further coordinated international efforts for economic recovery and stabilization and to safeguard our goal of balanced and sustainable development.

We had a very good exchange of views on reforms necessary not only in the international economic architecture, but also in the global political and security architecture, including the UN Security Council, so as to reflect contemporary global realities, as President Obama's National Security Strategy also points out.

We shared concerns about developments in Asia, including on the Korean peninsula. We have a common interest in advancing security and stability across Asia. We shared our perspectives on South and Central Asia, East and Southeast Asia, the Middle East and the Indian Ocean Region.

India and the United States have a shared convergent goal of a stable, peaceful, pluralistic and democratic Afghanistan, which protects the rights and the dignity of all sections of Afghan society. India and the United States are partners in achieving these goals. I conveyed our view that these goals can be best advanced through sustained international commitment to Afghanistan, by building Afghan capacities for governance and security through initiatives that are led and controlled by the Afghans themselves. We agreed on the importance of avoiding choices that lead us into the dark alleys of the 1990s, and the importance of safeguarding the gains and progress that have been made since then, especially with regard to the position and rights of women in Afghanistan.

Our dialogue has further increased our understanding on the nature and source of terrorism that threatens both our societies. We agreed that terrorist groups operate as a syndicate, leveraging each other's assets and strength, and are increasingly converging together on motivation and targets. Hence, a segmented approach towards terrorism, especially in our neighbourhood, would not succeed. We are pleased with the way our counter-terrorism cooperation has progressed, and today we have agreed to intensify it further.
We discussed the steps that we should take to further deepen our growing defence and security cooperation, including defence trade and collaboration, which has grown rapidly in recent years.

We had, again, a very good discussion on economic cooperation, high technology exports to India, cooperation in higher education, healthcare, science and technology, empowerment, agriculture, climate change and energy. In each of these areas, there is immense opportunities for mutually beneficial cooperation that will make a significant contribution towards creating jobs and prosperity in both countries.

I am pleased that there is a strong balance and momentum in trade and investment in both directions. Secretary Clinton and I agreed that we have to go beyond multiplying our trade and investments. We are two innovative societies with a proven track record of success in partnerships for innovation. India is making a modest but meaningful contribution, based on its experience and expertise and our resources, to development efforts in other countries. This is an area where we have a lot to learn from each other and we had a very useful discussion on these issues today.

In short, our dialogue was wide-ranging. We have identified the areas of our strategic priority and the roadmap for cooperation in each of these areas. Secretary Clinton and I have agreed to monitor progress and meet again in 2011.

We look forward to warmly welcoming President Obama and his family in India later this year.

I would like to thank my colleagues, Shri Kapil Sibal, Minister for Human Resource Development, Dr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission, Shri Prithviraj Chavan, Minister for Science and Technology and Earth Sciences and other senior officers who joined me here in Washington - after having held a series of meetings with their US counterparts - for the Strategic Dialogue today. Thank you, once again, Madam Secretary.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton and India's External Affairs Minister, Shri S.M. Krishna, met in Washington on June 3, 2010, for the inaugural meeting of the "India-U.S. Strategic Dialogue." President Barack Obama welcomed the Indian delegation and emphasized his commitment to strengthening the growing U.S.-India partnership.

Minister Krishna was accompanied by Minister for Human Resource Development, Shri Kapil Sibal, Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission of India, Dr. Montek Singh Ahluwalia, Minister of State for Science and Technology, Shri Prithviraj Chavan and high ranking officials of the Government of India.

Secretary Clinton was joined by Commerce Secretary Gary Locke, FBI Director Robert Mueller, NASA Administrator Charles Bolden, the President's Advisor for Science and Technology Dr. Holdren, USAID Administrator Rajiv Shah, Deputy National Security Advisor Michael Froman, and other high ranking U.S. Government officials.

