INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS 2005

No Foreign Office today is content to merely build friendly and good relations in the classical sense. Even economic content of diplomacy, which had gained currency in recent decades, is no longer the catch phrase in the conduct of international relations. The sophistication and the growing needs of the economy coupled with the demands of globalization have brought about a qualitative change in the conduct of international relations. Energy – thermal and nuclear, science and technology, biotechnology, information technology, nanotechnology, environment, space, sustainable development, PURA and the like are now the core diplomatic vocabulary. Market protection is giving way to dismantling of trade barriers. Competition is the mantra, free trade the dharma and multilateralism the altar on which the economic relations are now conducted. Energy – the strategic need for which has spurred unprecedented demand has, today, become the centerpiece of foreign policy. No wonder in India too the energy, whether nuclear, natural gas or hydrocarbon dominates the foreign policy debate, as in many other countries.

The challenge between high growth and social progress, hitherto, the attribute of domestic politics has today assumed international ramifications. Neither is possible without foreign investment and modern technology. The problem of keeping the gap narrow between rich and the poor, maintaining economic vitality and efficiency, attracting greater foreign investment and enhancing the competitiveness of indigenous industry against globalization trends, promoting mega projects and helping the smaller entrepreneurs to survive and stand competition are some of the challenges which have assumed foreign policy implications even as they are governed by domestic economic compulsions. While much of the burden of reconciling the conflicting demands of modernization and globalization has to be met by economic and financial experts, the Foreign Service bureaucracy today is shouldering its own share of the challenge. The 756 documents in his compendium provide an ample proof of this.

PREFACE

The series India's Foreign Relations was launched in March 2005 with the publication of the documents for the year 2004. The second volume in the series covers the period January to December 2005. The documents in this volume indicate a paradigm shift in the all-round quality of India's foreign relations in line with the recent trends in international affairs. No Foreign Office today is content to be merely building friendly and good relations in the classical sense. Even economic content of diplomacy, which had gained currency in recent decades, is no longer the catch phrase in the conduct of international relations. The sophistication and the growing needs of the economy coupled with the demands of globalization have brought about a qualitative change in the conduct of international relations. Energy - thermal and nuclear, science and technology, biotechnology, information technology, nanotechnology, environment, space, sustainable development, PURA and the like are now at the core of diplomatic vocabulary. Market protection is giving way to dismantling of trade barriers. Competition is the mantra, free trade the dharma and multilateralism the altar on which the economic relations are now conducted. Energy - the strategic need for which has spurred unprecedented demand – has, today, become the centerpiece of foreign policy. No wonder in India too the energy, whether nuclear, natural gas or hydrocarbon, dominates the foreign policy debate, as in many other countries.

The challenge between high growth and social progress, hitherto, the attribute of domestic politics has today assumed international ramifications. Neither is possible without foreign investment and modern technology. The problem of keeping the gap narrow between rich and the poor, maintaining economic vitality and efficiency, attracting greater foreign investment and enhancing the competitiveness of indigenous industry against globalizing trends, promoting mega projects and helping the smaller entrepreneurs to survive and stand competition, are some of the challenges which have assumed foreign policy implications even as they are governed by domestic economic compulsions. While much of the burden of reconciling the conflicting demands of modernization and globalization has to be met by economic and financial experts, the Foreign Service bureaucracy today is shouldering its own share of the challenge.

Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh has repeatedly emphasized the need for energy security for a sustained growth rate of 8 percent and more in the coming years. This inevitably underlined the need to look for new sources and to go to distant lands. Transporting energy is a concomitant necessity and presents its own problems. Given the fast shrinking hydrocarbon sources globally, there is ever-stiffer international competition to contend with. In recent years Indian policy makers and experts have scurried around the world to tie up new sources by entering into exploration contracts, joint ventures through equity investments and otherwise. There is stiff competition from developed economies of the West, Japan and, of course, China. The Indian oil entities like the Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) and the Gas Authority of India Ltd. (GAIL) with the support of the government are busy courting oil producing countries seeking resources far and wide. Energy is on the agenda of all high-level official visits to and from India, including at the highest level.

Sourcing energy from abroad necessitated cheaper means of transporting it through pipelines, which is no easy feat particularly when no supplies are available across India's own borders. Sourcing gas from Bangladesh continues to be a problem. Iran-Pakistan-India and Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India pipelines in the west and Myanmar-Bangladesh-India pipeline in the east presented attractive but difficult choices. For some time now India is exploring the option of Nuclear energy as an alternative. This is an area of restrictive technology and international controls. India's refusal to sign the discriminatory NPT and testing of nuclear weapons in 1998 with all its political implications denied India access to advanced nuclear technology. Breaking this logjam has become a major foreign policy concern of New Delhi.

Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's visit to the USA in July 2005 was a major effort in the search for energy security. The prospect of nuclear energy cooperation, not only with the USA but also with other Nuclear Suppliers Group countries which is now within reach, promises energy security as a consequence of the recognition of India as a responsible nuclear weapon State. There have been some dissenting voices within the country against the nuclear agreement with the USA and the follow up action requiring India to separate its military and civilian nuclear facilities. This has set in motion an intense debate among the political parties and in the media on the obligations that this new status would oblige India to accept in its new avatar as a nuclear weapon state outside of the NPT. Debate, discussion and dissent are the essence of democracy and the consensus that the Government of India is attempting to build in the country on this sensitive issue will go a long way in building an enlightened public opinion around the relationship that is being worked out with the USA. The Prime Minister set the ball rolling for the debate when he underlined the need for nuclear energy in his statement on his visit to the USA in the Lok Sabha on May 29, 2005. He said: “energy is a crucial input to propel our economic growth” and therefore it was “clearly an urgent necessity for us to enhance nuclear power production rapidly.” This, he said, would enable us to “leapfrog stages of economic development”. Articulating the positive side of the arrangement that he had sewed up in Washington he noted with great satisfaction that the agreement recognized India “as a responsible State with advanced nuclear technology, India should acquire the same benefits and advantages as other such States, which have advanced nuclear technology.” He noted with satisfaction that this would lead to “dismantling of the technology denial regimes which have hitherto targeted India.” He had no hesitation in declaring that the new regime came with certain obligations. He clarified: “Predicated on our obtaining the same benefits and advantages as other nuclear powers, is the understanding that we shall undertake the same responsibilities and obligations as such countries, including the United States. Concomitantly, we expect the same rights and benefits. Thus we have ensured the principle of non-discrimination.” Clearing any doubts that may be entertained that we had assumed any one-sided obligations, he said “I would like to make it very clear that our commitments would be conditional upon and reciprocal to, the US fulfilling its side of this understanding.”

The energy question also brought relations with Iran under sharp focus. Iran is signatory to the NPT and has also signed an additional protocol with the IAEA putting its nuclear energy programme under international safeguards. In recent years, doubts have been raised in certain quarters on the nature of Iranian nuclear programme. New Delhi, while supportive of the Iranian right to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, has chosen to side with the international opinion on question of observing meticulously the safeguards regimen accepted by Tehran though on this question too there are divergent opinions at home.

India assured Africa its commitment to be part of the new dynamism generated by the New Partnership for Africa Development (NEPAD), crafted by the reform oriented African leaders with a vision for the continent. New Delhi held the first conclave on Africa – India Project Partnership –2005 attended by as many as 25 Ministers from different African countries. India's ITEC programme had been catalyst for India's participation in African development. Since its inception in early sixties around 10, 000 nationals from African countries have received training in India in a wide array of fields ranging from management and IT to administration, education, and health. In a major initiative Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in his message to the 4th Summit of the African Union in June announced that "as part of our common fight against poverty and disease" India had identified health sector as its top most priority for helping the African countries. He announced that India had "earmarked a sum of US $ 1.5 billion in the form of lines of credit to be used to help Africa battle against HIV/AIDS and other pandemics." In another major initiative on October 27 India and African Union signed a MOU on Pan-African E-Network Project. It may be recalled that President Abdul Kalam had announced this project during his visit to South Africa in 2004.

The 6th India – European Union Summit held in September ended with the adoption of a Joint Plan of Action. It sought to provide the necessary framework for India's fast evolving, multifaceted relations with the EU and setting a roadmap for identifying pathways to future cooperation. India and EU emerged as important trading and investment partners. India's trade with EU grew from around US $ 20 billion in 1999-2000 to $ 33 billion by the end of 2004-05. The India – EU Energy Panel constituted in November 2004 at the 5th India – EU Summit at The Hague met for its inaugural meeting in June in Brussels. The Panel decided to set up Working Groups in the areas of coal and clean conversion of technologies; energy efficiency and renewable energies and Fusion energy including India's participation in International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor Project (ITER). In December India was accepted full partner in the ITER by consensus. President Dr. Abdul Kalam visited Russia in May and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh visited Moscow twice during the year—once to attend the 60th anniversary of the Victory Day and second time in December for the annual Summit level discussions with President Vladimir Putin. In between the two leaders had another chance to meet in September in New York on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly session. The Russian Foreign Minister and External Affairs Minister kept themselves in regular contact.

India's "Look-East Policy" got a shot in the arm, when New Delhi was invited to the inaugural East Asian Summit in Kuala Lumpur in December. The visit of Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao went a long way in strengthening bilateral ties and the 12 agreements signed reflect the bonhomie. Of these, two: (i) Political Parameters and Guiding Principles for the Settlement of the India – China Boundary Question and (ii) Protocol on Modalities for the Implementation of Confidence Building Measures in the Military Field along the Line of Actual Control in the India– China border areas, were particularly important as they were pointers to the early settlement of the border question between the two countries.

Nearer home, relations with Pakistan kept the Ministry of External Affairs quite busy. The Composite Dialogue progressed well and as planned during the year. President Gen Musharraf keen to watch a cricket match between the Indian and Pakistani teams visited New Delhi in April. The visit resulted in the leaders of the two countries utilizing the opportunity to discuss bilateral issues. The Prime Minister and the President met again later in September in New York on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly session. Signing of the agreement on Pre-notification of Flights Testing of Ballistic Missiles and MOU for the establishment of communication link between the maritime security agencies of the two countries during the visit of External Affairs Minister to Islamabad in October was among the many of the confidence building measures agreed upon between the two countries during the year. Introduction of additional transport links between the two countries particularly the Srinagar-Muzaffrabad route helped to enhance people-to-people contacts. The lethal earthquake in October affected the people on both sides of the Line of Control in Kashmir. It created a sense of shared grief between them. Despite its own people being affected cruelly by the earthquake, India offered substantial assistance to the people on the other side. As of November 17 India had made available 1300 tonnes of relief supplies by air, road and rail. This assistance was in addition to the relief material sent by private entities, which the Government of India facilitated in terms of transport etc. New Delhi also committed US $ 25 millions as funding for the long-term task of rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the earthquake affected areas of the Pakistan-occupied Kashmir.

The set back to the democratic process in Nepal in February anguished New Delhi. India insisted that the twin pillars of the Nepalese polity, the political parties and the constitutional monarchy, must work in harmony and complement each other as they have done since 1990. This became all the more necessary since the Royal Nepal Army had failed by military means to subdue the Maoist insurgency. Innocent people continued to suffer in the clashes between the security forces and the Maoists. Lamentably India's advice to the King to roll back his action of February 1 did not produce the desired result. The confrontation between the monarchy and the democratic forces has since sharpened.

Seven hundred and fifty-six documents in the volume speak of the extremely grueling schedule that the Foreign Office went through during the year. These have been regionally and chronologically arranged. The documents of a general nature or those, which cut across many themes, have been placed under the general category. While categorizing a document, its dominant nature has been the primary consideration. It is quite possible that users may find some duplication or they may find a document at a place different from the one they expected it to be. I seek users' indulgence in such cases. Extensive footnotes have been added to either amplify the context or to supplement the contents of the main document. It is hoped this will be deemed useful. In reproducing the documents, every effort has been made to adhere to the original text in terms of the spellings of proper nouns and punctuation.

As pointed out at the very beginning, external relations have become a complex subject. Interaction among nations and agreements even in such diverse fields such as health, environment, agriculture, science and technology, trade and finance etc., contribute to promotion of friendlier relations among nations. It is no longer possible or desirable to compartmentalize foreign relations. They have become all-inclusive. This naturally has added to the volume of documents that were generated during the course of the year. As I was putting the material together, the compendium threatened to go out of control. A hard decision became necessary to keep the size of compendium within reasonable limits. Certain things had to be excluded. In so doing every effort has been made to retain all that was immediately relevant for the conduct of foreign relations. I trust the readers would understand if they fail to find an item they are looking for in this volume.

In the preparation of this volume I received help from many officers of the Ministry of External Affairs. I find it difficult to mention all the names individually since the list is long. The names I would not like to miss are those of Navtej Singh Sarna, Joint Secretary (XP) and Official Spokesperson, Rahul Chhabra, Dinesh Bhatia, and Mahesh Arora. I am grateful to all of them for their help. However, I remain fully responsible for any deficiencies and inadequacies that may be found in the work.

Section - I General

001. Interview of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with daily Toronto Star.

New Delhi, January 17, 2005.

(Excerpts from an interview granted by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in his South Block office in New Delhi to the Toronto Star's Asia Bureau Chief, Martin Regg Cohn.)

Star: You know that Canadians have of course been following with great concern the events of the tsunami. And they have been struck by the way in which India has shown great self-reliance at this time, on the one hand providing aid and assistance to other neighbouring countries, but also initially declining emergency relief aid.... What does this say about India's place in the world, and also the world's place in India?

Singh: Well I think this was a classic case where disaster has affected the well being of so many countries. Sri Lanka is our close neighbour, Maldives is our close neighbour, Indonesia is our close neighbour. And therefore we thought adversity is an occasion when we should stand by the side of our neighbours, and that's what we did as a good-neighbourly device.

Star: How do you believe this affects India's image in the world and its standing in the world?

Singh: I don't think that the image of India was the most important consideration when we took that decision. Our concern was that we were afflicted with this terrible disaster, we should do utmost to relieve something to ensure that our own people are provided with relief and rescue operations and that we shared our experience, our knowledge and our resources with our neighbours.

Star: Do you believe that the worst is behind you now?

Singh: Certainly we have completed the first stage with relief and rescue operations. Now it's the longer term task of giving the affected populations the new livelihood strategies which will I think give them new sources of livelihood and also will be ecologically sustainable. So that's the big challenge we have.

Star: Was there a sense of concern that India's actions were being misinterpreted in some ways?

Singh: My concern was that by saying we would like to make the maximum possible use of our own resources we were not turning our back on the world. We believe that distances have lost their old meaning. In the one world that is now on the horizon, both prosperity as well as disaster are indivisible. My only concern was that there should be no misunderstanding of what we have done. We certainly would like to go to the international financial institutions when it comes to questions of seeking rehabilitation assistance.... We feel it is appropriate if we should take advantage of the facilities that they offer. But at that particular time quite frankly we didn't know how the international community's efforts could fit in. Our immediate requirement was rescue and relief, and there we felt that involving too many agencies could become counterproductive. But not in any sort of chauvinism or isolationism that we arrived at that decision.

Star: The Indian media have reported that Kofi Annan was discouraged from making a visit to Tamil Nadu and also that the Canadian Prime Minister was discouraged from spending time there. What was the thinking there?

Singh: Well I really don't know whether that is so. But our major concern has been that nothing should come in the way of effective relief and rehabilitation operations, and sometimes the visits of high dignitaries-when Indian press had commented on my visit also they said the best I could do was to stay away. So our concern has been that nothing should come in the way of officials concentrating on their primary task that is to engage in effective relief and rehabilitation measures. But I think certainly we would welcome any honoured guests if at a later stage they would like to look at what we have done.

Star: I remember when I was covering the elections, when you were sworn in, you said that the 21st century would be the Indian century. It reminded me of one of our great Prime Ministers, Wilfred Laurier, who said the 20th century would be Canada's century. He might have been a bit overoptimistic. How do you ensure that your goals-your very ambitious goals of continuing the economic reforms that you pioneered, and ensuring a broader distribution to India's poor and rural people-how do you actually ensure that happens. And what happens if you don't succeed in those goals?

Singh: Well, the first thing that I would like to emphasize is that (for) any country as poor as India, meaningful solutions to the problems of mass poverty can be found only in the framework of a rapidly expanding economy.

Therefore our first and foremost requirement is that our economy should experience robust growth rates. We have been growing at the rate of 6, 6-1/2. But I think we would like these growth rates to go up to 7 to 8 per cent per annum. For more than one reason, I think. When an economy is growing at a fast rate, the redistribution tensions tend to be much less keenly felt. If the economy is stagnant and you superimpose redistributive objectives, I think then this attempted redistribution becomes a zero-sum game. Those who have, they don't want to part; those who do not have, their desire and their intensity of deprivation also increases.

So we feel the redistributive tensions are inevitable in societies which are unequal societies, and we recognize that we are an unequal society. But we also recognize for a functioning democracy we cannot live with these inequalities, and therefore the first and foremost task is that the economy should grow and then that the growth should have an employment-friendly pattern, growth should pay particular attention to ensuring that those who are in the bottom rung of social and economic ladder do become effective partners in processes of development, and that means greater emphasis on education, greater emphasis on health, and that since 65 per cent of our population lives in rural areas, greater emphasis on social and infrastructure in rural areas.

Star: Will you be judged on that, and will you find yourself in the same position as the BJP if you fail to achieve those goals?

Singh: Well I think those are our challenges and we would like, as our term proceeds, that we would make an effective dent on some of these chronic problems. But having said that, I must say that problems of mass poverty cannot be solved overnight. I think what we need to ensure is that the direction is right, that we are sincere, that we have effective strategies working on the ground, at the grassroots level to deliver some of the basic social services.

Star: One of your other challenges is managing your coalition. I think you have 15 parties that are in your alliance. I'm sure Prime Minister Paul Martin would be interested in hearing, since he is governing with a minority Parliament in Canada, how do you manage to keep the coalition on the same page?

Singh: We need to spend a lot more time in discussion. Coalition politics is essentially an essay in mutual comprehension. But I think we have this advantage of having agreed upon a Common Minimum Programme, so I think that focuses our discussions on a pre-designed set of priorities. So that certainly has helped in managing the tensions which are an inevitable of a functioning coalition of various parties.

Star: Speaking of managing tensions and prosperity, obviously you need peace in order to maintain that kind of stable growth. What is your sense of what it would take to achieve a new beginning or new dawn-not a false dawn-in Kashmir and in your relations with Pakistan.

Singh: Well let me say that we are very sincere, very keen that India-Pakistan relations should make a new beginning. We are committed to discussing and resolving all outstanding issues which affect the relationship between India and Pakistan, and that includes the issue of Jammu and Kashmir. Our only concern is that this dialogue, composite dialogue, to which both of our countries are committed, can proceed only if Pakistan remains firm in its commitment ... that Pakistan territory would not be used to promote terrorism directed against us.

Star: And so far has Pakistan been living up to its word? You've reduced troop levels recently.

Singh: Let me say there has been some progress, but the overall infrastructure of terrorism has not been dismantled. And we hope that Pakistan would honour its commitment, and therefore I sincerely hope that our two countries can work together to make a new beginning.

Star: You met President Musharraf I believe in New York, and I expect you would meet him again next month in Dhaka. What is your measure of Musharraf? Can you do business with him?

Singh: We have to do business with President Musharraf. I was very happy with the outcome of that meeting in New York, and it is my hope and prayer to sustain the momentum.

Star: One of the explanations given for your election victory was that India had turned the page on communalism in Gujarat of the last few years. What is your sense of the legacy of the BJP's policy of Hindutva? And can any of the problems with saffronization, as the phrase is used here, can those problems be undone?

Singh: Let me say that the BJP even at the best of times never got more than 25 per cent of votes. It is certainly true that they tried to distort the essence of our civilization and cultural heritage. I think a sense of Indian civilization throughout the many centuries has been respect for diversity, tolerance, respect for pluralism, working towards an inclusive society where people of all diverse religious persuasions can live together as equal citizens in peace and amity. And therefore I think what happened in Gujarat was a big shock to our people. I think it's not wrong to say that the May 2004 elections were a reaffirmation of the hearts and minds of the people of India.

Star: India has the world's second-largest population of Muslims, and I'm wondering if you think there is a way for India-India's Muslims and their role in Indian society-to be a role model for the rest of the world?

Singh: Islam is an integral part of our civilization and cultural heritage. We have probably one of the largest Muslim communities in the world and we take pride in the fact that these 150 million Muslims live as peaceful citizens of our country, that there is not a single incident of their being involved in Al Qaeda and other international terrorist groups.

Star: I believe you were chairman of the University Grants Commission in a previous life, and as you probably know there was a great debate about the idea of adding astrology to the curriculum at Lucknow University and other places. Now that you're Prime Minister, what do you think of that?

Singh: Anything which interferes with the promotion of scientific tenor, scientific outlook, I think distracts people from concentrating on issues which they ought to be concentrating on. I have never gone to an astrologist.

Star: The fact that you are a Sikh Prime Minister, does that also provide a symbol for people that everyone is included in this society?

Singh: I don't look upon myself as a Sikh or a non-Sikh. I am an Indian first, an Indian last. But I am proud to be an Indian and proud to be a Sikh. And the fact that a person of any religion can rise to the highest office - we have a President who happens to be a practising Muslim, I am a practising Sikh - well that is one indication of the India that we want to build, an India where as I said people of diverse religious backgrounds can live together as equals and be active, effective partners.

Star: Prime Minister, I know you wouldn't let me leave without talking about Non-Resident Indians in Canada, and I know you've thought very carefully with your staff about how to reach out to NRIs. Can you tell us what that means for Canadians, and what your message is particularly to them?

Singh: Well we have a large community of Canadian citizens who are of Indian origin. In an increasingly interdependent world that we live in, I think all these Canadian citizens can become major instruments of promoting cordial relations between our two countries.

Star: What about investment?

Singh: Well I very much hope that some of them would find India a very desirable, profitable investment destination. But we would like our relations to have a multi-faceted character, and that cultural link should also have a prominent place.

Star: Are you hoping Canada will support you on the Security Council bid that is so important to India?

Singh: I very much hope that all right-thinking people would support India's case. I believe we have a very strong case.

Star: What can Canada do particularly though at the UN to help with your Security Council seat?

Singh: We very much hope that Canada will back us up in our quest for a more balanced composition of the Security Council.

Star: Thank you very much.

002. Interview of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh to the weekly Outlook.

New Delhi, January 17, 2005.

[From the time giant tsunami waves lashed India, and New Delhi refused relief assistance from foreign governments, a debate has been brewing in the country. Did India turn down offers of help because, as an aspirant for a United Nations Security Council seat, it didn't want to be seen as accepting aid? Would not the assistance that India was giving other countries be better utilised to address the abysmal levels of poverty at home? External affairs minister K. Natwar Singh clarifies India's position to V. Sudarshan]

How much financial assistance has India provided to other countries that have been hit by the tsunami?

We have provided humanitarian assistance to Sri Lanka, the Maldives, Indonesia and Thailand.

We are also now proposing to send relief to Seychelles. This assistance has been in the form of composite relief packages to the tune of Rs 100 crore for Sri Lanka, Rs 5 crore for the Maldives and smaller packages for Indonesia and Thailand. Our assistance has been through provision of emergency rations, medical supplies, hospital ships, search and rescue operations and other emergency equipment, urgently required in the affected areas in these countries. Indian naval ships, aircraft and helicopters have been deployed for implementing this assistance and our people are helping with rebuilding the infrastructure in these countries.

How do you explain that India, itself a victim of the tsunami, is an aid-giver?

It's true that India has also been a victim of the tsunami, and a huge operation has been launched for relief and rehabilitation within India. At the same time, given our place in this region, and our resources and expertise in providing relief after natural disasters, it was natural that we should try and help these friendly countries in this hour of need. It's important that countries join hands in the face of such enormous disaster and try to alleviate the suffering of their people which, after all, is the common suffering of mankind.

There has been some criticism on India's refusal to accept foreign aid for tsunami relief effort. What's our exact position?

We do not have a dogmatic position on the issue of accepting foreign aid. What we've stated is that as of now we feel we have enough resources and capabilities to be able to deal with this disaster. We deeply appreciate the offers of help which have poured in from several countries but so far we have managed on our own. We would, of course, be in touch with our friends in case any requirements come up later.

Are foreign governments being discouraged from donating to the PM's Relief Fund and are foreign charities and other such entities being discouraged from donating/working with NGOs in India?

No such restrictions have been imposed. Anybody who wishes to donate to the PM's Relief Fund is welcome to do so. As regards the working of NGOs, there are several international NGOs and UN agencies which are already present in India, and are doing excellent work in carrying out relief operations in very close coordination with our local authorities.

We were one of the first off the block in terms of getting our navy off to Sri Lanka, the Maldives and Indonesia. What was the rationale in terms of our strategic interests in the region?

India, of course, has strategic interests in its neighbourhood. However, one should not look at the timely relief provided by India in these terms. It was a humanitarian need. We had the required resources and we responded to the needs of our neighbouring friendly countries.

There have been reports that India is somehow unhappy at the sight of seeing so many US marines landing in Sri Lanka. How do we view this? Did Sri Lanka inform us of it?

The magnitude of the disaster in Sri Lanka is such that it requires huge assistance. Indians are already present there in fairly large strength for providing relief.

If the US believes it can contribute to that effort, they are most welcome. Of course, coordination has to be ensured and this was done through the coordination group that was set up. The extent of American support required is something that can be determined on the basis of consultation. We don't think there is any misunderstanding or misapprehension in this respect.

Some say that as an aspirant to a permanent seat in the UNSC, India should not be a supplicant for aid. Is this justified?

The merits of our case for a permanent seat in the UNSC are well known. I don't think these two issues should be coupled. That would be somewhat cynical. I've already stated why we have not taken aid.

There are others who say that given the skewed nature of development in India, the levels of poverty, we are better off utilising the money we give as external aid to better address the problems within.

The problem of poverty requires long-term solutions. Our government is fully committed to that task and there are specific schemes and programmes for that. As a responsible member of the international community, it is also our duty to help friendly countries, especially those in our neighbourhood, in their times of difficulty to the extent possible. I do not think that these are either/or situations.

Is there any area we can look to for international assistance, in terms of long-term issues of rehabilitation, setting up of early tsunami warning systems, ecological aspect of disaster management, etc?

As you say, these are long-term issues and once the immediate crisis created by the tsunami has been tackled, all these issues will no doubt be examined. I was recently present at the Special ASEAN Leaders' Summit in Jakarta. The declaration issued after the summit pledges to set up an international warning system for such disasters and India is prepared to participate in this exercise.

What was our reason for being part of the core group with the US, considering that we had already launched our relief operations in the region? Was there any signalling involved in this exercise?

The core group was formed in order to facilitate a coordinated effort to deal with the disaster. The fact that India was invited to be a part of this core group was precisely because of the recognition that India had the capabilities, had the resources, in order to help out with the relief efforts in this region.

It is said that our expertise in coping with natural disaster is 'enviably well-developed', with other countries sometimes asking us for help. Is it true?

Our experience of handling natural disasters has indeed enabled us to develop well-defined institutional mechanisms for disaster management at all levels. These institutions swing into action immediately in the aftermath of a disaster. Standard operating procedures for different disasters have been developed and regular drills are organised. A Calamity Relief Fund has been set up in each state to enable governments to incur immediate expenditure on response and relief operations in the event of a disaster. This is supplemented by a National Calamity Contingency Fund at the central level. Eight battalions of paramilitary forces have been equipped as specialist search and rescue teams. This holistic approach was extremely useful in dealing with the aftermath of the tsunami. We've also circulated a document on disaster management which gives in detail our approach and experience.

003. Valedictory Address by Minister of External Affairs
K. Natwar Singh at Petrotech – 2005.

New Delhi, January 19, 2005.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am told my friend and colleague, Shri Mani Shankar Aiyar, said in his address to the inaugural theme session that he regretted the Ministry of External Affairs seemed to know as little about petroleum as the Ministry of Petroleum knew about diplomacy. He has had to leave for London in his capacity as the "travelling salesman" for the fifth round of our New Exploration Licensing Policy, which he has just launched. I thought I should accept his invitation to deliver this Valedictory Address to reassure all of you of the close and symbiotic relationship that has been built between my concern for the long term security interests of our country and the Petroleum Minister's concern for ensuring our Energy Security.

The reasons for this are simple, even stark: as India marches on the path of sustained economic growth, achieving levels of 6-7% of GDP growth per annum, its demand for energy, particularly for oil and gas, continues to soar. Today, India produces 32 million tonnes of petroleum per annum, but actually requires 113 million tonnes, a gap of 70%. As our economic growth increases in coming years, this gap over the next five years could reach 75%, and, over the next twenty, top 85%.

India is not alone in its dependence on oil and gas imports for economic growth: the principal industrialised countries, such as the USA, Europe and Japan, are similarly placed. China became a net importer from 1993, and is expected to fuel its growth with very substantial oil imports: by 2010, it is expected to import over 50% of its oil.

The challenge before us is clear: we have to mount a major effort to utilise our technological and financial resources to discover more oil and gas within our national boundaries. In tandem with this effort, we have to set up engagements with foreign governments and companies to establish binding arrangements that will provide us with assured supplies to meet the urgent needs created by our growth.

Here, the tasks of the External Affairs and the Petroleum Ministries coalesce. For, a sustained diplomatic effort has to be mounted which brings together in one gigantic and coordinated national effort all of India's strengths and capabilities which are utilised to establish the engagements required by us. In this effort, our diplomatic strengths buttress the technological and financial capabilities of our petroleum organisations and, in working together, we achieve our national interest. This effort can be described as "oil diplomacy."

Global energy scenario

Let us look at the global energy picture so that we can identify the specific areas which constitute the challenge for our "oil diplomacy":

- (i) Oil will remain the dominant fuel in the primary energy mix, with a share of 40% in 2020. The volume of world oil demand is projected at about 115 mb/d in 2020, compared to 75 mb/d in 1997.
- (ii) The oil resources required to supply the world's growing demand will be concentrated in three regions: the Gulf, Russia and Africa. The Gulf region will continue to play a central role in this regard, with its share in world petroleum trade increasing from 37% in 2001 to 50% in 2005. However, there will be substantial increases in production and distribution capacities not only in Russia but also in West and Central Africa, principally, Nigeria, Angola, Sudan and Chad.

- (iii) The demand for natural gas will rise at 2.7% per annum up to 2030, and its share in world primary energy demand will increase from 22% to 26%. While world reserves of natural gas are more than sufficient to meet the projected increase, heavy investments will be required to bring the large gas resources to the market, particularly through pipeline and LNG transportation.

India ranks sixth in the world in terms of energy demand. Through the 1990s, it achieved growth rates averaging 6% per annum; over the next two decades, it is poised to grow at 7-8%. To fuel this growth, India's energy consumption, at a conservative estimate, will increase at 5% per annum up to 2010-11. By 2010, India will emerge as the fourth largest consumer of energy, after the USA, China and Japan.

As India is a major importer of petroleum, its oil bill has been an important part of the nation's expenditure. This amounted to $ 6.5 billion in the year 1998-99, and rose steadily over the years to $ 20.3 billion in 2003-04. It is expected to be much higher in the current year.

Let us now turn to the domestic oil and gas scenario.

We have now mounted a major effort to expand our domestic production base. The possibility of a sizeable increase in the production of oil and gas within India has brightened recently in view of oil having been found in the Barmer area of Rajasthan and vast reserves of gas offshore the Krishna-Godavari basin. New supplies of gas are also expected from our considerable coal-bearing areas. The latest New Exploration Licensing Policy in the fifth round (NELP-V), along with similar policies in four earlier rounds, under which contracts have been signed covering 90 blocks, all of these are expected to give positive results in the near future.

These are welcome signs of an increase in our internal production of oil and gas. Our technical experts confidently believe that, contrary to the earlier perception, India is substantially endowed with hydrocarbon resources.

The External Challenge

Even as a mammoth effort continues to be mounted to locate new oil and gas sources within India, dramatic and exciting efforts have also been made abroad. This effort is the culmination of policy reforms and reviews undertaken by successive governments in New Delhi over the last 15 years. The setting up of a de-regulated and market-driven oil and gas industry in India was first contemplated by the Government in the early 1990s. As a result of these initiatives, deregulation of the industry commenced in 1997, together with the setting up of the new exploration licensing policy (NELP) in terms of which attractive terms were provided to entice domestic and foreign private companies to take up exploration activity in India.

These efforts culminated, in 1999, with the publication of the Hydrocarbon Vision – 2025. The Vision document set out the roadmap to guide the hydrocarbon sector over the next 25 years. Its key objectives were as follows:

- Secure energy security by achieving self-reliance through increased indigenous production and investment in equity oil abroad;
- Enhance quality of life by progressively improving product standards;
- Develop the hydrocarbon sector as a globally competitive industry through technology up gradation and capacity building in all facets of the industry;
- Promote a free market and healthy competition among players; and,
- Ensure oil security for the country keeping in view strategic and defence coordination.

I am very pleased to note that the Petroleum Ministry, working in tandem with my Ministry and our Embassies abroad, has continued to robustly engage foreign countries in setting up joint ventures and acquiring oil and gas assets as part of our energy security agenda.

The ONGC has acquired a 25 per cent interest in the Greater Nile project in Sudan. It has also acquired an interest in two exploration blocks in Sudan, two blocks in Libya and one in Syria. Our companies have obtained equity participation in Russia's Sakhalin-I and in Vietnam. Indian Oil will develop a gas block in the gigantic South Pars gas field of Iran and sell LNG from it. India has also made a breakthrough in the Caspian region in an agreement with Russia and Kazakhstan. The exploration will begin in Kurnmangazi oil field. These are encouraging beginnings, but we have a long way to go.

Challenges for India's Oil Diplomacy

India's oil diplomacy has to address two separate but connected challenges: the first challenge is issue-oriented and pertains to larger policy matters, such as: stability in the petroleum market; the issue of oil prices and the need for an Asian market; the establishment of petroleum exchanges; the harnessing of technology, and so on. The second challenge is to set up enduring engagements through the consolidation of existing relationships with foreign countries and companies as also reaching out to and setting up linkages in new areas.

In regard to issue-related challenges, I would like to congratulate Shri Mani Shankar Aiyar for his initiative in organising the recent Round Table of Asian Ministers on Regional Cooperation in the Oil Economy. This pioneering venture, which attracted 12 ministers and deputy ministers from Asia's principal producing and consuming nations, had as its theme: "Stability, Security, Sustainability through Mutual Interdependence".

The Round Table emerged from the central fact of the contemporary situation that Asian countries are now not just the world's principal sources of supply; they are emerging as the world's principal destination for the consumption of that supply. These facts, as was noted by Shri Mani Shankar Aiyar at the Conference, require "fashioning a more fair, more just and more remunerative oil order" in Asia, in which, "the Asian consumer is assured a stable, secure and sustainable regime" within which to promote, progress and prosper.

The setting up energy-related engagements by consolidating existing relationships and reaching out to new areas constitutes a special challenge to oil diplomacy. India is well-placed in respect of the principal sources of global supply. India has historic links with the Gulf region, which is not only our principal supplier but the principal supplier of oil to the world. Happily, our ties with this region have continued to be refreshed over the decades and have been imparted a substantial contemporary value. This region already is home to an Indian diaspora numbering over 3.5 million; it is also our principal economic partner, with which we have a two-way economic relationship valued at over $ 20 billion per annum. Our ties with this region are now being sustained by joint venture projects not only in the energy sector, but also in the areas of industry, infrastructure, information technology and management consultancy.

The other principal source of global energy is Russia. We have very special historic relations with this country, which played a pioneering role in setting up India's oil and gas infrastructure over 50 years ago. It is a matter of considerable satisfaction that India has attempted to repay this debt by investing in the development of Russia's oil and gas sector in Siberia by acquiring a 20% stake in Sakhalin-I. Negotiations are on to significantly expand India's investment in Russia's energy sector.

Africa, the third principal petroleum source, provides a special opportunity to us. We have had traditional ties with Africa, having participated in its anti-colonial struggle. Now, with the emergence of African countries as major petroleum producing states, the challenge before us is to build upon the goodwill that already exists. Sub-Saharan Africa holds 7% of the world's oil reserves and comprises 11% of world oil production. Of the eight billion barrels of crude oil reserves discovered worldwide in 2001, seven billion were in West and Central Africa. In terms of oil production, Sub-Saharan Africa would increase from the current output of 3.8 million barrels per day to 6.8 million barrels per day in 2008. The challenge before both the Ministries of External Affairs and Petroleum is to engage in a deeper diplomatic dialogue with the principal African countries so that the traditional goodwill is leveraged into long-term energy-based engagement.

The other area where India's energy-related diplomacy has recently penetrated is Latin America. The mechanisms of the oil market are such that oil assets do not necessarily have to be brought back to India and consumed here; they can be sold in other markets which require them. Thus, India has established significant energy-related stakes in Venezuela, and is pursuing new opportunities vigorously in Columbia, Cuba, Ecuador, Trinidad-Tobago, as well as Brazil and Argentina.

Oil Pipelines

One of the most significant challenges before Indian diplomacy is the setting up of trans-national oil pipelines that would economically carry natural gas from supply points thousands of kilometres away and reach India by crossing different countries. India has before it three specific pipeline proposals:

- (i) the Myanmar-Bangladesh-India pipeline;
- (ii) the Iran-Pakistan-India pipeline; and,
- (iii) the Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India pipeline.

All the three pipelines are attractive techno-economic proposals and have the ability to meet the pressing energy requirements of the countries through which they pass, besides providing urgently required financial resources to the supply and transit countries. These pipeline proposals have within them the ability to qualitatively transform the relationships of the countries of the region. In this regard, I applaud the progress made recently in Yangon, in the development of the Myanmar-Bangladesh-India pipeline, in which Minister Aiyar played a significant role. I am also aware of the important discussions that have taken place recently between the Iranian and Indian Petroleum Ministers on the Iran-India pipeline.

The Indian ruler, Sher Shah Suri, is recalled today not because of his success on the battle field, but because he envisaged and established, 400 years ago, the Grand Trunk Road that stretched over hundreds of kilometres, from Patna in the East to Peshawar in the West, linking millions of people who used this facility to exchange goods and ideas, move comfortably on pilgrimages, and, when the need arose, to migrate to new towns. I see in these pipelines the same potential to link our region and set up a new paradigm in regional cooperation and friendship. Indeed, with the use of modern technology and investment, they can constitute the vibrant arteries of our progress and prosperity.

004. Excerpts from the Address by President Dr. A.P.J. Abdul Kalam to the Budget Session of Parliament.

New Delhi, February 25, 2005.

Honourable Members, my Government's foreign policy is based on the centrality of national interests in the conduct of our external relations and the pursuit of our economic interests. The Government has taken important initiatives, keeping in mind the imperative of retaining our freedom of options, remaining alive to our concerns. The Government's efforts have contributed to making the international environment for India's development more secure. We have articulated our positions and views clearly so that India's foreign partners have a better appreciation of the logic of our position on issues of importance to us.

My Government has accorded primary attention to relations with our neighbours and strengthening SAARC. It is my Government's earnest desire to work with all our neighbours to create a neighbourhood of shared prosperity and peace. We will reaffirm the importance we attach to realizing the potential inherent in SAARC at its forthcoming Summit meeting. Our approach to our neighbours is founded on the conviction that the peoples of our region have a desire for enhanced cooperation, overcoming perceived barriers and inhibitions. Our effort will be to consolidate and expand traditional friendship while we work to nurture newer partnerships. We value our especially close relationship with Bhutan and we will strive to build on this. We have had the privilege of a special and warm relationship with Bangladesh. India was among the earliest to rush relief and assistance to both Sri Lanka and Maldives, which suffered the impact of the tsunami. This even while we ourselves were coping with the effects of the tsunami in our coastal areas, and assessing the extent of our damage, demonstrates the importance, we attach to these relationships and our commitment to good neighbourly ties. The Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement with Sri Lanka will further deepen our economic cooperation. President Karzai's recent visit will strengthen our participation in Afghanistan's reconstruction efforts.

Our relations with Pakistan are of utmost importance in our endeavour to create a neighbourhood of peace, stability and prosperity. We are engaged in a serious dialogue with Pakistan and have taken several initiatives in furtherance of that. In proposing a range of steps, including Confidence Building Measures that may be taken in the near term, leading up to longer term economic cooperation, we are responding to the felt desire of our peoples. However, the process of normalisation is critically dependent on Pakistan fulfilling its assurance that it would end its support to terrorist activities.

The India-Pakistan process was recently taken significantly forward. An agreement was reached to start a bus service between Srinagar and Mu-zaffar-abad. It was also agreed in principle to start bus services between Lahore and Amritsar, including to religious places such as Nankaana Sahib. Pakistan also agreed to work towards early restoration of the Kho-krapar to Munabao rail link. These measures would enhance people to people contacts, which have also provided palpable support to the present process.

Our relationship with Nepal will continue to receive high priority and it remains our view that the problems that Nepal faces today, can only be addressed by a constitutional Monarchy and multi-party democracy working together harmoniously on the basis of a national consensus. India has expressed grave concern following the dissolution of the multi-party Government, declaration of emergency and arrest of political leaders by His Majesty, the King of Nepal on February 1, 2005.

We greatly value our relations with our major economic partners. India-US relations are on a steady course as they draw on the enduring affinity between our two countries as democracies and as strategic partners. We will continue to build upon the convergences in this relationship, strengthening our bilateral economic interface and the vibrant people-to-people contacts. Our ties with the European Union and its 25 member states have expanded steadily, and on our part, we will work to add momentum to the strategic partnership on which we have embarked, including at the next India-EU Summit in New Delhi this year. We value our time tested and strategic partnership with Russia, which was strengthened by the recent visit of the President of the Russian Federation. The depth of our cooperation illustrates the priority we attach to deepening and consolidating this important relationship. My government has sought to accelerate our dialogue and engagement with China and we look forward to the visit of its Premier as an important bilateral landmark.

The "Look East Policy" has substantially strengthened our linkages with Japan, the member countries of ASEAN and the Republic of Korea. We expect the forthcoming visit of the Prime Minister of Japan to be a significant event in our bilateral ties. Our relationship with ASEAN has taken on new dimensions and we hope to realise its huge potential. India's effective presence at the ASEAN Summit in November 2004 and the success of the first BIMSTEC Summit in July 2004, helped us forge closer links with our eastern neighbours.

The convergence of our foreign policy and our domestic needs is striking in the context of our energy security. My Government will give full importance to synchronizing our diplomatic activity with our need for energy to fuel our developmental needs. Our established and traditional interests in West Asia, the Gulf and proximate regions, including the substantial presence there of our citizens, shall continue to be reflected in our interactions. We remain committed to the efforts of the international community in finding a just and durable solution to the problems that have faced the Palestinian people, so that they may achieve a State of their own. At the same time, we attach high importance to our friendly relations with Israel, which we hope to strengthen and diversify.

The forthcoming 50th anniversary of the Bandung Conference, will be an important occasion to recall an historic initiative taken at a time when the process of decolonisation was starting to gather strength and which prefigured the values of the Non-Aligned Movement. In this spirit, we will continue to pursue the comprehensive exercise to broaden the range of our relations with countries in Africa and Latin America, on which we have embarked. We will also reaffirm our commitment to the values of the Commonwealth at its Summit meeting in November this year.

This year, we also mark the 60th anniversary of the end of the Second World War and the founding of the United Nations Organization. It is our firm belief that the problems that confront the world today are truly global and are problems without borders, which call for collective approaches. We will play an active and constructive role in all deliberations of global concern. There is growing recognition of India's legitimate aspiration to play a larger role in the UN, consistent with our status and strength. We attach importance to the process of reform of the United Nations as part of the necessary renewal of the Organisation and we intend to articulate forcefully our aspiration to permanent membership of the UN Security Council.

New Delhi, February 25, 2005.

Mr. Aroon Purie, Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be here with you this evening at this conclave, which has now become such an integral part of the calendar of Delhi.

At the outset, I would like to congratulate you both for the original initiative behind the India Today Conclave, and for persevering with this event. This Conclave facilitates a dialogue between civil society and representatives of Government and between Indian and foreign scholars, thinkers, academics and leaders. I welcome such opportunities because the real strength of our democracy lies in our ability to conduct such a dialogue on a continuing basis. The test of the vibrancy and resilience of a democracy is not just the ability to conduct elections and convene legislatures. It lies in a society's ability to communicate with itself and with the outside world through civilized modes of interaction. We are, like any real democracy, an argumentative society. The right to disagree and the freedom to debate is a hallmark of such societies. I therefore value these opportunities where contending and contentious ideas can be considered in a calm manner.

I also congratulate the India Today Group on its emergence as the world's window on India. However, I do believe that with your global reach, your organization should increasingly seek to become India's window to the world as well. For this, it is essential that leading media organizations must invest in Indian correspondents overseas to offer your readers an Indian perspective on international affairs. For India to be more meaningfully engaged with the world, we need an informed Indian view of world events and an Indian perspective on global trends.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

In the nine months that our Government has been in office, I have frequently spoken about our agenda and priorities in office. I sincerely believe that our people voted for the United Progressive Alliance because they wanted government to adhere more closely to the fundamental principles of our Republic. Our Nation was built on the foundations of a deep and abiding commitment to the values of liberal, social democracy. Pluralism, secularism, multi-culturalism and the principles of equity, social justice and the rule of law are core values of our civilization and the bedrock of our Republic.

Many in India and abroad who have admired this legacy of our freedom struggle were deeply concerned by the emergence in recent years of communalism and majoritarianism in our body politic. If these insidious trends had not been checked, India would not have been the India that our freedom fighters had sought to create. There are bound to be voices of intolerance and extremism at the margins of any free society, and a democracy must learn to deal with such fringe groups, albeit within the framework of the rule of law. However, the central tendency of any modern and civilized society today can only be towards pluralism. We must build an inclusive polity and a caring society.

If there is an “idea of India” by which India should be defined, it is the idea of an inclusive, open, multi-cultural, multi-ethnic, multi-lingual society. I believe that this is the dominant trend of political evolution of all societies in the 21st century. Therefore, we have an obligation to history and mankind to show that pluralism works. India must show that democracy can deliver development and empower the marginalized. Liberal democracy is the natural order of political organization in today’s world. All alternate systems, authoritarian and majoritarian in varying degrees, are an aberration.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

While all democratic societies do face internal challenges for a variety of reasons, the particular advantage of democracies lies in their ability to handle such situations with maturity. Our own experience has shown us that democratic methods yield the most enduring solutions to the most intractable problems. Authoritarian responses cannot solve the real problems of the people or make life worth living. They merely contain the fall-out often for very limited periods of time; and with possible negative consequences that make the remedy worse than the disease. In the particular context of the turbulence in our neighbourhood, it is a matter of particular pride for us to have received this week the President of the youngest democracy in our region. I refer to President Karzai of Afghanistan, who has shown great courage in sowing the seeds of democracy. We are confident that the friendly people of Afghanistan will reap the fruits of this political evolution, in their long-awaited tryst with peace.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

If our commitment to remain an open society is one of the pillars of our nationhood, the other is our commitment to remain an open economy. An economy that guarantees the freedom of enterprise, respects individual creativity, and at the same time mobilizes public investment for social infrastructure and the development of human capabilities. Indeed, it would be no exaggeration to suggest that these are the principles to which all countries will increasingly want to adhere. In relating to the world, we must never lose sight of this vital aspect of our Nationhood.

Just as developed industrial economies enabled "Economies in Transition" to graduate into open economies, developed democracies should also assist "Societies in Transition" to become open societies. I believe India's policies towards the world have been shaped by this commitment to the core values of our Nationhood. We should be proud to identify with those who defend the values of liberal democracy and secularism across the world.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Over the past decade and more, the debate in this country on the nature of our interaction with the world, with our wider Asian neighbourhood and with Major Powers, has also been shaped by the sweeping changes in our economic policy. The initiatives we took in the early 1990s towards economic liberalization have not only altered the nature of our interaction with the world, but have also shaped global perceptions of India. Indeed, they have shaped more than mere perceptions. They have also altered the manner in which other nations, big and small, relate with us. Today, there is a greater willingness internationally to work with India and build relationships of mutual benefit and mutual inter-dependence. This augurs well for our development and security.

The steps that successive governments have taken since 1991 have helped to finally remove what development planners used to refer to in the 1960s and 1970s as the “external constraint” on growth. Indian industry and our professionals have demonstrated to the world their ability to step out with confidence from a highly protected environment into a mercilessly competitive one. We do have a vast unfinished agenda of social and economic reform and development, as outlined in our National Common Minimum Programme (NCMP), and our Government’s highest priority will be to implement this. Doing so will further enable us to deal with the challenges of globalization.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I submit to you for your consideration the idea that the global environment has never been more conducive for India’s economic development than it is today. The world wants India to do well. However, we recognize that our real challenges are at home. It is for this reason that the NCMP places such great emphasis on increasing investment in infrastructure, agriculture, health and education, urban renewal and the knowledge economy. Having ensured that there is today no external constraint on growth, we must now ensure that there remain no internal constraints to development. That is what the NCMP aims to achieve.

To say, however, that the external constraint on growth is no longer binding is not to suggest that we are making full use of the new opportunities. There is much more we can do to draw on global savings and to tap global markets. As a developing economy we must draw on international resources to fuel our development. We should be more open to global capital flows and better prepared to take advantage of new markets for goods and services. India is wholly committed to multilateralism in trade. But we will seek the reform and democratization of multilateral institutions. At the same time, India will strengthen South-South co-operation aimed at enabling all nations of the South in regaining their rightful place in the comity of Nations.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Globalization is both an opportunity and a challenge. A decade ago, who could have imagined that India would be a major software services exporter and that a new process of “brain gain”—not “brain drain”—would be created by opportunities in these sectors. However, we must ask ourselves, are we doing enough to secure this edge? The growth of our knowledge economy has opened up new markets for science and technology based products. Again, are we doing enough to encourage this process? In manufacturing too there are global opportunities that we must tap. The end of the multi-fibre agreement opens up new opportunities for trade in textiles. We must ensure that we are ready to take advantage of these openings.

We would like to make globalization a win-win game. How we deal with the challenge of globalization and how we make use of its opportunities will shape our relations with the world, and the perception of our capabilities as a nation. I do believe that this has already happened in substantial measure. Our relations with major powers, especially the United States and more recently China, have increasingly been shaped by economic factors. Who could have imagined a decade ago that China would emerge as our second largest trade partner? In the case of the U.S., an acceleration of people-to-people contact and the consequent business-to-business interaction has forged closer State-to-State relations. Shared values and growing economic links have enabled a closer strategic engagement.

Similarly, business and commerce also underpin our strategic partnership with the European Union. It must be our endeavour to ensure that economic and commercial links contribute to adding a strong and new element in our traditionally friendly relations with Russia. In fact, I believe that our strategic relationship with the Russian Federation can be greatly enriched by a greater focus on our bilateral economic relations. Even our approach to the wider Asian neighbourhood has been so influenced by economic factors. The countries of East and South-East Asia have become important economic partners for us and this has encouraged them to be more welcoming of us. Renewed cooperation in the economic field is giving a new profile to our relations with Japan, with aid and investment flows from Japan set to increase. Our concern for energy security has become an important element of our diplomacy and is shaping our relations with a range of countries across the globe, in West Asia, Central Asia, Africa and Latin America.

It is also interesting to note that the response of other countries to our national security concerns is being shaped by perceptions of business and economic opportunities. Countries that imposed sanctions on India when we declared ourselves a nuclear weapons power are building bridges with us, to utilize opportunities for mutual economic benefit. There is today growing recognition of India as a responsible nuclear power. We remain committed to our unilateral moratorium on testing, and our policy of no-first use. We reaffirm our willingness to work with the international community to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, and to work towards the ultimate goal of universal nuclear disarmament.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Regrettably, however, South Asia has been slow to recognize the win-win aspect of economic cooperation. While India has a set of bilateral relationships with its neighbours that vary in both political and economic intensity, the mere lowering of tariffs and pruning of negative lists does not add up to creating relations of mutual benefit. Greater connectivity, both in transport and communication links, and through the opening up of transit routes can transform our sub-continent into a web of economic and commercial links. We can jointly create reciprocal dependencies for mutual benefit. So far this potentially benign process has been hobbled by narrow political calculations. We sincerely want to promote a sense of partnership and the vision of a common destiny in South Asia to realize the region's latent potential.

None of us in South Asia can under-estimate the role of economic inter-dependence in international relations. The example of the European Union, ASEAN and APEC, NAFTA and other regional groups shows that the most dynamic economies of the world are creating such relationships for mutual benefit, regional security and peace. Indeed, we seek to be more closely engaged with such regional groups. Our links with each of these regions is both civilizational and contemporary, with people of Indian origin acting as a cultural bridge between our multi-cultural societies.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The idea that economic considerations play a role in shaping a Nation's foreign policy is not new. We in India were alerted to this reality at our very birth as a Republic when Panditji (former Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru) first articulated his vision of Indian foreign policy in the Constituent Assembly legislature in December 1947. Panditji had said, and I quote:

"Talking of Foreign policies, the House must remember that these are not just empty struggles on a chess board. Behind them lie all manner of things. Ultimately, foreign policy is the outcome of economic policy It is well for us to say that we stand for peace and freedom and yet that does not convey much to anybody, except a pious hope. We do stand for peace and freedom Undoubtedly it has some substance, but a vague statement that we stand for peace and freedom by itself has no particular meaning, because every country is prepared to say the same thing, whether it means it or not. What then do we stand for? Well, you have to develop this argument in the economic field."

I submit to you that India has indeed developed this argument in the economic field. Our foreign policy is of course shaped by our civilizational values and our commitment to peace and freedom. But, as Panditji said, it is equally shaped by our commitment to our economic development and to the development of all developing economies, within the framework of an open society and an open economy. It is shaped by our yearning to recover our lost space in the global economy and our economic status in the comity of Nations. It is shaped by our desire to build bridges with our neighbours and our economic partners. It is shaped by our firm and sincere commitment to a future of shared peace, freedom and development in our neighbourhood.

Such are the principles on which we should engage the world and our partners. India is destined to recover its due status in the world, but this process will be speeded up if we do what we must at home and build bridges of mutual inter-dependence with the world. I leave you with this thought as you proceed with the rest of your very interesting discussions and interactions with the distinguished speakers at your Conclave. I hope your efforts will throw more light on how we should deal with the challenges ahead.

Thank you and I wish your deliberations all success.

006. Declaration of the G-20 Conference adopted at the conclusion of the ministerial meeting.

New Delhi, March 21, 2005.

1. G-20¹ Ministers at their meeting in New Delhi on 18-19 March 2005 recalled that the Group's identity is deeply linked to the development dimension of the Doha Round. Agriculture is vital for all developing countries and is central to the Doha Development Agenda. Our common goal is to put an end to trade-distorting policies in agriculture maintained by developed countries thus, contributing to growth and development of developing countries and their positive integration into the world trading system. This would be a major contribution to the development objectives of the Round.

Road to Sixth Ministerial Conference

2. Ministers recalled the crucial role played by the Group during the negotiating process in the lead up to the 'July Framework' in 2004, and stressed that the G-20 will continue to participate actively and constructively in the negotiations.

3. Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to advance the Doha Round of trade negotiations in 2005 with a view to arriving at an agreement on modalities during the Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference to be held in Hong Kong, China in December 2005. This is a necessary step in order to complete the negotiations by 2006. Such modalities must be compatible with the July framework and in line with the mandate contained in the Doha Declaration.

4. Ministers stressed that agriculture negotiations have multiple dimensions and are technically complex. These negotiations should be intensified to stimulate progress in all other areas of negotiations. They highlighted that the G-20 is committed to a balanced first approximation of the modalities by July 2005, which should be sufficiently detailed to achieve the objective of full modalities by the Sixth Ministerial Conference.

1. Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, China, Cuba, Egypt, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, South Africa, Tanzania, Thailand, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Zimbabwe.

2. The G-20 ministers met again in Pakistan in September to take stock of the distortions in the global agricultural market caused by huge government subsidies in the USA and the West. On that occasion Indian Commerce Minister had said that G-20 had a vital role in protecting the interests of the poor farmers. Later at a news conference he said that the G-20 bloc accounted for 70 per cent of the global farming community and the West should not be allowed to dictate policies detrimental to the poorer sections. He cautioned against converting the Doha Round from a Development Round into a Market Access Round. "Talks of progression within bands is nothing but reintroduction of the concept of harmonisation in market access, a concept which was rejected at the mini ministerial held at Dalian, China in July this year," he said.

Negotiating Process

5. In view of the specific nature of issues under discussion and the need for technical support from experts, Ministers underlined that a “bottom-up” approach is required so that texts will evolve from a participative negotiating process. This is an essential element for securing a legitimate outcome to these negotiations to the benefit of the whole Membership. Ministers acknowledged that the Geneva process may need to be supported by other forms of engagement provided they are conducted in a transparent and inclusive manner. Such interventions, including through Ministerial involvement, should be timely, well-prepared and should take up issues which are ripe enough for political decision.

Negotiations on agriculture – substantive issues

6. It was noted that negotiations under the Special Session of the Committee on Agriculture are under way. The Chairman's negotiating process presently provides an adequate balance between identification of issues, scooping and drafting of documents while ensuring transparency, inclusiveness and efficiency in the work. Ministers stressed that the assessment of the progress of work to be undertaken by July 2005 will constitute an important milestone for defining the scope and perspectives of the Ministerial Meeting.

7. Ministers reiterated that special and differential treatment for developing countries is an integral part of all elements of the negotiations@.

8. Ministers recalled the statement made by the G-20 during the December 2004 Special Session of the Committee on Agriculture on the need to observe necessary sequencing of issues identified in the ‘July Framework’ so as to ensure progress in each of the three pillars.

Cotton

9. Ministers underlined the importance of cotton for many WTO members, particularly the African countries that are cotton producers. In this regard, Ministers reiterated the urgent need to address this issue in accordance with the 'July Framework'. Ministers requested that work in the Sub-Committee on Cotton be expedited so that effective measures are included in the July 2005 first approximation. They stressed the need to provide urgent development assistance in view of the recent aggravation of the decline in the international cotton prices.

10. Ministers expressed satisfaction with the recent Appellate Body decision on cotton, which substantiates the need for urgent reform of trade distorting measures in agricultural trade, which have such a negative impact on developing countries.

Domestic support

11. Ministers stressed that, in order to fulfil the mandate of "substantial reductions in trade-distorting domestic support" negotiations should determine base periods and initial and final numbers for the overall trade-distorting domestic support in a technically consistent and politically credible manner. It was noted that significant reductions will be required to address inflated baselines and to arrive at effective reductions that address the need for removing distortions in agriculture trade. Moreover, such reductions should be necessarily complemented by further disciplines in the Blue Box and the Green Box in order to avoid mere box shifting.

12. Ministers reiterated that any change in the Blue Box (Article 6.5 of the Agreement on Agriculture) is contingent upon agreement on additional criteria in order to make it substantially less trade-distorting than it is now. They also stressed the Group's active participation in the review and clarification process of the Green Box in order to ensure that no, or at most minimal, trade-distorting effects or effects on production will be generated by any direct payments claimed to be exempt from reduction commitments. It was highlighted that such policies in developed countries must fully comply with the criteria set out in paragraph 1 of Annex 2 of the Agreement on Agriculture.

13. Ministers stressed that Green Box should be reviewed and clarified to include specific provisions designed to accommodate genuine agriculture and rural development programmes of developing countries aimed at alleviating poverty, promoting agrarian reform and settlement policies, and ensuring food security and addressing livelihood security needs. Further, for facilitating implementation of Green Box measures in developing countries, their special circumstances would also need to be taken into account.

14. Given that de minimis support is the only form of support available to farmers in most developing countries, Ministers cautioned against any attempt to reduce de minimis support in developing countries as this would negatively affect the programmes benefiting subsistence and resource poor farmers. Ministers noted that the amounts of support in developing countries are insignificant when compared to those in developed countries and, therefore, should not be subject to reductions.

Export competition

15. Ministers noted with concern the recent reintroduction of export subsidies by some Members, which goes against the spirit of the Doha mandate. They therefore called for an immediate standstill commitment on all forms of export subsidies.

16. Ministers expressed that in the export competition pillar, a key decision to be taken is the date of elimination of all forms of export subsidies. They urged countries that apply such instruments to eliminate them in a period no longer than five years and with a front-loading of commitments. An early agreement would inject new momentum to the agriculture negotiations and make progress easier in other fronts. They stressed the need to develop new disciplines on export credits, export credit guarantees and insurance programmes and food aid so that these instruments are not used in a way as to displace exports or to promote surplus disposal.

17. Ministers also recalled the need for making operative the 'July Framework' provisions for special and differential treatment including State Trading Enterprises and the concerns of Net Food Importing Developing Countries (NFIDCs) as provided in the Marrakesh Decision.

Market access

18. Ministers noted the crucial importance of conversion into ad valorem equivalents (AVEs) for the completion of the core modality – tariff reduction formula. Ministers stressed that treatment of non-ad valorem (NAVs) duties should clearly spell out the methodologies used for conversion so that the verification process does not become cumbersome. While cautioning against attempts at hiding the true level of protection in this exercise and stressing the non-negotiable nature of this issue, Ministers stressed the need to finally bind all NAV duties into ad valorem terms.

19. Ministers reaffirmed the long held view of the G-20 that the tariff reduction formula is the main component of the market access pillar and should be negotiated before addressing the issue of flexibilities. In this regard, they underlined that the tariff reduction formula must contain: (i) progressivity – deeper cuts to higher bound tariffs (ii) proportionality – developing countries making lesser reduction commitments than developed countries and neutrality in respect of tariff structures; and (iii) flexibility – to take account of the sensitive nature of some products without undermining the overall objective of the reduction formula and ensuring substantial improvement in market access for all products.

20. Ministers strongly stressed that special and differential treatment for developing countries must constitute an integral part of all elements with a view to preserving food security, rural development and livelihood concerns of millions of people that depend on the agriculture sector.

21. Ministers emphasized that the concepts of Special Products and Special Safeguard Mechanism are integral elements of special and differential treatment for developing countries. Ministers reiterated their commitment to work together with the G-33 and other interested Groups to render effective and operationalise these instruments.

22. Ministers stressed that the elimination of tariff escalation is important for developing countries, as it would allow them to diversify and increase their export revenues by adding value to their agricultural production.

23. Ministers reiterated that SSG (Article 5 of the AoA) was conceived as a transitory exception and therefore should be eliminated.

24. Ministers recalled that modalities for fullest liberalization of tropical products by developed countries are long overdue commitments, which remain to be addressed and honoured.

25. Ministers noted with concern the increasing use of Non-Tariff Barriers by developed countries, which are acting as impediments to exports of products of interest to developing countries.

26. Ministers recognised that preferences, which are of importance to many developing countries, are being eroded by both regional and multilateral liberalisation. Ministers agreed that preference erosion should be addressed in the negotiations, in accordance with the provisions of the 'July Framework', and requires mainstreaming the development dimension in the multilateral trading system through (i) expanded market access for products which are of vital export importance to the preference beneficiaries; (ii) effective utilisation of existing preferences and (iii) additional financial assistance and capacity building to address supply constraints, promote diversification and assist in adjustment and restructuring.

Related issues

27. Recognising the special needs of Least Developed Countries, Ministers highlighted their support for provisions exempting them from any reduction commitments and for steps to be taken to promote the export capacities, including the need to address the supply constraints of LDCs. Ministers stressed that it should be ensured that LDCs make meaningful gains in each of the three pillars.

28. Without creating any new categories of developing countries, Ministers agreed that the concerns of small, vulnerable economies must also be effectively addressed as part of the Work Programme mandated in paragraph 35 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration.

29. Ministers stressed that concerns of Recently Acceded Members must be effectively addressed through specific flexibilities provisions in all pillars.

30. Ministers noted that disciplines on export prohibitions and restrictions in Article 12:1 of the AoA will be strengthened. These negotiations must ensure that these rules are not circumvented, nor applied to developing countries in a discriminatory manner.

31. With regard to each of the three issues mentioned in paragraph 49 of the 'July Framework', Ministers reaffirmed that there was no agreement to include them in the negotiations.

32. Ministers reaffirmed the importance of enhancing the monitoring and surveillance mechanisms as a fundamental improvement to be introduced in these negotiations.

Strengthening dialogue

33. Ministers emphasized that the G-20 is actively engaged in an intense dialogue with other Groups and individual Members. In this regard, G-20 Ministers welcomed the invitation to the Coordinators of the Africa Group, ACP Countries, CARICOM, G-33 and LDCs to the Meeting. Ministers strongly believe that such coordination will contribute significantly towards realising the development dimension of the Doha Work Programme. In this regard, Ministers cautioned against any move that would create divisions among developing countries, including through further categorisation.

34. Ministers resolved to stay in close contact with each other to take stock of important developments with a view to taking coordinated and timely action in the negotiations. They further agreed that G-20 Ministers participating in other events would take these opportunities to meet among themselves at the margins of such meetings and keep their colleagues informed of the deliberations.

35. Ministers exchanged views on other negotiating issues in the Doha Work Programme in light of the inter-linkages inherent in the single undertaking.

36. Ministers thanked the Government of India for the efforts deployed to organise this Meeting and for the warm hospitality of the Indian people.

007. Interview¹ of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Le Mauricien.New Delhi, March 30, 2005.

[In the first part of the interview devoted to bilateral relations between India and Mauritius, the Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh suggests that these relations must be perceived from a point of view broader than that of a simple commercial relationship. He says that he is aware of the problems that the Mauritius economy faces at the current juncture. Without disputing the fact that the dismantling of the Multi-fibre Agreement puts Mauritius exports at risk, he informs that he intends to take advantage of the visit that he begins today to "acquaint myself with these problems and the measures that Mauritius is taking to cope with them". During the interview granted to Le Mauricien last Monday in New Delhi, the Head of the Indian Government also evokes the message of India for the world, the consolidation of secularism in India and economic performance of the country during the last year. In the concluding part of the interview, Mr. Singh enumerates the reasons that provide hope for a normalization of relations between his country and its neighbour Pakistan.]

Mr. Prime Minister, when this interview appears, you will already be in Mauritius for a visit during which you will inaugurate two very strong symbols of cooperation with India. This partnership obviously does not depend on the identity of the government of date in one country or the other. To what do you attribute this privileged relationship between our two countries?

Since long, India and Mauritius have maintained a tradition of mutually beneficial cooperation. In India, we have always accorded the highest priority to the welfare and prosperity of Mauritius. We are partners in meeting the challenges of globalization and in using the opportunities globalization offers us for national development. India is committed to provide Mauritius with any assistance possible to enable your country to acquire the necessary capacities and strengths to take up these challenges. The infrastructure that you referred to, in particular the Cyber Tower indeed symbolizes our will to provide Mauritius with the necessary means to meet these challenges.

1. Unofficial translation from French.

The present Foreign Secretary, Shri Shyam Saran is considered in Mauritius to be the Indian High Commissioner who first envisaged a new relevance for Indian diplomacy on the island, passing from celebration of common cultural heritage to economic ambition. Incidentally that was at a time when, Mr. Prime Minister, you initiated a transformation in the fundamentals of the Indian economy. Fourteen years after your reforms, India is a real economic power. How does tiny Mauritius still fit in this perspective?

India has historical ties with Mauritius. They are underpinned by bonds of friendship, common heritage and common perspective towards international issues. No doubt, the population of Mauritius is comparatively small but this in no way detracts from the importance which we attach to strengthening of our relationship with it. Our assessment of current cooperation leads us to conclude that there is a bright prospect in the future. Presently, we are working on the draft Comprehensive Economic Cooperation and Partnership Agreement which will open the door for free exchange of goods and services while increasing capital flows. We hope, on the Indian side, to reach an agreement with the Mauritian government for early implementation of the report of the joint study on this issue.

On the domestic front, India has chosen to introduce the Value Added Tax (VAT) and several states are doing so on April 1. Has the motivation been improved revenue collection or greater transparency in commercial transactions?

We cannot exclude that in the long term VAT is a measure to improve collection of revenue. Moreover, by helping remove rigidities in the earlier system of indirect taxation (Sales Tax), it also makes it possible to better fight tax avoidance. Finally, because of the way it works, VAT should enable our companies to produce less expensively and thus be more competitive internationally.

The Mauritian who goes to India cannot help but be struck by the reasonable prices of consumer goods of good quality, which seem to defy competition. How do you explain that despite excellent relations between our two countries, one finds very few industrial products from India in the Mauritian market?

It could be that our entrepreneurs and industrialists are not aggressive enough. However, on the eve of my visit to Mauritius, I want to emphasize that I see our relationship and our cooperation from a point of view much broader than international trade. Our relations are based on a common secular heritage, a shared culture and common core values. It is really from this point of view that I perceive the essential of relations between our two countries. Even while keeping in sight all that links us traditionally, it is possible at the beginning of the 21st century for us to deepen our partnership and face the challenges of globalisation.

In the context of globalisation and the disappearance of preferential arrangements, you are probably not unaware, Shri Pradhan Mantri, that the dismantlement of the Multi-Fibre Agreement and the free access of Indian and Chinese textile products to hitherto protected markets puts Mauritian companies in danger. What type of partnerships can you envisage to assist Mauritius in this difficult phase for its economy?

We are aware that the Mauritian economy is facing certain problems at the present juncture. During my forthcoming visit I will get an opportunity to acquaint myself with these problems and the measures which Mauritius is taking to cope with them. We will be happy to do what we can to help Mauritius to tackle these economic difficulties.

Could we look forward to Indian expertise in the area of sugarcane biotechnology and production of ethanol? These areas are in the news in Mauritius because of the threat to the price of sugar.

During my visit we will be considering the possibilities of cooperation in various sectors. We will give careful consideration to the various proposals which the Mauritian authorities make to enhance bilateral cooperation between the two countries. We possess certain expertise and know-how in the field of sugarcane processing and utilizing its byproducts for industrial purposes. Our experts will definitely consider whether there is scope for fruitful cooperation between India and Mauritius in the two areas mentioned by you.

These sectors in difficulty that we have discussed are often led by influential Mauritians who have real economic weight but who do not respond spontaneously to the factors behind the close relations between India and Mauritius. How can the India of the 21st century better reach out to these Mauritians who do not respond automatically to emotional links between our two countries?

Here again I would answer your question from a broader prospective. I think that the India has a message for the world of today and this message is very relevant to the age of globalization. This message is from a democracy, a State that believes in Rule of Law and in ensuring strict equality for all its citizens irrespective of differences of language, culture or religion. This is the message and it is addressed to all.

In this regard, Mister Prime Minister, when the present majority in the Lok Sabha was constituted, it was presented as a secular force. Ten months after your coming to power, how do you evaluate the secular consolidation of Indian society under your leadership?

When the Indian Republic was proclaimed, we gave ourselves a Constitution based on a commitment to secularism. Our national identity is based on the principles of pluralism and multiculturalism just as it is based on equal respect for all religions. For centuries, India was the land of all the great religions of the world. That allows us to say that the very idea of India is woven with the idea of secularism. I think that the government that I head was firm in its resolution to reinforce this idea and to defend its principles.

In May 2004, in the days following the results of elections, the Bombay Stock Exchange reacted quite negatively, wiping a good chunk of market capitalisation. Both as a democrat and a market-friendly economist, what is your opinion on this apparent " second ballot " traders feel allowed to cast after universal franchise has been exercised?

Markets often tend to react everywhere to political events on the basis of short-term calculations. This is not a value judgment that I make but a factual observation. When our government was constituted last year, our coalition was new. There was an impression of novelty, of something untried, about a Congress government supported by the parties of the Left committed to communism. There may have been an element of uncertainty, even nervousness, regarding the policies we would adopt. These fears, however, were quickly dispelled. In all democracies governments must remain conscious of the nature of their popular mandate even as they remain sensitive to the reactions of the markets. I do not necessarily see the contradictions between the mandate conferred by the voters and the expectations of the market. On a personal note, I would say that I was not unduly disturbed at the news of the drop in the market indices at the announcement of our coming to power just as I am not excessively moved by the fact that since then, and after the presentation of our second budget, the stock exchange has reached unprecedented heights. To recapitulate I will say that the main concern of markets is to ensure that governments do not lose sight of economic fundamentals. If the present government succeeds in providing an effective response to the principle challenges before the country, I have no doubt that the markets would respond suitably.

Ten months after your assumption of office, with the support of Marxist allies, there has been no downturn in the Indian economy. With a larger historical perspective, can we say that this legislature is liable to transform the national perception of the Left parties? If that were true, what would be the long term consequences for Indian politics?

As you would have noted not only has there not been any deceleration of the Indian economy but there has in fact been an acceleration of positive trends. The Indian economy has also performed very well and has registered a 6.9% growth in 2004-05 despite a deficient monsoon, record high oil prices and the Tsunami. This is clear evidence of the fundamental strength and resilience of the Indian economy. I may also mention that India's foreign exchange reserves have risen from US $ 119 billion in May 2004 to US $ 140 billion in March 2005. Similarly, FDI inflows increased to US $ 3094 million in the period April-December 2004, up by 57% from US $ 1974 million during the same period the previous year. It is evident that our economy is gathering strength and is on an upward trajectory.

To answer the second part of your question on the effect of coalition with the Left on the political configuration in the future, I am tempted to say that this experiment is vital for democratic development not only in India but also in the rest of the world. A democracy must lead to a better quality of life for all, in particular the poor, so that the world 'freedom' has real meaning. We have endeavored with our allies to craft a consensual political platform based on our commitment to an open society as also an open economy. We are for freedom enterprise and the continuation of policies that result in growth higher than what we have known until now. This growth, however, must be shared in a more equitable and humane manner. It must create new jobs and improve the quality of life of Indian citizens. This is the promise of the Common Minimum Programme that we have developed with the Left parties. The success of this experiment is vital for the future of our people.

Is this reorientation of political priorities in favour of the common man and the poor compatible with the current degree of corruption in Indian politics? Even your opponents, Sir, acknowledge your impeccable track record of integrity. In the position you now occupy as Head of Government, what leverage do you have to combat corruption in Indian politics, if not the criminalisation of political life?

Our government is committed to promoting good governance and fighting the scourges of corruption and criminalisation of political life. However, this cannot be a battle for one individual alone, less can one win it alone. In a democracy such as ours each person should plunge himself into this combat. I have sought a broad political consensus on certain principles in the conduct of political life. If the major political parties reach a consensus on this challenge we will be able to make a significant dent in this problem. But this cannot be achieved if competing and conflicting policies jam the democratic process. The problem of corruption and presence of criminals in politics cannot be resolved through action decided at the top and transmitted downwards. This requires a bottom-up consensual approach.

Your predecessors in Government had already taken some significant steps towards a normalisation of relations with Pakistan. What is your assessment of the talks? How are things going on in Kashmir and can we say that peace is at hand?

Significant developments have taken place in India-Pakistan relations since April 2003. Relations have been restored at the level of High Commissioners; transport and communication links have resumed; one round of Composite Dialogue has been completed; another round has been initiated with the Foreign Secretary level talks in December 2004. Besides, people to people exchanges are taking place across the spectrum in large numbers. There has been a resumption of visits by pilgrim groups. Our High Commission is currently issuing close to 7,000 visas per month.

The ceasefire has held for more than a year. The bilateral process has been given impetus through sustained high level contacts: I met President Musharraf in New York in September 2004; Pakistani Prime Minister Mr. Shaukat Aziz visited New Delhi on November 23-24, 2004; the Indian Minister for Foreign Affairs visited Pakistan in February 2005 where agreements were reached to start bus services between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad, and between Lahore and Amritsar, including to religious places such as Nankana Sahib. Pakistan also agreed to consider the reopening of a rail line. We have moved ahead in the areas of nuclear CBMs and on issues of drug Trafficking and terrorism.

Progress has been achieved on the humanitarian issue of fishermen and civilian detainees. Pakistan has recently released over 500 fishermen and 30 civilian prisoners. Thus, meaningful progress has been achieved and the Government intends to continue with the present process in an atmosphere free from terrorism and violence.

On the Kashmir issue, even as we explore a mutually acceptable solution, the process, as well as relations between our two countries will certainly gain if, in the interim, we were able to ease the rigours of the LOC as a divide. The new Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service is a beginning in this direction. It has been widely welcomed all over, especially in Jammu and Kashmir. There is improved morale and political atmosphere on both sides in Jammu and Kashmir. It needs to be understood that while dealing with complex issues, such as that of Jammu and Kashmir, we need to be practical and realistic in our approach.

008. Interview of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh by Karan Thapar for BBC programme 'Hard Talk-India'.

New Delhi, April 8, 2005.

Shri Karan Thapar : Hello and welcome to a new series of Hard Talk India interviews.

If the United Progressive Alliance Government in India has made strides, then undoubtedly it is in the field of foreign policy. In the last one year, three extensive relationships have been completely transformed – with the United States of America, with China and with Pakistan. Although India still faces serious problems with its neighbours closer at home, there are of course real signs that Indian foreign policy has come to terms with the realities of the 21st century. Here, to talk about the challenges he faces, is India's Foreign Minister K. Natwar Singh.

Foreign Minister, let us start a little differently. You often speak of yourself as a great believer in nonalignment. Today, more than ten years after the cold war ended, just how relevant is nonalignment.

External Affairs Minister (Shri Natwar Singh) : Well, I ask you a counter question. How is NATO relevant? The Warsaw Pact is wound up; the Soviet Union has disappeared; communism has gone from East Europe; the cold war is over; and NATO is expanding. Why is that?

Shri Karan Thapar : NATO fulfills a need the Europeans feel for. What need does non-alignment fulfill for you?

External Affairs Minister : It is not about what it gives... It is not a dogma; it is not a doctrine; it is independent thinking. It creates an atmosphere for reconciliation, for détente, for peaceful coexistence and to judge each issue on its merits. So, Non Aligned Movement needs diplomatic blood transfusion; non-alignment does not.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, Nonalignment is a platform for independent thinking and for each country to project its national interest open-mindedly.

External Affairs Minister :: That is right.

Shri Karan Thapar : All right. In Opposition, you were often publicly skeptical of America. In fact you once wrote that India as a nonaligned country could not be the natural ally of a major NATO power. Today, after almost one year in office, how has your attitude to America changed?

External Affairs Minister : Let me take off from what Rumsfeld said the other day, that was the old network. This is a new network. Now I am not in Opposition. I am the Foreign Minister of India and it is my principal duty to ensure that India's vital national interests are never compromised. For that, it is essential for us to have the closest relations with the United States, with China, with Russia, with Japan, with France, with UK and so many other countries.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, what you are saying is, 'Do not judge me by the rhetoric of an Opposition politician; judge me by what I do today in office as Foreign Minister.

External Affairs Minister :: Yes, of course. But, I have a fair amount of experience in this business. So, I know what the responsibilities are when you are the Foreign Minister of India.

Shri Karan Thapar : Absolutely. Let me push you a little. There is a view in India which once upon a time you used to share that between India and Pakistan, America always ends up leaning on the side of Pakistan. Is that the case today? Or, has that changed?

External Affairs Minister : Our Composite Dialogue with Pakistan is progressing very satisfactorily. I must say that the atmosphere between the two countries, I have been Ambassador to Pakistan 25 years ago, I have never seen a better atmosphere on both sides of Indo-Pak border.

Shri Karan Thapar : What about the Indian view that you shared once upon a time that America always leans on the side of Pakistan? Is that perception now outdated?

External Affairs Minister : I am not going to comment on what America does with Pakistan. I am concerned on how do we deal with our relationship with Pakistan, how do we take this Composite Dialogue forward.

Shri Karan Thapar : I will come to the Composite Dialogue in a fairly big way later on. Let me first put this to you. Do you today believe that America is putting as much effort into curbing and restraining cross-border activity against India from Pakistan as earlier America put into changing Pakistan's foreign policy towards the Taliban in Afghanistan?

External Affairs Minister : Well, I think they are trying. But we have always said that this Indo-Pak thing has to be bilateral. If our friends want to be helpful in any way, they are welcome to do so. Our stand has been that the commitment made by President Musharraf on the 6th of January 2004 that he will not allow the territory of Pakistan to be used for terrorism; he has to fully deliver on it.

Shri Karan Thapar : And in that process, what you are looking for from America is even-handedness.

External Affairs Minister : No, we are saying that you take the question in the objective reality. Here is a democracy of one billion people, which is a functioning democracy, which is trying to have good relations with Pakistan, with the United States, with China and all our neighbours. In this process, now for example, take the F-16s. This happened with the three billion that Pakistan has given in 2003 when the NDA was in office. I do not want to go into a blame game. If that had not happened, F-16s would not have happened. We have told the Americans that we are very disappointed in their giving this. But our relationship has reached a level of maturity where we can live with our differences without our fundamental, friendly, good relations being affected adversely.

Shri Karan Thapar : Let me pick up from that. You mentioned the F-16s. When the news first broke that Americans would try to sell F-16s to Pakistan, the Indian Prime Minister himself expressed his great disappointment. Since then, it has become clear that much the same, if not more, is on offer to India: not just F-16s but also F-18s. And there is also talk of nuclear cooperation and strategic cooperation. So, now, in your considered view, is this a setback or is it in fact taking the relationship to a different dimension altogether?

External Affairs Minister : Yes, it is. Our relations with the United States is going on a different dimension. The relations have never been better. Right across, we are having exchanges with them in every area including peaceful research in nuclear energy.

Shri Karan Thapar : And this is why you can take in your stride the giving of F-16s to Pakistan. You may be disappointed, but you can take it in your stride.

External Affairs Minister : That is what I said. We have reached a level of maturity where we can take them. I have personally conveyed my disappointment to Condoleezza Rice on the telephone when I spoke to her. She spoke to me when I was in Myanmar. So, did the Prime Minister. I am going to Washington early next week to have talks with the Secretary of State and other officials of the Bush Administration. All these aspects will be discussed. No aspect will be left out.

Shri Karan Thapar : Now, one of the things that was said and reported widely in Indian newspapers quoting senior State Department officials is that America has also made an offer to help make India a world player, a world power, in the 21st century, including in the military sense. How do you respond to it?

External Affairs Minister : I would have to phrase it in a different way. We are not in the game of becoming a world power. Our job is to eradicate poverty.

Shri Karan Thapar : But what I am talking about is, how do you respond to the American offer to give that help? Is that a sign that the relationship has now moved considerably further than was imagined, envisaged a year ago?

External Affairs Minister : The military aspect is only one aspect of two dozen areas in which we are cooperating and cooperating very well. But our Defence Ministry and our Defence establishment will take a very good look at it as the Defence Minister said the other day and then we will respond to the particular matter of F-16s and F-18s. But there is a possibility that we can have joint production on some areas.

Shri Karan Thapar : You are sticking to the F-16s, but I am talking about the sentiment from Washington that they want to help India become a world power. How do you respond to that sentiment?

External Affairs Minister : No, I have again said so. This particular ... is not well-phrased in my judgement because we are not in the game of becoming a world power. We have first of all to get rid of poverty, illiteracy, disease and hunger.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, you are saying America is misleading India when it extends its hand in this manner.

External Affairs Minister : I am not going to pass a value judgement. They have used their language, they are welcome to do so. We welcome the improvement in our relations and raising our relations to a much higher level and this is starting from ...

Shri Karan Thapar : I am surprised that you are not more happy at this sentiment because Indian newspapers have seen it as a sign that the relationship between Delhi and Washington has now changed dramatically. You have your reservations about the phrasing.

External Affairs Minister : I do not have any reservation at all. I am just saying that this particular phrase that the United States will help India become a world power. We should help ourselves with the aid of our friends, with the good will of our friends.

Shri Karan Thapar : We can do it ourselves, we do not need help to get that.

External Affairs Minister : No, I do not say that. We need help. All countries need help. There is the whole question of globalisation, interdependence.

Shri Karan Thapar : Where does Washington stand on India's bid to join the United Nations Security Council as a permanent member? It is known that they have endorsed the Japanese and the Germans. What have they said to you?

External Affairs Minister : I do not think they have endorsed the Germans, as far as I know. We have had discussions with them. They have not fully made up their mind. I intend taking this up when I go to Washington next week. We have had very wide support from the ...

Shri Karan Thapar : When you say they have not fully made up their mind, does that mean they have not closed their mind either?

External Affairs Minister : I hope so that they have not closed their mind. I will certainly ask this particular question as to where do you stand on the reform in the United Nations and India's place as a permanent member within it.

Shri Karan Thapar : And you remain hopeful that you could have their support.

External Affairs Minister : Well, let me say one thing that diplomacy offers hope, not salvation.

Shri Karan Thapar : Earlier, the Indian Government has said that the Security Council permanent membership without the veto would be meaningless. Three months later, are you more amenable to that idea?

External Affairs Minister : No. I think the position has been made quite clear by the Prime Minister that India will not accept any discrimination between the original P-5 veto power and the future P-5 permanent members.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, reports in the papers that you have changed your position about the veto are inaccurate and incorrect.

External Affairs Minister : Yes. It is clearly stated by the Prime Minister that no discrimination between the original P-5 and the new P-5 or P-6.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, India is looking for permanent membership of the Security Council with veto powers.

External Affairs Minister : That is right.

Shri Karan Thapar : And nothing less would be acceptable.

External Affairs Minister : We are looking for permanent membership with veto power.

Shri Karan Thapar : All right. Now, on Thursday, a couple of days before this interview is broadcast, the first bus is going to roll on from Srinagar to Muzaffarabad and vice versa. There is a lot of hope and excitement about it. Do you see this as an achievement of significance or simply as a sign that the atmosphere between the two countries is changing?

External Affairs Minister : I think it is a very significant development. This bus is now going to Muzaffarabad after 57 years. Families have been divided for 57 years.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, this is substantial.

External Affairs Minister : This is very substantial. I want to say that our friends of Pakistan, without their cooperation this would not have happened. Similarly, the rail link. We are going to open the rail link on the 2nd of October between the Sindh and Rajasthan, closed in 1965. We are going to have a bus to ...

Shri Karan Thapar : But that the people are coming together, families that are divided are getting a chance to meet again, yet itself that the real test of the peace process between India and Pakistan would be how you tackle the tricky question of Kashmir. In September, in New York the two heads of Government agreed to explore options for a solution. When will that actual exploration start?

External Affairs Minister : This is a continuous process. I have openly told our friends in Pakistan there is no quick fix. These are complex problems going back decades. It will take some time. It is not ...

Shri Karan Thapar : Quite right. The end is a long way away. But has the beginning happened? Have you begun talking about options for solutions?

External Affairs Minister : Yes, the Prime Minister said all options are open except redrawing the map of India or a second partition.

Shri Karan Thapar : Quite right. That is a statement India made. But have talks between both sides, formal talks, about these options started?

External Affairs Minister : Yes, we are talking about all issues including Jammu and Kashmir. This is a step. This bus service, when the two people come and meet with each other and see what is happening and get to know each other, this is a very substantial step forward.

Shri Karan Thapar : Let me put it like this. Does India have its own options for solution that it wants to put on the table at this point?

External Affairs Minister : We are open to all suggestions, as Prime Minister said. Let them put, we will discuss with them.

Shri Karan Thapar : But it sounds as if you are saying that when they put the suggestions, we will discuss it; you do not have any of your own that you want to put on the table.

External Affairs Minister : We are quite clear. We are open to all options that they offer except redrawing the map of India and having a second partition.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, when General Musharraf comes to India, as he is expected, for cricket on the 16th and 17th of this month, and if takes up this subject of Kashmir, will you simply listen to what he has to say or do you have things of your own that you want to say to him?

External Affairs Minister : It will depend on what he has to offer. If you say 'a, b, c, d', we will say, 'All right, Sir, let us have a look at it'. We will sit down.

Shri Karan Thapar : But, do you have 'e, f, g, h' of your own?

External Affairs Minister : We do not have to have it. It is they who are raising this question for the last fifty years.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, the ball is in their court.

External Affairs Minister : Exactly.

Shri Karan Thapar : The ball is in their court.

External Affairs Minister : Absolutely.

Shri Karan Thapar : The Pakistanis, however, tend to feel that India wants to push the relationship in terms of confidence-building measures in areas like cricket, trade and cultural contacts but when it comes to Kashmir, India drags its feet.

External Affairs Minister : At one stage, they did not want to talk about anything except Kashmir. Now, they are no longer unifocal. They say, we will discuss with you other matters. I tell them that, "Listen, our trade with China is 13.6 billion dollars in 2004 while with Pakistan, it is 400 million dollars."

Shri Karan Thapar : But you are diverting the question. The Pakistanis say that the Indians want to talk about anything but Kashmir. When you say to me that "the ball is in their court, we will listen to whatever they have to say but we do not have any options of our own to put on the table", in a sense to the audience that might sound as if the Pakistanis have a point.

External Affairs Minister : No, they do not. I will tell you, they say, for example, 'the wishes of the Kashmiri people'. What do you mean by that? We have got elections in Kashmir. There is an elected Government. They are electing Members of Parliament and they are electing Members of the Assembly. Now, a similar exercise is not taking place on that side. So, 'wishes of the Kashmiri people' means what?

Shri Karan Thapar : Do you get the feeling that the problem is that you are both willing to talk but you are both talking at each other rather than to. You have different agendas, different motives, different ends that you want to get to and you are not meeting in the middle.

External Affairs Minister : We are meeting all the time. The objective is to ...

Shri Karan Thapar : Physically, but not in conversation.

External Affairs Minister : No, in conversation. The objective is to take Indo-Pak relations to a level where the future of the Indo-Pak relations is not in the past. Look at the 21st century and get on with it.

Shri Karan Thapar : And, are you getting to that level?

External Affairs Minister : Yes, we are hoping. We are trying very hard.

Shri Karan Thapar : Is steady progress happening.

External Affairs Minister : Yes, it is.

Shri Karan Thapar : Let me put something to you. You said a moment ago that the Indian Prime Minister has said that he does not want redrawing of boundaries. In fact, his full phrase was he wants to make boundaries and borders irrelevant. What does that mean?

External Affairs Minister : It means that you produce good will, you produce friendship, you produce amity.

Shri Karan Thapar : Does that also mean soft borders? Does it also mean without damaging sovereignty on either side giving a real say to the other in the affairs of your own?

External Affairs Minister : Given the history of this particular issue, one has to tread very cautiously, with great patience, with great restraint, with great wisdom and with great hope.

Shri Karan Thapar : And that is what you plan to do?

External Affairs Minister : Yes.

Shri Karan Thapar : But you are going to be imaginative and creative to the extent possible.

External Affairs Minister : Yes, we are. That is why the Composite Dialogue is going ahead the way it is.

Shri Karan Thapar : Now, another landmark visit is taking place. In fact, on Saturday is the arrival of the Chinese Prime Minister. He has already said that this is the most important item in his calendar for 2005. Where does it stand in yours?

External Affairs Minister : Exactly the same.

Shri Karan Thapar : This is the single most important thing?

External Affairs Minister : It depends on (a) whether the Prime Minister goes to the United States or not; (b) whether Mr. Bush comes here or not. So, it will be one of the very major items for us. For him to have said that for him it is, I think, is a very very significant statement and we welcome it.

Shri Karan Thapar : You welcome it.

External Affairs Minister : Absolutely.

Shri Karan Thapar : The Indian newspapers are speculating that the two countries are poised to sign an agreement on principles to help you sort out your five-decade-old border dispute External Affairs Minister : Ye, we have had four meetings of the Special Representatives. The fifth will take place on the 10th or 11th when our NSA's counterpart ...

Shri Karan Thapar : Are you at a point where you can agree on principles on how to sort out the dispute?

External Affairs Minister : Yes, we are going to discuss this particular matter and if an agreement is reached, it would be reached during this visit. That is our objective.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, if an agreement is reached, it could be reached during the Chinese Prime Minister's visit.

External Affairs Minister : It could be. But, what are the parameters, what are the criteria for the demarcation of this and if you reach this stage, it is a very very good development.

Shri Karan Thapar : The papers say that the two principles on which both sides are narrowing is – firstly, concern for each other's security and secondly, non-disturbance of the existing populations. Can you confirm that those are the principles you have identified?

External Affairs Minister : Our relations have now reached a strategic high ground, as the Chinese Prime Minister said the other day, and we are going to look at this as to how to resolve this. Fortunately, since 1988, since Rajiv Gandhi went there, the border has been tranquil, peaceful, no friction. In that spirit both the countries, large countries, both countries doing well, we should be able to address ourselves to this and resolve this amicably.

Shri Karan Thapar : And if you do end the visit with an agreement on principles to sort out the border, that will be a landmark achievement.

External Affairs Minister : No, it is one of them. There are many other issues that are going to come.

Shri Karan Thapar : But this is an important issue.

External Affairs Minister : It is a really important subject.

Shri Karan Thapar : All right. China also happens to be one of the Big Five in the United Nations. Do you have their support for India's membership of the Security Council?

External Affairs Minister : In the interview that the Chinese Prime Minister gave to the PTI, they said that the United Nations needs reform, the Security Council needs reform, developing countries need to be ...

Shri Karan Thapar : Quite right. They said two important things one, that the United Nations need reform and two, that there should a greater role for India in the international sphere. But that does not ...

External Affairs Minister : In the Security Council.

Shri Karan Thapar : I do not think he used the word Security Council.

External Affairs Minister : No, I think I have it written here.

Shri Karan Thapar : No, he did not. That is how you are interpreting it.

External Affairs Minister : No, I do not want to interpret. We have been in touch with them. He said, "India is a major developing country that plays a positive role in regional and international affairs. I fully understand India's position and I am ready to see a greater role of India in the international affairs and the United Nations.

Shri Karan Thapar : But a greater role in the United Nations does not mean a 'yes' to Security Council membership.

External Affairs Minister : What is the reform about?

Shri Karan Thapar : That is your interpretation.

External Affairs Minister : The whole world knows about it. The reform means that of the Security Council to make it more democratic, make it more representative. 1945 is no longer relevant in 2005.

Shri Karan Thapar : Okay. Foreign Minister, you have every right to interpret the Chinese Foreign Minister as you want. I am simply quoting that it is not a clear-cut case as you are saying.

Let us move to the situation with India's neighbouring countries. You have taken a very strong line against King Gyanendra's assumption of direct power in Kathmandu. The Americans, the British and the European Union have supported you. But, have you got the response from Kathmandu you were hoping for?

External Affairs Minister : No, we have not got. But, it is encouraging to see that Mr. Koirala has been released; Mr. Deuba has been released; and I hope Mr. Nepal, the former Foreign Minister, will also be released. Our relations with Nepal are unique. They are extremely close. We do not need visas to go there and they do not need visas to come here.

Shri Karan Thapar : But you said a very important thing a moment ago that you have not got the response you were hoping for.

External Affairs Minister : We have not. But we would like him to unwind.

The emergency should be ended and the political parties ...

Shri Karan Thapar : Far from unwinding, the impression he gives is that he is not really listening to you, he is refusing to meet your Ambassador since the gentleman returned, and he is making trouble, to use a colloquialism, for Indian companies in that country.

External Affairs Minister : Again, it is a very distressing situation. We are a very large country. We have to be excessively sensitive to the feelings of the Nepalese and the Nepal's establishment. What Nepal needs today is both a Constitutional Monarchy and democracy so that we can deal with Maoists.

