

India-Trinidad and Tobago Bilateral Relations

The relationship between India and Trinidad and Tobago goes back to 30 May 1845, when the first ship 'Fatel Razack' carrying 225 Indian indentured workers reached the shores of Trinidad, then a British colony. Their numbers increased with subsequent arrival of more ships from India till 1917. The descendants of those indentured workers, now in their fifth or sixth generation, form nearly 40-45% of the total population of 1.36 million (2024), constituting an integral part of the economic, political and social fabric of the country. This year, the diaspora is celebrating 180 years of the arrival of the first group of their ancestors. The presence of a substantial population of Indian-origin (the largest ethnic group) has contributed immensely to close bilateral relations between the two countries.