The U.S. - India Strategic Dialogue is propelled by the dynamic momentum achieved in the U.S.-India relationship over the last decade and is in pursuance of the global strategic partnership - for a better world that Prime Minister Singh and President Obama reaffirmed during their meetings in November 2009 and April 2010 in Washington. Secretary Clinton and Minister Krishna pledged to deepen people-to-people, business-to-business, and government-to-government linkages between the world's oldest and largest democracies, for the mutual benefit of both countries and for the promotion of global peace, stability, economic growth and prosperity. Both recalled that the India - U.S. partnership rests on the firm foundation of common ideals as well as security and economic interests. The guiding principles upon which both nations were founded - democracy, mutual respect, individual liberty, rule of law, and an appreciation for the strength we derive from being pluralistic societies - make the India-U.S. bond strong, resilient, and uniquely important for building a peaceful, prosperous, inclusive, and sustainable world.
They pledged that as strategic partners, India and the United States would continue to consult each other closely on regional and global developments, and remain sensitive to each other's interests. They confirmed that global institutions of governance should reflect contemporary realities and enhance effectiveness, in order to meet the challenges of the new century.

In addition to advancing global security and stability, both recognized that their two countries had enormous opportunities to deepen their cooperation in trade and investment, science and technology, infrastructure investment, environmental sustainability, climate change mitigation, energy security, education, agriculture, food security, healthcare and empowerment of people.

The two leaders emphasized that the Strategic Dialogue and its detailed architecture is a vital instrument to pursue these goals.

The co-chairs welcomed the significant progress across all pillars of the India-U.S. Strategic Dialogue since its launch on July 20, 2009.

Advancing Global Security and Countering Terrorism

Minister Krishna and Secretary Clinton reiterated their shared goal of advancing security and stability across Asia, in particular, through the emergence of an open, balanced, and inclusive architecture of cooperation in the region. Secretary Clinton welcomed India's leadership role in helping to shape the rise of a stable, peaceful and prosperous Asia. They shared their perspectives on South and Central Asia, East and Southeast Asia, the Middle East and the Indian Ocean regions and pledged to expand regular high-level exchanges on regional issues of mutual concern.

Secretary Clinton and Minister Krishna reiterated their shared interest and commitment to a stable, sovereign, democratic and pluralistic Afghanistan. They reiterated the importance of a sustained international commitment to Afghanistan that builds local capacities through Afghan-led initiatives. Secretary Clinton welcomed India's vital contribution to reconstruction, capacity building and development efforts in Afghanistan and its offer to enhance efforts in this direction. Both sides pledged to explore opportunities for coordination on civilian assistance projects that advance Afghan self-sufficiency and build civilian capacity.
India and the U.S. committed to regularly consult with each other on Afghanistan. It is in our common interest that the people of Afghanistan succeed in their reconstruction and development efforts without outside interference, in an atmosphere free from violence and extremism. Afghanistan's success is vital for the security and stability of the region.

Minister Krishna and Secretary Clinton expressed grave concern over recent incidents in the United States and India that remind that terrorism and violent extremism know no boundaries and remain continuing threats to global, regional, and domestic security. They acknowledged the importance of continued cooperation in efforts to defeat terrorism. They reaffirmed the critical principle that no cause or grievance justifies terrorism in any form. They called for swift and credible steps to eliminate terrorist safe havens and vowed to strengthen global consensus and legal regimes against terrorism, including by working together at the UN toward adoption of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism that strengthens our efforts in combating terrorism.

Both Minister Krishna and Secretary Clinton heralded the unprecedented and expanding India-U.S. counterterrorism partnership, as embodied in the recently announced U.S.-India Counterterrorism Cooperation Initiative to enhance collaboration, information sharing and capacity building. Secretary Clinton reiterated the continued U.S. commitment to provide full cooperation and support in ongoing counterterrorism investigations, including through continued exchanges of information between designated agencies and by bringing the perpetrators of the 2008 Mumbai terrorism attack to justice.

Secretary Clinton and Minister Krishna also acknowledged the global dimension of cyberspace, the increasing interdependency in the area of information technology, and the excellent progress made in the Information and Communications Technology (ICT) Dialogue by the Indo-U.S. Working Group in this regard. They reiterated the necessity of building on this momentum to strengthen cooperative efforts in the area of ICT in general and also to address emerging transnational cyber-security challenges.

Minister Krishna and Secretary Clinton expressed satisfaction with the strengthening of defense cooperation in recent years and stressed that security dialogues, service-level exchanges, and trade and technology transfer and collaboration on mutually determined terms were an intrinsic part of the strategic partnership and should be further strengthened. They welcomed the regular engagement of Armed Forces of both countries, including through conduct of joint military exercises. They recognized the scope for enhancement of defense trade between both countries to the mutual benefit of both sides.