Shri Karan Thapar : In the way you handled this situation, let me put it to you, a point your critics often make, have you overplayed your hand? Have you boxed both yourself and the King into a corner and made each other defensive rather than responsive?

External Affairs Minister : On the contrary, this is not the first time this situation has arisen in the last fifty years. We have lived with it again and again. When it happened in 1988 I had to go and meet his brother.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, it is a game of bluff that you are playing, and you are waiting to see who blinks first.

External Affairs Minister : No, it is not a game of bluff. It is a game of diplomatic patience and to use maximum restraint. We have all the leverage. We are not going to use any leverage. We are hoping His Majesty will be able to see what the reality is.

Shri Karan Thapar : And if he does not, then what?

External Affairs Minister : We will wait and watch.

Shri Karan Thapar : How long will you wait and watch?

External Affairs Minister : We have a great capacity for waiting.

Shri Karan Thapar : Do you mean, infinite patience?

External Affairs Minister : Yes, we have, as far as Nepal is concerned.

Shri Karan Thapar : But if you are going to be infinitely patient, then why did you bother to act adversely in the first place? Why were not you more understanding of his problems?

External Affairs Minister : How do you know we were not? We have conveyed everything to His Majesty. The fact that he has not met our Ambassador, it is unfortunate. But that does not mean that we are going to turn our face. We are deeply interested in the welfare of the Nepalese people. We are deeply interested in containing the Maoist insurgency and for that His Majesty needs the functioning of Parliament, having elections, and unwinding emergency.

Shri Karan Thapar : Let me sum up this interview where we have covered a gamut of subjects, by putting this to you.

Just under a year ago when you first became Foreign Minister, you were accused of being out of touch with reality, of speaking out of turn, of putting your foot in your mouth. Are you more comfortable in the job today?

External Affairs Minister : I do not agree with what those people said. People who know me would never have said so. I have a fair amount of experience in this.

Shri Karan Thapar : But do you think you are the one left smiling rather than your critics?

External Affairs Minister : Believe me, if I were to bother about my critics, then I could not function. My principal objective is to safeguard the vital national interests of India every time and every day.

Shri Karan Thapar : There, Foreign Minister, we have to end it. Thank you very much for speaking to Hard Talk India.

009. Interview of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh to the weekly Outlook.

New Delhi, April 19, 2005¹.

The external affairs minister K. Natwar Singh lays out India's line on Kashmir, hours before Pakistan President Pervez Musharraf was to arrive in India to watch an ODI cricket match between India and Pakistan. Excerpts from a hard-hitting interview to V. Sudarshan:

India has made additional suggestions to back up the Srinagar – Muzaffarabad² bus link, like designated meeting points for separated families along the border. Why is Pakistan not excited about them?

We look at the Line of Control not just as a divide but as a bridge. We need to work towards a situation where borders, even in our part of the world, begin to matter less and less. In addition to the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad bus, we have made additional proposals for cooperation in the context of Jammu and Kashmir (J&K). We have offered a mechanism for allowing interaction at some select points between people on both sides of LoC, such as Poonch, Mendhar, Suchetgarh, Uri and Tangdhar in the Kishenganga valley. This would be another step towards easing the rigours of the divided families on both sides of the LoC. We would also like to begin pilgrimages across the LoC to Hindu, Muslim and Sikh shrines. We have also proposed trade and cultural interaction across the LoC, promotion of tourism in the area, and cooperation in management of environment and forestry resources.

1. The interview appeared in the issue of Outlook dated April 25, 2005.
 2. The Srinagar – Muzaffarabad bus service was formally inaugurated by Prime Minister Manmohan Singh on April 7 from Srinagar in the presence of Chairperson of the United Progressive Alliance Mrs. Sonia Gandhi, Chief Minister of J & K Mufti Mohammed Sayeed and other dignitaries. The prime minister referred to the inaugural bus service in his speech at the Chief Ministers' Conference on April 15 and said: "Notwithstanding the recent dastardly attempt to disrupt the bus service between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad by terrorist elements, the people of Jammu and Kashmir came out on the streets as one to welcome this gesture of reconciliation. I hope the terrorists and extremists in the region have grasped the mood of the people and will not try to disrupt this bus service again."
It may be recalled that the Prime Minister while speaking at a defence Investiture ceremony on April 12 had said that he was prepared to discuss fresh confidence building measures (CBMs) with the Pakistan President Gen. Musharraf during his forthcoming visit to New

To what extent was Gen Pervez Musharraf personally involved in clearing the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad bus service?

He conveyed his approval to the proposed travel arrangements to me personally when I met him in Islamabad on February 16, 2005.

Yet, Musharraf keeps running down the importance of CBMs. He recently told a TV channel—and those remarks are on his personal website—that “CBMs are going ahead but we have to check the CBMs.” Can he choke off the oxygen to the CBM process?

CBMs are integral to any meaningful resolution of bilateral issues, including J&K. We need to be practical and realistic in our approach and not let our formal positions thwart cooperation opportunities. We believe that an incremental, step-by-step approach would be useful in taking the process forward, and relations between our two countries will certainly gain if we continue to implement proposals that help in building trust and confidence and in enhancing cooperation.

Musharraf's grouse is that the composite dialogue process isn't moving forward on the Kashmir issue. Is he trying to hustle us?

Delhi. “Though it is not a state visit but an informal one, we are prepared to discuss any thing our honoured guest wants to raise including Kashmir, further CBMs and common security. We expect a purposeful dialogue,” said the Prime Minister. On Gen. Musharraf's observation made on April 2 at Quetta that he would raise the Kashmir issue during his visit to New Delhi, Dr. Singh said, “we are open to discuss all issues including Kashmir as this is part of composite dialogue process.” Earlier on April 2 speaking to reporters on return from Mauritius the Prime Minister had said that India favoured a “free flow” of ideas and people with Pakistan. Asked about Pakistan's refusal to permit Kashmiri political leaders to travel by the inaugural Srinagar – Muzaffarabad bus service on April 7, the Prime Minister said “our approach is that there should be a freer flow of people and ideas to resolve all issues between the two countries. Our efforts will be to persuade Pakistan to encourage people-to-people contacts in the widest possible sense of the term.” To a question on what would be discussed with the Pakistani President when he visited New Delhi to watch the cricket match between the teams of the two countries on April 17, the Prime Minister said: “I have said on more than one occasion that we are willing to discuss all issues which have vital bearing on our relations with Pakistan.” Even when the Prime Minister was in Mauritius, the media men had been raising questions on the agenda for talks between the two leaders during the summit. When a journalist had asked Manmohan Singh whether he would discuss Kashmir with Musharraf during the latter's New Delhi visit, he had said, “When politicians meet they cannot confine their discussions to the state of the weather.” He had added that the meeting would help the two leaders to understand each other's point of view better and would carry forward the dialogue they had started on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly when they met in New York last year. Again at a press conference on April 1 at Port Louis the Prime Minister reiterated “whatever Pakistan wants to discuss, we will.”

We have moved forward in a remarkable manner since April 2003. Relations have been restored at the level of high commissioners; transport and communication links have resumed; people-to-people exchanges are taking place across the spectrum in large numbers; there has been a resumption of visits by pilgrim groups; our high commission in Islamabad is currently issuing over 10,000 visas per month; the ceasefire has held for over a year.

We have successfully completed one round of the composite dialogue and commenced the second round. I have often said that we expect neither a spectacular breakthrough nor a dramatic breakdown in the dialogue process.

We are ready to remain engaged for as long as it takes. It would not be prudent to impose a time-frame or deadline for a resolution of the J&K issue, an issue that has defied solution for so long, and which, by all accounts, is complicated.

How wary are we of Agra-type fiascos when we think of ‘summit’ meetings between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and President Musharraf?

We seek peace and friendship with Pakistan. We must not be deterred by roadblocks along the way. There must be no going back on the present process. High-level meetings are an important element in providing impetus to the process, but must be well prepared. This government will not repeat the mistakes of the N.D.A. government, which were evident at Agra.

After all this talk of “options available”, as Musharraf puts it, on Kashmir, has he either informally or formally let India know what these are, especially considering that our stance is that whatever options there could be should be consistent with the situation on the ground, that there can be no redrawing of maps?

The Pakistan government has not given us any formal or informal options on J&K. The prime minister has reiterated on several occasions that we are ready to look at all options, short of redrawing the boundaries and another partition of the country. In fact, it was Pakistan which did not pursue discussion of this issue from 1972 till 1989. Pakistani leaders themselves, from time to time, argued for easier issues to be resolved first, and the more intractable ones later. Others have suggested that, through a process of confidence-building, the two countries should first establish trust, which would enable them to address complex issues more productively. That is the reason why we believe that CBMs are imperative and need to be taken forward with greater vigour.

In Kashmir, political processes have been revived through free and fair elections at which the turnout of voters was above the national average despite threats of terrorist violence. We are engaged in a dialogue with the elected representatives of the state. The prime minister has also made it clear that we are even ready to talk to those not elected but have given up the path of violence. There is progress in this dialogue, despite some elements' unwillingness to come to the table.

With Pakistan, the discussion on the J&K issue must be focused first and foremost on the need to end cross-border terrorism and dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism across the LoC. There is the issue related to Pakistan's illegal occupation of a portion of J&K, which comprises Gilgit, Baltistan and other Pakistan-occupied areas. There is also the issue of a part of the state which has been illegally ceded by Pakistan to China in 1963. In any dialogue on Jammu and Kashmir with Pakistan, these issues are also on the agenda.

The US not only seems to be arming our proliferating neighbour with F-16s but helping pay for them as well. What impact could this have on the bilateral peace process? Is this a useful contribution the US is making towards peace in the subcontinent?

The US decided on a five-year security and economic assistance programme to Pakistan in June 2003 with $1.5 billion earmarked for military supplies. This was when the previous government was in power. The supply of F-16 aircraft flows from this decision to resume military aid. We have no objection if the US helps Pakistan in economic and social sectors. In fact, we welcome those initiatives that strengthen Pakistani civic society and move it away from fundamentalist trends.

However, military assistance, particularly when unrelated to counterterrorism efforts, conveys a political signal both within Pakistan and vis-à-vis India-Pakistan relations. It strengthens those who are rooted in the past and are out of step with the expectations of people in both countries for better ties. It consequently has repercussions for our dialogue that is currently at a sensitive stage. We have conveyed our concern to the US, most recently when Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice visited India and before that, when Defence Secretary Donald Rumsfeld was here. The prime minister himself voiced our disappointment to President Bush when they spoke on March 25, 2005.

Why do we need to say that the dialogue with Pakistan will continue even if there is terrorism in the Valley? Why should India take Pakistan off the hook so easily on such a sensitive issue?

There is no question of taking Pakistan off the hook on the issue of cross-border infiltration and terrorism in the Valley. Unlike the flip-flop in the policies of the earlier government, when they held sudden summit-level meetings without adequate preparations, we have consistently reiterated our serious concerns on terrorism at every forum of interaction. During my meetings with Pakistani leaders and during the PM's meetings with President Musharraf and prime minister Shaukat Aziz, we have conveyed to Pakistan clearly and unequivocally the need for full implementation of President Musharraf's categorical commitment made in the joint press statement of January 6, 2004, that he will not permit any territory under Pakistan's control to be used to support terrorism in any manner. In fact, the entire dialogue process hinges on Pakistan honouring its commitment in letter and spirit.

Pakistan has requested for the appointment of a neutral expert by World Bank on the Baglihar project. What is the status? Has Pakistan asked for stoppage of work on the project?

Pakistan has approached the World Bank for the appointment of a neutral expert to resolve the Baglihar issue. We remain committed, in principle, to an amicable settlement to the issue bilaterally, in a result-oriented and time-bound manner. We are convinced that the design of the project does not violate the provisions of the Indus Water Treaty. Pakistan's fears that Baglihar will give India the capability to either flood their country or to withhold water are completely misplaced. Our own Salal project is located downstream from Baglihar and would be the first to be affected if India took any such action.

We continue to believe that continued discussions would help resolve the issue. Any involvement of the World Bank is premature. Pakistan has asked India to stop work on the Baglihar hydel project. We cannot agree because the project is important for the economic well-being of the people of J&K. In any event, the Indus Water Treaty does not envisage suspension of work while the two sides discuss their differences.

010. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the draw for the selection of the yatris for Kailash Mansarovar Yatra.

New Delhi, May 6, 2005.

I am happy to be present here for the computerized draw for the selection of the yatris (pilgrims) for the Kailash Mansarovar Yatra (pilgrimage), which begins this year on May 29. We in the Ministry of External Affairs attach great importance to the Yatra in view of the deep religious sentiments of the people of India associated with Kailash and Mansarovar. The Kailash Mansarovar Yatra, which resumed in 1981 along the traditional route across the Lipulekh Pass in Uttaranchal, is conducted under a bilateral arrangement with China by the Ministry of External Affairs. In our efforts, we receive invaluable assistance from various State and Central Government agencies.

A number of facilities are provided by the Government to the Yatris, including a cash subsidy of Rupees Three thousand two hundred and fifty for each yatri, free medical assistance, security and escort cover by the Indo-Tibetan Border Police till the Lipulekh Pass on the Indian side, communication links with China, and provision of satellite phone to each batch of yatris for use during emergency throughout the Yatra. A Liaison Officer is attached by the Government with each batch of yatris, who is responsible for their general welfare. It is Government's endeavour to improve and upgrade facilities for the Kailash Mansarovar Yatra on a continuing basis and increase the number of yatris every year. We are happy that with sustained efforts, the number of yatris has progressively increased over the years. We have raised with the Chinese Government issues regarding the improvement of facilities on their side for the Yatra. There has been gradual improvement over the years. We have also proposed to the Chinese side opening an alternative route to Kailash Mansarovar to make the Yatra more convenient. During the visit of the Chinese Premier to India last month, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh himself raised the matter of opening an alternative route for the Yatra through Ladakh, which would be shorter and more convenient. Since the conditions for the Yatra are arduous and there are always more people desirous of undertaking the Yatra than the slots available, our endeavor is to maximize the utilization of available resources and conduct the Yatra in a transparent manner.

I hope that the Kailash Mansarovar Yatra this year, as in the past will be conducted smoothly. I wish to thank all those agencies, which help the Ministry of External Affairs in making that possible, and Shri E. Ahamed. Lastly, I wish all the pilgrims a very happy and pleasant Yatra!

011. Interview of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh with the Chennai based daily The Hindu.

New Delhi, May 7, 2005.

(Carried by The Hindu in its issue of May 8, 2005. The interview was conducted by Siddharth Varadarajan and Amit Baruah).

King Gyanendra came out of his meeting with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in Jakarta last month saying arms supplies to Nepal would continue. India has not contradicted him. Are we going to resume sending weapons?

Shri Natwar Singh: The supply of arms to Nepal is under constant review. In Jakarta, the Prime Minister spelt out our concerns about the post-February 1, 2005 events, that they were a setback to the democratic process which, he felt, should be resumed before anything could be done. And we had hoped the King would take some action. But then Mr. Sher Bahadur Deuba was arrested. The emergency has been lifted but it is still partial in many ways. Given the nature of our very close relations with Nepal, we have to be extremely cautious and very patient. It's our hope and endeavour to see that normalcy returns.

The question remains under review.

But has a first shipment of arms now been sent to Nepal, the tranche that was held back in February?

The details I don't know. That only the Defence Minister will know.

On the issue of relations with the United States, your party opposed sending Indian troops to Iraq. On other issues too, you were critical. Now that you are in government, in what way are the UPA's policies towards the U.S. different from those of the NDA?

Relations with the U.S. have improved considerably in the past 12 months ?they have never been better. With regard to Iraq, our policy is governed by the unanimous resolution of Parliament in 2003. We have donated $10 million to the international trust fund for Iraq, and offered to assist them in civil service training, the framing of a constitution.

In the Opposition, the Congress had criticised the BJP for committing Indian support to the American missile defence programme. You asked whether the cost-benefit to India had been taken into account. However, the UPA is continuing with the NDA's policy on this. What is the benefit to India that you see now?

I don't think we have taken any decision on it.

But missile defence remains a component of the NSSP process.

Under the NSSP, currently we are only in the phase of being given briefings on the missile defence programme. No decision has been taken that we are going in for, say, the purchase of an anti-missile defence system. The interest part is, of course, quite obvious, because it is a technology which can have important uses for us, it is certainly in our interest to keep abreast of all these technologies. The U.S. is currently giving you briefings on this, including confidential briefings on the system. It is to our advantage.

Many countries say missile defence will fuel a new arms race, that it only encourages the other side to produce more missiles.

We've not taken a position on this.

When President Musharraf was here, he said converting the Line of Control into the border is unacceptable to Pakistan, redrawing the LoC is unacceptable to India and that both countries favour soft borders. Do you think this provides a framework within which the issue of Kashmir can be discussed?

The composite dialogue is going extremely well. For example, in his Jakarta speech, General Musharraf said relations were improving so well they could be an example to the rest of the world. I must say that without his personal involvement, it would not have been possible to have the bus service started. During his visit here, the two leaders got on very well. They also know there are certain things which can't be done overnight. We have also said we are hoping the commitment made on January 6, 2004, will be honoured by the Pakistani side... There is some terrorist activity going on, but the overall Indo-Pak. scene looks more promising than it has done for many decades.

Why is that? Have we changed, or have the Pakistanis changed?

I think the global scenario has changed. And I also think the change in the atmosphere in both countries at the peoples' level also helped a great deal. We know the difficulties, they know the difficulties. But if contacts increase ?President Musharraf himself said, "Why only a bus across the LoC, why not trucks with goods?" We have also asked them why our goods can't go through Pakistan instead of through Dubai, which is a loss to both countries.

Some people in the U.S. and India say China is a 'strategic threat' to both countries and that Washington and Delhi need to coordinate their policies. How do you see this evolving triangular relationship in the next 20 years?

I think our relationship with the U.S. in no way affects our relationship with the Chinese. We have very good relations with the U.S., very good relations with China. These relations are getting better, if you just take the trade figures. We don't subscribe to this theory that any country is using India as a counterbalance for another country... India would not like to be used by any power. We have to look after our own national interests.

The 'guiding principles' on the border settlement with China give rise to the possibility of territorial adjustments in the future. Do you think a change in the map of India is something that would be acceptable to public opinion?

We are looking at a boundary settlement from the overall perspective of bilateral relations. The first stage of the work of the Special Representatives was completed with the signing of the agreement on the guiding principles. In the second stage, the SRs have been asked to hold discussions to reach a consensus on the agreed framework of the boundary settlement. It would be premature now to talk of the outcome of the discussion of the SRs. Whatever the outcome, it will be within the limits defined by the political parameters, the guiding principles laid down by both sides.

How does the Government look at the prospects of resuming the peace process in Sri Lanka?

We are looking at a solution that takes into account the concerns of all the people of Sri Lanka. Our view with regard to Eelam is well known; it has not changed. We are for the sovereignty, territorial integrity of Sri Lanka.

We are concerned about the LTTE having built an airstrip and having two aeroplanes and there's news about more coming.

Will India resist U.S. pressure on the Iran-Pakistan-India gas tie-up and go ahead with the pipeline?

I said so at my press conference with Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice when she made the views of the U.S. known. I said we have very good relations with Iran, we have no problems with Iran. The pipeline is mentioned in the statement issued in September [2004] in New York by the Prime Minister and President Musharraf. Our Petroleum Minister is going to Pakistan very soon. The earlier impression was that India was the stumbling block. We are not. Our energy needs are going to increase exponentially in the next 20 years and there's no other way but to have this kind of an arrangement.

On the reform of the U.N. Security Council, is India proposing an "Option C" as opposed to "Option A" and "Option B" [both without the veto] proposed by the High-Level Panel or is India willing to go along with Option A?

We have, along with Brazil, Japan and Germany, made our position well known. We are hoping to table a resolution and are hoping to have a very large co-sponsorship for the resolution before the General Assembly meets in September. A lot of people think this is a matter for the Security Council to decide. No, this is a matter for the General Assembly to decide with a two-thirds majority. There are 54 nations from Africa, they are very important players in the expansion process. Our position has, so far, been that India should be in the Security Council with a veto. A third view is that the veto should be abolished, which is unlikely. There is another point of view that there could be an informal arrangement that no one country can veto, there should be two or three. Given the world scenario today, with the U.N. having 192 members, it will be very difficult for any of the P-5 to exercise their veto against the popular mood for change. We are also realistic enough to know that the present five will not like the veto to be extended to other members.

[The] Prime Minister has said that we are against any discrimination between the old and the new. The African view is the same. What we have to remember is that these five permanent members have to go back to their respective parliaments ... If the U.S. Senate doesn't ratify, there's a new situation. Now, from what Secretary-General Kofi Annan told us, his expectation is that howsoever strong the reservations of one permanent member against a new one ... in today's climate it would be difficult to exercise the veto. At the most, that power would abstain.

Why doesn't India stick to its earlier stand that the veto, per se, is undemocratic and should be done away with?

It's not excluded. The discussions are going on at various levels, at various forums and they will be further intensified in the next few weeks. You can't even rule out, and I am taking the extreme position ?the contradictions are so great, the differences so obvious, that nothing may happen. And, that'll be a great tragedy.

012. Speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in reply to the debate on his statement made in the Lok Sabha on April 20, 2005.

New Delhi, May 12, 2005.

The Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh): Sir, I wish to thank all the distinguished Members who have commented on the suo motu Statement I had made on 20th April 2005 on our relations with China¹ and Pakistan². There have been fresh developments since then in our external relations, which I will attempt to share with the House.

However, at the outset, let me express my deep satisfaction over the continuing and strong consensus that characterises the conduct of our Foreign Policy. This was reflected in the several observations made by the hon. Members cutting across the political spectrum.

Sir, there is unanimity in this House regarding the importance of our relations with China. As I said in my Statement, our Government attaches great importance to the development of our relations with China. There is great scope for expansion of our economic interaction with this great neighbour of ours. With regard to the resolution of the boundary question, I acknowledge the complexity of this issue. But in this context, the agreement we have reached with China, setting out the political parameters and guiding principles for the resolution of the boundary question, assumes considerable significance.

1. Document No. 182

Overall, Sir, in the recent past, there has been steady forward movement in our bilateral relations which are now characterised by expanding areas of cooperation and growing mutual understanding. I do not look at our relations with China as those between rivals, but as between partners engaged in promoting peace, security and development in Asia and in the World as a whole.

Sir, Prof. Ram Gopal Yadav is not here. He made certain statements. I do recognise that we are dealing with issues, which have great contemporary significance. There are risks, but I think, these risks will not deter us from moving forward, though we shall do so mindful of all the elements that go to influence this complex situation which we have to deal with.

With regard to Pakistan, I am very glad that all Members have stressed the importance of the normalisation of our relations with Pakistan. We sincerely desire to find mutually acceptable solutions in all outstanding issues. The hon. Members have rightly emphasised the need for a complete cessation of cross border terrorism, including the dismantling of terrorist training camps and launch pads across the LOC.

I myself pointed out to President Musharraf that I will not be able to take Indian public opinion with me in carrying forward the current composite dialogue process and our quest for abiding peace, if there continue to be repeated terrorist acts against innocent men, women and children.

We welcome the pledge made by President Musharraf not to allow terrorism to impede our bilateral peace process. Sir, both of us are committed to making the peace process truly irreversible, facilitating the resolution of all outstanding issues between our two countries. Of course, much will depend on the actual situation on the ground, with regard to cross-border infiltration, particularly after the snow-bound passes in Kashmir open up in summer. We have to remain alert because terrorist and extremist forces are still active. There will be no relaxation of vigil on this score.

Sir, thanks to the comprehensive security measures put in place, there have been no further incidents involving the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service and the positive impact of the service on opinion on both sides of the Line Of Control (LOC) is there for everyone to see. We are already engaged in technical talks with the Government of Pakistan on the opening of a new bus service between Amritsar and Nankana Sahib. We hope to operationalise these services in the near future. I take note of the desire of hon. Member Shri Madhusudan Mistry about opening up the new routes linking Gujarat with Sind. This we shall also take up.

There has been some comment on the process initiated by the World Bank to appoint a neutral expert to examine differences between India and Pakistan on the Baglihar issue. There is no question of stopping work on this Project. Hon. Members should appreciate that under the terms of the Indus Water Treaty of 1960, the World Bank is obliged to appoint a neutral expert even if only one of the parties makes a representation. We had felt that a reference to the World Bank was premature because further technical discussions between our experts could have led to a narrowing of differences. I had myself conveyed to President Musharraf that if Pakistan could come up with convincing and technically verifiable objections to any aspect of this project, we would be willing to consider appropriate design modifications. We are now preparing to provide all the information and technical details that may be required by the neutral expert to make a comprehensive evaluation. I wish to state categorically that India has never violated the Indus Water Treaty, which has stood the test of time for the last 45 years. We intend to adhere to the Treaty in letter and in spirit.

Sir, several Members have expressed anguish over the continuing detention of Indian fishermen and the other Indian citizens in Pakistan. Thanks to the effort of our Government and our Foreign Minister Shri Natwar Singh, a large number of these prisoners have been released and no effort is being spared to obtain the release of those remaining in Jails in Pakistan. We are also in touch with the Government of Pakistan on the release of fishing boats impounded by Pakistani authorities so that our fishermen can resume the earning of their livelihood.

With Bangladesh, we share traditional ties of friendship, reinforced by cultural and historic links. It remains our sincere desire to work with the Government and people of Bangladesh to tackle the basic common challenge of poverty, ignorance and disease. I take very seriously the point raised by Shri Hannan Mollah. We will make – and we have been making – sincere effort in this regard. We do have concerns regarding the territory of Bangladesh being used by Indian insurgent groups. However, I sincerely hope that our two countries can work together jointly to resolve these issues and promote jointly peace, security and development. Development is the biggest challenge that both of us face, and we must do so together to win the race against time.

Sir, we have every reason to take pride in our excellent relations with the King and the people of Bhutan. The King of Bhutan is a wise monarch and under his guidance Bhutan has made rapid social and economic progress. We take pride in the accelerated development of Bhutan and we are very happy to be partners in their progress.

Sir, an hon. Member had made a reference to the situation in Nepal. We have a vital stake in the security and development of Nepal, with which we have centuries old ties of culture and civilisation. Our only concern is that Nepal should approach the new era of modernization with a strong commitment to the twin pillars of Nepal's nationhood, namely constitutional monarchy and multi-party democracy. As Nepal's neighbour, and in view of our special relations, we do have concerns regarding the situation in that country.

It is our sincere desire to find pathways to a future of co-operative interaction to promote peace, security and the well-being of the people of Nepal.

We have been steadfast in our traditional strong commitment to the unity and integrity of Sri Lanka. We do hope that through meaningful negotiations all sections of Sri Lankan society, including the Tamil minority, will be able to evolve durable co-operative structures which enable them to lead a life of dignity and self-respect.

Mr. Deputy-Speaker, Sir, South Asia must work together to emerge as a major powerhouse of economic creativity and enterprise. For that, it is very essential for all our countries to work together to maintain cordial relations with each other. It is with this perspective that we have extended our hand of friendship and co-operation to all our neighbours.

April has been an extraordinarily intense period for our external relations. Following my last suo motu statement, we have played host to Prime Minister Koizumi of Japan and the UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan. Another landmark event was the celebrations of the 50th Anniversary of the Afro-Asian Conference in Jakarta and Bandung in Indonesia from April 22 to April 24, 2005. I have also just returned from Moscow, where I participated in the commemoration of the 60th anniversary of the victory over Fascism and Nazis. I used this opportunity to review with President Putin the state of our multifaceted bilateral relations. Both of us agreed to work together to expand areas of co-operation consistent with our strategic partnership.

Sir, our relations with the United States of America have never been better. The two countries are poised for a major and significant upgradation of these relations in the days to come. I had the opportunity to exchange views with President George Bush both when we met in New York last September and when we saw each other in Moscow earlier last week. During the External Affairs Minister's visit to Washington, an India-US Energy Panel was announced which will enable the two countries to embark on a long-term plan for energy co-operation, including the possibility of civilian nuclear energy co-operation.

Both in the US as well as in other countries, there is a growing recognition of the fact that global energy sources are under increasing strain and that high oil prices are probably here to stay. For countries like India, to sustain the reasonably high rate of economic growth that is required to eradicate poverty, energy cannot be allowed to become a constraint. For us, nuclear energy is an important means to address this challenge. As such, we intend to maintain and expand our indigenous nuclear power programme. This would also ease the strain on conventional energy supplies globally. Since India's record on non-proliferation is impeccable and acknowledged to be so internationally, the current restrictions on co-operation in nuclear power production with India have become anachronistic and counter-productive. During my meeting with President Putin in Moscow, I expressed satisfaction at India-Russia co-operation in this field, as well as in other areas of bilateral concern and hoped that areas of co-operation between India and Russia would grow in the years to come. I would be visiting Washington at the invitation of President Bush in July this year, when I intend to continue our dialogue on energy co-operation, which we also touched upon during our brief meeting in Moscow.

The visit of Prime Minister Koizumi to India in April 28 and 29 marked the beginning of a sustained and productive engagement between our two countries. Despite the close political relations and shared values of democracy and culture, India-Japan economic relations have remained far below their potential. It is this aspect of our relations that received the greatest attention during the visit and I am happy to say that we took a number of decisions to upgrade our relations. Japan has agreed to consider assisting us in establishing a high-speed rail freight corridor between Mumbai and Delhi and Delhi and Kolkata. Japan would also extend facilities for Japanese language training in Indian educational institutions to help our IT industry serve the large and growing software market in Japan.

Hon. Members would recall the historic contribution made by the Afro-Asian Conference of 1955 in hastening the end of colonialism, forging a sense of solidarity among the newly emerging nation states of Asia and Africa and in paving the way for establishment of the Non-Aligned Movement. The key role played by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in that Meeting fifty years ago was acknowledged in my meetings with several leaders during this Conference. India was given the signal honour to speak on behalf of the Asian countries and our voice was heard with respect by the extraordinary gathering of leaders from all over the world. Sir, it would not be an exaggeration to say that the Conference has rekindled the sense of solidarity and close affinity among the developing nations with a keen determination to translate these sentiments into a practical programme of co-operation, leveraging each other's strengths and using our considerable collective bargaining power to usher in a more equitable international political and economic order. Sir, I urged the leaders present to devise instrumentalities to deal with imbalances built into the functioning of the international political and economic order, to expand the constituency supporting the process of globalisation. I drew attention to the fact that we have our own distinct perspective on measures to combat international terrorism, which has emerged as a major global problem. This perspective is based on the need to initiate and sustain a meaningful "dialogue among civilisations" instead of subscribing to the theory of the so-called "clash of civilisations".

My meetings with Asian leaders in Bandung also gave me yet another opportunity to reiterate India's commitment to the 'Look East Policy' and to closer relations with the countries of South-East and East Asia. We are committed to work with ASEAN and with East Asian Countries to make the 21st century a truly Asian Century.

Sir, I am happy to report to the House that the countries of this region reciprocated this sentiment when they decided to invite India to the East Asian Summit to be held later this year. We are also making determined efforts to intensify our cooperation with the developing countries of West Asia, Central Asia, Africa and Latin America.

We have also moved forward in rejuvenating our relations with the European Union through our new "strategic partnership". The forthcoming visit in September of Prime Minister Tony Blair as President of the European Union will provide us another opportunity to give concrete meaning and content to our strategic partnership with both the EU and the United Kingdom.

I also look forward to the opportunity to participate in an outreach meeting of the G-8 at Gleneagles in Scotland this July. This will help strengthen our interaction with our global partners. India's participation in this meeting is an important recognition of our place in the global community and the world economy as a whole.

This brings me to India's efforts, in close collaboration with other friendly countries, to bring about a comprehensive reform of the United Nations. The visit to India by UN Secretary General Kofi Anan, on April 25 and 26, 2005, provided us an opportunity to review current developments at the United Nations and to reassess our strategy. The Group of 4, comprising of India, Brazil, Germany and Japan, continue to work very closely together in pursuit of our shared objective of mobilizing a more than two-thirds majority of the UN General Assembly, in favour of a significant restructuring of the United Nations, including the Security Council. We believe that India, with its large population, dynamic economy, long history of contribution to international peace-keeping and other regional and international causes, deserves to be a permanent member of the UN Security Council. We also believe that reform of the UN should make it more democratic and more capable of effective multilateral decision-making and action.

Of course, we are conscious of the fact that the situation is extremely complex and there is resistance to change among several powerful countries.

However, this is the first time in many years that a certain momentum has been built up for thoroughgoing reform of the United Nations. It is a window of opportunity we must make every effort to take advantage of as developing countries.

Hon. Members, we are living in a world that is undergoing rapid transformation, with new challenges emerging daily and demanding attention. India's own emergence as an economic power house has expanded our circle of interaction and engagement with the rest of the world. For us, the main challenge of our foreign policy lies in creating and in maintaining a regional and international environment which would enable us to sustain a high rate of economic growth, create more opportunities for Indian entrepreneurship and enable India to realize its vast, latent potential as a major economic power in the world. Consequently, in the past year, our Government has given the utmost priority to our relations with our neighbours, in particular our relations with China and Pakistan. We have focused our attention on economic diplomacy, with a particular emphasis on energy diplomacy. Our search for energy resources has led us to make large investments in countries as far as Sudan and exploration in Central Asia. Politics and economies must now go hand in hand in the service of India's overall interests as a nation.

Sir, let me pledge that while we remain faithful to the abiding principles of foreign policy laid down by Jawaharlal Nehru and followed consistently by our country since then during the past half a century and more, we are, nevertheless, alert to the compulsions imposed upon us by a rapidly transforming world order and we have the capacity, capability as a nation to respond successfully to the newly emerging challenges that confront us. It is a tribute to India's high standing in the world today that our country has emerged as a compulsory destination for world leaders from across the globe. This image of India as a confident and united nation derives greatly from the continuing political consensus that has all along been the hallmark of our foreign policy.

Sir, I do believe that it is also a recognition of what India has come to stand for in the comity of nations. Our steadfast commitment to democracy, to building a multi-ethnic, multi-religious, multi-lingual, multi-cultural democracy based on respect for fundamental human rights and the rule of law gives us a unique place in our era. All nations of the world, I believe, will one day function on these very principles of liberal and pluralistic democracy. This enjoins upon us the obligation to nurture these roots of our nationhood. I commit our Government to work earnestly to realise this vision of India's tryst with destiny.

I would like, once again, to thank this House, Mr. Deputy-Speaker, Sir, for extending to me as Prime Minister of this great nation its whole-hearted support and guidance in representing India on the world stage.

013. Media Briefing by Minister of State E. Ahamed on arrangements for Haj 2006.

New Delhi, May 19, 2005.

Minister of State for External Affairs : On 17th May, India and Saudi Arabia have entered into Haj Agreement for the Haj 2006 wherein it is provided that this time there will be 1,37,000 Hajis (pilgrims) approximately from India. Out of this 1,37,000, there will be 82,000 Hajis who will be going through Haj Committee of India as last year, and 55,000 Hajis will be performing the Haj through private tour operators. This time one lakh Hajis will be proceeding to Mecca through Jeddah. The Hajis will be taken from Indian destinations to Jeddah, that number will be one lakh. Thirty-seven thousand Hajis will be flying from Indian airports to Medina directly. On the return trip, 97,000 Hajis will be coming through the Jeddah Haj terminal and 40,000 Hajis will be returning through Medina.

Among these 82,000 Hajis being sponsored by Haj Committee, 52,000 Hajis will be carried by the Saudi Arabian Airlines and 30,000 will be through Air India. The private Hajis will be using Air India, Indian Airlines, sometimes other international airlines also.

So far there were three categories of accommodation that Indian Hajis were being provided. This time there will be four categories of accommodation. The first category will be 600 metres from the Haram Sharif. The Hajis who will be opting for this category will be paying 2,400 Saudi Riyals. That is the Haj Committee arrangement.

Second category is 601 to 850 metres for which one has to pay 2,000 Saudi Riyals. The third category is from 851 to 1000 metres, the Saudi Riyal rental amount will be 1,650. The fourth category is 1,001 to 1200 metres that is Saudi Riyal 1,050.

Apart from the embarkation points from India, this year there will be one more embarkation, that is, Bhopal in Madhya Pradesh. Last year from Bhopal there were 3,424 pilgrims. Therefore, we would also like to add this Bhopal along with other 15 departure points, that is, Ahmedabad, Aurangabad, Bangalore, Calicut, Chennai, Delhi, Guwahati, Hyderabad, Jaipur, Kolkata, Lucknow, Mumbai, Nagpur, Patna and Srinagar.

In the bilateral discussion between Air India and Saudi Arabian Airlines, that is also a part of general Haj Agreement, it was decided that from Patna, Aurangabad and Jaipur, now Bhopal, the Hajis will be taken to Nagpur and from Nagpur they will be taken to Jeddah or Medina, whichever destination.

This time the Saudi Government has increased the stays for every Haji for accommodation. Last year, a Haji's accommodation tent was 3 metres. This year Saudi Government has increased it to 3.5 metres. But we have pointed out one matter to the Saudi Haj Minister, Dr. Fahd Abdussalem Al Farsi who was the counterpart who has signed the agreement that Saudi authorities had demolished a number of buildings in Mecca so as to reconstruct the new buildings with the result some 60,000 units of homes, not only for India but for other countries also, have been reduced from among the pool of buildings. Therefore, we have requested the Saudi authorities that they shall not insist on the timeframe within which the accommodation should be made available so as to issue the visa. He said it may be some time there will be some flexibility of time in view of the shortage of the buildings available around Mecca. They have gladly agreed to it.

Last time the Haj management of the Saudi Government who are known as South Asia Mo'assassa had put a condition that all Hajis in the Mina area should take the food they prepare because Hajis shall not go out or the food should be prepared by any other agencies. Till last year, every Haji would go out and have the food of their liking. Last year they insisted for supply of the food. We had to agree. But the quality of the food and the time of supply of the food were not satisfactory. So, we said we cannot agree to that suggestion and now it is agreed that food shall not be supplied by their authorities. The Hajis will be free to have their food during their stay in Mina, that is, five days of the Haj period. So, Haj Committee Hajis can have the food of their liking as it was prevalent before last year.

These are the main points. Last year we had sent a total of 416 officials including 107 doctors, 125 paramedical staff, 47 Assistant Haj Officers and 137 Haj Assistants who had been deputed in the management of Haj. This time this will continue with maybe some variation here and there.

Saudi Arabia has appreciated the Haj management by the Government. Hajis would be away in the first month of the next year but the Government has made all the preparations even now lest there should be any complication at the time of the Haj. So, all arrangements have been taken care of at the appropriate time.

This time we have decided to have two Haj Conferences in one year as decided by the last Haj Conference. So, the First Haj Conference will be held on the 4th of June in Delhi. That Conference will finalise other further arrangements with respect to the Haj.

One more point I would like to say about the private Hajis, Saudi Arabian authorities have made certain guidelines as well as regulations with respect to the Hajis sponsored by the private tour operators. Therefore, we also have issued some directions to the private tour operators. They all have to register with the Government either directly or through their Haj Associations. But they must all adhere to the instructions given. Anybody who violates this one will be dealt with seriously because Saudi Arabian authorities are very much particular that the Haj Committee Hajis and Hajis performing the Haj through the private operators should have the same treatment, same arrangements, and same facilities. So, we insist this time particularly the Hajis going through the private operators, and private operators are also very well aware of it. We will be insisting on certain conditions and everybody will gladly accept that. Thank you.

Question : There was a meeting on the issue of constituting a Haj Corporation ... (Inaudible)...

Minister of State for External Affairs : That was only a brainstorming session of the Muslim Members of Parliament on how we will be able to have a Haj Corporation which could be also constituted here like the one prevalent in Malaysia. That is under consideration. Of course, that point has been taken well. A core group of people had been selected to study and put forward a report. On the basis of the report, after consideration, a decision will be taken.

Question : ...(Inaudible)...

Minister of State for External Affairs : All this has to be discussed at that time. How can we say everything. We are taking care of all these things. There should be a self-sufficient system. Can it be changed to a Corporation as what is now prevalent in Malaysia? That is only a matter under consideration. So, I cannot say anything at this point of time. When it comes there we will consider it and its viability and feasibility will be studied and at that time appropriate decision will be taken.

Question : Palestine President is arriving in New Delhi in a few hours. What is going to be the nature of the talks? China has already announced aid for the Palestinian cause. Will India also do something like that?

Minister of State for External Affairs : India has been supporting Palestinian people and India has already committed to extend humanitarian assistance to the people of Palestine. Last year, as you know, on September 17, 2004, I myself carried with me medicines worth two crore rupees and 15 vehicles which we had given to the Palestinian Authority. This year also we will support. Anyway all things will be discussed when he meets our Hon. Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh. I do not want to make any comment on that.

Question : Will there be some sort of institutionalized mechanism for aid?

Minister of State for External Affairs : It will be an appropriate question after the meeting between the President of Palestine Authority and the Prime Minister of India.

Question : Would India play a creative role in expediting the peace process? Of course, obviously due to the pressure from the Left parties, the present Government is often seen dissociating itself from Israel. Are we actually in a position to play some positive role in expediting the peace process started by the Quartet?

Minister of State for External Affairs : In your justification you have detailed your own view. My only point is, India has already said many times we hope there will be a comprehensive peace that will prevail there. India has always been supporting Palestinians. India was the first non-Arab country to recognize the Palestinian Authority. India will always continue its unwavering support to the Palestinian cause and their inalienable right to have their own State. So, in this process India naturally and really will, there should also be a ... process to be expedited. Whatever the Sharm El-Sheikh negotiations result was, we even at that time expressed our hope that it will be implemented, but we will be in a much better position to understand after his visit what is the present position.

Question : Mr. Ahamed, America is insisting that India can be a member of the Security Council without the power of veto. What is India's stand?

Minister of State for External Affairs : Hon. Prime Minister has already explained in Parliament our position with regard to the candidature in the United Nations Security Council. Even at that time everybody clarified that the membership of the Security Council - permanent membership - should definitely be with veto power. There are five permanent members, and if there is expansion, same power should definitely be given to any other member who will be added in the Security Council.

Question : When you visited Saudi Arabia a couple of days back, did you take up the issue of expansion of the UN Security Council?

Minister of State for External Affairs: No, I was there only for discussing the Haj matters and I met only the Haj Minister. This was exclusively for the Haj arrangements.

Question : Are you going to undertake any visit in the near future to gather support on this?

Minister of State for External Affairs: When I will go, I will definitely inform all of you.

014. Address by Secretary (East) Rajiv Sikri: “India’s Relations with its Eastern Neighbours”: at the Bangladesh Enterprise Institute.

Dhaka, May 31, 2005.

It is a great pleasure and privilege for me to have been invited by the Bangladesh Enterprise Institute to speak on the subject of India’s relations with its eastern neighbours. These relations constitute an increasingly important dimension of India’s foreign policy, and are subsumed under the catch phrase ‘Look East’ policy that has gained wide currency in India for the past 14 years. As the logical implication of the phrase itself is that before this policy came into being, India was paying insufficient attention to its eastern neighbours, it would be worthwhile to spend a few moments to examine why this was so.

2. Firstly, this was a spin-off of the Cold War, when India and the nations of Southeast Asia found themselves on opposite sides. With the end of the Cold War, however, the strategic environment in South and South East Asia underwent a paradigm change and it became increasingly less tenable to regard South Asia and East Asia as separate strategic and economic theatres interacting only on the margins. Secondly, our immediate neighbour to the east viz. Myanmar, was a fairly closed society and, despite it being a neighbour, India’s ties with Myanmar were quite minimal till the early 1990s.

3. India too was basically inward looking and its meaningful economic integration with the rest of the world started only after the reform process began in 1991. In the post-Cold War era, India (and many others) had to look for new moorings for its economic growth and development. The remarkable economic performance of the roaring ‘Asian Tigers’ that caught the imagination of countries and people around the world inevitably compelled attention and drew admiration in India too. In fact, India’s early economic reforms initiated in the 1980s were stimulated to an extent by the successful example of how the countries to our east had managed to achieve rapid economic growth and poverty reduction through market-oriented policies with a focus on exports. Realizing that we may have missed some openings that came our way in the past, we were determined not to lose the new opportunities that came our way.

4. India’s economic growth rate has steadily accelerated over the years – from 3.5% in the 1960s and 1970s to a little less than 6% in the 1980s and 1990s. Over the last three years, the Indian economy has grown at an average annual rate of 6.5%. We expect this to go up to 7.5% in the next two years, and are targeting 8% thereafter. Steady, healthy economic growth in India is not merely our expectation; it is that of the world as a whole too. The BRICs report of Goldman Sachs anticipates that India (along with Russia, China and Brazil) will grow rapidly over the next few decades and become by 2040 the world's third largest economy. This projection has been adopted by the US National Intelligence Council's 2020 project, entitled "Mapping the Global Future" that regards the likely emergence of India and China as global players as a development that would dramatically transform the geo-political landscape with potentially significant implications.

5. India's 'Look East' policy is no mere political slogan. It has a strong economic rationale. It was, and is, a response to the changed global equations and trends of the post-Cold War world, as well as a search for political and economic convergence with a large dynamic region evolving into a critical mass of global political and economic power. Our changing economic policies, and our growing self-confidence to see globalization as not merely as a challenge but also as an opportunity, have given us a new perspective on the importance of the Asian region. As Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh has put it, the world wants India to succeed. Other countries, including East Asian countries, want to plug into India's economic growth and opportunities. As India prospers and develops, we want to take our neighbours along with us. When distant countries plan long-term strategies to get a share of the large and growing Indian market, why should not our immediate neighbours like Bangladesh benefit? It is widely recognized that by 2020, globalization would have an Asian face. If the 19th century could be loosely termed as "European" and the 20th as "American", then the 21st century looks set to be "Asian". Thus growing cooperation between India and East Asian countries is economically logical, indeed essential, if Asia is to play a larger role in the world in the coming decades. The path of greater openness in trade and investment that India is following makes greater integration with Asia inevitable. Even today, East Asia (including Japan, China, South Korea and ASEAN) is India's largest trade partner, ahead of the EU as well as the US. It is an increasingly important source of foreign direct investment into India. As India's trade to GDP ratio increases (as we expect it to), the technologically advanced and highly competitive economies of Asia are bound to have a large share of this increase.

6. India's relationship with ASEAN is central to our 'Look East' policy. There is much that brings India and South East Asia together. There is no history of conflict, only peaceful interaction, with the flow of trade, people and ideas. India has had a long history of civilizational and cultural links with South East Asia, symbolized by Angkor Wat in Cambodia, Borobudur and Bali in Indonesia, and Bodh Gaya and Sarnath in India. It was only when the Cold War ended that natural relationships based on geographical contiguity and commonality of factors could be re-established. Since then, India has developed multifaceted relationships with countries of the ASEAN region, both bilaterally and in a regional framework. In 1992, India became a Sectoral Dialogue Partner with ASEAN. This was upgraded to Full Dialogue Partnership in 1996, when India also became a member of the ASEAN Regional Forum and, since 2002, to a summit-level partnership. This relationship is sustained by a structure of annual summits, supplemented by meetings of the Foreign Ministers, the Ministers of Trade and Industry, and senior officials.

7. India and ASEAN have agreed on a roadmap of 'Partnership for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity' over the next 10-15 years that would take forward India-ASEAN cooperation in diverse areas such as energy, agriculture, health, science and technology, culture, tourism, and entertainment. We are committed to deepening our economic integration with ASEAN. The India-ASEAN Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Framework Agreement signed in 2003 envisages the full implementation of a Free Trade Area in goods, services and investment between 2011 and 2016. Our bilateral trade with ASEAN has reached US$13 billion and is growing rapidly, with a target of US$ 30 billion by 2007. The India-ASEAN relationship and India's rapidly developing bilateral ties with individual ASEAN countries complement and reinforce one another. With Thailand, India signed a Framework Agreement on a Free Trade Agreement in 2003. India and Singapore are close to finalizing a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement, and a Joint Study Group has been established to explore a similar agreement with Malaysia.

8. Connectivity – whether by air, rail, road, sea or inland waterways – is the key to closer multi-faceted ties with ASEAN. In the immediate future, the focus is on improving air connectivity. As a result of a more liberal air services policy for ASEAN countries, air connectivity between India and ASEAN countries has vastly improved over the last year. Myanmar and the Northeast Region provide the geographical contiguity for overland connectivity between India and ASEAN. India is involved in many infrastructure projects in Myanmar. A few years ago, India upgraded the Tamu-Kaleymo-Kalewa road, and an India-Myanmar-Thailand Highway project from Moreh in Manipur to Mae Sot in Thailand via Myanmar is currently being actively discussed among the three countries. In November last year, the India-ASEAN Car Rally from Guwahati to Batam island in Indonesia after passing through 7 other ASEAN countries drew attention, in a dramatic manner, to the geographical contiguity of India, especially the Northeast Region, and ASEAN, and has undoubtedly promoted greater awareness of the potential for trade, tourism and people-to-people contacts between India and ASEAN. As for rail links, India is assisting in the upgradation of the Mandalay-Yangon railway sector, and conducting a feasibility study for building the missing link of about 200 km between Jiribam in Manipur and Kalay in Myanmar that will, we hope, ultimately lead to a Delhi-Hanoi rail link. Also being discussed is the development of the Dawei deep-sea port in Myanmar, with a road link to Kanchanburi in Thailand across the Kra peninsula. Discussions are under way for other infrastructure projects, including the Kaladan multimodal transport project, cross-border roads connecting Mizoram and Myanmar, and Tamanthi hydel project. The timetable for all these projects is the next 5-10 years, so that by the time the India-ASEAN FTA is fully operational the infrastructure is in place to sustain the anticipated much higher level of trade and economic interaction between India and ASEAN.

9. India is also an active participant in the ARF. Maritime security and the protection of sea lanes of communication, energy security, our long shoreline, dependence on sea-borne trade, island territories, a large Exclusive Economic Zone and the fishing industry are all significant factors in our enlarging and intensifying security cooperation with East Asian countries. From a geo-political perspective, the strategic horizons of South East Asian countries converge with those of India in the eastern Indian Ocean. India has common maritime boundaries with Thailand, Myanmar and Indonesia and the main sea-lanes of communication from the Indian Ocean to the Malacca Straits pass close to Indian territorial waters.

10. The optimal success of India's policy of active engagement with its eastern neighbours involves Bangladesh. Historically, present-day Eastern India, Bangladesh and Northeastern India were always an integrated political, economic and cultural space. This region played a leading role in national life – in politics, economic development and intellectual debate – in pre-Independence India, thanks to its natural wealth and human resources. If it is to regain that role, India and Bangladesh need to take advantage of the numerous similarities, complementarities and synergies in the fields of economy, culture, history, language and society to ensure the coordinated regional development of this region. The growing popularity of sub-regional cooperation is an inevitable consequence of globalization, and its importance for optimal and integrated development is increasingly recognized. Failure to exploit available synergies and complementarities hurts all sides in the long run – economic development suffers; personal and family contacts are disrupted; for governments there are security headaches and revenue losses as a soft, somewhat shadowy border zone, harbouring terrorists, smugglers, gunrunners, drug dealers, traffickers and assorted criminals, comes into being. It is our hope that over time this region would be seen not as the periphery of the Indian subcontinent but would become the core of a thriving, dynamic and integrated economic space with a network of highways, railways, pipelines, transmission lines criss-crossing the region.

11. The 'Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation', or BIMSTEC, that brings together countries around the Bay of Bengal, viz. Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Myanmar, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Thailand can play an important role in this regard. It can also act as a bridge between the countries of South and Southeast Asia. At the 1st BIMSTEC Summit last year, there was agreement to concentrate on regional projects that would benefit people. As in the case of ASEAN, a Free Trade Area lies at the core of BIMSTEC activities. All BIMSTEC countries have agreed to work towards a Free Trade Area in goods, services and investment that will come into effect between 2006 and 2017. All over the world, most countries normally have a fairly large percentage of their overall foreign trade with neighbouring countries, but this is not the case in our region. This anomaly needs to be corrected urgently. The silver lining is that the relatively low level of regional trade and economic activity in the BIMSTEC region only brings out how large is the unexploited potential for expanding trade and investment, which will translate into jobs and economic growth for all countries in our region. Energy understandably figures high on the agenda, since there is so much potential for developing and exploiting to mutual benefit the rich hydropower and hydrocarbons (especially gas) reserves in the region. Myanmar, Bangladesh and India have recently taken the initiative to look at the possibility of a gas pipeline project to transmit gas from Myanmar to India through Bangladesh. This could become the model for future regional cooperation projects with potential benefit for all members.

12. Another regional organization about which I would like to make a brief mention is the Mekong-Ganga Cooperation (MGC) that brings together India, Myanmar, Thailand, Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam to cooperate in the fields of education, culture, tourism, and transport and communications. Both BIMSTEC and MGC supplement and complement the growing India-ASEAN relationship.

13. As China is India's largest neighbour, developing friendly cooperation with China is an important priority in our foreign policy. India seeks friendly, cooperative, good-neighbourly and mutually beneficial relations with China. With the frequent high-level exchanges between our two countries the process of building trust and understanding has gained momentum and our relations have diversified across a wide range of areas. Our relations with China have reached a level of maturity where we are determined to build upon our existing commonalities and identify newer areas of mutually beneficial cooperation. At the same time, we are striving to address our differences, including the boundary question, in a proactive, purposive and mutually acceptable manner without allowing them to affect the comprehensive development of our relationship.

14. The positive trends in our ties with China are most vividly manifest in our rapidly increasing trade and economic relations. Trade turnover crossed US$13 billion last year. Indian industry is looking with confidence at the opportunities for mutually beneficial cooperation with China. Chinese firms are investing in India, and Indian companies, including especially those in IT and pharmaceuticals, where we have some strength, are investing in China. A Joint Study Group that had been set up to examine the potential complementarities between the two countries has recommended an India-China Regional Trading Arrangement. People-to-people contacts, including tourism, cultural and other cooperation are steadily increasing.

15. Both India and China also look at their relationship in a larger regional and global perspective. This is natural, considering that both countries constitute more than one-third of the world's population and are among the largest and fastest-growing economies of the world. We are increasingly cooperating within the framework of the UN, the WTO, with the G-8, and trilaterally with Russia. During the recent visit of the Chinese Prime Minister Wen Jiabao to India, it was agreed to establish a "strategic and cooperative partnership for peace and prosperity" between India and China. This reflects the consensus between the two sides that there is more than just a bilateral dimension to their relations, which have now acquired a long-term, global and strategic perspective with growing influence of the two countries on the regional and global stage. India-China relations should not be viewed with the old mindset of 'balance of power' or 'conflict of interests'. While some degree of healthy competition between the two countries is inevitable, particularly in the economic field, there is growing realization that there is enough space and opportunity in the region and beyond for both countries to grow as friends and partners, and not as adversaries or rivals. Asia has a promising future of dynamic growth, and it is natural that China and India should be two important players in Asia's quest for peace, prosperity and stability.

16. As the world's second largest economy, Japan plays a key role in Asia and the world. Yet India's relations with Japan till now have been relatively underdeveloped, compared to the potential. But things are changing. During Japanese Prime Minister Koizumi's visit to India just over a month ago, both countries agreed to give a new strategic orientation to their Global Partnership in the 'new Asian era' and adopted a concrete eight-fold initiative to strengthen it. Both countries recognize that India and Japan will be two key players in Asia in the coming decades, with a broad convergence of long-term interests and concerns. Economic partnership is an important dimension of our ties with Japan. We have agreed to set up a Joint Study Group that would explore how to upgrade the framework for comprehensive economic cooperation, including the feasibility of an India-Japan Economic Partnership Agreement; to encourage large-scale Japanese investment in infrastructure projects in India; to step up cooperation in the field of science and technology as well as security and defence; take cultural and academic initiatives; and strengthen people-to-people contacts to raise mutual awareness in both countries.

17. Similarly, South Korea is also an important partner for India. Our relations are friendly and cooperative, and have steadily developed since we established diplomatic relations just over three decades ago. South Korean companies are aggressively seeking markets in India, have made significant investments and have learnt how to do business in India. They also envisage India as a global manufacturing hub for other markets in Asia and elsewhere. Similarly India companies are also buying into South Korean companies as they seek to become globally competitive. During South Korean President Roh's visit to India last year, India and South Korea decided to establish a "Long Term Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity in order to fully utilize the substantial potential and opportunities for deepening mutually beneficial cooperation. A Joint Study Group has been set up to see how to energize the economic relationship, including the feasibility of a comprehensive economic partnership agreement.

18. I should add a few words about India's relations with Australia and New Zealand. Although separated by distance, our commonalities – such as the English language, membership of the Commonwealth, democracy, rule of law, love of cricket – draw us ever closer. Both countries are increasingly attractive destinations for Indians seeking education or employment abroad, going for tourism. They have attracted Bollywood¹ producers for shooting films, and trade and industry in all three countries is finding synergies in new areas, including in IT and biotechnology. Australia is a huge wealthy country, rich in natural resources that we wish to tap for our economic development, while Australians too find India an increasingly attractive market and investment destination.

19. India's participation – together with the ASEAN countries, China, Japan, South Korea, and possibly Australia and New Zealand too – in the first East Asia Summit to be held in Kuala Lumpur this year flows from our significantly accelerated engagement with the ASEAN and other East Asian countries over the past decade. Growing multifaceted cooperation, economic integration as well as improved connectivity between India and its neighbours to the east make India a natural participant in the East Asia Summit process that has the potential of changing strategic equations in Asia and the world, and facilitating the emergence of Asia as a new pole of growth and influence in the world. An open and fast growing India has much to offer Asia and will help to create unprecedented interdependence and opportunities for mutually beneficial growth and prosperity.

20. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh has spoken of his vision of an Asian Economic Community, bringing together the largest Asian economies of ASEAN, Japan, China, South Korea and India at its core that would constitute a new driver of growth in the world economy. He envisages an integrated market from the Himalayas to the Pacific Ocean linked by efficient road, rail, air and shipping services. This would be a community of nations, roughly the size of the European Union in terms of income and bigger than NAFTA in terms of trade, that would bring together half the world's population, and would have foreign exchange reserves exceeding those of the EU and NAFTA put together. Such a community would constitute an 'arc of advantage' across which there would be large-scale movement of people, capital, ideas and creativity. It could be an anchor of stability and development for Asia and the world. We hope that one day in the not so distant future it would be possible for tourists, pilgrims, workers and businessmen to take a bus from Kolkata via Dhaka to Bangkok, and ride a train from Delhi to Singapore on an authentic Orient Express in the 21st century.

21. Today, it may look like a dream. It is no doubt an ambitious goal, but an achievable one. The success of this idea depends upon all of us in the region. The building blocks of such a wider Asian community are already being put in place. The developing preferential and free trading arrangements among Asian countries and groupings could naturally evolve into a broader regional trade and investment architecture that would provide optimal benefits, stronger synergies and deeper complementarities to all participants. Naturally, this will not come about easily. We are only at the beginning of the process, and much time, energy and perseverance is required to translate this vision into reality. If we can think out of the box, eschew narrow perspectives and prejudices, and take a long-term view of what we must collectively do in a globalized, fast-changing world, we can promote peace and bring prosperity to our peoples. If not, we may be left behind.

22. India is actively seeking closer and wider engagement with its Asian neighbours, including its immediate neighbours. India's 'Look East' train has an exciting journey ahead. We invite Bangladesh on board this train.

015. Address by Minister of State E. Ahamed at All India Annual Conference for Haj 2006.

New Delhi, June 6, 2005.

Hon'ble Kunwar Natwar Singhji, External Affairs Minister,
Hon'ble Shri Praful Patelji, Minister of State for Civil Aviation (Independent Charge)

Chairman and members of Haj Committee of India,
Hon'ble Members of Parliament,
Chairmen and members of the State Haj Committees, Distinguished Religious Scholars,
Members of the Media,

Ladies & Gentlemen,

I consider it my great privilege to welcome you all to the All India Annual Conference for Haj 2006. While I have had the opportunity of being associated in one form or another with Haj arrangements of the Indian pilgrims for over one decade, I consider it my greatest privilege to have been the Minister of State for External Affairs incharge of Haj matters for the past one year. It is a matter of added satisfaction that today's All India Annual Haj Conference is taking place well in time and would provide useful guidance for the Haj 2006. We are indeed grateful that the Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs Shri Natwar Singhji has been able to find time from his very busy schedule to inaugurate the Conference today just as he had done last year. I am also grateful to my dear colleague Hon'ble Minister of Civil Aviation, Shri Praful Patelji to make it convenient to grace this occasion and to share, inter alia, his vision about Haj 2006 air operations. It's a matter of fact that Ministries of External Affairs and Civil Aviation always share the responsibilities of the Haj pilgrims.

The Annual Haj Conference is indeed an institutionalized platform for all stakeholders in Haj such as the political leadership, the Haj Committees, the Government departments, the Airlines representatives, Parliamentarians and learned men of religion to air their views through transparent discussions, exchange of opinions and brainstorming sessions on the Haj arrangements. The inputs and the insights provided by the Haj Conferences held in the past have enabled the Government to streamline the official framework entrusted with the Haj management and improve in a systematic manner through administrative and legislative measures the existing scheme of Haj operations. The Conference also provides a forum for policy pronouncements by the Government – Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs would be pronouncing the new feature's of Haj 2006 policy shortly.

The Government and the Haj Committee of India continuously strive to improve the twin requirements of accommodation of pilgrims in Saudi Arabia and their air transport to and fro India. During my visit to Saudi Arabia in May 2005, I held extensive discussions with the new Saudi Haj Minister Dr. Fouad bin Abdussalam Al Farsi on the arrangements for the coming Haj. I am happy to state that I was able to convey suitably to the Saudi Haj Minister our requirements and concerns regarding the needs of our pilgrims. We also signed the Haj 2006 Agreement; you will be hearing the salient details of the agreement in the address of Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs.

The accommodation arrangements for Haj 2006 are being taken in hand in the right earnest. Building Selection Teams (BSTs) from various States have started visiting Saudi Arabia from 1st of this month. The work of Building Selection Teams will be monitored by the Building Selection Committees (BSCs) who are members of the Haj Committee of India. Our officials in Jeddah would be able to give you specific details of the arrangements that are being made for Haj 2006. I propose to make another visit to Jeddah, Makkah and Madina later this year for personally inspecting the various arrangements for our pilgrims.

As regards the air transport, officials of the Ministry of Civil Aviation and Air India have had preliminary discussions with the Saudi Arabian Airlines in April and May this year. Air India/Indian Airlines and Saudi Arabian Airlines will jointly organize the air transport of all our pilgrims between India and the Kingdom.

Being aware of the problems being faced by the pilgrims going through the Private Tour Operators (PTOs) and taking note of the Saudi Arabian authorities' instructions and guidelines with respect to Haj arrangements by PTOs, the Government has started the registration of PTOs from Haj 2003 onwards. There have been positive results as the number of the cases of pilgrims remaining unattended in Saudi Arabia has considerably declined. Through consultations with the State Haj Committees from this year, we would continue to streamline the activities of the PTOs further for the overall welfare of pilgrims going through the PTOs.

I would like to convey my gratitude to the Hon'ble Minister of External Affairs and Minister of State for Civil Aviation for making it convenient for themselves to be present with us today.

I thank one and all who are here for their gracious presence.

016. Address by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh
at the All India Annual Conference for Haj 2006.

New Delhi, June 6, 2005.

Shri Praful Patel, Minister of State for Civil Aviation (Independent Charge), Janab E. Ahamed Saheb, Minister of State for External Affairs,
Janab Tanveer Ahmed Saheb, Chairman of the Haj Committee, Distinguished Parliamentarians and religious scholars,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am very glad to be amidst you all once again to inaugurate the All India Annual Haj Conference for Haj 2006. I compliment and congratulate all those involved in making the arrangements for the Haj and for their contribution to the smooth and successful organization of Haj 2005 which passed off without any untoward incident. I am glad to learn that a total of 131116 Indian pilgrims have performed Haj in 2005 which is an all-time high.

I am sure you all would also like to join me in expressing appreciation to my colleague, Shri E. Ahamed, for his keen interest in bringing about improvements in Haj affairs. His immense experience of handling Haj matters is very useful in formulating appropriate policies for Haj management.

The Annual Haj Conference is a very important event in Haj management as Central and State Haj Committees, Members of Parliament, religious scholars and the Government officials, who participate in the Conference, jointly review and deliberate upon the experiences of the previous Haj. They also discuss inadequacies and flaws, if any, for ensuring better arrangements for the next Haj.

Similarly, after every Haj, a composite high-level delegation comprising officers from the Ministries of External Affairs and Civil Aviation, Air India, Chairman and members of Haj Committee of India visits Saudi Arabia to review the arrangements made for the pilgrims in the previous Haj. The shortcomings identified in the arrangements in the previous Haj, if any, are examined, in consultation with the Saudi authorities/agencies to bring about further improvements in the next Haj. With this end in view, after conclusion of Haj 2005, Shri Rajiv Sikri, Secretary (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs, led a composite delegation of officials from the Ministries of External Affairs, Civil Aviation and Air India, members from the Haj Committee of India, including its Chairman, to Saudi Arabia in April 2005 to review the arrangements made during Haj 2005 and to plan for Haj 2006.

Shri E. Ahamed, Minister of State for External Affairs also visited Saudi Arabia in May 2005 and met with the Saudi Minister of Haj. The two Ministers also signed the Annual Haj Agreement for Haj 2006. India was once again among the first countries to send a delegation to Saudi Arabia for discussions on the arrangements for the coming Haj and to sign the Agreement with the Saudi Haj Ministry. Our Haj arrangements are acknowledged as one of the best in the world and appreciated by the Saudi authorities. Government is always sensitive to the needs of the Hajis and will continue to streamline and improve the arrangements. As a result of deliberations during these two visits, various decisions for the overall welfare of Indian Haj pilgrims performing Haj have been taken. Some of these decisions are:

- i) The number of Indian pilgrims who would perform Haj 2006 has been increased from 127,000 to 137,000. Of these, 82,000 pilgrims would perform Haj through the Haj Committee of India, which is the same number as during Haj 2005; the remaining 55,000 pilgrims, up from 45,000 during Haj 2005, would perform Haj through the Private Tour Operators. I take this opportunity to thank the Government of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia for increasing the pilgrims quota in 2005 and enabling 10,000 more pilgrims to perform Haj 2005 under the Haj Committee even after the signing of the Haj Agreement.
- ii) For their journey to Saudi Arabia, 100,000 pilgrims would proceed from various embarkation points in India to Jeddah; the remaining 37,000 pilgrims would proceed directly to Madina. For their return journey, 97,000 pilgrims will return to India from Jeddah while the remaining 40,000 will return to India from Madina.

- iii) The space norm for accommodation of pilgrims in Makkah has been enhanced from 3 sq.m. to 3.5 sq. m. per pilgrim.
- iv) In addition to existing three categories of accommodation for pilgrims in Makkah, another category of accommodation is being introduced during Haj 2006 to bring in further economy in performance of Haj. Under this category, Indian pilgrims may opt to stay between 1001 to 1200 meters of the Haram Sharief at the rate of Saudi Riyal 1050 per person.
- v) Of the 82,000 pilgrims who would be performing Haj 2006 through the Haj Committee of India, 52,000 pilgrims are likely to be carried by Saudi Airlines and the remaining 30,000 by Air India.
- vi) Subject to further examination and approval, it is proposed to add Bhopal or Indore as an additional embarkation point during Haj 2006. I would also urge that Jodhpur be considered as an additional embarkation point due to considerable demand from that area.
- vii) It has been decided that the food arrangements existing before Haj 2005 would be reintroduced for Haj 2006.

Realizing the increased interest amongst Indian pilgrims to perform the Haj, the Government had increased the number of Haj Committee pilgrims from 72,000 to 82,000 during Haj 2005. As you would have noted, for Haj 2006 while the number of Haj Committee pilgrims has been retained at 82,000, the number of pilgrims who are likely to perform Haj through the private tour operators is being increased from 45,000 to 55,000 which would take the number of persons performing Haj 2006 to a new high.

The Government had taken a decision during Haj 2005 to remove the restrictive measures which were introduced during Haj 2004 by the previous government in respect of availing of subsidized airfares by the pilgrims performing Haj through the Haj Committee of India. The Government is committed to take whatever further measures are required to bring about more transparency and efficiency in the Haj arrangements that have been in force over the last several decades.

During Haj 2005, we had achieved a major milestone as the opportunity for the Haj Committee pilgrims to land in Medina directly from India was made available. This has been greatly appreciated by the pilgrims and has also resulted in saving of some expenditure and facilitating better movement of pilgrims. More Indian pilgrims will arrive in Medina directly from India under this arrangement during Haj 2006.

As welfare and well-being of Haj pilgrims has always been a matter of utmost concern to the Government, I would urge the Haj Committee of India, the State Haj Committees, our Missions in Saudi Arabia and all concerned with Haj affairs to give higher priority for the orientation of the prospective Haj pilgrims so that their pilgrimage is both proper and satisfying. The Government would also continue to deploy administrative, para-medical and medical personnel to look after and assist the Indian pilgrims during their stay in Saudi Arabia. The deputationists will be chosen carefully to give representation to various regional and linguistic backgrounds. Besides, various State Governments will be deputing over 150 Khadimul Hujjaj to provide additional support. During Haj 2006, State Haj Committees are being allowed to depute one Khadim-ul-Hujjaj for every 300 pilgrims instead of every 500 pilgrims as at present. I would request all States to kindly send the requisite numbers this year to Saudi Arabia. In addition, the Consulate General of India in Jeddah will be hiring the services of local volunteers from the Indian community.

There has been extensive use of Information Technology in Haj Management. There is total computerization of pilgrim location and movement including of all those performing Haj through the private tour operators. The website of the Indian Consulate General in Jeddah, provides the whereabouts of all the pilgrims and their relatives in India can communicate with them during their stay in Saudi Arabia.

There has been considerable improvement in the comfort level of Haj Committee pilgrims in recent years. Complaints however continue to pour in from some pilgrims performing the Haj through private tour operators about deficiencies in accommodation and other facilities as promised by the private tour operators. As the Government is ultimately responsible for all Indian pilgrims, whether going through the Haj Committee or individual tour operators, we continue to strengthen the regulatory framework to prevent exploitation of the pilgrims by private tour operators to ensure that these pilgrims are also able to perform a proper and satisfying Haj.

I take this opportunity to briefly touch upon two other areas of concern to the Government. Firstly, as you are aware, the new Haj Committee Act 2002 which repealed the old law of 1959, provides for a more representative and broad-based character to the Haj Committee, envisages better financial accountability, provides for Parliamentary scrutiny and sets out clearly the responsibilities of the various organs concerned with Haj management. The new Haj Act confers statutory recognition to State Haj Committees. Six Members of the Central Haj Committee are to be elected from the six zones through the State Haj Committees. However, it is a matter of great concern that some of the States have still not constituted their Haj Committees in accordance with the new Act. I would like to renew my request, which I made at this Conference last year, that those States who have so far not constituted their State Haj Committees in pursuance of the new Act may please do so expeditiously so that the task of holding Zonal Elections can be undertaken without delay. I would also call upon all concerned to ensure that the audited accounts of the Haj Committee of India w.e.f. 5th December, 2002 are placed before the Parliament without further delay.

On their part, the Government and the Haj Committee of India constantly strive to make the Haj as comfortable and affordable. While all possible measures are taken to cater to the diverse requirements of all Haj pilgrims, considering the magnitude of the logistics of movement, accommodation and air transport, it is not always easy to satisfy all the pilgrims. I would, therefore, request the pilgrims to show patience and understanding. As improvement in Haj Management is a continuous process, I on behalf of Government of India would like to assure you that we would consider all suggestions that would emerge from the deliberations of this Conference to bring further improvement in Haj management.

I extend my best wishes for a very successful All India Haj Conference.

017. Keynote address of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at Chatham House on: “India : The Next Decade”.

London, June 27, 2005.

Mr. Foreign Secretary, Professor Bulmer-Thomas, Mr. Martin Wolf, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted and honoured to have this opportunity of speaking at Chatham House, which, in its chequered existence, has done so much to erode, if not eliminate, the deeply entrenched and totally erroneous Anglo-Saxon ‘mantra’ that to have ideas or to be called an intellectual was not only reprehensible but a symptom of mental disorder. I am this morning venturing to share with you an idea or two. And let me assure you that the Foreign Minister of India is sound of mind and, to paraphrase E.M. Forster, ‘does not have an undeveloped heart’.

I also wish to express my appreciation to Foreign Secretary Jack Straw for his participation. We know of his long attachment to my country and the encouragement and support he has always given to the strengthening of our unique relationship.

It is appropriate that the Rajiv Gandhi Institute for Contemporary Studies should be associated with the forward-looking theme of the conference, a subject, which has been engaging global opinion. I had the privilege of being very closely associated with Rajiv Gandhi. He was a Prime Minister and personality who worked to realise an inspiring vision of India and the enthusiasm and promise he brought communicated itself to the people of India. He believed that with dynamism, dedication, determination, modern management and technological innovativeness, the social and economic challenges of the country could be met and overcome. He was already a man of the 21st Century when he became Prime Minister in 1984. He altered the stagnant mind-set of hundreds of millions of people in India.

A decade in today’s world is a long time in a nation’s life, given the acceleration, which occurs within dynamic societies and economies. Witness the transformation of India in the decade since we embraced economic liberalisation in the 90s. However, it seems to me from what respectable forecasting institutions have projected that India – together with China – are more the flavour of the century, than of the decade. McKinsey had forecast a steeply rising graph of India's economic rise some time ago. More recently, we have the report of Goldman Sachs, which predicts that India will be the third largest economy in dollar terms within 40 years (it already is the fourth largest economy in terms of purchasing parity). This was followed by the projection of multiple scenarios by the American National Intelligence Council. In every scenario they found a central global role for India. Most recently is a study by the Deutsche Bank, which brings forward the time, which may be required by India to become the third largest global economy. Many in the audience would be familiar with the recent special coverage given to the rise of India and China in the two leading economic papers of London, 'The Economist' and the 'Financial Times'. For the latter, Martin Wolf himself was responsible.

In the next decade, therefore, we could see India positioning itself for greater accomplishments as the century progresses. Today let me delineate the contours for our own map for 2005 – 2015.

Not so long ago India was a byword for poverty. This is no longer the case. But India is still a country with a large number of poor people. The number of the poor as a percentage of the population has been shrinking steadily but a fifth of the population is unable to escape from extreme poverty. Prosperity in a nation cannot be sectional. The national task is not complete until a life of decent living, education, health and real choice is offered to all its people, and not only to many, or even most, of its people. The core challenge before India, despite dramatic advances, therefore, will remain in the coming decade that of a developing country. It will be centred on full literacy, vastly improved statistics for maternal and infant mortality, acceptable standards of nutrition and healthcare. India is today in a confident mode, not a self-congratulatory one. We are mindful of the long and steep road still to be traversed to consign poverty to a historical memory. The policy of the Government headed by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh is determined on finding the right emphasis in public policy on the social agenda, expressed generally through the millennium development goals. Priority is given to rural infrastructure and poverty elimination.

I have, in a light-hearted manner sometimes remarked that every statement about India is true – so is its opposite. Even before our economic surge, it had been said that India is a rich country with a lot of poor people.

India is now spoken of as a country of the future and of great potential.

Given our history, we can stretch our perspectives in evaluating the India phenomenon along several time horizons. We can take the shortest perspective of the economic reform and liberalisation process, which started in 1991 after a collapse in our balance of payments and the almost simultaneous collapse of the Soviet Union. The programme of elaborate economic reform had been initiated earlier, but this was a watershed. Dr. Manmohan Singh, as the then Finance Minister, played a pivotal role. The brisk momentum of reform since then has been maintained by all governments.

We recognise the sectors where galloping reform is immediately needed - infrastructure, pertaining to airports, railways, ports, roads, energy and telecommunications including mobile phones. Transaction costs in terms of time and expense will otherwise be a brake on both internal and external investment within the economy. Many advances have been made, but concentration of efforts will be redoubled in the decade to come.

In the coming decade, India offers partnership to the outside world in all areas of economic and IT activity, ranging from agro-processing, pharmaceuticals and manufacturing to higher - end services and knowledge based industries. In the next decade, the integration of India with the global economy will grow apace and we will seek partnerships and alliances to mutual advantage. Potential partners abroad could do well to seek out the 'India Advantage' as a solutions hub, a remote service provider, a base in sophisticated research and development, manufacturing, joint venture partner, a location for captive investment or a shareholder in exploring commercial spin-off potential in new technologies.

Areas of cooperation would spread from traditional exports to high technology areas such as the full range of information technology, life sciences, biotechnology, bio-informatics, materials sciences, applications of nano-technology, sophisticated data and systems processing, business and knowledge process outsourcing or animation and other processes in the area of entertainment. We can jointly define a new understanding of globalisation in the next decade. In the partnerships India will be forging in the next decade, the UK will occupy a special place, given the many features of our unique relationship. Globalisation must have a more benign profile. The profit incentive, admirable in many ways, must not disregard ethical and moral imperatives.

Let's now turn to India's foreign policy. Speaking on behalf of a country prepared to assume a pivotal role in its own region as well as in the global community, let me enunciate our foreign policy objectives and vision for the coming decade. Foreign policy is what you do. Diplomacy is how you do it.

Our foreign policy has been an independent one since the days of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, and must remain thus. Further, being a national undertaking, it has enjoyed broad national consensus, barring a few minor hiccups, over these last fifty-eight years.

There are no precedents for managing a democracy of 1.2 billion people. The preamble to our Constitution enjoins the dignity of the individual and the unity and integrity of the nation. So, for ourselves we seek, first and foremost, security and economic prosperity. These are not clichés, but essential to our providing decent living to a billion-strong population. These objectives must motivate India's interaction with the world in all matters, whether they are political, economic, strategic, or cultural.

Ideologies, in their traditional garbs are taking a backseat and rightly so. The international agenda has to be realistic when enumerating its contemporary priorities - human resources, knowledge capacities, economic enterprise, infrastructure and strategic strengths. Then there are its innovative skills, natural resources, the successes of Indians living and working abroad and their cultural influence. These elements, combined with the physical space that a nation occupies, contour its geopolitical worth and provide the stimulus for its aspirations. India is fortunate in many of these aspects.

With the major countries and regions of the world, we are committed to an energetic schedule of political, economic and security exchanges. There already exist greater trade and bi-directional investments, people-to-people exchanges, and cultural interchanges.

With the US, we have a strategic partnership that spans a wide range of cooperative endeavour. Dr. Manmohan Singh would be making an official visit to the United States next month and addressing a joint session of Congress. Our relations with the US have never been better. With Russia, we have broad ranging co-operation and have embarked on major programmes on energy security. Russia is helping us build a civilian nuclear power plant and we are investing in Russian oil fields. With China, while continuing a dialogue on our border difference, we have greatly expanded the areas of our political, economic, commercial and cultural interaction. Earlier this month, I visited Vladivostok for the 4th trilateral meeting of the Foreign Ministers of India, Russia and China. We discussed issues of common interest including trilateral projects.

We are all aware of the dangers of the growing phenomenon of terrorism, proliferation of technologies and weapons of mass destruction by authoritarian and failed States and unstable military regimes. In the UK, you have shown sensitivity to our concerns on terrorism.

Today we need to address new challenges with all the ingenuity and capabilities at our disposal. The UK's Strategy Paper for the Foreign & Commonwealth Office in December 2003 outlines these objectives as the foremost of its international priorities. The paper also identifies India as one of the countries the UK wished to develop a strategic partnership with.

During Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's visit in September 2004, a Joint Declaration – 'Towards a New and Dynamic Partnership' was adopted. Both sides agreed to upgrade bilateral relations through a comprehensive strategic partnership. This includes, among a wide menu of activities, cooperation in civilian nuclear activities and space programmes, high technology trade, basic and applications research, defence cooperation including co-production of defence equipment, apart from joint action against terrorism.

We have a dialogue with the UK on civilian space and nuclear cooperation, export controls, proliferation and disarmament.

India has an expanding technological base, and our space programme has proved its potential and worth. Our energy requirements are enormous, and to sustain the momentum of rapid economic growth we need to tap nuclear energy, for which the cooperation of the international community is welcome.

India is a responsible nuclear power, committed to tight control over proliferation of technologies of weapons of mass destruction, a commitment that has not necessarily been matched by some signatories of the NPT. I also recently piloted the WMD and their delivery systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill in the Indian Parliament, which enshrines this commitment into national law.

Prime Minister Tony Blair has invited Dr. Manmohan Singh to participate, along with other outreach countries, in the talks on climate change and other current global economic issues, at the G-8 Summit in Gleneagles in early July, 2005. That meeting, we hope, will come up with workable solutions to promote a cleaner environment and greater energy efficiency.

We look forward to Mr. Blair's visit to Delhi in September for the 6th India-EU Summit, which we see as especially important in our relations with the EU, for it will launch the India-EU Joint Action Plan. This is the first such comprehensive Action Plan that we have with any of our partners. The Action Plan gives us the opportunity to intensify our engagement with each other over the whole range of issues on which we interact, from enhancing opportunities for partnership and alliances in trade, investment and technology to strengthening joint efforts to fight terrorism. It seeks to give shape to our strategic partnership with the EU, launched at The Hague in November last year at the landmark 5th India-EU Summit. We have been following with great attention, the recent deliberations in the EU as to the directions in which its future lies. We have no doubt that the EU will emerge an even stronger partner from this period of introspection.

India is a force for stability within Asia. It is building stronger ties with its extended neighbourhood – Central Asia, the Persian Gulf, Indian Ocean and Southeast Asia – through greater economic, commercial and security engagement. We have civilizational links with the Arab world and have always supported the just aspirations of the Palestinian people and the establishment of an independent state of Palestine. We were happy to see the revival of the peace process and hope it leads to the establishment of a sovereign, independent and viable state of Palestine with safe and secure and well defined borders, in line with the relevant UNSC Resolutions and the Quartet Road Map, living side by side with the state of Israel.

The existing world order needs to take into cognisance the aspirations and hopes of the Islamic world. India is a good example of how this can be done through democratic and consensual means, thereby strengthening the forces of coherence and integration within societies.

Our relationship with Africa and with Latin America finds new substance. We believe that techno-economic cooperation amongst us holds great promise and, in this endeavour, the Indian private sector is fully involved. The India-Brazil-South Africa initiative brings three continents together in the pursuit of development, and would prove the relevance of South-South cooperation for an effective say in international affairs.

As regards South Asia, it is now a region increasingly aware of the benefits of regionalism. Although SAARC was formed eighteen years ago, it is only in the last two years that we have come together with an economic and social agenda of some purpose. Problems do exist, but leaders should not contemplate problems; they should find solutions.

India's neighbourhood and look east policy, pragmatic and fortified with a blend of political sagacity and economic confidence, is helping prevail over old misgivings in the region. Our composite dialogue with Pakistan shows promise. India will even take unilateral measures where necessary, to direct the building of a strongly interconnected subcontinent, and thus promote the well being of this quarter of humanity. Given our size and resources, we recognise that India has a special responsibility in switching on the engine of South Asian prosperity. Economic progress would also yield complementary political benefits. We know it is a complex process, but we will stay engaged.

Expanding links with the economies of South East Asia, and with Japan, China, and South Korea, could create a community of Asian dynamism, one that augments our capabilities and multiplies our prospects. The East Asian summit to be held later this year will articulate our common purpose and ambitions.

Thus, even the new dynamism in India-China relations will have a significant economic and geo-political impact in Asia. I am told that, today, any critical thinking on an issue needs to be tapped from the 'blog'. One recent blog says, "The Financial Times obsesses over China and India even more than the Wall Street Journal does. One did not think it possible, and yet there it is." For this, I believe we also have to thank our Chairman, Mr. Martin Wolf, here who plays an important role in determining what the Financial Times writes about.

A decade from now the population of our planet is predicted to reach 7.2 billion people, with more than 1.4 billion of them being Chinese and 1.2 billion being Indian. Of the Indian population, some 68% or more than 820 million will be in the active working age group. By 2015, the technological, demographic and social changes of Asia will influence every aspect of global and local existence.

In all of Asia, in West Asia, in the Indian Ocean region, and the Asia-Pacific region as a whole, India, given its size and economic reach, is an essential partner in any arrangement that wants to successfully promote stability and security. From preventing failed states becoming havens for terrorism, to preventing trans-national crimes, to protecting the sea-lanes of Asia, to spurring regional development, we see scope for a much broader collaborative regional and multilateral agenda for India, regionally and multilaterally. Our approach emphasises dialogue, partnership and cooperation. It aims to reinforce the principles of democracy, pluralism, secularism, economic development and multilateralism.

The function of multilateralism as a civilized clearinghouse for threats that face nations collectively is not a recent phenomenon. Since its founding in 1945, the United Nations is engaged in the most intense process of introspection in its history. Sixty years down the road, if there is any unanimity of views within the UN membership, it is on the need for reform, among other things, to address the democratic deficit that exists. Such reform cannot be selective or piecemeal, but must comprehensively address all the shortcomings of the current arrangements. Recent crises warn us that it is vital to truly reflect the collective will of the community of nations.

There is also the conviction that the need for reform is nowhere greater than in the Security Council. The current permanent membership of the Council represents the world of 1945. Most of its decisions pertain to developing countries, those countries that find little representation in this most critical of decision-making bodies. An effective way to achieve global stability would be through greater consultation. A collective voice is heard and heeded better.

India's presence as a permanent member of the Security Council is the best means to authenticate and reinforce the representative character of the Council. The weight of the opinion of a billion people, representing the world's largest democracy, would validate the agenda and decisions of the Council in the perspective of the vast majority of developing countries.

India, as a founder member, has always been a team player in the United Nations. It has been at the forefront of the struggle against colonialism and apartheid. It has advocated some of the most practical yet far-reaching proposals to secure nuclear disarmament. It has been one of the largest contributors of troops to United Nations peacekeeping efforts all over the world, particularly in Africa. India has advocated greater flows of assistance to the less developed countries, even as it has contributed significantly towards such efforts, despite its own limited resources.

We value the support for our candidature that the United Kingdom has extended and look forward to working with it during the current deliberations in the UN General Assembly.

A decade from now is 2015. And 2015 is also a year for which the world also has set some serious goals for itself—the Millennium Development Goals. With so large a percentage of the global population that is presently disadvantaged, if Asia does not meet these goals, if the economic potential of Asia, and India within it, are not harnessed to the task, global goals will not be met.

All this adds up. For India, the next decade will be a great mosaic of opportunity and challenge. It will also be a time to forge stronger partnerships in our quest to play a leading role in harnessing the enormous power of this globalising inter-dependent world to build a fairer rule based system that is just and sustainable. We must have globalisation with a human face.

Indian and the UK have a unique relationship. This has now to be yoked to the opportunities of tomorrow. Compatibility between us is already leading to a substantial inflow of Indian companies, capital, students and visitors into the UK. We are natural partners, particularly in the field of knowledge and services, apart from the growing strength in manufacturing in India.

The community of Indian origin in the UK has been a model of achievement, professionalism and positive integration. Its contribution to national prosperity dedication to excellence is recognised and applauded here. I hope that in the coming decade it will play an even more creative role in building mutually beneficial partnerships between the country where it has ancient roots and where it has struck new ones.

India and the UK¹ have shared beliefs in the values by which we govern ourselves and in the necessity for significant global action in the eradication of poverty and in addressing the comprehensive multilateral agenda before us. We can be a model of innovative bilateral partnership in the fields of academic, technological, cultural and economic exchanges. The coming decade must see this promise realised through the partnership of our peoples. I am confident that this conference will move us in the right direction towards this end.

Ladies and gentlemen, the next decade will certainly be worth looking forward to. But India is not stopping with a decade. A century, or longer, is good too.

Vientiane (Laos), July 28, 2005.

Colleagues, Ladies & Gentlemen,

It is a great pleasure for me to be present here with our partner countries for the formal announcement of our Vision Statement on a new Asia-Pacific Partnership on Clean Development and Climate.

that during his meeting with Straw, he had strongly urged him to revise the advisory to the British citizens against visiting the State of Jammu and Kashmir. Mr. Singh said that his British counterpart had "promised" to take a sympathetic look at the matter. He pointed out that there were 7, 000 tourists in Kashmir and major attractions such as Srinagar, Gulmarg and Pehalgam were quite safe. The issue came up during the talks between the two leaders ahead of the Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's visit to the UK in July to attend the summit of G-8 nations in Scotland, to which India was also invited. EAM expressed satisfaction with the talks saying that it was always useful to have such meetings. "You can discuss bilateral issues and sort out little hitches." The question of advisory on Kashmir came up when a journalist asked the Minister to elaborate what the "hitches" were. At the joint press conference the two Ministers said they discussed a range of bilateral and international issues, including the India – Pakistan peace process, British Prime Minister Tony Blair's visit to India in September and the expansion of the United Nations Security Council. Mr. Straw reiterated his Government's support for India to become a "full member" of the S.C. On Kashmir Mr. Singh told a Pakistani journalist that India never "shied" away from discussing the issue. "Prime Minister has said that short of redrawing the map... we are open to discussing everything."

The Vision Statement refers to the Delhi Declaration, which made a significant departure from previous such declarations by emphasizing the importance of sustainable development and the need for looking at development while considering any climate change approach.

I would also like to recall here that at the World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg, we all agreed to the need for access to affordable and reliable energy for all. Despite progress at many levels, even today 43% of our households still do not have access to electricity. With its growing economy, India's energy needs are going to increase in the future. We are, however, also conscious of the need to develop in a balanced manner and have, therefore, taken a number of steps at the national level to achieve energy efficiency.

You are aware that recently at the Gleneagles Summit, India has proposed a new paradigm for international cooperation to deal with climate change, which essentially calls for a way to deal with intellectually property rights regime (IPRs), which comes in the way of transfer of clean technologies from developed countries to developing countries, additional financial resources to facilitate the transfer of technology and collaborative research between developed and developing countries. These new ideas presented by India have been welcomed at Gleneagles.

We welcome the opportunity to participate in this partnership, which is expected to develop and transfer cleaner, more efficient technologies to meet not only our individual national pollution reduction targets but also our energy security needs.

I am particularly pleased that new technologies such as nano-technologies, advanced bio-technology, next generation nuclear fission and fusion technology have been included for collaboration between the partners.

I hope that this action-oriented partnership will be able to produce quick results on the ground to help countries like ours to grow in a sustainable manner.

I wish this partnership, all the best.

019. Vision statement of Australia, China, India, the Republic of Korea and the United States of America for a New Asia-Pacific Partnership on Clean Development and Climate.

Vientiane, July 28, 2005.

Development and poverty eradication are urgent and overriding goals internationally. The World Summit on Sustainable Development made clear the need for increased access to affordable, reliable and cleaner energy and the international community agreed in the Delhi Declaration on Climate Change and Sustainable Development on the importance of the development agenda in considering any climate change approach.

We each have different natural resource endowments and sustainable development and energy strategies, but we are already working together and will continue to work to achieve common goals. By building on the foundation of existing bilateral and multilateral initiatives, we will enhance cooperation to meet both our increased energy needs and associated challenges, including those related to air pollution, energy security, and greenhouse gas intensities.

To this end, we will work together, in accordance with our respective national circumstances, to create a new partnership to develop, deploy and transfer cleaner, more efficient technologies and to meet national pollution reduction, energy security and climate change concerns, consistent with the principles of the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC).

The partnership will collaborate to promote and create an enabling environment for the development, diffusion, deployment and transfer of existing and emerging cost-effective, cleaner technologies and practices, through concrete and substantial cooperation so as to achieve practical results. Areas for collaboration may include, but not be limited to: energy efficiency, clean coal, integrated gasification combined cycle, liquefied natural gas, carbon capture and storage, combined heat and power, methane capture and use, civilian nuclear power, geothermal, rural/village energy systems, advanced transportation, building and home construction and operation, bioenergy, agriculture and forestry, hydropower, wind power, solar power, and other renewables.

The partnership will also cooperate on the development, diffusion, deployment and transfer of longer-term transformational energy technologies that will promote economic growth while enabling significant reductions in greenhouse gas intensities. Areas for mid-to-long-term collaboration may include, but not be limited to: hydrogen, nanotechnologies, advanced biotechnologies, next-generation nuclear fission, and fusion energy.

The partnership will share experiences in developing and implementing our national sustainable development and energy strategies, and explore opportunities to reduce the greenhouse gas intensities of our economies.

We will develop a non-binding compact in which the elements of this shared vision, as well as the ways and means to implement it, will be further defined. In particular, we will consider establishing a framework for the partnership, including institutional and financial arrangements and ways to include other interested and like-minded countries.

The partnership will also help the partners build human and institutional capacity to strengthen cooperative efforts, and will seek opportunities to engage the private sector. We will review the partnership on a regular basis to ensure its effectiveness.

The partnership will be consistent with and contribute to our efforts under the UNFCCC and will complement, but not replace, the Kyoto Protocol.

Delhi, August 15, 2005.

As a result of our policy in Jammu & Kashmir, the State is once again on the path of peace and progress. It is our humanitarian obligation that we assist the State in all possible ways so that the people there can live in peace and harmony. Terrorists have never been the friends of the people of Kashmir. As long as they continue their terrorist attacks, our Armed Forces will be alert and give them a fitting response. In this conflict, common citizens may also be affected at times. I have said before and I am repeating once again, that there is no issue that cannot be resolved through a process of discussion and dialogue. Our doors are always open and will continue to be open for anyone interested in dialogue. I invite everyone to join us to discuss the problems of the state of Jammu & Kashmir so that its people can lead a life of peace and dignity. If violence continues, then our response too will be hard. I am aware that the Government of Pakistan has put some checks on the activities of terrorists from its soil. However, it is not possible to achieve success through half-hearted efforts. It is necessary that the entire infrastructure of terrorism is totally dismantled.

In the context of terrorism and extremism, development and security have an intrinsic relationship. We have managed to face extremism successfully through a democratic process. However, it is imperative that a democratic government should be able to differentiate between the genuine problems of people and the designs of terrorists. Today, there are a number of challenges in our security environment such as terrorism, communal violence, atrocities on women and exploitation of dalits and adivasis. Our security forces have been facing the daunting task of controlling extremist violence admirably. Extremism is a challenge, which requires a united response from all of us. However, it is also necessary to look at a political resolution of this problem. Often extremism has its roots in backwardness and lack of economic development. It is not easy to handle problem of extremism in isolation. However, by addressing it in all its dimensions — social, political, economic and security — in an integrated manner, I am confident that we will be successful in checking it.

India has always been a country, which loves peace. Its destiny is intrinsically linked to those of its neighbours. Our goal has always been the prosperity and happiness of our citizens. Hence, we have always sought the friendship of our neighbours, although at times, this has not been fully successful. There seems to be some success in our search for peace and harmony now. Many problems of South Asia are similar, of which poverty and illiteracy are the most widespread. It is possible for us to eliminate these in the region by working together.

The composite dialogue process with Pakistan is continuing. As a result, we have been able to reopen the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad highway, which was a long pending demand of the people and restarted the bus service on this route, a step which has been widely welcomed. Talks are going on to open similar links from points in other states.

Discussions are also going on a gas pipeline from Iran to India via Pakistan. Once this is completed, we will be able to address a major constraint affecting our economy.

It is our sincere hope that we work with all our neighbours in South Asia to effectively address the challenges of poverty, unemployment and disease. If India and Pakistan are able to work together, then we will have many opportunities for making our countries prosperous. I am confident that we will be able to fulfill this vision.

We have had historic links and relations with Afghanistan. It is our desire to see Afghanistan prosperous and strong. In a few days, I will be going to Afghanistan. We will try to strengthen and support democracy and economic growth in all possible ways.

Our largest neighbour is China with whom we have a centuries old relationship, a relationship from which both of us have learnt a lot and imbibed a lot. We are today willing and ready to deepen our trade and cultural relations with China for the benefit of the two nations. The agreement arrived at between our two countries in April has paved the way for a closer relationship.

I greet the people of Sri Lanka, Mauritius, Nepal, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Maldives and Myanmar and assure them with utmost sincerity that India is willing to work together with them for promoting development, prosperity and peace in the region.

My visit to the United States has been a major step in promoting friendship with that country. By deepening our economic and technological relations, we will be accelerating our own growth. Simultaneously, our two democracies can work together to strengthen democracy in the world. Russia is an old friend who has helped us in difficult times. We will deepen our friendly relations with Russia.

We also wish to deepen our relations with the countries to the East. The recently concluded trade agreement with Singapore is a major step in improving our economic engagement with the region. We will be entering into many more such agreements in future.

At this point, I would like to emphasize that the contribution of Indians and persons of Indian origin settled abroad in ensuring that our efforts are successful is enormous. They have not only traveled to far off lands to achieve their dreams of prosperity for themselves and their children, but have also played a stellar role in changing the world's perception of India. The world today sees India as a major knowledge power whose people are skilled, competent, hard working and peace loving. Even within our own country, our scientists, doctors, engineers and scholars have contributed substantially in the achievements of our nation. We are proud of all of them.

021. Address by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the Brown University.

Rhode Island, September 23, 2005.

I am delighted to be with all of you this afternoon and consider it a privilege to be invited to deliver the inaugural India Lecture at Brown University. I am especially grateful to the Watson Institute for International Studies for taking this initiative. I know that you have a large South Asian alumni but that is not the only reason to select the theme that I have for the lecture. India has a larger message for the world, one that acquires even greater relevance as we demonstrate an ability to meet major challenges of our times. I hope my argument is, therefore, viewed as more than a national case made by a Foreign Minister.

2. Certainly, I would like to believe that three decades as a diplomat have enabled me to bring some objectivity to the subject. Two subsequent decades in political life led to a deeper understanding of the daily struggles of people who articulate through their routine an outlook to life. As I seek to balance the two and reflect on the intricacies of our social structure, I can only imagine how bewildering we - in John Kenneth Galbraith's famous phrase 'a functioning anarchy' - must be to others. It is said that when President Ulysses Grant went on a world tour and finally reached Japan, his meeting with the Meiji Emperor - which must have been a cultural experience in itself - saw them both express their perplexity about India. One can almost imagine them agreeing on the notion that everything that is said about India is true, and so too is its opposite!

3. This India, so fascinating and yet so incomprehensible to many, is today emerging from the recesses of history and assuming a prominent place in the global arena. It seeks to be understood better but its unique nature makes that very process a challenging endeavour. India's rise, for example, has not been an exercise in assertion on past traditional patterns in world history. Instead, it has been incremental to the point of being imperceptible, and natural enough to be harmonious. Demographic trends and historical traditions have come together to make India, along with the United States, China, Europe, Japan and Russia, among the key players of this century. This was obviously not preordained but a consequence of policy choices, governance quality and societal mores. The scale and complexity of our achievements merit serious evaluation. After all, it is not every country that, even while addressing primary issues like health, shelter and literacy, is simultaneously able to compete at a global level in technology, business and culture. What makes this phenomenon further worth studying is the framework in which these processes of change are unfolding. The message and the medium are both equally instructive to others facing similar problems. Our emergence has a particular implication for the United States, another large multi-cultural democracy.

4. When India became independent 58 years ago, we made decisions that, even in retrospect, can only be described as incredibly brave. Consider that we were emerging from two centuries of colonial rule and poverty, illiteracy and obscurantism were still rife. Yet, as early as 1931, Mahatma Gandhi and the Indian leadership chose to opt for a democratic form of Government with universal adult franchise as its basis. It was this bold step that actually took democracy beyond its Euro-Atlantic confines and gave it a universal character. Till then, India was considered more an embodiment of a civilization than a definition of a conventional nation state. It took a democratic construct to bring together its very many languages, ethnicities and customs and provide it a firm binding force. Serving as a common denominator for unity to come out of this enormous diversity, democracy enabled our people to become participants in national rebuilding and underlined their interest in its success. Our leaders at the time of independence could have easily opted to be a one-party state. Many other post-colonial societies did and the Congress party certainly dominated the political scene. It is a tribute to their wisdom that they saw our future in political pluralism. Elections over the years at various levels have strengthened people's self-perception as stakeholders in the system. Democracy also facilitated the rapid dissolution of kingdoms and princely states that dotted the Indian map when the British finally left and thereby, laid the foundation for a modern state.

Americans, perhaps more than other people, can identify with an exercise of constructing a society on principles of freedom, human rights and rule of law. Although two centuries apart, there are striking similarities between the debates in our two countries during the process of constitution making. The difference was that India's circumstances were infinitely more challenging. The success of Indian democracy transcends cultural and geographical limitations earlier ascribed to the political values on which they are based.

5. The building of a democratic India has not been an easy exercise. There is no historical precedent for a billion people determining their collective destiny through a mechanism of consent. There is no blueprint or textbook that sets out a road map. We have improvised along our way, trusting to the innate wisdom of our people. It is one of the great wonders of our time that a largely illiterate society – only 14% were educated in 1947- could address their problems with such maturity and moderation. Some credit must go as well to the manner in which traditional ways, particularly village-level self-government, have been adapted to address contemporary challenges. Our approach also took into account that centralised prescriptions are not always the most effective for problem solving. Establishing democratic structures and making them durable was highly dependent on effectively utilising local and regional knowledge that is ingrained in every society. In India's case, by tapping into traditions of pluralism and networks at various levels, democracy emerged as a credible political way for post-colonial India rather than a mere imitation of colonial forms. Structures at local, regional and federal levels ensure that identities are maintained and reconciled at the same time. There are nations that apprehend the consequences of autonomy for their integrity and see in federalism a stepping stone for secessionism. Our experience, and yours for that matter, sends a contrary message. Multiple power structures, coexisting and reinforcing each other, is one more indication of respect for choice.

6. Elections in India currently encompass an electorate of almost 700 million. It is a political statistic not easy to digest. Equally worth noting is that these votes have often resulted in changes of Government at both the federal and state level. It is the peaceful transfer of power that is the true test of democracy. Not all societies claiming to be one have passed it. India has with flying colours! The Indian experiment has broken new ground in many ways. Over the last half-century, dissidents - regional, ethnic, religious or socio-economic- have found an accommodating political culture that has aided their return to the mainstream. We have even had occasions when those who took up arms against the Indian State finally joined democratic politics and assumed leadership responsibilities. One testimony to our strength is the example – the first in history – of a Communist Party coming to power through electoral means. In the Indian ethos, no one is outside the pale and we have stretched the definition of an inclusive society to its limits and beyond. Ours is an exercise in continuous management of contradictions. So that we do not take it for granted, perhaps it is useful to reflect just for a moment what could have happened had this experiment not succeeded.

7. The roots that liberal democracy struck in India find some explanation in our tradition of social and religious pluralism. Unlike the West, where the separation of Church and State was a pre-requisite for secularism, its Indian manifestation appears to draw strength from an ethos of multiplicity and choice. The Indian intellectual tradition is an intensely individualistic one, as indeed are many schools of religious and philosophical thought. Secularism in Western intellectual tradition has a clearly non-religious connotation while the Indian understanding, in contrast, translates into equal respect for all religions. Transposed to the political level, it really captures the essence of democracy. It is no accident that the advocates of democracy in India like Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Nehru were also equally strong proponents of religious equality. Indeed, their vision gained popular acceptance and legitimacy precisely because it specifically addressed the needs thrown up by a complex social structure. They were careful not to fabricate an artificial majority culture in order to create a national identity. They were acutely conscious that in this vast land, everyone is a minority and the difference is only one of degree.

The internal balance of a society composed of minorities is distinctly different from one where a dominant majority sets its terms vis-à-vis its minorities. In such a paradigm, tolerance as an attitude is not enough because it appears too grudging and meagre. A stronger embrace of diversity has to be the working principle and its wholehearted acceptance a virtual necessity. We have, admittedly, forces within our society that seek to create a majoritarian culture by reshaping identities and self-perceptions. The reduction of the complexity of India into primitive religious definitions cannot succeed because it runs up against a contrary ground reality. The truth is that our people, secure in their identities, are ready to accept differences and can be non-conformist in their own ways. Diversity has accentuated rather than diminished our nationhood.

8. Democracy and secularism have not only been values that have sustained the development of modern India. They have also provided effective defences against terrorism unleashed by ideologies of intolerance and fundamentalism. India's battle in that regard predates 9/11 and no country has paid a higher price to safeguard its core democratic beliefs. Our ability to rise to this challenge has depended on the denial of ground fertile for the spread of such extremist thinking. This was made possible! because all sections of India believed that their grievances can be addressed through the democratic process. Admittedly, we have had difficult experiences where narrower identities have disrupted the social fabric. But in the long run, all communities understand that the Indian state does not discriminate. It is a testimony to the working of our systems that an organization like Al-Qaeda has, to date, not been able to recruit adherents in India. Global efforts at combating terrorism could look at the Indian example and examine whether our political culture has lessons that could be usefully applied elsewhere.

9. Pluralism and individualism are two sides of the same coin and they reflect themselves as much in economic activity as they do in the political. They are responsible for a long tradition of entrepreneurship and artisanship on which we have developed a modern economy that is now making itself felt in the global marketplace. The individualism of India is based on a history of intellectual questioning and challenges to the established system. The description of a million mutinies, even if one were to add zeros to its numbers and subtract from its intensity, speaks of a people in constant ferment. In more rigid societies, this could have had negative repercussions and probably harsh consequences. But India has been able to successfully harness these internal energies and use them as a force of progress. What should be particularly noted is that all the social and educational investments that we have made over the last six decades – from the Institutes of Technology to agricultural institutions – are paying off handsomely today. It is a peculiarity of India that education should emerge as such an effective means of social mobility.

By empowering the underclass, education has spread awareness and served as a leveller. Yet, in combination with other skills, it can provide the impetus for growth and wealth. It has fostered a culture of creativity and innovation that has found expression in our IT industry and other aspects of knowledge-based economy. At the same time, India's corporate sector is also busy establishing a reputation for high quality of standardised management and competitive business practices. Perhaps it takes something as contradictory as India to reconcile the anarchy of its creative endeavours with the discipline of its commitment to rule bound systems.

10. Amartya Sen in his book The Argumentative Indian has pointed out that the combination of internal pluralism and external receptivity has determined the Indian identity. Even though they are inextricably linked, the latter tends to be overshadowed by the former. Historically, India has been at the centre of migration of peoples and services. We have long been an importer and exporter of ideas as much as goods. India has always been a sanctuary for those who came out on the wrong side of politics and religion, and remains so to this day. We are a nation of bleeding hearts who wear them on our sleeves. Prof. Sen notes that India has been an integral part of the world in the most interactive sense and that ideological separatism militates against India's own heritage. While they are not without their problems, global processes have enriched India and the world over millennia. This could well explain why Indians have taken positively to the opening of their economy and its gradual integration with the global one. Reforms over the last fifteen years have unleashed a new promise of growth and brought India into global consciousness. The path of accelerated growth has raised a host of issues whose successful resolution can inspire others. To begin with, there are multiple challenges of raising large sections of our population out of poverty while addressing the simultaneous demands of a growing middle class for a better quality of life. One need not necessarily be pursued at the expense of the other and the two may well be linked. Connectivity, quite literally, can be part of the answer. We have gone through what in India has been known as the transistor revolution, followed by the television one and now by the cellular phone. Their cumulative impact in raising awareness and promoting social change is quite astonishing.

We have seen their role in rising aspirations that constantly raise the benchmarks for our performance. Modernisation of infrastructure and growing energy needs are two significant constraints on our growth currently. They are the equivalent of hardware and software if we are to continue on this path. It is our hope that having placed our faith in an open economy, the world would respond reciprocally, believing that there is much riding on our success.

11. The expansion of the Indian economy and its closer linkages with the global one also has profound regional repercussions. Within South Asia itself, India with a 7-8% growth rate is clearly the motor of development and many of its neighbours can reap benefits by taking advantage of expanding opportunities. Obviously, this is a choice that they themselves have to make and some have done so. Sri Lanka, which has the strongest economic linkages with India, has been posting impressive growth statistics despite its domestic difficulties. Similarly, Bhutan has emerged as a major energy provider and the resulting revenues have sharply boosted its per capita income. Nepal derives significant income from its large migrant population in India. Others have the same options if they wish to exercise it, whether in trade, energy or even in infrastructure. Public sentiment in the region as a whole appears to strongly favour the economic logic, as all of us see an improvement in living standards as the main priority.

As a result, the basis for constructive dialogue within the region is widening and new options to long-standing problems emerging in a way that could not have been anticipated earlier. In such a situation, national borders may not retain the salience that they currently have in the region. Our future clearly lies in building a vibrant and dynamic economic community. Beyond South Asia, the reforming Indian economy is steadily reaching out to the ASEAN on the east and to the Gulf on the west, restoring historical linkages snapped during the colonial era. The achievements of an open economy when set against the temper of an open society, foster pride without jingoism. Perhaps, this reflects the tradition of external receptivity mentioned earlier, but in itself, is a point worth noting.

12. An India benefiting from global processes will naturally be encouraged to contribute more to the international community. We have a record of doing our best even in the past when our means were far more limited. Today, India can bear much greater responsibilities. We have historically been major contributors to UN peacekeeping operations and will continue to remain so. During the tsunami last year, we were active as well in extending relief efforts to our neighbouring countries even while coping with our own problems back home. India is also emerging as an aid provider to countries in greater need and we seek to make our human resources training capacity available to others where possible. We are now in the forefront of fashioning responses to trans-national challenges as well in areas like health, terrorism and WMD proliferation. Only recently, we have partnered the US in important initiatives in these areas and have taken the lead in launching the UN Democracy Fund. Through these activities, India has demonstrated its character as a responsible state. A telling recognition of our record came in July this year when the United States agreed to resume nuclear energy cooperation taking into account our exemplary non-proliferation record. In putting forward our candidature for permanent membership of the UN Security Council, we are confident that the world will take into account our international contribution as well as our strong democratic credentials.

13. It is apparent that over the next decade, the major countries influencing the direction of global development would include the United States, the EU, Russia, Japan, China, and India. No country, however powerful, can shoulder global burdens in their entirety. India's objective is to establish the best of ties with these five key nations and we have succeeded to considerable measure. The United States has been an important focus of our efforts at reshaping the diplomatic landscape. Landmark agreements reached in July have the potential to fundamentally redefine our ties. Understandings in the field of energy, technology access, investment and trade, agriculture and health are testimony to a rapidly broadening agenda of cooperation. Our relationship has begun to translate into a larger global partnership. The EU, like the US, is an important source of trade, technology, and investment. The ambit of our cooperation is steadily expanding and we have strengthened our political understanding. Russia is a traditional friend and remains a major partner in security, defence, and technology. We share a strong interest in combating fundamentalist terrorism. Our ties with Japan are growing in substance and are particularly relevant to addressing infrastructural challenges. We are committed to ensuring the security of sea lanes as well. China, our largest neighbour, is a nation with whom we have had a history that has not been easy. Both countries have taken a forward-looking approach and our trade, in particular, has expanded dramatically. With each of these partners, our relationship will grow depending on how they contribute to peace and stability in South Asia, respond to India's core concerns, and meet our larger aspirations.

14. An inter-dependent world requires a more consensual decision-making process. We can arrive at cooperative management only if there is an agreement on fundamentals. Learning from each other and exchanging best practices can be rewarding for all of us. India's record and experience allows it to make a significant contribution to this debate. We represent the importance of choice. Our pursuit of development has not been at the cost of human freedoms. India exists because of its moderation and preference for the middle path. We are a society at different levels simultaneously, and probably confusing to those comfortable in less dimensions. We have our warts but equally, a capability for internal correctives. Understanding India requires patience, but those who do value our durability and sustainability. India is a constant exercise in introspection that does not always lead to definitive conclusions. For all these reasons and more, our joining the front ranks of global powers will be a harmonious process, greeted not by apprehension but more by warmth and perhaps some curiosity. The argument for India is that argumentative people, difficult as they are, embody virtues and habits make the world a better and safer place.

15. In his Discovery of India, written from a prison in 1945, Jawaharlal Nehru spoke of India in these terms: "We are citizens of no mean country and we are proud of the land of our birth, of our people, our culture and traditions. That pride should not be for a romanticized past to which we want to cling: nor should it encourage exclusiveness or want of appreciation of other ways than ours. It must never allow us to forget our many weaknesses and failings or blunt our longing to be rid of them..... It was India's way in the past to welcome and absorb other cultures. That is much more necessary today, for we march to the one world of tomorrow where national cultures will be intermingled with the international culture of the human race. We shall, therefore, seek wisdom and knowledge and friendship and comradeship Thus, we shall remain true Indians and Asiatics, and become at the same time, good internationalists and world citizens". That message is as true today as it was 60 years ago. And these aspirations are in many ways our strongest argument.

Montreal, September 27, 2005.

Mme. Heather Monroe-Blum, President of McGill University, Mr. Toby Gilsig, President of the Canadian Institute for International Affairs, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to have this opportunity of addressing such a distinguished gathering of scholars and experts in international affairs, drawn from two such prestigious institutions - the Research Group in International Security of McGill University, and the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. It is also a special pleasure to be able to do this in this most elegant of Canadian cities that lives up to its name.

Why India Matters is not in the interrogative; it is a statement of fact that needs elaboration and elucidation. India does matter. India has always mattered. From the very dawn of history, whether it is for matters of mind or something more material, the world has recognized that. The spiritual came seeking the wisdom that lay beyond their ken; others did in search of either glory through conquest, or wealth through commerce, or both. Alexander the Great, as you are all aware, was obsessed with reaching the river Ganges. The Romans followed the Greeks, but with trade as their modus operandi. Pliny the Younger started a debate on our trade balance by complaining vociferously that the gold chests of Rome were being emptied so that Roman ladies could bedeck themselves in the finest Indian muslins.

For more than a thousand years, India was at the heart of an intricate trading system in the Indian Ocean - an ‘empire of the monsoons’ that stretched from Java to Madagascar. The ‘fall’ of Constantinople acquired significance precisely because it cut off trade routes to India. Conversely, the great European sea voyages and discoveries became important because they restored them. Persians, Uzbeks and Tajiks were followed by the Arabs and Afghans, and finally came the European seafarers. Columbus sought India and died in the belief that he had found it. Vasco da Gama got his bearings a little more accurately and the European inflow culminated in the British Raj. India matters because historically, it has been a confluence of peoples and civilizations. In a globalized world, this has a particular significance.

Paul Kennedy, the Yale historian, estimates that in 1750, 24.5% of global industrial production was in India. The allure of India was almost mythical - a land of fabled riches, of silk and muslin and ivory and spices. Many who came to India did indeed become fabulously rich, but so was the country itself. But as Europe emerged, it did so at the cost of other continents over which it established dominance. By 1900, India's share of the global economy had fallen to 1.7%. India had entirely missed the first industrial revolution, and during the fifty years before India became independent in 1947, its annual growth rate a bare 0.7%. Literacy was as low as 14%, as against more than 50% in Japanese- ruled South Korea.

Whether in statistical terms or as regards human resources, the jewel in the British Crown was indeed in parlous straits when the independence struggle led by Mahatma Gandhi made Britannia finally fold up her flag and depart. But even in its distress, India was not without its message. There are few precedents in human history for a peaceful mass movement in support of a political cause being pursued patiently for half a century or more. It was not just the character of our independence movement that set us apart. It was equally its resulting political dispensation. Given the dominance of the Congress party in the movement for independence, India could easily have been a one party state. Many post-colonial nations were. It could also have been non-democratic or a partial one with a limited electorate. By opting for universal adult franchise and fostering political pluralism, Nehru's India set a powerful example. India matters because its choices half a century ago have made democracy a global norm today.

India matters today as well, perhaps more than ever before. It is an example of hope in our fractured, strife-torn and often fratricidal world. It is a country that has belied the predictions of the prophets of doom who confidently announced, in the 1950s and 60s, the assured break up of India. India matters because never before in history has a billion people constituting 1/6th of humanity been shaped into a single political entity, and that too a steady thriving vibrant secular democracy. To have risen above the literally bloody aftermath of Partition in 1947, and built a strong multi-ethnic, multi-religious, multi-lingual, secular nation state was no mean feat. To have maintained and strengthened this nation state in the face of conflicts imposed on us, the enormous natural calamities and the drastic economic and social changes that have affected independent India over the last 58 years was a task in itself. Then, over the past nearly two decades, India stood up to relentless terrorism, stoked and supplied from across our borders, which has claimed more than 80,000 civilian lives, an achievement of which we can be pardonably proud. The West woke up to terrorism only after 9/11 even though this very country knows well the Kanishka aircraft bombing of June 1985.

The recognition that India has gained on the international plane is only a reflection of the empowerment of India at home. Till recently, overcoming our deficiencies was seen as an achievement enough. Our progress was perceived in an ability to feed ourselves and meet the challenge of providing basic necessities to our people. Considering where we were in 1947, its implications cannot be minimized. But then came a major paradigm shift. The land of snake charmers, sacred cows and maharajas, became known for software BPOs and competitive skills. This did not happen by itself. Building an enabling environment, making the right policy choices, and maintaining a national spirit over a number of decades made it possible. Today, so much of this is taken for granted that it is worth my while to remind you all that when Jawaharlal Nehru endeavoured to industrialise India, he was scoffed at by many. The very Indian Institutes of Technology that are today so well-regarded were considered a luxury. When Indira Gandhi built on this legacy and establishing scientific institutions - including space centres that today provide communications, distance learning and remote sensing - she too did not lack doubters. Rajiv Gandhi met a wall of skepticism when he advocated computerization. Their combined leadership has allowed us to emerge as a knowledge economy and as a competitive society. India matters because it is a testimony to what good governance, sound policies and self-confidence can achieve.

India matters because, far from becoming the basket case that many feared and some hoped she would become, she is today the fourth largest economy in the world in terms of purchasing power parity. The most prestigious financial and business analysts in the world forecast even better times ahead. India will emerge as the third largest economy in the world by 2035, a knowledge hub with 100% literacy and a stabilized population of around 1.5 billion.. The recent performance of the Indian economy justifies such predictions. In the one and a half decades since we began serious economic reforms, our GDP growth rate has averaged 6 to 7%, going up to 8.5% last year. Even more important, the benefits of the growth and economic reforms have gone well beyond the roughly 300 million middle class that is growing at 15 million - the size of Australia - every year. One of India's unsung triumphs, as the World Bank puts it, has been the dramatic progress made in poverty reduction, from 35% in 1993 to 20% today. Rural purchasing power is increasing faster than that in the urban areas, and rural India is changing rapidly - politically, socially, economically and even technologically - as sections of the population earlier left out of the growth stream come on board. In a world that is often graying fast, India enjoys a great demographic advantage of 54% of the population being under 25. India matters because it is the future.

The world today admires how India has nurtured the spirit of freedom and ensured that it permeates all our democratic institutions. It seeks to learn from how India has managed to transform possible fault lines - of religion, language or ethnicity - into bonds that unite and hold us together. India's ancient, resilient civilization has always been not just tolerant of diversity, but has accepted and embraced it. We celebrate diversity and pluralism. There are not many countries where a Muslim Head of State, a Sikh Head of Government, a Christian leader of the largest political party or a minority representative heading the armed forces would be so taken for granted as to barely cause comment. And this in a country with a 84% Hindu population! It is no accident that even with having the second largest Muslim population in the world, not a single Indian Muslim has been found in the Al-Qaeda to date. That it is because we have a genuinely pluralistic culture, one where all faiths are equally respected. This has created a world of fusion and integration with recognition that we are each inheritors of multiple traditions. I myself consider my Hindu origin, my Muslim heritage and my European exposure to be parts that make up my whole. As an individual, I would be an incomplete person if you remove any one of them, and so too would my nation. India matters a great deal, even if it was only for this reason.

The Indian economy has in recent times weathered the East Asian and South East Asian meltdowns, 9/11 and the SARS scare, regional tensions and terrorist attacks, all without triggering a share market collapse, capital flight or runaway inflation. This is a mark of the national and international confidence in the Indian economy, undoubtedly due to the continuity of the economic reform process despite changes in government. The scale of these reforms has been extraordinary, not just for their impact on society but in the manner in which they have been brought about. To introduce change without disrupting the social fabric is a challenging task at best of times. To do that when a significant segment of the society is still poised to emerge from its economic margins is even more difficult. If this has been managed without social upheavals - and that it has as our record demonstrates - there is much to be said in favour of our system of governance.

The advantages of democracy as a buffer against social tensions created due to rapid growth and the inevitably uneven regional spread of this progress must be noted. It is true that the public consensus building that a democratic system strives for may appear to slow down the reform process, but it undoubtedly makes it more durable, indeed irreversible.

Amartya Sen in his latest book 'The Argumentative Indian' questions whether the British influence alone is responsible for democracy striking such strong roots in India. Instead, he attributes it to a long tradition of public arguments and toleration of intellectual heterodoxy. I share his conviction that India has drawn upon its own heritage of public reasoning to this end. Growth and prosperity in India are products of a process that is not vitiated by loss of human freedoms. On the contrary, they are the results of a healthy continual debate within broad sections of society about the direction of their future. As a politician, I have learnt how strong a commitment the most illiterate and unexposed villager in some corner of India has towards values that in this part of the world are associated with the likes of Locke and Mill.

India matters because we are proof that democracy and development are not choices we make but processes that supplement each other.

In short, today, it is no longer possible to ignore India's voice; without her, no calculus of the 21st century would be either complete or viable.

Of course there is much to do, many hurdles to cross, many problems to solve. India is in a confident mood, not one of self-congratulation. We recognize that there are many areas where the reforms need to be speeded up and expanded. However, what is by now evident is that India is a partner of choice for other countries in an increasing range of economic activities.

She has all the makings of a real knowledge power, producing graduates by the millions and highly qualified engineers and doctors by the hundreds of thousands. These human resources are critical for global competitiveness. There are estimates that India produces more than 3 million graduates and 350,000 engineers annually.

And our education system is still growing. We are rising up the value chain as well, not content to be cyber labourers but competing for large contracts. India offers total business solutions, holistic project management, and a unique global delivery model that cuts time and costs substantially. It is the place which one of your graduate students chooses for a summer internship over an offer from a Wall Street firm because India looks good on his or her resume. No venture capitalist or investment banker, in the West or elsewhere, will consider a major business proposal that does not have an India plan.

The knowledge facet of India is not a modern discovery. It has been an intellectual magnet that goes back to the famous Chinese traveler Faxian in the 5th century and the Iranian astronomer Alberuni in the 11th. What is now happening is that a modern educational system is now disciplining the innate ferment, creativity and logic of the mind and making it usable to a contemporary society. In its commercial form, it is responsible for the creation of what we call today as The India Advantage.

This is not limited to IT even though that is the most well-known. It extends from bio-tech and pharmaceuticals, to space technology, auto parts, chemicals, long distance engineering design, and material sciences.

Potential foreign partners today see India as a solutions hub, a remote service provider, a base for sophisticated R&D, and a technology innovator of literally limitless range. Through what Business Week proclaims as "one of the great mind melds of history", Indian brains are helping reshape global corporate competitiveness. India will do to services, what China did to manufacturing - set the benchmarks. And that will surely matter.

The internal pluralism of India has always been matched by its external receptivity. Over the ages, we have welcomed travelers, trade, ideas, faiths and refugees - all with open arms. The eclecticism that they have spawned has been our defining characteristic. We have always valued our interactions with the world and were clearly the poorer without them. It was natural for such a society on regaining its independence to immediately restore the connectivity snapped by colonial rule.

This gave a broad and open outlook to our foreign policy as well. The narrow pursuit of national interest was never our only goal. India envisaged in the achievement of its own independence an inspiration and source of strength for others. This explained our vigorous advocacy of non-alignment, our strong support for decolonization and our unwavering commitment to the United Nations as a forum that represents global opinion. Even when our resources were few, there was a willingness to share with those in greater need.

Our record in both bilateral and multilateral relations bears that out. As our capabilities have grown, so too has our sense of responsibility. On key global issues - strengthening democratic capacities, combating terrorism, preventing WMD proliferation, responding to natural disasters, or addressing health challenges - India is in the forefront of international efforts. We have always been intuitive internationalists and as we integrate into global society, this trait will be strengthened even further. India matters because its outlook is not wholly rooted in the past; it matters because its identity is not defined vis a vis that of others and because its nationalism reflects the idealism advocated and practiced by Mahatma Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru.

We are today committed to energetic political, economic and security exchanges with the major countries and regions in the world. With the United States, we now have a strategic partnership that covers a broad agenda. As our largest trade, investment and technology partner, our interactions can help shape India's rapid growth. Recent initiatives in energy, high-technology and agriculture have imparted a new momentum to the relationship. With Russia, we have broad ranging cooperation that underlines our continuing convergence on key political and security issues.

Ties with China, our largest neighbour, have shown great improvement. As we continue a dialogue on border differences, political, economic, commercial and cultural exchanges have expanded. The new dynamism in India-China relations will have a substantial and growing economic and geopolitical impact across Asia. With the EU, our partnership is only the sixth such that the EU has established - a recognition of India's political and economic significance today. Our engagement covers all aspects of a very productive and mutually beneficial relationship. At the other end of the world, our economic, political and security interface with Japan too is expanding. What is worth noting here is that India has successfully established the best of ties with all the major power and that will surely make us matter even more.

In Asia, India is a source of stability. It has been strengthening its ties with its extended neighbourhood through greater economic, commercial and security engagement. We have both civilisational and strong political links with the Arab world and, while supporting the just aspirations of the Palestinian people also have a friendly and flourishing relationship with Israel. Through our 'Look East' policy with ASEAN, and with Japan, China and South Korea, we seek to create a community powered by Asian dynamism. Our vision is of an Asian Economic Community which by exploiting existing synergies within an arc of advantage, become an anchor of prosperity for our region and beyond. The East Asian Summit to be held later this year will be a landmark in this process. The India-Russia-China Foreign Ministerial meetings, most recently held in Vladivostok, has created a new community of interest among the three major land powers of the world. The India-Brazil-South Africa initiative has also lent new substance to our relationship with Africa and Latin America, bringing three continents together in the pursuit of development. The real external impact of the changes in India has naturally been felt the most in its immediate vicinity. India has become a motor of regional economic growth, presenting many of our neighbours an opportunity to exploit new openings. Sri Lanka, which has the closest economic ties with India, has clearly leveraged this to improve its own prospects and despite its domestic problems, posted impressive rates of growth in recent years. Bhutan, by supplying energy to India, has significantly raised its per capita income and advanced in its quest for prosperity. Nepal receives considerable remittances from its substantial migrant population in India. The same options are open to our other neighbours and they are only inhibited by their own apprehensions and prejudices. The fact is that in the Indian Subcontinent, irrespective of their national sentiments, all people share the aspirations of raising their living standards. The economic logic, to which India is so central, has already visibly percolated into the popular mindset. Even in Pakistan, which has been historically trade resistant, there are growing voices in favour of greater direct economic contact. This has larger repercussions as it facilitates a process of normalization in the region. We have a vision of an economic community that even as it recognizes that national borders cannot be changed, can nevertheless minimize their negative impact on the lives of the people. India matters because its growth can today provide the basis for a larger regional harmony and prosperity.

The India that I have described deserves a voice in global decision making processes. Our record as a democracy, the growing size of economy, the size of our population, and the contributions that we have made to global causes make a powerful case for our candidature to the Permanent Membership of the UN Security Council. As a nuclear weapon state, we have been exceptionally responsible and are strongly committed to combating WMD proliferation and working towards the eventual elimination of all nuclear weapons. I have only recently attended the 60th anniversary session of the United Nations and shared the disappointment of many that reforms so necessary for the future of the United Nations have not taken place. However, I am confident that the voice the world's largest democracy cannot be left unheard for all times to come.

On this occasion, my remarks would not be complete without reference to our relations with Canada, a sister-democracy with which we share many values. We are both federal polities and multicultural societies who are firmly rooted in the Commonwealth ethos. Canada has been particularly welcoming of Indian immigrants and they constitute a special bond between our two nations. Many of the qualities and traits that I have ascribed to India earlier in my talk apply as well to Canada. Our international outlook also has a substantial degree of convergence, particularly in terms of our respective contributions to the United Nations. It is no secret that the growth of our relations has been impeded to some degree by differences on nuclear policy and by the activities of those of your citizens espousing violence against the Republic of India. I believe that it is incumbent on both nations that are keen to take their ties forward to engage in a dialogue of candor and an exercise of respect for each other's sensitivities.

I am glad to inform you that only yesterday, I have participated in one such endeavour with very satisfactory results. It is a positive sign that Canada today recognizes India's responsible non-proliferation record and has agreed to engage in a dialogue on nuclear safety. Similarly, I have conveyed a widely held view in India that 20 years after the event, it is time that the worst terrorist incident in civil aviation history - the bombing of an Air India aircraft - is brought to closure. We expect Canada to do justice in this matter and handle a difficult issue with the transparency that it deserves. My objective is that we should revive the easy warmth and camaraderie of our relationship in the days of Lester Pearson and Jawaharlal Nehru.

Addressing the Constituent Assembly of India at the midnight hour on August 14-15, 1947, Jawaharlal Nehru declared that:

“At the stroke of the midnight hour, when the world sleeps, India will awake to life and freedom. A moment comes, which comes but rarely in history, when we step out from the old to the new, when an age ends, and when the soul of a nation, long suppressed, finds utterance. It is fitting that at this solemn moment, we take a pledge of dedication to the service of India and her people and to the still larger cause of humanity. At the dawn of history, India started on her unending quest, and trackless centuries are filled with her striving, and the grandeur of her successes and her failures. Through good and ill-fortune alike, she has never lost sight of that quest or forgotten the ideals which gave her strength. The achievement we celebrate today is but a step, an opening of opportunity, to the greater triumphs and achievements that await us.”

India matters because she has found her voice, has impressive achievements to her credit, and is one with the world. Thank you.

New Delhi, November 19, 2005.

Today, we are gathered here to honour a great daughter of Asia, in the name of another great daughter of Asia.

We in India are well acquainted with Her Royal Highness the Princess. She is as highly respected personality in our country as she is in her own. We know her as a keen scholar of Sanskrit and as a devout Buddhist. But Her Royal Highness is all these and more. Her life and work prove that she is a great citizen of the world. Her work in the service of children, and in preservation of the culture of her people, consistently shows us how much we can achieve if we are only motivated to do so. She is both an admirable representative of the Thai people, and an outstanding symbol of a great resurgent nation.

It is in a very similar manner that India remembers Indiraji. She was not merely the Prime Minister of India during a very critical phase in our history; she was much more than that. She was the embodiment of the aspiration of the people of our country for a life of dignity and self-respect. She was a great statesman; a proud leader of the Indian people, indeed, she was an Asian and world leader who strode the world like a veritable colossus. Indiraji was zealously committed to global peace, universal disarmament, environmental protection and development among nations that had been freed from the colonial yoke. Those who met her were struck by her intense patriotism and at the same time by her internationalism. At the same time, she truly understood and loved art and culture, while being a keen student of history as well as of international relations. She was Indian to the core, but a modernist by instinct. Her commitment to the welfare of every citizen of our vast land — irrespective of creed, class, caste or community — was total.

For the past 18 years, recipients of the Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, Disarmament and Development have represented various facets of Indiraji's personality. I believe it is fair to say that these dignitaries are persons Indiraji would have been proud to honour. In that spirit, I am confident that Indiraji would have been as delighted as we all are at the fact that Her Royal Highness Princess Maha Chakri Sirindhorn is the recipient of the award instituted in her name for the year 2004.

Your Royal Highness, may I say that we are deeply honoured and gratified by your gracious presence here in our midst. For India, it is a particular pleasure to recognize your work, given the close bonds of history, geography and culture that bind our two ancient cultures and civilizations. In the modern age, India and Thailand are jointly seeking a future in which our shared past and our current commonalities fuel our search for a more cooperative tomorrow. I do believe that India and Thailand are destined to be on the same side of history, as neighbours, as friends, and as partners in the quest for progress. We look forward to working together to strengthening these bonds of friendship and amity.

Your Royal Highness, I therefore believe that we honour ourselves by honouring you. I am truly delighted to see you receive this award named after the greatest daughter of India in our recent history. We salute you today, and in doing so, we also salute the friendly Thai people, whom you have always represented so admirably and ably.

"It is a particular honour and privilege to have in our midst the former Prime Minister of Singapore, Mr. Lee Kuan Yew. I have always admired him as a visionary statesman, a towering Asian leader, and a remarkable citizen of the world. He has achieved that rare honour of becoming a legend in his own lifetime. I am therefore truly delighted, Your Excellency, to have the opportunity of hearing you deliver this year's Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Lecture.

For your many admirers in India, your role in the remarkable saga of Singapore parallels that of Jawaharlal Nehru in our own modern history. Both of you have not only been the architects, designers and builders of new nations, you have also had the distinction of realizing the dreams of your people.

Your own role in transforming a colony into a great city-state that, within one generation, leads the world in almost every indicator of human activity, is a matter of historical record and has profound significance. What is spectacular is the fact that your dynamism, your leadership and the leaders you nurtured to follow you, ensured that the per capita income of your country exceeds that of your former colonizer. I salute you and the people of Singapore on this truly unique distinction. It inspires all of us in Asia to share these dreams, and to create an Asian resurgence based on lasting peace, development and prosperity.

Jawaharlal Nehru also dreamt of a resurgent Asia. He too nurtured equally Himalayan ambitions for the country he led. If the oft-repeated prophecy that the 21st Century will be the Asian Century comes true, I am convinced it will be due to the inspiring leadership of visionaries such as yourself and Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru. Whatever verdict history records, no one can deny that your generation of leaders dreamt big dreams, planned far into the future, and grasped the opportunities at hand.

Today, our continent is at the threshold of a new historic opportunity. There is a revolution of rising expectations sweeping throughout Asia. We now face the choice of choosing between the path of inclusive, pluralistic and participatory development, and between more exclusionist models of development. Nations such as ours have consciously opted to be inclusive societies and open economies. We want to ensure that every one of our citizens leads a life of prosperity and dignity. Given the inevitability of globalization, I do believe that all nations must deal with the challenge of pluralism as well. The message of unity in diversity is one that our societies offer to the world at large.

In conclusion, I must say that I have always been inspired by your faith in individual creativity, enterprise, and by your emphasis on a sense of national discipline. I share your abiding faith in the value of education. You have shown how through investment in education, human resources can become a nation's greatest asset. Indeed, through this strategy, under your wise leadership, Singapore completely inverted what were believed to be the geo-political and economic disadvantages of its location. I believe there are important lessons to learn from your achievements. This example, and our close and cordial relations with Singapore, underline our policy of stronger integration with South East Asia in general, and Singapore in particular. We look forward to building upon the momentum in our partnership to raise our relations to a qualitatively new level.

I therefore thank the Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund, and our distinguished chairperson, Smt Sonia Gandhi, for this opportunity to hear you deliver the Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Lecture. We look forward to benefiting from your wisdom today, and to continuing to have the benefit of your guidance as we work to achieve the dreams of our people.”

025. Statement by Commerce and Industry Minister Kamal Nath at CHOGM 2005.

Malta, November 25, 2005.

Your Excellency, Prime Minister Mr. Lawrence Gonzi, Excellencies
It is a privilege for me to be here today. I am representing our Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, who would have very much liked to be here among you. He regrets that he could not be present personally for this very important Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting. He sends his best wishes to all of you.

India attaches great importance to Commonwealth's fundamental political values of democracy, rule of law, good governance and fundamental freedoms. Some of these issues were discussed at the Commonwealth Asian Colloquium on Democracy and Development that was inaugurated by Dr. Manmohan Singh in New Delhi in August this year. As the Chair of the Expert Group that wrote this Report, he was looking forward to discussing these issues with you.

One of the developments, which the Commonwealth is, perhaps, in a most favourable position to profit from, is the capacities that have been created - in many cases globally significant capacities - among the developing countries of the commonwealth. South-South cooperation is much more than an expression of solidarity. It can be major asset to the Commonwealth and India is ready to play its role.

The special theme of this meeting - "Networking the Commonwealth for Development" is, therefore, very significant and timely. We believe that the so called digital divide can in fact be harnessed as a digital bridge to overcome the development divide. We have used computer, communications, space and other technologies towards this end in the rural areas. We are increasingly integrating ICT into our development plans and strategies for technological learning. India has developed considerable expertise in the field of Information and Communications Technology (ICT). ICT is a powerful tool that can be used effectively to address the developmental challenges of providing access to education and health to our peoples and advancing economic activity.

The recently concluded World Summit on the Information Society underlines the importance of removing barriers to bridging the digital divide, particularly those that hinder the full achievement of the economic, social and cultural development of countries and the welfare of their people, in particular, in developing countries.

India would be happy to offer various technical services including supply of low cost/affordable equipment, systems and integrated solutions for applications like ICT infrastructure, e-governance, e-health (telemedicine), tele-education to fellow Commonwealth developing countries in Africa, Asia, Pacific and the Caribbean. With the preponderance of small states, the contribution of the Commonwealth assumes even greater importance. I would also like to inform you that as part of our commitment to the Commonwealth, we would like to announce a special contribution of Euro 1 million to support the Commonwealth Action Plan on the Digital Divide.

India has recently initiated a Pan-African e-Network Project, which will link all the 53 countries in Africa with each other and with Addis Ababa, the seat of the African Union. The seamless and integrated satellite, fiber optics and wireless network, to be provided by India, will connect 5 universities, 51 learning centers, 10 super-specialty hospitals and 53 patient-end locations in rural areas spread all over Africa and would put in place a network providing video conferencing facilities connecting all 53 Heads of Government in Africa. It is our hope that this landmark project will assist our friends in Africa in bridging the digital divide and meeting MDGs in education and healthcare with the help of Information Technology through tele-education, tele-medicine, e-commerce, e-governance, infotainment, resource mapping and meteorological services. Enhanced rural connectivity will augment democratic access and empowerment.

We believe that India's contribution to the technical cooperation programmes in general must also be augmented and we have announced that our contribution will be increased to £ 1 million progressively by 2009-10.

India looks forward to hosting the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Conference in 2007 and the Commonwealth Games in 2010 in New Delhi. We have commenced preparations for these big events. We consider it great honor that members of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association have elected the Speaker of one of India's state legislatures the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the CPA. Given the importance India attaches to responsive and responsible governance, we are supportive of the efforts to strengthen local government in the commonwealth countries.

I understand that we have quite a broad range of important issues that will come up for discussion today and over the next couple of days. I keenly look forward to a fruitful interaction with all of you especially on multilateral trade issues, where we presently stand at a critical juncture in the run up to the Hong Kong WTO Ministerial Meeting and I would be glad to use this occasion to exchange views with you. Thank you.

026. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting at Valetta, Malta.

At the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) held in Valetta, Malta from November 25-27, 2005, India announced a special contribution of Euro 1 million for the Commonwealth initiative on bridging the Digital Divide, in the context of the special theme for the CHOGM - 'Networking the Commonwealth for Development'.

Shri Kamal Nath, Minister for Commerce & Industry, who led the Indian delegation at the CHOGM, announced the Indian contribution to the Special Fund for the implementation of the Commonwealth Action Programme for the Digital Divide at the Executive Session of the Meeting of the Heads of Government. In his statement, he said that India had developed considerable expertise in the field of Information and Communication Technology, which could be used effectively to address the developmental challenges of the people in terms of access to education and health.

Shri Nath also informed the distinguished gathering about the recent launch of the Indian initiative on establishing a Pan-African e-Network project that would link the 53 member states of the African Union. The project would focus on tele-education and tele-medicine and assist these countries in the achievement of Millennium Development Goals in the areas of education and health. The project will connect 5 universities, 51 learning centers, 10 super-specialty hospitals and 53 patient-end locations in rural areas spread all over Africa and would put in place a network providing video conferencing facilities connecting all 53 Heads of Government in Africa.

India's contribution to the technical cooperation programmes of the Commonwealth is growing and will be increased to £ 1 million progressively by 2009-10 as part of our commitment to South-South cooperation. This assists projects in the other developing countries who are members of the Commonwealth.

India is fully engaged in the Commonwealth. The Speaker of the West Bengal State legislature was recently elected as the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. India will be hosting the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Conference in 2007. It will also be hosting the Commonwealth Games In 2010 In New Delhi.

027. Address by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran at the India Economic Summit.

New Delhi, November 28, 2005.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shyam Saran) : As far as the India-US partnership is concerned, certainly during the past one year as Foreign Secretary of India I have had the privilege of dealing with this partnership wearing a number of hats, as has been mentioned by Mr. Munjal.

Indeed the past one year has been an extremely exciting period for relations between our two great democracies. The defining moment in this partnership, which of course has been in progress for the past several years, was our Prime Minister's visit to Washington in July 2005. I think both in terms of the kind of reception the Prime Minister was given not only by President Bush, but also the reception that he got, the response that he received at the US Congress, gave us a very real sense that India was finally on the radar screen of the United States.

If one were to look at why this has happened, partly it has happened because the overlay of the cold war has been dispelled perhaps allowing both countries to really look at the very obvious complementarities, the very obvious convergences which unite them together. But, also because of the fact that the expansion of the Indian economy as a result of 15 years of economic reform and its deeper integration with the global economy has also been factored into this relationship.

As India's educational and social investments result in the larger context of an expanding middle class, it is only natural that a service-centred economy would loom large in US's long-term calculations. And also, I would like to mention here the presence of the two million strong Indian American community in the United States which has very remarkable achievements to its credit whether it is in the field of science and technology or in business. This too has led to a change in US perceptions about India.

This naturally begs the question whether there was an inevitability to the strong thrust that we have seen in Indo-US relations and the agreements which came out of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's visit. My own assessment is that while the developments in July were a culmination of long-term processes that I mentioned, which spanned several Governments on both sides, they were certainly accelerated by very conscious policy choices which were made at the leadership level in both countries. Let me illustrate this with a few examples. My colleague Mr. McCormick made a reference to the Next Steps in Strategic Partnership. That was certainly a very important initiative which, in fact, we were able to complete in a fairly short period of time by July 2005. The steps that were taken as part and parcel of this Next Steps in Strategic Partnership, allowed greater liberality and predictability in US's dual technology licensing, and also enabled India to institute much stricter Indian export control legislation, which led also to the landmark civil nuclear energy agreement.

Combined with the concerted attention that we have given to energy security, this made a strong case for an exception being made for India as far as civil nuclear power is concerned. Similarly, expanded exercises between our respective armed forces, greater contact at policy levels, our successful cooperation in the tsunami relief efforts at the beginning of the year, the assurances to US companies that they would enjoy a level-playing field in terms of defence contracts, and a heightened focus on defence technology through the High Technology Cooperation Group, were all contributory factors to the announcement of the new Defence Framework between India and the US in June 2005.

On the economic side there were a number of initiatives which were taken by India in more recent months. For example, the promulgation of the Patents Act, the restrictive measures on investment like the Press Note-18 being abolished; we undertook a very bold measure through the Open Skies Agreement, and also, very important, we were able to put behind us a major irritant like the Enron Dabhol Project. The establishment of high level economic and energy dialogues at the Cabinet level also emphasise the importance that we both attach to these facets of cooperation.

If we are looking ahead at India-US partnership in the coming years, of course the forthcoming visit of President Bush to India would be a landmark event in our journey together towards the future. What really strikes us is that over the recent period we have established a level of interaction, or a breadth of interaction between our two countries which is perhaps not only unprecedented in the history of the relationship between the two countries but perhaps is also unequalled in our relations with several other major partners. It is an agenda which covers virtually every aspect of our national endeavour. Behind this is a sense that the globalised economy is here, and it is here to stay. If we are looking at a range of global issues which need resolution, which need to be dealt with, then in that context a US-India partnership seems to be in fact indispensable.

If we are looking at the energy situation: we have the long-term shortage of global energy resources, of fossil fuels, oil prices are going up, there is a scramble for energy resources all over the world. India and China are growing at the rate of seven per cent or eight per cent per annum. What does that imply in terms of the energy challenge for these two countries but also what it implies for the global energy situation? If this needs to be resolved, the kind of actions which need to be taken again suggests a very close cooperation between India and the United States.

If a civil nuclear energy cooperation agreement between India and US was made possible, I think it was made possible precisely because of that realization in the leadership of both countries that they have to deal with this energy challenge for the future. Of course, the Energy Panel which has been set up at the Cabinet level is dealing not only with the civil nuclear energy cooperation but it is, in fact, looking at the whole gamut of energy cooperation including cooperation in clean coal technologies, coal gasification, thermal power, even new technologies like hydrogen fuel cell.

There are a whole number of areas that US and India are cooperating together in. India and the US will also be working together in the international effort known as ITER, that is the International Thermo Nuclear Energy Research project which is looking at fusion energy as the energy of the future. In that too United States and India will be partners. So, there is a whole range of energy issues on which we are cooperating together and this relationship is only going to be intensified in the coming areas.

Then if we are looking at the impact of pandemics like HIV-AIDS or even Bird Flu, it is not accidental that during Prime Minister Singh's visit to Washington we announced India-US Global Initiative on HIV-AIDS. There are strengths which India has because of its very highly developed pharmaceutical industry. We have a major R&D effort also which is taking place in India. This also suggests itself for very close cooperation between the two countries. As I said, this is only going to increase in the future.

If we are looking at other challenges, for example, challenges which are security related, what immediately comes to mind is the phenomenon of terrorism. This is one area where India and the United States of America both have been victims. But also I think there is a very strong sense that our two countries need to be working together if we are going to be able to deal with the scourge of terrorism. There has been a very good level of cooperation between the two countries on issues of terrorism.

If we are looking at the aspect of proliferation, now as India matures into a country with a large number of sensitive technologies being deployed including in the nuclear field, but not limited to the nuclear field, the aspect of cooperation on proliferation becomes very important. Again I come back to the civil nuclear cooperation agreement. I do not think this cooperation would have been possible without a recognition on the part of the United States as well as our other partners that India has an impeccable record on nonproliferation, and also that a country of India's size with the kind of scientific and technological achievements that it has to its credit, the very large infrastructure that it has in these fields, it is better for India to be inside the global nonproliferation effort rather than be outside it. So, all this has contributed a need and recognition that India is a partner in nonproliferation efforts globally rather than a target of these efforts.

As we move into the next ten-fifteen years, I think in each one of these global challenges India and the United States of America will find themselves on the same side of the fence and would be looking at how they can work very closely together. Most recently even on a subject like environment, which is also a global challenge, it is not an accident that India and the United States of America are partners in an effort which has been initiated by the United States.

If we are looking at Asia in the coming years, there is no doubt that there is a major realignment of forces taking place in Asia. There is the emergence of China as a global economic powerhouse. There will be increased capabilities that China will be able to bring to bear in this region and even beyond. India also is going to be a major player in Asia precisely because it too is emerging as an economic powerhouse. It is also a country which has demonstrated capabilities, I mentioned the Indian response to the tsunami disaster. I think India and the United States can contribute to a much better balance in the Asian region.

In terms of our own relationship with China, just as the United States of America has a very strong engagement with China, India too is moving into a phase of very strong engagement with China. We believe that in terms of managing the emerging security scenario in Asia we need to bring more and more countries within the discipline of a mutually agreed security paradigm for this region. I think both the United States and India can contribute to that.

So, there are many areas where we see convergences between the two countries. I think the challenge lies for us in how to take this forward. In this taking this process forward there is a great deal of mutual awareness, mutual education which is required because in a real sense there has been a certain estrangement between the two countries until about a decade ago. I think what is important about interactions that we have like the one this afternoon is that it does bring us together in understanding each other's systems, understanding each other's ways of thinking, our perspectives. And this would lead to a very much richer relationship between the two countries.

I will conclude by just saying a word about the HTCG. It has played a very important role precisely in terms of making our business communities aware of the climate of doing business, the systems within which we must do business with each other and the opportunities that are emerging. This has been, as my colleague said, a very productive exercise for both the countries. I certainly look forward to taking this forward with my friend Mr. McCormick in the next few days.

Thank you very much.

028. Statement by Minister of State E. Ahamed at the Regional Economic Cooperation Conference.

Kabul, December 4, 2005.

Mr. Co-Chairmen,
Distinguished delegates,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

It gives me great pleasure to be here on this historic occasion at the first such Conference to be held in Kabul on Regional Economic Cooperation. At the outset, I would also like to take this opportunity to thank the hosts for the warm and gracious hospitality and the excellent arrangements made for this Conference. We, in India, are familiar with the Afghan tradition of hospitality, having enjoyed a relationship that is civilisational in character.

2. India is fully committed to working with the people and the Government of Afghanistan to re-build this country after the devastation caused by three decades of conflict. Our partnership today embraces a multi-dimensional cooperation programme including education, health, telecommunication, transport, civil aviation, agriculture and irrigation, industry, power generation and transmission, human resource development and many other areas.

3. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's visit on 28-29 August 2005 and the earlier visit by President Hamid Karzai to India on 23-25 February 2005 reflect the close ties between the leadership and the people of Afghanistan and India. In addition, there are regular exchanges at the level of Cabinet Ministers and the senior officials.

4. We share President Karzai's vision of Afghanistan as the cross-roads of Central Asia, West Asia, China and the Indian sub-continent. Traditionally, trading groups connecting these regions have criss-crossed this land. The ancient cities of Balkh, Kabul, Kandahar and Herat were witness to societies that flourished along these trading routes. Afghanistan is already a member of ECO and its recent admission as a member of SAARC is a natural development, which we, in India, welcome. It links Afghanistan to what has traditionally been its largest market - India. As SAARC moves forward to developing a free trade area and other shared economic activities, Afghanistan will stand to gain considerably.

5. Notwithstanding the enormous political developments that have taken place - the process of parliamentary and presidential elections, the adoption of a forward looking Constitution, the Loya Jirga process, etc in the last four years, there are many challenges yet to overcome. The problem posed by narcotics, terrorism and insecurity in certain regions in the South and the South Eastern parts of Afghanistan not only undermine the security of Afghanistan but also hinders prospects for economic development. Dealing with such challenges is a collective responsibility of all the countries of the region and those that are interested in ensuring the long-term stability of Afghanistan as a plural society.

6. Afghanistan is a land locked country and this, along with its physical geography creates a different set of challenges. The development of the transport sector and its regional linkages become lifelines for the country's economy. It is, therefore, necessary to work together, both bilaterally and regionally on the transport network so as to bring about a gradual opening up of the markets. Simultaneously, measures will need to be taken to facilitate trade and cross-border movement of goods and services, minimize transaction costs and harmonise practices. Such a development will not only increase legitimate trade which today is over-shadowed by the cross-border smuggling but also enhance security.

7. Water management and water sharing are critical for the development of agriculture, which contributes nearly three-fourths of Afghanistan's GDP. Arrangements at harnessing the river flows will lead to stabilizing the population of Afghanistan that have been displaced by the years of conflict and also open up prospects for power generation through micro-hydel projects. Another linkage of Afghanistan with its surrounding region lies in terms of power trading agreements and development of power transmission infrastructure.

8. In order to promote such activities, which will anchor Afghanistan firmly in this region, suitable institutional strengthening and capacity building is also necessary.

9. Today, India is undergoing a process of transformation. A society of one billion people has been developing at a growth rate of more than 7 % annually in a democratic framework. The estimates of many economic think tanks predicts an average 7.5% growth rate per annum in the next four years.

Last week, speaking at the India Economic Summit, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh said that “an appropriate combination of policies can raise this beyond 8% easily, and we should be targeting a 10% growth rate in 2-3 years time.” Our vision of prosperity, however, is not limited to India but encompasses our region. I am convinced that sustained economic growth in India will have a positive impact on our neighborhood. The natural economic linkages which once governed this region in the pre-colonial era will be re-discovered and the process of economic development will transform the nature of political discourse in this region.

10. Mr. Co-Chairmen, we have circulated a brief report on India's cooperation programmes in Afghanistan and look forward to working with the government and the people of Afghanistan and other like-minded members of the international community in promoting a successful outcome of this conference.

Section - II Security

029. Inaugural Address by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the 7th Asian Security Conference (ASC) organized by Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis on "Changing Security Dynamic in Eastern Asia".

New Delhi, January 27, 2005.

Excellencies, Distinguished Participants at the 7th Asian Security Conference, Ladies and Gentlemen, I feel privileged to be invited to deliver the Inaugural Address at the IDSA's 7th Asian Security Conference. Since its inception in January 1999, this Conference has provided a forum for Asian security issues to be viewed in the most holistic manner by experts drawn from all quarters. This year's theme - Changing Security Dynamic in Eastern Asia - is particularly relevant. I commend the IDSA for their choice.

We are meeting here a month after the Tsunami disaster, which perhaps offers a metaphor about the very nature of the concept of security and the manner in which we are all inter-connected. Distance and proximity are no longer the defining elements in our comprehension and response to security challenges. Vicissitudes of nature or technological changes are rapidly transcending or abolishing borders.

May I begin with a few broad observations that could perhaps generate fruitful discussion during the course of this three-day Conference?

India's geography imparts a unique position to her in the geo-politics of the Asian continent. Our interests lie not only in different sub-categories of Asia - East Asia, West Asia, Central Asia, South Asia or South East Asia. Our development and security are also intertwined with that of each of these regions. India's integrative bonds with her Asian neighbourhood are increasingly impacted by a positive combination of factors. The relatively rapid development since the early 1990s has set us among the world's fastest growing economies. The new dynamics of economic liberalization and integration and the region's overlapping security perspectives link this larger neighbourhood in one single continuum. India's growing inter-dependence with East Asia, which is both the driving force and the manifestation of our "Look East" policy, brings East Asia even closer to us. Peace, security and development of East Asia are, therefore, matters of great interest and direct relevance to us.

Against this background let me now deal with India's perceptions. India's links with her extended Eastern neighbourhood go back many centuries. There is a distinctive character to this Indian impress. It was devoid of any military component. India's links with the region were civilizational, religious and cultural. The message of the Buddha emanated from here and spread to different corners of this region. Independent India exuded the same spirit of amity, friendship and goodwill. Many of you may recall that Pandit Nehru was the visionary who outlined a framework of Asian solidarity and peaceful co-existence. I myself grew up in this ambience as a young diplomat. Perhaps Nehru was ahead of his times. The world was not ready to share his high-minded vision.

Consequently, for many years India remained somewhat distant from its eastern neighbourhood. It was in 1992 that we embarked upon our "Look East" policy with renewed vigour. Gradually our links with the countries of the extended eastern Asian region have grown and are growing. This is at once gratifying and satisfying. India is getting increasingly networked with its eastern neighbours together with new opportunities, common and novel challenges. More than a mere political slogan, our "Look East" policy has a strong economic rationale. It is also sustained by our commitment to democracy and pluralism and is borne out of our desire for stability and security in our region.

Developments in East Asia are of direct consequence to India's security and development. We are therefore actively engaged in creating a bond of friendship and cooperation with East Asia that has a strong economic foundation and a cooperative paradigm of positive inter-connectedness of security interests. A common thread joins us. We stand to share the opportunities thrown open by the regions' increasing economic integration, just as we face the common threats of WMD proliferation, terrorism, energy shortage, piracy and income inequity, to name a few. The Tsunami disaster has also brought home the point, in a tragic way though, that we do not live in splendid isolation. We, therefore, believe that greater connectivity - physical, economic and political - between India and East Asia will create strong links in our common endeavour for peace and prosperity.

It is with this vision that we are engaged with the countries of East Asia to build an edifice of mutually beneficial cooperation. Recent positive developments in India's relations with China are a case in point. There are many who look at India-China relations with the old mindset of "balance of power" or "conflict of interests" and see East Asia as a theatre of competition between these two countries. Such theories are losing relevance in today's fast-emerging dynamics of Asia's quest for peace and prosperity.

Both India and China are aware that trust and cooperation between them are one of the most crucial elements that make our region and Asia a vibrant and energetic fulcrum for growth. We are engaged in positive ways to expand our commonalities, while pro-actively addressing our differences, including the boundary question. We are doing so in a purposive and mutually acceptable manner. Despite the differences on the boundary issue, our 3,400 km long land border with China has largely remained tranquil over the last twenty-five years. This is by no means a minor achievement and should be enough to silence those who look at India-China relations only from an adversarial prism. It is for everyone to see that we have not allowed our differences to hold development in our relations across an impressive range of areas.

While there are differences between us, there is also an increasingly greater realization that there is enough space and opportunity in the region for both India and China to prosper. We are not just passively embedded in our region bound by our common neighbourhood, but are constantly interacting through endeavours which have brought huge dividends to both. Look at India's trade with China. From a meager few hundred million dollars in the beginning of the nineteen-nineties, our trade has already crossed US$ 13 billion last year. We also look at our relations in a larger regional and global backdrop and realize the responsibility we both shoulder in contributing to the well being of humanity. We are mindful of the overarching importance of a peaceful surrounding environment for us to pursue our most fundamental task of national development. Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao's visit to India later this year will offer another opportunity to us to add further substance to our relationship, a relationship which both value.

Our relationship with Japan is another important point of anchor in our extensive interaction with East Asia. As the second largest global economy, Japan has an important role to play in Asia emerging as a key player in this century. We have traditionally viewed Japan in the perspective of our common Asian identity. In the last few years, our bilateral relations with Japan have steadily progressed. The India-Japan Global Partnership, launched four years ago, has provided an opportunity to impart new direction and dynamism to our growing bilateral relationship. We are constantly endeavouring to add increasingly greater substance to this interaction. Economic partnership is an important dimension of our ties with Japan. Our relations are also based on the firmly shared recognition that both countries are legitimate candidates for the permanent membership of the UN Security Council. We are looking forward to Prime Minister Koizumi's visit to India later in 2005 which will help us further upgrade and deepen our relations with Japan.

The Conference is looking at Japan in a focused manner - and the Japanese participation is noteworthy. I am also gratified to learn that Mr. Ishiba, a senior Japanese parliamentarian and former Japanese Defence Minister will address you tomorrow.

With South Korea, our traditional friendship is developing on the strong foundations of our shared commitment to democratic ideals and the common desire to consolidate and diversify our exchanges. The success of South Korean President Roh's visit to India three months ago was a manifestation of this, during which we decided to establish a "Long-term Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity" with the aim of fully utilizing the substantial potential and opportunities for deepening mutually beneficial cooperation by taking advantage of our economic complementarities and political convergences. My own visit to South Korea last month convinced me that our relations are poised for significant expansion. I returned immensely impressed by South Korea's achievements in so many spheres.

India has also consciously moved forward to reestablish its age-old ties with ASEAN countries. This has been duly reciprocated. The ASEAN countries also recognize the mutual advantage of a wide-ranging partnership with India. During the Third India-ASEAN Summit in November last year, our Prime Minister emphasized that India's "Look East" policy had acquired considerable substance and irreversible momentum and that relations with ASEAN, based on mutual interest in shared peace and prosperity for the region, constituted an important priority in India's foreign policy. We signed an agreement on India-ASEAN Partnership for Peace, Progress and Shared Prosperity, which encapsulates our commitment for a long-term cooperative partnership based on our respective strengths and complementarities.

Today, as India strives to add greater substance and depth to her "Look East" policy, she espouses a vision of an Asian Economic Community, which encompasses ASEAN, South Korea, Japan, China and India - the five pillars which may form the initial core to drive Asia's emergence as the center of gravity of the global economy. The idea of the Asian Economic Community is built on the fundamental realization of the new dynamics in Asia and existing synergies. This is bringing us closer together in search of greater prosperity and is based on our common aspirations. These are visions to secure a stable and peaceful environment and pursue the development objectives that would impart strength to Asia's global standing.

As Prime Minister Manmohan Singh has declared, this community of nations would constitute an "arc of advantage" which would act as an anchor of stability and prosperity for our region and beyond. In today's global reality, where regional trading blocs are gaining strength in terms of their political and economic clout, we in Asia risk falling behind if we do not act in time. The prospects are positive, as there is a broad recognition of the enormous benefits flowing from greater integration within this part of the world. We share the common emphasis that the economic dynamism of Asia can be strengthened and sustained by developing greater linkages between the nations and integration of their markets and society. How India and East Asia fashion their cooperation in response to this emerging need will be a crucial factor in deciding how successful will Asia's success story be.

There is a general aspiration to evolve towards a more co-operative strategic and security paradigm - both globally and regionally. It is here that Asia as a whole and East Asia in a more specific sense will have to rise to the challenge. As I said, we are bound together with the destiny of a common neighbourhood. We must also join our energies in overcoming challenges to our common security and pursuing our goal of common prosperity. The emergence of Asia is in reality the sum of the success of each of its parts and the strength of their inter-linkages.

Today we stand at the cusp of exciting times, which hold a bright promise for our future collaboration. We share the responsibility to shape our co-operation to liberate the creative energies of the entire region. We must put in place a political and economic architecture which is conducive to Asia's emergence as a pre-eminent region of stability and prosperity.

This can make the 21st century the Asian century in the truest sense. But this will need dedicated, sustained hard work. And eternal vigilance.

At this moment in time, the future looks promising. While we have a deficit of democracy in international relations, there are also diverse challenges and new opportunities engendered by globalization. The non-state entity has emerged as a potent actor and the spectrum ranges from the multinational corporation to the terrorist plague. Simultaneously there is no major contestation - ideological or otherwise - among the major powers. Perhaps we are in a domain where reality and empirical evidence has gone beyond any of the conventional theories that seek to explain international relations and security studies! The mindset is perhaps changing.

Here, then, ladies and gentlemen is an intellectual challenge for all of you - as eminent academics and analysts. How does one square the circle of realpolitik with the normative values of equitable security? As a person who has some acquaintance with the Republic of letters, I believe that the human mind, imperfect though it is, can come up with fresh and innovative ideas, so sorely needed.

I thank you for your attention. It is my privilege to inaugurate the IDSA's 7th Asian Security Conference. I wish you all success in your deliberations.

030. Statement by Official Spokesperson on India-US-IAEA meeting on Regional Radiological Security Partnership.

New Delhi, February 9, 2005.

A joint delegation of representatives from the US Department of Energy and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) visited India on February 9, 2005 for the first India-US-IAEA trilateral meeting on the Regional Radiological Security Partnership (RRSP) programme.

The US and the IAEA representatives welcomed India's participation in the RRSP programme as a Regional Partner and discussions were held to work out the modalities of this cooperation. The three sides acknowledged their shared objective of enhancing globally the security of dangerous radioactive sources. The US and the IAEA delegates expressed appreciation for India's offer of providing infrastructure and expertise on a regular basis for conducting international training courses in India under the aegis of the IAEA on issues related to the security of radiological sources and materials as also for locating orphan radioactive sources in countries which are unable to effectively deal with them and which seek assistance from the IAEA. The three sides agreed to continue further discussions on the subject.

031. Inaugural address by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the Conference on "Emerging Nuclear Proliferation Challenges" organised by Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis and Pugwash - India under the theme "India and the NPT".

New Delhi, March 28, 2005.

It gives me great pleasure to inaugurate the seminar on "Emerging Nuclear Proliferation Challenges" jointly organised by the Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis and Pugwash India Conference. The instances of onward proliferation which have come to light in the last two years and the growth and spread of international terrorism lend a sense of urgency to these discussions. The fact that this Conference is being held a few weeks before the Seventh Review Conference of the Non-Proliferation Treaty makes this initiative timely as well as relevant to the principal concerns of our time.

The non-proliferation order is coming under increasing stress both on account of the failure to make any significant progress towards nuclear disarmament as well as the failure to prevent clandestine proliferation by members of the Non Proliferation Treaty as well as some who are outside it. The infirmities of the non-proliferation order have imposed costs on India and have had an adverse impact on our security, as much of the clandestine proliferation which is today the focus of attention has tended to flow into or emanate from our neighbourhood. The response of the international community over the years has been, from our point of view, inadequate at best or permissive at worst, leading to the present adverse situation. Unfortunately, even today we see the same inconsistencies in approach with selective focus on the recipients of such clandestine proliferation but not enough attention on the sources of supply. This uneven approach does not lend credence to the resolve of the international community to deal seriously with this issue.

India has an abiding interest in non-proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction not just for its own security but for peace and security of the world at large. It is now little remembered that India was amongst the initiators of the proposal for an international instrument to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons. We held, however, that such an instrument should involve not only a commitment by non-nuclear weapon States to abjure nuclear weapons but also a commitment from those in possession of nuclear weapons to cease the further production of fissile material for weapon purposes and to move towards complete elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework. The Treaty, as it eventually emerged, unfortunately addressed only one part of the proliferation challenge.

During Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's tenure, India again took a major initiative in 1988 in presenting an Action Plan for the eventual and complete elimination of nuclear weapons in a time-bound manner. However, this practical and non-discriminatory proposal did not find favour with those possessing nuclear weapon arsenals.

The end of the Cold War, bringing with it an end to the nuclear confrontation between the two super powers, once again presented a unique opportunity to move forward in the direction of reducing and eliminating nuclear weapons. These hopes have, however, been belied and instead of progressive steps towards nuclear disarmament there has been in general a move to reassert the primacy of nuclear weapons in the security calculus of states, especially those with the largest nuclear arsenals. New doctrines and justification for use of nuclear weapons have been developed. Such an attitude feeds and strengthens the belief that nuclear weapons are a currency of power. These developments also raise a question: Are we going to see a new nuclear weapons race? While it may be premature to call it that at present, the fact remains that this is not a welcome development for achieving nuclear disarmament and by extension the goal of non-proliferation.

India may not be a party to the NPT, but, our conduct has always been consistent with the key provisions of the Treaty as they apply to nuclear weapon States. Article I of the NPT obliges a nuclear weapon state not to transfer nuclear weapons to any other country or to assist any other country to acquire them. India's record in this regard is impeccable and a matter of public knowledge. This is in contrast to the poor record of some of the nuclear weapon States who have been active collaborators in, or silent spectators to, continuing clandestine and illegal proliferation, including export of nuclear weapon components and technology. Article III requires a party to the Treaty to provide nuclear materials and related equipment to any other country only under safeguards. India's policies of international cooperation in the nuclear field have always conformed to this principle. Article VI commits the parties to the Treaty to pursue negotiations to bring about eventual global nuclear disarmament. India is not only committed to commencing negotiations for a Nuclear Weapons Convention, it is also the only nuclear weapon State ready to do so.

India is a responsible nuclear power that practices a policy of utmost restraint. We have announced a policy of no first use and non-use against non-nuclear weapon states, providing thereby negative security assurance to all non-nuclear weapon states. We have repeatedly declared that we shall maintain only a minimum credible deterrent. We have stated that the role of India's nuclear weapons is entirely defensive. Our unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests continues to remain in place.

Friends, it is our view that if the emerging proliferation challenges are to be effectively addressed, the international community should review and re-evaluate existing frameworks with a view to adapting them to current political realities. There needs to be a realization that treating existing non proliferation structures in inflexible ideological terms, as though they were cast in stone, will yield limited results. There is a need for a mind set change in dealing with emerging nuclear proliferation challenges. Approaches which have failed to restrain, let alone punish those guilty of proliferation need to be replaced by a new framework which, on the one hand, is effective in curbing proliferation and, at the same time, does not inhibit legitimate cooperation in peaceful uses of nuclear energy by states whose non-proliferation records are beyond doubt.

As I said in the beginning, we have a shared interest in preventing proliferation, since our security has been undermined by such proliferation. We remain ready to work towards this objective in a manner consistent with the requirements of our national security. From our perspective, to meet these challenges several steps would need to be taken, as part of a composite whole, rather than in isolation as the issues are inter-linked.

The first step should be a reaffirmation by the nuclear weapon States of their commitment towards irreversible and verifiable cuts in their nuclear arsenals and to reduce the role of nuclear weapons. This cannot be just an articulation of mere rhetoric but would have to be matched by concrete action. Our goal should be to have a universally applicable and multilateral Nuclear Weapons Convention similar to the one adopted in the case of Chemical Weapons. India remains ready to participate in agreed and irreversible steps to prepare the ground for such a Convention. During the Cold War, it was said that a 'nuclear war cannot be won and must not be fought'. The need now for all the nuclear weapon States is to reaffirm this logic. In parallel to this reaffirmation, the nuclear weapon States should take visible steps to reduce the salience of nuclear weapons in their strategic calculus. Since nuclear weapons are not really usable, efforts should be directed at taking steps, in the first instance, towards reducing their importance in security approaches. India believes in this approach and has therefore followed a policy of "No First Use". A step in this direction would be a global No-First-Use agreement. An agreement by Nuclear Weapon States ruling out the use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear weapon states would also be an important step. The nuclear weapon States should also take practical steps to lower the alert status, through gradual de-alerting actions of their strategic weapons, consistent with the defensive role of nuclear weapons. Such concrete steps would reaffirm the solemn commitment of the international community, in particular nuclear weapons States, to nuclear disarmament and mark concrete progress in that direction.

The tendency so far has been to work on an exclusivist approach. Such an approach, we have witnessed, has neither succeeded in stopping, nor in punishing, those who are guilty of proliferation, either as a source or a recipient. Quite the contrary, it has led to putting undue constraints on those who are responsible and who have followed transparent policies. The international community needs to discard the old mindset and acknowledge the record of states, like India, who have proved time and again that they are reliable partners in the global effort to ensure non-proliferation.

India has developed a comprehensive indigenous infrastructure and a pool of skilled manpower in the nuclear sector, to meet both its energy requirements generated by the development aspirations of a billion people as well as to enhance national security. India's nuclear programme, civilian or strategic, has not violated any international obligations. At the same time, conscious of the responsibilities that such technologies bring, we have taken stringent measures to safeguard them. We are committed to further strengthening our regulatory framework in this regard in keeping with changing technical and security challenges. India has never been and will never be a source of proliferation. This has been reiterated at the highest political levels and is an article of faith of our foreign policy.

Today a key development goal across the globe is to raise the living standards of people. A critical ingredient in this process is the availability of a cheap and clean source of energy. As an energy deficit nation, India has placed considerable importance on nuclear energy in its energy mix. We will continue on the path of indigenous development. The pace of this development can be accelerated with greater international cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Such cooperation would not only help bring greater prosperity to a large number of people but would also help in meeting the concerns arising out of green house gas emissions. We have repeatedly said that every cooperation project in nuclear power would be open to international safeguards. However, such cooperation, today, remains hostage to restrictive denial regimes.

The need of the hour therefore is to move away from an exclusivist approach and to create a more inclusive framework based on principles of equality. We should evolve a framework which, on the one hand, effectively curbs and prevents proliferation and, on the other, does not unduly restrict cooperation in peaceful uses of nuclear energy with states, who by their actions have strengthened the objective of non-proliferation. It has been noted in recent discussions, that international frameworks need to adapt to the rapid development and diffusion of technology. I would also like to add here that international frameworks must be dynamic and keep pace with the present day political realities.

Our actions have always been guided by the principle that we should be able to retain our freedom of thought and action to take steps necessary for our national security as well as to meet international concerns arising out of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction especially its linkages with terrorism. Consistent with this basic position, we remain ready to engage and cooperate on the basis of equality, in all multilateral consultations, to develop such an effective framework, and to bring about a stable, genuine and lasting non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Our eventual goal must remain the complete elimination of such weapons.

I wish you well in your deliberations and look forward to a substantive outcome.

032. Statement of the Ministry of External Affairs on India's submission of Instrument of Ratification of the Convention on Nuclear Safety.

New Delhi, March 31, 2005.

India has decided to ratify the Convention on Nuclear Safety. The Instrument of Ratification was submitted on March 31, 2005 to the Director General, International Atomic Energy Agency, who is the Depository of the Convention.

2. The Convention on Nuclear Safety was adopted in Vienna on 17 June 1994. It entered into force on 24 October 1996. The Convention establishes a legal obligation on the part of the States Parties to apply certain safety principles to the construction, operation and regulation of land-based civilian nuclear power plants under their jurisdiction. It provides for obligatory reporting and review procedures, while recognizing the basic principle that safety of nuclear installations remains a national responsibility.

3. Fully conscious of the responsibilities arising from the possession of advanced and comprehensive capabilities in the entire gamut of nuclear fuel cycle operations, India attaches great importance to the issue of nuclear safety. India shares the objective of the Convention on Nuclear Safety of maintaining a high level of nuclear safety worldwide through the enhancement of national measures and international cooperation, including in safety-related technical cooperation. India has over the past five decades established a multi-layered regulatory infrastructure, underpinned by a substantive corpus of long-standing legislation, for ensuring the safety of nuclear installations. India is implementing measures based on general safety principles to meet the objectives of the Convention.

4. Nuclear power, as a safe and secure energy source, is an indispensable component for meeting the development needs of a large and growing economy like India. In exploring its full potential for peaceful purposes to which India is committed, the importance of international cooperation including in the field of safety-related technologies cannot but be over-emphasized. India hopes that the States Parties to the Convention will strive towards meeting this stated objective of the Convention and not hinder international cooperation for peaceful purposes and the developmental benefits that accrue from such cooperation.

036. Speech of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh introducing the Motion in the Lok Sabha for consideration of the “Weapons of Mass Destruction and their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill, 2005.”

New Delhi, May 12, 2005.

Sir, I beg to move:

“That the Bill to prohibit unlawful activities, in relation to weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto, be taken into consideration.”

As the House is aware, a basic tenet of India’s foreign policy since Independence has been the pursuit of global nuclear disarmament. India has been a consistent proponent of general and complete disarmament and has advocated that highest priority be given to nuclear disarmament as a first step towards this objective. We were among those who advocated an international non-proliferation agreement under which nuclear weapon states would agree to stop the production of fissile material for weapons purposes and move towards reducing and eliminating their nuclear weapons while other countries would refrain from developing or acquiring such weapons. Unfortunately, the nuclear weapon powers were not willing to accept even this limited commitment and the Non-Proliferation Treaty as it eventually emerged was an unbalanced instrument which India did not join. In 1978, India proposed negotiations for an International Convention to prohibit the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. In 1988, at the Special Session of the United Nations General Assembly on Disarmament at New York, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi put forward a comprehensive action plan based on the principles of universality, non-discrimination and a balance of obligations for phased elimination of all nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework.

India’s status as a Nuclear Weapon State does not diminish its commitment to the objective of a nuclear weapon free world and we aspire for a non-violent world order, through global, verifiable and non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament. This is and continues to be an important plank of our nuclear policy. Our adherence to the Chemical Weapons Convention and the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention is evidence of our commitment to global disarmament regimes which are universal and non-discriminatory in character.

India is fully committed to safeguard its security as a Nuclear Weapon State. Our nuclear policy is characterized by responsibility, transparency, predictability and a defensive orientation. We are committed to building and maintaining a credible minimum deterrent. We have declared a posture of no first use. We continue to observe a voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing.

At the same time, India's policy has always been not to assist, encourage or induce any other country to manufacture nuclear weapons. As a responsible nation, India has never passed on its proven technological capabilities to anyone. India will not be a source of proliferation of indigenously developed sensitive technologies. We will remain faithful to this approach as we have been for the last several decades.

India will continue to ensure that WMD-usable materials, equipment and technologies do not fall into the wrong hands whether of States or non-State actors, and in particular of terrorists. Our system of export controls is under continuous review; we continue to update these controls where necessary.

Over the years, India has enacted a corpus of legislation dealing with activities of direct or indirect relevance to weapons of mass destruction, their means of delivery and related materials, equipment and technologies. It has also institutionalized administrative mechanisms to prevent unlawful access to such weapons and their delivery systems.

Conscious of its responsibilities, India has been exercising controls over the export of Weapons of Mass Destruction-usable materials, equipment and technologies.

It is now considered desirable to introduce an overarching and integrated legislation to prohibit unlawful activities in relation to weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery and to build upon the regulatory framework related to controls over the export of WMD-usable materials, equipment and technologies, especially in view of India's status as a Nuclear Weapon State.

The rationale for the proposed Weapons of Mass Destruction and

Their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill, 2005 is based on the same policy tenets that have guided the country over the past several decades, which are reflective of the nation's commitment to safeguard India's national security, to deepen its autonomous scientific and technical capability for meeting our security imperatives and development goals and to the objective of global peace and security. These tenets are based on continuity and are underpinned by a national consensus cutting across party lines.

037. Reply speech of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh in the Lok Sabha to the debate on the Bill: "Weapons of Mass Destruction and Their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill, 2005".

New Delhi, May 12, 2005.

Thank you, Sir. May I, to begin with, thank all the hon. Members who have participated in the discussion and made very valuable suggestions? I also deeply appreciate the support each one of them has given to the Bill that I have placed before the House to be passed today.

Shri Rupchand Pal, raised a question about the urgency and he himself has said that it is because of Resolution 1540, which was passed by the Security Council last year. Resolution 1540 is mandatory under Chapter seven of the Charter of United Nations. I do not want to take the time of the House by reading the details from the Charter but we have no other option but to accept this and to report to the Security Council as to what steps we have taken. The first report was submitted to the Security Council in October, 2004 and the next report will be sent very shortly.

The Resolution calls upon the States, under Chapter seven of the Charter of UN, to adopt national rules and regulations, where it has not been done, to ensure compliance with their non-proliferation commitments. Further, to counter a threat posed upon all States in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation in consistence with international law, to take cooperative action to prevent illicit trafficking in nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, their means of delivery and related materials.

A reference, of course, was made to sections 9, 15 (1), (2) and (3) and 20. If hon. Members who have raised the questions read the totality of these sections 9, 15 and 21, their fears will be allayed that any action will be taken which will be prejudicial to innocent people who are in no way connected with this.

Now I am very glad that Shri Nikhil Kumar mentioned the name of Mr.A.Q. Khan. He is in our neighbourhood. It is essential for us that this legislation, which the Government has placed before the House, is adopted. From what I heard of the debate today, I just want to say that I feel greatly encouraged.

I thank Shri Rupchand Pal, Shri Bansal, Shri Nikhil Kumar, Dr. Shandil, Shri Ram Gopal Yadav, Shri Sita Ram, and Shri Chandrappan. Then, I thank all of you for the support that you have given to this Bill.

I would once again reiterate that India is committed to safeguard its security as a nuclear weapon State and to deepen its autonomous scientific and technical capability for meeting our security imperatives as well as our developmental goals. India is and will remain a responsible nuclear power. We have adopted the most responsible policy on sensitive and dual-use nuclear and missile related technologies. We are committed to ensure that these do not fall into the wrong hands, especially the terrorists and non-State actors. India has an impeccable record in this regard; and India will continue to work to prevent proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

I would request the august House to pass the Bill.

Mr Deputy-Speaker : The question is:

The motion was adopted.

038. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh in Rajya Sabha on the “Weapons of Mass Destruction and their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill, 2005”.

New Delhi, May 13, 2005.

Hon’ble Chairman and Colleagues,

I rise to request this august House to consider and pass the Weapons of Mass Destruction and their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities)¹ Bill, 2005.

2. As the house is aware, a basic tenet of India’s foreign policy since independence has been the pursuit of global nuclear disarmament. India has been a consistent proponent of general and complete disarmament and has advocated that the highest priority be given to nuclear disarmament as a first step toward this objective. We were among those who advocated an international non-proliferation agreement under which nuclear weapon states would agree to stop the production of fissile material for weapons purposes and move towards reducing and eliminating their nuclear weapons while other countries would refrain from developing or acquiring such weapons. Unfortunately, the nuclear weapon power were not willing to accept even this limited commitment and the Non-Proliferation Treaty as it eventually emerged was an unbalanced instrument which India did not join. In 1978, India proposed negotiations for an international Convention prohibit the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. In 1988 at the Special Session of the UN General Assembly on Disarmament, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi put forward a comprehensive action plan based on the principles of universality, non-discrimination and a balance of obligations for the phased elimination of all nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework.

3. India’s status as a Nuclear Weapon State does not diminish its commitment to the objective of a nuclear weapon free world. We aspire for a non-violent world order, through global, verifiable, and non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament. This is and continues to be an important plank of our nuclear policy. Our adherence to the Chemical Weapons Convention and the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention is evidence of our commitment to global disarmament regimes which are universal and non-discriminatory in character.

1. The legislation was undertaken in response to the UN Resolution No. 1540 which made it mandatory for all member-nations to enact a law to prevent trafficking in nuclear chemicals and biological weapons.

4. India is fully committed to safeguard its security as a Nuclear Weapon State. Our nuclear policy is characterized by responsibility, transparency, predictability and a defensive orientation. We are committed to building and maintaining a credible minimum deterrent. We have declared a posture of no first use. We continue to observe a voluntary moratorium on nuclear explosive testing.

5. At the same time, India's policy has always been not to assist, encourage or induce any other country to manufacture nuclear weapons. As a responsible nation, India has never passed on its proven technological capabilities to any one. India will not be a source of proliferation of indigenously developed sensitive technologies. We will remain faithful to this approach, as we have been for the last several decades.

6. India will continue to ensure that WMD-usable materials, equipment and technologies do not fall into the wrong hands whether of States or non-State actors, and in particular of terrorists. Our system of export controls is under continuous review; we continue to update these controls where necessary.

7. Over the years, India has enacted a corpus of legislation dealing with activities of direct or indirect relevance to weapons of mass destruction, their means of delivery and related materials, equipment and technologies. It has also institutionalized administrative mechanisms to prevent unlawful access to such weapons and their delivery systems. Conscious of its responsibilities, India has been exercising controls over the export of WMD-usable materials, equipment and technologies.

8. It is now considered desirable to introduce an over-arching and integrated legislation to prohibit unlawful activities in relation to weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery and to build upon the regulatory framework related to controls over the export of WMD-usable materials, equipment and technologies, especially in view of India's status as a Nuclear Weapon State.

9. The rationale for the proposed Weapons of Mass Destruction and their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill, 2005 is based on the same policy tenets that have guided the country over the past several decades, which are reflective of the nation's commitment to safeguard its national security, to deepen its autonomous scientific and technical capability for meeting our security imperatives and developmental goals and to the objective of global peace and security. These tenets are based on continuity and are underpinned by a national consensus cutting across party lines.

039. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the passage of “Weapons of Mass Destruction and their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill 2005” as passed by Parliament.

New Delhi, May 13, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening. As you know the Weapons of Mass Destruction and their Delivery Systems (Prohibition of Unlawful Activities) Bill 2005 has now been passed in both Houses of Parliament. I thought this would be a matter of interest to journalists.

The statement made by External Affairs Minister in the Rajya Sabha is available. I will just add a few points, which focus on the new legislation.

It is an important legislation in the light of India's emergence as a nuclear weapons state. It provides for an integrated and overarching legislation on prohibiting unlawful activities in relation to WMD and their deliver systems and related materials, equipment and technologies. We do have earlier several legislations, which deal with and have relevance to WMD. For instance, there is the Atomic Energy Act of 1962, there is the Chemical Weapons Convention Act of 2000, there is the Environment Protection Act, there is Explosive Substances Act 1908 and so on. But, the objective of introducing this legislation was to provide an integrated and overarching legislation, which provides for prohibiting a range of unlawful activities in relation to WMD and their delivery system and WMD usable goods and technologies.

This does not indicate any change in our nuclear policy. It does not in manner constrain any nuclear programmes, civilian or strategic. India is determined to utilize advance technologies for its security, for the welfare of its people and for meeting the nation's developmental requirements.

In terms of how this legislation fits into the requirements of the UN, I may add that these updated controls over the export of WMD usable goods and technologies and prohibitions related to non-state actors will fulfill our mandatory obligations under the UN Security Council Resolution 1540 which was adopted on April 28, 2004. The legislation and its passage underlines India's role as a responsible nuclear power and reflects the inherent sense of national responsibility that arises from the possession of sensitive-to-use technologies. Naturally, it also underlines our abiding interest in contributing to global peace and security.

Question: Do you think this legislation makes it easier for India to fulfill its civilian nuclear energy requirements from abroad?

Answer: The fact that India has taken all the steps necessary to show that India is a responsible nuclear state is naturally a major statement to the world.

Question: Is it a coincidence that this Bill has been passed when the review of NPT is going on?

Answer: I think that is a coincidence. If you would like to see a linkage, I frankly do not see a linkage at all. India is not part of the NPT process but that has never stopped India taking steps against proliferation and showing its commitment to peace and security.

T. K. Viswanathan,
Secy. to the Govt. of India

041. Remarks by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the meeting of BARC (Bhabha Atomic Research Centre) Scientists.

Trombay, June 4, 2005.

Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission Dr. Anil Kakodkar,
Director of BARC Dr. S. Banerjee,
Dr. Homi Sethna, Dr. Chidambaram,
Members of the BARC Fraternity,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be here today. We live in an age in which human knowledge is growing at an exponential pace. It is a pace that was unthinkable only a few decades ago. Human knowledge and science and technology are the new determinants of national development. In the gigantic task of national development and nation building that is before us, the members of the BARC fraternity have played an outstanding role, and I salute you for it. I thank you on behalf of the nation for your efforts.

It is therefore a pleasure for me to speak to such a distinguished gathering of scientists today. This great national enterprise that BARC is takes its name after the Father of India's Atomic Energy Programme – Dr. Homi Bhabha, a great visionary and a great patriot who laid the foundations of a self-reliant nuclear programme for India. I pay homage to his memory and I salute his vision.

The Bhabha Atomic Research Centre has gained national and international recognition as the mother institution of our Atomic Energy Programme. BARC has been instrumental in the birth of a whole host of DAE institutions, ranging from cutting edge R&D to commercial operations. The BARC Training School has become the primary source of human resource talent for the entire Department of Atomic Energy.

Our nuclear programme has benefited from a generation of outstanding scientists and engineers. We recall with gratitude the contributions made by my friend and colleague, Dr Homi Sethna, Dr. P.K. Iyengar, Dr. M. R. Srinivasan, Dr Chidambaram and the late Dr. Raja Ramanna. Dr. Kakodkar is carrying on this great tradition and I compliment him and his colleagues for their dedicated work. All these outstanding scientists have been nurtured by this great centre of scientific excellence. This is a fitting example of how great institutions and outstanding individuals reinforce each other, a model we must replicate elsewhere in our country, in the management of our affairs and in our academic institutions.

The Department of Atomic Energy, which marked the Golden Jubilee of its establishment last year, has made tremendous strides ranging from fundamental scientific research to development and commercial applications of nuclear energy. Our Scientists have—and I say it with great pride—mastered all aspects of nuclear fuel cycle technology. This is an achievement for which the nation is grateful to them. They have also achieved high standards in safety and environment management. Nuclear technology developed in this Centre has found applications in industry, health, agriculture, food preservation, urban waste management and desalination.

It is a matter of national pride that India is among a select group of countries with advanced capabilities to utilize the entire gamut of fuel cycle operations. The technology to recover plutonium from irradiated nuclear fuel and use it to produce nuclear power in thermal as well as in fast reactors, making use of our vast thorium reserves, is critical to Dr Bhabha's vision of a phased but unconstrained development of our nuclear power programme. We remain committed to doing all that is necessary to realize Dr. Bhabha's vision. Our Government will ensure that the resource and capability base that BARC represents will be nurtured to meet our security needs in the years ahead.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

To ensure our energy security in future, we must recognize that nuclear energy is an important component of our overall energy basket. We cannot allow energy constraints to retard our economic and social growth. Nuclear energy is a clean and safe alternative to our dependence on fossil fuels. It is therefore imperative for the country to embark on a major expansion of nuclear energy. Our objective is to generate at least 20,000 MW of nuclear power by the year 2020 and we are determined to achieve this target.

Such an expansion will require a focused national effort. However, when we succeed, it will provide considerable scope for the establishment of nuclear power plants through international collaboration. We hope that countries with advanced nuclear power industries will come forward to make use of the growing opportunities in India for cooperation in civilian nuclear energy. This is not just in India's interest, but indeed in the interests of the international community as a whole, worried as we all are by global warming and all that goes with it.

Ladies and gentlemen,

India is a responsible nuclear power. While we are determined to utilize fully the advanced technologies in our possession – both civilian and strategic, we are also prepared for a constructive dialogue with the international community to remove hindrances to a free flow of nuclear materials, technology and know-how. Our non-proliferation and export control credentials are impeccable and have been further strengthened through a comprehensive legislative action against WMD proliferation that our Parliament passed only a few weeks ago.

Our nuclear programme has reached global standards of excellence. Our scientific and technological achievements have given us the will and confidence to explore enhanced interactions and exchanges with the outside world. Artificial barriers and technology denial regimes are an anachronism in the age of globalization, and must be progressively dismantled. Given our scientific credentials we can add value to international cooperative endeavors. India would like to participate in all efforts to find alternatives to traditional sources of energy.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The most valuable resource in any scientific endeavour is its human resource base. This Centre must continue to attract the best scientific talent in the country. I am glad that the Department of Atomic Energy is encouraging greater student involvement in its research programmes and is strengthening linkages with our university system.

I am happy to announce today that the Department's proposal to set up a Dr. Homi Bhabha National Institute has been approved. This will bring together ten premier institutions all over the country under a single research-driven framework. This will help ensure that our scientists and our scientific establishments remain at the forefront of the pursuit of excellence, comparable with the best global standards.

In conclusion, let me once again convey my deep appreciation for your dedication and your deep commitment to our nation's growth. The nation is proud of the achievements of our scientists and technologists working dedicatedly here to develop our capability in atomic energy. In this journey of excellence, I assure you of the sustained support of the Government and our people. You should remain in the forefront of the national scientific endeavor. That is my prayer, that is my hope. May your path be blessed.

Thank you.

042. Speech of Defence Minister Pranab Mukherjee at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace on India's Strategic Perspectives.

Washington (DC), June 27, 2005.

Honoured guests,

It is a great privilege for me to be here in Washington, before this distinguished gathering at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, to speak on 'India's strategic perspectives'. I would like to thank Carnegie President Jessica Mathews for the opportunity, and Ashley Tellis for the initiative and arrangements.

Friends, I have been in public life now for over 40 years, a good part of it in Government, at different times, as Minister of Finance, Commerce and External Affairs. I have been here in my capacity as each of these. Times have certainly changed. The last time I was here, in Washington, in 1995, the world was very different. Public discourse on India-US relations was dominated by the baggage of the past rather than by a vision of the future. It was a perennial puzzle: how could two democracies, one the oldest and the other the largest, be so much at odds in their perception of the world?

Today, we see an objective convergence in many areas, in the area of values as well as interests, not least over the big issues of the day: democracy, fundamental freedoms, economic vitality on the one hand; and terrorism, proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, maritime security and international peace and stability on the other.

India's strategic perspectives have been shaped by geography, history, our own native culture and vision, and geopolitical realities and imperatives. Geographically, a few facts are particularly relevant. First, that India is both a continental and maritime nation with a territory of over 3 million sq kms, a land frontier of 15,000 kms, a coastline of 7,500 kms, and a population of 1.1 billion, the second largest in the world.

Second, its location at the base of continental Asia and the top of the Indian Ocean gives it a vantage point in relation to both West, Central, continental and South-East Asia, and the littoral States of the Indian Ocean from East Africa to Indonesia.

Third, India's peninsular projection in the Ocean which bears its name, gives it a stake in the security and stability of these waters. Nehru once said: "I look at India....on three sides, the sea, and on the fourth, high mountains....History has shown that whatever power controls the Indian Ocean, has in the first instance, India's sea borne trade at her mercy, and in the second, India's very independence itself".

Fourth, it shares borders with eleven neighbours, most of whom do not share borders amongst themselves.

Fifth, it is an energy deficient country located close to some of the most important sources of oil and natural gas in the Gulf and Central Asia and adjacent to one of the most vital sea-lanes through which 60,000 ships transit every year.

Its natural features, particularly the high wall of the Himalayas to the north, and the vast Indo-Gangetic plain, incline natural movements to and from the north-west of India, from West and Central Asia to the plains. Curiously, while the plains attracted invaders, conquerors, and military campaigns, from Greece (Alexander) to Central Asia (Babur), the reverse was not true, though the 4th century B.C. Mauryan emperor Ashoka did leave his mark in Afghanistan through his edicts eschewing war and exhorting Buddhist non-violence and peace.

Historically, India has been a fundamentally 'open' society. It has received and absorbed major influences from outside, like Islam and Christianity, and radiated cultural influences, outward. It was, with the Arab, Persian and Sinic civilizations, a source of cultural influence in Asia. India was one of the great well-springs of human intellectual and spiritual achievement, of the metaphysical insights of Hinduism, and the pacific mission of Buddhism. It is customary to talk of strategic perspectives in terms of 'hard' power: our strategic perspectives were those of trade, religion, culture, spirituality, and the arts; and later, the political morality of Gandhi.

Developments from the 17th century onwards fundamentally altered these traditional orientations and moorings of India's external relations with the outside world in profound ways. European mercantilism grew into the maritime domination of the Indian Ocean, disrupting traditional trade and contacts between India and its regional maritime partners to the east and west. Further north, in mainland Asia, it introduced relationships of domination and rivalry between imperial powers where earlier only local powers played out their dynastic destinies.

Several developments in the 20th century, with their roots in imperial history, affected India's relationships with its historical neighbours in Asia. Perhaps, the most fateful, was the Partition of India and the emergence of hard frontiers in the form of a hostile and revanchist Pakistan to the west and east of India. As a result, for the first time in its 4000-year history, India found itself physically separated and shut out from its historical, cultural and commercial surroundings to the north-west of India and vice versa.

Viewed from this perspective, it can be argued that the 20th century has been a decided aberration in the pattern of India's historical and traditional relationship with the outside world.

On the economic side, the historical experience of the British East India Company and imperialism in general, left India suspicious of foreign trade. Post-Independence, this found expression in efforts to build a self-reliant economy wary of integration to the world economy. The model stood us in good stead for a while. It helped set up a technical and industrial base, and turn from a food-deficit to a food surplus country. Self-reliance gave us self-confidence.

While colonialism disrupted our traditional historic links, the Cold War delayed their restoration. In retrospect, this was an era of shadow boxing; a hall of mirrors. The breakdown of the Berlin Wall and the end of the Cold War liberated India (and much of the developing world), from the false problematic of 'East' and 'West'. It provided an opportunity to recover our traditional, historical reflexes atrophied in the chilly theatre of Cold War, and rediscover our real interests.

The end of the Cold War coincided with a balance of payments crisis, the liberalization of the Indian economy and the phenomenon of globalization. The revolution in information and communications technologies offered us the opportunity to transcend the limitations imposed by colonialism and its legacy of hard frontiers of the 20th century. Educated sections of our society found themselves in a good position to take advantage of globalization, though in parenthesis, it is ironic that the shrinking of the world as a result of technology and communications should be accompanied by an evolution of border controls that all but chokes travel and movement for the peoples of the developing world.

Over the last two decades, India has recorded an average annual growth of around 6% and is now the fourth largest economy in the world in terms of purchasing power parity. Foreign exchange reserves have gone up from US $ 1 billion in 1991 to US $ 140 billion today. The size (GDP) of the economy has since doubled. We hope to redouble it by 2010 by a sustained annual growth of around 8%. Several recent studies suggest that India will be one of the three largest economies in the coming two-and-a-half decades.

Our demographic trends and our human resource base constitute two of our strongest assets. Our 'over-population' liability of yesterday is now an asset. Some 550 million Indians out of our billion-plus strong population are below the age of 25. The middle class of over 300 million is rising steadily. We have the second largest reservoir of trained manpower. Our universities and centres of higher education turn out over 2 million under-graduates every year. Our IT workforce is 650,000 today, and will exceed 2 million by 2010.

Our capabilities in high technology areas, including developing our own super-computers, complete nuclear fuel cycle facilities and placing our own satellites in orbit, are now proven. India's comparative advantage in knowledge-driven areas of economic activities has made it attractive both for outsourcing IT-enabled services and as a Research & Development hub. 190 out of the 500 Fortune companies already outsource to India.

We hope to maintain our comparative advantage in areas well into this century. The IT segment of the Indian economy itself is expected to grow from US $ 1.5 billion in 2002 to US $ 17 billion in 2008. We are trying to replicate this achievement in areas of biotechnology, biogenetics and pharmaceuticals.

It would be prudent to bear in mind that we have achieved what we have achieved within a largely unfavourable social, economic, technological and international environment, and mostly on our own effort, without the benefit of special relationships and access to markets that most other major economic powers, other than China, have had.

But notwithstanding these achievements and prospects, the economic challenges are many and daunting, and remain: unconscionable levels of poverty; wide income and economic disparities; regional imbalances; a large and largely backward rural and agricultural sector; infrastructure constraints; chronic shortage of energy resources; and lack of adequate access to markets in the region and beyond. India's share of world GDP is less than its share of the world population by 9 per cent.

Nevertheless, seen in the long term, even our relative backwardness can be turned to our advantage. As we address the high levels of poverty and illiteracy in India, given our demographic profile and economic trajectory, there is a good chance that long after other countries plateau economically, we will still be growing.

I would like to set out some of our key strategic priorities against this background. These can be addressed in terms of what we can call, to take a leaf from the Chinese book, the 'Four Deficits': a historical deficit; a security deficit; an economic deficit; and a global decision-making deficit.

One of our primary strategic challenges is to restore our traditional linkages with the region and re-integrate ourselves to our immediate and extended neighbourhood, especially the region west of India to Central Asia and beyond, what I have called a strategic historical deficit.

Advances in information and communications technologies have helped us overcome physical barriers to mass culture and access to IT-enabled business, but land-routes remain the primary medium of trade with our neighbours to the West and East. We would like to see India well connected with Afghanistan and beyond in the north, and Bangladesh, Myanmar and beyond to South-east Asia, taking advantage of India's huge market through a network of roads, trade and transport corridors, gas pipelines, tourism and communications etc in a zone of co-prosperity.

With this in mind, we have been active in trying to take advantage of arrangements like SAARC, ASEAN, BIMST-EC, the Mekong-Ganga Initiative, and trilateral cooperation with Thailand and Myanmar. We realize that not all our neighbours may be comfortable with this vision and India's place in it. Bearing that in mind, we have been ready to enter into normal, preferential, asymmetrical and free trade and development arrangements with those of our neighbours who are willing, provided of course our security concerns are not compromised.

The biggest challenge to this vision comes of course from our western neighbour. Our quest for a return to the grain of historical contacts to India's north-west, gives us a vested interest in peace with Pakistan. It is not an accident that virtually every major initiative for peace, be it Simla, or Lahore or Agra, or Srinagar, has come from India.

There have been several positive developments in our relations with Pakistan over the last one year-and-a-half. The ceasefire of November 2003 is holding. The composite dialogue has entered a second round. People-to-people exchanges have acquired a momentum of their own. The Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service started despite terrorist threats and attacks.

At the same time, we cannot still say for sure that the peace process is entrenched. The infrastructure for terrorism in Pakistan and Pakistan-controlled territory, remains. We do not hear of operations like the ones being conducted by Pakistan, in cooperation with the US against the war on terrorism at its western frontiers, towards its eastern borders with India. More importantly from the point of view of our strategic interests, trade and transit with and through Pakistan remain highly circumscribed. It is only when India and Pakistan resume direct, bilateral trade and transit, that there will be a vested interest in peace in both countries.

Trade and transit with Pakistan would be good not only for our two countries but also Afghanistan and Central Asia. India has had a traditional and long-standing relationship with Afghanistan. Today, Afghanistan needs economic support, markets and assistance. India has committed more than US $ 500 million to reconstruction in nearly every region and province in Afghanistan. India has also made modest contributions to the Afghan National Army. India could do much more, if normal relations and trade and transit through Pakistan could flourish. We are concerned about signs of the resurgence of the Taliban, and the growth in drug cultivation in, and trafficking from, Afghanistan.

The restoration of traditional links with Central Asia is not important only for the sake of trade and economy. Traditionally, Central Asia has been at the crossroads of trade and culture, a major hub in the Silk Route. This is the region through which Buddhism spread as far as Mongolia and Korea. It is also the region through which Islam enriched India. Today, it is a theatre in the battle between fundamentalism and tolerance, extremism and moderation in Islam with fundamentalist outfits actively trying to destabilize the secular Governments of the region.

India has a secular polity that shares with liberal democracies, values of democracy, fundamental and religious freedoms. It is, by virtue of its inherited historical character, composition, size, population, economy and military strength and experience, a natural bulwark against fundamentalist extremism and a factor for peace and stability in Asia. By nature, India is not inclined to export ideologies, even ideologies it believes in and follows. India would rather promote democracy in the region by precept and example. Freer traffic between India and Central Asia would be a factor in favour of moderation and democracy there.

Beyond the immediate region, India has vital interests in the Gulf and South-east Asia. The Gulf forms parts of our strategic neighbourhood and important source of energy, home to over the 3.5 million Indians, and a major trading partner. Parts of it are also a source of ideology, funding and recruits to the cause of Islamic radicalism and terrorism. Iraq remains volatile. Iran's nuclear intentions and the response of the international community have introduced a new factor of uncertainty in an already highly disturbed region.

South-east Asia too plays an important role in our strategic perceptions as a dynamic partner in our growing economy and on account of our ethnic and cultural ties. We also have a vital interest in preserving the traditions of peaceful coexistence and syncreticism amongst their diverse ethnic and religious communities against the intrusion of dogmatic, alien, fundamentalist and extremist religious tendencies.

Let me now turn to our security deficit. 21st century India faces peculiar security challenges. We live in a dangerous neighbourhood. Few other countries in the world face the full spectrum of threats to their security as India does, from low intensity conflicts to an unfriendly nuclearized neighbourhood. Our response to such an environment has been anything but militaristic.

First, India is located at the centre of an arc of fundamentalist activism, terrorism and political instability between North and East Africa and South-east Asia that has witnessed some of the most dramatic acts of terrorism over the last decade, from the US embassy bombings of Nairobi and Mombasa, through incidents in Morocco, Egypt, Turkey, Saudi Arabia, Bali and Jakarta, not to forget the Bombay blasts of 1992. In the catalogue of terrorist events, it is not often realized that, the Bombay blasts were, arguably, the original act of mass terrorism, eerily similar in modus operandi and targets to 9/11 in its synchronized, serial character and targeting of state and economic symbols.

Second, though innately pacifist through its history, India has, since independence, faced aggression and conflicts with its two largest neighbours. At least one has been openly hostile and adventurist through this entire period. There are unresolved territorial and boundary issues with the other. Talks have commenced with both, but the situation is not yet such that we can lower our guard.

Third, India faces on a daily basis, a proxy war from across its borders using terrorism and local insurgencies. There are also spillovers of internal conflicts in neighbouring countries and threats to internal security from extremist movements from within.

Fourth, India is faced with an unfavourable nuclear and missile environment. Apart from two declared nuclear weapon states with whom we have had a history of aggression and conflict, and proliferation emanating from, and to, the region, we have to contend with the possibility of WMDs falling into the hands of terrorists and non-state actors in our vicinity.

Fifth, we have to contend with instability and failing states in our neighbourhood providing the breeding ground for terrorists and other non-state actors.

Last, the maritime security environment requires more attention. As already indicated, the Indian Ocean region from East Africa to South-east Asia is an area busy with fundamentalist, terrorist, and militant, separatist or extremist organizations, and criminal syndicates involved in trafficking in drugs, arms and humans, and piracy. 60,000 ships, and much of the energy from the Gulf to East Asia, transit through the Straits of Malacca every year.

It has important ports and three vulnerable choke-points at Bab-el-Mandab, the Persian Gulf and the Malacca Straits. As the recent tsunami and countless cyclones of the past have shown, it is also a region prone to disasters.

These security concerns are not unique to India. To some degree, most nations face them in some degree or the other. But few face them all together like India does. But what they underline is a convergence of our security concerns with those of the international community at large, and with the US in particular, over fundamentalist activism and terrorism; proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; security of shipping, energy and the sea-lanes in the Indian Ocean region; and peace and stability in Asia. In all these, India finds itself at the front-line.

We do not have the time to dwell on each of these at any length. But I would like to touch briefly on our approach to, and our role, in maritime security in our region. Our approach to it is essentially cooperative. We now have coordinated maritime patrolling arrangements with Indonesia, Thailand and Sri Lanka. Our Navy has been providing hydrographic assistance to Indonesia, Seychelles and Mauritius, and maritime security cover for Summit Conferences in Mozambique. The Coast Guard and Navy have been active in anti-piracy, disaster relief, and environmental management and response operations. The Navy has also been conducting joint exercises in the Indian Ocean with the US, France, Singapore, Russia and Oman amongst others. In 2002, we provided escort operations for high value US naval assets passing through the Malacca Straits. The Indian Navy holds the MILAN Naval Exercises off Andaman and Nicobar islands every two years. On the security of Malaccas, we are comfortable with its management by the littoral states and would be happy to join a regional initiative, if necessary, and if the littoral states are comfortable with our participation.

I would like to highlight three aspects of our economic deficit. First, the energy deficit. India is a heavily energy deficient country. Of all the variables that could hinder India's economic progress, energy scarcity and dependence are probably the most serious. 70% of our crude oil is imported. Per capita energy consumption presently is only 1/5th of the world average. Considering a high growth rate of around 8% of GDP per annum in the coming years, growth of oil demand is projected to be 6% per annum. If so, dependence on oil imports could rise from 70% to 80-85% over the next two decades.

It is therefore imperative for us to look for cost-effective and long-term alternatives to meet our energy requirements. Indian oil companies are currently actively involved in a search for energy in the form of oil and gas fields, pipelines, LNG, and other new and non-conventional sources. But most hydrocarbon resources underline our dependence on limited reserves, and others, for this critical requirement. They also carry scope for avoidable strategic energy rivalries.

If indeed India is to realize its economic potential, India needs alternative sources of energy. Foremost among those available, is nuclear energy. India has indigenously developed technologies for nuclear energy. But, as in many other areas of dual use or high technology, India faces serious impediments of access to materials and components. India's nuclear tests were a response to an increasingly untenable security environment. We have already announced a restrained and responsible doctrine for its role in our security. Our nuclear energy and security programmes are separate. Restrictions against India's nuclear energy programme are anachronistic. US and India have now commenced a dialogue through the NSSP and the energy dialogue to address some of these restrictions. Their easing will impact favourably on our economic prospects over the next 2-3 decades.

The second constraint is a technology deficit. Technology control regimes going back to the Cold War, and restrictions on transfer of dual use, nuclear and space technology imposed after our first atomic test in 1974, remain. One of the reasons for the economic gap between India and other comparable countries is the restrictive and discriminatory technology regimes imposed against India for 30 years. If India is to play its part as an engine of growth and factor of stability in Asia, it should be in the interest of the US and others that such regimes are liberalized as quickly as possible.

The third is the agricultural deficit. Agriculture is still India's chief livelihood. From a chronically famine-prone and food deficit country, India has moved to becoming first self-sufficient, and now a food exporting country. Yet, most agriculture in India is still that of subsistence farmers. While they do not have the benefit of access to, and integration with, the world economy, they suffer from the vagaries of both nature and the globalized market.

This is an area where the interests of the rich countries and their farmers, both traditional and commercial, diverge. We are trying to address the issue of a fairer deal to the problems of this vast agricultural sector, in the WTO. Unless this issue is addressed as an issue of livelihood that affects 600 million people in India alone, we run the risk of a schizophrenic economy where one half prospers from the globalization, and the other suffers. This would be neither socially nor politically sustainable.

The last issue that I would like to touch on is the global decision-making deficit, or India's place in the major decision-making bodies of the world. If globalization is inexorable, multilateralism has to be its life sustaining mechanism. The world has changed dramatically since the constitution of the United Nations and its present composition of Security Council members. In the interim, the bipolar, confrontationist edifice of the Cold War has collapsed. The Cold War structure of global governance stands dismantled, but an enduring replacement that can address the economic and security challenges of our times and the future, is not in place.

As a new order struggles to be born, the obvious reality in our increasingly globalized world is the growing interdependence among nations. No one country, whatever its economic, technological, and military eminence, can take on the exclusive responsibility of ensuring peace and order in the whole world. In Asia alone, new powers, like China and Japan, have emerged. The European Union may have suffered a jolt, but the idea remains powerful. Russia may be facing problems of transition, but is too important to ignore. A unipolar world is clearly not a sustainable proposition in the long run. India's vision of a multipolar world is one of partnership among the nations. It does not visualize the creation of poles in opposition to one another. It has sought geometries across continents, like the India-Brazil-South Africa (IBSA) Forum, the Russia-China-India consultations, the Group of Four for United Nations Security Council reform. The early reform and reinvigoration of the UN system to reflect changed ground realities acquire a certain urgency in this context. By any criteria — size, population, economy, military power, role in international peacekeeping, responsibility in international affairs, future prospects, etc. India is a natural candidate.

I have today, highlighted those factors that prevent India from realizing its potential to contribute to international peace, stability and development. Asia hosts a diversity of political experiences and experiments ranging from monarchies and military dictatorships, to nascent and established democracies. The region also faces the menace of terrorism and trafficking in, and proliferation of arms and drugs. In the midst of this, India stands as a bulwark against fundamentalism and extremism, a centre of economic gravity, a beacon of democracy despite challenges of human diversity, poverty and economic disparity, a bastion of stability, and a symbol of peaceful coexistence and non-violence.

India is not an aggressive country; it does not harbour any territorial ambitions; it does not espouse or export any particular ideology, except the spirit of peace, co-existence and tolerance. It has a strong military only to defend itself and protect its territorial integrity. It is one of the world's oldest civilizations, but a new nation; the largest democracy of a bewildering mix of people and populations that has learnt to accommodate and assimilate over the ages. It is a country with the second largest population of Muslims in the world, who have suffered loss of political power to the Europeans and partition after that, to embrace a secular constitution. It does not provide recruits to a global 'jihad'. Today, when a more mobile world looks for models of co-existence, where minorities live abroad as immigrants or expatriates, India's historical experience of co-existence could be a valuable reference point.

Which brings me to my last point this evening, India-US relations. The US and India have often been referred to as 'estranged democracies'. Perhaps history itself is to blame. It is a striking historical coincidence that India came under the grip of colonialism just as the US found its independence. When India gained independence, the world entered the period of the Cold War. As if destined to ignore each other, the US and India looked in different directions. Today, more than ever, the US and India realize that they share common values and security concerns; and that there is an objective convergence of interests. It is crucial that India and the US work together with the international community to find a new order for the 21st century.

The United States has the richest collection of strategic think tanks in the world. We are here in one that has made a big contribution to the literature of international relations, and the practice of conflict resolution. I look forward to a closer partnership not only at the level of government, but also, scholars, thinkers and people in general.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen.

043. Interview of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with CNN.

Washington, July 20, 2005.

{Interview conducted by Wolf Blitzer of CNN} BLITZER: Prime Minister, welcome to the United States. Thanks very much for joining us on CNN.

Manmohan Singh, Indian Prime Minister : Thank you very much for having me on CNN.

Blitzer : Let's talk about the nightmare, the nuclear nightmare. How worried are you about the possibility of a nuclear exchange between India and Pakistan?

Singh : I think the possibilities of such a development are grossly overstated.

Blitzer : Overstated?

Singh : Overstated. Both our countries are nuclear powers. And as far as we are concerned, we have an impeccable record of not in any way contributing to proliferation of these nuclear technologies.

Blitzer : Are you committed to a non-first-strike policy?

Singh : Yes, that is very much our policy.

Blitzer : Pakistan has not committed to that, though.

Singh : That's certainly true. But I have often felt that outside India and Pakistan, the possibilities of a nuclear clash between India and Pakistan are somewhat exaggerated.

Blitzer : Are you worried, though, that there could be a change of government in Pakistan, that President Musharraf, who has been working more closely with you recently, that there could be a coup, there could be a change that could escalate these tensions?

Singh : Well, the security of assets which are under control of Pakistan, I think does worry us. And I hope that credible solutions can be found today with that problem.

Blitzer : What specifically worries you about the security of the nuclear assets in Pakistan?

Singh : Well, if they get into the hands of the jihadi elements, that could pose a serious problem.

Blitzer : And is that possible, do you believe, given what you know? Obviously you watch the situation very closely.

Singh : Well, I'm not an astrologer (ph), but I hope that this does not happen. And I pray that it will not happen.

Blitzer : Are you concerned -- as you call it the jihadi or the Islamist fundamentalists, the extremist elements in Pakistan could take charge?

Singh : Well, there is always a danger. And we would like Pakistan to emerge as a moderate Islamic state, and we have a vested interest in the stability and progress of Pakistan.

Blitzer : Is it your opinion that Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda still have a base, a significant base in Pakistan?

Singh : Well, I think there's no doubt about that.

Blitzer : Where?

Singh : Well, in the tribal belt of the northwest frontier province of Pakistan, the al Qaeda elements are quite active. And also, the whole infrastructure of the madrasas in Pakistan, the belief that these madrasas can shift away from the teaching of fundamentalism to more modern discipline I think has not materialized.

Blitzer : The madrasas are the religious seminaries and schools in Pakistan.

And do you -- what are you saying, that these madrasas are training grounds or spiritual centers for al Qaeda operatives?

Singh : Well, I think -- I'm not saying that they are deliberately doing it, but I think jihadi elements have taken advantage of these schools, and they can take greater advantage of that phenomenon in years to come.

Blitzer : There are more Muslims in India than there are in Pakistan. I think there are more Muslims in India, with the exception of Indonesia, than any other country in the world. You really haven't had a problem with Islamists or jihadi terrorists.

Singh : Well, I take pride in the fact that, although we have 150 million Muslims in our country as citizens, not one has been found to have joined the ranks of al Qaeda or participated in the activities of Taliban.

Blitzer : Why is that?

Singh : This is because India is a functioning democracy. We are a secular state where all sections of the communities, regardless of religion, caste and creed, they may belong to -- they can participate in our mainstream national activities. Being a democracy, being a secular democracy where all religions are free to practice their respective faiths without fear, without favor. I think that's something which has prevented that sort of eventuality.

Blitzer : Do you trust President Pervez Musharraf of Pakistan?

Singh : Well, I have had two important meetings with President Musharraf, and he and I both have committed our two countries to make the peace process between India and Pakistan irreversible.

Blitzer : So the answer is yes, you do trust President Pervez Musharraf?

Singh : Well, I do trust. But I think there is an old saying of President Reagan: trust and verify. And I sincerely hope that the commitments that Pakistan has made, that the territory of Pakistan will not be allowed to be used for planning terrorist acts against India, that commitment is honored in letter and in spirit. And we have some worries on that score, that the infrastructure of terror is largely intact in Pakistan.

Blitzer : It looks like U.S.-Indian relations right now, in the aftermath of your visit here to Washington, are very strong, very solid, better than they've been in a long time. And yet U.S.- Pakistani relations are also very good right now, especially in the aftermath of 9/11, what happened here in the United States. Is this -- is that your assessment, that there can be good U.S. relations with both India and Pakistan?

Singh : Well, we are not against the United States having good relations with Pakistan. As I've said, a strong, stable, prosperous Pakistan is in our interests. If -- Pakistan admits the jihadi elements are under control is in our interests. So please, make no mistake, we welcome stronger relations between the United States and Pakistan. And I hope that the United States' influence can be exercised to ensure that the commitments that Pakistan has made about the control of terrorist activities, they are honored in letter and in spirit.

Blitzer : Since India violated the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, there are some members of the U.S. Congress who don't want to see India right now rewarded for violating the NPT, the Nonproliferation Treaty.

Singh : Well, we didn't violate it. We were never a member of the NPT.

Blitzer : But in effect -- in effect -- in effect, you went ahead, you tested a nuclear bomb.

Singh : But we were never a signatory to the NPT.

Blitzer : But should India be rewarded now, in effect? Let me read to you what Congressman Ed Markey said the other day. He said, "We are playing with fire by picking and choosing when to pay attention to the existing Nonproliferation Treaty." There was a Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. India never signed it, but went ahead and tested beyond that. Should India be rewarded now with nuclear technology from the United States?

Singh : Well, there's no question of dividing (ph) us. The plain fact is that we had nuclear capabilities. But we didn't go the road of testing nuclear weapons at a time when there was no NPT. Now, we have a situation in our region, despite all the regimes that are in position, our region has seen reckless proliferation of these sensitive technologies. So we had to take some defensive action in the interest of our national security. You know what I am talking about, the activities of North Korea; the activities of other industry and the A.Q. Khan phenomena. So therefore our defensive action of developing nuclear weapons was a response to a situation where reckless nonproliferation (sic) was taking place in our region. It poses no threat to anybody else. We have an impeccable record of not contributing in any way to the unauthorized proliferation of these sensitive technologies. And therefore, I think the world must acknowledge this exemplary behavior of our country. Our nuclear weapons are totally under civilian control. We have a democracy. And that democratic structure ensures that these weapons cannot be misused.

Blitzer : Let's shift gears briefly and talk about U.S.-Indian economic relations. What do you say to Americans who are concerned about American jobs, good-paying jobs, in effect, going -- being exported to India?

Singh : Well, let me say that if you are referring to outsourcing and all that goes with it, it is not a one-way street. Indian enterprises benefit, but so do the U.S. enterprises. The fact that outsourcing opportunities exist, the U.S. companies are able to procure goods and services at much lower cost. This increases their competitiveness. That increases their ability to compete against their competitors both in the U.S. market and in third countries. So, if you look at the picture in a holistic way, it is a win/win situation. India gains, but also the U.S. competitiveness also goes up in the process.

Blitzer : That's in the big picture. But in the specific and the smaller picture, there are Americans who are losing their jobs, because those jobs are moving to countries like India.

Singh : But one has to look at the big picture. We are talking about two economies as diverse as big as India and the United States. If we were to look at every I and every T, I don't believe I think we could -- I think we could develop a relationship which befits our capabilities and our needs and our aspiration.

- 046. Press release of the Prime Minister's Office on the first meeting of the Energy Coordination Committee.

New Delhi, August 6, 2005.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh chaired the first meeting of the newly created Energy Coordination Committee. Senior members of the Union Council of Ministers dealing with energy sector, senior officials and economic policy advisors participated in the 2-hour meeting here today.

In his opening remarks the Prime Minister said that in the light of the continuing rise of international oil prices India must diversify its energy supplies, manage energy resources more economically and pursue rational pricing policies. "We have to ensure that we build up adequate energy security to insulate the economy from any future shock." The PM said.

Emphasising the importance of tapping all sources of energy, including petroleum, natural gas, coal, biomass, solar, hydro and nuclear, the Prime Minister advised ministries to ensure that adequate investments are made keeping in mind the expected growth in demand arising out of higher rate of economic growth and the modernization, urbanization and commercialization of economic activity.

The Prime Minister said that India must invest in nuclear energy and the recent steps he has taken to end India's global isolation in this regard should help the country increase the share of nuclear energy in the overall energy mix of the economy. Dr Anil Kakodkar, Secretary Department of Atomic Energy, also emphasized the need for India to import uranium and invest in uranium mining to meet the requirements of nuclear power generation. He drew attention to the fact that the price of domestically mined uranium is 4 to 5 times that of imported uranium. Several participants complimented the Prime Minister for successfully concluding a deal with the United States that would enable India to import uranium for nuclear power projects.

The ECC discussed a strategy paper on the energy sector prepared by the Planning Commission and a paper on coal and gas availability for power generation prepared by the Cabinet Secretariat. The Prime Minister instructed the Cabinet Secretary to resolve all pending inter-ministerial issues to enable improvement in availability of gas and coal for power generation. He instructed the ministries of power, coal, petroleum and natural gas to ensure close monitoring of all on-going projects to ensure that energy supply from existing investments is increased to bridge the gap between demand and supply.

Vienna, September 28, 2005.

Mr. President,

Kindly accept congratulations on behalf of my Government and my own behalf on your election as President of the 49th General Conference. I am sure, under your able leadership and with the support of your team and the Secretariat of the Agency, this General Conference will be able to accomplish the tasks before it.

I take this opportunity to welcome the entry of Belize to the membership of the IAEA.

Let me also use this occasion to once again congratulate Dr. Mohamed ElBaradei on his re-appointment as Director-General, IAEA for another term. We wish him all success and as in the past, we will continue to work in close cooperation with him in achieving our collective objectives in accordance with the statute of the Agency.

Mr. President, the issues related to global climate change, sustainability of energy resources while meeting the ever increasing energy needs to support economic development and concerns regarding escalating trends in fuel prices, point to the inevitability of nuclear power. Global nuclear renaissance is now a reality.

India which constitutes one-sixth of the global population is on the rapid economic growth path. A recent study has revealed that we will need to augment our electricity generation nearly ten-fold in next four to five decades. This would be a significant fraction of global electricity generation. A large fraction of this energy coming from nuclear power would be of immense benefit, in the context of environment and sustainability concerns, for India as well as for the rest of the world. Nuclear energy is thus an important and inevitable option for India. As a part of realizing this objective, we have been pursuing a self-reliant indigenous nuclear power programme. This programme is tuned to realize our long-term energy requirements utilizing our vast thorium resources. This is of crucial importance to us as our uranium resources are modest. In this context, let me quote from the statement of our Prime Minister made in our Parliament on 29th July, 2005 “Our nuclear programme in many ways is unique. It encompasses the complete range of activities that characterise an advanced nuclear power including generation of electricity, advanced research and development and our strategic programme. Our scientists have mastered the complete nuclear fuel cycle. The manner of the development of our programme which has been envisaged is predicated on our modest uranium resources and vast reserves of thorium. While the energy potential available in these resources is immense, we remain committed to the three-stage nuclear power programme, consisting of Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs) in the first stage, fast breeder reactors in the second stage and thorium reactors in the third stage. These would need sequential implementation in an integrated manner. Our scientists have done excellent work and we are progressing well on this programme as per the original vision outlined by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Dr. Homi Bhabha. We will build on this precious heritage.

Energy is a crucial input to propel our economic growth. We have assessed our long-term energy resources and it is clear that nuclear power has to play an increasing role in our electricity generation plans. While our indigenous nuclear power programme based on domestic resources and national technological capabilities would continue to grow, there is clearly an urgent necessity for us to enhance nuclear power production rapidly. Our desire is to attain energy security to enable us to leapfrog stages of economic development obtained at the least possible cost. For this purpose, it would be very useful if we can access nuclear fuel as well as nuclear reactors from the international market. Presently, this is not possible because of the nuclear technology restrictive regimes that operate around us.”

While addressing at the Golden Jubilee Function of the Department of Atomic Energy (DAE) and the launch of construction of the Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor (PFBR) at Kalpakkam on 23rd October, 2004, our Prime Minister had said:

“India is a responsible nuclear power. We are fully conscious of the immense responsibilities that come with the possession of advanced technologies, both civilian and strategic. While we are determined to utilize our indigenous resources and capabilities to fulfill our national interests, we are doing so in a manner that is not contrary to the larger goals of nuclear nonproliferation.

India will not be the source of proliferation of sensitive technologies. We will also ensure the safeguarding of those technologies that we already possess. We will remain faithful to this approach, as we have been for the last several decades. We have done so despite the well-known glaring examples of proliferation, which have directly affected our security interests.

The limitations of the present non-proliferation regime should not be further accentuated by artificial restrictions on genuine peaceful nuclear applications. Technology denial and closing avenues for international cooperation in such an important field is tantamount to the denial of developmental benefits to millions of people, whose lives can be transformed by the utilization of nuclear energy and relevant technologies.

We call upon other advanced nuclear powers, and all those who have a stake in the future of nuclear energy, to come together for a constructive dialogue to evolve more effective measures that would stem the tide of proliferation without unduly constraining the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Constraining those who are responsible, amounts, in effect, to rewarding those who are irresponsible. The international community must face up to the implications of this choice. We in India are willing to shoulder our share of international obligations provided our legitimate interests are met. India has actively embraced globalisation. There is no reason why nuclear energy production should be an exception."

We are happy that we are now feeling the winds of change. We welcome the statements of USA and France on this podium and the positive and cooperative approach of several key countries in this regard. We look forward to a rapid growth in nuclear power generation capacity in India based on full international civilian nuclear cooperation as we continue our efforts to develop appropriate indigenous technologies towards realization of the ultimate goal of large-scale utilization of thorium for energy production not only in the form of electricity but also as hydrogen. We expect that the unique case of India as a responsible country with advanced nuclear technologies developed in a self-reliant manner, its large-scale energy requirements which have ramifications in terms of protecting the global climate, ensuring sustainability of energy resources and restraining escalating spiral of fuel prices, its impeccable record in terms of non-proliferation of WMD & related technologies and adherence to all its international commitments would soon result in lifting of all restrictions on India. Predicated on our obtaining the same benefits and advantages as other nuclear powers, consistent with our national policy of maintaining the integrity of our three stage nuclear energy programme, and ensuring full autonomy of our nuclear programme of strategic and R&D significance, India would be prepared to take reciprocal steps in a phased manner in keeping with the responsibilities and obligations of an advanced nuclear power with the objective of full civilian nuclear energy cooperation with international partners. Since some of these steps will also include safeguards on facilities of a civilian nature, selected by India on a voluntary basis, we will, at the appropriate stage, approach the IAEA in this regard.

Mr. President, we would like to see a rapid increase in nuclear power generation capacity in India well above the planned programme of achieving 20,000 MWe by the year 2020. This capacity could consist of imported Light Water Reactors (LWRs) which run on imported fuel, domestic Pressurised Heavy Water Reactors (PHWRs) which run on imported fuel, domestic PHWRs which run on domestic fuel and Fast Breeder Reactors. Progressively power reactors running on thorium would get added to this list.

Let me now report some of the recent developments in India. With the PHWR programme well on its growth path and having established comprehensive expertise in Fast Breeder Reactor (FBR) Technology, we have now embarked on the development of FBR - based second stage of our programme with the start of construction of the 500 MWe Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor launched in October last year. Our studies indicate that we should be in a position to support around 500 GWe power generation capacity based on FBRs with plutonium bred from indigenously available uranium. We are certain that Fast Breeder Reactors by virtue of their crucial place in sustainable development of nuclear energy would come centrestage worldwide in a couple of decades. The first 540 MWe PHWR unit at Tarapur has commenced commercial operations about 7 months ahead of schedule. Unit – 1 of Kakrapar Atomic Power Station has been operating continuously for more than a year. This is an Indian record. The indigenously developed unique Pu-rich mixed carbide fuel used in the Fast Breeder Test Reactor (FBTR) has performed extremely well crossing a burn-up of 148,000 MWd/t, without a single fuel pin failure. One of the important achievements during the year was closing of the fuel cycle of FBTR. The FBTR fuel discharged at 100,000 MWd/t has been successfully reprocessed. This is the first time that the Plutonium - rich carbide fuel has been reprocessed anywhere in the world. As a part of development of higher burn-up fuel for PHWRs 25 MOX bundles were successfully irradiated to a target burn-up of about 11,000 MWd/T. This year we have introduced additional 25 MOX fuel bundles in one of our PHWRs.

Construction of five PHWRs is progressing on schedule. These along with the two 1000 MWe VVERs presently under construction at Kudankulam in collaboration with Russian Federation would contribute 3420 MWe additional carbon-free electricity to the Indian grids in about 3 years time.

We have taken up development of sites for new nuclear power units and have commenced work to identify additional sites for further expansion of the programme.

The design of Advanced Heavy Water Reactor, an innovative Indian design aimed at moving further on thorium utilization route is under regulatory review. We intend to proceed further to take up its construction after the review process is completed. Work on development of a Compact High Temperature Reactor with the aim of producing hydrogen, which could be the most important energy carrier in the future as well as development of Accelerator Driven Systems that could sustain growth with thorium systems and enable incineration of long lived radioactive wastes is progressing well. The development of laser-based Uranium-233 clean up system, a crucial element in thorium utilization programme has made significant progress. The Steady State Superconducting Tokamak – SST-1 would soon see the first plasma shot. We are looking forward to joining the ITER project as a full partner.

The safety record of our nuclear and radiation facilities continues to be excellent. During 2004, we had only 1 event at level-2 and 4 events at level-1 of the International Nuclear Event Scale (INES).

En masse coolant channel replacement and other safety upgradation jobs in the Madras Atomic Power Station Unit-1 are nearing completion and the Unit is expected to be back in operation before the end of this year. A comprehensive safety review of the Tarapur Atomic Power Station which is in operation since 1969 has been completed by our regulatory body and implementation of the identified ageing management and safety upgradation jobs will be taken up shortly.

On 26 December 2004, the Eastern and Southern coasts of India were hit by a tsunami. Unit-2 of the Madras Atomic Power Station which was in operation at this time experienced minor flooding in its sea water pump house due to tsunami - induced surges and was shut-down. Apart from this, there was no other impact on the plant and the Unit could be brought back to operation within one week after review of the incident and clearance by the regulatory body. The excavated pit at the Prototype Fast Breeder Reactor construction site got flooded due to sea water ingress on account of the tsunami. The pit was dewatered and cleaned and, after incorporating necessary corrective measures, construction work has been resumed. The tsunami did not have any impact on the construction site of the two VVER-1000 NPPs.

In the area of accelerators and lasers, the second Indian Storage Ring, the 2.5 GeV Synchrotron Radiation Source – Indus-2, has been fully assembled and integrated. All sub-systems have been made operational and initial experiments to store 600 MeV electron beam in the ring have been commenced. Laser - based coolant channel cutting technology has been developed and successfully tested on one of the channels in a PHWR. This development will greatly bring down the man-rem consumption during the planned en masse coolant channel replacement work in the Narora Atomic Power Station reactors.

There has been a steady progress in expanding the benefits of atomic energy for the society. Several radiation processing plants based on Cobalt-60 are under construction in private and cooperative sectors. Demonstration facilities for radiation processing of food and materials using electron beam accelerators are also in advanced stage of construction. An Advanced Centre for Treatment, Research and Education in cancer (ACTREC) has been set up with the specific mandate to undertake on mission-oriented basis applied and translational research on cancer prevalent in Indian subcontinent. It will also apply cutting edge technologies in the treatment of cancer in partnership with industry and leading institutions in India and abroad and conduct educational programmes and undertake human resource development in different disciplines of oncology. To meet the growing demand of Teletherapy machines to combat cancer, an indigenously designed and developed state of art Co-60 Teletherapy machine – BHABHATRON has been commissioned. We feel this product would be very useful for fighting cancer in the developing world. Indian experts are actively involved in the Agency's "Programme of Action for Cancer Therapy" (PACT).

The International Atomic Energy Agency is playing a vital role in the peaceful uses of nuclear science and technology in a safe and secure manner. As in the past, we have been working in close partnership with the Agency. Our experts are involved actively in the Agency's international project on Innovative Nuclear Reactors and Fuel Cycles (INPRO). India has committed itself to carry out an INPRO Joint Study for an assessment of an innovative nuclear energy system based on high temperature reactors for the production of hydrogen using the INPRO methodology. As a part of the INPRO programme, India is also participating in the joint study on Innovative Nuclear Fuel Cycles based on Fast Reactors with closed fuel cycles. We look forward to the initiation of phase – 2 of INPRO.

In the area of knowledge management, our experts take active part in the Agency's programme such as Asian Network for Higher Education in Nuclear Technology (ANENT) and in the recently conducted WNU's first Summer Institute of Fellows having an intense 6-week educational experience featuring some of the international community's foremost leaders in science, engineering and environment.

Nuclear technology is knowledge intensive. Development of individuals is central to knowledge management. Nuclear industry needs well-trained human resources and strong industrial infrastructure for its exploitation. High importance has been given to Human Resource Development, right from the beginning of our programme. Recently our Prime Minister has announced the setting up of Homi Bhabha National Institute as a Deemed University to provide a platform for accelerating the pace of basic research as well as translation of basic research into development of advanced nuclear technologies.

We attach great importance to the Technical Cooperation Programme of the Agency. As in the past, we have pledged and paid our contribution to Technical Cooperation Fund in full and in time. In the year 2000, the Department of Atomic Energy had entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with the IAEA to further strengthen cooperation with the Agency covering Fellowship Training, Scientific Visits and Expert Services. An agreement was signed last month for streamlining the procedures for activities covered by this MoU. In the area of nuclear safety and security, India ratified the Convention on Nuclear Safety and participated in the third review meeting of the contracting parties held in April as an Observer. We also took active part in the amendment process to the Convention on Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials.

India, United States and IAEA have established a Regional Radiological Security Partnership programme (RRSP). Under this framework, India offered to provide infrastructure and expertise on a regular basis for conducting International Training Courses in India under the aegis of IAEA, on issues related to the Security of Radioactive Sources and materials as also for locating Orphan Radioactive Sources in countries which are unable to effectively deal with them and which seek assistance from the IAEA. Like in the past few years, India will be conducting the Regional Training Course on Physical Protection of Nuclear Installations during Nov. 7-18, 2005 in Mumbai.

Last month, a five-day international Workshop on external flooding hazards at Nuclear Power Plant Sites was organized at Kalpakkam. The Workshop provided the opportunity for experts to exchange experience and knowledge related to flooding hazards at NPP sites arising from various causes including tsunamis.

Mr. President, before I conclude, it is worthwhile for us to remind ourselves on the eve of the Golden Jubilee year of the Agency, that the IAEA is the world's center of cooperation in the nuclear field and was set up as the world's "Atoms for Peace" organization within the United Nations family. The Agency has well established mechanisms to realise the full potential of atoms for sustainable development. With the huge development deficit that still exists, sustainable development is crucially dependent on the enormous power of atom. The challenge before us is to channelise this enormous potential to world peace and prosperity while preventing its destructive use by irresponsible state and non-state actors. Addressing this challenge successfully would change the perception of the Agency from just a 'nuclear watchdog' to a 'nuclear Kamadhenu', the Indian mythological cow, that symbolises an inexhaustible sustenance provider for the welfare of the humanity. Once we realise this, a good part of cause for conflict should vanish. We thus have a unique opportunity here at IAEA to make a lasting contribution to world peace. We owe this to this unique multi-disciplinary organisation and in fact the entire UN system.

Thank you, Mr. President.

053. Extracts from the speech of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Combined Commanders Conference.

New Delhi, October 20, 2005.

At the outset I would like to join my colleague the honourable Raksha Mantri to pay tribute to our jawans and officers who valiantly defend our borders. I also express our Nation's profound gratitude to the men and women in uniform who helped in rescue, relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction in the wake of a variety of natural disasters. The humanism and efficiency of our armed forces in responding to the tsunami disaster, to floods in various parts of our country, to cyclones and earthquakes, especially the recent quake in Jammu and Kashmir, have made us all proud of our gallant armed forces.

The security challenge facing India is diverse, complex and evolving. That is to be expected given our size, our location, our historical legacy and, increasingly, our expected role in the emerging multi-polar world.

The end of the Cold War, increasing global inter-dependence and the trans-border nature of many threats have made strategic concepts developed in a bi-polar world somewhat irrelevant. The United States is today the dominant economic, military, technological and cultural power. However, it can be anticipated that the European Union, Russia, China, Japan and India will consolidate their individual positions to play a global role. We must evolve a new paradigm of security cooperation relevant to an emerging multi-polar world in which global threats obtain global responses.

This is precisely what India has sought to do. We have entered into strategic partnerships with the United States, Russia, Japan and the European Union and are pursuing strategic cooperation with China. Today, nations are engaged simultaneously both in competition and cooperation.

While the international community has made some progress in evolving a rule-based order for managing the economic and commercial dimensions of globalization, the absence of an effective, rule-based order is acutely felt in addressing contemporary security threats, such as terrorism and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Simultaneously, globalization has sharpened the threat posed to us by instability in both our immediate and our proximate neighbourhood. Along with this, we must also be mindful of the desire of extra-regional powers to keep us engaged in low-intensity conflicts and local problems, to weigh us down in a low-level equilibrium.

To meet these challenges, our strategy has to be based on three broad pillars. First, to strengthen ourselves economically and technologically; Second, to acquire adequate defence capability to counter and rebut threats to our security, and third, to seek partnerships both on the strategic front and on the economic and technological front to widen our policy and developmental options.

With this in perspective, India too is reciprocating positively to overtures of other major players in the global balance of power. No doubt this involves sophisticated bargaining with each of them. It is unrealistic to expect nations to act for altruistic reasons. International relations are in the final analysis, power relations. This balance of power politics in international relations is more sophisticated than during the Cold War era. We must learn to deal with this new reality and plan our long-term security based on a proper appreciation of these evolving trends.

Consequently, we should develop friendly interactive relations with as many major powers as possible. For the armed forces, such interaction should encompass weapon and equipment acquisition, joint development of systems and evolution of defence doctrines. This will help in securing wider international support when we need it most.

In the Arthashastra, Kautilya wrote that a healthy economy is a sound foundation for well-funded armed forces. "From the strength of the treasury", he said "the army is born". But it is not only for fiscal reasons that the health of our economy is important for our national security. A healthy, growing and stable economy in itself enhances security. New notions of "Comprehensive National Power" give high weightage to economic, social, scientific, technological, educational and cultural aspects of power. Military strength alone no longer guarantees a nation's security. Knowledge power and economic capabilities are equally important.

I am sure that our defence community recognizes that economic progress has enabled accelerated equipment modernization. Today's international climate enables us to draw on world financial flows for development and to offer our skills in exchange for other countries outsourcing services and manufacturing to India for mutual benefit.

Our armed forces have always been assured that our Government will never shy away from finding funds for our defence requirements and I endorse what the Defence Minister has said in his address. It should be obvious, however, that any Government will find it easier to find the required resources if the economy grows faster and generates the incomes and revenues required. If our economy grows at 8% per annum it will not be difficult for us to allocate about 3% of our GDP for our national defence. This should provide for a handsome defence budget. Hence, our priority is to pursue policies to generate faster economic growth and mobilize more resources.

Critical to our effort to step up the rate of economic growth is the assurance of energy security. This requires a broad-based energy policy based on rational economic and strategic considerations. Rational domestic pricing policies, financing of long-term investments, diversification of sources of energy and ensuring the security of sea-lanes and other means of securing energy supplies are vital for our national energy security. In this context, an expansion of our civilian nuclear energy programme is also of vital national interest. The agreement entered into with the United States during my visit to that country in July, I hope, when operationalised will help us enormously in this regard.

I do believe that it is in our national security interest to ensure that our neighbours evolve as viable States with moderate and stable political and social environment and a robust economy. There is a role for diplomacy and for civil society in influencing this process. South Asia must be home to open societies and open economies. That is in our interests and in the interests of all countries of South Asia. Political pluralism and moderation can stabilize our security environment.

We also have a vital stake in the security of the sea-lanes to our east and west. The Indian Navy therefore must expand its capability to protect these sea-lanes. We must ensure workable alliances with like-minded countries for the security of these sea-lanes, for our commercial and energy security.

Lately, natural disasters have emerged as a major area of operation for our armed forces. Apart from providing logistical support to civilian authorities, the armed forces are being called upon to deal with humanitarian challenges, project capabilities abroad and engage the defence services of other countries. Such demands will increase as we face forecasts of natural disasters of unexpected magnitude in the future. We must therefore engage in scenario building and in disaster management gaming to prepare for all eventualities.

In my address last year I dealt with issues relating to modernization and use of latest technology in some detail. I must repeat here that this will remain a priority for us. Our armed forces requirement for modern equipment will receive priority attention. There should be no doubt that our Government will make the required funds available for equipment for our armed forces. I am happy that after a long gap our Government has been able to step up defence equipment purchases aimed at modernization of all our services. In this context, I would like to compliment the Ministry of Defence for bringing out a comprehensive procurement manual to streamline procedures, enhance transparency and reduce timelines for decision making. This is one important step towards the goal of procedural reform aimed at faster, more transparent and better decision making in defence procurement.

Defence planning also requires greater attention to service related issues, including training and benefits for both ex servicemen and for the next of kin of our soldiers. We have established a new department of ex-servicemen, and we have launched a scholarship scheme to assist in the education of the wards of ex-servicemen and widows. We have refined the Ex-servicemen's Contributory Health Scheme. We must also move ahead to establish a National Defence University soon, as recommended by the K Subrahmanyam Committee on this very subject. However, we still need fresh thinking on how best to improve training, and to address the shortfall in recruitment of officers in the services.

In closing, let me once again express to you the nation's gratitude and pride in the professionalism and dedication that you have always shown in defending our motherland and serving our people. May your path be blessed.

054. Lecture by Foreign Secretary on “Nuclear Non-Proliferation and International Security” at the Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis.

New Delhi, October 24, 2005.

I welcome this opportunity to present to such a distinguished audience some views on issues relating to nuclear non-proliferation and international security. At the outset, I would like to thank the Institute of Defence Studies and Analyses for inviting me to deliver this address. The Institute has a well deserved reputation as our premier strategic think-tank and quite appropriately, they have focused on a subject that not only has a strong contemporary relevance but represents a long term challenge for India and the international community. There is a vigorous, and in my opinion, a healthy debate underway currently on a range of issues that relate to different facets of this subject. A number of recent developments including the Next Steps in Strategic Partnership (NSSP), the July 18 Agreement with the United States, the September vote in the IAEA and the recent deliberations of the NSG have contributed to that. While connecting the common threads, it is our case that India's approach to nuclear non-proliferation has been a consistent one, a principled one and one grounded as much in our national security interests as in our commitment to a rule-based international system.

2. India's commitment to nuclear non-proliferation is not new. Indeed, this is an area where we can truly claim to be among the founding fathers! The Indian leadership, particularly Jawaharlal Nehru, was among the first in the world to appreciate the dangers that nuclear weapons posed to humanity. As with the rest of the world, our understanding of the complexities of the challenges posed by nuclear weapons developed over time. Initially, Hiroshima and Nagasaki were responsible for a strong sense of moral outrage at a weapon of mass destruction. It took the Bikini atoll tests and the fate of the Japanese vessel The Fortunate Dragon to dramatize the dangers of radioactivity. As the number of nuclear weapon powers increased, and their rivalry acquired an increasingly adversarial character, there was a growing realization of the political, military and eventually even existential nature of the problem. At the same time, nuclear technology offered a promise of development that could not be ignored, least of all by a society emerging from colonial rule and seeking to leapfrog in its development process. Bilateral cooperation programmes and the Atoms for Peace contributed to the spread of nuclear technology and its increasing application for power generation and other civil purposes. These two competing trends created the dilemma of how the benefits of the technology could be best harnessed without adding to the security challenges inherent in that spread. That is an issue that still confronts the international community and is one that is not confined to nuclear technology alone.

3. The initial debate about the control of nuclear weapons and technology focused on four issues: cessation of nuclear testing, creation of nuclear free zones, the problem of sharing nuclear weapons particularly within alliance structures, and the possibility of renunciation of nuclear weapons by nations that had not yet produced them. India took a position on each one of these issues, arguing strongly in favour of restricting both the spread and quantum of nuclear weaponry. Pandit Nehru's call in 1954 for a 'standstill' to nuclear weapons tests and then for a test ban began a process that eventually led to the 1963 Partial Test Ban Treaty. En route, this debate also produced the 1959 Antarctica Treaty that created a nuclear free zone on that continent. The application of a nuclear free zone in other areas was not deemed viable by India given the proximate location of nuclear weapon powers, a position that continues to this day. The sharing of nuclear weapons, a prospect that seems so ludicrous today, was a serious possibility in the 1950s and 60s, and sharing of weapon technologies had actually taken place. India's position was one of firm opposition, and this eventually became a global norm. It was the renunciation of nuclear weapons that became the most contentious issue in the non-proliferation proposal debate.

In 1956, India proposed the international control of military reactors and then co-sponsored the non-proliferation proposal in the United Nations. Nehru prophetically warned the world as far back as 1957 not only of nuclear proliferation but of connected dangers of terrorism. But from being an early and enthusiastic supporter of this concept, Indian reservations deepened as it watched the evolution of an international treaty conspicuously lacking, despite its strong urging, in a mutuality of obligations between the weapon states and non-weapon states. Finally, as you are all aware, India chose not to be a party to the NPT, precisely because of its inherently discriminatory nature.

4. This history is worth recalling, if only for the reason that it demonstrates that India had sensitivities about nuclear weapons from the very inception of that technology and that these were reflected in its approach to international security. In fact, India was prepared to advocate bold and radical measures to prevent the spread of nuclear weaponry, some would argue even at the cost of its own interests. Today, when other countries speak about non-proliferation, it may not be out of place to remind ourselves that our activism in this regard well predates the NPT. Developments since 1968 only further underline India's non-proliferation credentials. Unlike some other states who eventually joined the NPT, India did not undermine the NPT even though it differed with many of its premises. At no stage did we support irresponsible theories that projected nuclear proliferation as a new version of balance of power. India, in fact, scrupulously followed all the basic obligations of an NPT member, resisting suggestions for nuclear cooperation that could have had adverse implications for international security. Indeed, in the four decades since NPT, our record contrasts favourably with NPT members, even of the weapon state category, some of whom encouraged and abetted proliferation for political or commercial reasons. Our export control performance during this same period also contrasts favourably with those of many developed nations who could not stop their companies from supporting clandestine WMD programmes. At a policy level, this was an important component of a larger commitment to disarmament enunciated most notably by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's 1988 Action Plan. As you are all aware, the indefinite extension of the NPT and the enactment of the CTBT finally compelled an exercise of the Indian weapon option in 1998.

5. As a responsible nuclear weapon state, we are even more conscious of our obligations to the international community on the control of WMD technologies and their delivery systems. This appreciation has guided many of the policy initiatives undertaken in recent days, but this may be an opportune occasion to spell out India's current approach to global non-proliferation and international security, particularly as it has evolved since India's emergence as a Nuclear Weapon State in May 1998. The key components of this approach are:

- (i) While India is a Nuclear Weapon State, it remains committed to the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons. The model that could be followed in this regard is the Chemical Weapons Convention, which is both multilateral as well as non-discriminatory in the rights enjoyed by, and obligations it imposes, on parties to the Convention. We continue to believe that the best and most effective nuclear non-proliferation measure would be a credible and time-bound commitment to eliminate nuclear weapons from existing arsenals, including India's own nuclear weapons. We have no desire to perpetuate the division between nuclear-have and have-nots.
- (ii) A new global consensus on non-proliferation is called for, taking into account the new challenges that have emerged since the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty was concluded. Clearly, some NPT members, both Nuclear Weapon States and non-Nuclear Weapon States, have not adhered to the provisions of the Treaty and this requires global norms that go beyond the NPT. For example, India has agreed in the Indo-US Joint Statement of July 18 that it would not transfer reprocessing and enrichment technologies and would support international efforts to limit their spread. We have accepted that a new global consensus would have to be based on new and more rigorous standards being observed in export controls on sensitive technologies. India has signaled its willingness to be part of this consensus by adopting a very comprehensive WMD Export Control legislation and harmonizing our export control lists with those incorporated in the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) and Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR) guidelines. This has enabled us to fulfill the obligations prescribed in the UNSC Resolution 1540.
- (iii) We believe that States should adhere to the commitments that they have made under international treaties and instruments and must be transparent in fulfilling their commitments. We are unable to accept as legitimate the pursuit of clandestine activities in respect to WMD related technologies. Our own security interests have been seriously undermined by the clandestine nuclear weapons programmes in our neighbourhood aided and abetted, or at the least, selectively ignored by some NPT signatories themselves. In seeking clarity on such clandestine activities, the international community must focus not merely on recipient states but on supplier states as well; otherwise our global non-proliferation effort would be undermined by charges of motivated selectivity and discrimination. With respect to the Iran nuclear issue, we welcome Iran's cooperation with the IAEA in accounting for previously undeclared activities, but it is important that remaining issues, which involve the Pakistan-based A.Q. Khan network are satisfactorily clarified as well. We see no reason why there should be an insistence on personal interviews with Iranian scientists but an exception granted to a man who has been accused of running a global 'nuclear Wal-Mart'. These aspects must surely be considered for an objective assessment on this question.

(iv) For the future, we believe we have the responsibility and the capability to participate fully and actively in global R&D efforts to evolve proliferation-resistant nuclear technologies, which enable us to derive the full benefit of nuclear energy, minimizing the risk of diversion to military uses. There are two critically important projects in which some key countries with advanced nuclear technology are members. One is the International Thermonuclear Energy Research (ITER) project, which is aimed at development of energy through nuclear fusion. The EU, US, Russia, China, Japan and South Korea are partner countries, and India is likely to be invited soon to join as a full partner. The other is the U.S.-led Generation IV initiative, which aims at creating reactor prototypes that are not prone to proliferation. India is looks forward to join this cutting-edge effort as well. In both cases, India's participation is welcomed not only in recognition of its advanced capabilities but also its record as a responsible nuclear state.

6. If you look at India's recent actions against the backdrop of this approach, then a great deal of the apprehension and negative perception about India's nuclear policy, would appear misplaced.

- Firstly, there is a continuity and consistency in our approach that may sometimes be masked by the particularities of a specific decision;
- Secondly, what appears to some observers as inordinate external influence over our decision-making in sensitive areas is, in fact, rooted in our own well-considered and independent judgement of where our best interests lie. This is in keeping with our tradition of non-alignment;

- Thirdly, we must adjust to change, change inherent in our emergence as a Nuclear Weapon State, change inherent in the sustained dynamism and technological sophistication of the Indian economy, and, as a consequence, change in global expectations of India as an increasingly influential actor on the international stage.

7. Since 1998, a key challenge to India's foreign policy has been to seek global recognition and understanding of its impeccable record on non-proliferation despite its decision to acquire nuclear weapons. This recognition is important though some may not see it that way. We live in an increasingly globalised world and as India's economy shifts towards greater technological sophistication, it will need access to cutting-edge technologies in virtually all fields. In each of the recent initiatives India has taken, whether the NSSP, the July-18 Indo-U.S. Joint Statement, the applications to participate in ITER and Generation IV, Glonass and Galileo Satellite Navigation Systems, the Indo-U.S. Space Launch Agreement, and several others, this technological compulsion has been a major consideration. These would not have been possible, and India could have remained in a technological strait-jacket had it not backed up its commitment to non-proliferation with the adoption of global norms as has been done by other states with advanced nuclear technology. The cumulative results of the steps we have taken, such as enactment of the WMD Bill, the upgradation of the national export control lists so as to harmonize them with those of the NSG and MTCR, the proposed separation of our civilian and military nuclear facilities and the negotiation of an additional Protocol with the IAEA, is to increase the confidence of the international community in the robustness and effectiveness of our export control systems making us a more viable destination of advanced dual use technologies. With the U.S., there is already a more liberal and predictable licensing of dual use technology for Indian industry.

8. Indeed, we have a situation today where the Government has created a favourable enabling environment and it is our end-users who should display greater vigour in taking advantage of resultant opportunities. China, with a much less favourable licensing regime, imports ten times the dual technology that we do from the United States. For our space and nuclear industries, the completion of NSSP resulted in the removal of many of our organizations from the Entity List, with consequent licensing benefits. Some organizations remain listed and we continue to work for their removal. The 'NSG plus' and 'MTCR plus' restrictions that were in place were also done away with. The space industry today is permitted direct cooperation for developing, producing, marketing and operating US commercial satellites and those of third nations that contain US origin components. It created the basis for discussions that we have currently on the conclusion of a bilateral space launch agreement with the U.S. It has also contributed to a useful dialogue on the subject of missile defence.

9. What does the international community gain in making an exception to the current regulations for India? How do we answer the proponents of the current global non-proliferation regime, who see the exception being made for India as the unraveling of this regime?

10. The exception for India is rooted precisely in its record on non-proliferation, even though it is not formally a member of the NPT. It is significant to note that the Indo-US understanding in civilian nuclear cooperation is prefaced by President Bush conveying his appreciation for India's strong commitment to preventing WMD proliferation. He has acknowledged India as a responsible State with advanced nuclear technology. There is today no other State, which has this record of responsibility and is still denied non-discriminatory access to civilian nuclear technology.

11. Secondly, our export controls are today at global standards and our policy of non-transfer of re-processing and enrichment technologies, in fact, put us in an "NPT plus" category.

12. Thirdly, in considering its approach towards the resumption of full civil nuclear energy cooperation with India, the international community has to ask itself whether India is a partner or a target for the global non-proliferation regime. It clearly cannot be both at the same time. Our view is that India's commitment and India's record points to it being a partner. Technology-denial regimes that treat India, as a target must, therefore, be abandoned.

13. Fourthly, the international community also needs to ask whether the global non-proliferation regime is better with India inside the tent or outside. As a corollary, will civil nuclear cooperation with India strengthen the non-proliferation system or weaken it? Obviously, we cannot be inside the tent if we do not measure up to the required norms. We, of course, are convinced that we do, for the reasons that I have already enumerated.

14. India is today a rapidly expanding industrial economy with a wide array of technologies that are relevant to proliferation. That in itself makes a case why our export controls and their effective implementation will matter more and more for global non-proliferation efforts. As a nuclear weapon state, our support for international norms is critical for their success. But it is not only in our controls and restraint that we can make a difference. The time when NPT was regarded as self-enforcing is long past. The spread of technologies cannot be controlled by cartelisation alone. There are enough examples to show that commercial and political incentives can defeat that. The challenge that the world currently faces requires more active endeavours. This is particularly so as the dangers of non-state actors acquiring nuclear weapons have given the WMD threat an added dimension. UNSC resolution 1540 is one example of the global community's response. There are others, among them a combination of national and trans-national efforts. The Container Security Initiative and Proliferation Security Initiative are two such examples. Advocates of non-proliferation must seriously examine whether the support of India towards global efforts is to their advantage. That support is difficult to muster if India perceives itself as unfairly treated despite its demonstrated commitment to a rule bound system.

15. A word about separation of our civilian and military nuclear facilities. Some non-proliferation advocates contend that since it is India, which will determine what is civilian and what is military, this would open the door for flouting non-proliferation norms. This betrays a lack of understanding of the July 18 Joint Statement. The Indo-U.S. Agreement is not about India's nuclear weapon programme. It is about civilian nuclear energy cooperation. The objective of the agreement is to advance India's energy security through full civilian nuclear energy cooperation. It is legitimate for our partners to expect that such cooperation will not provide any advantage to our strategic programme and hence the need to separate it from our civilian nuclear sector. But it makes no sense for India to deliberately keep some of its civilian facilities out of its declaration for safeguards purposes, if it is really interested in obtaining international cooperation on as wide a scale as possible. This would be quite illogical.

16. India is poised today to enter a new phase in its foreign policy. We aspire to be a permanent member of the Security Council. We are demonstrating a growing capability to shoulder regional and global responsibilities. Our focus is increasingly on trans-national issues that today constitute the priority challenges – whether it is terrorism or proliferation, pandemics or disaster relief. We cannot sit out the debates on the big issues of our times. Our interests demand a vigorous and articulate diplomatic effort that explains our positions and advances our interests. Non-proliferation is one area where we have a record to be proud of and I would conclude by emphasizing that it has been and will remain one of our principal contributions to international security¹.

1. Answering questions at the end of the lecture, the Foreign Secretary said that a “road map” to separate India’s civil and military nuclear facilities was still to be worked out. Separation, he warned was a complicated issue and could even be an “expensive process”. A “road map” for this purpose was under discussion. Adding he said the process would have to keep in mind India’s “strategic” nuclear programme as well. Denying any link between India’s vote against Iran at the IAEA and the civilian nuclear deal with the U.S. despite whatever may have been said in the U.S. Congress, the Foreign Secretary said India was not negotiating the deal with the U.S. Congress. Neither could India expect the U.S. to negotiate details with political parties on the Left, which opposed the deal. The civilian nuclear deal was between the two governments, he asserted. Conceding there may be “uncertainties” about the agreement both on the Indian and the American sides, Saran felt there was greater clarity on implementation of the deal after he held talks with Mr. Burns, Under Secretary of State dealing with political matters. On whether he was “sanguine” about the results of the recent Nuclear Suppliers Group meeting in Vienna, which did not take any decision on making an exception to India receiving civil nuclear technology, the Foreign Secretary pointed out there had been no vote at the NSG meeting. According to F.S. on balance, India was pleased with the results of the NSG meeting. No country really opposed that India be exempted from the rigours of NSG guidelines to provide it with civil nuclear technology. Saran said that the U.S. had made a positive presentation in India’s favour and New Delhi believed that NSG curbs would eventually be lifted. Asked if the Government believed that Iran was building a nuclear weapon, he replied that Iran had declared at the highest level that it was not seeking nuclear weapons. There were, however, some activities that Iran needed to explain. India, he said, had also welcomed Iran’s cooperation with the IAEA. Referring to pending issues related to Iran before the IAEA, Saran said there had been cooperation between Tehran and the Vienna-based agency, but the issue of Iranian “links” with the Pakistan-based A. Q. Khan proliferation network remained. Denying that India’s vote on Iran was linked to the July 18 civilian nuclear deal with the U.S. the Foreign Secretary said that a confrontation over the nuclear issue was not in Tehran’s interest or the interest of the other countries. He said efforts were on to resume talks with Iran on the nuclear question. On its part, India wanted that Iranian nuclear question should continue to be addressed within the IAEA framework. In his view discussions on some compromises that were going on before the September IAEA vote should be resumed. Some of those ideas could be taken forward at the next meeting of the IAEA Governing Board. He felt India’s position on the September vote was “very clear” because two of India’s concerns – to give time for discussions and keep the issue within the IAEA framework – had been met.

056. Lecture by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the Foundation Day 2005 of the Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis.

New Delhi, November 11, 2005.

I am truly delighted to be here in your midst to celebrate the 40th Anniversary of the Institute of Defense Studies and Analysis. I am particularly happy that you have chosen on this auspicious occasion to honour your former Director, Shri K. Subrahmanyam, for helping to lay a strong foundation for this institution in its formative years. His incisive writings continue to stimulate and contribute to the thinking of strategic analysts and policy makers in this vital area of national concern. We look forward to many more years of active contribution from this doyen of the strategic community in India, to the vital policy debates of our times.

Over the years, Shri Subrahmanyam has pointed out in his writings the importance of making strategic choices that affect our national security and well-being, by careful weighing of costs and benefits without getting trapped in “black and white” views of the world, ignoring the shades in between, in which the real world manifests itself. He has been an ardent advocate of a holistic vision of national security, tempered with a sense of realism and pragmatism.

Let me therefore suggest that in keeping with our honor and dictum on the need for long term planning, we use this anniversary celebration to introspect on strategic policy planning in general, and on IDSA’s contributions to this process in particular.

On balance, I think it is fair to say that over the past four decades IDSA has largely fulfilled its mission. While the existence of IDSA as one of our few strategic think -tanks suggests a deeper need to create an adequately vibrant strategic community, this is perhaps a subject for study in its own right. Suffice here to say that I believe your institute has rendered yeoman service, often in difficult circumstances, to promote strategic thinking, inform policy-makers and the public at large, and to develop a community of strategic thinkers. I congratulate all those associated with this Institute for contributing to strategic studies and institution building in a vital area of national concern.

However, an anniversary is also an occasion to objectively consider the lessons of the past, and to strategize to meet the challenges of our future. I would like to briefly outline the challenges that confront us today.

It is a truism that despite the progress humankind has recorded, war, like privation, disease and ignorance, is far from being eliminated. In fact, as we progress materially, our record in coping with conflict seems to be, probably, worsening. While instances of war and armed conflict may have been reduced over time, the actual impact on people has worsened. Estimates suggest that mortality caused by conflict has increased dramatically, from 1.6 million in the sixteenth century to nearly 110 million in the twentieth century.

We can therefore draw no comfort from the trends that determine our future. Optimists suggest that the present security challenges will at worst persist; but pessimists forecast cataclysmic devastation. Pragmatists suggest that security problems will worsen overtime, but probably incrementally. Personally, despite my own training in the “dismal science” of Economics, I am inclined to be more optimistic than the optimists. Perhaps Bonar Law was right when he said that “there is no such thing as an inevitable war. If war comes, it will be from the failure of human wisdom”. I believe that peace in our troubled and violent age requires eternal vigil, patience and wisdom. We must all work together to analyze potential sources of conflict to find solutions without recourse to arms. It is this that is the challenge before Governments and humankind as a whole.

It is in this context that centres of research and think-tanks derive their importance. Policy making in most countries is often reactive: Governments are driven by deadlines and events. And once an event occurs, it is a bit late to plan for it! This is one reason why so many problems are difficult to resolve. Proactive planning is the goal of strategic thinkers worldwide, and this is where your community must step up efforts to identify problems, highlight trends, develop scenarios, and suggest policy options, before crises overtake us.

I have often said and felt that there is a dearth of long term planning. Of course there is a saying of a very famous Cambridge economist, Lord Keynes, who said in the long term, we are all dead, but I do believe that there is a need for long term planning. On the one hand, policy papers can sometimes become impractical, and on the other, policy options are sometimes bereft of long term vision. Our academia loses its sense of independence and Government begins to devalue inputs from outside its system. There is therefore an obvious interest in strengthening mutual interaction to focus on long term planning.

In the lexicon of economics, the cost of investing in long-term policy making – in time, money and energy – are quantifiable and immediate. Unfortunately, however, the benefits are reaped only in future, and all too frequently, by successors. These benefits are also hard to quantify, since a crisis averted does not register on the popular consciousness. Naturally, the incentive for in-depth analysis and long-term policy planning has always been weak, despite the obviously disastrous consequences of ignoring such efforts.

Having said that, let me elaborate my perspective of our security environment. There are those who define security solely in the narrow prism of violent conflict. However, I believe violence is only a symptom of larger social and economic ailments. Societies face risks in terms of competition for power and control, from institutional failures, weakening democratic structures, economic disparities and, of course, sectarian and territorial disputes. Sometimes external factors such as regional conflict, scarcity of resources and economic shocks adversely affect societies. For instance, competition for the increasingly expensive sources of energy particularly hydrocarbons can lead to local and even global economic crises, and eventually if care not taken, may lead to serious conflicts as well. Indeed, many threats to internal security derive from a sense of alienation among people. This sentiment is then exploited by external forces inimical to our nation. There is thus a link between external and internal threats to our security. Therefore, apart from firm political and administrative handling of such threats, we also need the economic and social space within which a political leadership can contend with such problems. This space can be created by rapid social and economic development. Apart from deriving a linkage with our own internal challenges, regional disturbances in neighbouring countries affect us in other ways. The danger of a number of failed States emerging in our neighbourhood has far reaching consequences for our region and our people. The impact includes crises which generate an inflow of refugees and by destabilisation of our border areas. We see signs of the ills of disaffection, alienation and conflict not only in India but also across our neighbourhood. We have to be alert to these developments and deal with the dangers that lie ahead.

The breakdown of effective international mechanisms also affects the security of individual countries. As long as terrorism was seen as a phenomenon that was 'elsewhere', the international community was unwilling to adopt an effective coordinated strategy to deal with this menace, which constitutes a grave threat to the civilized world. Similarly, the international regime against proliferation is also under stress. It is clear that the existing system of unequal and discriminatory rules, based on the nuclear Non Proliferation Treaty is deeply flawed. It has permitted unchecked proliferation by some, while preventing countries such as ours from acting in its economic and security interests. An effective non proliferation framework that addresses our security interests while simultaneously encouraging peaceful uses of nuclear energy is in our vital national interest.

Apart from the many factors that are challenges to our security, options to address such challenges are also not limited to mere application of force. Whether it is war in its classical sense, or in its many variations such as internal conflict, insurgent movements or even transnational terrorism, non-military measures are invariably needed to evolve durable solutions. Hence, policy analysts must adopt interdisciplinary approaches and policy planners should develop sophisticated, multi-pronged responses. These must result in improving our security in all its dimensions: economic, social, political and even in terms of food and energy security. Such an approach is even more important as military and police forces grapple with new and unconventional challenges.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

At the same time, as media transforms our world into a global village, threats involving large-scale loss of lives have to be factored into any security matrix. Similarly, just as our interconnected world has brought with it an easing of borders or softening of borders, it has also unfortunately enabled many security problems to attain transnational and global dimensions. The specter of international terrorism is one such phenomenon evolving out of the churning that has accompanied globalization processes. It is imperative to contend with both trans-border, regional and global ramifications of local problems as well as the reverse. In devising strategies to meet transborder challenges, we must now consider ways of evolving multinational strategies.

We must also find ways of using international opinion as a force multiplier in addressing external challenges effectively. No country in the world, howsoever powerful, even the sole superpower in the world today, can counter threats unilaterally. This therefore makes diplomacy doubly important for a poor country such as ours. I have often said that for us in India, effective diplomacy is an important supplement and indeed an alternative to excessive defence spending. Therefore it is important to devise methods of effectively participating in multilateral fora, in influencing world opinion and striving to make such mechanisms more representative, more consensual and more effective and mindful of India's national concerns.

It is in this context that I have said in the past that our security policy in the emerging global order must be based on three pillars. The first must be to strengthen India economically and technologically; second, to develop adequate defence capability making the optimal use of modern science and technology so that we can effectively meet all contemporary challenges to our security. And finally we must develop partnerships in the strategic economic and technological spheres to enlarge our policy choices and developmental options.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Therefore, our engagement with the major powers and indeed with the world must be set in this wider perspective. We must balance the pursuit of national interests with a clear appreciation of what other nations perceive as their core interests. To advance our own security interests, we must engage in cooperative, constructive and mutually beneficial relations with all major powers of the world. Most of all, we must engage in proactively strengthening multilateral mechanisms for financial, economic and political security.

We have as a nation, a great State in a rule based international system, a system that is rule based and not deal based. I believe all poor countries have a stake in an international system that is just equitable and effective.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

National security is increasingly a complex and interlinked challenge. Appropriate handling now requires comprehensive capabilities and the collective effort of the nation. In a troubled world, India can and must play a more positive role in securing peace and maintaining it. We need to do so remaining mindful of the fact that international relations are ultimately power relations, based on realpolitik, not on sentiment. And howsoever, we may regret it, international relations are not a morality play.

While India seeks economic development and material progress both for itself and for the role that we believe is India's destiny, institutions such as yours must strive to become world class centres of excellence. Your goal must be to expand the knowledge pool on issues of security and in planning for a better collective future for our people. I wish you well in these endeavours, on this auspicious day. May your efforts to achieve this vision be realized well before the 50th anniversary of your establishment.

057. Statement by India's Permanent Representative Dr. Sheel Kant Sharma at International Atomic Energy Agency.

Vienna, November 24, 2005.

We would like to complement the DG for his concise and factual report on the implementation of NPT Safeguards Agreement in the Islamic Republic of Iran contained in the document GOV/2005/87. It is reassuring to find in the report that in the period since the Board last met Iran has been more forthcoming in providing the IAEA additional access to sites and individuals requested. The Report notes that the IAEA has been able to interview individuals involved in procurement who have not been previously made available. It refers to additional documents being made available to the agency in a variety of areas. It appreciates access being given to sites of interest. It is also significant that there is thus new information made available to the Agency, which is being processed. All this characterizes substantive work in progress since the September meeting.

We would also like to emphasize, particularly with reference to paragraph 21 of the report, the imperative need of further exhaustive and meticulous work by the Agency's team to clarify outstanding issues.

It is equally critical to realise that for effectively progressing clarification of issues, full cooperation and a climate of confidence are indispensable. The present situation offers vital diplomatic space for pursuit of our common goals in the Board and confirms India's position that this matter should be resolved within the IAEA. This also strengthens our view that enough time and cooperation be given to the IAEA to complete its work.

Therefore we would like to underline the need to avoid actions that might hinder or undermine confidence. In meeting the IAEA's requirement to pursue any remaining questions, it should be borne in mind that there is no precedent setting and the Agency's activities are to be seen in the specific context of the title of its report i.e. Implementation of the NPT Safeguards Agreement in the Islamic Republic of Iran.

In view of the sensitivity of the present situation and the need to avoid failure of the associated diplomatic processes, it is necessary for all of us in the Board of Governors to adopt a united stand and provide dear, consensual guidance to the Director General.

While we show understanding in this perspective to Agency's pleas as spelt out in paragraph 21, we would also like to reiterate that for meeting the challenges and risks of proliferation there is need to come to grips with both the demand as well as the supply side of related equipment material and technology. Paragraphs 5 to 12 of DG's report allude to an entirely uncharted domain in face of which references merely to 'network' appear too simplistic. The additional documentation and, information made available will shed greater light on clandestine proliferation activities of 'foreign intermediaries', in particular the Pakistan-based A. Q. Khan network. This domain too needs to be scrupulously scrutinized. Greater clarity and transparency in this area will serve the interest of the objectives of non-proliferation to which we are all committed. This would also enhance credibility of the IAEA.

058. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on India's participation in International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor (ITER) Project.

New Delhi, December 7, 2005.

India has been accepted as a full partner in the ITER Project by consensus¹. This was decided at a meeting of the ITER partner countries (China, Japan, European Union, Republic of Korea, Russia and the US)

1. India will be the seventh member of the ITER. India's interest in joining the ITER was formally expressed in a letter of July 8, 2005 which described India's ongoing fusion research at the Institute of Plasma Research (IPR) in Ahmedabad. Following this an exploratory fact finding mission was in India in early October. It visited IPR and evaluated India's industrial capability to contribute to ITER's hardware and software needs. The mission's technical report was considered by the ITER Negotiating Committee at its November 7 meeting in Vienna, and all parties supported India's admission. Earlier on November 15 Prime Minister Manmohan Singh while inaugurating the 16th annual conference of the Indian Nuclear Society at Bhabha Atomic Research Station said that India wanted to participate in multinational futuristic atomic energy programmes such as ITER and Large Hardon Collider. He said he had taken up the Indian intention with world leaders "and I am happy that we are eliciting a positive response."

held in Jeju, Republic of Korea on 6 December 2005. Negotiations on finalizing the ITER Agreement are at an advanced stage and it is likely to be finalised shortly.

ITER is an ambitious programme to demonstrate the scientific and technological feasibility of fusion energy for peaceful purposes. India had expressed interest in participating in the project as a full partner on the basis of its advanced scientific and technological base, its established record of R&D in fusion research as well as from the perspective of a country with enormous energy needs.

India's acceptance as a full partner is an acknowledgement of India as a responsible nuclear state with advanced nuclear technology, including in the field of fusion research. It also recognizes that India can significantly contribute to such endeavors. As a full partner, Indian contribution to the ITER project shall be on the same basis as that of other partners.

Section - III

Afro-Asian Summit

059. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at Asian-African Ministerial meeting.

Jakarta, April 20, 2005.

Your Excellency, Dr N. Hassan Wirajuda, Minister of Foreign Affairs of The Republic of Indonesia,

Your Excellency Dr Nkosazana Dlamini Zuma, Minister of Foreign Affairs of The Republic of South Africa, Distinguished Ministers and Delegates,

It is indeed a privilege to participate in the preparations for the Asian African Summit 2005. Our Summit of 2005 is a tribute to that held 50 years ago, which for the first time crystallised the ethos and values of our two continents. The Bandung Summit inspired the movement for Non-alignment and the creation of the OAU. Our Summit will, we hope, set in place a New Strategic Partnership between Asia and Africa. A Partnership which will lead to the development of continent-wide, intra-regional cooperation between Asia and Africa.

A remarkable galaxy of personalities had participated in the Bandung conference - Pandit Nehru, President Sukarno, Ali Sastrimedijoyo, Prime Minister Mohammed Ali of Pakistan, Chou-En Lai of China, Prince Sihanouk of Cambodia - the only leader present at the time who is still alive today, Nkrumah of Ghana, Nasser of Egypt, U Nu, Wan of Thailand and Sir John Kotlewala of Ceylon. The historic nature of the conference had been heightened by their presence. The ten principles, or Dasa Sila, which resulted from the Conference reaffirmed the principle of peaceful coexistence as the basis for global peace and cooperation.

The policy of non-alignment, which has been followed by a large number of developing countries subsequent to the end of the colonial era can also be traced back to the Bandung Conference. This fact of history should be recognized by the Ministerial Statement, which we issue on the Golden Anniversary of that Conference. I propose that we consider a preambular paragraph, which recognises the role of the 1955 Asian-African Conference in the enunciation of the objectives of non-alignment.

It is a matter of satisfaction that considerable progress has been made by the people of Asia and Africa since the year 1955. Colonialism has been eradicated. So has the scourge of apartheid. Our successes in these areas owe in no small measure to cooperation between Africa and Asia.

There is, however, we are convinced, a need to continue to pursue collective action to address issues of common concern. The situation in 2005 is, in many ways, different from that which prevailed in 1955. While the decline of colonialism and the emergence of power blocs defined the international situation at that time, it is globalisation, we believe, which defines today's paradigm.

Co-Chairmen,

This is a Forum where, we the countries of Africa and Asia, should determine to shape a new United Nations that gives us greater voice in its decision making processes so that the UN becomes an effective and efficient instrument to tackle shared threats and meet shared needs.

The United Nations, set up in 1945, was based on the power realities of that time. It is now necessary to undertake the reform of the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions, and, in particular, the UN Security Council, to reflect the realities of 2005. In this context, it is important to increase the membership of the United Nations Security Council, both in the permanent as well as the non-permanent categories.

Globalisation, we know, is both an opportunity and a challenge. The freer movement of trade, capital and technology has led to the expansion of economic growth, employment and social development in many parts of the world, including in developing countries. It, however, also runs the risk of leaving large parts of the world behind and of increasing the gap between the haves and have-nots.

We are some 4 billion people in Asia and Africa. We cannot just say that we are being marginalised by globalisation. We need, instead, to be defining it. We need to act collectively in dealing with issues relating to the international trading system and the international financial architecture. If we can do so, globalisation can lead to a win-win situation for all of us.

It is, therefore, indeed appropriate that the Plan of Action which we would be adopting seeks to support efforts to assist the countries of Asia and Africa to acquire the requisite capacities to successfully compete and fully benefit from globalization. The new partnership between Asia and Africa, which we seek to build needs to be relevant to the countries of the two continents. We need to recognize that the issues of common concern which call for closer cooperation and collective action are also those of poverty, under-development, gender mainstreaming, communicable disease, environmental degradation, natural disasters, drought and desertification, the digital divide, inequitable market access and foreign debt. These have, very rightly, been emphasized in the Declaration of our New Partnership.

India has benefited from globalisation. It could not have been imagined a decade ago, that India would be a major software services exporter and that a new process 'brain gain', not 'brain drain', would be created by the opportunities in this sector. Information technology enabled services, which globally positioned India, are now facing competition from the R&D sector. More than 100 Fortune 500 companies have put up R&D facilities in India in the last few years. For quite a few companies, the facilities in India are the largest outside the United States.

We have been able to take advantage of globalisation, because of our well-trained human skills. Human resource development is a must for economic development, particularly now as we move towards a knowledge-based economy. The countries of Asia and Africa have an intrinsic advantage, in their vast pool of talented people, to benefit from the process of globalisation.

We are happy to be able to assist our brothers and sisters in Africa in Asia, to take advantage of the new paradigm of economic development, through the Indian Technical And Economic Cooperation Programme. Under this Programme, we offer 1000 training slots to African countries every year. The utilisation is roughly 95 per cent. The approximate monetary value of technical assistance, including training, deployment of experts and projects, which we have extended under this Programme is about US dollar one billion.

We are also committed to deepening our economic linkages with Africa. Investment in Africa is now a priority for us. This goes, hand-in-hand, with development cooperation. We have announced US dollar 200 million in lines of credit for projects, which fulfil the objectives of NEPAD. We have also embarked on an initiative with eight West African countries, known as the Team Nine Initiative. This is based on public-private partnership and can undertake bilateral and sub-regional projects with funding of US dollar 400 million in lines of credit, which we have made available. Taken together with our bilateral lines of credit to individual African countries, the total adds to US dollar one billion.

Co-Chairmen,

Our meeting comes in the aftermath of the Tsunami. We clearly need to also address the issue of Asian-African cooperation with regard to disaster reduction. I recall that I had, at the special meeting of leaders convened by ASEAN in the aftermath of the Tsunami, here in Jakarta on January 6, 2005 said: "Existing vocabularies are inadequate to describe the intensity and magnitude of the horrendous catastrophe that hit a dozen countries of the Indian Ocean. The light went out of so many homes in so many countries in so short a span of time – only a few minutes."

The best way that we can honour the dead is by protecting the living. Earthquakes, floods, cyclones, drought, locusts and other natural disasters wreak devastation for tens of millions of people every year. They cause a disproportionate loss to developing countries who are ill-equipped to deal with the ravages of nature.

Natural hazards need not inevitably lead to widespread disaster. Droughts, for example, are largely unavoidable. They need not, however, necessarily lead to famine if our social economic systems are resilient to the impact of natural disasters. Disaster risk reduction, therefore, needs to be an essential investment for sustainable development. We cannot only limit our focus and resources on responding to disaster. We must also reduce the risk of disaster.

The Tsunami has shown that natural disasters do not respect national boundaries. It is, however, not just tragedy that can bring us together. The 1955 Bandung Conference demonstrated our ability to work together for the common welfare of the peoples of our two continents. As we commemorate the Bandung Conference this year, it is only appropriate that we should discuss ways in which we can cooperate to reduce the risk of disaster. A joint approach could complement national efforts and allow us to pool together our respective strengths and complementarities effectively and efficiently. This is an area that, in our view, merits consideration by this Conference.

Co-Chairmen,

Peaceful coexistence and nonalignment were, in 1955, in our view, necessary for world peace. With the purpose of saving time, India did not speak at the opening session of the Bandung Conference. I would, however, like to recall the words of Pandit Nehru in the Political Committee on April 22, 1955. Dr Roeslan Abdulgani, who was the Secretary-General of the Conference, has recorded that when Nehru spoke, "Everyone listened spellbound. It seemed that nobody stirred". Pandit Nehru, referring to the developments in the early years the Cold War said:

"If all the world would to be divided up between these two big blocs, what would be the result? The inevitable result would be war. Therefore, every step that takes place in reducing the area in the world which may be called the unaligned area is a dangerous step and leads to war."

The need today, we believe, is to increase the area of economic cooperation and collaboration. Globalisation provides some of the conditions for doing so. Such collaboration can, we expect, also help in putting political differences behind us. The New Asian African Strategic Partnership, we hope, will take us in that direction.

060. Joint Ministerial Statement on the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership Plan of Action.

061. Media briefing by Secretary (East) Rajiv Sikri on the eve of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh's visit to Jakarta and Bandung.

New Delhi, April 21, 2005.

Official Spokesperson : Ladies and gentlemen, as you know Prime Minister would be leaving for Jakarta and Bandung tomorrow. We are grateful to Mr. Rajiv Sikri, Secretary (East) in the External Affairs Ministry that he has joined us to brief the press, which also includes the traveling media. I request Secretary (East) to first make his remarks and then we will take questions.

Secretary (East) : Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. As you are aware, Prime Minister is leaving tomorrow morning for Jakarta to participate in the Asian-African Summit 2005 which is to commemorate the Golden Jubilee of the historic 1955 Bandung Summit that was convened from 18th to 24th April 1955, in which India had played a leading role. Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru was the leading figure there. In fact, that Summit was co-hosted; it was organized by India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Sudan and Burma.

This Summit has the objective of reinvigorating the spirit of 1955 Bandung Conference to promote solidarity and cooperation among the countries of Asia and Africa. In 1955 there were 29 participants, only six from Africa because most of the African countries were then under colonial rule. By contrast this time there will be 106 participants of which, according to the figures that I have, there will be 52 from Africa and 54 from Asia. That just brings out how far we have come in these 50 years in the process of decolonisation and the role that the African and Asian countries are playing in the world today.

Many of the countries - about 50 or so or maybe more – would be attending the Summit at the highest level, that is, at the Head of State or Government level. I think it is interesting to note that these 106 countries constitute about 73 per cent of the world's population. Therefore, it is a very representative forum. The co-hosts for this event are Indonesia and South Africa. The idea emerged in meetings and conversations between President Mbeki of South Africa and the then President of Indonesia Megawati Sukarnoputri about two-and-a-half, three years ago. And then there were a series of preparatory meetings of the ASROC in Bandung and in Durban in 2003. In 2004, the invitations were extended initially by President Megawati and renewed by President Yudhoyono.

The Bandung Conference, as we all know, was a historic event because it paved the way for Afro-Asian solidarity. The whole concept of following an independent line in world affairs leading to the birth of the Non-Aligned Movement, the coming of issues like decolonisation and apartheid to the international agenda, all these can be traced back to the Bandung Conference. There is, of course, the economic agenda also. The issues of market access, fair prices and so forth which are now increasingly important in a fast globalising world.

The Summit is expected to issue a declaration on the new Asian-African Strategic Partnership. The Ministers, who have been meeting in Jakarta for the last couple of days, yesterday adopted a plan of action for implementation of the NAASP or the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership. It is a broad visionary document that you will get to see when you are in Jakarta. It is expected that this Conference would lead to some kind of an agreement on holding it at regular intervals both at the Summit and the Ministerial levels. Maybe a Summit once every few years and once every couple of years would be the Ministerial segment.

There are two elements of the programme – one, of course, is what is happening in Jakarta and then on the 24th the leaders will fly to Bandung where the historic Bandung Summit took place. They will have historic walk from the hotel where the leaders stayed, to the Gedung Merdeka where the Conference actually took place. And some other events around that leading up to a lunch that will be co-hosted by the President of Indonesia and the Governor of West Java.

On the margins of the main event there will be a number of side events like the African-Asian Symposium on Renewable Energy, a Workshop on the Role of Women and Youth, and of course an Asian-African Business Summit in which CII and FICCI are participating. We are also participating in these other two events I just mentioned.

To give you a quick run down of the programme, the Prime Minister will be participating in the Dinner which the President of Indonesia is hosting tomorrow evening. Then, of course, there is the actual Summit on the 23rd where he will be speaking and there will be signing of the Declaration. Later in the evening he will have an opportunity to meet the members of the Indian community at a reception that would be hosted by our Ambassador. Of course, as is normal during such multilateral events, he will use the opportunity of his presence and that of the other leaders from Asia and Africa at Jakarta to have a few bilateral meetings.

That in brief is the programme and the course of events there.

Question : As for the bilateral meetings who all is the Prime Minister meeting?

Secretary (East) : These things are still being worked out. But I anticipate that he will have, depending on time, about half a dozen or so (meetings). He will naturally be meeting his host the President of Indonesia. He will be meeting the President of China, the President of Afghanistan, Prime Minister of Sri Lanka, and the Prime Minister of Singapore. These are some of the events.

Question : Is he meeting King Gyanendra?

Secretary (East) : I am not aware of any such meeting.

Question : How has India contributed to the Summit and what does India expect out of this?

Secretary (East) : India, as I just mentioned, is one of the leading organizers of the Bandung Summit. We have been in the forefront of the whole movement of Afro-Asian solidarity, the anti-colonial movement, the decolonisation, the anti-apartheid movement. Our contribution to this whole process is well recognised in Asia and among the African countries. So, it is only fitting that when there is a commemorative event for such a historic event like Bandung Summit, and Prime Minister Nehru's statement at that time is still regarded as one of the seminal documents that shaped the thinking of the world in this regard, it is perfectly natural that India should be appropriately represented at this event.

Question : Colonialism, apartheid and NAM are all irrelevant today. What do we exactly want from this Summit?

Secretary (East) : I do not know why you think all these are irrelevant. After all if a country is sovereign, if it is independent, if it is able to hold its head high, these are not insignificant developments. We ourselves are very proud of the fact that we are strong, independent, sovereign, and that we have been helping others in a spirit of south-south cooperation to have their independence and sovereignty. I do not see how it is irrelevant. The Non-Alignment Movement also has been having its regular Summits including the last one in Kuala Lumpur in 2003. So, I do not think such ideas become irrelevant.

Question : You talked about strategic partnership. Can you elaborate a bit more on that?

Secretary (East) : Let me not anticipate what the leaders are going to discuss on the side. But, I think the very fact that 106 countries, and many of them at the highest level, think that it is worth their while to get together to reaffirm the solidarity of the Asian and African countries which are going to be playing an increasingly important role in world affairs in the coming years, is itself very significant.

Question : Are there any chances of a bilateral meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Begum Khaleda Zia, or between Mr. Natwar Singh and Bangladesh Foreign Minister Mr. Morshed Khan? And, if such a meeting takes place, will India raise the Akhaura incident?¹

Secretary (East) : As far as I am aware, Begum Khaleda Zia is not participating in the Summit. I believe that Bangladesh would be represented by Mr. Morshed Khan. I am not aware that there is any meeting that has been fixed. But, certainly if any meeting does take place the Akhaura incident and what has happened would figure.

1. For details see Document No. 106.

Question : Bangladesh Minister of State for Home Affairs had called Mr. Shivraj Patil but there are no firm indications that he expressed apologies for the Akhaura incident. Have you demanded an apology?

Official Spokesperson : I think you are right that the Minister of State for Home Affairs did call up our Home Minister and he has expressed regret. He has said that an investigation is under way; responsibility will be fixed and action taken.

Question : ...(Inaudible)...

Official Spokesperson: Correct. Yes, there is an inquiry being headed by the Joint Secretary (Police) in the Bangladesh Home Ministry.

Question : It is being said that this Inquiry Committee is hogwash; it would have been purposeful only if it were a Joint Committee of the two countries.

Official Sopkesperson : I think I would not like to characterize that as what you have done. We would hope that, as assured by the Minister of State for Home Affairs, action will be taken and responsibility will be fixed.

Any other questions on the Jakarta visit?

Question : Is India interested in having the Asian-African Summit to evolve a consensual position on UN reform, Security Council reform, which may take the form of all 106 countries expressing their preference say for Model-A or Model-B?

Secretary (East) : I do not think that we are likely to get the specific consensus that you are looking for. But, in general terms, I think every one has agreed that UN does need reform in the changed circumstances of today.

Question : So, the document is not going to go into any specifics.

Secretary (East) : I do not have the draft document.

Question : Is there a meeting planned on the sidelines between the UN Secretary General and the Prime Minister because he is also coming to India?

Secretary (East) : The UN Secretary-General is coming to Delhi next week.

EAM has met him today.

Question : But there is no meeting planned between him and Prime Minister?

Secretary (East) : I am not aware that there is a meeting. He is coming here just for two days from next week, I think Monday-Tuesday.

Question : What exactly did Jawaharlal Nehru say which is considered seminal?

Secretary (East) : I do not have the full text. I can give it to you, if you like. It is easily available on the websites. I do not have it right with me in my papers here. But this is public document.

062. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh before his departure for Jakarta to attend the Asian-African Summit and Commemoration of the Golden Jubilee of the Asian-African Conference of 1955.

New Delhi, April 22, 2005.

I am leaving for Jakarta, Indonesia today to participate in the Asian-African Summit from 22-23rd April and in the Commemoration of the Golden Jubilee of the Asian-African Conference (1955) to be held in Bandung on April 24. This is an event of great significance as India was one of the original sponsors of the 1955 Bandung Conference and Pandit Nehru personally played a leading role in its organization and success. On this occasion, we recall his contribution to the sense of solidarity that imbued Asia and Africa following Bandung.

The leaders of 106 Asian and African countries are expected to participate in the Asian-African Summit which is intended to reinvigorate the Spirit of Bandung as enshrined in the Final Communiqué of the Asian-African Conference held there in 1955. At this meeting, we would sign a Declaration on a New Asian African Strategic Partnership renewing and reaffirming our commitment to the values enshrined in the original Bandung Conference.

We see the New Asian African Strategic Partnership as a forward-looking framework intended to build a bridge between Asia and Africa covering three broad areas of partnership- political solidarity, economic cooperation and socio-cultural relations. The New Asian African Strategic Partnership shall emphasize the need to promote practical cooperation between these two continents in areas across the spectrum such as trade, industry, investment, finance, tourism, information and communication technology, energy, health, transportation, agriculture, water resources and fisheries.

During my stay in Jakarta, I also expect to renew bilateral contacts. I hope to have meetings with several leaders who will be in Jakarta including our host, the President of Indonesia, and leaders from China, Sri Lanka, Afghanistan, Vietnam and Singapore.

063. Press briefing by Secretary (East) Rajiv Sikri on Prime Minister's engagements in Jakarta.

Jakarta, April 23, 2005.

Secretary (East) : ...for their support within the ASEAN which has resulted in an ASEAN consensus to have India as a participant in the first East-Asia Summit that will take place later this year in December. The Prime Minister has said that he would look forward to participating in that Summit and to cooperate with like-minded countries in our common endeavour. Prime Minister invited President Yudhoyono to visit India. The invitation was accepted. The President of Indonesia also conveyed his appreciation and thanks for the assistance that India gave for tsunami relief and Nias earthquake.

The second meeting, which the Prime Minister had was with the Prime Minister of Sri Lanka Mr. Rajapakse, who also very warmly thanked India for the generous and prompt tsunami assistance that was received from India. Prime Minister said that India would be happy to share our experience and whatever else we could do to help in the reconstruction activities in Sri Lanka.

The Prime Minister of Sri Lanka said that the economy was recovering well. He responded positively to the Prime Minister's suggestion that perhaps India and Sri Lanka could work together on a disaster management system. It should cover not only tsunami but all kinds of natural disasters because we are neighbours and the impact of many natural disasters is common on both countries. It was also agreed that we should work towards early finalisation of the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement, and that is being worked on by both sides.

The Prime Minister also met with President Hamid Karzai of Afghanistan who, as you know, was in India not so long ago. President Karzai talked about the preparations for the forthcoming parliamentary elections in Afghanistan and reaffirmed the necessity of strengthening democratic institutions in Afghanistan that were essential for Afghanistan's progress. A vibrant parliament with a vigilant opposition, he said, was necessary to ensure accountability of the Government. The Prime Minister said that we would be happy to continue with our assistance to Afghanistan in any field that would help in ensuring that there is peace and stability there and in the reconstruction activity that Afghanistan is engaged in. You are aware that India already has an extensive cooperation and assistance programme with Afghanistan. President Karzai welcomed the positive outcome of the recent India-Pakistan Summit, and made a reference to the positive references both in President Musharraf's statement yesterday as well as in the Prime Minister's statement today. He said that he hoped that better Indo-Pakistan relations would also help India-Afghan relations that if there were transit facilities available then this would enable India-Afghan trade and economic relations to grow.

The Prime Minister also had a meeting with His Majesty the King of Nepal. His Majesty the King of Nepal and the Prime Minister deliberated on the situation in Nepal. It was agreed that it was necessary to restart the political process without delay, and that this in turn would enable His Majesty's government to deal with the Maoist insurgency. Accordingly, His Majesty informed the Prime Minister that the political process in Nepal would be restored as early as possible. Their conversation was frank and cordial. Both emphasized the unique nature of India-Nepal relations. The meeting lasted forty-five minutes. The External Affairs Minister Mr. Natwar Singh was also present during the discussions.

The last meeting, bilateral meeting, which the Prime Minister had this morning, was with the President of Vietnam Mr. Tran Duc Luong. President of Vietnam talked of the traditionally friendly relations that India has enjoyed with Vietnam, and that India is considered by Vietnam as a major friend. He recalled the visit of the General Secretary of the Congress Party of Vietnam a few years ago to India and the goodwill shown there. He expressed his sincere and deep satisfaction at India's continued and strong economic growth and said that it was a very good signal and something that would greatly contribute towards promoting peace and stability in the world. The two leaders discussed the further development of India-Vietnam bilateral relations and (noted) that regular exchange of high-level visits and at other levels would give a boost to this cooperation. The President of Vietnam has extended an invitation to our President to visit Vietnam, and he said that he will look forward to receiving our President in Vietnam in the near future. He also invited the Prime Minister to visit Vietnam.

The Prime Minister said that we attach great importance to developing our relations with Vietnam, particularly in the economic field, and that the energy cooperation between India and Vietnam has many promising areas. India is already present in Vietnam in this sector and there could be new opportunities that could come up. Other areas of cooperation that were identified were space, atomic energy and an agreement that the Foreign Ministries of both sides would be instructed to have a more purposeful and intensive programme that would envisage more exchange of visits, business delegations, tourists and other people to people contacts which are extremely important to build a good edifice of India-Vietnam relations. The Prime Minister thanked the Vietnamese President for the support that Vietnam had given for Indian participation in the East-Asia Summit. The Vietnamese President referred to Vietnam's desire to join the WTO and sought India's support which Prime Minister said we would most certainly give.

This was in essence the outcome of the Prime Minister's meetings this morning.

Official Spokesperson : ... any questions at this stage?

Question : Did the specific issue of Indian arms sales to Nepal come up in the meeting?

Secretary (East) : I have nothing more to add to what I have already stated.

Question : There is a reference being made about the ...(Inaudible)...he was making some gesture of ...(Inaudible)...

Secretary (East) : The Prime Minister was referring to the reference in President Musharraf's state speech yesterday to India-Pakistan relations and the positive outcome of the recent Summit. Let me draw your attention to the fact that the tone of President Musharraf's speech yesterday and the references to India, as well as the tone of the Prime Minister's speech and the references to Pakistan, were very warm and cordial. I think the Prime Minister referred to the sentiments expressed by President Musharraf in his speech yesterday. It was not a reference to any conversation. They just had a chat at the dinner. There was no time for them to have any conversation there. But the reference was to the speech at the Afro-Asian Summit.

Question : There are reports coming from the Nepalese side that Nepal has assured release of more political prisoners apart from the political prisoners who have already been released.

Secretary (East) : I believe that the Foreign Minister of Nepal may have spoken to the press. I am not aware of the details.

064. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at Asian-African Conference.

Jakarta, April 23, 2005.

It is an honour to participate in the 50th anniversary of the Asian-African Conference. We salute President Yudhoyono and President Mbeki for piloting this great initiative. I also thank the government and people of Indonesia for their warm hospitality.

Today we commemorate the internationalism of visionary leaders of Africa and Asia such as Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, President Sukarno, Premier Zhou Enlai, President Gamal Abdul Nasser, Prime Minister U-NU, Prince Sihanouk, and Prime Minister Pham Van Dong.

These celebrations prove that the Bandung spirit remains a source of inspiration. Speaking for India, it is a particular pleasure to recall the mutually enriching encounters between our peoples over the millennia and to invoke the shared vision of these great leaders, committed to creating an Afro-Asian identity.

The Bandung Conference inherited the mantle of the Asian Relations Conference of 1947 and the Conference of Asian and African Nations of 1949. Our first Prime Minister was closely associated with these events. The ten principles emerging from Bandung inspired the Non-Aligned movement, which is one of the greatest peace movements ever.

Mr. Chairman and Excellencies, at the Asian Relations Conference in 1947 Nehru said that "we stand at the end of an era and on the threshold of a new period in history". Mr. Chairman, we too stand at a similar cusp of change. Barring the brave Palestinian people, most peoples on our two continents have achieved freedom or statehood. The world has changed dramatically these past decades. Colonialism and apartheid have been comprehensively defeated.

Today, a new cooperative global structure is within our reach. The proliferation of regional associations promises considerable benefits through mutual cooperation. Rapid economic development and technological progress are generating unprecedented changes.

Although mass poverty still afflicts millions in Africa and Asia, most countries experiencing growth in excess of 5% per annum are in these two continents. We live in a world of falling barriers to trade and rising living standards.

Mr. Chairman Sir,

Ours is a world of unprecedented connectivity. Thanks to the communication and information technology revolutions, distance has lost its old meaning. Fifty years after Bandung 1955, we meet in a smaller and more integrated world. Migration and more open economies are creating multi-cultural societies. Globalization enables instant availability of information and freer competition for opportunities.

It is not coincidental that increasing openness, democracy and social awareness follow the process of globalization. Recent advances in science and technology provides us unparalleled instrumentalities to combat age-old problems of poverty, ignorance and disease. Properly managed, globalization can effect a significant improvement in the human condition in the span of a single generation.

However, along with the opportunities, globalization brings with it new challenges. The globalization of disease and insecurity, and the management of scarce natural resources are challenges posed by HIV-AIDS and terrorism. All require a global approach and a global solution.

A cooperative and consensual international security order eludes us, and its consequence is insecurity, not common security.

Increased competition – internal and external- helps those who are strong enough to benefit from the new opportunities. However, it can hurt those who are ill-equipped to face the challenges of competition. We must adopt concerted measures, both at the national and the international level, for an equitable management of increased global interdependence of nations. At the national level, the state must be modernized to create an environment conducive to creativity and growth and also to ensure that the fruits of growth are fairly and equitably distributed.

At the global level, we must devise instrumentalities to deal with imbalances built into the functioning of the international political and economic order. We should aim to expand the constituency that supports process of globalization.

Mr. Chairman Sir, to meet these challenges and constraints, we must respond in a manner worthy of the Bandung spirit. Just as that historic meeting redefined the agenda for its times, we must do so once again here today. The declaration on a new Asian African Strategic Partnership outlines guiding principles for joint action to achieve our goals in a changed global environment.

It must awaken a global conscience that recognizes the moral imperatives of social justice, poverty alleviation and the core elements of our millennium development goals. We must create new structures of mutual support, solidarity and cooperation to benefit from best practices and appropriate technologies amongst us. This is required as urgently today, as it was fifty years ago.

Mr. Chairman Sir, in this spirit, let me outline the specific areas where such cooperation is vital.

- We must strive to evolve formulae to phase out trade - distorting agricultural subsidies in developed countries and to remove barriers to our agricultural exports, while protecting the livelihood security of millions of farmers.
- We need a lowering of tariff and non-tariff barriers to our other exports. Rigid visa restrictions continue to obstruct the free movement of our people and services, depriving us full benefit from our own economic strength. We need greater protection for our bio-diversity resources and fair recompense for their exploitation by others.
- We understand and appreciate the international concern for the protection of the environment, which we fully share. However this goal needs to be balanced with the development aspirations of the developing nations. We need assured access to environment – friendly technologies and the resources to induct them into our systems.
- We also need urgent measures to generate additional financial resources for development, especially for the least developed countries and the highly indebted poor countries.
- We must ensure that access to both new and appropriate technologies and to the cutting edge areas of science and technology are expanded greatly amongst us. Advances in biotechnology can promote revolutionary changes in agriculture and health care systems. While our continents include both major producer and consumers of energy, the framework within which we produce and consume energy is determined elsewhere.

- We must address this anomaly. Similarly, new and renewable sources of energy can provide a more secure energy environment. Further more, in this information age, imaginative strategies of human resources development based on information and communication technology can greatly accelerate the pace of social and economic development. Afro- Asian nations can benefit from cooperative management of research and development in these areas.

Sir,

Our countries have our own distinct perspectives on measures to combat international terrorism which has emerged as a major global problem. We are well equipped to initiate and sustain meaningful "dialogue among civilizations", instead of subscribing to the theory of the so-called clash of civilizations. Our voice must be heard in this regard.

We account for over half of humanity and we represent a kaleidoscope of diverse cultures. Our continents bring together most of the great religions of the world. Yet we do not have commensurate voice in the International institutions of the world.

Therefore, democratization of the United Nations and its specialized agencies must be a fundamental plank of our strategic partnership. The evolving global economy needs the guiding hand of a well managed global polity to bring about both an efficient and equitable management of global interdependence.

Mr. Chairman Sir, to achieve these goals, our strategic partnership must be inspired by a common vision of globalization based on maximizing cooperative self reliance .It must benefit from the unique perspectives of Afro-Asian countries to our specific problems. We must ensure that in the transition from dependence to interdependence, there is a greater cohesion between the nations of Asia and Africa.

Regrettably, South - South linkages have weakened when they are most required. India sees South – South cooperation as an effective cooperative approach to the challenges of development in this 21st century. We are committed to this objective.

Mr. Chairman, Excellencies, Jawaharlal Nehru has said that when we march step in step with history, success will be ours. The breathtaking pace of change in our times gives us an opportunity and a responsibility to act decisively. We can transcend past rancours and take new initiatives to cerate new cooperative mechanisms and regional partnerships.

In this spirit, in cooperation with our neighbour Pakistan, we have embarked upon a journey of peace and good neighbourly ties. I appreciate the positive sentiments expressed by President Pervez Musharraf yesterday, which I fully reciprocate. We are sincere in our desire to resolve all issues in a mutually acceptable manner. This will surely bring benefit to our people and to our region.

Mr. President.

Excellencies, the Bandung Conference of 1955 followed the awakening of Asia and Africa. We meet today in similarly historic circumstances, at the threshold of change that place us centre-stage-globally.

Let us work together to ensure that this conference will be remembered as that defining moment in world history when we establish the goal of a positive and enlightened ethic of globalization, built on democratic foundations and a genuine commitment to the cause of pluralism.

065. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Golden Jubilee celebrations of the Bandung Asia-Africa Conference of 1955.

Bandung, April 24, 2005.

Your Excellency President Yudhoyono,
Your Excellency President Mbeki,
His Excellency the Secretary General of UN,

Your Majesties, Royal Highnesses, Excellencies, Distinguished Ministers and Delegates,

I am truly delighted to be amongst you on an occasion that is both moving and historic. In walking to this magnificent building, we have literally followed in the fifty year-old footsteps of our founding fathers, at an event that altered the destiny of our nations in the 20th century. I therefore deem it a great honour to stand before you on behalf of the Asian continent.

The stirring words of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru at the moment of India's independence appropriately define that high noon of internationalism and idealism five decades ago. He said, "a moment comes, which comes but rarely in history, when we step out from the old to the new, when an age ends, and when the soul of a nation, long suppressed, finds utterance." It was truly the soul of the people of Asia and Africa that found expression in Bandung that day fifty years ago.

If we look at the distance we have traversed over these decades, it is evident that our nations had made dramatic and effective progress in reshaping the global order during the post war era. In the 1950s, there were a mere handful of countries from Asia and Africa in the United Nations. Now, we are all members not only of the United Nations and many of its agencies, but also of a number of flourishing regional and trans-regional organizations of our own. Our people now freely exercise the freedom to mould their own destinies. These developments did not occur overnight after removing colonial governments. It required the evolution of political, legal, social and cultural systems to ensure that liberty is not only guaranteed to our citizens by law, but that they can actually exercise it in real practice.

Excellencies,

At the international level, political emancipation for our countries also created the incentive to seek a more democratic and open world order. The Bandung conference enabled a consensus amongst us that the newly independent nations of our two continents must have an independent voice. This determination that our nations would not be dominated by any other country or group of countries led directly to the holding of the first meeting of the Non-Aligned Movement in Belgrade in 1961. The Non-Aligned Movement was rooted therefore in the Bandung spirit, and it is only appropriate that the summary made by the co-Chairs of the Ministerial meeting of the Summit in Jakarta a few days ago underlines our commitment to the spirit and principles of Bandung and the Non-Aligned Movement.

Excellencies,

In the context of the present global challenges, Non-Alignment remains a valid and effective instrument to ensure the creation of a more just and fair global order. We must ensure that the architecture of international institutions is democratized and made more representative. This restructuring should include the United Nations and its specialized agencies and the international financial institutions as well. We must also ensure that the global trading system is made more sensitive to the needs and aspirations of poorer countries. Just as the NAM played a central role in the struggle for political emancipation in the past, we need to revitalize this movement to make it a vehicle for rapid social and economic transformation and emancipation in our times.

Excellencies,

In seeking to address the challenges before us, we should move in two directions in parallel. At one level, cooperation between our developing nations must increase manifold. This will not only give us the benefits of solidarity, it will also force us to look within for suitable solutions and appropriate technologies to address the very basic problems that confront us all. We may well find that solutions to such problems are available amongst us. We can learn a great deal from each other's experiences, borrow from each other's best practices and work together to find simple but effective solutions to many of our problems. But this will not happen if we ignore the importance of maintaining horizontal linkages between us in this age of globalization.

At the same time, we must also realize that if development is to be truly sustainable, it cannot be transplanted from outside. It must be intrinsic and appropriate to our societies. We should be aware of the lacunae in our processes of governance which prevent us from effectively delivering basic services to our people. Our structures of governance must be modernized and made more suitable and accountable to the needs of our times. Our goal must be to ensure the improved delivery of basic services to all our citizens. We need to act on the adage that power is a sacred societal trust, and we owe it to all our people to ensure that this power is expended for the common good.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

The declaration of the Bandung Conference 50 years ago that the problems of the Asian and African countries are part of the larger problems of the world represented an approach in accord with a civilizational tradition of accommodation, tolerance and universality. This vision was reflected by Jawaharlal Nehru in 1947, when he said "peace has been said to be indivisible; so is freedom, so is prosperity now, and so also is disaster in this one world that can no longer be split into isolated fragments". This vision of oneness and the principles of solidarity, cooperation and friendship which brought together some of the most eminent Afro-Asian leaders here 50 years ago must inspire and unite us in our own quest to establish a peaceful, prosperous and equitable world.

066. Declaration on the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership.Jakarta, April 24, 2005.

We, the Leaders of Asian and African countries, have gathered in Jakarta, Indonesia on 22-23 April 2005 for the Asian-African Summit to reinvigorate the Spirit of Bandung as enshrined in the Final Communiqué of the 1955 Asian-African Conference and to chart the future cooperation between our two continents towards a New Asian-African Strategic Partnership (NAASP).

We reiterate our conviction that the Spirit of Bandung, the core principles of which are solidarity, friendship and cooperation, continues to be a solid, relevant and effective foundation for fostering better relations among Asian and African countries and resolving global issues of common concern. The 1955 Bandung Conference remains as a beacon in guiding the future progress of Asia and Africa.

We note with satisfaction that since the 1955 Conference, Asian and African countries have attained significant political advances. We have successfully combated the scourge of colonialism and consistently fought racism. In particular, the abolishment of apartheid represents a milestone in Asian-African cooperation and we reaffirm our continued determination to eradicate racism and all forms of discrimination. As a result of our efforts over the last fifty years, we are all independent, sovereign and equal nations striving for the promotion of human rights, democracy, and the rule of law. However, having made these political gains, we are concerned that we have not yet attained commensurate progress in the social and economic spheres. We recognize the need to continuously strengthen the process of nation and state-building, as well as social integration.

We remain committed to the principle of self-determination as set forth in the Final Communiqué of the 1955 Bandung Conference and in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. In particular, we express our abhorrence that, fifty years since the 1955 Bandung Conference, the Palestinian people remain deprived of their right to independence. We remain steadfast in our support for the Palestinian people and the creation of a viable and sovereign Palestinian state, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions.

We emphasize the importance of multilateral approaches to international relations and the need for countries to strictly abide by the principles of international law, in particular the Charter of the United Nations. As Asia and Africa represent the majority in the community of nations, we reaffirm the need to support and strengthen multilateralism in order to address global issues, including reforming multilateral institutions.

We recognize that the current global situation and the prevailing conditions in Asia and Africa necessitate the need to actively pursue a common view and collective action to ensure the equitable sharing of the benefits of globalization. We are determined to meet the internationally agreed targets and goals aimed at poverty eradication, development and growth, and underline the necessity for all parties to honour their commitments in this regard. We emphasize the importance of enhancing cooperation with all regions.

We underline the importance of dialogue among civilizations to promote a culture of peace, tolerance and respect for religious, cultural, language and racial diversities as well as gender equality.

We acknowledge the positive development of intra-regional/sub-regional integration in both continents. Nevertheless, continent-wide inter-regional cooperation among the two continents needs to be developed. We are convinced that cooperation between sub-regional organizations, through sharing experiences and best practices, can propel growth and sustainable development.

We underline the importance of bringing the regions closer together by utilizing the advantages derived from the commonalities and diversity of, as well as the new and encouraging developments in, both regions. We emphasize both the collective responsibilities and the important role of all stakeholders in exploring innovative and concrete ways and means to strengthen cooperation between Asia and Africa.

In this regard, we acknowledge the importance of complementing and building upon existing initiatives that link the two continents, inter alia Tokyo International Conference on African Development (TICAD), China-Africa Cooperation Forum (CACF), India-Africa Cooperation, Indonesia-Brunei Darussalam sponsored Non-Aligned Movement Centre for South-South Technical Cooperation, Vietnam-Africa Business Forum, and the Smart Partnership Initiative and the Langkawi International Dialogue. We stress the importance of streamlining and aligning existing initiatives for coherence and maximum benefit and to avoid duplication.

We acknowledge the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) as the African Union's programme for poverty eradication, socio-economic development and growth and accept it as the framework for engagement with Africa. We express our support for the implementation of NEPAD.

We underscore the urgency of promoting economic development in the Asian and African regions, as stipulated in the 1955 Bandung Conference. We stress that poverty and under-development, gender mainstreaming, communicable diseases, environmental degradation, natural disasters, drought and desertification, digital divide, inequitable market access, and foreign debt, remain as issues of common concern which call for our closer cooperation and collective action.

We envision an Asian-African region at peace with itself and with the world at large working together as a concert of nations in harmony, non-exclusive, bonded in dynamic partnership and conscious of our historical ties and cultural heritage. We visualize an affluent Asian-African region characterized by equitable growth, sustainable development as well as a common determination to enhance the quality of life and well-being of our people. We further envisage a caring Asian-African society where the people live in stability, prosperity, dignity and free from the fear of violence, oppression and injustice.

To this end, we hereby declare, as an expression of our new political will, the establishment of a New Asian-African Strategic Partnership (NAASP) as a framework to build a bridge between Asia and Africa covering three broad areas of partnership, namely political solidarity, economic cooperation, and socio-cultural relations. The strategic partnership provides a momentum in achieving peace, prosperity and progress, and will be based on the following principles and ideals:

1. The Ten Principles of Bandung of the 1955 Asian – African Conference;
2. Recognition of diversity between and within the regions, including different social and economic systems and levels of development;

3. Commitment to open dialogue, based on mutual respect and benefit;
4. Promotion of non-exclusive cooperation by involving all stakeholders;
5. Attainment of practical and sustainable cooperation based on comparative advantage, equal partnership, common ownership and vision, as well as a firm and shared conviction to address common challenges;
6. Promotion of sustainable partnership by complementing and building upon existing regional/sub-regional initiatives in Asia and Africa;
7. Promotion of a just, democratic, transparent, accountable and harmonious society;
8. Promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development;
9. Promotion of collective and unified efforts in multilateral fora.

The NAASP shall emphasize the need to promote practical cooperation between the two continents in areas such as trade, industry, investment, finance, tourism, information and communication technology, energy, health, transportation, agriculture, water resources and fisheries.

The NAASP shall also address issues of common concern such as, armed conflict, weapons of mass destruction, transnational organized crimes and terrorism, which are fundamental to ensuring peace, stability, and security.

We are determined to prevent conflict and resolve disputes by peaceful means and endeavor to explore innovative mechanisms for confidence building and dispute resolution as well as for post- conflict peace-building.

The NAASP shall promote human resource development, enhanced capacity building and technical cooperation in order to create an enabling environment for the betterment of the regions.

We resolve that the sustainability of the NAASP shall be conducted through three tiers of interaction: an intergovernmental forum; sub-regional organizations; and people-to-people interaction, particularly business, academia, and civil society.

We are determined to develop an institutionalized process of the NAASP through convening: a Summit of Heads of State/Government every four years; a Ministerial Meeting of Foreign Ministers every two years; and Sectoral Ministerial and other Technical Meetings when deemed necessary. A Business Summit in conjunction with the Summit of Heads of State/Government will be held every four years.

We pledge to our peoples our joint determination and commitment to bringing the NAASP into reality by implementing concrete actions for the benefit and prosperity of our peoples.

067. Press conference by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the end of the Afro-Asian Summit to commemorate the Bandung Conference.

Jakarta, April 23, 2005.

Friends,

Today has been a busy and productive day.

This has been a journey full of historical resonance. In travelling to Indonesia for the Asian-African Summit and commemoration of the Bandung Summit we have revisited an important chapter of our history in the 20th century. In the evolution of our foreign policy, the conference at Bandung was a significant moment. India led by Jawaharlal Nehru played a very influential role at Bandung in 1955 and subsequently in the non-aligned movement. Our participation in this conference and in the visit to Bandung tomorrow thus retraces our journey as a free nation carving out an independent foreign policy.

At first sight, the immediate concerns at Bandung in 1955 and in Jakarta in Jakarta in 2005 are completely different. However, the essence of the agenda for developing countries may not have changed very much. At that time the process of de-colonization was still gathering momentum, and the hateful practice of apartheid was current. Now we are all present here as free states, but still grappling with asymmetries, albeit of a different nature. The inescapable challenge today is globalization and our response as developing countries to this process. Speaking here today I have proposed practical steps that developing countries can take in framing policies that would enable us to benefit from the process of globalization. I have also underscored the continuing relevance of cooperation and solidarity between developing countries, South-South cooperation, both as a value and as a practical policy framework.

Tomorrow I shall travel to Bandung. That will be a sentimental journey. We shall retread the path of the towering leaders who preceded us half a century ago and re-dedicate ourselves to the values and sense of solidarity they exemplified. In confronting the unceasing challenges of the present moment, one sometimes loses sight of the origins - of a sense of where we began. This trip to Bandung will take all of us, leaders of free nations and free peoples, to a time when this was not so and will remind us of other commitments to our peoples that we are still to fulfill.

I have also had very useful meetings here with several Heads of State and Government. I began my bilateral meetings today with a call on the President of Indonesia. We spoke about the possibilities of enlarging our areas of cooperation to include energy, health and culture; I want to tell you that he referred to the popularity of Indian films here and expressed an interest in our film industry as an area, which both sides could focus on. I invited the President to visit India at his early convenience.

I met the Prime Minister of Sri Lanka. This was our first meeting following the Tsunami which devastated such vast tracts of Sri Lanka's coastal areas. We reviewed the reconstruction efforts in Sri Lanka and our participation in this process. He also briefed me about developments in the peace process in Sri Lanka.

This morning I also met President Karzai of Afghanistan. We have a close and continuing interest in this friendly neighbouring country. President Karzai updated me on recent events in Afghanistan and underlined the need for the long-term engagement of the international community in Afghanistan's stability. I used the opportunity to pledge India's continuing interest in and commitment to Afghanistan's well being and normalization.

The King of Nepal had sought a meeting with me and I used this opportunity to convey our concern to him about the situation in his country, with which we have the closest ties. You have already been briefed about this meeting earlier. You have also been briefed about the External Affairs Minister's discussions with His Majesty yesterday. Let me reiterate that I emphasized the importance of the setting out a road-map for re-starting the political process in Nepal without delay. The King assured me of the necessary steps. We shall continue to pay close attention to further developments.

I met the President of Vietnam, a country with which we have had very close ties. We reviewed the present status of our relations. We agreed that both in the bilateral context, and in the context of Vietnam's status as a member of ASEAN, there is much more that the two countries can do to enhance our cooperation.

I called on President Hu Jintao of China. Following closely on the recent landmark visit to India of Premier Wen Jiabao, this was an occasion for both sides to express satisfaction at the positive direction our bilateral relations have taken and to reaffirm our determination to pursue our strategic partnership at regional and global levels.

This visit has also given me an opportunity to meet other leaders including the President of Nigeria and the Prime Minister of Singapore. Occasions such as these offer us an invaluable opportunity to reaffirm India's unceasing engagement with our close partners in Asia and Africa.

Question : Sir, have you contacted the King of Nepal ...(Inaudible)...

Moderator : Let me take all the questions on Nepal together. Are there any other questions on Nepal?

Question : Is... acknowledged by the King that ...(Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : I met His Majesty the King. He had asked for a meeting. Being our close neighbour, a country with which we have standing civilisational ties, very intimate relations, I did agree to meet His Majesty. He gave me an account of circumstances, compulsions, in which he had to take the action, which he did take. I explained to him that as a close neighbour and friend of Nepal, a country with which we have a unique relationship, we have always regarded Constitutional Monarchy and multiparty democracy as the twin pillars of the Nepali polity. In the light of events in recent months, our concerns and our actions have been prompted by this recognition that these twin pillars must work together in harmony. We discussed the situation and his perspective on the evolving situation. I did suggest to him that it is important to take effective measures to restart the political process, and to work out a roadmap to this purpose. His Majesty was quite sensitive to these concerns. Therefore, on the whole I think the meeting was constructive in terms of its outcome.

Question : What about the ...(Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : His Majesty raised that issue with me and I said we will look at the things in proper perspective.

Question: Yesterday you met President Musharraf at the dinner. You talked for four – five minutes together. Could you tell us what did you talk?

Prime Minister: I told President Musharraf that our discussions in Delhi has borne good results. It is being talked about all over the world. I praised him for his statement that he made here day before yesterday. I conveyed my complements to him that this is probably a rare multilateral forum where Pakistan has not indulged in India-bashing.

Question : ...(Inaudible)... on Nepal.

Moderator : Sorry, we have moved beyond that.

* * * *

Question : ...(Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : It was a very good meeting. The Chinese President asked me to give an account of my assessment of the Indo-Chinese relationship. And I recounted the good results that have emerged as a result of my meeting with Chinese Premier, our commitment to strengthen multi-faceted cooperation between our two countries in economic, in culture, in science and technology, and the agreement with regard to political Parameters and Guiding Principles for the Resolution of the boundary dispute.

We agreed that we should instruct our Special Representatives to expedite this process. We both reaffirmed our Government's political commitment to move forward on the resolution of the boundary question. At the same time, we agreed that the boundary question should not be allowed in any way to affect the tranquility and peace at the Line of Actual Control. We also agreed that the work relating to delineation of the Line of Actual Control should move at a faster pace. Also, I gave him an account of the turn in our relations with Pakistan, the results of that, and he greatly welcomed that.

Question : Was there any discussion between India and China on the question of UN Reform?

Prime Minister : There was a discussion, but not with the President. We had an extensive discussion on the subject with the Premier in Delhi

Question : ... (Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : No, there was no discussion.

Question : When you advanced for Jakarta you said this was a sentimental journey. ... key world leaders are here. You are likely also to go to the USA in a couple of months. Would you like to just put some perspective on India's relations with the US, China, Japan and Pakistan? A quick second question. Is there any talk between India and China on a possible resolution about ... and the Aksai Chin and Arunachal Pradesh area?

Prime Minister : I said we have reached an agreement on the political parameters and the basic guiding principles, which will determine the resolution of the boundary question. But I do not think that I am in a position to state right now what will be the framework and the precise content of that. That is for our two Special Representatives to look into and we will then take a political view of what adjustments are called for.

Moderator : Her first question was about your meetings with the Chinese leadership, Pakistan and US leadership and other countries. She would like to know what general foreign policy perspectives we have.

Prime Minister : Let me say that it has been the effort of our Government in the last ten months to bring about a significant improvement in our relation with our neighbours. I am glad to report that we have made progress. We also recognize the great importance of the USA in the world economy, the role that the United States played and so also is the case of the European Union and Japan. Therefore, it is our effort to create a most favourable international environment for India's development so that we have an international environment which increases the options that we have. The end result is to create a favourable international environment so that our attention can increasingly be concentrated on dealing with fundamental problems of poverty, ignorance and disease which still afflict millions and millions of our people. In that way, I think the relations with the United States, the relations with Beijing, the relations with Russia and Japan are of great importance. We have very good relations with Russia. President Putin's visit strengthened our strategic partnership. We have a strategic partnership with the EU, and with the US also, and with China. The Japanese Prime Minister will be in India in a few days. So, I think overall, we are using the foreign policy as an instrument for enlarging the options that are available to India in tackling the basic problems of our polity.

Question : ...(Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : Yes, I think, I am more than satisfied. We came here. As I said, it was a sentimental journey because it reminded me of the great role that Jawaharlal then played in bringing the countries of the third world on one platform, in giving shape and content to the concept of Non-Alignment, and in mobilizing all the forces of the world to mount a frontal attack against colonialism, imperialism and the forces of apartheid. That was a glorious chapter in India's foreign policy. Bandung had an important role to play in that. Therefore, there was a sentimental element. I do believe, although the world has changed, that non-alignment in the sense of maximum possible consultation, cooperation and retaining independence of action in dealing with world affairs, these are things, which retain their relevance. Their reaffirmation at this Summit, I think, is a positive achievement.

Question : Mr. Prime Minister what is the latest position on India's permanent seat in the UN Security Council? Are we lobbying for it?

Prime Minister : Of course, we are lobbying for it. We have a Group of Four – India, Brazil, Japan and Germany. I believe today I think a majority of member countries of the United Nations are supportive of India's permanent membership. But I would be the last one to say that we have conquered the turf. I think there are still hurdles. We will work hard to cross those hurdles.

Question : ...(Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : There is agreement that the United Nations system, and particularly the Security Council and the specialized agencies, need to reflect the realities of the contemporary world. The UN Charter was framed at a time when most developing countries were colonies. The power structure since then has changed, and in our view it is necessary that the UN and its various specialized bodies ought to reflect the shift in the balance that has taken place in the last fifty or sixty years. I think there is a general recognition of that that something needs to be done. But what will ultimately materialize? I think we are dealing with a world of power relation. Those who have, do not want to give up whatever power they have. Therefore, I am not saying that the battle is won. I think we have a struggle ahead of us and we go into the battle recognizing the difficulty but also we say ultimately the good is bound to triumph.

External Affairs Minister : It is very difficult to bring an amendment in the UN Charter. Hope this will happen some day. This is not my personal job; the entire Foreign Office is involved.

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS - 2005

Section - IV Gleneagles (G-8+5) Summit

068. Special media briefing by Foreign Secretary on the eve of Prime Minister's visit to attend the G-8 Plus 5 Summit.

New Delhi, July 5, 2005.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Navtej Sarna): Good evening ladies and gentlemen. It gives me great pleasure to welcome you to this briefing by the Foreign Secretary primarily on Prime Minister's visit tomorrow to Gleneagles but also, since we have the Foreign Secretary here for a little while, maybe some other issues could also be addressed.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shyam Saran) : Thank you and good afternoon to all of you. I thought it might be useful for me to just give you a sense of what would be happening at Gleneagles on the 7th when Prime Minister would be going along with some other leaders from developing countries as special invitees to the G-8 Summit.

The theme of this summit is global economy, climate change and sustainable development. These would be the main issues that would be taken up during the Summit. There are five developing countries, which have been invited to participate in the Summit. These include, apart from India, Brazil, and Mexico from Latin America, China and South Africa. The British are the coordinators, as you know, for this summit. In pursuit of the themes that I have mentioned to you, they have also been working together both with these five developing countries as well as their G-8 partners on some kind of an action plan on issues relating to climate change as well as energy issues.

We have also been working together with our developing country colleagues, as also with the British, to put forward what would be a developing country viewpoint at this summit. So, when Prime Minister arrives in Gleneagles there will be a meeting of the five leaders from the developing countries. The idea is that we should be in a position to put forward in a coordinated manner the views that we have concerning the development of the global economy, climate change, sustainable development.

On global economy, essentially the message that we would like to give is that there should be a recognition of the importance of global growth to the interest of the developing countries that just at the time when there is a process of globalisation taking place, there is a process of liberalization taking place, developed countries should avoid any new kind of protectionist measures in the shape of non-tariff barriers, in the shape of concerns being expressed for example about outsourcing, and that the markets of developed countries remain open to developing countries.

There is a need to make certain that the forthcoming meeting, the WTO meeting in Hong Kong in December, is a success. There are certain critical issues relating for example to agricultural subsidies, which need to be sorted out. We would like there to be a development-oriented outcome to this meeting.

With regard to the issues of energy and environment, the fundamental approach that we have is that developing countries need increasingly larger supplies of energy for their development, that development is the priority. We are certainly concerned about sustained development. We are concerned about the environment but it should be understood that the main responsibility with regard to, for example dealing with the greenhouse gases is that of the developed countries. It is they who are responsible for the overwhelmingly large proportions of such emissions. Even in the next decade or more this situation will not really change very much. If the developing countries have to adopt new, clean technologies, then it is essential that technology transfer should be made easier to the developing countries.

Now just as in the case of, for example dealing with the global challenge such as HIV/AIDS a certain approach has been taken that certain technologies should be put in the public domain so that the IPR issue is taken care of. Similarly, we believe that if there are certain technologies which are significant in terms of cleaner use of energy, then it is perhaps worthwhile that some of these technologies should be put in the public domain, the IPR issue should be relaxed, so that developing countries have easy access to such technologies because without this it is difficult to see how such technologies can really be diffused among the developing countries.

So, one is the issue of technology, the other issue is that of affordability that is even though there are technologies which are available, unless these are made available to developing countries at affordable rates it is again difficult to see how these can be diffused. The point we have made is that the kind of financial flows, which are required for the adoption of these technologies must be additional to existing financial flows, that is, existing ODA flows. So, it should not become a charge on the already limited, existing flows of financial funds to developing countries but it should be an additionality. So, this is another very important aspect of the approach that has been taken by the developing countries.

The third point that we have made is that there needs to be collaboration in research and development effort in order to come up with new, clean technologies. Here the five developing countries who are going to be represented at Gleneagles, even though they are developing countries, they are countries which also have rather significant research capabilities. They have very sound network of research institutions. So, there is also a suggestion that, therefore, to be some kind of a partnership amongst the developing countries and the developed countries so that new technologies can be developed which can be then adopted both by developing countries and developed countries. So, this is essentially the approach that is going to emerge from the deliberations of the developing country leaders in Gleneagles.

Of course, there will be some kind of an action plan which may emerge from the G-8 themselves. Whether that actually happens remains to be seen because you might have seen that there is still some controversy about the issue of climate change amongst the G-8 countries themselves. So, we will have to wait and see what kind of an action plan emerges from the G-8. But our attitude or our response to any such action plan will again be based on what I have mentioned that the primary responsibility in this regard is that of the developed countries. As you know, in the existing international instruments - is, the Kyoto Protocol or the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change – the principle that is adopted is that of a common and differentiated responsibility. That is, there is a common challenge to all of us but there is a differentiated responsibility in terms of dealing with this challenge. That principle is fundamental and that principle must be ensured in any kind of participation which is sought from developing countries. Also in terms of any action plan, the other principles that I mentioned to you, that is, unless there is a willingness to tackle the IPR issue, the technology transfer issue; unless there is a willingness to tackle the financial issue, affordability issue; and whether or not there is also a willingness to engage with the developing countries in any kind of useful

R&D effort for the future, I think much of our response to whatever emerges from the Gleneagles G-8 Summit will be determined on the basis of these criteria.

I think in addition to the opportunity which the Summit would give us to engage with our G-8 partners, there will also be some opportunity for some bilateral meetings. These are being arranged. Of course, since the time is short, it may not be possible to arrange meetings with all the different leaders. But certainly, a bilateral meeting with the host, Prime Minister Tony Blair, has been already tied up. We are also looking at possible meetings with some of the other G-8 leaders. Of course, I also mentioned to you that there will be an opportunity for the leaders of the five developing countries to be meeting together in advance of their meeting with the G-8 leaders.

I will stop here. On the Gleneagles Summit if you have any questions or clarifications you want, I will try my best to answer.

Question : In which way the two subjects of climate change and Africa concern India specifically?

Foreign Secretary : Africa is a different segment. The meeting with some of the African Heads of States will be taking place on the 8th as I understand. That would be focused essentially on the recommendations which are contained in a Commission which was set up on Africa by the British and there are several recommendations which have come up some of which you have seen already reported, for example, writing off the debt of the most highly indebted African countries. But there are also recommendations with regard to economic development of Africa. So, we are not directly concerned with that segment. We are concerned with the segment, as I said, relating to the global economy, climate change and sustainable development.

Here, the Indian approach is, of course, it is energy security which is important to a developing country like India. We have often made the point that if you have countries like India and China developing at a rate of seven to eight per cent per annum for a number of years in the future, obviously energy will be a constraint. Therefore, we would be looking at those sources of energy. In India, for example, we have taken the view that this will inevitably lead India to look increasingly at nuclear energy as an important energy source. We already have a very major for the development of our hydropower resources. We are engaged also in research and development effort for renewable sources of energy. Not only domestically but also internationally, we are involved in a number of research efforts for example for the development of a hydrogen fuel economy. We have shown interest in participating in the ITER, which is the International Thermo-Nuclear Energy Project which is an initiative of the European Union but there are a number of partner countries. We certainly have an intention to also participate in that project. So, there are a number of things we are interested in. Naturally, I think in the discussions which will be held in Gleneagles, all the issues of energy and sustainable development, I think there will be an opportunity for us to put forward your viewpoints.

Question : On the issue of Asian brown haze, do you think that India and China are going to be held responsible?

Foreign Secretary : We have no such indication.

Question : You talked about nuclear energy. Has India put forward any specific proposal on nuclear energy production?

Foreign Secretary : We have stated on a number of occasions that precisely because of the very large demands for energy which are inevitable which are going to be engaged in a sustained growth rate of about seven to eight per cent per annum for the next ten years to 20 years and with the kind of global oil prices that you are seeing today, we may even be entering into an era of higher oil prices, so for us nuclear energy is certainly an important alternative. And it also happens to be a area in which we have developed over the years considerable amount of expertise. We have a very good infrastructure. We have a mastery over the entire nuclear fuel cycle. We have a highly qualified technical and scientific manpower in the atomic energy sector. Therefore, it stands to reason that we should be looking at developing this particular sector in a much more ambitious manner. The point that we would make is that in any case we would develop this particular sector, it would be very helpful if we had a more supportive international environment. It would be helpful if we had an international environment which fostered cooperation in the further development of our nuclear power industry. This is the viewpoint which, I am sure, will be expressed whenever appropriate.

Question : You have emphasized that IPR should be relaxed in the field of nuclear energy. What sort of relaxations?

Foreign Secretary : I gave you the example of the HIV/AIDS challenge. There, as you know, we have had a kind of an exemption for developing countries from the application of the IPR issue, patent issue, with regard to a range of drugs which are used for treatment of HIV/AIDS. So, if we can do this for what is recognized as a major global challenge in the sector of public health, if we regard climate change, if we regard environment as also similarly an urgent global challenge, then perhaps we need to look at the ways in which we can meet this challenge by a relaxation issue with regard to clean development technologies.

Question : What type of an arrangement is this? You are going to G-8. Is it a client-master relationship, or is it a permanent relationship that will be going on in every G-8 Summit?

Foreign Secretary : I do not think that there is a patron-client relationship nor are we looking at this as something which is permanent. The last time India was invited was to Evian in 2003. So, it is not that every year there is this opportunity. We certainly do not look upon our meeting as that of, as you mentioned, two different kinds of countries. In fact, there is very much a sense that these five developing countries are very major actors, they are major players and for dealing with any kind of global challenge, unless these countries are on board, unless these countries are also participants in that collective deliberation, in that collective decision-making, it would be very difficult to succeed in facing this global challenge. To that extent that issues relating to the global economy, very high energy prices, the issues relating to, as I mentioned, the climate change, how do we bring about sustainable development, these are all issues which require the active participation of major developing countries. I think it is in this spirit that these countries have been invited.

Question: On ITER project, are there any indications that ... decision has been taken by France and by the end of the year I think things would start moving. Is there any indication that there is some opening for India because we have our own programme?

Foreign Secretary : I was in Brussels recently. In fact one of the items which was considered during the first meeting of the India-EU Energy Panel was precisely civil nuclear energy cooperation and specifically India's participation in ITER. The European Union which is the main initiator of this project has welcomed India's full participation in this project. Currently, of course, since there are six other major partners - I think these partners are the US, the UK, France, China, South Korea and Japan – we have to also consult these other partner countries in terms of our desire to join as a full partner. So, this exercise is currently underway, as you have mentioned, the citing issue has been sorted out and also the selection of the main contractor for the project likely to be sorted out very soon.

Question : In favour of Japan?

Foreign Secretary : No, no, this is for the contractor for carrying out the main project. So, we are currently engaged in precisely that exercise of trying to ensure our membership of the project.

Question : India and China both will be big consumers of energy in the future. That way, they would also be becoming polluters in the world. The American condition had been that if India and China are willing to participate and agree to certain reduction norms in the second phase of Kyoto Protocol, then the United States can also think of joining Kyoto Protocol. Can there be a sort of a via media in this meeting when India and China put forward this proposal that in the second phase of Kyoto Protocol they would agree to reductions and the United States saying that in this condition we are willing to join the Kyoto Protocol. Is there any likelihood of that?

Foreign Secretary : Again I would draw your attention to what I said in my opening remarks that the fundamental principles for India, not only for India but for other developing countries including China, is the principle of common and differentiated responsibility. Under that principle, it had been recognized not only by India but by the international community as a whole that the main responsibility with regard to the greenhouse gases is really with the developed countries. That is because, not only today but if you make even a projection for the next decade or so or even more, the main responsibility for these emissions is really going to be from the developed nations. If you look at our emissions in per capita terms, then perhaps we will never reach the point that is currently the level of the developed countries.

' So, does this mean, therefore, that we are deliberately going to go in for development strategies which mean more environmental pollution?

Certainly not. In fact our approach has been that irrespective of whether or not there is a commitment from us in this regard, because of our own interest we will adopt, as far as possible, clean development strategy. This is the reason why India has been spending such a large amount of resources on a very major R&D effort for renewable sources of energy. This is why we have a very major programme, as I mentioned, in terms of development of our nuclear energy. This is the reason why we have a very ambitious programme of our hydro power. We are very consciously trying to change the energy mix in favour of cleaner sources of energy. So, we are very conscious of our responsibility but I think it is not appropriate for those who are responsible for the major part of the environmental challenge that we are facing to not really take on the responsibility that they are supposed to be in terms of reducing their contribution to environmental pollution and expect that there should be commitments taken by developing countries. That is what we object to. So, I do not think that there should be any sense that India and China are deliberately adopting pollution producing strategies. I cannot speak for China, but I can certainly speak for India that that is not our development strategy.

Question : You must have seen the stories coming out in the media on the African Union Summit. Essentially the stories that I have seen suggest that they have called for at least two permanent seats for Africa and five non-permanent seats. How do you look at this development vis-à-vis the G-4 efforts? Can you generally give us an update on what is happening with the G-4 and the possibility of when you are likely to move this resolution?

Foreign Secretary : The situation is sort of changing and evolving very rapidly. So, we have to keep it under constant review and see what is the best way of moving forward. As we have had occasion to point out that there is a critical role in this whole exercise to be played by the African countries because the African countries have 53 or 54 members of the United Nations. What is encouraging is the initial reports that we have that the African Union endorses the principle of there being an expansion both in the permanent and in the non-permanent category, and that the numbers that we have in mind for at least the permanent membership that is six, and the way in which they are to be distributed amongst different regions including Africa, that has been endorsed.

There may be some difference of with regard to the numbers in the non-permanent category. Of course, the African Union also seems to be suggesting a much clearer commitment in terms of the veto power for permanent members. Now, we will have to wait and see what precisely is the decision taken by the Summit itself. But I think on the basis of what has emerged so far, there is a basis for us to talk to them and see how we can take the framework resolution forward. So, when should the framework resolution be tabled, when should it be voted upon, I think we will have to await the decision of the Summit itself. We will obviously have to engage in further consultations with the African Union, and not just with the African Union representatives but also with other members of the United Nations, those who have co-sponsored the framework resolution, those who have promised support for the framework resolution, if there are any modifications which may be required, if there are any changes which are required, naturally we will have to discuss these with them. So, this is, I would suggest, a work in progress. Let us see how it evolves. But we remain optimistic.

069. Statement of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh before his departure for Gleneagles for G-8 Summit.

New Delhi, July 6, 2005.

I am visiting the United Kingdom to participate in the Outreach Session of the G-8 Summit at Gleneagles on July 7. The United Kingdom, which is the host of this Summit, has also extended invitations to Brazil, China, Mexico and South Africa to participate in the Outreach Session.

The discussions are expected to focus mainly on Climate Change and Sustainable Development, issues of contemporary and pressing importance. We welcome the initiative of Prime Minister Blair to engage in purposeful discussions between the industrialized countries, represented in the G-8, and major emerging economies. It is our expectation that the Gleneagles Summit will provide an opportunity to consider additional practical measures focusing on clean and affordable technologies to address Climate Change issues, based on a true partnership between developed and developing countries for ensuring the larger common good.

Key countries in the ongoing Doha Multilateral Trade Negotiations will also be present in Gleneagles. This will provide an opportunity to discuss the global economic situation and to review progress in the Doha Work Programme, including preparations for the forthcoming Ministerial meeting in Hong Kong later this year.

I look forward to meeting world leaders present at Gleneagles. Bilateral meetings on the Summit sidelines - with Prime Minister Tony Blair of the United Kingdom, President Putin of Russia and President Chirac of France, are also planned.

While in the United Kingdom, I will visit Oxford to receive an Honorary Doctorate that the University has been good enough to confer on me. In London, I hope to meet Friends of India Groups from the three main Political Parties in the British Parliament. I will attend Ceremonies to mark the 75th anniversary of the opening of India House.

070. Press briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran at the G-8 Summit.

Gleneagles, July 7, 2005.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shyam Saran) : As you know, we started the day on a somewhat tragic note because of news about the terrorist bomb attacks in London, as a result of which there have been several fatalities. As would be expected, the first order of business when the G5 and G8 met together in the afternoon was really to listen to Prime Minister Blair give us some information about these attacks. It was decided unanimously amongst all the Heads of State and Government present that as a mark of solidarity and the expression of our total opposition and condemnation to such acts of terrorism, we would issue a joint statement.

The joint statement was read out by Prime Minister Blair in the company of all the Heads of State and Government. I would imagine that you might have had occasion to see this on the television. For those of you who may not have followed this closely, the statement of the G8 and the five outreach countries condemned utterly these barbaric attacks. It also says that all the Heads of State and Government present have asked Prime Minister Blair to convey their very deep condolences to the families of those who have been victims of these attacks, and also to make the point that we are united in our resolve to confront and defeat this terrorism, which is an attack not on just one nation but on all nations and on civilized people everywhere.

I will not read out the entire statement. I think this would be available to you. But, this was a very clear and very unanimous declaration of the 13 Heads of State and Government, unanimously condemning these attacks and resolve, despite the fact that these attacks were obviously designed to disrupt the Summit, that we should go ahead with the meeting.

The meeting, as you know, focused attention on the issues of global economy, on issues of climate change and sustainable development. Before the meeting was held, the Heads of State and Government of the five outreach countries - India, Brazil, China, South Africa and Mexico – met together and issued a joint declaration which has been made available to you. So, you are aware of the stand which the developing countries have taken on some of these issues. That is apparent in the Joint Declaration itself.

During the meeting, our Prime Minister spoke about how he sees some of these global challenges. He particularly drew attention to the fact that if we look at the world today, we really marvel at the opportunities which are offered by the development in science and technology to once and for all eliminate chronic poverty, ignorance and disease. So, we have the means available, he said, for the first time that the issues of poverty or ignorance or disease need not become the persistent scourge of our society. It was, therefore, a matter of some regret that in fact with all the resources at our command we have not really been able to make a more significant impact in terms of these very longstanding challenges before human kind.

He pointed to the fact that good things were happening. For example, globalisation was something which had brought the world closer together. We have become a neighbourhood, a very small neighbourhood. Globalisation is making available a lot of opportunities to developing countries. But, at the same time, we also need to realize that globalisation can also lead to marginalisation of the weak and vulnerable in our society and, of course, to take care of the weak and vulnerable is a matter mainly of national policies. But, here is also an area where international cooperation can play a very major role. This role can be played in terms of greater financial assistance to developing countries. It can take the form of a better regime of trade, more fair and equitable trading regime, more open trading regime, as also better capital flows and investment into developing countries. This is one aspect.

The other aspect is the need for a different regime for the transfer of technologies. Technologies are available for development. But, unless we find a proper mechanism to bring about diffusion of technology, the fruits of technology, achievements in science and technology, would not really be available to developing countries. He pointed out to the fact that many of these issues of the proper mechanism for flow of funds or flow of technologies actually have been on the international agenda for a very long time but they have not really been properly implemented. What we really need to do is to see how we can actually deliver on the commitments which have been made at several international conferences or under several international institutions.

Turning to the issue of climate change and sustainable development, Prime Minister began by stating that the legitimate forum and the proper instrumentality for dealing with these issues are really the multilateral fora and multilateral agreements. In this connection he referred to the international consensus which is represented by the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change. He referred to the Kyoto Protocol and said that whatever we do, we must continue to accept the principle of what is called 'common but differentiated responsibility'.

Of course, the fact is that the whole world shares the same environment. If there are problems of climate change, it is not something which is limited within national boundaries. This is something which has a global impact. Therefore, all of us have an obligation to do all we can to safeguard the environment, to protect the environment. But, in this regard, the major responsibility is of the developed countries who have actually accumulated carbon emissions over a long period of time. Given current trends, this is unlikely to change very dramatically in the near future unless certain very drastic steps are taken.

He pointed out that carbon emissions per capita in India is a very small fraction of what you see, for example, in the United States, or even the world average. Despite this fact, actually India has done a great deal in terms of charting out a path for environmentally sustainable development. He pointed out to the fact that India is one of the few countries which actually has a separate Ministry dealing with renewable energy. We have undertaken a considerable amount of research in new and environment-friendly technologies. We are certainly committed to ensure our growth, because growth is necessary to deal with poverty, but in as environmentally sustainable manner as possible.

In this connection he drew attention to two major sources of clean energy. He said, for example, we have a major programme for hydroelectric power development which we believe is a very major source of clean energy. It is important for the international community and international financial institutions to perhaps re-look at their lending policies with regard to large hydropower projects. He also drew attention to the use of nuclear energy as a clean source of energy. In this context he referred to the statements made by President Bush himself that the way forward, if we are looking at clean sources of energy, is we have to look at nuclear energy again.

He summed this part of his presentation by saying that certainly climate change is something which affects us all. Environment is a responsibility of all the countries but there is a certain limit to our capabilities as developing countries. What we have to achieve is a right balance between protecting the environment but at the same time not perpetuating poverty. There is a certain balance which is required.

In a reference to the action plan for clean technologies which has been put forward by the G8 countries - I think this morning they have circulated their action plan - what the Prime Minister said was that it is very important that the G8 countries do not impose standards which are divorced from reality. It is important that whatever is agreed upon is something which takes into account the capabilities as well as the preoccupations of developing countries. This is very important. So, there is a reference made by the G8 to the possibility of carrying forth this dialogue in the post-Gleneagles period. We have stated that we are prepared for such a dialogue. But such a dialogue must be on an agreed basis. It must also take on board the agenda of the developing countries and we should not try to work out a framework which does not take into account the current ground realities.

Prime Minister, in this connection, also mentioned that the five countries which are represented as the Outreach Countries, although they are developing countries, are countries which have considerable research and development capabilities themselves. They have fairly well developed science and technology sectors in our countries. Therefore, it is possible to think in terms of collaborative research into clean technology. This partnership between the developed countries and the developing countries is something that could be very worthwhile. That is a suggestion he made.

He referred to a similar experience in the late 60s where a number of agricultural research institutes, in both developed and developing countries, set up a kind of network which has been responsible for creating several new technologies for the development of agriculture in developing countries. He stated that something of this kind with regard to creating environmentally-friendly technologies is something that we could consider. Because, if we really attach a great deal of urgency to the adoption and the diffusion of the climate friendly technologies, then it is extremely important for us to deal with the main issues. These main issues are: (1) how do we deal with the issue of intellectual property rights; (2) how do we deal with the issue of finding additional financing for the adoption of these technologies. In this case, perhaps we need to look at if there are really very effective technologies, clean technologies, then perhaps they should be made into public goods so that they are taken out of the IPR regime, at least for developing countries.

There also needs to be a creation of an additional financial window, particularly amongst the international financial institutions to make it possible for developing countries to induct affordable technologies because even if the technologies are available, if you cannot afford it, it does not really make an impact. This was essentially the presentation made by our Prime Minister.

I must tell you that President Bush, for example, referred to the Prime Minister's statement. He said that he agreed wholeheartedly with this approach that in dealing with the issues of environment it is very important that we not neglect the imperatives of development, that for people in poor countries the first order of business was that there was adequate food, livelihood, as well as housing. Environment was not something which was very high on their agenda. So, it is important that we look at the development imperatives and, of course, there are technologies available.

It is possible to find technological solutions to the challenges that we are facing. In that context he welcomed the suggestions made by our Prime Minister.

This was also welcomed by some of the other leaders who spoke afterwards. For example, the French President also referred to Prime Minister's statement and said that this was a good approach for us to take. Similarly, some of the other leaders from South Africa, from Mexico, from Canada, also appreciated this approach.

In the afternoon there was also a discussion on the global economic situation. Here the focus was on ensuring that the forthcoming Hong Kong round, WTO round, is a success. A very strong plea was made by the Director-General of the WTO that a very unambiguous message should go out from this Summit, especially because the most powerful affluent countries were present, the five of the most important developing countries were present, and they really are key to the success of the Hong Kong round. It was agreed that a strong message should emerge from the Summit for the success of the WTO round.

I think I will stop here. The deliberations, both in the structured session, then were carried on over lunch. There was about half an hour where the leaders were able to very informally chat with each other in the garden. During this period the Prime Minister had a chance to talk to virtually all the leaders who were present, including the Chinese President, the American President, the Mexican President, the Secretary-General of the United Nations. He was able to meet and talk to virtually all of them.

Question : What did Mr. Jintao say, if anything, about Prime Minister Singh's statement on climate change?

Foreign Secretary : The exchange of views on climate change and sustainable development amongst the five outreach countries' leaders took place in the morning. I think there was virtual agreement amongst all the five leaders with regard to the issues of climate change, that the appropriate forum for discussing, negotiating any kind of commitment relating to, for example, greenhouse gas emissions were really the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change as well as the Kyoto Protocol. Notwithstanding that, there was certainly a willingness to engage in a dialogue on such issues provided these discussions take place on an agenda which is determined by both sides. That is, there are a number of issues that we have which we have referred to in the Joint Statement that we have produced. So, any post-Gleneagles dialogue must take into account our concerns. With respect to some specific recommendations, one is the IPR issue; we need to deal with the IPR issue if there is going to be really a global response to the challenges which we face on environment. The second is the financial issue. There particularly, a reference has been made to the need for an additional financial window. The third point is what I mentioned; we have certain research capabilities ourselves as developing countries. So, there is actually south-south cooperation possible in terms of network of research institutions contributing to the issues dealing with climate change and willingness to participate in this along with the developed countries. So, that is basically the approach.

Question : What did G8 want specifically from India and China on climate change? Specifically, on this Asian Brown Haze, how to deal with this Asian Brown Haze problem?

Foreign Secretary : There was no reference to Asian Brown Haze by anybody. Secondly, there was no reference made by any leader present that there was somehow some special status to India and China and that there needs to be some separate commitment by these countries. There was a general discussion. As I mentioned to you, in the discussion there was a common recognition that issues of climate change and sustainable development are important. The points that were made, for example, by our Prime Minister were that there needs to be a balance between the imperatives of development and the need to safeguard the environment. This was a principle which I think virtually every Head of State and Government who was present accepted, the need for such a balance. It was also agreed that we must find a way forward and if in the post-Gleneagles period there is a willingness to engage in a dialogue, certainly that dialogue can take place but it must take place on an agenda which also reflects the concerns of the developing countries.

Question : In his remarks on poverty, did the PM speak specifically about poverty in India?

Foreign Secretary : I do not think that he specifically spoke about poverty in India, but he said that in terms of our development strategy, eradication of poverty was an overriding concern. But this is something not just specific to India. This is something which is an issue which confronts all the developing countries. So, not only was he speaking on behalf of India but he was also speaking on behalf of the developing countries as a whole.

Question : The G4 countries on UN reforms were also there. Did the leaders meet and discuss the UN reform?

Foreign Secretary : They are probably meeting just now. The Heads of State and Government of Germany, Brazil, Mexico and India are in fact meeting currently to review the state of affairs as far as the UN reform is concerned. But it will be a short meeting.

Question : President Bush seems to be completely out of sync ...(inaudible)... climate change. On his willingness to acknowledge that as a manmade problem ...(inaudible)...was there any intimation of change in his approach?

Foreign Secretary : I mentioned to you what President Bush said in response to the Prime Minister's statement. What he said in his remarks was that it should be acknowledged that it was very important to keep in mind the imperatives of development while we are addressing environmental concerns. That is the first point he made that eradication of poverty is something which is an extremely important goal. So, the imperatives of development have to be kept in the forefront. The second point that he made was that there are technological solutions to the challenge which we face of climate change. It was, therefore, important to try and see how we can diffuse these technological solutions in as wide a manner as possible. The issues that were raised by our Prime Minister were that these technologies have to be affordable, that they need to be made available to developing countries. These are issues which have to be addressed and can be addressed.

071. Joint Declaration of the Heads of State/Government of Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa attending the Gleneagles Summit.

Gleneagles, July 7, 2005

Introduction

1. We, the Heads of State and/or Government of Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa thank Prime Minister Tony Blair for the invitation to participate at the G8 Gleneagles Summit.
2. At the historical juncture of the UN 60th anniversary and other important upcoming events this year, including the process of UN reforms aimed at providing a greater voice to developing countries in UN decision-making, the Gleneagles Summit is an opportunity to give stronger impetus to these processes and to send a positive message on international cooperation. This should be achieved through the promotion of multilateralism, the enhancement of North-South cooperation, as well as through a renewed commitment to sustainable development and the harnessing of the benefits of globalization for all.
3. We reaffirm the role of South-South cooperation in the context of multilateralism, and the need to strengthen it. We are fully committed to close coordination and cooperation to meet the challenges arising from globalization, and to promote the common interest of developing countries by striving to more effectively bring together our priorities and international engagement strategies. We recall the outcome of the Second South Summit held in Doha in June 2005, which recognised the importance of initiatives such as the "Action against Hunger and Poverty", and the proposal for the Southern Development Fund.

Global Economic Issues

4. More stability and certainty in the world economy are paramount, together with an international context that provides developing countries with better and more equitable opportunities. Developing countries usually bear the brunt of crises and macroeconomic imbalances in the major economies that are in a position to spur conditions for global economic growth and development.

5. The persistence of hunger and poverty, even when the means to eliminate them are available, is a major obstacle to sustainable development.

6. The mobilization of international support for raising additional financial resources for development and the fight against hunger and poverty, through the effective implementation of the agreements and commitments reached by the international community in the "Consensus of Monterrey" agreed at the Conference on Financing for Development of the United Nations, is a necessary condition to reach the targets and objectives established in the "Millennium Declaration". Thus, we should preserve the coherence, the association, the will, and the sense of shared responsibility that are the common elements and principles that have to be adopted by every member of the international community if we are to see successful results.

7. The Millennium Development Goals cannot be timely and fully implemented with the current levels of ODA, which remain focused on short-term projects and vary according to the budgetary and policy priorities of donor countries. Therefore, donor countries should fulfil their commitments and reach the target of at least 0.7% of their GDP's allocated to ODA. This would greatly assist the funding of national and regional initiatives to combat poverty and hunger.

8. We welcome the decision adopted by the G-8 Finance Ministers to promote further debt relief for a number of the Least Developed Countries.

9. The removal of trade barriers to products and services of interest to developing countries is essential for development, the fight against poverty and the protection of the environment. The Doha Development Agenda explicitly places the development dimension at the heart of current trade negotiations. However, more progress is needed to implement this collective commitment. There is a need to redress the development deficit which became more acute as a result of the Uruguay Round agreements.

10. The international community needs to send a clear and positive signal to the Doha round of trade negotiations that the success of the 6th Ministerial Meeting of the WTO, to be held in Hong Kong, China, in December 2005, is essential. In this connection, a fundamental requirement is to achieve substantive progress, by the end of July 2005, regarding agricultural negotiations, access to non-agricultural markets, services, trade facilitation and rules. Trade-distorting domestic support for agriculture in developed countries must be substantially reduced and all forms of export subsidies must be eliminated by a date to be agreed.

11. All members of the international community should work together for the reform of the current international economic system to make it stronger and supportive of development, including through reforming the Bretton Woods Institutions and assuring greater say to developing countries.

Climate change

12. Climate change has, and for the foreseeable future will continue to have, a profound impact on the development prospects of our societies. The United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and its Kyoto Protocol establish a regime that adequately addresses the economic, social and environmental aspects of sustainable development.

13. The international regime represented by the UNFCCC and its Kyoto Protocol rests on the differentiation of obligations among Parties, according to the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities of States. Developed countries should therefore take the lead in international action to combat climate change by fully implementing their obligations of reducing emissions and of providing additional financing and the transfer of cleaner, low-emission and cost-effective technologies to developing countries.

14. In line with the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, the UNFCCC and the Kyoto Protocol do not provide for any quantitative targets for emission reductions for developing countries but still require these countries to implement appropriate policies and measures to address climate change, taking into account their specific circumstances and with the support of developed countries.

15. The Clean Development Mechanism (CDM) incorporated in the Kyoto Protocol provides an important and innovative framework for the participation of developing countries in international efforts to address climate change. In addition, our countries have already carried out mitigation and adaptation efforts that precede and complement those related to the CDM.

16. The Gleneagles Summit should recognise that the Convention establishes economic and social development and poverty eradication as the first and overriding priorities of developing countries. As such, there is an urgent need for the development and financing of policies, measures and mechanisms to adapt to the inevitable adverse effects of climate change that are being borne mainly by the poor.

17. Changes in the unsustainable production and consumption patterns in the industrialized countries must be implemented. Energy efficiency and renewable energy sources, such as solar, wind and hydro-electrical power, and bio-fuels such as ethanol and biodiesel, offer opportunities that deserve careful consideration.

18. We urge the G-8 leaders and the international community to devise innovative mechanisms for the transfer of technology and to provide new and additional financial resources to developing countries under the UNFCCC and its Kyoto Protocol. For this purpose, we propose a new paradigm for international cooperation, focused on the achievement of concrete and properly assessed results, taking fully into account the perspective and needs of developing countries. Such a paradigm must ensure that technologies with a positive impact on climate change are both accessible and affordable to developing countries and will require a concerted effort to address questions related to intellectual property rights. Additional financial resources, apart from those already available through ODA, should be directed to developing countries to enable them to access critical technologies. Collaborative research for new technologies, involving both developed and developing countries, also needs to be encouraged.

072. Press interaction of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with journalists accompanying him on board the flight on way back to New Delhi from Gleneagles.

On Board Air India One, July 9, 2005.

Question: What did you expect on the withdrawal of export subsidies by the developed countries?

Dr.Singh: Well, I think we want them to get rid of the subsidies in agriculture. But our concerns in India are somewhat different from many other agricultural exporting countries. We would like, while liberalising the agriculture trade for the benefit of other developing countries, to safeguard food security. And we are a country of small and marginal farmers. Nothing should be done which hurts our ability to protect and safeguard the interests of small and marginal farmers.

EU wants a commitment from developing countries to reduce industrial tariffs as a tradeoff for a commitment to eliminate farm export subsidies.

It's too early to say. There are differences between the United States and the European Union. As far as the developing countries are concerned, we are hopeful of building a sustained consensus as to what line we should take.

Fight against terrorism

Did the fight against terrorism figure in this G8 meeting?

Well, the first two hours were on that. And Prime Minister Blair said that he was going to issue a statement that the 13 of us should join. I think that was a very powerful way in which people stood together.

Iran gas pipeline

When you visit the United States next week, the issue of the Iran gas pipeline is bound to come up.

This is an affair between Iran and us and Pakistan. If the three countries agree, that should be the end of the matter.

Have they been saying, 'You drop this one and we will give you this?'

We are not a client state!

Agenda of U.S. visit

With this atmosphere you had at G8 and with President Bush responding positively to what you said [on climate change and nuclear energy], do you have any expectations from America for your visit next week?

Well, let me say I'm not going with any demands. I want to explain to the U.S. Government, to the U.S. Congress what our aspirations are. The bulk of resources for India's development has always been mobilised locally. We will always be content. We don't want to be internationally a supplicant!

You will be discussing nuclear matters, energy cooperation, and so on. But if the international system is more accommodative...

I think that is all that we expect.

Do you think the nuclear suppliers group will change the conditions?

I have been in this game long enough to recognise that there are strong vested interests. Nobody gives up power voluntarily. But the three times I have talked to President Bush, he said, 'yes, India needs to be helped in the field of nuclear energy.' I quoted him at the [G8] meeting in my introduction and he said, 'yes, I agree.'

ITER and Galileo

What does India seek to do on ITER [the experimental multinational fusion power project] and the Galileo [global navigation satellite system] project?

We are going to apply for [ITER] membership. I raised it with the French President and he said they would be very supportive. The British are very supportive. The last time when I was with the EU Summit, we discussed the Galileo navigation projects. The then chairman, the Dutch Prime Minister, said they welcomed India's participation.

Why should we invest in both Galileo and Glasnost, the Russian project?

One needs options. Technology is not static.

Tomorrow, you are meeting the Left leaders. There have been all these issues from disinvestment to India's relations with the U.S. What do you think will happen?

We'll resolve all the issues. As far as the relations between us and the United States are concerned, the defence agreement is an innocuous framework agreement updating the 1994 framework agreement.

How do you see the criticism of the Left on this issue?

Well, I think we will have to explain it to them. They can look at the document itself. It doesn't say anything that is against our national interest. It lists areas where the two countries can cooperate if they want to work together. So that does not mean any surrender of our sovereignty.

073. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on return to India from the United Kingdom.

New Delhi, July 9, 2005.

I have just come back from United Kingdom after participating in the outreach session with the Group of Eight industrialised countries.

As you know, this visit was overshadowed by the tragic incident that caused so much misery and sufferings to the people of London and this is a vivid demonstration that terrorism is a global phenomenon. We have of course suffered from this scourge for nearly twenty-twenty five years. This incident took place at the time of the meeting of Group of Eight and five developing countries, is a demonstration that all of us have to work together to evolve a collective strategy to free the world of the scourge of terrorism.

I participated in the meeting of the Group of Five that is ourselves, Brazil, Mexico, South Africa and China. These five countries met before the common meeting of the Group of Eight. There is consensus among the five countries, the leading emerging economies as to what we should be saying and doing in international fora for the reform of the international trading system, for the international system for the transfer of the resources to the developing countries and the transfer of technologies from rich to poor countries.

At the meeting with the Group of Eight countries, I expressed our concerns about the way international system is functioning, paying inadequate attention to the needs of poor countries. I laid emphasis on reform of the international trading system and ensuring that the forthcoming Doha round of trade negotiation becomes generally a development round. I also laid emphasis on the fact that all countries of the world have an obligation to work together to find credible ways to protect and preserve our environment and the essential life support system of our planet. But I also said that this must be done mindful of the development imperatives that the problems that we face in the management of environment cannot be resolved by perpetuating the poverty of poor developing countries. Therefore, we have to reconcile the imperative of development with the imperative of making that development sustainable. That requires action on the part of the developed countries to ensure that trading system is fair, capital transfer to developing countries are more adequate, that arrangements are made for transfer of technology of clean technologies – Clean Net, to developing countries at affordable costs. I think some of these concerns are reflected in the statement issued by the Group of Eight countries.

It will be our effort to work together with other like-minded countries to ensure that our views find adequate reflection in whatever decisions are taken with regard to the management of climate change.

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS - 2005

Section - V Shanghai Cooperation Organisation

074. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh on arrival at Astana, Kazakhstan for the Summit of Shanghai Cooperation Organisation.

Astana (Kazakhstan), July 4, 2005.

I am very happy to be in Astana to participate in this historic Summit of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation. As you know, the SCO in its present form was established in September 2001, and we in India with great interest have followed the growth and expansion of the SCO, which has processed and granted India's application for observer status in the SCO expeditiously under the dynamic Chairmanship of the President of Kazakhstan, H.E. Mr. Nursultan Nazarbayev.

This is my second visit to Kazakhstan. The United Progressive Alliance Government, which assumed office after the general elections in India in May 2004, accords highest priority to developing relations with this region, especially Kazakhstan, which was the first Central Asian country I visited in my capacity as Minister of External Affairs. I am happy that on the major issues discussed by us on that occasion we registered considerable progress in the area of energy cooperation, we have established a Joint Technical Working Group under the India-Kazakh Inter-Governmental Commission in February 2005, which is currently working to identify areas in specific Indian investment could take place. In the area of IT, we are glad that a leading Indian IT Company NIIT, has jointly opened in April 2005 the first India-Kazakh Centre for IT education, together with the prestigious AL Farabi University in Almaty, for which purpose an IT delegation from Kazakhstan visited India in April this year.

In the area of foreign policy, our two countries have similar positions on major international issues. We have followed with deep interest the proposal of President Nazarbayev for the establishment of a Central Asian Union. This initiative is part of the larger process currently underway in Asia for the creation of an Asian Union. India is an active participant in these efforts, and we see the current initiatives in the historical context of our long held desire for greater cooperation between countries of Asia. The first Prime Minister of India Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru visited Kazakhstan in June 1955. He was an ardent advocate of closer cooperation between the countries of our region on the basis of the principles of peaceful coexistence, or Panchsheel. My present visit to Kazakhstan is taking place exactly after 50 years of Prime Minister Nehru's visit.

It is in this context also that we have shown our interest in participating in the work of the SCO. The two major areas in which the SCO has already taken important initiatives are in the fight against terrorism and in greater economic cooperation. In both these areas, India feels that it can contribute in a significant manner to the SCO's common programmes. We are, of course, also interested in helping develop greater people-to-people contacts between the SCO countries and to revive the intense interflow of ideas and commerce that marked the heyday of the famous Silk Route era. I feel that the political, economic, social and cultural linkages that Asian countries are vigorously developing today, both individually and through organizations like the SCO, will play a significant role in reiterating our common Asian identity, and making this century the Asian countries.

It is my privilege to be here for the participation in this historic SCO Summit in Astana as Observer and I take this opportunity to convey to the people and the Government of Kazakhstan best wishes from the people of India and the Government of India.

075. Opening Statement by External Affairs Minister Natwar Singh at the Joint Press Conference at SCO Summit.

Astana (Kazakhstan), July 5, 2005.

It is a great honour and privilege for me to be here to represent India. I want to thank the original members of the SCO for bestowing this honour on India. It is equally pleasurable for me to say that we have joined as honorary members along with Pakistan and Iran.

We have had a very businesslike agenda this morning. Views have been expressed on what will be the task of the organization. We are all committed to the agenda for at least the first twenty-five years, if not longer, of the 21st century. The agenda is quite different than it was 25 years ago. We have to deal with terrorism, drug trafficking, HIV/AIDS, environment, problems of security and stability.

The new diplomacy is going to be not conventional diplomacy: It is going to be diplomacy on energy, economics, trade, and financial matters. We also need to catch up with the rest of the world in science and technology. My country, along with other countries present here, will be able to offer some benefits to not only this region but also other regions of the world.

The concentration of countries represented on this table - in terms of geography, in terms of natural resources, and in terms human resources - is very considerable indeed. We greatly look forward to making our modest contribution as Observers.

Once again, I want to thank the President of Kazakhstan His Excellency Mr. Nursultan Nazarbayev for arranging this meeting and taking good care of us. Also, thank you ladies and gentlemen who will be bringing what happened here before the world on the television screens and in the newspapers.

Once again, thank you.

076. Address by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at Shanghai Cooperation Organization Summit.

Astana (Kazakhstan) July 5, 2005.

Your Excellency President Nazarbayev, Distinguished Heads of State and Government, Excellencies, Friends,

2. I feel privileged to represent India on this historic occasion when the Shanghai Cooperation Organization has decided to accept India as an observer to the SCO. On behalf of the Government of India, I thank the Heads of State of the SCO member states for this decision.

3. India deeply appreciates the dynamic role played by the current Chairman of the SCO, His Excellency Mr Nursultan Nazarbayev, President of the Republic of Kazakhstan, in organizing this meeting and inviting us to Astana. I thank you, Mr. President, as well as the Government of Kazakhstan, for your warm hospitality and the excellent arrangements made for this meeting.

Excellencies,

4. The mature and statesmanlike manner in which the SCO leaders have guided the growth and orientation of this organization over the years is truly admirable, and portends well for its future. We have keenly observed that the SCO has taken several significant initiatives in two major areas of its activity namely, in combating terrorism and the development of economic cooperation. The SCO was one of the first major international organizations to take concrete steps in the war against terrorism, much before the events of September 11, 2001 focused the attention of the international community on the need for all countries to jointly cooperate and pool their resources in the war against terrorism, extremism and intolerance. As terrorism today has become a sinister trans-national activity, with terrorists taking full advantage of less than whole-hearted cooperation among states, it can be successfully countered through joint efforts by all states. I would like to reiterate India's strong interest in cooperating with the SCO in its initiatives to combat terrorism.

5. Another major area of SCO's activity is economic cooperation. The SCO brings together some of the largest and most populous countries, accounting for a major proportion of world's resources, both natural and human, as well as of global agricultural and industrial production. Our countries are dynamic growing markets, and have significant achievements and capabilities in frontier areas of science and technology. There is enormous potential for realizing mutually beneficial cooperation and synergies among our countries, and for converting this region into a catalyst for economic growth and prosperity. This will also promote the security and stability of this space, which is a matter of vital national interest for all members of the SCO family. The association of India with the SCO will, I am confident, make a useful contribution in this regard. We would also be happy to share with SCO member and observer states India's experience of economic reforms and the development towards a knowledge-based economy.

6. All of us can also benefit from closer people-to-people and cultural ties that provided mutually enriching contacts between the peoples of our rich and ancient civilisations over the centuries. Unfortunately, over time various barriers – many artificial – to the free flow of people and ideas have restricted our natural interaction. We need to work together to restore these ties, and allow peoples to rediscover and to rekindle their common heritage and achievements.

7. In conclusion, I would like to reiterate my happiness at being present on this memorable occasion and to say that India very much looks forward to playing a positive, creative and constructive role in the SCO.

077. Suo Motu statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh in the Lok Sabha on the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation Summit held in Astana.

New Delhi, August 22, 2005.

The Minister of External Affairs (shri K. Natwar Singh): Mr. Speaker, Sir, the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation, which includes China, Russia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, was set up in 2001. The basic objectives of the organisation are strengthening mutual trust, good neighbourliness, friendship and cooperation amongst the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation member-states, maintenance of regional peace, security and stability, assistance for economic and social development in the region. The various Summit and other meetings have issued declarations and taken forward cooperation amongst member countries not only by adopting confidence building measures but also undertake activities like joint military exercises, training programmes, and establishment of a Regional Anti Terrorist Structure headquartered in Tashkent. SCO has a Secretariat in Beijing and the Council of Heads of State is the supreme decision-making body.

As the SCO has emerged to be an important regional organisation involving countries of the Central Asian region and those around it, India applied for observer status in the SCO in March this year. In the SCO Summit held in Astana on 5th July, 2005, India, Pakistan and Iran were admitted as Observers (Mongolia was admitted as an Observer last year). I represented India at the Astana Summit in July. The Astana Summit focussed on terrorism, drug trafficking and promoting economic cooperation. I also had very useful bilateral meetings with the leaders assembled there. In view of our own interest in strengthening relations with countries in our extended neighbourhood including Central Asia, it is in our interest to be closely associated with the SCO.

On the sidelines of the Summit, I had bilateral meetings with leaders of SCO countries. President Nazarbayev of Kazakhstan received me warmly and welcomed economic cooperation with India. The Chinese President Mr. Hu Jintao emphasised the need for cooperative partnership and coordination in international affairs. In my meeting with the Pakistan Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz and Foreign Minister Kasuri, we reviewed the status of our bilateral relations. We discussed possibilities of enhancing air, rail and road communications between India and Pakistan. We also noted the potential for cooperation between India and Pakistan in areas such as climate change and ozone depletion. Other bilateral meetings were with the President of Tajikistan, and the Foreign Ministers of Uzbekistan and Mongolia. I also had a pleasant exchange of views with President Putin of Russia. In the discussions with Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov, we reviewed our bilateral relations as well as the trilateral cooperation with China.

078. Statement by Minister of External Affairs K.Natwar Singh at Shanghai Cooperation Organization Council Heads of Government Meeting.

Moscow, October 26, 2005.

Your Excellency Mr. Miikhail Fradkov, Prime Minister of the Russian Federation, Distinguished Heads of Government of the members of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, Distinguished representatives of SCO Observer countries,

Mr. Secretary General of SCO,

Excellencies, Distinguished invitees, Ladies and Gentlemen,

At the very outset, let me also convey the profound sympathy of my delegation to Pakistan on the loss of life and property suffered in the recent earthquake. The Government and people of India are extending all possible assistance in relief and rehabilitation in a spirit of solidarity and good neighbour lines. At the same time, I wish to thank those delegation which have expressed their sympathy for the loss of life and damage to property that India has also suffered due to the earthquake.

It gives me great pleasure to be here in Moscow today and to participate in the SCO Council of Heads of Government Meeting. I would like to express my gratitude to the Government and people of Russia for hosting this Meeting and making such impeccable arrangements.

It was only in July this year that India was admitted as Observer to the SCO at the Astana Summit. India supports the objectives of the SCO which seeks to foster economic cooperation, ensure stability in the SCO region and combat terrorism and extremist view points. We would like to actively cooperate with our SCO partners to make a positive and constructive contribution to agreed areas of activities of SCO.

The Meeting of Council Heads of Government is concentrating on what we consider is a very important part of SCO activity i.e. promoting economic cooperation. We support the various initiatives mooted for increasing trade, which we feel are important for reducing regional economic disparities. We hope to cooperate with SCO member and observer countries to increase inter-SCO regional trade. Trade statistics reveal that most of our trade is with partners in other regions. We can gain considerably by increasing trade flows amongst themselves.

Since Central Asian SCO countries are land locked, the development of transportation networks, which would allow cost efficient transportation of cargo assumes considerably importance. In this connection, my government recently hosted the Coordination Council Meeting of the International North - South Transport Corridor (INSTC) in New Delhi on 20-21 October. Some of the SCO members and observers are participants in the INSTC, which seeks to put into use a shorter and more efficient transportation route to Russia and Central Asia. All participants in the meeting agreed to work together to facilitate greater use of the Corridor. This is a good example of an area where we need to work closely together for finding creative solutions to problems which come in the way of greater commercial exchanges.

SCO is making strides in fostering economic development. In this meeting, decisions related to initiatives such as the establishment of the SCO Business Council, SCO Development Fund and the mechanism of inter-banking cooperation are to be taken. It is our hope that these initiatives would allow for greater investment in the SCO region and that we work on establishment of joint ventures in each other's countries. I would like to highlight that robust economic growth is not possible without developed financial sectors. India has considerable experience in this regard and we can collaborate with other SCO partners by taking advantage of available complementarities.

Energy is another area where there can be meaningful cooperation. We are organizing on 25th November in Delhi an Asian Energy Conference, which will bring together energy producers and consumers. Under the SCO umbrella, we have important consumers and producers of the world. It would be worthwhile if energy cooperation could become a priority sector within the ambit of SCO activities. Perhaps regular meetings of Energy Ministers could be held under the SCO framework. In this context, we would welcome active cooperation on the proposed Iran-Pakistan-India and the Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India gas pipelines.

It is our firm belief that economic cooperation and development in an environment of security and stability will be beneficial for our region. India is keen to play a constructive and active role in the SCO. On behalf of the Government and people of India, I would like to express my happiness at the opportunity of being present today and addressing this distinguished gathering.

Section - VI Natural Disasters

079. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the Special Meeting of leaders convened by ASEAN in the aftermath of the Earthquake and Tsunami.

Jakarta, January 6, 2005.

Your Excellency Dr. Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono, President of the Republic of Indonesia

Your Excellencies Heads of State and Government
Secretary General Kofi Annan of the United Nations Distinguished Foreign Ministers

Colleagues and Friends,

Existing vocabularies are inadequate to describe the intensity and magnitude of the horrendous catastrophe that hit a dozen countries of the Indian Ocean. The light went out of so many homes in so many countries in so short a span of time – only a few minutes.

Yesterday, the Foreign Minister of Indonesia used a striking phrase for this Conference – “a community of grief”. I agreed. But let me also add that this community of grief is not and must not become a community of despair. As the Prime Minister of Singapore said, the resilience of the human spirit cannot be underestimated. We are facing this unmeasurable tragedy with determination, vigour, resolution, strong-nerves and with the dedicated team of workers under the UN. The year 2004 ended in unparalleled tragedy. 2005 begins with collective hope and sustained action.

South and Southeast Asia are a region joined by history and by deep rooted social and cultural ties. We are also, we realize, joined by one ocean. Centuries of interaction have created a natural sense of affinity and empathy amongst our people. It is, therefore, only natural that we have today come together in the face of this unprecedented disaster. Other friends from across the globe have joined us. This vividly demonstrates the truth of the ancient Sanskrit saying “Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam”, or that the world is one family, said more than 3000 years ago.

In India, the Tsunami has caused extensive damage in the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the states of Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh, Kerala, and Pondicherry. The death toll has already crossed the figure of 9,500 and is likely to go up further as more than 5,800 persons are still missing.

The Government of India, along with those of the affected Indian States and Union Territories, has mounted massive relief and rescue operations. Initially, the focus was on search, evacuation and relief efforts. The situation in Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh, Kerala and Pondicherry has stabilized, and is returning to normalcy. It is stabilizing rapidly in various islands in Andaman district. The focus now is on establishing the communications network, prevention of outbreaks of epidemics and relief and rescue operations in the Nicobar Group of islands, which are the worst affected. Large quantities of food, drinking water, medicines, tents, torches and generator sets have been delivered, and more are ready for delivery. Supplies to inaccessible areas are being air-dropped. For the Andaman and Nicobar Group of Islands, an Integrated Relief Command has been constituted for effective coordination and operationalization of relief and rehabilitation measures. Till the 4th of January the Government of India had incurred an expenditure of US $ 250 million on the relief and rehabilitation effort within India. We have also given due importance to alleviating the psychological impact of the disaster through trauma counseling, early reopening of schools and providing access to TV sets.

We deeply appreciate the offers of help which have poured in from several countries. So far we have managed on our own. Our experience of handling natural disasters has enabled us to develop well-defined institutional mechanisms for disaster management at all levels. The lessons that we learnt from the Orissa cyclone of 2000, the Gujarat earthquake of 2001 and other disasters have helped us to effect a paradigm shift in our approach to disaster management, proceeding from the conviction that development cannot be sustainable unless disaster mitigation is built into the development process at all levels. There are designated officers to coordinate the entire disaster response at the national, state and district levels. These institutions swing into action immediately in the aftermath of a disaster. Standard operating procedures for different disasters have been developed and regular drills are organized. A Calamity Relief Fund has been set up in each State to enable State Governments to incur immediate expenditure on response and relief operations in the event of a disaster. This is supplemented by a National Calamity Contingency Fund at the Central Government level. Eight battalions of para-military forces have been equipped as Specialist Search and Rescue Teams. This holistic approach was extremely useful in dealing with the aftermath of the Tsunami. We have circulated a document on Disaster Management in India which gives in detail our approach and experience in handling natural disasters. Perhaps this could be of some interest to all of you here.

It is our evaluation that we can deal with the challenges, insofar as they affect India, with our own resources. We would, of course, be in touch with our friends in case any specialized requirements were to come up. It would, therefore, be appropriate that international relief is directed where it is most urgently required. The international outpouring of compassion - and funds - has indeed been tremendous. We realize, however, that more funds may be required in the months to come. Equally important are steps to ensure a long-term coordinated and sustained response and an effective relief distribution mechanism which is transparent and sustained.

I would like to say a special word about the children who have been orphaned by this tragedy. The seven to ten year olds who have lost their parents, we hope that their lives are not darkened forever. We need to provide them solace and comfort.

India, on its part, was among the first countries to contribute to the international relief efforts by sending needed assistance swiftly to our neighbours who have suffered even more.

We have placed a hospital ship off the coast of Aceh, Indonesia, which has been the worst hit area. This ship is providing emergency rations, medicines, tents and first aid kits. It is also equipped to set up on-shore medical facilities. Another naval ship has brought relief and emergency medical supplies. Even as I speak, the Indian relief effort at Meulaboh is in full operation. An onshore field hospital has been set up in this devastated town and relief supplies are being delivered and distributed to the victims. We are ready to do more to assist Indonesia in required areas.

Two naval ships have set up medical camps in the Maldives. A naval tanker with drinking water and a water purification plant is also in place. The four aircraft that carried supplies to the Maldives are now stationed there to assist with rescue and relief operations.

Two naval vessels are berthed at Trincomalee in Sri Lanka and are undertaking clearance work at the harbor. One of them, after discharge of supplies, will be converted into a hospital ship. Another two naval vessels anchored off the Galle port are heli-lifting supplies. Two Iluyshin 76 aircraft carrying military field hospitals have reached Sri Lanka. Seven helicopters and two other aircraft are operating from Colombo.

India whole-heartedly supports the efforts of the United Nations and the presence of the UN Secretary General here today is a testimony to the UN's important role in coordinating international relief, and in finding ways and means to address the gaps in the relief process. We are happy to place the strengths of the Indian Navy for use in humanitarian relief in the region.

ASEAN has taken the initiative to bring all of us here today. I thank you, Mr. Chairman, and the Prime Minister of Singapore. Our partnership with ASEAN is matter of mutual satisfaction. It will be deepened by our efforts to jointly address the tragedy which we together face today. India and ASEAN have agreed to cooperate in the field of space technology and its applications for weather forecasting and disaster mitigation. We have also established a BIMSTEC Centre on Weather and Climate in New Delhi. Perhaps there is a role here for the Indian Ocean Rim Association for Regional Cooperation too. There is great merit to activating a regional approach that complements national efforts to handle natural disasters. This allows us to pool together our respective strengths and complementarities effectively and efficiently.

As we address current disaster relief priorities, it is also time to look at medium to long term objectives. An evaluation is needed of the various long term warning systems for different disasters that we need to put in place. Even more important will be mechanisms to be able to disseminate early warning signals obtained from these systems to the public.

In conclusion, we thank the Government of Indonesia and the Governments of the other ASEAN countries for organizing this meeting. There is need to deal with both emergency relief issues as well as with later phases of rehabilitation and reconstruction. India is committed to continuing its support and assistance in every possible way, including providing trained search and rescue teams, setting up web-based disaster management information systems, and human resources development for disaster management.

Thank you for giving me this opportunity.

080. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on India's position on Tsunami relief assistance.New Delhi, January 21, 2005.

During the past three weeks, the Government and the people of India have been engaged in an unprecedented effort to overcome the loss of life and devastation caused by the Tsunami. There has been an overwhelming response and demonstration of support by individuals and non-governmental organizations in India. Foreign governments and international agencies have also extended overwhelming sympathy and support. This has been an occasion for the display of national solidarity as also solidarity amongst the peoples of the world. The Prime Minister's Relief Fund has received and continues to receive substantial contributions from both within India and abroad, to assist in our relief efforts.

India takes pride in the fact that even while it has had to cope with the Tsunami disaster within its own shores, it has been able to extend modest assistance to friendly neighbouring countries, who have suffered extensive damage from this natural disaster. We intend to continue our support, within the limitations of our own resources, in the new phase of rehabilitation and reconstruction in these countries.

In India too, we are currently clearing the decks for a massive programme of reconstruction of areas that have been destroyed by the Tsunami. This also involves an extensive programme for rehabilitation of the people rendered homeless and those who have also lost their means of livelihood. In this phase, we will continue to mobilize a major national effort in which major contributions will have to be made by Government agencies, NGOs as well as the efforts of individuals. During the relief phase, Government of India had stated that while it deeply appreciated the offers of assistance from foreign Governments and international agencies, it had the capabilities and resources to deal with the aftermath of the disaster through its own national effort. Taking into account the requirements that are now emerging in the new phase of rehabilitation and reconstruction, the Government of India has decided to approach international and multilateral agencies such as the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank and the United Nations for assistance. Such assistance will be closely coordinated with our own national effort and will have, as its objective, the earliest possible return to normalcy in the areas affected by the Tsunami.

Funds from bilateral and other multilateral sources could also be channelised through these three agencies in order to ensure better coordination.

It may be noted that international NGOs in India are already working side by side with their Indian counterparts and Government agencies in extending valuable assistance to people in the Tsunami affected areas. We deeply appreciate their contribution and look forward to our continuing partnership with them.

While most Tsunami affected areas are open to the activities of foreign and international agencies and NGOs, there are only a few sensitive areas where the Government of India will be relying on its own resources to carry out rehabilitation and reconstruction.

081. Joint statement of Asian-African Leaders on Tsunami, Earthquake and Other Natural Disasters.

Jakarta, April 23, 2005.

We, the Heads of State/Government of Asian and African countries, gathered in Jakarta, Indonesia on 22-23 April 2005, expressed our profound grief at the losses of lives and livelihood caused by the earthquake and tsunami disaster in the Indian Ocean on 26 December 2004.

We are cognizant that the earthquake and tsunami disaster is a strong reminder that our two continents are bound together, in that the impact of the devastation was jointly felt by the peoples in both continents.

We noted that this natural catastrophe had generated an unprecedented scale of international response, assistance and empathy. In this regard, we commended the leading role of affected countries and the valuable contributions of the international community, including the Asian-African countries, in addressing the recent earthquake and tsunami disaster by collectively assisting in emergency relief efforts as well as in reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts.

We pledge to encourage the continued development of appropriate measures pertinent to disaster reduction, mitigation and management, which will be supportive of the outcome of the Special ASEAN Leaders Meeting on Aftermath of Earthquake and Tsunami held in Jakarta on 6 January 2005.

We also took note of the outcomes of various initiatives to address tsunami and other natural disasters, inter alia the World Conference on Disaster Reduction held in Kobe; the Ministerial Meeting on Regional Cooperation on Tsunami Early Warning Arrangements held in Phuket; the Africa Regional Strategy for Disaster Risk Reduction of the Third AU Summit held in Addis Ababa; and other international conferences under the auspices of the United Nations, including the World Summit on Sustainable Development held in Johannesburg.

We realized that natural disasters such as earthquakes and tsunami tidal waves respect no political borders and pose a major threat to all people as well as their livelihood and environment, as their unmitigated impact and aftermath undermines the progress of social and economic development.

We recognized the expertise and experience of countries in the Indian Ocean Rim and the Pacific Rim in addressing the problem of tsunami and earthquake disasters and therefore emphasized the urgent need to invest in the development of proactive, integrated, multi-hazard and multi-sectoral standby arrangements and early warning system to mitigate natural disasters in the Indian Ocean Rim.

To these ends, we are determined to:

1. Establish an integrated strategy for the development of a multi-nodal early warning system with mechanisms for preparedness, prevention, mitigation and response, with a view to minimizing casualties;
2. Establish and upgrade national early warning systems, including those that are based on community participation, while moving towards enhancing cooperation in the development of a coordinated regional system;
3. Explore ways and means to enhance the effectiveness of collective actions through consideration of possible rapid response capacities at the regional and international levels by inter alia establishing a standby arrangement for disaster relief and emergency response, creating networks for information exchange, establishing research and database centers, maximizing the use of the latest advances in science and technology, and developing strategies to reduce the risk and impact of natural disasters;

4. Reinforce efforts to create among all levels of Asian and African societies a culture of disaster risk reduction and empower those at risk to achieve protection against disaster impacts by way of enhancing capacity building, promoting public education and awareness as well as community participation in disaster prevention and mitigation;

5. Encourage greater interaction among experts from Asia and Africa in finding practical ways and means, as well as sharing best practices and experiences, on preparing Asian-African countries for the direct impact of disasters and possible secondary effects such as on public health and environmental crises;

6. Encourage the international community to continue efforts to provide disaster affected countries with technical and financial assistance, including in rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts.

We are determined that, harnessed within a spirit of compassion, sacrifice and endurance, our preparedness and capacity to proactively address the affects of tsunami, earthquake and other natural disasters will prevail to the future betterment of our peoples.

INDIA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS - 2005

Section - VII Asia

(i) South Asia

083. Speech of Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on “India and its Neighbours” at the India International Centre (IIC).

New Delhi, February 14, 2005.

It is said that the logic of geography is unrelenting and proximity is the most difficult and testing among diplomatic challenges a country faces. Frontiers with neighbours are where domestic concerns intersect with external relationships. This is where domestic and foreign policies become inextricable and demand sensitive handling. It should come as no surprise therefore, that in defining one's vital national and security interests, a country's neighbourhood enjoys a place of unquestioned primacy.

The intertwining of domestic and external interests has acquired a new intensity in this new millennium. Technological change is bringing in its wake a more globalized world where nation states and national boundaries can no longer provide the untrammelled autonomy that is associated with national sovereignty. While globalization has brought many benefits and opportunities for development and for the enrichment of our lives, there are also fears of losing one's identity and of being overwhelmed by powerful and technologically advanced societies. We are faced with the emergence of sub-nationalism and ethnic exclusivity even while a more interconnected world requires mutual understanding and tolerance. South Asia is not immune to these global trends and this forms the backdrop to the challenge we face in formulating our policies with regard to our neighbours.

On what basis does India define its neighbourhood policy? Most recently, did our reaction to events in our neighbourhood, or our decision to seek postponement of the SAARC Summit, conform to an intelligent and well-considered neighbourhood policy?

Let me begin by stating the obvious. South Asia is a compact unit, of sub-continental proportions, but occupying an easily identifiable geographical space, enjoying a broad cultural unity and a wide range of intra-regional economic complementarities. There were mighty empires in our history that straddled this sub-continent and the experience of colonialism more recently, reinforced the legacy of interconnectedness and affinity. Then came the trauma of partition, the growth of assertive nationalism, the drift away from democratic freedoms in some countries of our neighbourhood and the impact of global strategic and ideological rivalries, turning our sub-continent into a region of division and conflict, engendering a sense of siege both among States in our periphery and in India itself. The sub-continent is now home to several independent and sovereign states and this is a compelling political reality.

As a flourishing democracy, India would certainly welcome more democracy in our neighbourhood, but that too is something that we may encourage and promote; it is not something that we can impose upon others. We must also recognize, regrettable though this may be, that the countries of South Asia, while occupying the same geographical space, do not have a shared security perception and, hence, a common security doctrine. This is different from EU or ASEAN. In South Asia, at least some of the States perceive security threats as arising from within the region.

Keeping in mind this reality, our approach to SAARC was the only one logically sustainable – we set aside our differing political and security perceptions for the time being, and focus attention on economic cooperation. Our expectation was that the very dynamic of establishing cross-border economic linkages, drawing upon the complementarities that existed among different parts of our region would eventually help us overcome the mutual distrust and suspicion which prevents us from evolving a shared security perception. This remains our hope today, even though the record of SAARC in this respect, has been hardly inspiring. The fact is that SAARC is still largely a consultative body, which has shied away from undertaking even a single collaborative project in its 20 years of existence. In fact, there is deep resistance to doing anything that could be collaborative. On the other hand, some members of SAARC actively seek association with countries outside the region or with regional or international organizations, in a barely disguised effort to “counterbalance” India within the Association or to project SAARC as some kind of a regional dispute settlement mechanism.

It should be clear to any observer that India would not like to see a SAARC in which some of its members perceive it as a vehicle primarily to countervail India or to seek to limit its room for manoeuvre. There has to be a minimal consensual basis on which to pursue cooperation under SAARC, and that is the willingness to promote cross-border linkages, building upon intra-regional economic complementarities and acknowledging and encouraging the obvious cultural affinities that bind our people together. If there continues to be a resistance to such linkages within the region, even while seeking to promote linkages outside the region, if the thrust of initiatives of some of the members is seen to be patently hostile to India or motivated by a desire to contain India in some way, SAARC would continue to lack substance and energy.

India already has a set of bilateral relationships with its neighbours, which vary in both political and economic intensity. What can SAARC offer as an additionality to this set of relationships? Clearly, the creation of a free market of 1.3 billion people, with rising purchasing power, can be a significant additionality for all SAARC members. Currently, intra-regional trade accounts for only 5% of SAARC's total foreign trade and this needs to be addressed. But the mere lowering of tariffs and pruning of negative lists do not add up to a true free market. The political lines dividing South Asia have also severed the transport and communication linkages among member countries. The road, rail and waterway links that bound the different sub-regions of the sub-continent into a vast interconnected web of economic and commercial links, still remain severed. Transit routes, which would have created mutual dependencies and mutual benefit, have fallen prey to narrow political calculations. Unless we are ready to restore these cross-border linkages and transportation arteries throughout our region, SAFTA would remain a limping shadow of its true potential.

India is today one of the most dynamic and fastest growing economies of the world. It constitutes not only a vast and growing market, but also a competitive source of technologies and knowledge-based services. Countries across the globe are beginning to see India as an indispensable economic partner and seeking mutually rewarding economic and commercial links with our emerging economy. Should not our neighbours also seek to share in the prospects for mutual prosperity India offers to them? Do countries in our neighbourhood envisage their own security and development in cooperation with India or in hostility to India or by seeking to isolate themselves from India against the logic of our geography? Some neighbours have taken advantage of India's strengths and are reaping both economic and political benefits as a result. Others are not. If globalization implies that no country can develop in an autarchic environment, is this not true even more for countries within a region? If SAARC is to evolve into an organization relevant to the aspirations of the peoples of South Asia, then these questions will need deep reflection and honest answers.

The challenge for our diplomacy lies in convincing our neighbours that India is an opportunity not a threat, that far from being besieged by India, they have a vast, productive hinterland that would give their economies far greater opportunities for growth than if they were to rely on their domestic markets alone.

It is true that as the largest country in the region and its strongest economy, India has a greater responsibility to encourage the SAARC process. In the free markets that India has already established with Sri Lanka, Nepal and Bhutan, it has already accepted the principle of non-reciprocity. We are prepared to do more to throw open our markets to all our neighbours. We are prepared to invest our capital in rebuilding and upgrading cross-border infrastructure with each one of them. In a word, we are prepared to make our neighbours full stakeholders in India's economic destiny and, through such cooperation, in creating a truly vibrant and globally competitive South Asian Economic Community.

However, while we are ready and willing to accept this regional economic partnership and open up our markets to all our neighbours, we do expect that they demonstrate sensitivity to our vital concerns. These vital concerns relate to allowing the use of their territories for cross-border terrorism and hostile activity against India, for example, by insurgent and secessionist groups. As countries engaged in the task of economic cooperation, we need to create a positive and constructive environment by avoiding hostile propaganda and intemperate statements. India cannot and will not ignore such conduct and will take whatever steps are necessary to safeguard its interests.

India would like the whole of South Asia to emerge as a community of flourishing democracies. We believe that democracy would provide a more enduring and broad-based foundation for an edifice of peace and cooperation in our sub-continent. Half a century of political experience in South Asia has provided a clear lesson that while expediency may yield short term advantage, it also leads to a harmful corrosion of our core values of respect for pluralism and human rights. The interests of the people of South Asia sharing a common history and destiny, requires that we remain alert to the possible dangers we face when attempts are made to extinguish a democratic order or yield space to extremist and communal forces.

While democracy remains India's abiding conviction, the importance of our neighbourhood requires that we remain engaged with whichever government is exercising authority in any country in our neighbourhood. Our sympathy will always be with democratic and secular forces. We will promote people to people interaction and build upon the obvious cultural affinities that bind our peoples together. We need to go beyond governments and engage the peoples of South Asia to create a compact of peace and harmony throughout our region. To remain relevant, SAARC must begin to function as an effective vehicle to facilitate such contacts, bringing scholars, artists, scientists, youth and sportsmen together in regular events.

India is fully aware that its destiny is inseparable from what happens in its neighbourhood. For our own sustained economic development and the welfare of our people we need a peaceful and tranquil periphery. We also believe that the establishment of a peaceful neighbourhood is integrally linked to economic development in our neighbouring countries, an objective that would be best served by India giving access to its neighbours to its huge and growing market. Economic integration in the sub-continent must restore the natural flow of goods, peoples and ideas that characterized our shared space as South Asians, and which now stands interrupted due to political divisions.

India wishes to reassure its neighbours that it respects their independence and sovereignty. What it regards as unhelpful is the display of narrow nationalism based on hostility towards India that often becomes a cover for failure to deliver on promises made to their own peoples. This inhibits the development of normal relations, including economic cooperation, and prevents our region from emerging as a region of both political stability and economic dynamism.

The people of South Asia are one of the most talented and creative people anywhere in the world. They have won honours for their motherland in distant climes. If these creative energies of over 1.3 billion people were pooled together what heights could we not achieve? Let us make a new compact, therefore, among the countries of South Asia. Let us exorcize the ghosts of the past and join hands together across our borders, to unleash the immense energies of our peoples in a shared pursuit of collective prosperity. Our peoples deserve nothing less.

084. Speech by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the Haksar Memorial Conference.

Chandigarh (Punjab), November 9, 2005.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am happy to be here today for more than one reason. I have fond memories of my association with the Centre for Research in Rural and Industrial Development and my association with each one of you. I am proud of the good work being done by this Centre and compliment Rashpal Malhotraji for the dedication with which he has built this institution.

I am also very happy to be here today because this Conference is dedicated to the memory of a very revered and respected friend of CRRID, and of all of us, the late Shri P N Haksar. CRRID benefited immensely from his advice and guidance as the first Chairman of its Board of Governors and his role as Editor of the journal Man and Development.

Your Conference is discussing a wide range of issues that reflect the many pre-occupations of Haksarji. He was a remarkable civil servant and diplomat who had a deep understanding of the world as well as of our complex polity. He was a scholar, statesman and a passionate believer in the role of science and technology in transforming India. He was, above all, a truly pan-Indian personality, perhaps one can even say a truly South Asian personality. His deep understanding of the region enabled him to reflect on the complex challenges facing South Asia.

I hope CRRID will devote itself to a comprehensive research project on how we can take forward the process of development and regional cooperation within South Asia. The history of the 20th Century is behind us, and its consequences are with us. We have all come to live with the reality of the new political, economic and social realities of South Asia. Positioned as we are, geographically and economically, India has a pivotal role in the region. This position brings with it both privileges and responsibilities.

It has often been said that one can choose one's friends but not one's neighbours. That, in itself, is not a satisfactory proposition. One must endeavour to ensure that our neighbours are also our friends. But, as they say, it takes two hands to clap. I do sincerely hope that this region shows the wisdom and foresight required for all of us to work together to reclaim for it the glory that makes us all proud of our inheritance.

I have often said that we have, in South Asia, not just shared boundaries and shared civilisational roots, but also a shared destiny. It is not just our past that binds us together, but our future too. As the two recent natural disasters - the tsunami of last year and the recent earthquake - have proved, even nature has ordained it so.

Given all these links and inter-connections, I do believe we need to invest more time and energy in working together to deal with the great challenges of our time. Be it the challenge of eliminating poverty or the challenge of fighting terrorism. The fight against poverty and terrorism in South Asia is an indivisible fight. These are threats to the life, peace and security of all our peoples and we must deal with them as such. No country can any longer pretend that some one's terrorists could be some one else's freedom fighters. No government can any longer pretend that what happens across the border is not going to hurt it internally. Be it poverty, be it disease, be it natural disasters or be it terrorism, the destiny of South Asia is inter-linked and we must learn to work together to deal with these challenges.

I hope we can all approach the SAARC Summit later this week with this perspective in mind, a perspective of inter-dependency that strengthens our collective security and secures our collective prosperity. I am aware that we in India will be expected to take the lead in many areas. This is the privilege and responsibility I referred to earlier. I do believe that we must work with our neighbours to ensure that all nations benefit from the growth process in the region. Our neighbours must see us as a land of opportunity. Be it in education, in health care, in tourism, in trade and investment opportunities, India has the capacity and the tradition to be welcoming of its neighbours. Provided, of course, that those who visit us come as our friends and our well-wishers and bear no ill-will towards our people and our Nation.

I am happy that the South Asian Free Trade Area, SAFTA, is on the anvil. This SAFTA is the first step in the evolution of SAARC as a regional trade bloc and an economic union. Most of the discussion on SAFTA centers around its favourable effect on intra-regional trade. Regional economic integration, however, is more about finding an engine of growth rather than just for promoting trade. Countries - developed as well as developing - have looked to regional economic integration as a means of strengthening their international competitiveness and as an engine of economic growth in recent years.

Thus, European countries began with a single Common Market that keeps expanding and has gone as far as to give up their national currencies. North American countries have formed NAFTA and are moving ahead with plans for a larger Free Trade Area of Americas (FTAA). Nearer home in Asia, we have ASEAN that is emerging as an important regional grouping with the implementation of the ASEAN Free Trade Area (AFTA). In fact, ASEAN expedited the implementation of AFTA in the wake of the East Asian Crisis of 1997 and have now set before themselves a goal of creating an ASEAN Economic Community in the coming decades. The ASEAN countries are also getting integrated with the economies of countries in the neighbourhood, namely, Japan, Korea and China and also India, through free trade agreements.

The new-found interest in such regional arrangements is based not just on trade promotion but on exploiting the potential of efficiency-seeking restructuring of industry on a pan-regional basis. This would have income and efficiency effects and hence could be valuable drivers of growth. The experience of European Union suggests that the formation of the single European market led to a substantial restructuring of industry on a pan-European basis and hence enabled it to exploit economies of scale, scope and specialization. The efficiency-seeking restructuring unleashed by the process of economic integration has helped in convergence of income levels between richer EU members (e.g. Germany) and poorer ones (Spain, Portugal and Greece).

Given the strong trends towards economic integration which go far beyond tariff reductions to gradual economic convergence, any region can ignore the formation of its own scheme of regional integration only at its peril. By removing trade policy barriers, SAFTA would lead to an estimated trebling of intra-regional trade on a conservative estimate. This would make

South Asian internal trade more respectable compared to a marginal 4-5 % share as of now. By making it possible to trade directly rather than through third countries, it would also lead to cost savings for the region.

However, we must see SAFTA as the forerunner of deeper economic integration in the region. The limited experience with trade liberalization that South Asia has had so far in the framework of SAPTA or bilateral FTAs, has already had a beneficial impact. The Indo-Sri Lanka bilateral FTA, for instance, even within a short period of less than three years of implementation, has led to a lot of dynamism in bilateral trade and investment flows. Thus an Indian tyre company set up a large export-oriented tyre plant in Sri Lanka to cater to its growing markets in Pakistan, Middle East and other countries taking advantage of abundant supply of natural rubber in the country. UNCTAD's The World Investment Report 2003 has highlighted how Sri Lanka attracted Indian investments of US$ 145 million in a very short period making India the third largest source of investments for the island. Similarly, the India-Nepal FTA of 1996 spurred many Indian companies to shift production of common consumer goods for the north-Indian market to Nepal. As a result, these items emerged as some of the most important items of Nepal's exports to India.

The other lesson that comes out of recent experiences of regional economic integration in South Asia, as elsewhere, is that the smaller and poorer countries benefit more from RTAs as their trade becomes more balanced. An example is the India-Sri Lanka FTA which has benefited Sri Lanka. This success has prompted Sri Lanka to seek to expand the scope of the India-Sri Lanka FTA to cover investments and services in a comprehensive economic partnership agreement.

Regional economic integration will also make member countries especially the smaller ones more attractive destinations for third country investments by obviating the constraint imposed by a small domestic market. Studies have shown that the opportunity cost of non-cooperation for South Asian countries has been substantial. Regional economic integration in South Asia could generate billions of dollars of new income, employment, trade and could help the region in its fight against poverty.

Thus, SAFTA may help in evolving a horizontal specialization across the region to enable the most optimal utilization of the synergies between member countries for their mutual advantage. SAFTA is a step in the right direction. However, to exploit its full potential we need to complete the process of SAFTA expeditiously, complement it by a SAARC Investment Area and move on to deepen it further by forming a SAARC Customs Union and then gradually to an economic union.

SAARC could also evolve a forum for annual meetings of economic or industry ministers to facilitate discussion on exploitation of complementarities in their economies for mutual advantage.

SAARC should also take steps to improve physical connectivity by road, railways, inland waterways and shipping and air links to exploit the advantages of geographical proximity. They could evolve a common SAARC Transport Policy to facilitate movement of goods across the region.

Energy cooperation presents immense potential. To promote regional cooperation in the area of energy a South Asian Energy Dialogue comprising experts, academics, environmentalists, bureaucrats and NGOs could examine the potential for energy cooperation and suggest measures to exploit this potential. These are just some of the ideas that are worth pursuing. There are many more, especially in the sphere of education, health care, tourism and disaster management.

Institutes like yours must do the required research to work out the costs and benefits of such projects and programmes so that policy makers can take more informed decisions. More importantly, your professional research can help create the required public opinion, and convince skeptics, so that Governments are better empowered in pursuing new initiatives.

The time has come for a new vision, a new commitment and a new sense of purpose in South Asia and I hope we have the political will and wisdom to seize the moment. I hope your conference will discuss some of these issues freely and frankly, bringing professional opinion to bear on the deliberations.

REGIONAL COOPERATION (SAARC)

085. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on the postponement of the 13th Summit Conference of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation.

New Delhi, February 2, 2005.

Official Spokesperson : Good evening ladies and gentlemen and welcome to this press briefing by the Foreign Secretary. I request the Foreign Secretary to address the press and then we will take a few questions in our usual fashion.

Foreign Secretary : Good afternoon.

This is a statement relating to the XIII SAARC Summit.

We have formally communicated to the Government of Bangladesh that India would not be able to attend the forthcoming SAARC Summit in Dhaka on the scheduled dates. A request has been made for fresh dates to be worked out through consultations among the member States.

This decision has been taken against the background of recent developments in our neighbourhood, which have caused us grave concern. The security situation in Dhaka has deteriorated in recent days following the fatal attack on the former Finance Minister of Bangladesh, Mr. SAMS Kibria¹. The Government of India wishes to reiterate its continuing and consistent commitment to the SAARC process, and to increased regional cooperation among member States. It is only in an environment free from political turmoil and violence that a Summit would yield the desired outcome. That is the statement, which I wish to make this afternoon.

Question : What is your assessment of the security situation in Nepal?

Foreign Secretary : The information that we have is a little limited because all communications between Nepal and the outside world continue to be interrupted. There are no telephone communications possible. There is no Internet. We are ourselves in touch with the Embassy of India in Kathmandu only through our own satellite telephone link. We are also aware of the fact that all international flights to Kathmandu except for the Royal Nepal Airlines have not been operating since yesterday. But I am happy to tell you that today an Indian Airlines flight has proceeded to Kathmandu at 1215 hours. Perhaps another flight would also be mounted sometime later today in order to ensure that Indian passengers who are stranded in Kathmandu are able to come back home. We are also in possession of information that the political party leaders, those in Kathmandu, have been detained at their respective residences; their movements have been restricted; and their houses are being guarded by Royal Nepal Army personnel. We have also learnt that some political party leaders have been arrested and detained by the security forces. We have some information, for example, from some border towns on the India-Nepal border. We are unable to really make a very comprehensive assessment of the situation in the absence of information because of the complete interruption of communications. We hope that these communications will be restored soon.

1. The previous day (Feb. 1) in response to a question on the SAARC Summit, the Official Spokesperson had said, "a high – level security team is being dispatched from India today to make a fresh assessment of the situation on the ground."

Question : Have you communicated to the Nepalese Government or the King? Has there been any formal communication?

Foreign Secretary : I have spoken a little while ago to my Bangladesh counterpart and I have communicated to him the decision that I read out to you in this statement. Our External Affairs Minister has also spoken to the King of Bhutan as well as to the Foreign Minister of Sri Lanka also on the same lines. I have also spoken to the Sri Lanka Foreign Secretary in this regard. I was unable to get through to the Pakistani Foreign Secretary but we have communicated the same decision to the Pakistan Foreign Ministry.

Question : And Nepal?

Foreign Secretary : In Nepal, as I mentioned, the difficulty is that the communications are all interrupted. But we have informed our Ambassador in Kathmandu with the request that he should convey this in the best manner possible to the Nepali Foreign Ministry, if he is able to get in touch with them.

*

Question : Was meeting of the Prime Minister with the King in Dhaka one of the reasons for not going to the Summit?

Foreign Secretary : I shall draw your attention to my Statement in which it has been clearly stated 'This decision has been taken against the background of recent developments in our neighbourhood which have caused us grave concern'. Whatever its implication, it is quite clear.

Question : ...Inaudible... is the Nepal situation and that the King announced that he would be going to Bangladesh. Was that a part reason for the decision?

Foreign Secretary : I again draw your attention to the statement that I read out which says very very clearly – I do not think there is any ambiguity in this – that this decision has been taken against the background of recent developments in our neighbourhood which have caused us grave concern. Certainly, the developments in Nepal as well as the continuing and deteriorating security situation in Bangladesh, these are the two key factors.

Question : Yesterday our security team was sent to Bangladesh to assess the security situation there. Has the team come back? If it has come back, has it given any report?

Foreign Secretary : The team has not yet come back. It is still in Dhaka. But the statement, which I read out is of course also based on the assessment that they have communicated to us from Dhaka regarding the security situation in the capital.

Question : Bangladesh has been very keen to go ahead with the SAARC Summit. Yesterday the Bangladesh Foreign Minister was quoted as saying that the King of Nepal has conveyed his acceptance. I understand the context in which the decision has been taken. But do you feel that India will be seen acting like a Big Brother in postponing the SAARC Summit? Do you feel there will be some implications for India's foreign policy in the wake of this decision?

Foreign Secretary : I think it is very clear why we have taken this decision. I think this decision is a logical outcome of our assessment of the situation in the neighbourhood. There is no question of behaving like a Big Brother. Our main objective is to make certain that the SAARC Summit comes up with the desired outcomes. If you have the kind of environment, political environment and security environment, which prevails today, we genuinely believe that the desired outcomes are not possible. So, we should wait until the time is propitious to have such a very important and significant Summit.

* * * *

Question : You said you have requested for fresh dates for the summit. Did you specify those dates and what would have to happen in Nepal and Bangladesh for you to accept ...

Foreign Secretary : We have not indicated from our own side fresh dates, but we have conveyed to our Bangladesh colleagues as well as to our Pakistani colleagues who are the current Chairman, that fresh dates should emerge through a process of mutual consultations as it always does in the past.

Question : What will have to happen in Nepal and Bangladesh...

Foreign Secretary : I do not think I want to speculate about what is the kind of evolution, which we will be looking at or benchmarks, which we will be looking at. We have pointed out the reasons why we have taken this decision. Obviously we would be looking for amelioration of the situation or an improvement of the situation, which would dispel some of the concerns that we are expressing today.

Question : What are the specific threats directed at our Prime Minister that made you take this decision? All other Heads of States and Governments are going. So, is it because there was a specific threat to the security of the Prime Minister?

Foreign Secretary : Obviously, a certain security assessment has had to be made in the light of the most recent developments including the three bomb blasts, which took place in Dhaka yesterday, and including at the high security zone where the Sheraton hotel is located. Every country would make its own assessment with regard to the security situation. We will not speak on their behalf. Our responsibility is with regard to the safety and security of our leaders. In the light of the assessment that we have received, we believe that the time is not propitious for holding such a summit.

Question : My question to you is that this is only India's assessment, no other country has come up with similar assessment; Would India not isolated in this way? If you look into the future, is it in India's strategic and fundamental diplomatic interest?

Foreign Secretary : This is our assessment. We have communicated our assessment to other of our neighbouring countries also. As I told you our External Affairs Minister has spoken to the Bhutanese King, he also Spoke to the Sri Lankan Foreign Minister. We have shared our assessment with them. That no one is in agreement with us or we shall be isolated, is not relevant. India has to make her own assessment and take her own decision. What is our independent assessment we have shared with our other neighbours. We have told you our decision. Why we took this decision is also quite clear. I do not think there is any danger of being isolated.

Question : Do not you think that India-Bangladesh relations in any case are not at their best point, and this kind of decision could be seen as a unilateral one or India taking the lead in not getting the SAARC Summit to go ahead. Would it not affect India-Bangladesh relations?

Foreign Secretary : We have set out very clearly the reasons why we have taken this decision. It is not directed against this or that country. It is the result of an assessment of the situation which prevails in the neighbourhood. Nobody can deny that there is a serious situation which is prevailing in the neighbourhood. What has happened in Nepal is not an ordinary event. What has been taking place in Bangladesh is not something ordinary. If there is a continuing pattern of violence which, just on the eve of the Summit, seems to have been intensifying, these are objective facts. These are not something that we have manufactured ourselves. So, we have come to a certain decision based on assessment of objective reality in our neighbourhood. I do not think anybody can really fault us on that assessment.

Question : Was it not being speculated even before Nepal happened?

Foreign Secretary : We are not responsible for any speculation.

Question : You spoke of benchmarks. Is one of the benchmarks going to be ...

Foreign Secretary : I did not speak about the benchmarks. I said that we have pointed out that there is a certain situation, a grave situation, which has come about in our neighbourhood which is why we have taken such a decision. It is the amelioration or alleviation of this situation which would lead us to fresh ...

Question : If we spell it out in our terms it would mean a return to democracy in Nepal. Right?

Foreign Secretary : I do not want to speculate upon what it will take in order for us to agree to fresh dates. As I said, this is something which has always been decided in mutual consultation with all the SAARC countries and that is especially the process that we have commended to Bangladesh, to engage in diplomatic consultation and we could come up with fresh dates.

Question : Just before the SAARC Summit Musharraf came under attack, and yet India decided to go to the SAARC Summit. Do you think that the situation in Bangladesh is worst than what was in Pakistan then?

Foreign Secretary : I have not come here to compare the situation in Bangladesh with that of Pakistan. I have told you in unmistakable terms our assessment, assessment in terms of security and political assessment. Our decision has been taken on that basis. It think it would not be fair to compare that with Pakistan or with Nepal or with any other country.

Question : Mr. Saran, would it be right if one were to deduce that this decision has been mainly made, there are other factors, because of India's unwillingness to share the same stage with the King at this juncture? Would it be right to deduce that?

Foreign Secretary : What we have said today has nothing to do with personalities. What we have expressed concern about is a very serious situation which has developed in Nepal. As I have pointed out to you that even as I speak there are virtually no communications. There is virtually no way in which we are able to engage the Government of Nepal in even making a proper assessment of what is happening. So, I do not think that our decision should be projected in terms of our willingness or unwillingness to share the platform with this or that leader. We have gone to SAARC summits in the past and shared the platform with various leaders of different political persuasions. I do not think that should be taken as the reason for our decision.

086. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh before his departure for the 13th SAARC Summit.

New Delhi, November 11, 2005.

I leave today for the 13th SAARC Summit in Dhaka.

This Summit will provide an opportunity to focus regional attention on a number of important initiatives that are being pursued by SAARC. We will be considering the various programmes and projects decided upon in the ministerial meetings in areas such as trade, environment, information, health and energy. There will be a special focus on collective approaches towards poverty alleviation and we hope to discuss in detail the SAARC Development Goals formulated for the region. Another important initiative that will be taken up at the Summit will be ways and means of cooperating in the area of disaster preparedness and mitigation.

It is hoped that these initiatives¹ would contribute significantly towards

1. On November 8 the Official Spokesperson giving an indication of the agenda at Dhaka told the media "since poverty alleviation has been identified as the overarching goal of SAARC, the Summit is expected to declare the decade from 2006 to 2015 as the SAARC Decade of Poverty Alleviation. In this regard, the Summit would be endorsing the SAARC Development Goals (SDGs), as recommended by the Independent South Asian Commission on Poverty Alleviation (ISACPA), for implementation of the SAARC Social Charter by the member states." Saying that "India has been keenly advocating identification and implementation of regional collaborative projects for South Asia" the Spokesman said "The Summit would be recommending reconstitution of the South Asian Development Fund (SADF) by merging existing and proposed funds into a SAARC Development Fund (SDF) with three windows of: (1) Social (2) Economic and (3) Infrastructure, to fund regional projects. This new fund shall utilize India's pledged money of US$100 million as a part of its initial corpus of US$300 million." Taking cognizance of the social challenges of the region, Navtej Sarna, the Spokesperson indicated that the "Summit is expected to direct a mid-term review of the progress in realizing the objectives of the SAARC Decade on the Rights of the Child (2001-2010), to be undertaken in 2006." Speaking of the natural disasters that had hit SAARC region recently and in view of the colossal and tragic loss of life and property Sarna said "the Summit would be underscoring realising the enormous potential for economic, social and cultural cooperation among the member-states of SAARC.

While in Dhaka, I will take the opportunity of bilateral meetings with other SAARC leaders, besides interacting with our hosts. I look forward to having these discussions in a spirit of friendship, cooperation and good-neighbourliness.

087. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the 13th SAARC Summit.

Dhaka, November 12, 2005.

Let me begin by extending our sincere congratulations to the Prime Minister of Bangladesh, Her Excellency Begum Khaleda Zia on her election as Chairperson of SAARC. I also express my heartfelt appreciation to the Government and people of Bangladesh for the excellent arrangements made for this truly historic Summit. We have been overwhelmed by the warm and friendly hospitality extended to us since our arrival in Dhaka.

I would also like to take this opportunity to express our sincere appreciation to the immediate past Chair, Pakistan, for the unfailing the need for putting in place a Regional Response Mechanism regarding Disaster Preparedness, Emergency Relief and Rehabilitation. The forthcoming meeting of the SAARC Environment Ministers is expected to provide important directives in this regard. Recognising the need for collaborative action in the area of environment, the year 2007 has been declared as the 'Year of Green South Asia'. The year 2006 would be launched as 'South Asia Tourism Year'. Recognising the need to strengthen cooperation in fighting the scourge of terrorism, the Summit would stress the need for ratification of the Additional Protocol to the SAARC Convention on Suppression of Terrorism, and call for an early conclusion of a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. The Spokesman gave further indication that the Summit would be "deliberating upon the decision to admit Afghanistan as a new member of SAARC. India would be happy to support Afghanistan's bid. The decision on this issue would have to be taken by a consensus of all member states." On the completion of two decades of SAARC, the Spokesman said, "a decision is expected to be taken about formulating a new vision document. India feels that the vision document prepared by the Group of Eminent Persons is still relevant. India would be tabling a number of new proposals with a view to usher in the third decade of SAARC with renewed vigour and enthusiasm and to augment cooperation in the sectors of education, textiles & handicrafts, civil aviation, healthcare and sports."

commitment and zeal with which it has pursued the revival of the SAARC process.

Our region has seen intense suffering caused by major natural disasters this year. Sri Lanka, Maldives and India were the victims of the Tsunami in the early part of the year and now Pakistan and India have suffered from a major earthquake, which has wiped out entire towns and villages. We grieve for our citizens and fellow South Asians who lost their lives, and resolve to continue to help others affected, rebuild their lives.

These disasters once again remind us of the need for forging even closer ties to enable us to pool our collective resources and wisdom to deal with such calamities. This Summit should evolve effective regional mechanisms for effective and timely cooperation in disaster relief as well as management. We have extended modest help to our neighbours in a spirit of solidarity, and we are prepared to do more. We are glad that India's offer to host the SAARC Centre for Disaster Preparedness has been accepted.

Disaster management is an issue whose urgency compels us to address it with seriousness of purpose that it deserves. The possibilities for meaningful cooperation range from early warning systems to provision of relief and reconstruction. It is incumbent on us to do more in this area, drawing on existing experience in South Asia. For instance, I understand Bangladesh has developed innovative approaches for reducing the impact of disasters through community involvement in planning and risk management. The use of micro-credit both for pre-disaster risk reduction and for post-disaster reconstruction and rehabilitation are cited as global best practices that are worthy of replication in other countries of South Asia.

SAARC is entering the 20th year of its existence. It was in this very historic city that we began our journey towards a shared goal of collective prosperity. The vision of President Zia-ur-Rahman helped move forward the idea of SAARC and it is only appropriate that we honour his memory at this Summit with the first SAARC Award. May his spirit continue to guide SAARC process to its ultimate destination.

At this point in SAARC's journey, it is fair to ask whether, in these 20 years, we have done justice to that initial blueprint for regional cooperation. The honest answer is that regional economic cooperation in South Asia has fallen far short of our expectations and the dreams of our founding fathers. It remains far behind the more successful examples in both Asia and other regions of the world. I sincerely hope that SAFTA comes into force by January 1, 2006, but even this will represent only a modest beginning in terms of our goal for regional economic integration.

It is important that we assess South Asia Regional Cooperation in the larger Asian context. Today, ASEAN is evolving rapidly into a truly integrated economic community. Parallel to this intra-ASEAN integration is the broader movement towards economic integration in the context of the proposed East Asian Economic Summit. We are clearly witnessing nothing short of an Asian resurgence based upon the rebuilding of the pre-colonial arteries of trade and commerce that created a distinct Asian identity in the first place. My question is - is SAARC prepared to be an integral part of this emerging Asian resurgence, or is it content to remain marginalized at the periphery? If our region wishes to be a part of the dynamic Asia, which is emerging in our neighbourhood, then we must act and act speedily and without any further loss of time.

It is our location at the crossroads of Asia that gave our sub-continent its unique civilisational attributes – the assimilative traditions in our culture, the adaptability of our people and a boundless creativity that arises from a constant interplay of new ideas.

If SAARC as a region has to recapture its role as a crossroads of culture and commerce, how much more necessary is it for us to remove the barriers to the free flow of goods, of peoples and ideas within our own region. We cannot be the crossroads of Asia, but remain disconnected within our own region. Without the latter, the former is not possible, or at least, will be possible to a very limited extent. Ancient roads crisscross the subcontinent, and the link-up with the seaports that were the gateways to the rest of the world. Our rivers form the waterways over which people and cargo traveled across the region. This historic connectivity within the sub-continent became overlaid in the colonial period with modern railroads and macadam highways; ancient seaports on our coast became a part of the new web of shipping links, the new channels of colonial commerce. Colonialism did produce wealth in our region, though it was not wealth for our people but plunder for the imperial system.

If we wish the next twenty years of SAARC to be different, we should take the first decision to reconnect the countries of the subcontinent on the one hand and then reconnect the subcontinent to the larger Asian neighbourhood on the other. We need to recharge and regenerate the arteries of transport and communication that bind us together and in turn link our region to the rest of Asia to reclaim the prosperity that is undoubtedly our due. In pursuit of this vision, I suggest let us agree, at this Summit, that all South Asian countries would provide to each other, reciprocally, transit facilities to third countries, not only connecting one another, but also connecting to the larger Asian neighbourhood, in the Gulf, Central Asia and in the South-East Asia. India, which borders each of the members of the South Asia, is willing to do so.

In this context, I am happy to announce that India offers to hold a South Asian Car Rally. This would be a run-up to our next Summit. It would symbolise vividly our regional identity and also draw attention to the urgent need to improve our SAARC transport infrastructure.

We should also improve air connectivity amongst ourselves. India is prepared to offer to all SAARC neighbours, on a reciprocal basis and without prejudice to existing rights, the facility of daily air services by designated airlines, to our metropolitan cities Delhi, Mumbai, Chennai, Bangalore, Hyderabad and Kolkata, and as many services as they may wish, to eighteen other destinations all across India. I would also like to offer to the designated airlines of SAARC countries the facility to exercise fifth freedom rights, both intermediate and beyond, within the SAARC region, on a reciprocal basis. We should encourage more air services and for this it may be worthwhile to provide, in our air agreements, multiple destinations of airlines.

More liberal movement of peoples and goods across our borders also requires greater sensitivity on the part of all member countries to pressing concerns. No member country should allow its territory to be used against the interests of another member country. There should be zero tolerance for cross-border terrorism and for the harbouring of hostile insurgent groups and criminal elements. It is only in an environment of mutual confidence and a collective commitment against the scourge of terrorism, that we can register the progress we all desire in more intense interaction.

The people of our subcontinent are at the cutting edge of scientific and technological research and in the front ranks of the knowledge society across the world. Wherever an enabling environment and world class facilities are made available to our talented people, they excel. My suggestion to you is, why cannot we as seven member countries, pool our resources to create a center of excellence, in the form of a South Asian University, which can provide world class facilities and professional faculty to students and researchers from every country of our region? Let this become a forum where our academicians, our scholars, our researchers and gifted students, can work together in the service of human advancement. India is willing to make a major contribution to the realization of this project over the next three to four years. We can certainly host this institution, but are equally prepared to cooperate in creating a suitable venue in any other member country.

I would like to propose for our collective consideration one other collaborative project. Food security is a major challenge for all countries of South Asia. I would recommend that we establish a Regional Food Bank, to which all member countries would contribute, to be used to meet shortages and losses caused by natural calamities in any one of our member countries. There could be a network of storage depots across the region, with member countries contributing shares on the basis of their capacity and availability of surpluses.

Similarly, energy security is increasingly one of the major challenges facing our region, particularly as our individual economies expand. We could therefore consider promoting regional co-operation in strategizing for the future. I propose a South Asian Energy Dialogue, involving experts, academics, environmentalists, officials and NGOs, to recommend measures to tap this vast, latent potential for co-operation.

I would like to mention here some other recommendations that have been put forward by India. A year ago, India offered to contribute US $100 million towards the creation of a Poverty Alleviation Fund on the understanding that this money would be used entirely on projects within SAARC, but outside India. We regret to note that not one project proposal has been received by us in the past year. We welcome the decision to merge the different existing and proposed funds into an Umbrella South Asian Development Fund, with different windows for different purposes.

We have also taken an initiative to develop projects for increasing awareness on HIV/AIDS and Tuberculosis, and developing medical skills and competence in the region for tackling these scourges. Here again, we have not made much progress. I suggest establishing a collaborative healthcare project involving a regional Tele-medicine network. We would be happy to share our expertise in this field, by installing such a facility linking all SAARC countries.

Our association has before it the Report of the Group of Eminent Persons, who set out a road map for the creation of a South Asian Economic Union by the year 2020. I have referred to the fundamental decisions that we need to take in order to advance towards this goal. At the July Ministerial meeting we had recommended the establishment of a SAARC High Economic Council, which could promote initiatives in economic, trade, finance and monetary areas with a view to moving towards precisely such regional economic integration.

South Asia possesses a very rich and living tradition of exquisite handicrafts and textiles. Each member country has its own unique culture and distinctive craft traditions. India would be happy to preserve and foster this valuable legacy by establishing a "SAARC Museum of Textiles and Handicrafts". This Museum could sponsor training of crafts persons, foster design skills, hold promotional events such as fashion-shows and demonstrations by artisans of the region and also undertake research. We could also explore the setting up of retail outlets in each of our capitals to promote our textiles and handicrafts region-wise.

Let me conclude by assuring you of India's unswerving commitment of India to the realization of the solemn goals of our Association, an association to whose formulation your Late husband played such a glorious role. As SAARC, we must resolve to become a part of ongoing transformations now underway in all parts of the world. The challenges we face as a region and as members of the larger international community are no longer susceptible to purely national solutions. There is an imperative need to change and overcome the divisions of history and politics to forge a new architecture of mutually beneficial economic partnership. India, for its part, remains ready for this endeavour.

Dhaka, November 12, 2005.

On behalf of the assembled guests, I thank you Madam Chairperson, for your gracious hospitality. Our Association gathers together in Dhaka for the third time in its twenty year history, and we deeply appreciate the traditional warmth of your welcome. Gaining from the experiences and insights of the past two decades, we stand today at the threshold of a new era of more inclusive and more collaborative interaction within SAARC.

South Asia is characterised by an astonishing diversity. Our region is home not only to one-fourth of humanity, but also to some of the greatest linguistic, cultural, literary and civilisational traditions of the world. None of these developed in isolation. Each country's cultural heritage has nourished and enriched the others. This common intellectual legacy enjoins us to come together to bring peace, prosperity and cooperation to our region.

Madam Chairperson, Your Majesty, Excellencies,

It is true that globalisation has created a wealth of new opportunities. But it has also thrown up unprecedented challenges, which none of us can face alone. It is only by harnessing the immense power of regionalism that we can collectively meet these challenges while simultaneously fully utilizing opportunities to our collective advantage. Let us resolve today to seize the opening that history has presented us to realize the dreams we have nurtured for decades, and to work tirelessly for a new dawn of hope and optimism in our region.

Indeed, growing avenues for people-to-people contact have created an atmosphere of increasing optimism and trust. Our South Asian creative community, which shares cultural and intellectual affinities, has taken the lead in this regard. They have transcended political boundaries, using the power of ideas to bring our peoples together. Only a new vision and a new mindset can create new pathways of cooperation and the hope of a better tomorrow.

Madam Chairperson, Your Majesty, Excellencies,

South Asia is like no other place in the world; its challenges are unique and distinctive. The SAARC process is instrumental in addressing and resolving these distinctively South Asian issues. If we truly believe in a shared destiny, then we must work together to address our common challenges. Terrorism is one such challenge. Although it is a global scourge, it affects our region significantly. Let us recall that as early as 1987, we concluded an agreement for Suppression of Terrorism. The Additional Protocol to the SAARC Convention on Suppression of Terrorism, signed at the 12th Summit, reaffirms our commitment to collectively fight this menace. Today, let us renew our resolve to cooperate at all levels to comprehensively eradicate terrorism from our region.

Madam Chairperson, Your Majesty, Excellencies,

If South Asia is to harness its undoubted latent potential, it must become a dynamic component of the larger Asian resurgence. While regional entities like ASEAN forge ahead, and regional cooperation becomes part of the political and economic landscape all around us, we continue to lag behind. And yet we are uniquely poised, at the center of this dynamic economic region. Therefore we must take full advantage of the opportunities emerging around our region.

Next year, India will have the privilege of hosting the 14th SAARC Summit. We look forward to welcoming you in India soon. We hope to use the intervening period to build upon the achievements of this Summit, and our common commitment to the SAARC process, to realize our many goals. Development of our Asian region is of the highest priority for us. We therefore see SAARC as an equal partnership and the vehicle to achieve progress and prosperity in our region.

Your Majesty, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I conclude by conveying to our host, Her Excellency Begum Khaleda Zia, Prime Minister of the People's Republic of Bangladesh, and to the people of Bangladesh, our sincere gratitude for their overwhelming hospitality. May the outcome of this Summit bring our peoples closer than ever before!

089. Speech by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the concluding session of 13th SAARC Summit.

Dhaka, November 13, 2005.

On behalf of all of us gathered here today, I have the honour to convey our appreciation to the Prime Minister of Bangladesh, Her Excellency Begum Khaleda Zia, for her leadership in chairing this Thirteenth Summit of SAARC, and for her thought provoking concluding Address.

The SAARC process has gained from her vision and statesmanship.

Our sincere thanks are also due to the Government of Bangladesh, to the people of this city, and all others who have taken great pains to ensure the success of this Summit, while making our stay in this historic city memorable.

I would also like to thank my colleagues, the leaders of the SAARC member states, whose shared vision of regional cooperation, and common desire for mutually beneficial progress and prosperity, has brought us together on the SAARC platform. In addition, I would like to acknowledge the contribution of our Ministers and officials, whose untiring efforts have brought us closer to achieving the goals we have set for ourselves in SAARC. And I also wish to thank the outgoing Secretary General of SAARC, Mr. Q.A.M.A Rahim for all his contributions.

We welcome his able successor, Mr. Chenkyab Dorji, whose work during this Summit has been praise-worthy. The Secretary General and his team in the Secretariat are truly the backbone of SAARC.

Your Majesty, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I believe that we can look back on the past few days with a sense of satisfaction at our achievements. I think it will be fair to say that this Summit will be remembered for several substantive outcomes that have emerged in Dhaka.

We are delighted to welcome Afghanistan to our group. This is an appropriate recognition of the long-standing ties of culture and history that Afghanistan shares with us. We have also noted the interest of the People's Republic of China and Japan to become Observers in SAARC. We are happy to note that the SAARC Council of Ministers will finalize the guidelines and modalities for such status at the earliest.

In terms of the agenda that we have set ourselves, we have also recorded satisfactory progress at this Summit.

We have signed three Agreements a short while ago, covering avoidance of Double Taxation, on Customs, and on the establishment of a SAARC Arbitration Council. We have also agreed to a liberalization of the visa regime, so as to facilitate freer travel among all our people, including our media persons. On the other hand, I would like to underline that we must expedite the process of resolving the few outstanding issues that separate us from final agreement on SAFTA. It must be our collective effort to ensure that this Agreement enters into force on January 1, 2006.

Your Majesty, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

The Declaration we have adopted is a forward-looking document that will add new vigour to the SAARC process. A number of very substantive proposals are included in this document. These include some that the Government of India has been pleased to offer, with the aim of bringing about greater interaction between our people, and greater integration of our region. These include our offer, on a reciprocal basis, to greatly expand airline connectivity within our region. We have planned several measures to develop our most valuable asset, our human resources. These include establishing a South Asian University, by integrating elements in our Social Charter, and creating a collaborative healthcare project involving a regional telemedicine network. We hope these and other similar measures will enable us to take one further step in the eventual abolition of the age old scourges of poverty and ignorance. We have also agreed to find new ways of cooperating in exploiting the opportunities of the future, ranging from information and communication technology to evolving a collective energy strategy.

It is my firm belief that through our collective efforts, our region can, and will, overcome the multiple challenges of poverty, ignorance and disease that constrain our peoples. India has the privilege of hosting the Fourteenth SAARC Summit. It will be our sincere endeavour to work with you all to carry forward the SAARC agenda and build on all that we have achieved in Dhaka. We look forward to welcoming you all to India.

090. Dhaka Declaration issued at the 13th SAARC Summit.Dhaka, November 13, 2005.

Regional cooperation

2. The Heads of State or Government noted that the Thirteenth Summit was taking place at an important moment in the evolution of South Asia when SAARC stood at the threshold of a new decade of its existence. They agreed that the Summit provided a unique opportunity to consolidate the gains made in regional cooperation during its first two decades and to chart a forward-looking strategy to promote effective cooperation at all levels to realize the objectives and principles set out in the Charter of the Association.

3. The Heads of State or Government noted that cooperation and partnership within the framework of SAARC is based on the sound foundation of shared values, beliefs and aspirations. The objectives and goals of SAARC, they affirmed, were of continuing relevance and importance to all Member States. The dynamics of recent political and economic changes in South Asia and the world highlighted the importance of, and the compelling logic for, a more vibrant and effective process of constructive regional cooperation. They emphasized their commitment to making such cooperation an enduring feature and thus contribute to the region's peace, progress and stability.

4. The Heads of State or Government noted that SAARC has evolved in a positive direction during the first two decades of its existence and that its agenda encompassed concerns and areas vital for the fulfillment of the Charter objectives of promoting the welfare of the peoples of South Asia, accelerating economic growth, social progress, cultural development and strengthening collective self-reliance among the countries of South Asia. They stressed that realization of these objectives not only called for continued and serious result-oriented efforts but also for consistent endeavours to translate pledges and commitments into concrete actions, regional initiatives and projects. They reiterated their commitment to making SAARC an effective instrument for cooperation, which will visibly improve the quality of life of millions in South Asia.

5. The Heads of State or Government emphasized that efforts must continue to free South Asia from poverty, hunger and other forms of deprivation and social injustice which present a daunting challenge. Member States expressed determination to work towards significantly accelerating regional cooperation in economic areas. The main emphasis will be to secure a wider economic space, so that benefits and opportunities offered therein can be shared by all, and that the true economic potential of South Asia can be fully realized. Efforts will be made to create dynamic complementarities in the development of human resources and capacity of Member States to address their common challenges. They underlined the need to accelerate regional cooperation through all possible means and mechanisms, including exchange of best practices in various fields in the Member States.

6. The Heads of State or Government reiterated that the peoples of South Asia are the real source of strength and driving force for SAARC and resolved to make regional cooperation more responsive to their hopes and aspirations. They agreed that the Association should broaden its engagement with the civil society organizations, professional groups, and entrepreneurs. Member States should also strive to promote and assert their South Asian identity, encourage greater people-to-people contact and draw strength from their shared cultural heritage.

7. The Heads of State or Government emphasized the importance of initiating project cooperation under the SAARC auspices. They encouraged Member States to undertake projects, as per existing provisions of the Charter. These projects may pertain to economic and social sectors, including Human Resource Development and Poverty Alleviation. These may be undertaken, where required, with financial or technical assistance, from International Financial Institutions (IFIs) or, UN Funds and Programmes or, any extra-regional State, as appropriate.

Poverty Alleviation

8. The Heads of State or Government decided to declare the decade of 2006-2015 as the SAARC Decade of Poverty Alleviation. During the Decade, endeavours - both at the national and regional level - will continue to be made with a sense of commitment and urgency to free South Asia from poverty.

9. The Heads of State or Government appreciated the valuable work of the Independent South Asian Commission on Poverty Alleviation (ISACPA). They also endorsed the SAARC Development Goals (SDGs), as recommended by the Commission, and called for follow-up and implementation of the Plan of Action on Poverty Alleviation, adopted by the 12th SAARC Summit. They entrusted the ISACPA to continue its advisory and advocacy role in this regard. They endorsed the priorities for action identified in the Report of ISACPA adopted by the Twelfth SAARC Summit. They agreed that these priorities would be duly taken into account while working out the elements for regional initiatives in this vital area. They decided to focus on formulation and implementation of concrete regional programmes and projects as well as forging partnerships among all stakeholders.

10. Underlining the need for an exclusive forum for focused and comprehensive examination of poverty related issues, the Heads of State / Government decided to replace the three-tier mechanism on poverty alleviation by a two-tier one, comprising the Ministers and the Secretaries dealing with Poverty Alleviation at the national level.

Funding Mechanisms

11. The Heads of State or Government decided to establish a SAARC Poverty Alleviation Fund (SPAF) with contributions both voluntary and/or, assessed, as may be agreed. They called upon the Finance Ministers to formulate recommendations on the operational modalities of the Fund, taking into consideration the outcome of the Meeting of the Financial Experts. In this regard, they welcomed the offer of Pakistan to host the next meeting of the Finance Ministers. The operational modalities of the SPAF shall be decided by the Finance/ Planning Ministers. They agreed that the SPAF shall function within the SADF to be reconstituted, as SAARC Development Fund (SDF), to serve as the umbrella financial institution for all SAARC projects and programmes and comprise three Windows namely Social Window, Infrastructure Window and Economic Window with a Permanent Secretariat.

12. The Heads of State or Government decided that Finance Ministers should meet within the first quarter after every Summit and also on the sidelines of the World Bank and ADB annual meetings, to take stock of macro-economic developments and outlook for South Asia, achievement of SAARC Development Goals as co-related to Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and to assess the investment climate, foreign capital inflows, financial sector reforms and other areas of cooperation.

Advancing Economic Cooperation

13. The Heads of State or Government stressed that accelerating cooperation in the core economic areas was of vital importance for the realization of Charter objectives and also for making South Asia truly vibrant, dynamic and secure in its robust progress. They reaffirmed their commitment to accelerate cooperation in the economic and commercial fields, especially in the energy sector. They noted the progress in the negotiations on outstanding issues and directed early finalization of all the Annexes ensuring entry into force of the SAFTA Agreement as agreed, with effect from 1 January 2006.

14. The Heads of State or Government stressed the importance of the entry into force of the SAFTA Agreement on the scheduled date i.e. 1 January 2006. The launching of SAFTA would mark an important milestone on the road to a South Asian Economic Union. They directed that the negotiations on the outstanding issues under the Agreement should be completed by end November 2005. They further directed that the necessary national procedures should be completed in time to facilitate the operationalisation of the Agreement.

15. They reiterated the need to strengthen transportation and communication links across the region for accelerated and balanced economic growth. They directed further measures aimed at trade liberalisation, as provided for in the SAFTA Agreement. They noted with satisfaction the ongoing SAARC Regional Multimodal Transport Study to enhance transport connectivity among the Member States. The Heads of State or Government agreed to undertake trade facilitation measures, including transit among SAARC countries, on the basis of understanding among concerned countries, for enhancing intra-regional trade and other economic activities. They noted the Indian proposal in this regard. They committed themselves to give concrete expression to protect the interest and security of all small states through the pursuit of appropriate policies and actions.

People-to-people contact and cultural cooperation

42. The Heads of State or Government noted that the spirit of SAARC needed to be sustained by efforts to promote people-to-people contact and by a vibrant civil society throughout South Asia actively engaged in forging links across national boundaries. They felt that the Association of SAARC Speakers and Parliamentarians should meet at an early date to establish a mechanism for periodic contacts among the Parliamentarians of South Asia. They stressed that continued efforts would be made by the Member States at all levels to promote people-to-people contact by facilitating travel among SAARC countries, promotion of youth exchanges in culture and sports, promotion of intra-SAARC tourism, establishment of linkages among professional bodies and through adoption of other concrete measures. They called upon the international community to redouble efforts to meet the commitments of the Millennium Summit and the Monterrey consensus. They noted the outcome of the UN World Summit 2005 and underlined the need for meaningful reforms of the United Nations system in consonance with its role as the central organ for the cooperative management of the global problems and for the promotion of peace, security, development, justice and human rights. They also reiterated their full support for a comprehensive approach, which would facilitate implementation of the Millennium Declaration and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in a time bound manner.

45. The Heads of State or Government stressed that promotion of global peace and security inter alia called for removing the existing asymmetries in security and in ensuring undiminished security for all, at the regional and global levels. They also emphasized the importance of pursuing effectively the global objectives of universal disarmament and preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

46. The Heads of State or Government reaffirmed their commitment to further strengthen the multilateral trade regime of WTO. They called upon all WTO members to demonstrate necessary understanding and accommodation for a breakthrough at the Hong Kong Ministerial meeting in December 2005 to pave the way for the successful conclusion of the Doha Development Round. They underscored that the development dimension should continue to be at the heart of the on-going negotiations so that the legitimate concerns of the developing countries are adequately reflected in the outcome of the current round of trade negotiations. They agreed that the SAARC Member States would work closely together to coordinate their positions in the on-going negotiations on trade and other key economic issues. The Heads of State or Government directed the Commerce Ministers to hold consultations on the sidelines of the 6th WTO Ministerial Conference to be held in Hong Kong in December 2005, to evolve a common SAARC Position on issues of common concern.

47.. The Heads of State or Government addressed the question of electing the Secretary-General of the United Nations in the year 2006, being aware of the unanimous view that the well-established principle of geographical rotation should be observed and that an Asian should be appointed as the next Secretary-General of the United Nations. In this regard, they noted that Sri Lanka has offered a candidate.

They reiterated their commitment to the principles of sovereign equality, territorial integrity and national independence, non-use of force, non-intervention, and non-interference in the internal affairs of other Member States. Recognizing the increasing interdependence and the imperative of pursuing the objectives of peace, freedom, social justice and economic prosperity, they re-affirmed their resolve to foster mutual understanding, good neighbourly relations and a more meaningful cooperation through sustained constructive engagement among Member States.

External Profile and Linkages of SAARC

49. The Heads of State or Government welcomed the observer status granted to SAARC by the United Nations General Assembly at its Fifty-ninth Session; and expressed the hope that this would not only enhance the profile of SAARC in the world body but would also enable Member States to project common positions of SAARC in various multilateral forums. They also acknowledged the renewed interest of other regional and international organizations, bodies and entities to cooperate with SAARC in various collaborative endeavours in accordance with the objectives and priorities of SAARC. The Heads of State or Government welcomed the request by the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan for membership and invited Afghanistan as a member, subject to the completion of formalities. The Council of Ministers will decide the modalities in this regard at their twenty-seventh meeting in July 2006.

Strengthening Institutional Mechanisms of SAARC

50. The Heads of State or Government agreed that with the incremental broadening of the SAARC agenda and increased emphasis being placed on implementation of plans and programmes, there was a need for a commensurate strengthening of institutional capabilities of SAARC. Recognizing the importance of thematic Ministerial meetings, they emphasized that these meetings should focus on regional challenges and priorities and contribute to the realization of the objectives of SAARC. They agreed that on completion of twenty years of SAARC's existence, it was essential that a comprehensive review and reform of all SAARC institutions and mechanisms, including the Secretariat and the Regional Centers should be undertaken. In this context, they called on the Council of Ministers to convene a Meeting of Experts, to be nominated by each Member State, to undertake a detailed Study and present a report to the next Council of Ministers. They empowered the current Chairman of the Council of Ministers to prepare within the next fifteen days a draft Terms of Reference for the Study to be approved, if necessary, by tele-conferencing of all SAARC Foreign Ministers.

They agreed that as SAARC completed its twenty years of its existence, it was an opportune occasion to draw a roadmap for regional cooperation in South Asia for the next decade. In view of the new challenges facing the region, pledges and commitments made in the last two decades should be translated into concrete actions in the form of regional projects and programmes and innovative initiatives.

52. They directed all SAARC institutions and mechanisms to work collectively towards a decade dedicated to implementation so that a visible and discernible impact can be felt across South Asia. They emphasized that while this would enable SAARC to realize its basic objectives of improving the quality of life of all South Asian peoples, it would at the same time create an enabling environment towards the establishment of a South Asian Economic Union. They directed the Standing Committee to formulate its recommendations, at its next Special Session, on a Vision for SAARC's Third Decade and the course of action for its realization, to be elaborated by a high-level Committee of Senior Officials.

Date and venue of the Fourteenth SAARC Summit

53. The Heads of State or Government welcomed the offer of the Government of India to host the Fourteenth SAARC Summit in 2007.

091. Press conference by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at SAARC Summit.

Dhaka, November 13, 2005.

Prime Minister : I have come here soon after the conclusion of the Retreat. This afternoon we have had intensive discussions on issues in our Retreat which will have a bearing on the future of SAARC.

This has been a very productive Summit in terms of the number of proposals that have been put forward. To my mind, this is reflective of at least two features - that there is a shared belief among the SAARC members that SAARC can and should do more. We all feel there is scope for more concrete action in regional cooperation, and its corollary, that not enough has been done. The other salient feature is that that all SAARC member countries are positive about the potential for cooperation, and continue to hope that this will be realized. Speaking for India, we certainly are enthusiastic about SAARC. We have seen how regional cooperation has been an effective force elsewhere and are committed to doing whatever is possible to give impetus to this process in South Asia.

We have made a series of proposals here in Dhaka; some concrete proposals have been agreed. We are glad that SAARC members accepted our proposal to establish a SAARC Centre for Disaster Management and Preparedness in New Delhi. This will draw and build upon capacities that we have created in our National Institute for Disaster Management, which has developed quickly into an effective centre of specialized and practical know-how in this field. As has been unfortunately evident this last year, this is a subject that we cannot neglect.

Discussions on outstanding issues related to SAFTA continue to be under discussion. There will be further negotiations at the level of experts in late November. The intention is for SAFTA to come into effect on the target date of 1st January, 2006.

We have also proposed to our SAARC neighbours an open skies arrangement which will enable a substantial increase in intra-SAARC flights. We hope this will be discussed and agreed in the months to come. The SAARC Car Rally we have proposed, when it happens will surely catalyze a concerted effort to improve road connectivity in SAARC. There are other proposals we have put forth such as a South Asian Energy Dialogue and the case for SAARC Multi-modal connectivity which we feel are compelling and attractive. The concrete modalities for these are still to be developed but they are crucial to our vision of a seamless and strong SAARC and South Asia.

We hope that by the next SAARC Summit which we will host, there will be measurable progress on these and other proposals.

As in customary, I also used the opportunity of the presence here of the leaders of SAARC countries to hold bilateral meetings. You have been briefed about these meetings already. Let me say that we went over all the important issues on the bilateral agenda with our neighbours. It is not always possible to visit individual countries, so an occasion like this is helpful to give momentum to the process of energizing the substantive neighbourly ties that we desire.

I will now take your questions.

Question : Will the SAFTA become operational by January 1, 2006?

Prime Minister : That is what our emphasis is. In my concluding statement I said that every effort must be made to ensure that SAFTA becomes operational from 1st January 2006.

Question (Jyoti Malhotra, Star News) : The Prime Minister of Pakistan has said that there is a trust deficit between India and Pakistan. There is another question. Before you left for Dhaka in Delhi you spoke about failed States in the SAARC region. What States were you referring to and why did you make that comment?

Prime Minister : There is obviously, I think, truth in what the Pakistan Prime Minister has said. There has been a trust deficit. It is our obligation to convert that deficit into a surplus. You all know the January 2004 statement issued after the SAARC Summit in which Pakistan had given this assurance that Pakistan territory will not be used to promote or further terrorism directed against India. There has been some reduction but it is unfortunately our feeling that all that needs to be done has not been done. We have, of course, assurances that the future will be different from the past and we eagerly wait for that outcome. As regards the failed State, I was not referring to any specific State. I was drawing attention to the fact that security challenges in our neighbourhood are becoming more serious and complex and need to be addressed effectively. There are dangers to States, arising out of terrorism, insurgency, economic hardship and ethnic and religious conflicts. We need to work collectively with our neighbours to confront and overcome these threats to our common security.

Question (Abhisar Sharma, NDTV) : Prime Minister, there is a lot of emphasis in your speech on connectivity and it also talked about reciprocity. What do you think could be the biggest hitch in actually taking this forward?

Prime Minister : We all know when we talk of great integration, the transport costs, transaction costs, can become a problem to closer trade integration. So, it is quite obvious that in this region we have to ensure that means of transport and communication do not become a bottleneck to expanding mutually beneficial economic cooperation. We want trade expansion to become a win-win game. Therefore, easier transit rights, access to each other's transportation and communication systems can facilitate that process and that is what I was referring to.

Question (Seema Mustafa, Asian Age) : Last time when you met the Nepal King in Jakarta, he had promised that he will take steps to restore democracy. And this time apparently he has said the same, almost the same, again. Do you feel he is more sincere this time; and do you feel that now Nepal will be moving towards a level of ...

Prime Minister : I was given that assurance that a carefully worked out roadmap will be prepared to usher in the democratic process. That includes the multiparty system which His Majesty recognizes is the core of any democracy.

Question (Amit Baruah, The Hindu) : Prime Minister, my question relates to Iran and the fact that the Iran issue may go before the International Atomic Energy Agency. When India voted on September 24th, your Government said that you had voted to prevent this issue from going before the United Nations Security Council. If it comes to a vote, there are negotiations going on, how will your Government vote?

Prime Minister : It depends upon what are the issues which are being voted upon. Our hope is that efforts can be made and should be made to evolve a broad based consensus so that there is no need for a vote. But, if it comes to a vote I cannot predict what we will do. It depends upon what are the issues which are the subject matter of voting or no voting.

Question (Amit Baruah, The Hindu : Prime Minister, if I may ask you another question on the Indo-US nuclear deal. On the 29th of July you told Parliament that India would work towards lifting all curbs against it before we separate our civil and nuclear military facilities. We have seen statements from the United States that they expect India to separate the civil and military nuclear facilities first before these curbs can be lifted. Can you tell us the status of that thing?

Prime Minister : I stand by what I said in Parliament. People do make statements directed at specific audiences. We should not get too worked up. Whatever I stated, whatever I assured in our Parliament, that is our position.

Question (Sengupta, India Abroad and Rediff.Com) : I was wondering about Afghanistan. Should we look forward to Afghanistan joining SAARC at the next Summit?

Prime Minister : Yes, we have agreed to admit Afghanistan as a new member of SAARC. We have also welcomed the interest shown by China and Japan to get an Observer's status. This matter will be sorted out in the next few months. So, obviously SAARC is generating influence outside our region with the fact that Japan as well as China have shown interest. Afghanistan, of course, is very much a part of our region. The close cultural, civilisational ties that the countries of South Asia have with Afghanistan make it an eminently suitable candidate for membership and we have endorsed that today.

Question (Bharat Bhushan The Telegraph) : Sir, why have you decided not to go to Malta for CHOGM? Is it for domestic or international reasons?

Prime Minister : Parliament is meeting and I cannot be away while several important issues will be debated in Parliament. I thought the attention to those tasks is far more important than going to this Commonwealth Summit.

Question (Seema Guha, Daily News and Analysis) : We are having quite a lot of problems with Bangladesh. Now your meeting with the Prime Minister, has it led to anything, lessening of tension, more understanding? What do you expect?

Prime Minister : I have always stated that a strong, prosperous Bangladesh is in India's interest. If there are any misgivings about our intention, I on behalf of the Government of India have always been willing to discuss this and remove those misgivings. I do believe that our two countries have a great deal in common. We can work out joint strategies to collectively get rid of chronic poverty that afflicts millions and millions of our people. I believe my visit here certainly has helped to improve the atmosphere. I did go over various issues with Begum Khaleda Zia and her response was constructive. I very much hope that the Prime Minister can visit us in Delhi. I invited her and she said she would be glad to come. There are no insurmountable issues between us. India will do nothing to hurt the interest of Bangladesh. By helping Bangladesh we help ourselves. That is the motivation which guides me and my Government.

Question : ...Inaudible...

Prime Minister : We have raised all those issues and recently the Home Secretaries of the two countries met where there was extensive discussion on this subject. I think some positive steps forward have been indicated.

Question (Mahua, Tara TV) : How do you describe this Dhaka Summit different from other summits like the one at Islamabad? What are the three points, other than the assurance, on which you really made progress in this round?

Prime Minister : I was not ... (inaudible) ... Islamabad Summit. So, I really cannot compare one with the other. But I would consider that this Summit discussed the essential issues which hampered the process of closer regional cooperation and integration. I mentioned, for example, the issue of connectivity, transit rights, working to ensure that transportation system in the region works effectively to promote linkages ensuring that the vast human resource endowments of the region are exploited collectively to promote our common well being. I think in all these matters I found a complete unanimity of interests. Apart from that, the admission of Afghanistan as a new member, the likelihood or the possibility that Japan and China would also be given some sort of Observer's status or dialogue partners, that shows the growing importance of the SAARC process in this region.

Question (Jyoti Malhotra, Star News) : Just a follow up to my earlier 'trust deficit' question between India and Pakistan. Do you believe that there is a Pakistani hand in the Delhi bomb blast and did you take this up with the Prime Minister?

Prime Minister : The inquiries are under way. There are several clues, some indications about external linkages of this terrorist group. But I would not like to say more than that until I have a firm grasp of really who were these groups which were responsible. But available clues do suggest the external linkages of the groups that may have been involved. I would not like to go beyond that.

Question : On the Pakistani establishment, do you think Musharraf himself, I mean is it the State, that is involved or are these rogue elements which were involved?

Prime Minister : I think I have said more than once that we can choose our friends but we cannot choose our neighbours. We have to do business with Governments which are in power in our neighbourhood. Therefore, using harsh language in public is not the best way to promote dialogue and understanding. If we have any concerns, we do discuss with the Governments concerned. Therefore, I do not believe that anything great is achieved by conducting this dialogue in full glare of public gaze.

095. Inaugural address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at SAARC Business Leaders' Conclave.

New Delhi, November 17, 2005.

It is a pleasure to participate in the first SAARC Business Leaders Conclave. I welcome delegates from our neighbouring countries to this meeting. I trust this conclave will evolve concrete ideas for regional cooperation. For it is a fact that today, while the responsibility for expanding relations between nations is the primary task of Governments, people-to-people and business-to-business relations are also important elements in the overall architecture of interaction. I therefore commend this effort of the SAARC Chamber of Commerce and Industry, and their partners in the national chambers of commerce and industry of our region.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

An important part of the SAARC process has been the effort to build interlinkages between our nations at all levels. Typically such efforts have built on the outcomes of Summit meetings. Therefore, I think it is essential for industry and business to quickly utilize the opportunities emerging from this milestone Summit meeting.

I say that the Dhaka meeting was a milestone because it showed the continuing relevance of our group. This was underlined not only by the growing regional interest in it but also by the range of measures upon which we agreed at Dhaka. The decision to invite Afghanistan to join us, and the other new initiatives proposed at the Summit, will inject new dynamism into SAARC. At this twentieth anniversary of our group, India believes that it is an appropriate time for a strategic 'Partnership for Prosperity', which will meet the hopes and aspirations of the people of our ancient lands.

Apart from three important agreements concluded at Dhaka to solidify the framework for regional economic cooperation and trade, a number of new proposals were put forward. Most of these aimed at identifying areas of individual strength, to share competencies with each other. This is in keeping with the spirit of effective regional cooperation. For instance, keeping in view the magnitude of natural disasters that have affected our region in the past year through natural disasters, we have agreed to set up a disaster management centre in India. We also offered to set up a South Asian University, a Food Bank, a satellite based telemedicine link, and a museum of traditional handicrafts and textiles.

We have also been looking at other measures to increase intra-regional investment. Our businessmen must give priority to private sector cooperation in areas such as power generation; research and development in science and technology; and services like healthcare, education, IT and insurance. We must strive collectively, in a cooperative spirit, to remove the barriers to the free flow of goods, peoples and ideas within our own region.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

In this context, India strongly emphasizes the need to improve connectivity within our region, and between our region collectively and the nations beyond. This is the key to unlocking the potential of our people and our lands. Such connectivity is based on the inescapable logic of history and geography: we cannot undo what nature has made for us. We need to regenerate and revitalize traditional arteries of transport and communication in our region, as well as create new linkages.

In taking South Asia to the next level of intra-regional connectivity, considerable investment will be required to build the necessary infrastructure. As a first step, India has, on a reciprocal basis, announced measures to move towards an 'Open Skies' regime in our region. We are working for greater liberalization of visa regimes to benefit all areas of cooperative interaction. I am happy that we have decided to increase the number of SAARC visas issued to leading businessmen of our member states. We have also urged our partners in SAARC to reciprocally provide to each other transit facilities to third countries. These will not only link our nations, but more importantly, it will connect our region to the ongoing economic miracle in South East and East Asia. We will also link ourselves to the vast energy markets of West Asia and Central Asia. We can no longer afford the cost of seeing our region in isolation from the broader Asian context.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

We are standing today at the threshold of a new dawn in the history of SAARC. Member states realize the imperative of rejuvenating our group and infusing in it a new sense of hope and optimism. At the same time, we also need to learn from our shortcomings that have been apparent over the past two decades. One of these has been a failure to implement projects announced. We must move from the realm of ideas to the sphere of concrete action. We must focus on more concrete, collaborative and implementable projects. Some groundwork has already been done. Interactions of the various technical committees and working groups under SAARC have produced a wealth of region-wise data. This invaluable data-base can help in establishing collaborative projects.

Yet despite some successes on other fronts, SAARC has not succeeded in exploiting the immense economic potential of our region. Even after two decades, intra-SAARC exports are a mere 5% of the total exports of the region. By comparison, intra-EU exports are 55.2%; intra-NAFTA exports are 51.7% and intra-ASEAN exports are 20.4%. Hence, the need for implementing SAFTA cannot be overemphasized. It is expected that with the free flow of trade in the region, the current level of intra regional trade will rise from 6 billion to 14 billion dollars annually within two years of SAFTA's existence.

All SAARC member states are committed to an early resolution of the outstanding issues under SAFTA. We are hopeful that the ongoing negotiations will ensure that it is operationalized from the first of January next year. We now need to expand the ambit of SAFTA, to include trade in services, in addition to widening the scope of trade in goods. Only then will SAFTA emerge as an effective vehicle for growth and regional integration. We hope that the Free Trade Agreement will help us to move forward, towards the eventual goal of a South Asian Economic Union. I do believe that just as regional integration is not antithetical to globalization, it also does not hurt the broader interests of any member of a regional group.

I understand the sense of doubt and misgivings among many corporate entities in each of our countries. Change requires adaptation, and movement from the status quo. However, such concerns are not rooted in reality. For one, the fact that misgivings are generally spread out among businessmen in the entire region suggests that both positive and negative impact will be well distributed. Just as manufacturers in one country fear the lowering of barriers in one sector, there will be benefits to be derived in other sectors.

Furthermore, empirical evidence and experience within our own region points to the overall benefit derived by both sides in Free Trade Agreements. For instance, the India-Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement has been a huge success for both countries. Sri Lanka's exports to India have grown by well over 100%, as have our exports to Sri Lanka. This has dispelled fears on both sides that free trade would hurt businesses in smaller countries. This FTA is a win-win agreement for both countries, and could be a model for similar agreements in the region. I therefore believe we must move rapidly to meet the deadline for SAFTA, and follow this up proactively with measures to widen and deepen coverage of the FTA.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Business and trade flourish in an environment of security. Therefore, it is imperative to unitedly fight the spectre of terrorism that haunts our region. Terrorism, by whatever name, has no place in civilized societies. The basic goal of terrorism is to cause insecurity. We all know that in any interconnected region, and in our globalized world, the consequences of both poverty and insecurity are indivisible. No country in this region can be secure when others are insecure. No country can insulate itself from the consequences of poverty, disease and terrorism in any other country. Our lives are inter-linked, and so are our prosperity and our security.

This is something that business leaders understand very well. We have often seen how heightened tension and insecurity in one part of South Asia impacts upon the business environment elsewhere. No one can assume that when a neighbour is hurt by terrorism one can somehow remain insulated from the consequences. Every country in this region wants to attract more foreign investment from outside the region. We then have a collective stake in ensuring peace and security here because no investor will come to this region if there is no assurance of peace and security. To imagine that any one of us can pursue what economists call "beggar-thy-neighbour" policies and thereby prosper is to delude oneself.

For these reasons, our business community has a vital stake in regional security and in victory in the war against terror. It is only in peace and in stability that we can build the foundation necessary for social development and economic growth in the region. We must join hands to put our collective house in order. Peace in the region will benefit all. Terrorism anywhere will hurt us all.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

For centuries, the people of South Asia have engaged in commerce with each other and with the world. We must build on our ancient civilizational and commercial linkages by renewing and nurturing the economic, social and cultural ties that bind our region together. As envisioned at the thirteenth SAARC Summit, it is on the basis of renewed people-to-people ties that we will forge stronger links, to help us strengthen the basis for our region-wide partnership for prosperity. I wish your deliberations every success.

096. Statement by Minister of State E. Ahamed in the Lok Sabha on the 13th SAARC Summit held in Dhaka.

New Delhi, November 30, 2005.

The Thirteenth SAARC Summit took place in Dhaka from November 12-13, 2005. India participated actively in both the preparations for the Summit as well as in its deliberations at Dhaka. The major achievements of the Summit are in consonance with India's objectives and provide new opportunities to further the process of regional economic integration in South Asia.

Members are aware that India has long argued that if South Asia is to become a dynamic component of the larger process of regional cooperation and globalization that is taking place in the world, it must first bring about economic integration amongst the member countries, as an essential pre-requisite. Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh put forward a bold new vision of a SAARC, which is interconnected, where political divisions do not stand in the way of the free movement of peoples, goods and services and ideas, across our region. In this context, he offered, on a reciprocal basis, transit facilities to all countries of the region and also greater air connectivity through a virtual open skies arrangement. India took the lead in drafting a strong political message that there should be no delay in the operationalisation of the SAFTA (South Asia Free Trade Area) Agreement.

Members would also be aware that India had taken a strong initiative to ensure the entry of Afghanistan as a new member of SAARC. The consensus decision taken by the SAARC Heads of State and Government to welcome Afghanistan as SAARC's eighth member is a major success for Indian diplomacy. With Afghanistan's entry, SAARC has acquired a more complete regional identity, and a country with which India has traditionally close and friendly relations is now a part of SAARC.

The Summit noted the renewed interest of other regional and international organizations, bodies and entities to cooperate with SAARC in fields of mutual interest. India has welcomed the interest shown by China as well as Japan to be associated with SAARC as Observers. We would welcome similar association with other interested countries as well. It has been agreed that the Council of Ministers will decide the modalities in this regard in their 27th meeting to be held in July 2006.

Members would be happy to know that India's offer for hosting the SAARC Centre for Disaster Management and Preparedness has been welcomed and accepted by the Summit. This is an important development, considering the extensive loss of life and property due to natural disasters such as the Tsunami and earthquakes, which have affected our region during the past one year. There was a clear recognition that we need a permanent regional response mechanism dedicated to disaster preparedness, emergency relief and rehabilitation. India's record and demonstrated capabilities in this regard helped in ensuring the success of our proposal to host the Centre in India. This Centre will be closely associated with the National Institute for Disaster Management in Delhi.

The proposal made by India for the setting up of a South Asia University that would bring together scholars, scientists and students from all over South Asia in a centre of excellence was welcomed enthusiastically. We will be preparing a Concept Paper in this regard for further consideration by the SAARC Heads of State and Government.

The Summit has also noted with appreciation some other important proposals made by India, such as the setting up of a Regional Food Bank, a Regional Tele-medicine Network, and the holding of a SAARC Car Rally in the run up to the 14th SAARC Summit, which will be held in India in the first quarter of 2007. We intend to develop these ideas further in close consultation with our SAARC partners.

A major theme at the Summit was cooperation in counter terrorism. It will be noted that there is a very strong condemnation of terrorism in the Summit Declaration and renewed commitment to eliminate this scourge, both from the region as well as from the world. For the first time, there is also a clear reference to avoid double standards in tackling this collective challenge. I would rate this also as a major achievement of the Summit, which is entirely in line with India's own foreign policy objectives.

The Summit was also notable for the signing of three very important trade facilitation agreements. This include:

- The Agreement on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Customs Matters;

- The Agreement on the Establishment of SAARC Arbitration Council;
- The Limited Agreement on Avoidance of Double Taxation and Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters.

With the implementation of these Agreements, regional economic cooperation within SAARC will receive a major boost.

Hon. Speaker, Sir, there are also a number of other decisions taken at the SAARC Summit and these may be seen in the Summit Declaration which is being placed on the Table of the House¹.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, Sir, the Thirteenth Summit was a landmark event which took place as SAARC enters the third decade of its existence. There was a strong sentiment amongst member countries that the time had come for us to move from a phase of declaratory and consultative processes to more practical and collaborative processes. India is a very strong advocate of collaboration in regional projects, particularly in areas such as infrastructure, poverty alleviation and dealing with cross border challenges such as natural disasters, pandemics like HIV AIDS and Avian Flu and terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. I would like to assure members that in the months ahead, it would be our endeavour not only to implement some of the important decisions, which have been taken at the Summit but to also promote practical, result-oriented collaborative projects amongst member countries. We want to ensure that when India hosts the next SAARC Summit in the first quarter of 2007, the stage would have been set for a significant upgradation in regional cooperation within SAARC and the first steps would have been taken towards establishing a truly free trade area in South Asia.

097. Question in the Rajya Sabha: “Admission of China and Japan in SAARC”.

New Delhi, December 8, 2005.

Will the Minister of External Affairs be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether the 13th meet of the Head of States of SAARC countries, held in Dhaka during second week of November 2005, decided in favour of admitting Afghanistan as member;
- (b) if so, the details of the resolution adopted in this regard, including the brief background of its origin;
- (c) whether the summit also dwelt upon a proposal of admitting China and Japan in SAARC;
- (d) the nature and status of the said proposal, including broad views of the countries favouring/opposing the proposal; and
- (e) the details of the genesis of the proposals of inviting China and Japan as Observer members of SAARC?

The Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs (Shri E. Ahamed):

(a) to (e): The decisions in the SAARC Summit are taken by consensus. The recent SAARC Summit in Dhaka welcomed the request of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan for membership and invited Afghanistan to join as a Member, subject to completion of formalities. The Summit also agreed, in principle, that the People's Republic of China and Japan may be associated as Observers. The Summit further decided that the modalities regarding Observer status will be decided at the twenty-seventh meeting of the SAARC Council of Ministers in July, 2006.

Shri S.S. Ahluwalia: Mr. Chairman, Sir, the Minister, in his reply, has said that the membership is given to Afghanistan to join as a member of SAARC subject to completion of certain formalities. I would like to know from the hon. Minister what are those formalities and whether any timeframe is fixed for completion of those formalities.

Shri E. Ahamed: Sir, any state or any country, joining SAARC, will have to declare that they will adhere to all the principles and the Charter of the SAARC. The Secretariat of SAARC will get in touch with them, and, as soon as possible, it will be completed. They will have to join as 8th Member when next SAARC Summit will be held. It is going to be held in India.

Shri S.S. Ahluwalia: Sir, in the Charter of the SAARC, there are plenty of formalities which are to be fulfilled. So, at the time of consideration for taking them as a Member, how many formalities were fulfilled and how many are yet to be fulfilled? I would also like to know whether, India, who is a partner in rebuilding Afghanistan, is assisting Afghanistan to complete these formalities and become a permanent Member of the SAARC?

Shri E. Ahamed : Sir, India has taken a decision to welcome Afghanistan to the SAARC community and it has expressed its wish and the decision in the SAARC Summit. India has been helping Afghanistan in all the ways possible. There are two questions, one is about the SAARC and the other is about Afghanistan-India relationship. As far as Afghanistan's entry into SAARC is concerned, India has welcomed it. Our hon. Prime Minister has already welcomed Afghanistan as soon as the decision was taken. And he said that it was an appropriate recognition for Afghanistan as a regional partner. With regard to the assistance given to Afghanistan, there is a bilateral decision, and it has already been mentioned in this House many times. India has pledged to assist Afghanistan to the tune of more than 515 million dollars; many of the projects are going on; and for all the ongoing projects, India is committed that it will continue to support Afghanistan in the reconstruction of Afghanistan.

Shri Dinesh Trivedi: Sir, I want to ask a very short and very specific question. Are you having any proposal to have a common currency like the European Union for the SAARC countries and as well free movement of goods and people within the SAARC countries?

Shri E. Ahamed: Sir, the hon. Member put this question last time also. On this, I would just like to make the stand of India clear. India has outlined its vision of a South Asia Economic Community on the pattern of the European Union. South Asia is a compact region geographically. It enjoys a high degree of cultural affinity and has a shared historical legacy. The economies of South Asian countries are complementary to each other. These are all very positive factors which can contribute to the success of closer economic integration in South Asia. As part of the economic integration, we can certainly consider a free trade area, a regional financial system, customs union and eventually a common currency. After all, not very long ago, our region did have a single currency, the Rupee, in circulation. But that was when we were all part of the British colonial empire. Today, we must aspire to be an Economic Union as sovereign and independent states, based on an acknowledgement of our economic complementarities. Members are aware that a South Asia Free Trade Area (SAFTA) will be inaugurated on January 1, 2006. The SAARC Finance and Economic Ministers have been charged to look into other aspects of economic integration and this also includes harmonisation of our fiscal policies, our customs procedures and, at an appropriate time, a common currency as well.

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Sir, the Dhaka Summit of the SAARC was marked by a very outstanding development and that was the decision in principle, as the reply to this question says, to admit the People's Republic of China and Japan as Observers. Now, the Minister has just said that they welcome Afghanistan joining the SAARC as a Member. The impression which has gone round, and I would like the Minister or the Prime Minister for that matter, therefore, to clarify on this, that Nepal is the country which sponsored China; they were pressing that China should also join the SAARC as a Member State. But, finally, it was decided that it would only be an observer status and that too along with Japan. Now, do we welcome the association of China with the SAARC as an Observer? Or do we have any reservations about China being associated with the SAARC? In the case of Afghanistan, we are saying very openly that we welcome it. What is our position with regard to China? And were we embarrassed because of the fact that it was Nepal which advocated the case of China?

DR. Manmohan Singh: Mr. Chairman, Sir, we have no reservation in regard to observer status being granted to China as well as to Japan. The question is, one has to specify the obligations and rights which go with the observer status. That will be settled at the next Ministerial meeting.

Mr. Chairman: Shri Jethmalani.

Shi Ram Jethmalani: Sir, I am all for the kind of efforts which are being made to rehabilitate Afghanistan; and to develop friendly relations with Afghanistan. But, I think, Sir, there is a need to reform and rehabilitate their intellectual and spiritual attitudes as well. Has it ever occurred to anybody in the Government to tell the Afghan Government that we will consider their nation fully civilised and provide all help when they first restore and repair the damaged statues of Buddha which the Taliban vandals had brought down so shamelessly?

Dr. Manmohan Singh: Mr. Chairman, Sir, Afghanistan is going through a very difficult period and the Government and the people of Afghanistan need all our sympathy and support to tide over these difficulties. In my discussions with the President of Afghanistan, I did raise this question and they, the thinking segment of the Afghan public opinion, do recognise that it was very sad that this incident of destruction of the Bamiyan Buddha took place when Talibans were in power.

Mr. Chairman: Dr. Chandan Mitra.

Dr. Chandan Mitra: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Sir. I have a very simple question again. Given the state of affairs in Afghanistan, I would like to know from the Government whether there was any great hurry in admitting Afghanistan into SAARC at this stage when the control of the Government in Kabul does not seem to run in large parts of that country. And will the membership on SAARC help the transportation of Indian goods to Afghanistan which Pakistan is still not allowing through the land routes?

Dr. Manmohan Singh: Mr. Chairman, Sir, as regards the transportation of Indian goods using the transit facility in Pakistan, that's a matter we have raised with Pakistan and I know Pakistan itself has been raising this matter. Therefore, this has no connection with Afghanistan's membership of SAARC. All countries of the SAARC were agreed that it would be good that Afghanistan which has traditionally been part of South Asia did become a member of SAARC.

Mr. Chairman: Dr. Karan Singh.

Dr. Karan Singh: Mr. Chairman, Sir, it's certainly most welcome that after having been cut off as a result of the barbaric Taliban Government for so many years, Afghanistan is once again joining the civilised community of the world and it is welcome that they are coming to SAARC. I have a question. Sir, the South Asia would only be complete SAARC when we have Afghanistan and Burma because it is then only that the geographical parameters will be complete. Is there any move or has there been any request for Burma's inclusion in SAARC? And if such a request is received, what would be the attitude of the Government of India?

Dr. Manmohan Singh : Mr. Chairman, Sir, there is no proposal as of now for Myanmar to be a member of SAARC. Myanmar is already a member of the ASEAN. And, therefore, I think, Myanmar's membership of SAARC is a hypothetical issue. With India, Myanmar is also a member of BIMSTEC. And, therefore, there are several opportunities for us to interact with Myanmar in the forum of BIMSTEC.

098. Message by Minister of State E. Ahamed on the occasion of SAARC Charter Day.

New Delhi, December 9, 2005.

Following is the full text of the message:

"It gives me immense pleasure to convey my felicitations to all fellow South Asians on the occasion of 20th anniversary of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC).

The Thirteenth SAARC Summit held recently in Dhaka was an outstanding success. It has created a positive perception of the organization, both within the region and beyond.

We are happy that several new initiatives are proposed to be implemented jointly on a region-wide basis, including in the sectors of health, education, agriculture, civil aviation and culture.

On the occasion of this anniversary, we need to re-dedicate ourselves to working towards achieving the further objectives of bringing together the people of the region, to promote understanding and cooperation and to share responsibility for the social and economic upliftment of the region. Our goal is the eventual establishment of a South Asian Economic Union, which will integrate our economies together in a partnership of peace and prosperity.

India is fully committed to the SAARC process and will continue to work with all SAARC member states for realizing the Charter goals and objectives."

099. Press release issued by the Ministry of Commerce on the Cabinet clearing the Implementation of South Asia Free Trade Agreement.

New Delhi, December 29, 2005.

The Cabinet today cleared the implementation of the South Asia Free Trade Area (SAFTA) with effect from 1st January, 2006. Announcing this, Shri Kamal Nath, Union Minister of Commerce & Industry, said that the coming into force of SAFTA would be a historic milestone in the economic profile of the countries of the SAARC region. "Implementation of SAFTA will further strengthen our trade relations with the SAARC countries", he said.

The SAFTA was signed by all SAARC countries during the SAARC Summit held in Islamabad on 4-6 January, 2004 and the Cabinet had thereafter accorded approval for the SAFTA Framework Agreement in its meeting held on 20th January, 2004. The Agreement stipulated that SAFTA would enter into force from 1st January 2006, upon completion of formalities including ratification by all the Contracting States and issuance of notification by the SAARC Secretariat. The completion of these formalities included completion of negotiations on Rules of Origin, Sensitive List, Mechanism for Compensation of Revenue Loss for Least Developed Contracting States and Technical Assistance to Least Developed Contracting States in agreed areas. Since the signing of the Agreement, Committee of Experts (COE) had twelve meetings including the last one held on 29th November – 1st December 2005 and finalised all the four Annexes to the Agreement. For implementation of SAFTA, four Annexes had to be attached with the Agreement and, today, the Cabinet has accorded approval on all these issues.

The basic objective of SAFTA is to reduce existing tariffs within the stipulated time frame in order to boost trade among the member countries of SAARC, namely, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Nepal, Pakistan, Bhutan, Maldives and India. At the same time, the sensitive tariff lines relating to agro-commodities have been kept in India's Sensitive List (Negative List) under SAFTA. This means on items under Negative List, Trade Liberalisation Programme (TLP) under SAFTA would not be applicable.

The salient features¹ of these four issues approved by the Cabinet are as follows:

i) Rules of Origin (ROO):

Under ROO, for giving preferential access to the Member Countries under SAFTA, the goods have to undergo substantial manufacturing process in the exporting countries. The substantial manufacturing processes are defined in terms of twin criteria of Change of Tariff Heading (CTH) at four-digit Harmonized Coding System and domestic value content of 40% for non-LDCs and 30% for LDCs. Apart from this general rule, Product Specific Rules (PSR) have also been provided for 191 tariff lines on technical grounds where both inputs and outputs are on the same four-digit HS level.

ii) Sensitive List:

As per the Agreement of SAFTA, Trade Liberalization Programme (TLP) would not apply to the tariff lines included in the Sensitive List. In order to protect interest of its domestic stakeholders, India has finalized two separate Sensitive Lists – a longer list for non-LDCs (Pakistan, Sri Lanka) and a shorter list for LDCs (Bangladesh, Bhutan, Maldives and Nepal). India has kept 884 tariff lines in the Sensitive List for non-LDCs and 763 for LDCs. India's Sensitive Lists include mainly goods from agriculture sector, textile sector, chemicals & leathers and sectors reserved for small scale industries. On the market access to Bangladesh, Bangladesh was not happy with our Sensitive List which included 185 tariff lines out of 234 tariff lines in Chapters 61 & 62 of garments and hence in order to give a limited market access through Tariff Rate Quota (TRQ), the Cabinet has

1. Speaking on the importance of SAFTA at the forum of the Punjab, Haryana and Delhi Chambers of Commerce on December 10 on the theme of "13th SAARC Summit: The Road Ahead", the Foreign Secretary said the success of SAFTA depended largely on putting in place adequate intra-regional infrastructure by member-nations and asked the neighbours to see it (India) as an "opportunity" and "not a threat". He emphasized the need for the South Asian countries to integrate and work together despite "political divisions" to exploit the economic complementarities for the overall benefit of the region. He underlined the need for establishing inter-connectivity among the countries of the region including restoration of the severed links of India with Pakistan and Bangladesh to reap the benefits of SAFTA. Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran while asking the neighbours of India to shed their fears, he acknowledged that the asymmetry of India's size, as compared to other countries of the region gave rise to "anxiety" and "apprehensions" but reminded them that in today's world regional association was important and as such, India should be seen as an opportunity and not a threat. "If we want to see South Asia becoming a power house, which we all want, decided to accord 6 million pieces of fabrics with the condition that sourcing of fabrics should be either from India or of Bangladesh origin. The Cabinet has also accorded approval of TRQ of 2 million pieces without any conditions of sourcing of fabrics.

iii) Mechanism for Compensation of Revenue Loss (MCRL) for Least Developed Contracting States (LDCs):

The 10th SAARC Summit had mandated that Treaty on SAFTA should provide an equitable distribution of benefits of trade to all States specially for smaller and least developed countries including MCRL. Accordingly, Agreement on SAFTA provided for compensation of revenue loss to LDCs who suffer from loss of customs revenue due to the implementation of Trade Liberalization Programme (TLP) under this Agreement. The compensation to LDCs except to Maldives will be available for four years and to Maldives for six years. The compensation shall also be subject to a cap of 1%, 1%, 5% and 3% of customs revenue collected on non-sensitive items under bilateral trade in the base year. However, the extent of compensation shall not apply in case of claims of compensation by Maldives from India in the event of loss of revenue being higher than the above annual ceilings.

iv) Technical Assistance to Least Developed Contracting States in agreed areas:

In order to promote capacity building in LDCs, non-LDCs would provide technical assistance in some of the agreed areas like capacity building there needs to be inter-connectivity. Unless there is inter-connectivity within the region, connectivity with the world will not bear much benefits," the Foreign Secretary said emphasizing that integration within South Asia was essential if the region wanted to benefit from globalization. Mr. Saran referred to India's linkages with Pakistan and Bangladesh, which existed before partition and the creation of Bangladesh in 1971. "We have not been able to regain and reestablish all of those old links." Noting that tremendous economic complementarities existed in South Asia, Saran said the "limited opening" with Pakistan lately had demonstrated the huge demand for trade and commerce. Mentioning in particular the success of the Pakistan Trade Fair in Amritsar recently, he called for the two countries to hold more such events as "the region had great advantages; it was geographically compact; and it had a shared history, obvious cultural affinities and shared legacy." "The South Asian countries" he emphasized "should build upon these assets which join us even while political divisions remain. No body is trying to erase these political divisions. These political divisions, over a period of time, can become less and less relevant." Mr. Saran said Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and President Pervez Musharraf held a similar vision as they talked about making boundaries irrelevant.

in standards, protect certification, training of human resources, data management, institutional upgradation, improvement of legal systems & administration, customs procedures & trade facilitation and market development & promotion.

3. Besides the above, the Cabinet has also given approval of the following:

- a) MFN (Most Favoured Nation) applied rate existing on 1st January, 2000, would be taken as base rate for the purpose of tariff reduction;
- b) In order to adopt a uniform date of Tariff Liberalisation Programme, India would bring out the customs notification from 1st July, 2006.
- c) India's total trade with SAARC countries was valued at US $ 5205.57 million (US $ 5.2 billion) in 2004-05.

100. Joint press statement issued at the end of talks between the Minister of Energy and Mineral Resources of Bangladesh and Minister of Petroleum and Natural Gas of India to promote bilateral energy cooperation.

Yangon (Myanmar), January 13, 2005.

The State Minister for Energy and Mineral Resources of Bangladesh, H.E. Mr. A. K. M. Mosharraf Hossain and the Minister for Petroleum and Natural Gas and Panchayati Raj of the Republic of India, H.E. Mr. Mani Shankar Aiyar, met in Yangon, Myanmar, on 12-13 January, 2005 on the occasion of the Tripartite Conference¹ called in Yangon by the Government of the Union of Myanmar to discuss cooperation in developing regional energy resources and infrastructure.

2. On the sidelines of the Tripartite Conference, the Bangladesh Minister raised with the Indian Minister the following issues relating to bilateral cooperation between the People's Republic of Bangladesh and the Republic of India:-

- (i) Transmission of hydro-electricity from Nepal and Bhutan to Bangladesh through Indian territory;
- (ii) Corridor for supply of commodities between Nepal and Bhutan and Bangladesh through Indian territory; and
- (iii) To take necessary measures to reduce trade imbalance between the two countries.

1. See Document No. 101.

(Very little progress could be registered on the proposed gas pipeline in the coming months. When the Minister of Petroleum Mani Shankar Aiyar visited Dhaka in September after meeting the Bangladesh Foreign Minister Morshed Khan Aiyar said "my impression is that things are moving forward". He said Bangladesh had the potential to contribute to creating energy security in the Indian subcontinent. "Every one in the region is looking to creating energy security and Bangladesh has the energy potential", he said. Aiyar termed his meeting with his counterpart as satisfactory and positive. In his meeting with the Bangladesh Prime Minister Begum Khaleda Zia on September 5, Aiyar offered to have Bangladeshi personnel trained at the Indian Institute of Petroleum, Dehra Dun. Begum Khaleda responded positively to the suggestion.)

3. In respect of the above issues, the Indian Minister stated as follows:-
- (i) With regard to Bangladesh's request for the provision of electricity facilities from Nepal and Bhutan to Bangladesh, the Indian Minister agreed that the Government of India would examine positively any fresh proposals received from Bangladesh in regard to examining required facilities.
 - (ii) In regard to Bangladesh's request for transit facilities to Bhutan and Nepal through India between Bangladesh on one side and Bhutan and Nepal on the other, the Indian Minister conveyed that the Government of India supported this request. He pointed out that some facilities had already been provided at Phulbari which at present were not being fully utilized. He conveyed that the Government of India would favorably examine any further requests that might arise to augment existing facilities.
 - (iii) With regard to Bangladesh's request for rectifying the imbalance of trade, the Indian Minister agreed with the need to expand bilateral trade between the two countries in order to bridge the trade gap that exists at present. Projects such as proposed at the Trilateral Conference will contribute to this objective.
4. The Indian Minister accepted the kind invitation of the Bangladesh Minister to visit Bangladesh in the near future.

101. Joint press statement (Trilateral - between Minister for Energy of Myanmar, Minister of Energy and Mineral Resources of Bangladesh and Minister of Petroleum and Natural Gas of India) regarding export of gas from Myanmar to India through a pipeline via Bangladesh.

Yangon, January 13, 2005.

1. Substantial natural gas reserves have been found in offshore and on-shore structures, including the North Eastern blocks of the Bay of Bengal off the coast of Myanmar. In addition, sizeable quantities of natural gas reserves have been found in on-shore structures in the North Eastern regions of Bangladesh and India as also on-shore in Myanmar. The speedy implementation of development programmes by all the Governments of the region and accelerating economic growth is boosting a huge market for natural gas in the region requiring the regional development of energy sources and infrastructure for the delivery of the gas to consuming centres. In concert with parallel developments in other segments of the power and energy sector, a new era of cooperation is opening up for the countries of the region.

2. To harness this win-win opportunity, the Honorable Minister for Energy of Myanmar, H.E. Brig. Gen. Lun Thi took the initiative to convene a Tripartite Ministerial Meeting between himself, the State Minister for Energy and Mineral Resources of Bangladesh, H.E. Mr. A.K.M. Mosharraf Hossain, and the Minister of Petroleum and Natural Gas and Panchayati Raj of the Republic of India, H.E. Shri Mani Shankar Aiyar, in Yangon, on 12-13 January, 2005.

3. The following was agreed to by the three Governments¹:-

- (i) The Government of Myanmar agrees to export natural gas to India by pipeline through the territory of Bangladesh and India to be operated by an international consortium as may be agreed upon by the parties concerned, based upon technical and commercial feasibility. The Governments of Bangladesh and India reserve the right to access the pipeline as and when required, including injecting and siphoning off their own natural gas; details in this regard will be worked out on the basis of commercial agreements. The route of the pipeline may be determined by mutual agreement of the three Governments with a view to ensuring adequate access, maximum security and optimal economic utilization.

1. A press report from Dhaka on April 6 suggested that the Director – General in the Energy Ministry of Myanmar Soe Myint in a letter to Bangladesh proposed signing a Memorandum of Understanding on the planned India – Myanmar – Bangladesh gas pipeline on April 20 – 21, 2005. However leading Bangladesh dailies quoting official sources in Dhaka said Dhaka was not ready to sign the document as yet, as New Delhi so far had failed to address the concerns of Bangladesh on certain bilateral issues. It may be pointed out that the MOU was drafted by the technical committee of the three countries, which was formed in January and held its first meeting on February 24 when the draft was put in shape.

- (ii) The Governments of Bangladesh, India and Myanmar, represented by their respective Ministers and delegations, recognizing the unique potential for developing energy resources and related infrastructure needed to access and deliver energy to various parts of the region, agree to set up an appropriate mechanism for cooperation between and among themselves to pursue their common goal of development for all the people of the region.
 - (iii) The Governments of Bangladesh, India and Myanmar agree to establish a Techno–Commercial Working Committee comprising duly designated representatives of the three Governments. The Working Committee shall:
 - (a) identify areas of cooperation, collaboration and investment to develop natural gas resources, infrastructure and marketing in the region; and,
 - (b) deliberate and advise the three Governments on policy issues as set out in Para 3(i) above such as pipeline routing, access-related issues as well as technical and commercial matters.
 - (iv) The first meeting of the Committee will be held in Yangon within a month with a view to preparing a draft Memorandum of Understanding which will be concluded and signed at Dhaka at the earliest mutual convenience of the three Governments.
4. The Governments of Bangladesh, India and Myanmar agree to pursue both trilateral and bilateral cooperation to promote, develop and implement projects and forums to augment the utilization and development of energy resources and related infrastructure in the region.

5. The Governments of Bangladesh, India and Myanmar agree to exchange relevant information to jointly promote energy surveys; develop upstream, downstream and other energy-related projects; and jointly recommend measures for the development and expansion of access to energy for the benefit of people of the region.

6. The Governments of Bangladesh, India and Myanmar agree to continue keeping contact with each other at the Ministerial level and to meet both trilaterally and bilaterally at regular intervals in order to update each other on the measures being taken relating to the development of activities in their respective countries in regard to natural gas and, more generally, the power and energy sector.

7. With respect to issues of bilateral cooperation which impinge on their trilateral cooperation, such as hydroelectricity and other diversified sources of energy supply, trade and transit, the Ministers of the three countries agreed that such bilateral issues will continue to be pursued bilaterally. In this context, they agreed to recommend to their respective governments the importance of evaluating issues relevant to bringing their nations closer to each other by establishing policy frameworks which will augment practical measures for further economic cooperation and collaboration among themselves. The Ministers further noted that energy cooperation is being promoted within the framework of initiatives in BIMSTEC and SAARC and agreed that these initiatives need to be pursued vigorously.

8. The Ministers of Bangladesh and India place on record their high appreciation of the leadership as well as hospitality and cooperation extended by H.E. Brig. Gen. PM and EAM have written to Mrs. Asma Kibria conveying their deep condolences on the tragic death of Mr. Kibria. All right-thinking people must join in condemning such violent acts of terrorism, which constitute a direct attack on the fabric of democracy that the people of Bangladesh are striving to create for themselves. The perpetrators must be identified and due justice seen to be meted out.

Kibria, it also threatens participation of the ordinary citizens in the institutions that democracies create and nurture.

India condemns this mindless act of violence and hopes that the perpetrators will be traced and held to account.

105. Press release of the High Commission of India in Bangladesh expressing concern at the highly exaggerated reports in Bangladesh media on the fence along the India – Bangladesh border.

Dhaka, March 16, 2005.

The High Commission of India has been concerned to see the highly exaggerated and inaccurate accounts being reported in the Bangladesh media regarding the on-going construction by BSF of a fence along the Bangladesh India border.

2. The Government of Bangladesh is well aware that this fencing work by BSF has been underway since 1989. All activities relating to the building of the fence are being carried out entirely on the Indian side of the border. For the most part the fence is located at or beyond 150 yards from the zero-line. However, in specific areas due mainly to the existence of villages, or as necessitated by terrain conditions, the fence has to be built within 150 yards. The BSF has offered to keep the BDR informed as and when construction of the fence is planned for execution in those stretches falling within 150 yards from the zero-line. The Government of India has formally conveyed to the Government of Bangladesh details of villages, houses and population falling within 150 yards of the zero line.

3. India greatly values its close and friendly relations with Bangladesh . The Government of Bangladesh is well aware of the Government of India's concerns regarding the illegal and criminal activities on the border, including large-scale smuggling, trafficking of women and children, narcotics trafficking, smuggling of arms and explosives, infiltration, illegal migration, etc. The Government of India has on numerous occasions conveyed to the Government of Bangladesh that building a fence will help both countries to better manage our long and highly porous border, thereby contributing to the further strengthening of bilateral relations. This was reiterated most recently during the Home Secretary-level talks held in Dhaka in September 2004.

4. India has also consistently conveyed that the 1975 border guidelines are only guidelines, which relate to the demolition of defensive structures. They do not apply to the building of a fence, which is a physical barrier intended to put a stop to smuggling and other illegal movement across the border. The fence has no defense potential whatsoever. India believes that a misinterpretation of the 1975 Border Guidelines, which were drawn up in a spirit of friendship and understanding to guide the two forces, is stalling legitimate development activity.

5. In this context, it maybe recalled that India did not raise any objection to a request from Bangladesh , made in 1999, to construct a 1320 feet long x 10 feet high masonry wall along the Hilli Railway Station, within only a few feet from the zero line. India 's decision was guided by the spirit of friendship that exists between our two countries and with a view to enable the Bangladeshi authorities to check illegal trans-border movement and to contain criminal activities.

6. However, in carrying out this legitimate activity of building a fence, the BSF has been experiencing resistance from the Bangladesh side. This has led to occasional tensions caused by unprovoked firing by BDR along the border. Government of India has requested the Government of Bangladesh for full cooperation, including the issuance of necessary instructions to the Bangladesh Rifles to avoid any untoward incidents.

106. Press release issued by the Indian High Commission in Dhaka and repeated by the Ministry of External Affairs regarding the incident on the India – Bangladesh border at Akhaura and the killing of BSF Assistant Commandant.

Dhaka, April 17 and New Delhi, April 19, 2005.

The High Commission of India in Dhaka has been greatly surprised and deeply disturbed to see press reports on 17th April 2005 stating that a fierce gun-battle had erupted on the Akhaura border, during which, it is alleged, BSF personnel entered Bangladeshi territory at 1700 Hrs. on 16th April 2005 and opened fire on BDR, killing three Bangladeshi nationals.

In actual fact, some villagers reported to the BSF Border Outpost at Lankamura, Tripura, at 1630 Hrs. on 16.04.2005 that an Indian national, Ramdhan Pal, had been abducted and taken forcibly into Bangladeshi territory. Immediately BSF Company Commander Jeevan Kumar, Assistant Commandant, along with three others rushed to the spot and tried to talk to BDR personnel. Instead of peacefully resolving the problem, the BDR, who were accompanied by armed Bangladeshi civilians, started firing on the BSF party who were about 50 yards from the zero line, well within Indian territory, injuring Constable Venu Gopal.

DG, BSF, who was in Dhaka, consulted DG, BDR and it was decided that both sides should stop firing immediately. Accordingly, BSF stopped firing at 1900 Hrs. Unfortunately, BDR continued intermittent fire, including with automatic weapons, until 2120 Hrs.

A meeting was held between CO 131 Bn BSF and CO 7 R Bn BDR at 2045 Hrs. and the matter jointly verified. After a prolonged search Constable K.K. Surendran was found inside Bangladesh territory with serious multiple injuries. The body of Assistant Commandant Jeevan Kumar bearing marks of bullet injury fired from point blank range and injuries from sharp cutting weapons, was also found inside Bangladeshi territory.

From the marks on the ground, the spot enquiry established that Assistant Commandant Jeevan Kumar and Constable K.K. Surendran were dragged inside Bangladesh territory and attacked by the BDR, resulting in the death of the Assistant Commandant. The entire incident appears to be pre-planned and pre-meditated, as the BDR had opened fire on the BSF party without any provocation whatsoever.

DG, BSF, while speaking to Indian media on departure, has strongly condemned this incident, describing it as a cruel and provocative act, taking place as it did during the on-going talks between DG, BDR and DG, BSF in Dhaka.

The Government of India unequivocally condemns the brutal killing of the BSF Assistant Commandant by the BDR. This is highly reprehensible and not in keeping with the spirit of dialogue and mutual understanding sought to be created by the just concluded talks between DG, BSF and DG, BDR¹.

1. On April 19 the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs Navtej Sarna told a press briefing that "the acting-High Commissioner of Bangladesh in Delhi was called in by Joint Secretary (BSM) Mrs. Nilma Deo in the Ministry of External Affairs on 18th April to convey India's strong protest over the killing of BSF commander. She conveyed "our deep disappointment and regret over this incident and stated that its repercussions could not be ignored." She also conveyed the view that "the entire incident appeared premeditated and pre-planned." Meanwhile the Minister of State in the Home Ministry Sriprakash Jaiswal told the press on April 19 that the government hoped that Bangladesh would initiate action against the BDR personnel responsible for the BSF assistant commander's brutal killing. Meanwhile the BSF on April 16 said that BDR helicopter had violated the Indian air space the previous day and that the BDR troops had dug trenches and intensified patrolling on the border in Tripura. According to the BSF, the BDR helicopter flew over Chotakhil in Sabroom subdivision of Tripura as also in Magrum and Beltoli areas along the international border. On the other hand the BDR charged the BSF of violating Bangladesh airspace on April 18, which was denied by the BSF as "totally false and baseless." It may be mentioned that of the 4,095-km border between the two countries, 856-km runs along the State of Tripura. On April 19 Bangladesh Minister of State for Home Affairs H.E. Md. Uffuzzaman Babar telephoned Union Home Minister and expressed regret over the death of Assistant Commandant Jeevan Kumar. He also conveyed that Dhaka has ordered an enquiry into the incident of firing by BDR forces on BSF personnel in the Agartala sector on Saturday, 16 th April 2005. Stern action would be taken against those involved in the incident. Meanwhile BDR Director General Jahangir Alam also telephoned DG BSF and assured that BDR was keen to defuse the tension and suggested joint patrolling by the two forces. DG, BSF reiterated that BDR must exercise restraint. On Monday, 18 th April 2005, Veena Sikri, High Commissioner of India to Bangladesh, called on Sarwar Hossain Mollah, Acting Foreign Secretary, Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh, to convey the Government of India's strong condemnation of the incident.

Dhaka, August 6, 2005.

It gives me great pleasure to be here in Dhaka.¹ This is my first visit and I have long looked forward to visiting this historic capital.

1. On August 4 the Official Spokesperson Navtej Sarna told a media briefing in New Delhi that the visit of External Affairs Minister was taking place "in the context of our commitment to improve and strengthen our relations with neighbouring countries... It will also be an occasion for high-level political interaction between the two countries and will be a precursor to the visit of Prime minister for the 13th SAARC Summit scheduled to held in Dhaka in November later this year." Giving a background of the visit Sarna said: "Bangladesh Foreign Minister visited India twice in 2004, in May-June and November. Bangladesh Minister of Commerce and Minister of Finance and the Health Minister also paid visits during the last one year. From the Indian side Minister of Water Resources is likely to visit Bangladesh later in August and there are possible visits from the Minister of Commerce and Industry and Minister of Petroleum and Natural Gas. These invitations have been accepted in principle." Adding he said: "In terms of institutional dialogue also there has been an intensification over the last one year. Home Secretaries and Water Resources Secretaries met in September last year. Foreign Office Consultations were held in June this year and meetings between border forces i.e. Director Generals of BSF and BDR at the operational level are being held regularly. Bilateral trade was USD 1.6 billion in 2004-05. Discussions have been held under the aegis of Joint Working Groups on trade, para-tariff and non-tariff issues as well as the Joint Customs Group to address various measures for facilitating increase in the flow of trade." The Spokesperson answered some questions at the briefing and they were:
"Question: Before the SAARC Summit is there any possibility of Begum Khaleda Zia meeting

2. I have come at the invitation of my esteemed colleague and dear friend, Hon'ble Foreign Minister Morshed Khan. I am very happy to be able to reciprocate his visits to Delhi. My visit to Dhaka is part of our ongoing dialogue with our important and valued neighbour, Bangladesh.
3. I look forward to conveying the warm and cordial greetings of the Indian leadership to Her Excellency the Prime Minister of Bangladesh. We look forward to an early visit to India by the Hon'ble Prime Minister.
4. I shall be calling on the leader of the opposition and meeting other senior Bangladeshi leaders.
5. The Government of India attaches the highest importance to its relations with Bangladesh. During my meetings in Dhaka I will reaffirm this commitment and reiterate our willingness to continue and further the process

Prime Minister?

Answer: I have no indications at the moment of any such occasion coming up but these things happen fairly suddenly.

Question: Is the External Affairs Minister carrying a letter of invite to Prime Minister Begum Khaleda Zia?

Answer: I have not seen anything to that effect.

Question: Are there any agreements likely?

Answer: This is an overall bilateral visit at the Foreign Minister level which will cover a lot of issues but as far as (the question of) any formal agreement being signed (is concerned), we have no information on anything being expected on this.

Question: Anything on Bangladesh-Myanmar pipeline?

Answer: Well, that is a very important aspect of possible economic cooperation and even if I were to hazard a guess, I think it should be somewhere in the discussions.

Question: What is the position of Bangladesh on the G4 resolution?

Answer: We will continue to ask Bangladesh to give its fullest commitment and support to G4.

Question: Last time when India stayed away from the SAARC Summit, among the reasons was the deteriorating law and order situation in Bangladesh. Is EAM going to make an assessment of that?

Answer: I think Foreign Ministers do not make assessments of law and order situations. The Foreign Minister is going there for a very high level political visit which will cover bilateral relations and other issues of mutual interest. Naturally, he will be looking at all the issues that could be discussed between India and Bangladesh as a precursor to the SAARC Summit. I think his visit is a very important part of the buildup to the SAARC Summit. That is how I would like to categorize it.

Question: Specifically pertaining to terrorist camps in Bangladesh and the border dispute and fencing. Do you think that will be discussed?

Answer: I think that both the security issues as well as the fencing and related issues are matters which have been taken up several times at the highest level, ministerial level and other levels between India and Bangladesh. These are matters which require a constant review. So, though I do not have a point by point agenda, I am sure that when bilateral security issues are discussed, these matters will come up.

of sustained and constructive engagement, for the mutual benefit of our peoples. I will discuss the SAARC agenda.

6. I shall have extensive talks with my counterpart, Foreign Minister Morshed Khan. We will review the existing state of our bilateral relations and explore how we can further deepen and enlarge their scope. While we will address those issues on which we have differing perceptions we will focus on the enormous untapped potential for the mutual benefit of our peoples.

7. The Government and the people of India remain steadfast in their support to the people of Bangladesh and to promote our good relations, peace and mutual prosperity. In this era of globalisation India is also committed to friendly cooperation with Bangladesh in the regional and multilateral fora.

110. Opening remarks of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the interactive session with the Intellectuals of Bangladesh.

Dhaka, August 7, 2005.

1. I am very pleased at this opportunity to interact with you. This is my first visit to the historic city of Dhaka. Listening to the call of the Muezzins on my way this afternoon, I recalled vividly references to Dhaka as the city of mosques. What I also saw were numerous high-rise buildings and gleaming commercial complexes, signs of the rapid economic strides that Bangladesh continues to make. This visit is helping me to become better acquainted with one of our closest neighbors, a nation with which we share not only a recent history of struggle against colonialism and the liberation of Bangladesh but also enduring feelings of fraternity and commitment to democracy, anchored in a common socio-cultural heritage. I sincerely hope that Bangladesh will continue on its democratic and liberal path to prosperity and play its due role on the world stage.

2. During my visit I have called on the Honorable Prime Minister. I have conveyed a message of greetings from Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan

Singh and an invitation to the Hon'ble Prime Minister Begum Khaleda Zia to visit India. I held useful discussions with my good friend and colleague, the Hon'ble Foreign Minister Morshed Khan and with Hon'ble Finance Minister Saifur Rahman. I have called on the Hon'ble leader of the Opposition, Sheikh Hasina. In these meetings, we discussed our bilateral relationship and exchanged views on both the regional and global situation. I have reiterated India's consistent desire to have close, friendly and cooperative relations with Bangladesh.

3. To understand India it is important to recognise the pride that we Indians take in our diversity as expressed in our democracy and constitution. Our extraordinary wealth of religious beliefs, languages and traditions could flourish only in a secular, democratic political system. Our frequent, free and fair elections have empowered the people, promoting openness and imbuing responsibility to our actions. We are seeking amendments to our Constitution to make our system more inclusive for example 33% of seats in village and municipal council elections are already reserved for women. We are on the verge of introducing a Women's Reservation Bill to extend their representation to Parliament and a National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme to provide 100 days employment to, at least, one member of each impoverished family.

4. India and Bangladesh, both developing countries are engaged in efforts to improve the living standards of their respective people. Over the last 2 decades, India has grown at a steady average rate of about 6% per annum which we hope to take up to 8%. Bangladesh also has a successful experience in the empowerment of women and rural development which is of interest and can be instructive to other countries. The Indian and Bangladesh economies have certain complementarities and locational advantages, which can be exploited to mutual benefit.

5. Dialogue has always been the chosen path of India, where foreign policy has traditionally enjoyed a broad national consensus. I believe that, as two neighbours committed to democracy, the rule of law and liberal values, it is essential that we sustain the process of dialogue between ourselves. It is only through dialogue that solutions can be found even on issues that have been long outstanding. The process may be long drawn-out and achieving compromise may be difficult, but as two sovereign, multicultural and multi-ethnic democracies our endeavor, should at all times be to try and reach mutually beneficial outcomes through engagement.

6. Knowledge will be the primary impetus of the 21st century. Both our countries are well positioned to create knowledge based production systems and offer our skills to countries with a scarcity of English speaking computer literate young people. India has already acquired a brand image in information technology. Anyone can see that Bangladesh with its eager young population is poised to join the wave. That is why we have expanded our programme of giving scholarships to students to study in India and Bangladesh, training teachers in computer skills and gifting computers as our modest contribution to the knowledge economy of Bangladesh.

7. Both India and Bangladesh have adopted a 'look East' policy. For the success of India's 'look East' policy cooperation of Bangladesh is critical, as are the advantages to Bangladesh. Access to the large Indian market, revenue from transit fees and increasing Indian investment in Bangladesh would stimulate your economy. We are already investing in transport links with Myanmar and, through Myanmar to ASEAN and the dynamic economies of East Asia. It is a truism that even sub-optimal transport linkages have a way of becoming permanent once sufficient investment has been committed.

8. Energy security is another area where our two countries can cooperate fruitfully. The sale of gas to India is a sovereign decision for the government of Bangladesh to make on its economic merits. The Myanmar-Bangladesh-India gas pipeline can be a win-win project if we can approach it constructively and on its own economic merits.

9. Terrorism is a curse that threatens democratic and open societies. Solutions to seemingly intractable differences can be found within a democratic framework, by honest dialogue conducted in a constructive framework, without resort to violence, political intimidation or the tactics of terror. The threat posed by terrorism can only be confronted and eradicated when open and democratic societies cooperate. As the Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh said recently, "We must fight terrorism wherever it exists, because terrorism anywhere threatens democracy everywhere".

10. We must create a positive and constructive environment conducive to economic cooperation to the benefit of our region. We seek sensitivity to our security concerns arising out of the misuse of territories for cross-border terrorism and hostile activity against India by insurgent and secessionist groups. We must work together to ensure that no person or group that espouses or uses the tactics of terror finds shelter or succor from any part of our land or amongst our peoples. We must both declare our firm commitment to this principle and take steps to establish the required legal framework to enforce them at the earliest¹.

11. I feel that together we can unleash the immense talent and energies of our people, and put behind us the differences and misunderstandings of the past. Each one of you is making valuable contributions in your chosen fields of expertise. I am interested in your unique perceptions of our multifaceted relationship and ideas on what we can do to further strengthen India Bangladesh relations and ensure prosperity and peace in our region.

111. Remarks of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at Liberation War Museum.

Dhaka, August 7, 2005.

Honourable Trustees of the Liberation War Museum, Air Vice Marshal A.K. Khondaker, Maj-Gen. Shafiullah, Maj-Gen. C.R. Dutta and other heroes of the Liberation War of Bangladesh, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am very pleased to have the opportunity to visit this historic Museum. I congratulate the Hon'ble Trustees and all others who are working tirelessly to keep alive the invaluable memories of the Liberation War which created Bangladesh. I am deeply moved by the exhibits of photographs and memorabilia of the valiant freedom fighters.

The Bengali people struggled valiantly over the years until 1971 for the right to use their own language, culture and resources and to achieve

1. In this context Minister Natwar Singh told the Bangla daily Jugantor on August 7 that there "were considerable cross border crimes due to the porous nature of the border between the two countries and hence the need for a fence. He therefore underlined the need for India to go ahead with the fence along the border to curb smuggling, and control crimes and insurgent activities which posed a serious danger to the socio-economic institutions and security of the country. Alluding to his talks with the Bangladesh leaders the Minister said that both the countries shared the common objectives of ensuring peace and tranquility between the two countries. He told reporters at the end of his talks "India and Bangladesh had decided to remain engaged to overcome any obstacles to bilateral relations. A beginning has been made and talks on specific sectors will be continued during the upcoming visit of three Indian ministers to Bangladesh this year."

their own prosperity. Their indomitable spirit and unmatched courage resulted in the emergence of Bangladesh as a sovereign, secular and democratic republic in 1971. The Liberation War Museum serves as a memorial to the determination and bravery of the people of Bangladesh and India who fought shoulder to shoulder against repression, and genocide, which aroused the ire and sympathy of the entire world. This Museum is the result of commendable private initiative and enterprise and serves to remind Bangladesh of its heritage and of the values for which the 1971 Liberation War was fought.

The Trustees have done tremendous work to bring together from various sources the rare and valuable memorabilia of that violent struggle by the common people of Bangladesh against mindless atrocity and destruction committed in the name of religion, ethnicity and territorial integrity. As a member of the International Coalition of Historic Site Museums of Conscience, it is part of the network of thirteen museums around the world, from the United States to South Africa, which work together to caution humanity against the horrendous outcome of intolerance and repression by governments of the legitimate rights and demands of their people.

India will be happy to help in every way possible to support this invaluable institution. In particular, I would like to suggest that the entire collection of this museum be properly documented and made into a virtual, interactive museum on the worldwide web. This will make it accessible to freedom-loving people around the world. This will also be an effective use of information technology to bring to life for the younger generation of Bangladesh and abroad their unique heritage. We will also be happy to support the initiative of the Trustees to house this Museum in a new building and use innovative techniques to mount, exhibit and preserve the collection. We also welcome your interest in establishing reciprocal support systems with museums in India. We are happy to learn about your outreach programmes and hope that it will soon be possible for a travelling exhibition curated by the Liberation War Museum to undertake a tour of major cities in India.

We in India were deeply touched at the warm and spontaneous and emotional expression of remembrances in Bangladesh at the passing away of our retired Lt. Gen. Jagjit Singh Aurora in early May this year. The unity of purpose which brought together people of diverse backgrounds in their determination to fight for the liberation of Bangladesh was once again on display. I thank the people of Bangladesh for cherishing the memories of battles fought by the Allied Forces under Lt. Gen. Aurora's command and keeping alive the friendship and camaraderie between our two countries.

India, too, wholeheartedly supports the values which the freedom fighters of 1971 stand for. We would be happy to support initiatives aimed at providing educational facilities and scholarships for the children and heirs of the freedom fighters of Bangladesh. We would also like to support the initiatives to provide healthcare and rehabilitation for these freedom fighters who, as a result of their war injuries, are still unable to live normal lives.

The sentiments and aspirations that started the liberation struggle of 1971 shall remain an enduring bond between us. The Liberation War Museum will always have an important role to play.

112. Reaction of Official Spokesperson to the bomb blasts in Bangladesh.

New Delhi, August 18, 2005.

In response to a question on Bangladesh blasts the Official Spokesperson said:

"Reports relating to an unprecedented 459 blasts in 63 of the country's 64 districts in the short space of 30 minutes yesterday, continue to come in.

Leaflets have been found at the site of each of the blasts authored by a fundamentalist outfit, the Jama'atul Mujahedin Bangladesh, that was banned just six months ago, demanding the establishment of an Islamic State in Bangladesh and condemning democracy, the judiciary and the electoral system as un-Islamic.

We have conveyed our serious concern and strong condemnation over the numerous and widespread explosions to the High Commissioner of Bangladesh in New Delhi on 17th August 2005.

We urged the Government of Bangladesh to identify the perpetrators of these terrorist acts and offered any kind of assistance.

A stable, prosperous, secular and democratic Bangladesh is not just in the interests of the people of Bangladesh, but also of India and the region as a whole¹."

113. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs rejecting allegations contained in statements of Bangladesh Minister of Industries alleging Indian involvement in bomb blasts.

New Delhi, August 21, 2005.

We have seen reports in the Bangladesh media quoting H.E. Mr. Motiur Rahman Nizami, Hon'ble Minister of Industries, Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh. The Hon'ble Minister is reported to have made statements alleging Indian involvement in the bomb blasts throughout Bangladesh on August 17, 2005.

The Government of India strongly rejects the allegations contained in these statements, and expresses its deep concern that a senior Minister of the Bangladesh Government should have made such unfounded and

1. A day earlier the Spokesperson reacting to questions from the media had said "We have seen reports relating to the hundreds of explosions all over Bangladesh which have injured dozens of people, some seriously. The scale and coordination of these explosions countrywide raises a number of questions. Our sympathies go out to the victims and their families. We have no reports of injuries to Indian citizens as yet. Our diplomatic personnel are all safe." The Spokesman was reacting to the series of bomb explosions throughout Bangladesh almost simultaneously. According to reports four hundred bombs exploded within half an hour (between 11 and 11.39 AM local time) in a show of extraordinary terror across the country. The blasts rocked 63 of the country's 64 districts, killing two persons and injuring at least 140. Blasts were reported from capital Dhaka, port city of Chittagong, and other important towns like Mymensingh, Sylhet, Barisal, Comilla, Khulna, and Cox's Bazar. The alarming scale of the terror campaign prompted India to get around the diplomatic discipline not to comment on any country's internal affair. A concerned New Delhi moved into high gear in the wake of the blasts with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh going into an emergency huddle with National Security Advisor M. K. Narayanan and others. Apprehensive of the possibility of terrorists sneaking into India, among the first steps taken was to seal the borders in West Bengal, Assam, Meghalaya and Tripura sectors adjoining Bangladesh.

irresponsible statements. Statements of this kind undermine efforts to promote the friendly and good neighbourly relations between Bangladesh and India.

It may be recalled that the Government of India has condemned the bomb blasts of 17th August as terrorism directed against the friendly people of Bangladesh and has offered its cooperation to the Government of Bangladesh in dealing with this reprehensible act¹.

114. Reaction of the Official Spokesperson on the incident in Dhaka involving the spouse of the Indian Deputy High Commissioner.

New Delhi, September 16, 2005.

The Government of India is shocked at the incident that took place on 15th September, 2005 in Dhaka, involving the spouse of the Indian Deputy High Commissioner in Bangladesh. Government of India has expressed its serious concern on the above incident to both the Acting High Commissioner of Bangladesh in New Delhi and the Government of Bangladesh in Dhaka and urged them to take necessary action in the matter.

1. The allegation of the Minister was particularly out of place when media quoted the Spokesperson of the Bangladesh Ministry of Home Mohammad Mohsin on August 21 to suggest that Dhaka was unable to ascertain the identity of who backed the blasts. He reportedly said: "we are examining whether it was the task of the banned Islamic organizations or whether there was any involvement of any foreign power in it." Meanwhile tension was building up on the India – Bangladesh border where the border security forces of the two countries were engaged in exchange of fire for a couple of days following the Indian side undertaking certain embankment protection works on the Indian side of the border along the Mahananda river between the two outposts of Muchia and Adampur. Anti-erosion works were found imperative to protect the area from floods that could submerge the border fencing in the area, particularly when "it posed no defence threat as only sandbags were dumped into the river to prevent erosion," said Deputy Inspector General of the Border Security Force. The firing subsided after the flag meeting between the Sector Commanders of the two forces on August 21. It was agreed that the Joint Rivers Commission scheduled to meet on August 30 and 31 in Dhaka at the ministerial level would tackle the question of bank-protection works.

115. Press release of the High Commission of India in Dhaka refuting insinuation of the involvement of the Border Security Force in the bomb blasts in Bangladesh in August.

Dhaka, October 3, 2005.

The High Commission of India is deeply concerned over reports in the Bangladeshi media quoting DG BDR as saying that during the recently held talks between the Director Generals of the BDR and BSF in New Delhi, the Indian side had not protested the statement of DG BDR that Indian criminals were involved in the August 17th bomb blasts in Bangladesh. Today (3rd October 2005) Director General (External Publicity), Ministry of Foreign Affairs, is also quoted as defending DG BDR's statements.

This is totally inaccurate and grossly misleading. DG BSF had firmly refuted all such allegations during the talks. Government of India in their Press Release dated 30th September 2005 had already rejected these allegations as baseless and scurrilous, regretting that these have been made against a friendly country, particularly after DG BSF and DG BDR had held useful and constructive talks.

DG BDR has alleged Indian involvement based on the reported arrest of an "Indian national", one Giasuddin in Satkhira. In this context, the High Commission of India would like to emphasize that, after seeing these reports in the Bangladeshi media, High Commission of India had, on September 6th 2005, sought credible inputs from the Government of Bangladesh establishing the identity of this person. The High Commission of India has further requested the Government of Bangladesh for grant of consular access in the event this person is an Indian national. Regrettably, there has been no response from the concerned Bangladeshi authorities till date.

The High Commission of India would like to reiterate that in the interests of friendship and good relations between our two countries, it would be useful to directly discuss and clarify doubts or allegations rather than through the media.

116. Press note of the Ministry of Home Affairs on the talks between the Home Secretaries of India and Bangladesh.New Delhi, October 26, 2005.

The 6th Home Secretary level bilateral two day talks on 27th and 28th October, 2005 between India and Bangladesh on security and border management issues begin here tomorrow. The Indian delegation will be led by the Union Home Secretary, Shri V.K. Duggal and the Bangladesh delegation by their Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, Mr. Safar Raj Hossain. Bangladesh Delegation is arriving this evening for talks.

During the talks, Shri Duggal is likely to convey to the leader of the Bangladesh delegation that India would like to see a stable, prosperous and secure Bangladesh and that it is prepared to cooperate with Bangladesh in its economic development. He is also going to raise India's concerns arising from presence and activities of Indian Insurgent Groups (IIGs) in Bangladesh which is a major security threat to India and the safety, security and stability of Bangladesh itself.

Other issues likely to be raised by Shri Duggal relate to cross border illegal movement from Bangladesh and proper implementation and understanding of the 1975 border guidelines so that the border fence and development works in the border area can be undertaken without any hindrance. India is also likely to raise the issue of urgent need for convening the meeting of the Joint Boundary Working Group to address the pending issues related to demarcation of the land boundary, adverse possessions and enclaves.

The Bangladesh side will also be called upon to finalise their response to the pending bilateral treaties on extradition, mutual assistance

1. At the end of the talks on October 28 Home Secretary Duggal told a media briefing that "there is a broad agreement on all issues. But we are still busy putting some commas and full stops here and there. Our talks have been very positive." According to media reports signing of the minutes and the joint press briefing by the two Home Secretaries was delayed repeatedly. Media reports said the two sides reiterated their stated positions. The Indian side brought up the issue of extradition treaty with Bangladesh to enable New Delhi to get custody of key militants from the North-East region who were believed to be operating training camps for insurgents in that country. Indian Home Secretary was supposed to have expressed Indian concern arising from the presence and activities of Indian insurgent groups in legal matters, psychotropic and narcotic substances and consular access¹. During their stay, the Bangladeshi Delegation is expected to call on the Union Home Minister and the External Affairs Minister/ Foreign Secretary.

117. Joint press statement issued at the end of the Home Secretary-level talks between India and Bangladesh.

New Delhi, October 29, 2005.

The Home Secretary - level talks between Bangladesh and India were held in New Delhi from October 27th-28th, 2005. Both sides approached all issues on the basis of mutual understanding and appreciation of each other's position and sensitivities, on the basis of reciprocity and mutual confidence.

Both sides noted that the relations between India and Bangladesh are multifaceted and rich in its content and scope. They recognized that further strengthening of these relations will not only be in the larger interests of the two friendly neighbouring countries, but also will make an important contribution to the peace, progress and prosperity of all their peoples. The two countries, they agreed, had a shared stake in enhancing understanding and promoting cooperation with specific initiatives in all key areas of their bilateral relations.

In this context, during their talks the two sides, inter alia, covered the following issues:

- i. Security related issues: Both sides agreed to work on security related issues closely. Both sides agreed to provide consular access to the insurgents/ criminals arrested by either side and to share information about activities of insurgents. Both sides also agreed that all possible measures will be taken to prevent smuggling of arms and explosives. Bangladesh side clarified that media reports about India's involvement in the bomb blast in Bangladesh in August 2005 do not reflect the official position of the Government of Bangladesh. Bangladesh side also mentioned that the investigation was on.

¹ in Bangladesh which was a major security threat to India and the safety, security and stability of Bangladesh. Duggal was stated to have impressed upon his Bangladesh counterpart that India wanted to see a stable Bangladesh and India was fully prepared to cooperate with it in its economic development. Other contentious issues that came up for discussion related to cross-border illegal movement and proper implementation and understanding of the border guidelines.

ii. Fencing of the Border: The issue of fencing at the border was discussed by both sides. The Bangladesh side requested the Indian side to provide specific details of the places where fencing is proposed within 150 yards of the international border.

iii. Cooperation in combating the problem of drugs and narcotics: Both sides stressed on the need for early signing of the agreement for cooperation in combating the problem of drugs and narcotics particularly Phensidyle and to cooperate and exchange information.

iv. Trans border crimes: Both sides agreed to the need for enhanced vigilance and action to check trans-border crimes. Both sides stated that their Governments did not encourage any type of smuggling and are resolute in their determination to effectively curb smuggling.

v. Cross border movement: The Indian side raised the need, for a high level meeting to discuss the problem of Illegal cross border movement from Bangladesh and to come up with a suitable mechanism/ protocol. Both sides agreed to provide consular access to each other's arrested nationals on a reciprocal basis.

vi. Resumption of the meetings of Joint Boundary Working Groups: Bangladesh side has agreed to convey the dates for the early meetings of the JBWGs after SAARC Summit.

vii. Extradition treaty and agreement on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters: Bangladesh side agreed to expedite its response to the Indian proposals.

1. Hoem Secretary V. K. Duggal who led the Indian delegation said at the end of the talks that he and his counterpart Sarfaraz Hossain interacted in a "friendly atmosphere" and that the "discussions were constructive with a positive frame of mind."

viii. Review of Revised Travel Arrangements (RTA) signed In 2001: This is due for revision In May, 2006. Bangladesh side noted the Indian suggestion to setup a Joint Committee to review the RTA.

ix. Miscellaneous Issues: Various other Issues of mutual Interest were also discussed in a spirit of friendliness and cooperation.

118.. Questions answered by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at his press conference about relations with Bangladesh during his visit to Dhaka for the SAARC Summit.

Dhaka, November 13, 2005.

* * * *

Question (Seems Guha, Daily News and Analysis): We are having quite a lot of problems with Bangladesh. Now your meeting with the Prime Minister, has it led to anything, lessening of tension, more understanding? What do you expect?

Prime Minister : I have always stated that a strong, prosperous Bangladesh is in India's interest. If there are any misgivings about our intention, I on behalf of the Government of India have always been willing to discuss this and remove those misgivings. I do believe that our two countries have a great deal in common. We can work out joint strategies to collectively get rid of chronic poverty that afflicts millions and millions of our people. I believe my visit here certainly has helped to improve the atmosphere. I did go over various issues with Begum Khaleda Zia and her response was constructive. I very much hope that the Prime Minister can visit us in Delhi. I invited her and she said she would be glad to come. There are no insurmountable issues between us. India will do nothing to hurt the interest of Bangladesh. By helping Bangladesh we help ourselves. That is the motivation which guides me and my Government.

Question : ...Inaudible...

Prime Minister : We have raised all those issues and recently the Home Secretaries of the two countries met where there was extensive discussion on this subject. I think some positive steps forward have been indicated¹.

1. On November 13 the Prime Minister had a meeting with Begum Khaleda Zia on the sidelines of the Dhaka Summit when various issues of bilateral interests were discussed. During the talks they stressed the need to resolve all bilateral disputes through dialogue. Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran told the media that Prime Minister told her how SAARC could be made a stronger forum under her leadership, during her chairmanship of the organization. Asked whether terrorism was discussed Saran said: "We want neither Indian nor Bangladeshi land to be used by the terrorists." Dr. Singh had also meetings with former President Ershad and former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, who is currently the leader of the Opposition in Bangladesh Parliament. Saran quoted Prime Minister as telling Begum Zia, "we are prepared to work together with Bangladesh to resolve any outstanding issues in a spirit of friendship in a very constructive way. We need to ensure that the borders are peaceful...Neither India nor Bangladesh should allow its soil to be used by forces inimical to the other country." He however, clarified no particular issue was discussed in detail but the Prime Minister told her: "India will be with any government chosen by the people of Bangladesh for the pursuance of common objectives."

126. Keynote Address by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran at the Seminar organized by Bhutan-India Friendship Association and the India-Bhutan Foundation.

New Delhi, December 3, 2005.

Mr. Chairman, Shri Jagdish Hiremath,

His Excellency Lyonpo Dago Tshering, the Ambassador of Bhutan, friends and colleagues,

Thank you very much for the opportunity to be with you at the Seminar

1. At the end of the third meeting of India – Bhutan group on border management held in New Delhi the previous month (in September), the Secretary (Border Management) D. K. Sankaran told journalists the meeting was held in a “cordial atmosphere” and a number of issues were discussed. He said that a major military action on Indian insurgents by Bhutan in December 2003 had led to a substantial drop in insurgent groups’ activities in Assam. Earlier the Bhutanese Home Secretary who headed the Bhutanese delegation at the talks said that there were no camps of Indian insurgents groups or militants operating from the Bhutanese soil. “We are trying to understand each other’s security threat,” he said.

today. It would be difficult to find a subject that is more agreeable than the one we have today.

2. I would like to compliment the Bhutan-India Friendship Association and the India-Bhutan Foundation for their initiative in organizing this event. A special word of appreciation must go to the tireless efforts of my good friend His Excellency Lyonpo Dago Tshering. But above all, we are beholden to the patronage and encouragement provided both to the Association and the Foundation by His Royal Highness the Chhoetse Penlop Jigme Khesar Namgyal Wangchuk. His commitment to the revitalization of the Bhutan-India Friendship Association is a matter of great encouragement to all those who are, in their own ways, engaged in the task of further cementing India-Bhutan relations. We in the Government do hope that the past few months that His Royal Highness has lived in India has enabled him to experience some of the goodwill that exists in India for Bhutan.

3. The India-Bhutan relationship is based on the firm foundations of shared historical and cultural linkages. Its roots in the modern times go back to the foundations laid by the late King Jigme Dorji Wangchuck and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. Over successive decades, the relationship has deepened and acquired an abiding resilience. It is a relationship that we in India are justly proud of as an example of good neighbourliness.

4. It is perhaps an oft-repeated observation, but nonetheless worth reiterating that our countries have a vital stake in each other's well-being and prosperity. Our actions and words speak for themselves. The destiny of two neighbours such as India and Bhutan, regardless of their size, is a shared one. Stability, peace and economic advancement are indivisible and the most durable guarantors of peaceful coexistence. It is based on this premise that India has been privileged to assist Bhutan in its task of nation-building.

5. From humble beginnings in 1961, our assistance to Bhutan's current Five Year Plan stands at Rs.1984 crores. We have evolved a comprehensive framework for economic, commercial and trade linkages. The result is that today our development cooperation encompasses projects in such varied areas as health, education, roads & bridges, power, trade & industry, civil aviation, culture urban development and housing, judiciary, media, human resource development, information technology and tele-communications.

6. Our cooperation has been guided by the priorities set by the Royal Government of Bhutan. In setting these priorities, what Bhutan has shown to us and to the rest of the world is that economic development does not have to be at the cost of social and cultural traditions, nor indeed at the expense of a fragile eco-system. This is no mean achievement in the contemporary era of globalization and must be a lesson to all developing countries. It has contributed to the shaping of a stable society, confident in its ability to synthesize modernity with tradition.

7. Perhaps the most eloquent testimony to this fine balance has been the tapping of the vast hydro resources of Bhutan. After the successes of Chukha and Kurichu, we are today at the threshold of commissioning the mega 1020 MW Tala hydro-electric project on the river Wangchu in the first half of next year. The project will generate 5 million units of power and lead to major gains for both Bhutan and India in a manner that is environmentally sound and commercially viable in the long term. We are, therefore, deeply optimistic about our future cooperation in this sector where further projects are under active consideration.

8. India and Bhutan share a common boundary of about 700 kms. The open borders, visa free regime and duty free trade across this border could not have been sustainable without complete understanding between our two leaderships of our mutual security concerns. The military operations conducted by the Royal Bhutanese Army in December 2003-January 2004 against Indian Insurgent Groups in Bhutan were a milestone in our joint response to terrorist activities. We look forward to continuing this cooperation by jointly upgrading our border infrastructure and management, including through better roads and communication links as well as information sharing. Such cooperation is a basic pre-requisite for securing close and friendly relations between countries that share a long land boundary. There are other related issues, which will continue to require our attention. As you are aware, the threat from Maoist groups, and their linkages with Indian left wing extremists and insurgent groups are of mutual concern.

9. We are following with keen interest the major Constitutional changes that have been initiated by His Majesty the King of Bhutan. The draft Constitution was released in March this year for public debate and it is expected that many of the changes flowing from it would be in place in the next two-three years. We wish the Royal Government of Bhutan and the people of Bhutan all success in the course of this political transition and we look forward to working with Bhutan during this period and beyond.

10. I have no doubt that the eminent personalities and experts who are participating in this Seminar will reflect on the coming years and the manner in which the interests of the people of our two countries can best be served. I should mention that the Government of India's objective is not just to consolidate and preserve the exemplary relations we have, but to take them to an even higher level of mutually-beneficial cooperation and understanding. Your deliberations will be most useful in this regard.

11. Allow me to take this opportunity of sharing a few thoughts with you on the future. In today's increasingly inter-dependant world, we need to focus more on how we can further integrate our economies. We should evolve a development and economic cooperation strategy, which complements our mutual resources endowments. Clearly, we see great potential in the areas of hydro resources and the need for better border and road infrastructure while preserving the rich bio-diversity and flora and fauna of the Himalayas. We also need to do more in the area of human resource development, skill generation and upgradation, including in the field of information technology. The information revolution is upon us. We have to be mindful of the young profile of our two populations whose expectations for a better life will have to be met. The younger generation needs to be sensitized and educated about the benefits of the close partnership between India and Bhutan. Greater public outreach programmes, including Seminars such as this, will play a key role in this endeavour.

12. In many ways, our approach to Bhutan is subsumed under our overall vision for our region. It is incumbent upon us to bequeath to coming generations a region that is an engine of growth for the world economy. This requires clarity of thought and a mature appreciation of where the true interests of our peoples lie. As India and Bhutan have shown, inter-State boundaries need not be barriers but the gateways to joint and mutually-beneficial undertakings.

127. Reaction of the Official Spokesperson to a question on the announcement by His Majesty the King of Bhutan.New Delhi, December 19, 2005.

We have seen the announcement¹ by His Majesty the King of Bhutan Jigme Singye Wangchuck that His Royal Highness Jigme Khesar Namgyal Wangchuk will be enthroned as the fifth Druk Gyalpo before 2008.

This is a significant moment in Bhutan's history, which for the last three decades has been guided and shaped by His Majesty Jigme Singye Wangchuck. His Majesty's contribution to the development of Bhutan and the affection among the people of Bhutan for His Majesty are well known.

His Majesty has also announced that a new Constitution based on a system of parliamentary democracy will be put in place in 2008. His commitment to an open and extensive process of consultations with the people of Bhutan in this regard is yet another symbol of His Majesty's statesmanship and wisdom.

India, as always, wishes the people and Government of Bhutan continued peace and stability, and the fulfillment of their aspirations as they embark towards the new Constitutional system.

We wish His Royal Highness Jigme Khesar Namgyal Wangchuk all success as he prepares to assume the throne within the framework of a new Constitution.

1. The Spokesperson was referring to the announcement by the King to a gathering of 8000 people composed of herders, farmers, monks, students, that he would like "his people to know that the Chhoetse Penlop (Crown Prince) will be enthroned as the Fifth Druk Gyalpo in 2008." The 25-year old Crown Prince Dasho Jigme Khesar Namgyal Wangchuk is the eldest of the King's five sons and five daughters. The current King took the throne in 1972 at the age of 17.

128. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the meeting of Maldives President Gayoom with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh.

New Delhi, March 28, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good Evening. Let me first give you some details of the visit of President Gayoom of the Maldives. Today, he has held bilateral discussions with the Prime Minister. Tomorrow he would be meeting the President and there will be calls by Ministers on President Gayoom. External Affairs Minister as well as Raksha Mantri will be calling on him. The day after there will be a call by the Leader of the Opposition.

During their discussions today, naturally, Prime Minister and President Gayoom went through the range of bilateral issues and regional issues. In particular, President Gayoom thanked the Prime Minister for the large scale, timely and effective assistance that India had extended in the aftermath of the Tsunami disaster. He also briefed Prime Minister on the recent developments in Maldives including the initiatives for reform undertaken by President Gayoom himself¹.

On the economic issues it was felt that the Joint Commission between India and the Maldives, which has not been held since the year 2000, should be held soon and it should be used to reprioritize the economic agenda between the two countries. Also, it was agreed that the Memorandum of Understanding under which India extends assistance to the Indira Gandhi Memorial Hospital in Maldives and is due to lapse in the next year, will be renewed when it runs out.

1. At the end of his visit Maldives President had announced that it would extend "full support" to India's entry into the United Nations Security Council as a permanent member. "I have accordingly assured the Prime Minister Manmohan Singh of our full support to India in this matter," President Gayoom told a press conference in New Delhi on the 30th March. On March 23 the Spokesperson Navtej Sarna briefing media had said that India and Maldives enjoy close and cordial relations. India has played an active and constructive role in the field

129. Press statement of the Ministry of External Affairs on the talks between External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh and Foreign Minister of Maldives Dr. Ahmed Shaheed.

New Delhi, August 12, 2005.

External Affairs Minister Shri Natwar Singh warmly received the newly appointed Foreign Minister of Maldives H.E. Dr. Ahmed Shaheed today. Dr. Shaheed is on a visit to New Delhi on August 11-14, 2005.

Maldives is a country with which India enjoys the friendliest and closest of neighbourly relations and it was no coincidence that the Foreign Minister had chosen India as the first country for his overseas visit. We have no doubt that the visit by the Maldives Foreign Minister would further strengthen and consolidate the excellent ties between the two countries.

Maldives has made major strides in developing its economy and social sectors under the stewardship of H.E. President Gayoom. Indo-Maldives relations have grown from strength to strength. As partners in progress the two countries have completed a number of cooperative development projects in the health and human resource development area, including the Indira Gandhi Memorial Hospital and the Maldives Institute of Technical Education. We will shortly sign a Memorandum of Understanding for the construction of a Hospitality and Tourism Faculty in Male.

The number of Indians travelling is increasing rapidly and Maldives, with its serene islands, could become a great attraction for Indian tourists.

Our two countries also cooperate in the areas of defence and security, including the training of Maldives personnel in Indian institutes. This cooperation would receive a further stimulus during the visit of our Chief of Defence Staff to the Maldives in November this year. We are very pleased that the Hon'ble Defence Minister of the Maldives is also proposing to visit India.

of public health and human resources development in Maldives. India's prompt and effective assistance to Maldives during the recent Tsunami disaster was highly appreciated by the Government and people of Maldives. The present high-level visit would serve to further strengthen the friendly and cooperative ties that exist between the two countries. President Gayoom last visited India in August 2000.

We wish to take this opportunity to sincerely thank the Government of Maldives for its invaluable support to India's candidature as a Permanent Member of the UN Security Council and its co-sponsorship of the G-4 resolution aimed at reforms of the United Nations and its organs.

The Government of Maldives under the leadership of President Gayoom has also embarked on bold political reforms. As a democracy ourselves, we welcome the progress Maldives has made on the road to democracy. A stable, prosperous and democratic Maldives is in the interest of the people of the Maldives, and of India.¹

Bilateral relations have been nurtured and strengthened by regular contacts at the highest levels."
 Recalling the visit of President Gayoom of Maldives from March 27 to April 1, 2005, Sarna said President Gayoom held detailed discussions with the Prime Minister and identified the areas in which cooperation was to be further accelerated. These included inter alia development of human resources, environment and tourism and science and technology. 130. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on India-Nepal Home Secretary-level talks.

New Delhi, January 20, 2005.

Home Secretary-level talks between India and Nepal were held at New Delhi on January 19-20, 2005. The Indian delegation was led by Shri Dharendra Singh, Home Secretary, Government of India, and the Nepalese delegation was led by Mr. Chandi Prasad Shrestha, Home Secretary, His Majesty's Government of Nepal. These were preceded by a meeting of the Joint Working Group on Border Management on January 17-18, 2005.

These meetings are part of a network of institutional mechanisms that India and Nepal have in the area of security cooperation. These include the Home Secretary-level talks, Bilateral Consultative Group on Security Issues, the Joint Working Group on Border Management and the District Coordination Committees.

During the meetings, both sides exchanged views on various security related issues of mutual concern including the Maoist insurgency in Nepal and the security situation in the border areas. The modalities for strengthening bilateral cooperation in combating activities of terrorists, criminals and other hostile elements who are engaged in activities inimical to the interests of both India and Nepal, were also discussed.

The Nepalese side thanked the Indian side for the continuous support provided by GOI to HMGN in dealing with the challenges posed by the Maoist insurgency. In this context, a specific reference was made to the recent programme launched by the two Government for modernization of the Nepal Police by providing high-quality training in counter-insurgency and equipment.

Both sides reiterated their resolve not to allow their respective territories to be used for activities inimical to the interests of the other side. In this spirit, both sides agreed to further intensify cooperation through regular meetings and information sharing between the concerned authorities of adjoining border districts and at other levels.

Following the discussions, the texts of the Extradition Treaty and the Agreement on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters between Nepal and India were finalized and initialed. The two sides agreed to expeditiously complete their internal procedures to enable early formalization of these agreements. Once implemented, these instruments would significantly strengthen the legal framework for combating crime and terrorism.

India and Nepal have also launched several projects for improving infrastructure along the border and better rail and road connectivity. These projects would not only facilitate trade and transit but would also contribute to better border management and enhanced security.

Both sides were fully satisfied with the outcome of the meetings which were held in a traditionally friendly and cordial atmosphere. It was agreed to hold the next round of talks in Nepal within one year. It was also agreed to hold the next meeting of the JWG on Border Management in Nepal within six months.

131. Statement on Developments in Nepal.

New Delhi, February 1, 2005.

The King of Nepal has dissolved the multiparty government led by Prime Minister Deuba, and has decided to constitute a Council of Ministers under his own Chairmanship. An emergency has been declared and fundamental rights have been suspended. These developments constitute a serious setback to the cause of democracy in Nepal and cannot but be a cause of grave concern to India.

There are also reports that several political leaders have been confined to their residences. The safety and welfare of the political leaders must be ensured and political parties must be allowed to exercise all the rights enjoyed by them under the Constitution.

India has consistently supported multiparty democracy and constitutional monarchy enshrined in Nepal's Constitution as the two pillars of political stability in Nepal. This principle has now been violated with the King forming a government under his Chairmanship.

We have always considered that in Nepal, it is imperative to evolve a broad national consensus, particularly between the monarchy and political parties, to deal with the political and economic challenges facing the country.

The latest developments in Nepal bring the monarchy and the mainstream political parties in direct confrontation with each other. This can only benefit the forces that not only wish to undermine democracy but the institution of monarchy as well.

India has a longstanding and unique relationship with Nepal, with which it shares an open border, a history of strong cultural and spiritual values and wide-ranging economic and commercial links. We will continue to support the restoration of political stability and economic prosperity in Nepal, a process which requires reliance on the forces of democracy and the support of the people of Nepal.

132. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on the postponement of the SAARC Summit and developments in Nepal.

New Delhi, February 2, 2005.

This is a statement relating to the XIII SAARC Summit. We have formally communicated to the Government of Bangladesh that India would not be able to attend the forthcoming SAARC Summit in Dhaka on the scheduled dates. A request has been made for fresh dates to be worked out through consultations among the member States. This decision has been taken against the background of recent developments in our neighbourhood, which have caused us grave concern. The security situation in Dhaka has deteriorated in recent days following the fatal attack on the former Finance Minister of Bangladesh, Mr. SAMS Kibria. The Government of India wishes to reiterate its continuing and consistent commitment to the SAARC process, and to increased regional cooperation among member States. It is only in an environment free from political turmoil and violence that a Summit would yield the desired outcome. That is the statement which I wish to make this afternoon.

Question : What is your assessment of the security situation in Nepal?

Foreign Secretary : The information that we have is a little limited because all communications between Nepal and the outside world continue to be interrupted. There are no telephone communications possible. There is no Internet. We are ourselves in touch with the Embassy of India in Kathmandu only through our own satellite telephone link. We are also aware of the fact that all international flights to Kathmandu except for the Royal Nepal Airlines have not been operating since yesterday. But I am happy to tell you that today an Indian Airlines flight has proceeded to Kathmandu at 1215 hours. Perhaps another flight would also be mounted sometime later today in order to ensure that Indian passengers who are stranded in Kathmandu are able to come back home. We are also in possession of information that the political party leaders, those in Kathmandu, have been detained at their respective residences; their movements have been restricted; and their houses are being guarded by Royal Nepal Army personnel. We have also learnt that some political party leaders have been arrested and detained by the security forces. We have some information, for example, from some border towns on the India-Nepal border. We are unable to really make a very comprehensive assessment of the situation in the absence of information because of the complete interruption of communications. We hope that these communications will be restored soon.

Question : Have you communicated to the Nepalese Government or the King? Has there been any formal communication?

Foreign Secretary : I have spoken a little while ago to my Bangladesh counterpart and I have communicated to him the decision that I read out to you in this statement. Our External Affairs Minister has also spoken to the King of Bhutan as well as to the Foreign Minister of Sri Lanka also on the same lines. I have also spoken to the Sri Lanka Foreign Secretary in this regard. I was unable to get through to the Pakistani Foreign Secretary but we have communicated the same decision to the Pakistan Foreign Ministry.

Question : And Nepal?

Foreign Secretary : In Nepal, as I mentioned, the difficulty is that the communications are all interrupted. But we have informed our Ambassador in Kathmandu with the request that he should convey this in the best manner possible to the Nepali Foreign Ministry, if he is able to get in touch with them.

Question : Did India anticipate these political developments in Nepal? Were these concerns conveyed to them?

Foreign Secretary : These concerns have been expressed repeatedly to the King of Nepal, on numerous occasions. As we pointed out in our statement yesterday, our constant refrain has been that the two pillars of political stability in Nepal are Constitutional Monarchy and Multiparty Democracy. We have also advised him against taking the kind of step that he has taken, pointing out that this would only mean that monarchy will be in direct confrontation not only with the Maoist insurgency but also the political parties. I believe that the Maoists have issued a very strong statement condemning the move that has been made by the King. This only bears out the apprehension that we have had.

Question: You have said that whatever developments are there in Nepal, India is assisting with military help or helping militarily to fight the Maoists. Has there been any talks about that?

Foreign Secretary: As the situation exists today no communication has been possible. We have to watch and see how this situation evolves. Yes, we shall certainly endeavour that the situation that has developed we continue the dialogue. Whatever happens in the future, we shall certainly try to keep the communication open.

Question: One reason for not attending the Bangladesh Summit could be that the Prime Minister would have to shake hands with the Nepalese King?

Foreign Secretary: I shall draw your attention to the statement that we have issued, we have clearly stated: "This decision has been taken against the background of recent developments in our neighbourhood which have caused us grave concern". Whatever its implications they are quite clear.

Question : ...Inaudible... is the Nepal situation and that the King announced that he would be going to Bangladesh. Was that a part reason for the decision?

Foreign Secretary : I again draw your attention to the statement that I read out which says very very clearly - I do not think there is any ambiguity in this

- that this decision has been taken against the background of recent developments in our neighbourhood which have caused us grave concern. Certainly, the developments in Nepal as well as the continuing and deteriorating security situation in Bangladesh, these are the two key factors.

Question : I have two questions. Do we fear military confrontation with the Maoists in Nepal now? Are we going to review our military assistance to Nepal?

Foreign Secretary : The confrontation between the security forces in Nepal and the Maoist insurgency has been already continuing for some time.

Question : And our military assistance?

Foreign Secretary : As I mentioned in answer to an earlier question, currently we are not able to really make a comprehensive assessment of the situation because the communications have all broken down. We have not really been able to engage with Nepal during the last couple of days because of this. What I have said today is in relation to the situation as it exists today. Yesterday we made a statement in the context of what the situation was yesterday. As the situation evolves, we will of course be reassessing the situation, taking fresh decisions, and we will certainly take you into confidence.

Question : Yesterday our security team was sent to Bangladesh to assess the security situation there. Has the team come back? If it has come back, has it given any report?

Foreign Secretary : The team has not yet come back. It is still in Dhaka. But the statement, which I read out is of course also based on the assessment that they have communicated to us from Dhaka regarding the security situation in the capital.

Question : Bangladesh has been very keen to go ahead with the SAARC Summit. Yesterday the Bangladesh Foreign Minister was quoted as saying that the King of Nepal has conveyed his acceptance. I understand the context in which the decision has been taken. But do you feel that India will be seen acting like a Big Brother in postponing the SAARC Summit? Do you feel there will be some implications for India's foreign policy in the wake of this decision?

Foreign Secretary : I think it is very clear why we have taken this decision. I think this decision is a logical outcome of our assessment of the situation in the neighbourhood. There is no question of behaving like a Big Brother. Our main objective is to make certain that the SAARC Summit comes up with the desired outcomes. If you have the kind of environment, political environment and security environment, which prevails today, we genuinely believe that the desired outcomes are not possible. So, we should wait until the time is propitious to have such a very important and significant Summit.

Question : Nepal King has dismissed four Governments, which were in office in the last three years. How do you view that?

Foreign Secretary : India's position with regard to the political situation in Nepal has been very consistent and has been expressed time and again, which is to say that we believe that the two pillars of political stability in Nepal are multiparty democracy and constitutional monarchy. We have also pointed out in our statement yesterday that the step which has been taken is in violation of this principle which is enshrined in the Constitution of Nepal.

Question : You said you have requested for fresh dates for the summit. Did you specify those dates and what would have to happen in Nepal and Bangladesh for you to accept ...

Foreign Secretary : We have not indicated from our own side fresh dates, but we have conveyed to our Bangladesh colleagues as well as to our Pakistani colleagues who are the current Chairman, that fresh dates should emerge through a process of mutual consultations as it always does in the past.

Question : What will have to happen in Nepal and Bangladesh...

Foreign Secretary : I do not think I want to speculate about what is the kind of evolution, which we will be looking at or benchmarks, which we will be looking at. We have pointed out the reasons why we have taken this decision. Obviously we would be looking for amelioration of the situation or an improvement of the situation, which would dispel some of the concerns that we are expressing today.

Question : What are the specific threats directed at our Prime Minister that made you take this decision? All other Heads of States and Governments are going. So, is it because there was a specific threat to the security of the Prime Minister?

Foreign Secretary : Obviously, a certain security assessment has had to be made in the light of the most recent developments including the three bomb blasts which took place in Dhaka yesterday, and including at the high security zone where the Sheraton hotel is located. Every country would make its own assessment with regard to the security situation. We will not speak on their behalf. Our responsibility is with regard to the safety and security of our leaders. In the light of the assessment that we have received, we believe that the time is not propitious for holding such a summit.

Question: My question to you is: this is India's assessment; no other country has similar assessment: Would India not be isolated in this way. Is it in line with the Indian strategic and diplomatic interests keeping the long-term future interests of India?

Foreign Secretary: This is our assessment. We have communicated it to other neighbouring countries. As I told you, the External Minister has spoken to the Bhutanese King. He has spoke to the Foreign Minister of Sri Lanka. We have shared our assessment with them. We do not believe that this would isolate us. India will have to make her own assessment and take her own decisions. What ever our independent assessment we have shared with our neighbours. We have told you our decision. That we have taken this decision is quite clear. I do not think that is any danger of being isolated.

Question: I want a clarification. Has there been no contact with any Nepalese representative or dialogue between yesterday and today?

Foreign Secretary: No. Our Embassy in Nepal did try to establish some contact with Nepalese authorities. Our Defence attaché also did try to establish contacts with the Nepalese army officers or try to talk with them on telephone. But so far this has not been found possible.

Question : Do not you think that India-Bangladesh relations in any case are not at their best point, and this kind of decision could be seen as a unilateral one or India taking the lead in not getting the SAARC Summit to go ahead. Would it not affect India-Bangladesh relations?

Foreign Secretary : We have set out very clearly the reasons why we have taken this decision. It is not directed against this or that country. It is the result of an assessment of the situation, which prevails in the neighbourhood. Nobody can deny that there is a serious situation, which is prevailing in the neighbourhood. What has happened in Nepal is not an ordinary event. What has been taking place in Bangladesh is not something ordinary. If there is a continuing pattern of violence, which just on the eve of the Summit, seems to have been intensifying, these are objective facts. These are not something that we have manufactured ourselves. So, we have come to a certain decision based on assessment of objective reality in our neighbourhood. I do not think anybody can really fault us on that assessment.

Question : Was it not being speculated even before Nepal happened?

Foreign Secretary : We are not responsible for any speculation.

Question : Considering that Nepalese Army is dominated by Gorkhas and considering that Maoists are dominantly comprising of mainly non-Gorkhas, will you fear an increased bloodshed in Nepal? What could be the fallout of Nepal for India?

Foreign Secretary : Any increase in violence in Nepal will have its fall out in India. It has already had a fall out in India in terms of the very large exodus of ordinary Nepalis escaping violence and economic deprivation from Nepal. So, it stands to reason that if there is intensification of violence in the country it will have its impact on India. As you know, we have a completely open border with that country.

Question : You spoke of benchmarks. Is one of the benchmarks going to be...

Foreign Secretary : I did not speak about the benchmarks. I said that we have pointed out that there is a certain situation, a grave situation, which has come about in our neighbourhood, which is why we have taken such a decision. It is the amelioration or alleviation of this situation which would lead us to fresh ...

Question : If we spell it out in our terms it would mean a return to democracy in Nepal. Right?

Foreign Secretary : I do not want to speculate upon what it will take in order for us to agree to fresh dates. As I said, this is something which has always been decided in mutual consultation with all the SAARC countries and that is especially the process that we have commended to Bangladesh, to engage in diplomatic consultation and we could come up with fresh dates.

Question: Just before Shri Vajpayee went to Pakistan for the SAARC Summit, there were attacks on Mussharraf. Despite that India decided to attend the SAARC Summit. Do you think the situation that prevails in Bangladesh is worst than the situation that Prevailed in Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: I have not come here to compare the situation in Bangladesh with that of Pakistan. I have clearly told you our assessment, both political and security; and that basis this decision has been taken. It will not be desirable to compare this with the situation in Pakistan, or Nepal or with that of any other country.

Question : Mr. Saran, would it be right if one were to deduce that this decision has been mainly made, there are other factors, because of India's unwillingness to share the same stage with the King at this juncture? Would it be right to deduce that?

Foreign Secretary : What we have said today has nothing to do with personalities. What we have expressed concern about is a very serious situation which has developed in Nepal. As I have pointed out to you that even as I speak there are virtually no communications. There is virtually no way in which we are able to engage the Government of Nepal in even making a proper assessment of what is happening. So, I do not think that our decision should be projected in terms of our willingness or unwillingness to share the platform with this or that leader. We have gone to SAARC summits in the past and shared the platform with various leaders of different political persuasions. I do not think that should be taken as the reason for our decision.

133. Response of the Official Spokesperson to media questions on developments in Nepal.

New Delhi, February 3, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening everybody.

Question: Can you tell us anything about further developments in Nepal. Have we been able to establish contact?

Answer: Yes, our Ambassador Shri Shiv Shankar Mukherjee met the new Foreign Minister Mr. Ramesh Nath Pandey this morning. Also, our Defence Attaché has established contact with officers in the Royal Nepal Army.

Question: What happened at the meetings?

Answer: They have had the meetings. I do not have a full read out from the meetings but the import of the statements of yesterday and day-before-yesterday was conveyed by our Ambassador.

Question: On Bangladesh, India has been the only country that has raised concerns?

Answer: I do not think that is the correct assessment. India is not the only country which has raised concerns regarding the deteriorating situation in Bangladesh. You only have to look around the websites of various organizations and countries to see the statements that have been issued. I have here with me, for instance, the statement issued by the EU Heads of Missions on the 1st of February in Dhaka after their meeting in which inter alia they have said that Government of Bangladesh must ensure swift action and thorough and transparent investigation, that is after the grenade attack on January 27; the EU heads of Missions at the same time expressed their concern about the current violence in the streets. Similar concerns have been expressed by US and UK. For instance, a press release issued on January 31 by US Embassy in Dhaka talks about the conversation between Assistant Secretary of State Christina Rocca and Foreign Minister Morshed Khan. She called to express her outrage at the January 27 attack etc and she urged the Government of Bangladesh to conduct a thorough investigation. These are available and it is not correct to say that it is only

India that has expressed concerns at the security situation which has been fast deteriorating over the past few weeks.

Question: Bangladesh has accused India of raising bilateral issues in SAARC in violation of the SAARC Charter...

Answer: As regards the Charter, let me clarify that we have not sought postponement (of the SAARC Summit) due to any developments in bilateral relations with SAARC countries. We have drawn attention to developments that have an impact on the entire region of South Asia, not just India. So, it is not correct to say that bilateral relations which are precluded by Charter have been cited by India.

Question: India has been providing military assistance to Nepal to help fight the Maoist rebels. Given the fact that they are quiet...by the King's move do you think that there could be some change in that?

Answer: I think this kind of a question was very extensively answered by the Foreign Secretary yesterday. There have been no developments for me to add to any of those responses. The developments that have taken place I have informed you - that is the meeting of our Ambassador and also the Defence Attaché.

Question: Did India talk to US, UK or other countries with regard to the developments in Nepal?

Answer: We have been in constant touch with several interlocutors and you can see the statements that have been issued by those countries - by US, UK etc - and their positions. You will see that there is a lot of convergence in our positions.

Question: Have communication links been restored in Nepal?

Answer: I think the status is more or less as it was yesterday.

Question: Has Nepalese Army Chief invited his Indian counterpart to visit Nepal?

Answer: I have no information on that. As I said today our Defence Attaché has established contact with operational level officer of the Royal Nepal Army.

Question: What will be the next dates for SAARC?

Answer: That has been answered yesterday.

Question: Have the flights to Nepal been restored?

Answer: I think the details were given yesterday on the special flight that was going yesterday. So far I have no other information. [Later: I understand three flights have gone today.]

Question: Bangladesh has said that it wants good relations with India. Do you think cancellation of the SAARC Summit will have an impact on our relations with our smaller neighbours?

Answer: I think this question was asked, if I may say so, in the "Big Brother" terminology yesterday and you had got an adequate answer.

136. Response of Official Spokesperson on questions regarding military assistance to Nepal.

New Delhi, February 10, 2005.

* * * *

Question: What is the status of India's assistance to Nepal especially since the Defence Minister² said in Bangalore that the military assistance will continue?

Answer: Defence Minister's statement is what he has said and I think the exact formulation is different from what you have said.

1. Meanwhile on February 12, the Prime Minister reiterated at his press conference in Bangalore that Nepal's future rested on the two pillars of monarchy and multi-party democracy. "What has happened is a setback for democracy. India hopes that there will be a change for the better and democracy will be restored at the earliest", added the Prime Minister.
 2. Defence Minister Pranab Mukherjee describing the recent developments as 'internal matter' said in Bangalore on February 9 that Indian response to the recent developments in Nepal would be dictated by the clout of the Maoists agitating against the abolition of monarchy in the Himalayan Kingdom. "There is extremist activity in a large number of our States. Because of the porous border there is a threat perception that once they (Maoists) exert more influence in Nepal, there will be an impact here. Our policy will be in keeping that in view... We recognize that if the security situation (in Nepal) deteriorates due to increased Maoist influence, it will heighten our own internal security threat", said the Defence Minister speaking in his capacity as a member of the Cabinet Committee on Security. He however maintained that India was concerned about the fall of democracy in Nepal and wanted multi-party democracy along with Constitutional monarchy to continue. "This has been affected. But after that (take over by the King) we have not said this should be done. But if Maoist activity is not constrained, this may cause problems to us," Pranab Mukherjee said. Revealing that the Royal Nepal Army (RNA) had sent a communiqué to the Indian Army seeking continuance of friendly relations, he said India had responded "along the same lines". "We have a long standing relationship with the RNA. That relationship stands. The RNA wanted reiteration of the same policy". India had recently supplied helicopters, mine-proof vehicles, guns and ammunition to the RNA to counter the Maoists. A second trench was in the offing but he did not clarify if that would be affected in the changed circumstances. In a parallel development the Nepalese Chief of Army Staff Gen. Pyar Jung Thapa met the Indian Ambassador Shiv Mukherjee at his own request on February 8 and requested Question: There have been reports that some political leaders have been released in Nepal. Any comments.

Answer: Yes, there are reports that some political leaders have been released in Nepal. We welcome this move but we would also like to say that the other leaders who are in custody should also be released.

Question: Mr. Sarna going back to the question on assistance to Nepal and Defence Minister's statement that defence ties between India and Nepal will stay, isn't there a contradiction between this and the way the Indian Government has reacted?

Answer: No. I think what has been said all along is that it is an evolving situation. Our responses that we have given on February 1 and the statement that has been issued yesterday are responses to the situation that exists in Nepal. We will respond to the situation as it evolves.

continuation of the military assistance. A spokesman of the Indian Embassy in Kathmandu confirming the meeting said "it is an evolving situation. India is reviewing some aspects of its relationship with Nepal".

137. Statement of Official Spokesperson on the call by the Nepalese Ambassador in New Delhi on External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh.

New Delhi, February 14, 2005.

At the request of the Ambassador of Nepal to India, Mr. Karna Dhoj Adhikari, EAM received him today in his office at 1030 hrs.

2. In course of the meeting, EAM conveyed Government of India's position as spelt out in the Official Statement issued on February 1, 2005, following the dismissal of the multi-party government of PM Deuba and assumption of executive power by the King of Nepal.

3. EAM also conveyed that it would be desirable that immediate steps are taken towards the release of political leaders, journalists and human rights activists; freedom of media is restored; multi-party democracy is reinstated, and efforts are made to evolve a national consensus to address the problems faced by the country.

4. EAM emphasized that India wishes to see a stable, peaceful and prosperous Nepal in its neighbourhood.¹

1. In another development six political parties of Nepal called for the "overthrow" of the monarch in Nepal. The political parties included the Nepali Congress and the Nepal Communist Party. They said they would launch a struggle for the restoration of democracy in the country. "We also appeal to the international community in general to rise to the occasion ... none of them, India, in particular, should be seen as strengthening the military hand of Nepal" a joint statement by the political parties said and added that only then could India win "the love, goodwill and friendship of millions of Nepalese". "King Gyanendra has murdered democracy along with the Constitution of Nepal, obtained in the wake of the glorious people's movement of 1990. Today in Nepal political leaders have been arrested and persecuted...civil rights are abrogated", the statement said.

138. Remarks of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at a Joint Press Conference with British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw.

New Delhi, February 18, 2005.

External Affairs Minister of India: We have discussed all these issues. We also had a good exchange of views on developments in our neighbourhood. I briefed Mr. Straw on my recent visit to Afghanistan and to Pakistan. On Nepal, we noted that the international community has strongly deplored the recent developments in Nepal, which constitute a serious setback to the cause of democracy in that country and are a cause of grave concern to us all. We agreed on the urgent need for restoration of normal democratic processes, release of political prisoners and the lifting of censorship on the media. The UK and India would continue to be in close touch with each other concerning further developments in Nepal.

* * * *

Question (Mr. Amit Baruah, The Hindu) : My question is to addressed to Mr. Natwar Singh. Sir, on Nepal, what more can India, in association with other partners, do as far as the restoration of democracy in Nepal is concerned?

External Affairs Minister of India : I do not at all blame you for asking the question you have about Nepal. But you must not blame me either for not answering it in any detail. We are watching the situation very very carefully. We will see what we can do if things do not change. We do not want in any way to hurt the people of Nepal at all. We continue to hope that His Majesty will sooner rather than later restart the political processes which will encourage the political parties to get together eventually leading to elections in Nepal and the Constitutional Monarchy functioning as such. ...I just might add, Amit, our Ambassador to Nepal, Shiv Shankar Mukherjee, is going back on Sunday carrying a message from us to His Majesty the King, a verbal message¹.

1. On March 18 the Communist Party of India (Marxist) supporting the UPA Government in New Delhi adopted a statement at its current session in New Delhi exhorting New Delhi not

(g) the steps taken by the Union Government in this regard?

The Minister of State in Ministry of External Affairs (Shri E. Ahamed)

(a) to (g) A Statement is placed on the Table of the House.

Statement

(a) & (b) Government of India has expressed grave concern following the dismissal of the multi-party government, declaration of emergency, arrest of political leaders and others and imposition of media censorship in Nepal on February 1, 2005. These developments constitute a serious setback to the cause of democracy and would only benefit the anti-constitutional forces.

to resume military supplies to Kathmandu as it would strengthen the King's "autocratic regime". The Polit Bureau of the Party expressed deep concern over the refusal of the King of Nepal to heed international public opinion and undo the steps taken to "suppress democracy". It said the arrest of political leaders and activists continued, civil liberties remained suspended and censorship of media was imposed. The Polit Bureau appreciated the stand taken by the Government of India calling for restoration of democracy in Nepal. It also said "the Government took the correct step to stop military supplies to Nepal, in conformity with this stand."

India has always believed that the challenges being faced by Nepal can be addressed effectively only on the basis of national consensus. In this context, we have called for a return to democratic processes at the earliest. All arrested political leaders, media personnel, intellectuals and human rights activists should be released immediately and allowed to exercise their Constitutional rights. On its part, India will continue to support all efforts for the restoration of political stability and economic prosperity in Nepal.

Government of India is aware that several Nepalese citizens, including political leaders, have crossed over to India following the imposition of emergency in the country. India and Nepal share an open border and regime of visa free movement. The Government is keeping a close watch on the situation and has taken appropriate steps to maintain security in the areas bordering Nepal.

(e), (f) & (g)

On January 18, 2005, a member of the Central Industrial Security Force contingent posted at the Embassy of India in Kathmandu, opened fire in which two of his colleagues died and three other security guards received splinter injuries.

An investigation team comprising officers from CBI and CISF reached Kathmandu the same day for investigations. The assailant was immediately arrested, suspended from service and was brought back to India for further investigations and trial¹.

1. On the same day in answer to another question, the government while stating that text of the new Extradition Treaty between Nepal and India was finalized during Home Secretary - level talks on January 19-20, 2005 and that the Treaty would enter into force following signature and ratification by the two Governments. The new Extradition Treaty would significantly strengthen the bilateral legal framework for combating crime and terrorism. It was also confirmed that there have been some violent attacks by Maoists in which Indian property and vehicles have suffered damage. It was further stated, "in such cases, the affected parties would approach the concerned authorities for appropriate compensation. The Government of India has not made any demand for compensation from His Majesty's Government of Nepal (HMG). Government of India strongly condemns such incidents and holds the Maoists responsible. We are keeping a close watch on the situation and are in touch with His Majesty's Government of Nepal, who have assured us of necessary measures to provide security for Indian interests."

140. Suo Motu statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh on developments in Nepal in the Rajya Sabha.

New Delhi, March 4, 2005.

There has been a broad national consensus on our foreign policy since independence. This consensus has enabled our country to play an influential and effective role in world affairs. Our Government shall continue to nurture this precious legacy and build upon it as we face a rapidly transforming international environment.

As the Hon'ble Members are aware, the UPA Government has laid great stress on our relations with our neighbours. Hence, I would like to take the House into confidence and make a statement on recent developments in the neighbourhood, specifically developments in Nepal and my recent visits to Afghanistan and Pakistan.

NEPAL As close friends and neighbours, India and Nepal share a unique relationship of friendship and cooperation underpinned by ties of language, culture and kinship. It is inevitable that developments in one country affect the other. We are committed to supporting all efforts aimed at restoring political stability and economic prosperity in Nepal.

Hence India is deeply concerned at the recent developments in Nepal following the dismissal of the multiparty government by His Majesty King Gyanendra on 1 February. An emergency has been imposed in that country, fundamental rights have been suspended and several political leaders, journalists, human rights activists and intellectuals have been detained. Some leaders have crossed over into India.

Media censorship continues. Telecom services have been curtailed. Indian television news channels are not being carried by Nepalese cable service providers. M/s United Telecom Ltd., an Indian joint venture company providing telephone services has not been allowed to operate since the imposition of the emergency.

The prolonged Maoist-sponsored bandh since 12 February has disrupted normal life causing enormous hardships to the people of Nepal. It also affected industrial activity. It was called off only on 26 February. Political parties have decided to launch a joint agitation against the actions of the King from 8 March.

The developments in Nepal constitute a serious setback to democracy and bring the monarchy and mainstream political parties in direct confrontation with each other. This can only benefit the forces that not only wish to undermine democracy in Nepal but the institution of monarchy as well. As a result, the task of both India and Nepal to address their shared security concerns has become difficult and complicated. We continue to believe that the principles of multi-party democracy and constitutional monarchy, enshrined in the country's constitution will be adhered to in order to ensure political stability in the country.

The Government of India responded promptly and unambiguously to the developments in Nepal. We have in a fraternal spirit called for the early restoration of multiparty democracy, immediate release of political leaders and lifting of restrictions on their constitutional rights and removal of media censorship. We have stressed the need and importance of forging a national consensus between the two constitutional forces, namely political parties and constitutional monarchy, to effectively deal with the political and economic challenges facing the country. Our views have been conveyed by our Ambassador to H.M. the King of Nepal.

Following the developments in Nepal, we recalled our Ambassador in Kathmandu to New Delhi for consultations. He has since returned to Kathmandu and will reiterate our views to the Nepalese leadership.

We are also in touch with other countries, to exchange views and share assessments in order to evolve a coordinated response of the international community to the developments in Nepal.

In view of the current disturbed conditions in Nepal, the question of military supplies to Nepal is under constant review.

India is concerned that a further deterioration of the situation in Nepal will result in spill-over effects across the open border, particularly in the neighbouring States. We have taken steps to strengthen security in border areas. The Sashastra Seema Bal which is responsible for guarding India-Nepal border has been asked to step up vigilance and patrolling along the border.¹

141. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the Working Visit of Foreign Minister of Nepal Ramesh Nath Pandey.

New Delhi, March 7, 2005.

The Foreign Minister of the Kingdom of Nepal, Mr. Ramesh Nath Pandey, is currently on a working visit to India. On his arrival today in Delhi, he was received by Shri Ranjit Rae, Joint Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs.

1. On March 24 Director General of the Sashastra Seema Bal (SSB) told a press conference in New Delhi that to check infiltration and other subversive activities along the India - Nepal border the SSB had proposed introduction of identification documents for border crossing, which would work as an access - control - mechanism in the "visa - free" regime. Speaking at a press conference ahead of its Raising Day on March 27, the SSB Director General Himanshu Kumar said that there had been instances of Maoists and Pakistani intelligence agents entering the country taking advantage of the porous border in the past. "Reports suggested that the Inter Services Intelligence (ISI) agents have been active in Nepal for the past one decade, pumping in counterfeit currency and carrying out espionage activities." Mr. Kumar said these agents were suspected to be active in the Nepalgunj, Kapilavastu, Sunauli and Bardia areas of Nepal and that the SSB was keeping a close watch on their movements. To put a check on infiltration and other trans - border crimes, Mr. Kumar said a need for introduction of identification documents for border crossing was being felt. "Ration cards, passports and even driving licences can be considered for the purpose", he said. Describing the situation on the Indo - Nepal border as "very sensitive" in the wake of the Royal coup and the subsequent crackdown on Maoists and political activists there, Mr. Kumar said the force has been put on "very high alert". He said from February onwards, the developments in Nepal had raised serious fears over infiltration by Maoists into the country. "There has been an exodus of some sort of Maoists and Nepalese political activist", he said, adding that the SSB had during this short span of time arrested six Maoists including four senior functionaries. The SSB recovered two self-loading rifles and an AK - series rifle from their possession. On reports about use of madrassas on Nepalese territory, Mr. Kumar said that some Pak agents were staying in suspect madrassas in border areas of Nepalgunj, Sunauli and Kapilavastu. On the nexus between the Nepalese Maoists and the Indian Naxalites, he said "we have information that some Maoists leaders have come and gone. Some Maoists took training here and came to seek shelter and treatment".

2. Mr. Pandey is accompanied by Mr. Madhu Raman Acharya, Nepal's Foreign Secretary.
3. The External Affairs Minister, Shri Natwar Singh, received Mr. Pandey shortly after noon today and also hosted a lunch in his honour at Hyderabad House.
4. During his meeting with EAM, Mr. Pandey explained the reasons why His Majesty, the King of Nepal, had taken steps to dismiss the multiparty Government, declare emergency, detain political party leaders and impose censorship on the press. He conveyed the King's assurance that steps are being taken to relax some of these measures in the near future. He also conveyed the King's commitment to restoring multiparty democracy at the earliest.
5. EAM conveyed to the Nepali Foreign Minister India's disappointment at the measures taken by His Majesty, the King of Nepal, which had served to only deepen the crisis facing Nepal. He pointed out that it was not only India, but several other friends of Nepal, which had expressed grave concern over these measures, which could endanger the institution of monarchy itself. The events since February, 2005 had only served to demonstrate that not only had the security situation in Nepal not improved, but that the country was now facing a deteriorating economic situation as well. This was likely to be further worsened by decisions of some donor countries to suspend aid to Nepal. Against this background, EAM conveyed that it would be in the interest of Nepal and its people, for the King and the political parties to join together on a national platform to unitedly deal with the multiple challenges facing Nepal, including the threat from Maoist insurgency. It was important for the King to take an early initiative in this regard.
6. The Foreign Minister of Nepal, who returns to Kathmandu on 9th March, will convey India's views to the King of Nepal and to His Majesty's Government of Nepal.
7. The EAM took the opportunity to express India's concern over the continuing blacking out of several Indian TV news channels by Nepal and also the difficulties being faced by Indian joint ventures in the country. He underlined the importance of lifting restrictions on Indian entities in Nepal at the earliest in the interest of India-Nepal friendship.

8. On the question of military supplies, EAM conveyed that the matter remained under constant review by the Indian side.¹

1. The spokesperson answered some questions at his press briefing on the same day about the visit of Nepalese Foreign Minister. They were:
Question: Did he convey any deadline for the restoration of democracy in Nepal?
Answer: He conveyed the King's assurance that steps are being taken to relax some of these measures in the near future.
Question: On the one hand stopping the military aid is a symbol of fighting the monarch, while on the other it might come in the way of fighting Maoists. What is your take on that?
Answer: Our take on this is that keeping in view these developments that took place and our statement of February 1, it has been decided to keep the issue of military supplies under constant review and no supplies have been delivered since February 1.
Question: Do you have a read out on other engagements on the Foreign Minister of Nepal?
Answer: It is a working visit so I do not have a programme here.
Question: Is he meeting the Prime Minister?
Answer: I do not have anything on that. I do not think he is meeting the Prime Minister. If he was I would have had something.
Question: What was the request from Nepali Foreign Minister?
Answer: I think I have given a very detailed account of what he said. Basically, he stated his position and he has taken on-board our position and said that he will go back and convey that to His Majesty the King of Nepal.
Question: Was the Nepalese Foreign Minister invited by us?
Answer: He has come here on a working visit. He has been received, as you know, by the External Affairs Minister for discussions. It is not a State Visit in which invitations have to go and come and acceptances have to be conveyed. This is a working visit to discuss the situation.
Question: Since February 1 has there been any request from Nepal for military aid?
Answer: You have to just step back and see there was a certain amount of assistance and aid being given, certain amount of training being given for several years to the RNA. Keeping in view the developments that took place it was decided to review the situation and while reviewing the situation it was decided that no supplies should be sent after February 1.
Question: Has he again today renewed the request for military assistance?
Answer: I do not have so much of details. But he was, of course during the talks told that the question of military supplies is under constant review.
Question: The Nepalese Finance Minister is on record saying that stopping of aid will help the terrorists. Did the Foreign Minister make a similar...?
Answer: Stopping of aid means stopping of development aid. When you are talking of developmental aid, we haven't (stopped it). The logic of reviewing the military aid etc is to see what the purpose of the military aid is, who is it helping, where is it going, what purpose is it performing. When the government is not sure on these counts then we have to keep this under constant review. The statement that this is actually going to strengthen the Maoists is up for speculation and therefore the need for constant review.

142. Question in the Lok Sabha: “Maoists’ Activities in Border Areas”.New Delhi, March 23, 2005.*Will the Minister of External Affairs be pleased to state:

- (a) whether the Union Government is aware of the growing activities of the Maoists in the country particularly in the border areas;
- (b) if so, the details thereof;
- (c) whether the Union Government has drawn or proposes to draw the attention of the Nepalese Government towards the increasing incidents of Maoists’ activities in border areas; and
- [d] if so, the details thereof?

The Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs (Rao Inderjit Singh) :

(a),(b),(c) & (d) Government of India is aware of and concerned about the implications of the growth of Maoist insurgency in Nepal because of the open border and the links between Nepal’s Maoists and Left Wing Extremist and other groups in India. The Maoist insurgency in Nepal has also fuelled migration of Nepalese into our border States. His Majesty’s Government of Nepal is aware of these concerns. Government of India has also taken steps to strengthen security in border areas and the Sashastra Seema Bal has intensified its patrolling along the India-Nepal Border¹.

1. Media reports quoting official sources said on June 9 that rising Maoist insurgency and economic hardships were causing an exodus from Nepal into India leading to “large population transfer” from Himalayan Kingdom into India in the past few weeks. It was stated that many Nepalese villages were being abandoned as the major checkpoints along the border witnessed about double the normal flow. This phenomena was all the more discernable since the Nepalese economy showed no signs of recovery and the army too failed to check the menace of militancy. That the left-wing extremists expanding influence in as many as 12 Indian States and the CPI(Maoists) external linkages with the Nepalese Maoists remained a top security concern of the Indian security establishment was articulated by the Indian Home Minister Shivraj Patil on June 15 while speaking to the governors of the Indian States at the annual Governors’ Conference in New Delhi.

143. Press report of the meeting between the Indian Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran and the Chinese Foreign Minister Li Zhaoxing on Nepal situation.

Beijing, March 31, 2005.

India on May 26 restated its concern over the situation in Nepal and hoped that Chinese Foreign Minister Li Zhaoxing, currently visiting the Himalayan Kingdom, will give the "right" advice to King Gyanendra to restore normalcy and democracy there. "I expressed the hope that China as a good friend of Nepal will give the right kind of advice to the Nepalese," Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran said in an interview in Beijing.

(Saran called on Li prior to the latter's departure for Nepal on an official visit, the first by a senior foreign official since Gyanendra's February 1 power grab. Li said that just as India is very much concerned about instability in Nepal, so is China. The Chinese Foreign Minister, who recalled that Saran had been earlier India's Ambassador to Nepal, asked for India's assessment of the situation in Nepal.)

Saran confirmed that he gave India's assessment of the situation in Nepal after February 1, 2005. "I said that the steps taken by His Majesty, the King has not led to either an improvement in the security situation in the country nor led to any economic recovery in the country. In fact, our sense is that in both these areas, the situation has become somewhat worse", Saran said.

144. Press Statement on the release of former Nepalese Prime Minister G.P. Koirala from detention.New Delhi, April 1, 2005.

Government of India welcomes the release today of Mr. G.P. Koirala, President of Nepali Congress and respected senior political leader, who had been under detention at his residence. We hope that this step and the earlier release of Mr. S.B. Deuba, President, NC(D) will be followed by the immediate release of UML General Secretary Mr. Madhav Kumar Nepal and other political leaders and workers, human rights activists, student leaders, media personnel and civil society representatives presently detained under emergency provisions.

Government of India calls for the removal of all curbs on civil liberties and fundamental rights and the lifting of media censorship and restrictions on movement to enable the people of Nepal to enjoy their legitimate constitutional and democratic rights. We believe that this would pave the way for the beginning of a process of reconciliation between the constitutional forces leading to a restoration of multi-party democracy. It has always been our conviction that a broad national consensus is necessary to address the serious challenges confronting Nepal. India will continue to support all efforts in this direction.

145. Extracts from the interview of External Affairs Minister K . Natwar Singh with Karan Thapar for BBC's 'Hard Talk - India'

New Delhi, April 8, 2005.

The following extract was relevant to Nepal.

* * * *

Shri Karan Thapar : ...Let us move to the situation with India's neighbouring countries. You have taken a very strong line against King Gyanendra's assumption of direct power in Kathmandu. The Americans, the British and the European Union have supported you. But, have you got the response from Kathmandu you were hoping for?

External Affairs Minister : No, we have not got. But, it is encouraging to see that Mr. Koirala has been released; Mr. Deuba has been released; and I hope Mr. Nepal, the former Foreign Minister, will also be released. Our relations with Nepal are unique. They are extremely close. We do not need visas to go there and they do not need visas to come here.

Shri Karan Thapar : But you said a very important thing a moment ago that you have not got the response you were hoping for.

External Affairs Minister : We have not. But we would like him to unwind. The emergency should be ended and the political parties ...

Shri Karan Thapar : Far from unwinding, the impression he gives is that he is not really listening to you, he is refusing to meet your Ambassador since the gentleman returned, and he is making trouble, to use a colloquialism, for Indian companies in that country.

External Affairs Minister : Again, it is a very distressing situation. We are a very large country. We have to be excessively sensitive to the feelings of the Nepalese and the Nepal's establishment. What Nepal needs today is both a Constitutional Monarchy and democracy so that we can deal with Maoists.

Shri Karan Thapar : In the way you handled this situation, let me put it to you, a point your critics often make, have you overplayed your hand? Have you boxed both yourself and the King into a corner and made each other defensive rather than responsive?

External Affairs Minister : On the contrary, this is not the first time this situation has arisen in the last fifty years. We have lived with it again and again. When it happened in 1988 I had to go and meet his brother.

Shri Karan Thapar : So, it is a game of bluff that you are playing, and you are waiting to see who blinks first.

External Affairs Minister : No, it is not a game of bluff. It is a game of diplomatic patience and to use maximum restraint. We have all the leverage. We are not going to use any leverage. We are hoping His Majesty will be able to see what the reality is.

Shri Karan Thapar : And if he does not, then what?

External Affairs Minister : We will wait and watch.

Shri Karan Thapar : How long will you wait and watch?

External Affairs Minister : We have a great capacity for waiting.

Shri Karan Thapar : Do you mean, infinite patience?

External Affairs Minister :: Yes, we have, as far as Nepal is concerned.

Shri Karan Thapar : But if you are going to be infinitely patient, then why did you bother to act adversely in the first place? Why were not you more understanding of his problems?

External Affairs Minister : How do you know we were not? We have conveyed everything to His Majesty. The fact that he has not met our Ambassador, it is unfortunate. But that does not mean that we are going to turn our face. We are deeply interested in the welfare of the Nepalese people. We are deeply interested in containing the Maoist insurgency and for that His Majesty needs the functioning of Parliament, having elections, and unwinding emergency.

146. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on the meeting of India's Ambassador to Nepal Shiv Mukherjee with King Gyanendra.

New Delhi, April 15, 2005.

"The Indian Ambassador in Nepal met His Majesty the King of Nepal today. The meeting lasted for over an hour. The Ambassador shared Government of India's assessment on the current situation. He underlined the Government of India's commitment towards peace and stability in Nepal. The King conveyed his views and his perceptions on the situation in the country, and recent developments."¹

147. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the meeting between External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh and King Gyanendra in Jakarta.

New Delhi, April 22, 2005.

External Affairs Minister Shri K. Natwar Singh had a one-on-one meeting with His Majesty King Gyanendra of Nepal on the sidelines of the Asian African Summit in Jakarta on April 22, 2005. The meeting lasted 45 minutes and was held in a cordial atmosphere².

1. According to informed media reports, during the meeting while he demanded release of political prisoners and lifting of emergency and resumption of political process, the Ambassador also conveyed to the King that India had reconsidered its position on Nepal and was prepared to resume military aid if the King at least took some action towards normalization of the political process in Nepal.
 2. The meeting signaled the end of Nepal's isolation imposed by India since February 1 seizure of power by the King and declaration of emergency. The Prime Minister Manmohan Singh met the King the next day on April 23 on the side lines of the Jakarta Afro - Asian Summit. India's decision to open a dialogue with the King was conveyed by the Indian Ambassador Shiv Mukherjee when he met him the previous week after a gap of more than two months. According to media reports there was a clear understanding between the two leaders that the contents of the understanding arrived at would not be made public. At his press conference in Jakarta the Prime Minister only said that India's concerns about recent developments in Nepal were prompted by its belief that the "twin pillars" of constitutional monarchy and multi-party democracy must work in harmony. On the question of arms supplies, the PM only said that the King had raised this issue and "I said we will look at these things in proper perspective". In an official briefing to the Indian media in Jakarta after the meeting the Secretary (East)

Both sides re-affirmed their commitment to the traditionally close ties between India and Nepal. While welcoming the release of some political leaders and announcement of municipal elections, EAM urged that a process of reconciliation be initiated between political parties and the constitutional monarchy leading to a restoration of multi-party democracy in Nepal. EAM conveyed India's strong belief that the problems confronting Nepal, including the Maoist insurgency, could only be addressed on the basis of a national consensus between the two constitutional forces in Nepal. In this context, EAM called for a speedy release of the remaining political leaders, the lifting of the Emergency and media-censorship.

H.M. the King explained the circumstances that led to the Declaration of the Emergency and outlined the steps that he had already taken and proposed to take soon to lift the Emergency and restore democratic processes in Nepal.

H.M. King Gyanendra conveyed that he was greatly looking forward to meeting the Prime Minister of India on the sidelines of the ongoing Summit in Jakarta.

Rajiv Sikri would not comment on the military supplies issue. He said that the two leaders had deliberated on the situation in Nepal and had agreed that it was necessary to restart the political process without delay as this would allow Kathmandu to deal with the Maoist insurgency. Therefore immediately on return to New Delhi from Jakarta, the Prime Minister took the earliest opportunity to brief the Left parties supporting the government about his meeting with the King. The 25th April meeting took place in the backdrop of reports that the Left parties had taken strong objection to the Government's decision to resume military supplies when there was no visible change in the ground situation in Nepal. In a statement issued on April 24 the Polit Bureau of the CPI (M) said: "If the report is true, it is a wrong and unjustified step. The Indian Government had correctly decided to stop military supplies after the King of Nepal had suppressed parliamentary democracy and imposed an emergency." "The UPA Government must realize that the appreciation and goodwill it earned with its firm stand in defence of democracy and popular government in Nepal will disappear and it will be held responsible for abetting the King's authoritarianism," the statement added. The statement observed that even the municipal elections that have been announced are "farfical and cannot be a substitute for the full restoration of parliamentary democracy and having an elected government". The sister CPI also wanted the Government to clarify its stand on the issue and felt the political parties and Parliament should be taken into confidence. The CPI National Secretary D. Raja described it as strange that the King should have announced what the Indian Government planned to do. The General Secretary of the CPI, A.B. Bardhan was equally scathing in his remarks when he expressed his concern on the reports. He said "we find it objectionable. India should not do any thing to give legitimacy to the present regime in Nepal...this only strengthens the King." The leader of the National Democratic

The King of Nepal had sought a meeting with me and I used this opportunity to convey our concern to him about the situation in his country, with which we have the closest ties. You have already been briefed about this meeting earlier. You have also been briefed about the External Affairs Minister's discussions with His Majesty yesterday. Let me reiterate that I emphasized the importance of the setting out a road-map for re-starting the political process in Nepal without delay. The King assured me of the necessary steps. We shall continue to pay close attention to further developments.

* * * *

Question : Sir, have you contacted the King of Nepal ...(Inaudible)...

Moderator : Let me take all the questions on Nepal together. Are there any other questions on Nepal?

Question : Is... acknowledged by the King that ...(Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : I met His Majesty the King. He had asked for a meeting.

Alliance George Fernandes on April 25 urged the Prime Minister to rescind the decision to resume military assistance to Nepal. In a letter to the Prime Minister he said that looking at the prevailing situation in Nepal it was apprehended that most of the weapons would land in the hands of the Maoists. "The least we should have done is to ask the Nepal King to restore democracy as a pre-condition to secure weapons from India", he said.

According to media reports, a high level meeting was held on April 25 at the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) to discuss the Nepal situation and see how to calibrate the next move. It was attended by the External Affairs Minister, the Defence Minister and the National Security Advisor MK Narayanan. The daily Times of India quoted MEA sources to say that the PM's statement that supplies should be seen in "the proper perspective" would guide the Indian action. At the bottom of India's consideration was the Prime Minister's statement that while "we can choose our friends, we cannot choose our neighbours". In the backdrop of a deteriorating defence situation in Nepal, the Government of India did not feel it was in India's interest to leave the field open for the Maoists to gain a possible upper hand. It was also discreetly made known that the supplies now being planned to be sent to Nepal were not fresh indents but that were already in the pipeline before the freeze came into effect. Given the state of disarray that the political parties in Nepal found themselves in – even after the body blow delivered by the King – India may well end up the only champion of democracy in Nepal.

Being our close neighbour, a country with which we have standing civilisational ties, very intimate relations, I did agree to meet His Majesty. He gave me an account of circumstances, compulsions, in which he had to take the action which he did take. I explained to him that as a close neighbour and friend of Nepal, a country with which we have a unique relationship, we have always regarded Constitutional Monarchy and multiparty democracy as the twin pillars of the Nepali polity. In the light of events in recent months, our concerns and our actions have been prompted by this recognition that these twin pillars must work together in harmony. We discussed the situation and his perspective on the evolving situation. I did suggest to him that it is important to take effective measures to restart the political process, and to work out a roadmap to this purpose. His Majesty was quite sensitive to these concerns. Therefore, on the whole I think the meeting was constructive in terms of its outcome.

Question : What about the ...(Inaudible)...(resumption of military supplies)

1. Later on May 10 when returning from Moscow, in reply to a question from the media accompanying him on board the flight, the Prime Minister said "Arms aid to Nepal are continuously under review. We have very close, intimate relations. Nepal is our closest neighbour. What happens there has implications for us. So, this question has been kept under constant review." Adding he said: "Whatever is in the pipeline, we cannot hold it back for a long time." Replying to another question whether he was ambushed by the Nepalese King in Jakarta while making public the fact that India had agreed to resume military supplies, he said: "I would not like to comment on the meeting that I had. I had a very good meeting with His Majesty. What I told him, I have already shared with you people. My advice to His Majesty was that he should restart the political process, outline a roadmap which would bring back democracy to Nepal, that our conviction was that constitutional monarchy and multiparty democracy are the twin pillars of the Nepalese polity, and that both these pillars must be strengthened and work in harmony with each other." It may be recalled that soon after the meeting between the Prime Minister and the Nepalese King there was a press conference by the Secretary (East) Rajiv Sikri who only said that the two leaders "deliberated on the situation in Nepal. It was agreed that it was necessary to restart the political process without delay, and that this in turn would enable His Majesty's Government to deal with the Maoist insurgency. Accordingly, His Majesty informed the Prime Minister that the political process in Nepal would be restored as early as possible. Their conversation was frank and cordial. Both emphasized the unique nature of India-Nepal relations. The meeting lasted forty-five minutes. The External Affairs Minister Mr. Natwar Singh was also present during the discussions." When asked if the question of military assistance was discussed, Sikri said he had "nothing to add to what I have already stated."

Question: In Nepal former Prime Minister Sher Bahadur Deuba has been arrested and Prime Minister in Jakarta had said that India would see these things in perspective. What is your response on Mr. Deuba's arrest and what is the situation as far as the question of sending arms to Nepal is concerned now?

Answer: Let me first give you a response on the arrest and I think all the other issues follow from what the Prime Minister has stated in Jakarta. Government of India is deeply concerned at the re-arrest of the former Prime Minister and Leader of Nepali Congress (Democratic), Mr. Sher Bahadur Deuba early this morning. We are also concerned that the arrest and detention of political leaders, student leaders and workers of political parties continue, as do the restrictions on travel and movement of some academicians, human rights activists and students, contrary to assurances conveyed to us.

We believe that these developments would further complicate efforts for reconciliation between political parties and the Constitutional Monarchy in Nepal. It has always been India's conviction that the problems confronting Nepal today can be addressed effectively only on the basis of national consensus between the two constitutional forces.

As far as the second part of your question is concerned it follows from what Prime Minister said, that we will see that issue in the proper perspective, which means that all factors and all developments will be taken into account.

Question: When you say that contrary to Nepali assurances, are we saying that the consignment of arms that was being talked about in the last few days will be reviewed?

Answer: I think the presumption that lies under your question; I am not quite inclined to be in agreement with. I think as far the issue of defence supplies to Nepal is concerned the statement that the Prime Minister made was very clear - this was raised and this will be considered in the proper perspective. So, I would not fully agree with the presumption that you are making.

Question: I have not yet fully understood what the proper perspective means?

Answer: I am not going to be able to second-guess that statement and to define what the proper perspective means. Obviously, when we say it will be considered in the proper perspective it means that we would take into account all developments, all situations and balanced decisions will be taken.

Question: Which means that the consignment that was supposed to go is that on board?

Answer: I am not going to say anything more on this. When the Prime Minister himself has spoken, I would not try to read meanings into it.

Question: Has there been any conversation between India and Nepal since the arrest of Mr. Deuba last night?

Answer: Not to my knowledge but I will have to double check.

Question: What did the UNSG say on Nepal?

Answer: I must tell you that delegation level talks are confidential in nature. I have tried my best to give you a flavour of the discussions without breach of confidentiality. Let me say that on Nepal there was an exchange of views. As you know the External Affairs Minister as well as the UN Secretary General both had called on King Gyanendra in Jakarta. So, they obviously have had discussions with him which they could share. So, Secretary General gave his assessment of the meeting and the situation.

150. Statement by the Indian External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh in the Rajya Sabha on “Recent Developments in Nepal.”¹

New Delhi, April 28, 2005.

As soon as we learnt about the arrest of the former Prime Minister, Shri Deuba, we have issued a very strong statement regretting it and deploring it. After His Majesty, the King's meeting with our Prime Minister and his meeting with me, he has given assurances that he would be unwinding the emergency, and that he would be releasing the remaining prisoners. I certainly named Mr. Nepal who has not been released. So far as the military aid is concerned, it is constantly under review and it will remain under review in view of what has happened. Soon after assuring us that he is going gradually to unwind the services of the Press, release prisoners and allow Indian TV channels to be shown in Nepal, he told us, I do not want to go into details, certain areas in which he wanted our help. As the House knows, our relationship with Nepal is unique. No Nepalese needs a passport to visit India and no Indian needs a passport to visit Nepal. Around six millions Nepalese are working in India and they are welcomed. The fact of the matter is that for the last three months the situation in Nepal deteriorated rapidly. There is a firm belief of the Government and, I think, of the whole House that Nepal needs both constitutional monarchy and democracy, and the Prime Minister and I both emphasised to the Majesty that he must restart the political process, meet all the political party leaders,

1. The matter in the House was raised by Shri Nilotpal Basu who drew the attention of the House to the developments that are taking place in neighbouring Nepal. He referred to the arrest of former Prime Minister of Nepal Sher Bahadur Deuba and particularly drew attention to the death of the former Minister in the UML regime, Shrimati Sadhana Pradhan whose death was not reported in the Indian media. He said that the security forces attacked some of the people who came to pay their last respects to the departed leader. Besides, the office of the Nepalese Communist Party (UML) was also attacked. Mr. Basu said: “Since the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. External Affairs Minister are there, we are not saying that we should not engage with them, but the point is that battle for democracy which is going on in Nepal against Maoist extremist elements cannot be fought in this manner. The entire democratic forces have to be mobilised and India, given her tradition, her political position and her great role in the neighbourhood, should not be seen as supportive of a regime, which is going berserk. I think this has reached a stage where everybody in the neighbourhood and in the whole world is watching us. Therefore, we would urge upon the Government that we should do everything possible to continue and engage with the Nepali regime, but we cannot afford to put all our eggs in the single diplomatic basket of the beleaguered regime that is there in Nepal.”

and from there ensure that elections are held and Parliament is recalled and the Government is formed. To none of these, he said 'No'. He did say that he will take time in certain areas where he finds that Maoists activities are extreme and I will take the House into confidence. I do not want to go into details of it, but I want to say that it is a matter of very deep regret that when His Majesty, the King, goes back after his talks with the Prime Minister of India, the Foreign Minister of India and the UN Secretary-General, who expressed similar views to His Majesty during his stay in China, an announcement is made that a person no less than a previous Prime Minister of Nepal is arrested on charges which are yet to be proved. ...Our difficulty is...(Interruption). No, we have briefed all your leadership on this matter in great detail only before...

Shri Nilotpal Basu : What I am saying is that funeral has been attacked.

Shri K. Natwar Singh : I am just coming to that. Regarding the funeral of the lady you mentioned, I really don't have the details, but we will find out the details as to what has happened. I think, it is deplorable, and it is very sad indeed. Our difficulty is that because of the unique relationship with Nepal, because of being a sovereign country, our country is a huge country, has historical links with them, India had all the leverages; we have not used any of them. We want to resolve this in an amicable and friendly manner as we possibly can, so that democracy is restored, Maoists are contained, political process starts and the people of Nepal do not suffer in any way. That is our policy.

151. Response of Official Spokesman to a question on the lifting of emergency in Nepal.

New Delhi, April 30, 2005.

"We welcome the lifting of the emergency in Nepal as a first step towards the beginning of a political process in that country. We call for the release of all political leaders still in custody and the restoration of civil liberties, which would open the way for reconciliation between the two constitutional forces. It has been our consistent view that multi-party democracy represented by political parties and the constitutional monarchy should work together to address the serious challenges facing Nepal today¹."

152. Response of Official Spokesperson to the release of Communist Party (UML) leader Madhav Kumar Nepal.

New Delhi, May 2, 2005.

In response to a question the Official Spokesperson welcomed the release of Mr. Madhav Nepal and expressed the hope that all other political leaders would also be released soon.

1. The Indian External Affairs Minister in his personal reaction told journalists in New Delhi that was a first step towards restoration of political process. "We, Prime Minister and myself had conveyed to King Gyanendra that political process should be restored, political prisoners should be released, emergency should be lifted and Indian channels should be allowed to be aired and processes should be started which culminate in multi-party elections," said EAM adding "this is the first step." Ambassador SS Mukherjee was also called to New Delhi for consultations to review the situation in Nepal.
(Political parties in Nepal while welcomed the decision to lift emergency said it was not enough as press censorship remained and hundred of political activists continued in detention. They asked for restoration of the Constitution and return of executive powers to the people's representatives. Nepali Congress President Girija Prasad Koirala alleged that the lifting of emergency imposed on February 1, was a move to "deceive" the international community, which was exerting tremendous pressure for the revival of democracy. Political prisoners were not released and press censorship had not been lifted, he told reporters. Mr. Koirala demanded the formation of an all-party government as well as the reinstatement of Parliament to end the political stalemate).

153. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson regarding resumption of military supplies to Nepal.New Delhi, May 10, 2005.

In keeping defence supplies to the Royal Nepal Army under review, the Government of India had conveyed to His Majesty's Government of Nepal the need to lift emergency and media censorship and release all political party leaders and activists. His Majesty's Government of Nepal was also advised to take the initiative to bring the political parties and the institution of monarchy together in a broad national effort to deal with the political and economic challenges facing Nepal. In meetings that he had with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and External Affairs Minister Shri K. Natwar Singh in Jakarta last month, His Majesty the King of Nepal had indicated his intention to take steps towards these objectives. In this context, our Prime Minister had agreed to consider the issue of supplies to the Royal Nepal Army in the proper perspective.

With the lifting of the Emergency in Nepal on April 29, 2005 and the release of several political party leaders and activists, the Government of India has decided to release some of the supplies currently in the pipeline, including vehicles. It is our expectation that in the coming days, His Majesty's Government of Nepal will take further and early steps towards the restoration of multiparty democracy and constitutional monarchy, which remain, in our view, the two pillars of political stability in Nepal and for meeting the challenges of the Maoists.

This message has been conveyed by our Ambassador in Kathmandu to His Majesty the King of Nepal during his meeting on May 9, 2005¹.

1. On the same day the Prime Minister while returning to Delhi from Moscow told the journalists accompanying him on his special flight that the military supplies to Nepal were under review and that those that were already "in the pipeline" could not be held back. A day before the message was conveyed to the King by the Ambassador, Home Minister Shivraj Patil told a Nepalese delegation at the SAARC Conference of Parliamentarians and NGOs in New Delhi that "We are choosing our policies with an intention to see that democracy is restored in Nepal" and that the democracy there thrived and not threatened. Later on May 15 the National Security Advisor MK Narayanan told daily the Hindu in Palakkad (Kerala) where he was on a private visit that India resumed arm supplies to Nepal only after getting

154. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on the Common Programme announced by the Nepalese Political Parties.

New Delhi, May 16, 2005.

Government of India welcomes the common programme announced by major Nepalese political parties to address the challenges facing Nepal. Together, the seven political parties represent about 95% of the erstwhile Pratinidhi Sabha¹ of Nepal.

The common programme underlines the key goals of restoration of multi-party democracy and resolving the violent conflict in Nepal. It presents a roadmap with detailed steps required to attain these objectives.

The programme represents a good basis for discussion and commencement of a dialogue between political parties and the monarchy.

It has been the consistent view of the Government of India that a broad national consensus amongst the constitutional forces is necessary to address the country's problems, including the insurgency.

Government of India will support all efforts aimed at restoring political stability and economic prosperity in Nepal.

a "categorical assurance from King Gyanendra that democracy will be restored to Nepal." He denied media reports of differences between the Defence and the External Affairs ministries on this question because the decision was taken by the Union Government after it was convinced that democracy would be brought back in Nepal. Once the government took the decision, there was no question of its Ministries opposing or supporting the move. Asked if the decision to supply arms to a country where democracy had been crushed would damage the reputation of India as a champion of democracy in the world, Mr. Narayanan said India was not acting as a big brother in the region it was only going by the ground realities and the assurances given by the King of Nepal. If Nepal went back on its promise, India could revise its stand on restoration of arms supply and other issues, he said.

155. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the meeting of the Maoist leader Baburam Bhattarai with Communist Party of India (Marxist) leader Prakash Karat.

New Delhi, May 26, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening. Looking at this morning's newspapers, there were several stories related to Nepal. I have a short statement to make

There is no change in respect of our policy with regard to the CPN (Maoists). We unequivocally condemn their terrorist and violent activities that have caused enormous suffering to the people of Nepal.

It is our conviction that there is no purely military solution to the Maoist insurgency. Durable peace and stability in Nepal can only be achieved through a political settlement, which, among other things, requires the Maoists to forswear armed struggle and lay down their arms.

India is committed to supporting all efforts at restoring peace, political stability and economic prosperity in Nepal.

Question: Has Mr Bhattarai met Mr. Prakash Karat?

Answer: I have a denial, which has been issued by Mr Karat. So, I do not think that I need to add anything to that.

Question: Do you think there is a ban on talking with the Nepalese Maoists?

Answer: I do not think that I have to comment on such kind of large, speculative issues. I mean talk on what issues, in which forum, which leader to whom? I am not prepared to answer questions on such a wide basis.

Question: If there cannot be a purely military solution then we have to talk...

Answer: There is no purely military solution to the Maoists insurgency. This is a problem which is happening in Nepal and our position on Nepal you know.

Question: Was this denial issued today?

Answer: Yes, May 26. This is a press statement, which has been issued. It say that “the report in the Times of India that I have met the Maoist leader from Nepal in a meeting arranged by the Indian Security Agencies is untrue. No such meeting was held”.

Question: Can you confirm or deny whether Babu Ram Bhattarai was in Delhi?

Answer: I have no information. There is already a denial by the General Secretary of CPI(M). Whether or not a particular individual is in a country, on that I have no information.

156. Press release of the Ministry of Defence on the meeting between the Defence Minister Pranab Mukherjee and the leader of the Nepali Congress Girija Prasad Koirala.

New Delhi. June 6, 2005.

The former Prime Minister of Nepal and Leader of Nepali Congress Shri Girija Prasad Koirala called on the Defence Minister Shri Pranab Mukherjee here today. Shri Mukherjee conveyed India's concern over the current developments in Nepal, which could also have an impact on India, given the fact that the two countries have an open border. He reiterated India's consistent stand that in order to deal with the political and economic challenges which Nepal face it was imperative that the political parties, on the one hand, and the institution of the monarchy on the other, should work together to evolve a broad national consensus.

The Defence Minister expressed Indian's appreciation over the role Shri Koirala has played in bringing together the seven mainstream parties on an agreed platform which could be the basis for a dialogue on an eventual political settlement based on multi-party democracy and constitutional monarchy. On the issue of arms supply the Defence Minister conveyed that the matter would remain under constant review.

157. Statement of Official Spokesperson on the meeting between External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh and the Nepali leader Girija Prasad Koirala.

New Delhi, June 8, 2005.

External Affairs Minister, Shri K. Natwar Singh met Mr. Girija Prasad Koirala, Leader of the Nepali Congress this evening. The two leaders exchanged views on the situation in Nepal and its implications for both countries. Shri K. Natwar Singh conveyed the strong support of the Government of India for all efforts aimed at restoring multi-party democracy and constitutional monarchy in Nepal. As a first step, this requires that a process of national reconciliation and dialogue should begin, he said. External Affairs Minister reiterated our conviction that the multi-dimensional and complex challenges facing Nepal can only be addressed by forging a broad national consensus on an eventual political settlement. Mr. G.P Koirala informed Shri K. Natwar Singh about the common agenda and roadmap for the way ahead prepared by seven political parties. External Affairs minister welcomed this initiative which, he said, provides a good basis for a dialogue¹.

158. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on the verdict of the Royal Commission for Corruption Control (RCCC) against former Prime Minister of Nepal Sher Bahadur Deuba.

New Delhi, July 29, 2005.

In response to a question on the verdict of the Royal Commission for Corruption Control (RCCC) against former Prime Minister of Nepal, Mr.

1. When asked about the meeting of Foreign Secretary with G. P.Koirala, the Spokesperson said: "The meetings are continuing." When asked about the reaction on a blast in Chitwan district of Nepal, the Navtej Sarna replied: "Yes I do have a reaction. The Government of India condemns the heinous bomb blast in the Chitwan district of Nepal in which so many innocent civilians lost their lives and many were injured. India has always believed that recourse to violence and terrorist activities cannot be justified under any circumstances, and those responsible should be brought to justice. We extend our heartfelt condolences to His Majesty's Government of Nepal and to the bereaved families and pray for the speedy recovery of those who have been injured."

Sher Bahadur Deuba the Official Spokesperson said:

"It is regrettable that harsh sentences have been meted out to the former Prime Minister Mr. Deuba and former Minister Mr. Prakash Mansingh, by the RCCC in the Melamchi Water Supply Project case. We have noted that the Asian Development bank, which is a major financier of the project, have publicly clarified after thorough investigations that they did not find any evidence of collusion or other corrupt fraudulent practices among those involved in the bidding process for the contract.

It has always been our view that reconciliation between democratic and constitutional forces is imperative in order to address the critical issues facing Nepal.

We believe that the decision of the RCCC would only further vitiate the atmosphere and complicate efforts for reconciliation."

159. Press release issued by Ministry of External Affairs regarding recent developments in Nepal

New Delhi, September 5, 2005.

Government of India has taken note of the recent developments in Nepal, including the decisions taken by the Nepali Congress and the UML, the views expressed by civil society representatives in their public meetings and the announcement of a unilateral ceasefire by the Maoists.

We believe that the problems of Nepal can only be addressed on a durable basis through a process of dialogue and reconciliation in an atmosphere free from violence and terror. We hope that the ceasefire announced by the Maoists will contribute towards creating an environment in which a peace process can begin.

160. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on the new Ordinance signed by King of Nepal imposing additional curbs on media.

New Delhi, October 13, 2005.

In response to a question on the new Ordinance signed by King of Nepal imposing additional curbs on media the Official Spokesperson said:

“Though we have not yet seen the text of the Ordinance, we understand from media reports that several additional restrictions have been imposed on the media. We have always believed that a free and independent press is necessary of the people to enjoy their fundamental rights and democratic freedoms. Curbs on the freedom of expression and media, which is a fundamental pillar of democracy will inevitably be counter-productive. We hope that the Ordinance would not be used to curb the freedom of expression and of the press in Nepal.”

161. Briefing points by Official Spokesperson on the meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and King of Nepal.

Dhaka, November 13, 2005.

- Prime Minister of India had a cordial meeting with His Majesty the King of Nepal this morning.
- Prime Minister reiterated to His Majesty the importance of restoring multiparty democracy in Nepal as early as possible and the need to take concrete steps in this regard. He said that this would not be possible without the involvement of political parties.
- His Majesty conveyed to Prime Minister that he remained committed to multiparty democracy and recognized that this would not be possible without involvement of political parties. He said he was prepared to take steps to bring about the restoration of multiparty democracy with the involvement of political parties as early as possible.

- The two leaders agreed on the importance of maintaining and consolidating the traditionally close and friendly relations between the two neighbouring countries¹.

162. Response of Official Spokesperson in response to a question on the 12-point understanding between political parties and Maoists in Nepal.

New Delhi, November 23, 2005.

In response to a question on the 12-point understanding between political parties and Maoists in Nepal the Official Spokesperson said:

We have seen newspaper reports about an understanding between the Maoists and the political parties in Nepal for the restoration of multi-party democracy and the return to political normalcy.

It has all along been the position taken by the Government of India that there is no purely military solution to the challenges facing Nepal, including the Maoist insurgency. India has, on the one hand, urged the institution of monarchy to work together with the political parties, and on the other hand, called upon the Maoists to abandon the path of violence, accept the discipline of multi-party democracy and work for a political settlement that contributes to political stability and economic prosperity of Nepal. It remains to be seen whether the Maoists are genuinely prepared to live up to their commitments and refrain from acts of violence and extortion.

1. On November 16 the Foreign Secretary while releasing a book in New Delhi said that India was engaged with all actors in Nepal and it welcomed the assurance given by the King to Prime Minister during their meeting in Dhaka. He said: "The Prime Minister told the King that he needs to look at political parties as allies. The King said he believes in multi-party democracy and that cannot be without political parties involvement. The King said he thought a road-map was needed and added that in the coming days he will get to see something of it." The stake for India in Nepal was very high and if the monarchy wished New Delhi could play a constructive role. "But it will not be able to do it if it is seen to participate in the pell-mell. We can't micro-manage the events in Nepal. But if we can nudge it towards political stability and economic recovery, we should be happy," Foreign Secretary said.

India, as Nepal's close and friendly neighbour, hopes that conditions of peace and stability and economic development will soon be restored in the country with the sincere efforts and contributions of all concerned.

India believes that all outstanding issues ought to be resolved through the efforts of the people of Nepal themselves and that the role of international community should be limited to support these efforts.

163. Interaction by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran with the media in Kathmandu.

Kathmandu, December 13, 2005.

I am happy to be back in Kathmandu after a gap of a year and a half. My visit is a follow up to the cordial and friendly meeting between His Majesty the King of Nepal and our Prime Minister recently in Dhaka during the SAARC Summit. Both leaders had agreed that given the long-standing as well as wide-ranging relations that exist between our two friendly neighbouring countries, it was important for us to remain in touch regularly, at different levels, in order to consolidate and expand our relations.

During this visit, I had wide-ranging and fruitful discussions on a range of issues of mutual interest and concern. His Majesty was gracious to grant me an audience today. I also had discussions with Their Excellencies the two Vice-Chairmen of the Council of Ministers, the Foreign Minister and the Home Minister and met Acting Foreign Secretary of Nepal. There was opportunity to interact with several political party leaders¹ as well. I was also happy to meet a number of old friends and acquaintances.

In all my meetings, I have conveyed that the restoration of peace and stability and economic recovery in Nepal is not only in the interest of Nepal but also in India's interest. India stands ready to support all efforts aimed at bringing about a peaceful resolution to the problems confronting Nepal.

1. Prominent among the political leaders the Foreign Secretary met were: Acting President of the Nepali Congress (Democratic) Gopal Man Shrestha, The President of Nepali Congress Girija Prasad Koirala, and Nepal Communist Party – UML General Secretary Madhav Kumar Nepal. On arrival in Kathmandu on December 11 Shyam Saran had said: "I came here to hold talks with my old friends in Nepal."

Question: Are you inviting the King to visit India? (Rishi Dhamala, President, Reporters' Club)

Answer: No, this matter was not discussed.

Question: Are you optimistic after the Audience with the King about the restoration of democracy in Nepal? (Shirish Pradhan, Correspondent, PTI)

Answer: Well, His Majesty conveyed to me that he remains committed to multi-party democracy and constitutional monarchy in Nepal and that there should be no doubting his commitment in this regard.

Question: The political leaders have said that if the King defers civic election, they would be guaranteeing extension of ceasefire of Maoists. Have you conveyed that to the King? (Sudeshna Sarkar, IANS)

Answer: I am not aware of any such demand being made by the leaders. Besides, it is not for me to take up an issue, which should really be an agenda item in the discussions between the King and the political parties.

Question: You are most welcome to Kathmandu again.

You are talking about the restoration of democracy in Nepal. You might be aware that the Nepalese Parliament was dissolved by political parties themselves. In the meantime, the King has shown commitment to democratic forces in Nepal by announcing municipal elections, and after that Parliamentary elections. If democratic forces exist and work in Nepal, where is the need of restoration of democracy in Nepal. Thank you, very much. (Ramesh Ghimire, freelance journalist).

Answer: Well, number one I don't think it is necessary for me to comment on how the Parliament was dissolved and what was the reason for it. Nor do I think it is for me to talk about how the political processes in this country can be revived. I think what is very important is something that we have said: that in order to confront the challenges this country is facing it is very important that the constitutional forces should be working together. Constitutional forces means both the institution of Monarchy and it also means the political parties. That is our view. Now, how this is exactly going to be achieved - that is really something that the political parties and the Monarchy need to sit down together and work out together.

Question: Did you talk with His Majesty about 12-point understanding between the Maoists and political parties? (Babita Basnet, Editor, Ghatna ra Vichar)

Answer: I think it would not be appropriate for me to give a running account of what was discussed between His Majesty and me. But I would just like to underscore the fact that it remains our belief that in dealing with the current situation which Nepal is facing, it is very important that the constitutional forces should work together. It is very important that peace should be restored. It is very important that this country should be, once again, on the road to economic recovery. These are the challenges that need to be addressed and in this, unless there is a degree of national consensus, which would allow a focused attention to this problem, it is difficult to see how can we succeed.

Question: To what extent India is concerned about playing of the China card? India has arms embargo (on Nepal) at the moment. Some arms are coming from China. To what extent India is generally concerned about this? (Joseph Johnson, South Asia Bureau Chief, Financial Times)

Answer: Well, I do not think it is helpful for either China card or an India card to be played. My sense is that just as India is interested in the political stability and economic prosperity of Nepal, so is China. And we would trust that India and China are not seen competing with each other for any kind of influence in this country. I think, to the extent that our objectives are the same, it is better for us to work together. As far as the issue of arms is concerned, well, I think the international community has taken a certain position in order to foster the process of reconciliation amongst various forces here, and we would hope that not only China but other countries would also join in that position.

Question: What about the Indian arms assistance to Nepal? (name unclear)

Answer: Well, at the moment, we do not have Indian arms coming to Nepal but other aspects of cooperation with Nepal, including with RNA are continuing. For example, training of RNA personnel still continues.

PAKISTAN

164. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on the exchange of lists of nuclear installations and facilities by India and Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 1, 2005.

For the fourteenth consecutive year, India and Pakistan today (January 1, 2005) through diplomatic channels, simultaneously at New Delhi and Islamabad, exchanged lists of nuclear installations and facilities covered under the Agreement on the Prohibition of Attack Against Nuclear Installations and Facilities between India and Pakistan. This Agreement was signed on December 31, 1988 and entered into force on January 27, 1991.

Under the Agreement, the two countries are to inform each other on January 1 of every calendar year of the nuclear installations and facilities to be covered by the Agreement. The first such exchange of lists took place on January 1, 1992.

165. Media briefing by Secretary (Water Resources) V. K. Duggal on the failure of India – Pakistan talks on Baglihar dam project.

New Delhi, January 7, 2005.

The Secretary (Water Resources) V.K. Duggal told the media at the end of the India – Pakistan talks on the Baglihar Dam Project that Pakistan's insistence that it will seek the appointment of a "neutral expert" to arbitrate on the project is not reflected in the agreed minutes, but "if it chooses to do it then we will state our position. India is clear that there is no deviation from the provisions of the Indus Water Treaty of 1960. A week in the seven-year history of the project was not a big time. But this was not accepted by the Pakistan delegation. Now both parties will report this position to the respective governments." Mr. Duggal indicated that there could be convergence on some of the technical issues. He said there was no talk of re-opening of the treaty, "which had stood the test of time." Asserting that this was the first time that quantitative discussions on the technical data had been held, Mr. Duggal said India received Pakistan's observations on its technical data on December 31 with the request to hold talks from January 3. "We told them we needed more time to study the data yet we agreed to a meeting from January 4. On the second day of the talks we identified six technical issues, including weir at low level, pondage, level of intake, (un)gated spillway, free-board height and low-level tunnel. We even had a smaller group of engineers discuss the technical data but needed more time", said Mr. Duggal.

Mr. Duggal, however maintained that the talks were "constructive and focused" and had moved forward. "Even though the discussions were inconclusive, a breakthrough had been achieved on the technical aspects," he asserted. He said as a goodwill gesture India was willing to consider Pakistan's objections provided they did not impact on the safety of the dam and the people. India even asked Pakistan to come up with alternate design calculations or some alternate fact sheet which could be examined on a "two-way basis."

[Mr. Duggal's media briefing came in the wake of failure of the India – Pakistan Baglihar talks. Pakistan said it would go ahead and seek the appointment of a "neutral expert" to address the differences with India as permitted by the Indus Water Treaty of 1960. Ashfaq Mahmood, Pakistan's Water Resources Secretary told pressmen that this "next step" would be taken, as there had been no progress in the three-day talks held with his Indian counterpart.]¹

1. External Affairs Minister Natwar Singh speaking in New Delhi after delivering the Lal Bahadur Memorial lecture on January 14 referred to the failed talks on Baglihar and said that the standoff between the two countries on the Baglihar power project would figure during his three-day visit to Islamabad beginning February 15. The Pakistani High Commissioner in New Delhi who was present, said that Islamabad had not yet taken any decision on approaching the World Bank to appoint a neutral expert to resolve the Baglihar project. "The issue is being examined by the Government of Pakistan. Whenever there is a decision, it will be announced", the High Commissioner said.
On January 18 the Spokesman of the Pakistani Foreign Office conceding that it was not a "good omen" for the Indo – Pakistan peace process, announced petitioning the World Bank for its arbitration in the Baglihar project. Same day i.e. January 18 India described Pakistani decision as not justified. The Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs Navtej Sarna said: "Our view has been that during the detailed discussions held at the level of Secretaries of Water Resources recently, there had been some convergence and we believe that through continued technical discussions, further convergence would be promoted. We do not believe that the reference to the World Bank is justified. The media quoting official sources in New Delhi said India had no intention to stop construction at the project as demanded by Pakistan. Pointing to the Tulbul navigation project on the Jhelum river, they said that Pakistan wanted the work to be stopped for three month; but now it was 17 years since the work had come to a stand still on Tulbul.

[In a related development, an External Affairs Ministry official said India was ready to continue technical discussions with Pakistan on Baglihar dispute. According to him the Indian position remained that the design of the project was well within the definitions contained in the Indus Treaty. According to the official, Pakistan's intention was to ensure that the Government of India could not go ahead with any project that would benefit the people of Jammu and Kashmir. All this was being done to prevent India going ahead with the Baglihar project. India, the official said, would not stop the construction of the project as demanded by Pakistan. In the case of Tulbul project, the construction was halted some 16 year ago, and since then the matter had been the subject of bilateral discussion, with Pakistan showing no urgency in resolving the issue. India did not want Baglihar to meet the same fate.]

[Earlier the two-day talks on the Baglihar had been extended by a day to resolve the differences persisting between the two delegations. Mr. V. K. Duggal told the media that both sides agreed that the talks were "constructive and focused" around the six technical issues short-listed on the previous day. "The talks are mid-way. We understand each other's point of view. We hope to conclude the talks by tomorrow," said Mr. Duggal. The Pakistani counterpart too agreed that the talks were "issue based".]

166. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of National Security Advisor of Pakistan Tariq Aziz and on the Baglihar Project.

New Delhi, January 11, 2005.

Question: What did Mr. Tariq Aziz talk to EAM about?

Answer: Mr. Tariq Aziz paid a brief visit to New Delhi to offer condolences on behalf of President Musharraf on the passing away of Shri J.N. Dixit, National Security Advisor. During this visit Mr. Aziz called on the Prime Minister and the External Affairs Minister and he also went to Mr. Dixit's residence to personally express his condolences to Mrs. Dixit. That is all I have on the visit.

Question: Any discussion on the SAARC dates when he was here?

Answer: No, I have no other details of what happened during the talks. As I said, he came to offer his condolences on behalf of President Musharraf.

Question: Pakistan has threatened to go to the World Bank for the Baglihar project. What is India's stand on that?

Answer: Our stand is very well known on the Baglihar project, which is a run of the river project. We believe it is fully compatible with the provisions of the Indus Water Treaty between the two countries. In the recently concluded bilateral talks between India and Pakistan on the Baglihar project the Indian side presented very detailed technical information to the Pakistani side to convince them that there is no ground for any apprehension that the project violates the Indus Water Treaty, that the technical parameters violate any of those that are laid down in the Indus Water Treaty. This is the first time, I can tell you, that such detailed technical discussions were held and we found that they were very useful and some convergence has appeared. We also feel that more technical discussions are likely to lead to further convergence and we have offered Pakistan that we should have further technical discussions.

Question: In case Pakistan still refuses to go in for the discussions?

Answer: If Pakistan still chooses to go to the World Bank disregarding the offer that we have made for further technical discussions then we will respond appropriately.

Question: You were saying there was some convergence...

Answer: As I said this is the first time that technical discussions were held with data etc and some convergence did appear but since this was the first time there is possibility of increasing this convergence through further technical discussions and that is why we have made the offer.

Question: Can you tell us what was the convergence?

Answer: These are technical issues. As you know, Water Resources Secretary has already been talking to the press. They have a better idea. I cannot identify to you exact things on which there was convergence. But yes, our feeling at the end of the technical discussions was that they were useful. There were some things on which because of data that we provided, because of technical discussions that took place, there was some convergence and there is possibility of more if we have more discussions.

Question: But they say there is no scope for further discussion...

Answer: We believe that this is the first time that we have had technical discussions. We believe that the data that we have given to Pakistan should convince them that the technical parameters of the project are not violative of the Indus Water Treaty provisions. We believe that further technical discussions would be useful as these have been. So this is our offer.

Question: On Tariq Aziz – did he come as a special envoy of President Musharraf?

Answer: Frankly, I would not be able to characterize that, but, as I said, the purpose of the visit which he came for was to present his condolences on behalf of President Musharraf.

Question: Nothing to do with Tsunami, reports today said he (Mr. Tariq Aziz) also offered condolences on that.

Answer: Well, it is quite possible that it may have been discussed. Earlier on also the Government of Pakistan's condolences on this issue have been conveyed.

167. Reaction of the Official Spokesperson to the accusation by Pakistan of alleged violation of ceasefire by the Indian troops.

New Delhi, January 24, 2005.

Question: Pakistan has accused India of violating the ceasefire¹. Your reaction?

Answer: This was an issue, which was raised by the DGMO of Pakistan with our DGMO as part of the regular conversations that they hold. We investigated this allegation. Our DGMO, after investigations, conveyed it to their DGMO that these reports were baseless.

Question: Was there any firing from the Indian side?

Answer: No, as I said these reports are baseless.

168. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh on arrival at Islamabad.

Islamabad, February 15, 2005.

I am happy to be in Islamabad again.

2. I intend to use this first bilateral visit of an Indian External Affairs Minister since 1989, to provide further impetus to the present India-Pakistan process.

3. Substantial progress has been made in the bilateral relationship since January 2004. The process had been imparted renewed vigour after the new Government had come to power in India in May 2004. Since then we have come a fair distance².

1. The Spokesperson was reacting to the Pakistani allegation that the ceasefire, effective from the last week of November 2003, was violated on January 21 from the Indian side at the Mendhar sector on the Line of Control.

2. The visit of the EAM was in the offing for almost a month. In order not to raise too many expectations from such bilateral visits, he had said on January 14 in New Delhi: "We should

4. Diplomatic and communication links have been restored to earlier levels. One round of the Composite Dialogue process has been completed, and the second round initiated in December last year. We have brought additional subjects to the table through expert level dialogues, including on nuclear and conventional CBMs. We are looking at additional transportation links between us. The Commerce Secretaries of the two countries will meet in a week's time in the framework of a Joint Study Group to explore and enhance trade and economic cooperation. We have also now agreed to consider a pipeline through Pakistan, subject to satisfaction of our concerns related to security and assured supplies¹.

5. There are several agreements that are possible in the coming months, including on pre-notification of missile tests, MOU between Coastguards and Pakistan's Maritime Security Agency, MOU between narcotics control authorities.

6. Tomorrow I will have the opportunity to convey greetings of P.M. to President and Mr. Shaukat Aziz. In my meeting tomorrow with Foreign Minister Kasuri, I will be reiterating India's commitment to a tension-free, peaceful and cooperative relationship with Pakistan. I look forward to not look upon my meeting with Pakistan Foreign Minister Khurshid Mehmood Kasuri as an event." He said his proposed visit to Pakistan was "part of the process which cannot be open-ended or have a short time frame." On January 16 the EAM acknowledged in a BBC Hindi service interview that the progress in some India – Pakistan confidence building measures has been "slow". He said he would take up the "issue when he meets the Pakistani leaders, including possibly, the Pakistan President Pervez Musharraf in Islamabad next month. He said, "we have suggested a set of 72 confidence building measures to them. Concrete progress is being made in some of them and in some other issues the progress has been slow...What I am saying is that if the bus service starts between Srinagar and Muzaffrabad and similarly if the train service starts between Sindh and Rajasthan, it will definitely help matters and at the moment, the atmosphere is cordial between the two countries." He said the process of composite dialogue between the two countries was on the "right track", but added "this does not mean we are not confronted with the problems and that all issues have been resolved or a major breakthrough has been achieved on the Kashmir issue."

1. On February 9, the Indian Cabinet decided not to link the proposed pipeline from Iran through Pakistan to India to progress on "other issues" between New Delhi and Islamabad thereby clearing the way for solid negotiations on the project. This would mean that the progress on the pipeline project would not be linked to issues such as Pakistan giving reverse transit to Indian goods to Iran and Central Asia as well as grant of the Most-Favoured Nation status by Pakistan to India. It may be recalled that on January 19 the EAM Natwar Singh had said "I see in these gas pipelines (Iran-Pakistan-India; Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India and Myanmar-Bangladesh-India) the potential to link our region and set up a new paradigm in regional cooperation and friendship."

exploring with them further ways of strengthening the foundations of our cooperative interactions, based on the clearly expressed support of the people of the two countries.

7. I am hopeful of taking the process further during this visit. In today's context cooperation and cordiality between our two countries is an imperative and a desirable objective¹.

8. Of course the process can be sustained only in an atmosphere free from terrorism and violence in the framework of the commitment made on January 6, 2004.

169. Press briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran during his visit to Islamabad.

Islamabad, February 16, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Ladies and Gentlemen, it gives me great pleasure to welcome Foreign Secretary of India, Mr. Shyam Saran accompanied by High Commissioner Mr. Menon and Joint Secretary Mr. Arun Singh here. After the Foreign Secretary has addressed the press, we will take questions.

Foreign Secretary: Good evening. Let me first of all extend a very warm welcome to all of you to this press conference. I will elaborate on some of the points, which have already been made by our External Affairs Minister this afternoon after his talks with his counterpart H.E. Foreign Minister Kasuri. I think both the Foreign Ministers have given a fairly comprehensive idea of what the discussions they had focused on, and also a sense of what transpired during the morning meeting between our External Affairs Minister and His Excellency President of Pakistan, General Pervez Musharraf, as also with the Prime Minister of Pakistan, H.E. Mr. Shaukat Aziz.

1. In a related development, Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran told the media persons accompanying the EAM on board the special aircraft which brought them to Islamabad from Kabul, that India was looking at Mr. Singh's visit as providing renewed momentum to the bilateral engagement process. Several new confidence building measures were likely to be agreed upon, the Foreign Secretary said. According to him India and Pakistan would also take the opportunity to review the progress made so far in the composite dialogue process. Saran also pointed out that Mr. Singh's meeting with Gen. Musharraf would be the first high level contact with the Pakistani President since the General met the Prime Minister in September 2004. On the Baglihar project, FS said there was still scope for bilateral discussions to sort out the ticklish issues. He reiterated that in the last round of talks, considerable progress had been made between the two sides on the technical details of the project.

The high point of the visit has been the agreement between the two sides to operationalise the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service and this we regard as a very important development. It is really a win-win situation for both India and Pakistan. I think it has been already mentioned to you that this is going to be a service, which will operate on the basis of entry permits. I would like to just elaborate here that what really we have agreed upon is a practical procedure, which applies to a route and it does not affect or change our respective positions on the J&K issue. We will look at this as a humanitarian procedure, which enables people from both sides to travel across the LoC. It is also an arrangement, which is open to all Pakistanis and Indians including the people of J&K but not third country nationals.

As you have seen in the announcement, the application forms can be obtained from the designated authority both in Srinagar and Muzaffarabad. I would like to inform you that the designated authority on the Indian side will be the Regional Passport Office under the Ministry of External Affairs which is located in Srinagar. As it has been pointed out, this procedure covers travel to the entire territory of the erstwhile state of Jammu & Kashmir, which includes Gilgit and Baltistan. This is a very major achievement that both sides have made. Both sides have shown flexibility, both sides have shown a desire to make certain that we can... It has been our endeavour to see the early realisation of a proposal, which has drawn so much interest on both sides, and it is a matter of satisfaction, I think, for both sides that this has been achieved. I must mention here that both President Musharraf as well as Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz welcomed the achievement we have made today.

We have pointed out that a number of other issues were discussed. In terms of transport linkages, I would like to mention here that we have also reached agreement for operationalising the new bus service between Amritsar and Lahore. For technical details for that we will get down and work out as early as possible. There is also agreement that we could also have more services to places of pilgrimage, for example Nankana Saheb. In terms of the rail link, you have all heard about our proposal for the resumption of the rail link between Khokhrapar and Munabao and we are very happy that at our request it was agreed that this particular route can also be operationalised pending the upgradation of the metre gauge line on the Pakistani side to broad gauge line. The idea is that passengers from the Pakistani side could come right up to the border on the metre gauge line and could cross the border and get into the train on the Indian side and travel on the broad gauge line and vice versa. So this arrangement can continue until such time as the broad gauge line on the Pakistani side also has been completed. This is with regard to transportation linkages.

I would also like to draw attention to the fact that both in the meeting with President Musharraf as well as in the meeting with Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz - and this was something which was further taken up during the meeting between the two Foreign Ministers - that we also looked at the importance of economic and trade linkages. There was general acceptance of the fact that there are many economic complementarities between India and Pakistan and that in not exploiting these economic complementarities our both countries are losing out. And for us to be able to build upon these economic complementarities again is something, which is a win-win situation for both sides.

In this context, on the 22nd and 23rd of this month, the Commerce Secretaries of the two countries will be having a meeting. The precise purpose of this meeting is to look at how we can promote economic and trade linkages between the two countries. This is something, which we welcome. I would also like to mention that in terms of CBMs, in terms of people-to-people contacts, again both sides expressed satisfaction that there really has been a significant movement in this respect. The traffic, which is taking place on both sides of the border has increased very significantly. As journalists you yourself are aware that there is far more interaction taking place in the media circles as well, including the visit of Pakistani journalists to J&K on our side. Our Indian media men were also able to visit Pakistan occupied Kashmir. This is something which both sides agree is a very positive development and this is something which we should continue to carry forward. So, there are a number of CBMs, which we talked about. Our External Affairs Minister referred to some of them, distinguished Foreign Minister of Pakistan referred to some of them, and it will be our endeavour to carry these proposals forward.

At the end of these meetings, we have a very positive feeling; a feeling that we have made some progress, also a sense that there are a number of things in the pipeline where we believe further progress is possible. So, it is with a sense of optimism that we conclude our official part of the visit here in Islamabad.

External Affairs Minister will be guest at the banquet, which will be hosted by his counterpart this evening. Tomorrow we leave for Lahore where there would be an interaction with the SAFMA. There would also be a call on the Governor of Punjab, as also a lunch which is being hosted by H.E. the Chief Minister of Punjab. Thereafter we return back to Delhi.

I will stop here. I will be happy to take your questions.

Question (Saurabh Shukla, India Today): Was there any discussion on the likely visit of the Indian Prime Minister to Pakistan. What happened to the proposal that India had put to Pakistan last time - to designate five points for crossing on the LoC. Did Pakistan respond to that?

Foreign Secretary: With regard to the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Pakistan, yes, there was a reiteration of the invitation both by President Musharraf and Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz. External Affairs Minister told them that he would, on his return, be conveying this to our Prime Minister so that an early visit can take place. On the other question that you raised, no, so far we have not received a response.

Question (Farhan Bukhari): One subject that you have not mentioned today is Baglihar. Any discussions on that issue? Also, could you tell us where India and Pakistan come out on that subject? The other question that I may ask you very briefly is that while transportation links would certainly add to the atmosphere, there has been a lot of criticism here last year that there has not been anything major or tangible that has come out from this new peace process. I know pipeline is discussed, but more than that trading links... Can we put a time frame in which there is going to be a tangible process? Will it be the next 12-24 months or will it take longer? What is your sense?

Foreign Secretary: Let me take your last comment first. I concluded my opening remarks by saying that we have during this visit a sense that we have achieved something, that we have come a long way. This is what our External Affairs Minister said in his press conference. I think the fact that we have managed to agree upon the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service is itself an indication that this process is beginning to yield results. So, I do not think that there needs to be any pessimism about the process that we are involved in. We are moving steadily forward. This is a complicated relationship. We have to move in measured steps and I think the results are there for everyone to see. I don't think we should minimise the achievements that we have already made.

The fact is that for more than a year the ceasefire has held. There is tranquillity along the boundary as well as the LoC. That itself, I think, is an important achievement. The fact that there is such a large number of people travelling across the border is perhaps unprecedented between India and Pakistan. My High Commissioner tells me that for the last few months he has been issuing something like 10,000 visas per month. Even with some of the other friendly countries we do not have this intensity of contact which has come about between India and Pakistan.

With regard to other elements of the relationship, transport linkages are very important. Not only Srinagar-Muzaffarabad, the fact that we have a regular bus service running between Delhi and Lahore, the fact that we have now agreed upon Amritsar-Lahore, we have agreed that there should be more visits to places of pilgrimage, I do not think that these should be regarded as somehow insignificant and that we are not achieving anything more significant.

On the economic and commercial side one of the very important developments which has taken place is that with invitation given from your side we have had some very important captains of Indian industry visiting Pakistan recently. I believe that just some days back Mr. Ratan Tata was in Pakistan. So, there is a new kind of an interest developing on both sides to take forward our economic and commercial relationship.

You made a mention of the pipeline. We have agreed that we would go ahead with the Iran-Pakistan-India pipeline. What we are looking at and what we are currently discussing with Iran is the possibility of this pipeline bringing gas from Iran up to a designated point on the India-Pakistan border on terms and conditions which could be agreed upon between Iran and India. Perhaps there would be a necessity for some kind of an overarching trilateral agreement between the three countries. I think that the three countries are moving forward in a pragmatic fashion to see that this particular project becomes a reality.

So, if you put all this together, frankly I see no reason why there should be any room for pessimism.

On the Baglihar issue, our viewpoint is that the last round of talks, which were held between India and Pakistan, was perhaps the first time that there was a really very intensive technical discussion. It was our sense, perhaps not shared by the Pakistani side, that some degree of convergence was achieved during these discussions. It was also our assessment that if these technical discussions could be carried forward then perhaps the area of convergence could increase further. Perhaps, it was a sense on the Pakistani side that we were not going to get anywhere even if there were further discussions and they decided to come back. As you are aware, a reference has been made by Pakistan to the World Bank. It remains our view that we should continue bilateral discussions; it remains our view that there are possibilities for us to be able to find greater convergence through these discussions.

The point that is coming up again and again - we find sometimes in the Pakistani media or in some of the comments people make - is as if this is a project, which is somehow giving India the capability either to flood Pakistan or to deny water to Pakistan. That is the kind of sense, which comes out. It is not something that is within the parameters of the Treaty. The Treaty cannot deal with suspicions of this kind; it cannot deal with intentions of this kind. We are confident that what we are doing with this project is entirely within the parameters laid down by the Indus Water Treaty. We respect the Treaty because this Treaty has held for the last 45 years. It is a very important Treaty for us, as, I am sure, it is to you. So, it is our belief that the project is entirely in consonance with the provisions of the Treaty. But, if there are suspicions of the kind, which are sometimes mentioned on the Pakistani side then we cannot find a technical fix for meeting this kind of an apprehension or meeting this kind of a fear.

I would also like to remind you that just downstream from Baglihar is another project called Salal, which has been built by India. This project is also very important to India and to the State of J&K. It has been functioning for several years. If we had any such intentions of either flooding Pakistan or denying water to Pakistan, the first installation, which would disappear, would be the Salal project. I cannot see why we should hurt ourselves in order to have the capability to hurt Pakistan. The Indus Water Treaty is precisely in order to give a sense of confidence to both India and Pakistan that adherence to the Treaty will prevent or will meet these kind of apprehensions, or these kind of suspicions.

So, we do not believe that Baglihar is in violation of the Indus Water Treaty. We believe that we were already achieving a degree of convergence during the last round of technical discussions and we also continue to believe that if this process were carried forward then we could have perhaps enlarged the area of convergence. So, we believe that the reference to World Bank was perhaps premature.

Question (Rajiv Sharma, The Tribune): This is with regard to the security and infrastructure aspects of the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service. Now that only 7 weeks remain to operationalise this bus service, there are also reports that on both sides of the LoC the area is mined. It has to be de-mined. In fact, the roads and culverts are also not proper and the bridges are not in shape. Could you comment on these aspects?

Foreign Secretary: It is quite obvious that for operationalising the bus service, the road if it has to be improved has to be improved, security situation has to be ensured and also if there is any mining which has been done in that area, it has to be de-mined. These are precisely the kind of things that when we go back we will be sitting down together with all the concerned agencies and departments and making certain that hopefully by the 7th of April we are able to run the first bus to the LoC.

Question (Al Jazeera TV): What is the basic difference between entry passport and the Indian passport and what kind of features will it carry. Could you specifically tell us whether it would show a Kashmiri as an Indian citizen or a resident of Kashmir?

Foreign Secretary: It is not an entry passport, it is an entry permit system and I do not think it is worthwhile for us to get into the debate about whether or not this indicates whether J&K is part of India or J&K is part of Pakistan. We have made it very clear that this is without prejudice to the positions of both the countries. It is a practical measure, it has a humanitarian dimension. Let us leave it at that.

Question (Chandan Mitra, The Pioneer): Further to this question, I think there are certain issues and clarifications that are necessary on this entry permit system because you will accept that this is somewhat unusual international travel document. In the normal course a person entering another country is admitted by the country that he or she is entering. In this particular case, if an entry permit is issued by the RPO in Srinagar, what is the guarantee that this will be acceptable to the Pakistani authorities and what kind of stamp would any Pakistani national trying to enter India through this route have because our view, as you have explained, goes beyond what Pakistan describes as Azad Kashmir. It includes Gilgit and Baltistan, which do not form part of the Azad Kashmir area. So, without clarification on these kinds of modalities, do you think this is going to become a practical document as you have outlined?

Foreign Secretary: One, the passport office in Srinagar will be the place from which application forms can be obtained. What are the details required in the application form, whenever you get the application form you will see what are the details required. We have also pointed out that there will be a pre-verification process and as far as travel is concerned, across the LoC the travel will be on the basis of a permit which is issued by us, as I would imagine would be the entry permit which is issued by the other side as soon as a person crosses the LoC the permit on which he would be travelling will be issued by the authority on the other side, while on the Indian side it will be on the basis of the permit which will be issued by our side.

So this is a practical measure. Neither side is trying to use and neither side should try and use a procedure for travel across the LoC to try and change the stated position of the other side. That is the basic assumption on which this proposal has been agreed to by both the sides. That it is not something in which we are looking at how we can try and change the position of the other side. That is the agreement between the two sides and as I said this is an arrangement, which is open to all Pakistanis and Indians including the people of J&K, if they are using this particular route. If they are using the regular route for travel by air, they will be using the normal passport and visa system. It is only with respect to this particular route that a certain procedure has been prescribed.

Question (Chandan Mitra, The Pioneer): Just a clarification on this. Are you suggesting that any travel permit issued by us in Srinagar will be necessarily regarded as valid by the Pakistan authorities when a person crosses the border?

Foreign Secretary: As I said, travel on our side of the LoC will be on the basis of a permit which we will issue and travel on the Pakistani side will be on the basis of an entry permit which will be given by the Pakistani side.

Question (Chandan Mitra, The Pioneer): In other words, he can be turned back?

Foreign Secretary: That authority is in any case available to both governments.

Question (Mazhar): I have a question on gas pipeline project. As Indians are talking about satisfaction and reservations, I just want to know what really Pakistan will have to do get this project matured?

Foreign Secretary: I am not quite sure what your question is because as I mentioned India is already talking to Iran in terms of delivery of gas at a designated point on the India-Pakistan border on terms and conditions which will have to be negotiated. These terms and conditions will relate to the quantum, it will relate to the price, it will relate to the guarantees of supply, on possible disruption. So, there are a number of issues, which is normal in any negotiations. Since the pipeline is crossing Pakistan, there will also have to be a certain kind of an overarching agreement which I presume would be required. So, this is the basis on which we have agreed to look at the pipeline. So, these are the elements which need to be negotiated when the discussions are held.

Question: This means that Pakistan has not provided any kind of guarantees to Indians.

Foreign Secretary: We have not yet reached the stage of negotiations. We are still talking about it. What we have said is we accept that this pipeline is a good project that we should look at. As far as the terms and conditions are concerned, these need to be worked out. I understand that our Minister for Petroleum and Natural Gas has invited his counterpart to visit India or may be our Minister can visit Pakistan to take the discussions forward.

Question (Amit Baruah, The Hindu): Sir, my question is on a slightly lighter, but equally important subject and that is on Cricket. I know that this matter is being dealt with by the Cricket Boards, but do you have any information if the Pakistan series is going through and will the Pakistan team actually play a match in Ahmedabad or not?

Foreign Secretary: I have no reason to believe that the tour will not go through. As you yourself pointed out, it is best that these matters are left to the two Cricket Boards to resolve.

Question (Simaf, Pakistan Press Agency): Has the ice really started to melt to resolve the Kashmir issue because President Musharraf has also said that we have been talking for the last 50 years and it is difficult to wait for another 50 years. Your comments please.

Foreign Secretary: I would not like to comment on what President Musharraf may or may not have said. I can only speak for India and the Indian viewpoint is that we are engaged in a process which is perhaps a difficult process. But as we can see it is beginning to yield results. It should be necessary for us to stay on course. Are we really beginning to solve the J&K problem? Our viewpoint has been that we are not shying away from discussing the J&K issue. We are not trying to shelve it, we are not trying to put it aside, but we do believe that while we are talking about the J&K issue, we need to also address the issue of confidence building, we need to enlarge people-to-people contacts between the two sides. Why? Because ultimately any understanding that we arrive at on J&K between the two sides we will need to carry our people along with us, you will have to carry your people along with you. How do we do that unless we have more and more people meeting each other, more and more contacts taking place, more exchange of views taking place.

Often a reference is made to the trust deficit between the two countries. Unless we address that trust deficit - if we recognise that it is a very complicated problem that as you said we have been struggling with for 50 years - it may not be possible for us to find that space in which we come to a mutually acceptable solution. So, I think that the course that we have adopted is a very wise course. We are looking at a Composite Dialogue which not only deals with issues of confidence building, people-to-people contacts, at the same time it also addresses the issue of J&K and peace and security. So, I think this is the right course for us to follow and since it has been begun to yield results, why not be optimistic and take this forward.

Question (Jyoti Malhotra, Star News): Sir, just a clarification. Will an Indian citizen get an entry permit if he or she does not have a passport or is the passport essential for an entry permit?

Foreign Secretary: I mentioned to you that the arrangement that we have for crossing the LoC on the Muzaffarabad-Srinagar bus service. This particular arrangement is open to all Pakistanis and Indians including the people of J&K.

Question (Jyoti Malhotra, Star News): But if I do not have a passport, can I still get...

Foreign Secretary: I said that the travel is on the basis of entry permit, so why are you bringing in the question of a passport.

Question: My question has two parts to it. One, that there was at one point of time, if I am not wrong, an apprehension on the part of India that this CBM which is the bus where you commute on the basis of a travel permit could prove to be counter-productive if the security agencies on either side resort to denying this permit. So, how are we addressing this question on both sides, Second, the Foreign Minister of Pakistan today said that India has accepted gas pipeline was a stand-alone project. I think earlier we were viewing it as a part of comprehensive economic and trade exchange between the two countries. What is the nuance involved here?

Foreign Secretary: Well, as far as the bus service is concerned, frankly if we have agreed to operationalise this bus service, I would imagine that on both sides there is a commitment to achieving the objective that it is supposed to achieve. So, why should we assume that agencies on the Pakistani side or the agencies on the Indian side will in some way or the other subvert this or sabotage this by not allowing enough people to travel across? We have said that April 7 is the date on which we will try and operationalise this service and let us see how it works.

With regard to the pipeline, I think, I have spelt out very clearly what our position is. What is the current state in terms of the negotiations on the pipeline particularly with Iran? As I said, what we are talking to Iran about is the delivery of the gas at a designated point on the India-Pakistan border and the terms and conditions under which this would be supplied is something, which is to be negotiated. Naturally, since it is going through Pakistani territory, there would have to be an understanding among the three countries. That is a process, which we will take forward in the days to come.

170. Statements by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh and Foreign Minister of Pakistan Khurshid Kasuri at the Joint Press Conference.

Islamabad, February 16, 2005.

External Affairs Minister Mr. Natwar Singh: I have just concluded an extremely useful and intensive discussion with my distinguished colleague and friend, the Foreign Minister of Pakistan. H.E. Mr. Khurshid Kasuri, I want to thank you for your hospitality.

2. Earlier in the morning, I had the privilege of calling on President of Pakistan, H.E. General Pervez Musharraf and the Prime Minister of Pakistan, H.E. Mr. Shaukat Aziz. In both these meetings, I had conveyed the greetings and good wishes of the Prime Minister of India.

3. I have come to Pakistan for the first bilateral visit of the External Affairs Minister of India since 1989. I have also come at a stage in the present process between our two countries when significant positive developments have taken place over the past one year. At the same time, it was also felt that continued appropriate political interaction would inevitably impart further momentum to the process.

4. I am happy to be able to share with you that we have been able to take several significant further steps:

- (i) We have agreed between us on mutually acceptable procedures for establishing a bus service between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad.
- (ii) We have also agreed to look at a pipeline through Pakistan subject to satisfaction of our concerns related to security and assured supplies;

- (iii) We have instructed our officials that in the forthcoming series of meetings between now and July, agreements be finalized on Pre-notification of Missile Tests, MOU between Indian Coastguards and Pakistan's Maritime Security Agency, and MOU between Narcotics Control Authorities;
- (iv) We have agreed between us to start a bus service between Amritsar and Lahore, and also to agreed religious places such as Nankana Sahib and we have instructed our officials to immediately tie up the technical details;
- (v) It was also agreed that discussion would be initiated on agreements on:
 - (a) Reducing Risk of Nuclear Accidents or Unauthorized Use of Nuclear Weapons;
 - (b) Preventing Incidents at Sea.

5. We have agreed to consider further measures to alleviate the situation of civilian prisoners and apprehended fishermen. I impressed upon His Excellency the Foreign Minister of Pakistan the need to release the apprehended fishermen along with their boats, and to expedite their return.

6. I also conveyed to my counterpart our readiness to start the Khokrapar-Munnabao rail link from October 2005, and requested Pakistan to expedite their own preparations. We are continuing with our efforts for early re-establishment of our respective Consulates General in Karachi and Mumbai.

7. Both of us are looking forward to the first meeting of the Joint Study Group on Trade and Economic Cooperation at the level of Commerce Secretaries¹ scheduled for February 22-23, 2005 in New Delhi.

1. The secretary level meeting which took place in New Delhi on February 22-23, 2005, and inaugurated by the Commerce Minister noted that the India – Pakistan Joint Study Group had detailed discussions on promotion of trade and economic cooperation for the mutual benefit of both countries. The JSG constituted two Working / Sub-Groups on Customs Cooperation and Trade Facilitation and Non-Tariff Barriers (NTBs). The Terms of Reference (TOR) for the Sub-Groups were mutually agreed upon. During the meeting the two sides identified issues relating to bilateral trade and deliberated upon the future roadmap in order to enhance trade and economic cooperation. It was also decided to hold the second meeting of the JSG on mutually agreed dates. The recommendations of the JSG would be submitted to the respective Governments for consideration under the framework of the Composite

8. As you can see, we have come a long way over the past year or so. As I stated yesterday, I am convinced that cooperation between our two countries is not just a desirable objective; it is an imperative.

9. My visit has reinforced in me the determination to continue working for expanding cooperation and understanding between our two countries. The people of both our countries clearly desire it.

10. No doubt, we have differences between us. This is only normal given the history and complexity of our relationship. However, as leaders, it is incumbent upon us to find ways through which we can enhance trust and cooperation, so that the differences can be addressed more productively.

11. Of course, the process can be sustained only in an atmosphere free from terrorism and violence, in the framework of implementation of commitment made on January 6, 2004.

12. I have invited my colleague, the Foreign Minister of Pakistan to visit India to continue with these efforts. I look forward to welcoming him.

Mr. Khurshid Kasuri: I had a useful exchange of views with His Excellency Mr. K. Natwar Singh, External Affairs Minister of India.

Talks were held in a cordial, frank and positive atmosphere.

We had the opportunity to constructively review the status of our bilateral relations as well as the regional cooperation under SAARC.

We have agreed to work together for the early convening of the 13th SAARC Summit.

We have noted with satisfaction the over all improvements in atmospherics between the two countries. We have taken positive steps that auger well for the future of bilateral relations. We are strongly committed to carrying forward the Composite Dialogue process to make it productive and fruitful.

We had discussions on the core issue of Jammu & Kashmir and have impressed upon the Indian government for an early and final settlement of the issue in accordance with the aspirations of the people of Kashmir.

Dialogue between India and Pakistan. The Pakistani delegation was led by Commerce Secretary of Pakistan Tasneem Noorani, while the Indian delegation was led by Commerce Secretary S. N. Menon.

We discussed issues of Peace & Security. Pakistan expressed the hope that both the countries will be able to move forward to promote strategic stability in South Asia.

The Prime Minister of Pakistan has already instructed our Railway authorities to expedite the early operationalization of Khokhrapar-Munabao rail link.

We hope that the Joint Study Group meeting at the level of the Commerce Secretaries to be held in New Delhi from 22-23 February 2005 will come up with recommendations which will be mutually beneficial to both countries.

The Indian Government has agreed to lease a government-owned building and a plot of land in Mumbai for simultaneous opening of Pakistan's Consulate at Mumbai and Indian Consulate at Karachi.

We held discussion on the Siachen issue. It was agreed to direct the Defence Secretaries of the two countries to discuss the issue in a friendly and cooperative manner. I hope that the issue will be resolved in accordance with the understanding reached earlier.

The issue of detained fishermen and civilian prisoners is an humanitarian issue. We have agreed to work out a mechanism for their early release following a summary procedure. Civilian prisoners and detained children who have completed their prison term may be released at an early date.

We have noted with satisfaction the Indian decision to treat the Gas Pipeline project as a stand-alone project. We hope for the early finalization of an agreement.

We also held discussions over the Baglihar and Kishanganga projects. I impressed upon my Indian counterpart for an early resolution of the issues in accordance with the Indus Water Treaty.

The two Foreign Ministers took note of the joint survey conducted by the two countries on the Horizontal segment of the Blue dotted line in the Sir Creek area and express the hope that the issue would be resolved at an early date.

The two sides have agreed to continue the Composite Dialogue process in positive spirit and for constructive results in addressing all issues including Jammu & Kashmir, Peace & Security, conventional and nuclear CBMs, trade and people-to-people contacts.

The President and the Prime Minister of Pakistan reiterated invitation to Dr. Manmohan Singh, Prime Minister of India to visit Pakistan at the earliest convenience.

171. Joint statement on talks between India and Pakistan on Srinagar – Muzaffarabad Bus Service.

Islamabad, February 16, 2005.

Both governments have agreed to allow travel across the LOC between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad by bus. Travel will be by an entry permit system, once identities are verified. Application forms for travel will be available with designated authorities in Srinagar and Muzaffarabad¹. The bus service is expected to commence from 7 April 2005.

1. Answering questions on 24th March the official spokesperson of the MEA described the Srinagar – Muzaffarabad bus service as a “very important confidence building measure”. He added, “As you know India had proposed it as far back as October 2002. We are certainly hopeful that it will serve the purpose that it is intended to.
Answering a question that there was some confusion regarding the travel procedures for Hurriyat, the Spokesperson said: “I thought I had gone into a fair amount of detail on the question of the procedures to be followed and the scope of the travellers on the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus but I think your question and several other telephone calls that I have received during the day have prompted me to once again put out for you the details of the procedures for travel on the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad. We have copies of that but if you like I can go through the procedures so that it is clear to everybody. Application forms for travel by the bus across the LoC are available with designated authorities in Srinagar and Muzaffarabad. In India’s case, the designated authority is the Regional Passport Office in Srinagar. In addition to the forms given out by RPO, the practice being followed is to also give out forms through the good offices of the SP and SSP, Kashmir Valley, who in turn, distribute the forms through police stations in the Valley. The application forms require information and details, including photographs, as is normally required for a passport and a visa and document for international travel. The intending traveller on our side of the LoC submits the application form to the RPO. The application is subjected to due verification on our side to establish the bonafides of the traveller. The verified form is passed on to Muzaffarabad through the immigration control point at the LoC to decide on acceptability of the traveller. Thereafter, due verification is carried out on the Pakistan side. The verified

172. Address by External Affairs Minister K.Natwar Singh at South Asia Free Media Association (SAFMA) reception: "Premise and Promise of Indo-Pak Long-Term Relations".

Lahore, February 17, 2005.

I am delighted to be in Pakistan and truly privileged to be addressing such a distinguished gathering of media, intellectuals and eminent personalities from Pakistan. I bring to you warm greetings from the people of India and their desire for brotherhood and good neighbourly relations with Pakistan.

You have asked me to share with you my assessment of the Premise and Promise of India-Pakistan Long-Term Relations.

I am glad you chose this particular theme. It aptly reflects the mood forms are returned to RPO, Srinagar through the same route. These forms indicate clearance or refusal, as the case may be, for those who have applied for travel. When the actual travel takes place, based on this application, an entry permit is issued by the other side at the immigration check point by its designated authority. For travellers coming to J&K from Muzaffarabad, the entry permit is issued by RPO, Srinagar at the immigration check point at the LoC. The permit indicates the number of days and places allowed for the visit. There is also a requirement of police reporting by every passenger. All citizens of India and Pakistan (but no third country nationals) can use this route for travel within the territory of the erstwhile State of J&K, including Gilgit and Baltistan. However, the receiving authority reserves the right and discretion to deny entry, and to specify which particular places are allowed, in each case, to be visited."

Question: Any restrictions on any Indian citizen to continue his journey further?

Answer: I think I have answered that. I have told you even today that this permit is for citizens of India and Pakistan to travel on this route within the territory of the erstwhile State of J&K including Gilgit and Baltistan. I think that is clear.

Question: How long does it take for the verification process?

Answer: I do not have a fixed figure on that but, I suppose it depends on how quickly verification can be done in each particular case and this may vary.

Question: You said that the entry permit is issued by either side, but then no Indian Law is violated if a person goes to Islamabad or Rawalpindi with the concurrence of the Pakistan Authorities. There is no violation of any Indian travel document or permit...

Answer: How can an Indian Law apply in any case in another country? So, I do not think that sort of an argument can lead us to any conclusive result. Indian Law in any case applies within India. What is applicable here is an agreed and explicit understanding between the two countries. So any other thing would be contrary to this understanding.

Question: If Pakistan does invite the Hurriyat Leaders from POK into Lahore or Islamabad. Would we consider that as a hostile act or a breach of understanding?

Answer: That is a speculative question.

Question: How would we characterize it?

Answer: I refuse to characterize a speculative situation.

that has built up with the progress achieved, and the change in the atmospherics of the relationship over the past one year. Two years ago, it would perhaps be an object of ridicule if such a theme was suggested.

I have often commented to my friends in Pakistan that there are significant possibilities of a cooperative India-Pakistan relationship. If we combine our efforts on issues, our goals would be well within our grasp. I have also pointed out that a combined India-Pakistan Cricket Team would be unbeatable.

This also reminds us of the premises on which we need to promote our relations. We need to build mutual trust. We need the cementing force of cooperative trade and economic links, based on the obvious complementarities that exist. Both President Musharraf and Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz underlined this aspect in their remarks to me.

There are natural affinities between our people, cultural commonalities and family relationships. After all, why is it that an Indian and a Pakistani strike natural friendships when outside the subcontinent? This is what we need to build upon.

India is committed to peace and friendship with Pakistan. These are not just words. We have worked actively to put them into practice. As you know, only yesterday we worked out with the Government of Pakistan mutually acceptable procedures for a bus service between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad. We have also agreed to consider an energy corridor through Pakistan, subject to satisfaction of our concerns related to security and assured supplies. We will soon commence a bus service between Amritsar and Lahore, and to religious places such as Nankana Sahib. The Government of Pakistan has agreed to work with us for an early commencement of the Kokhrapar- Munabao rail link. We hope this will start some time in October this year.

All these decisions have followed upon the significant progress made over the past year through normalisation of diplomatic and other links. Round One of the Composite Dialogue has been completed and the second round initiated. The ceasefire has held since November 2003.

In my meetings with Foreign Minister Kasuri, we have also taken decisions to finalise agreements on Pre-notification of Missile Tests, MOU between Coastguards and Pakistan's Maritime Security Agency, MOU between Narcotics Control Authorities, Agreement on Preventing Incidents at Sea, Agreement on Reducing Risk of Nuclear Accident or Preventing Unauthorized use of Nuclear Weapons.

All this progress has been possible also because of an overwhelming desire among our people for peaceful cooperation and interaction. We need to build further on this foundation. There is a tremendous reservoir of goodwill on both sides, based on our affinities and commonalities. Greater people-to-people contact opens the doors for a better appreciation of our viewpoints. Our conscious policy has been to be "people-centric" and to promote people-to-people exchanges.

As a measure of our sincerity and goodwill, we have unilaterally liberalized the visa regime for Pakistani nationals to travel to India, including a system of visas on arrival for certain select categories. We do not have such facility for nationals of any other country. We look forward to group tours very soon and are already implementing a special visa regime for Pakistani students to study in Indian educational institutions. I believe that this is a time for us to also let the people set the pace for a while. The Governments, who are appearing somewhat more cautious and conservative, could also play a facilitating role for the natural affinities of the people to define new parameters of our relationship.

India has emerged as the world's fourth largest economy, with an average annual growth rate of 6-7% in the last decade. Our economic linkages with neighbours like China, Sri Lanka, Nepal and Bhutan have grown exponentially. India-China trade is now USD 13.6 billion. We have been greatly encouraged by the positive experience of our Free Trade Agreements in the immediate neighbourhood with Nepal, Sri Lanka and Bhutan and we hope to institutionalize such cooperation with China, ASEAN and BIMSTEC very soon. Today, over 50% of India's foreign trade is towards the east. The target for total India-ASEAN trade itself is US$ 30 billion by 2007. We are on the threshold of a large conglomeration of open and free trading nations in Asia as never before.

India-Pakistan trade regretfully has grown slowly while India's trade with all her SAARC partners has grown substantially. Unfortunately, Pakistan's position as the link between energy sources in Central and West Asia and the growing demand in South Asia has not been leveraged into long-term arrangements of mutual benefit. I hope that this process will start soon.

We attach great importance to economic and commercial cooperation with Pakistan. We believe that this would help address the common challenges of poverty and imbalance in the development of the region and lead to prosperity among our people. A high-level study group has been set up to examine the potential areas of cooperation. The group is having its first meeting on February 22-23 and we are confident that we would be able to identify specific areas of convergence without any further delay.

India sincerely seeks a cooperative and constructive relationship with Pakistan. For this, it is imperative for us to invest in the ongoing process of engagement and confidence building. We have proposed several measures to Pakistan which would help bridge our differences and build greater understanding and mutual trust. Once we are able to set aside our suspicions and misapprehensions, through a continuous and persistent process of confidence building, I am sure that we would be in a position to tackle some of the more complex issues that plague our relations. Confidence Building Measures will help create an atmosphere conducive to addressing more difficult issues and help fulfill the promise of friendship and cooperation between India and Pakistan.

I am grateful that you are here to meet me and listen to what I have to say.

173. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh on return to New Delhi from Pakistan.New Delhi, February 17, 2005.

I have had a productive and useful visit to Pakistan. As you are aware, this was the first bilateral visit of an Indian External Affairs Minister to Pakistan in 16 years.

2. I received a very warm welcome and friendly reception and my talks with President Musharraf, Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz and Foreign Minister Kasuri were marked by cordiality and a shared desire to take our relationship forward towards the goal of peace, mutual understanding and a shared prosperity.

3. It now seems that there is a groundswell of goodwill and positive sentiment among people in both our countries for a relationship free from hostility and bitterness. This has enabled our two Governments to conclude significant agreements towards building confidence and trust.

4. These include the long-awaited Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service, which has been uniformly welcomed by all sections of society in both India and Pakistan, but particularly by the people of Jammu & Kashmir.

5. No doubt, we have differences between us. I underlined to the Pakistani leaders that the peace process could only be sustained in an atmosphere free from violence and terrorism and that the solemn assurances contained in the January 6, 2004 Joint Statement must be implemented fully.

6. Just before returning to Delhi, I spent a few hours in Lahore. Our decision to open a bus service between Amritsar and Lahore was warmly welcomed in the city, just as it has been in our Punjab. The Governor of Punjab received me with warmth and Chief Minister Elahi graciously hosted a lunch for me.

7. There was also an interaction with SAFMA (South Asia Free Media Association), which is a grouping of leading media personalities from South Asian countries. In all these interactions, I encountered a new spirit of goodwill and a commitment to open the doors between our two countries even wider in the days to come.

8. It is this foundation of positive sentiment and hope at the levels of people that gives us the conviction that the current peace process is more firmly anchored and more capable of yielding results than similar initiatives in the past.

9. It is in this spirit that we pledge to carry forward the dialogue between our countries in the days to come.

174 . Joint statement issued at the first meeting of India-Pakistan Joint Study Group (JSG) on Trade and Economic Cooperation.

New Delhi, February 23, 2005.

The First Meeting of the India-Pakistan Joint Study Group (JSG) on Trade and Economic Cooperation was held on February 22-23, 2005. The Indian delegation was led by Mr. S.N. Menon, Commerce Secretary, Government of India and the Pakistani delegation was led by Mr. Tasneem Noorani, Commerce Secretary, Government of Pakistan.

2. The meeting was inaugurated by Mr. Kamal Nath, Minister for Commerce and Industry, Government of India. The talks were held in a cordial and constructive atmosphere.

3. The Joint Study Group had detailed discussions on promotion of trade and economic cooperation for the mutual benefit of both countries. The JSG constituted two Working/Sub-Groups on Customs Cooperation & Trade Facilitation and Non-Tariff Barriers (NTBs). The Terms of Reference (TOR) for the Sub-Groups were mutually agreed upon. The two sides identified issues relating to bilateral trade and deliberated upon the future roadmap in order to enhance trade and economic cooperation. It was also decided to hold the Second Meeting of the JSG on mutually agreed dates.

4. The recommendations of the JSG would be submitted to the respective Governments for consideration under the framework of the Composite Dialogue.

175. Suo Motu statement in the Rajya Sabha by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh on his visit to Pakistan.

New Delhi, March 4, 2005.

I visited Pakistan from February 15 to 17 2005. It was the first visit of an Indian Foreign Minister to Pakistan in almost 16 years. I met President Musharraf, Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz, and held extensive discussions with my counterpart, Foreign Minister Khurshid M. Kasuri.

During my visit, agreement was reached with Pakistan to commence a bus service between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad. Honourable members would recall that the proposal for the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad bus was first announced on October 22, 2003 by Shri Yashwant Sinha, the then External Affairs Minister.

Agreement was also reached on starting a bus service between Lahore and Amritsar, including to religious places such as Nankana Sahib. Pakistan also agreed to work towards the early restoration of the Khokrapar-Munnabao rail link. These links would significantly enhance people-to-people contacts, which have provided palpable support to the present process.

The Srinagar Muzaffarabad bus service is expected to commence on 7 April 2005. Dates for the Amritsar-Lahore bus service and the Khokrapar-Munnabao rail link will also be finalized.

On the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service, let me clarify that all Indian and Pakistani nationals would be permitted to use this route across the LoC. Each side will designate its authority for receiving application forms for travel and for issue of travel permits at the checkpoint. On the Indian side, the designated authority is the Regional Passport Officer, Srinagar. The procedure adopted is without prejudice to our stated position on the issue of Jammu & Kashmir. The display of mutual flexibility has enabled the two sides to take a significant step in responding to humanitarian considerations, particularly the opportunity for divided families to meet each other with relative ease and convenience.

We have also agreed to look at a pipeline through Pakistan subject to satisfaction of our concerns related to security and assured supplies. This would also contribute to widening of our economic inter-linkages.

During my visit to Islamabad, following additional agreements were reached:

- (i) Between now and July, agreements will be finalized on Pre-notification of Missile Tests, MOU between Indian Coastguards and Pakistan's Maritime Security Agency, and MOU between Narcotics Control Authorities.
- (ii) Discussion would be initiated on agreements on reducing Risk of Nuclear Accidents or Unauthorized Use of Nuclear Weapons and Preventing Incidents at Sea.
- (iii) Further measures to alleviate the situation of civilian prisoners and apprehended fishermen would be taken. I impressed upon the Foreign Minister of Pakistan the need to release the apprehended fishermen along with their boats, and to expedite their return.
- (iv) It was agreed to continue with efforts for early re-establishment of our respective Consulates General in Karachi and Mumbai.

The issue of Baglihar Hydroelectric Power Project in J&K was raised by Pakistani leaders. We pointed out to them that the project was fully in consonance with the Indus Waters Treaty of 1960, to which we remain committed. I also conveyed that the last round of bilateral technical discussions had registered progress in our view, and if the discussion had been continued there could have been even greater convergence of views. While expressing our willingness to return to bilateral discussions, I said that Pakistan's reference to the World Bank to seek the services of a neutral expert was premature. Members are aware that the project is of great significance for the economic development of J&K, and we intend to continue with the project.

On my way back, I visited Lahore where I addressed a group of media persons and prominent citizens at a meeting organised through SAFMA (South Asia Free Media Association). I called on the Governor of Punjab, Lt. Gen. (rtd) Khalid Maqbool, while the Chief Minister Chaudhary Pervez Elahi graciously hosted a lunch for me. At the lunch, I had a useful discussion with Chaudhary Shujaat Hussain, President of Pakistan Muslim League.

The atmosphere in all these meetings was relaxed, friendly and positive, with emphasis on commonalties, and importance of people to people contacts.

My visit took place in the overall context of improving bilateral relations with Pakistan. We intend to impart further momentum to the present process.

As Honourable Members are aware, significant developments have taken place in India-Pakistan relations since April 2003. Relations have been restored at the level of High Commissioners, transport and communication links have resumed, one round of the Composite Dialogue has been completed. A series of technical level and Composite Dialogue related meetings have been held on schedule. Another round was initiated during the Foreign Secretary level talks in December 2004 in Islamabad.

People to people exchanges are taking place across the spectrum in large numbers. There has been a resumption of visits by pilgrim groups. Our High Commission is currently issuing close to 7,000 visas per month. This month, we expect to issue an additional 8,000 visas, over and above this number to cater to the requirements of those coming to watch the India-Pakistan cricket series in India.

The ceasefire has held for more than a year. The bilateral process has been given impetus through maintenance of high level contacts: PM met President Musharraf in New York in September 2004; Pakistan PM Shaukat Aziz visited New Delhi on November 23-24, 2004.

Some progress has also been achieved on the humanitarian issue of fishermen and civilian detainees. During the Foreign Secretary level talks in December 2004, it was inter-alia agreed that both sides would give consular access to all prisoners under their custody. Following the visit, Pakistan has provided consular access to approximately 100 civilian prisoners and 650 fishermen in January and February 2005. We are continuing to press Pakistan on the issue of 54 missing defense personnel.

On the Sir Creek issue, a Joint Survey of the boundary pillars in the horizontal segment of the International Boundary in the Sir Creek area has also been successfully concluded in January 2005.

Thus meaningful progress has been achieved and the Government intends to continue with the present process in an atmosphere free from terrorism and violence. Government have made it clear that the process is critically dependent on the fulfillment of January 6, 2004 commitment of President Musharraf not to permit any territory under Pakistan's control to be used to support terrorism in any manner.

176. Question in the Rajya Sabha: "New Rail and Bus links between India and Pakistan".

New Delhi, March 17, 2005.

Will the Minister of External Affairs be pleased to state:-

- (a) the details of the proposal for the new rail and bus links between India and Pakistan;
- (b) whether Government have examined its viability;
- (c) if so, the details thereof;
- (d) whether the security implication of such links was taken into consideration before making such announcements; and
- (e) if so, the details thereof?

The Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs (Shri E. Ahamed):

a) to (e) A statement is placed on the Table of the House.

Statement

During the visit of External Affairs Minister, Shri K. Natwar Singh, to Pakistan from February 15-17 2005 to Pakistan, agreements were reached to start bus services between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad, and between Lahore and Amritsar, including to religious places such as Nankana Sahib. Pakistan also agreed to work towards early restoration of the Khokrapar-Munabao rail link.

These links would significantly enhance people-to-people contacts, which have provided palpable support to the present process. Security implications of the above links have been taken into account and passengers will be allowed to travel on them only after due procedures and checks have been completed.

Shri Rajnath Singh: Mr. Chairman, Sir, It is a very important issue. When the External Affairs Minister signed an agreement with Pakistan on this subject, it was our expectation that a statement in the House would be made. Even after a long interval no statement has been placed on the Table of the House. After being disappointed I had to put this question on an important issue. The Hon'ble Minister in his reply has stated that the decision on the bus service has been taken to promote people-to-people contacts between India and Pakistan. No one can take objection that relations between India and Pakistan should improve. No only that the means of transport between the two countries should be convenient, simple and without much fuss. But the most important thing is to take care of security. The relations between India and Pakistan...(interruptions)

Hon. Chairman: Please ask the question.

Shri Rajnath Singh: I want to know that after all the facilities have been provided, there should be no let up of any kind in security. What steps the Government of India has taken to ensure this? I also want to remind...(interruptions)

Hon. Chairman: Let the Government have its say.

Shri Rajnath Singh: Sir, I want to remind that when the government under Shri Atal Behari Vajpayee decided this...(interruptions)

Shri Dipankar Mukherjee: He is arguing...(interruptions)

Hon. Chairman: Please ask the question; I wont allow you to make a speech.

Shri Rajnath Singh: Sir, at that time there was a provision for passport and visa; but now passport and visa requirements have been removed, and a simple permit system has been introduced. I want to know what political and diplomatic advantage has accrued to India?... ..(interruptions)

Hon. Chairman. O.K you have asked the questions.

Shri K. Natwar Singh: Sir, I want to say that we all respect Shri Rajnath Singh. I was to give a statement last week, I could not do so for some reasons. Therefore I had laid it on the Table of the House. This is my answer to the first question. The second question raised is about security. I want to say with all the respect that our government is as much concerned about security as you are; but I want to remind what was happening in Kargil when Shri Atal Behari Vajpayee and Shir Jaswant Singh were embracing in Lahore.

Shri Rajnath Singh: Chairman, Sir, Whatever may have happened in Kargil .. (interruptions)

Hon. Chairman: You ask the question. Please forget what happened in Kargil..(interruptions) ask the question.

Shri Rajnath Singh: Sir, on such an important security related question, the External Affairs Minister is making such a comment. What happened at the time of Kargil, the whole country knows it. India's dignity came into focus before the world. This is the truth. Sir, I want to know...(interruptions)

* * * *

Shri Rajnath Singh: I had placed some security related questions before the Hon. Minister. I am sorry I did not get a proper response for them. I had said when the NDA government had decided on the transport related facilities, there was provision for passport and visa. But now under Pakistani pressure you have given them up; and accepted the permit or licencing system. I want to know by this system what political or diplomatic advantage India has gained. This is my first question to you.

Mr. Chairman, with this first question there is the second one which I want to ask the Hon. Minister. A large number of Pandits from Poonchh and Rajouri are settled in Jammu; but till today they have not got their citizenship; such people who from Poonchh and Rajouri who are settled there directly and have not been able to get the citizenship till now, how will they take advantage of this bus service? This is what I want to know and also along with that want to know the United Nations Monitoring Group that is deployed there has its utility still intact or you are going to wind it up.. (interruptions)

Shri Manoj Bhattacharya: He keeps putting so many questions. That is too much.

Shri E. Ahamed: Sir, I hope, if the hon. Member would like to know the special procedure that we have adopted in this matter, his grouse and whatever feelings that he has expressed could be dispelled. Sir, for the Srinagar-Muzzafarabad bus service, a special procedure has been worked out for travel across the LoC, which would preserve India's principled position on Jammu and Kashmir and also, take into account all the security concerns.

With your kind permission, hon. Chairman Sir, I would like to just explain that procedure. Then these doubts will be definitely removed. Application forms for travel by bus across the Loc would be available with the designated authorities in Srinagar and Muzzafarabad. In India's case, the designated authority is the Regional Passport Office in Srinagar, Ministry of External Affairs. Further, the application forms would require information and details, including photographs, as is normally required for a passport and a visa.

The intending traveller on our side of the LoC would submit the application form to the RPO, Srinagar. The application would be subjected to due verification on our side to establish the bona fides of the traveller. The verified form would be passed on to Muzzafarabad through the immigration control point at the LoC to decide on the acceptability of the traveller. Due verification would be carried out on the other side. The verified forms would be returned to the RPO, Srinagar through the same route. The returned form would indicate those who would be allowed entry to the other side. In the course of the actual travel, based on this application, an entry permit would be issued by the other side at the immigration check point by its designated authority.

Shri Rajnath Singh: Sir, What is the need of such a lengthy response?...(interruptions)

Hon. Chairman: Let him speak. (interruptions)

Shri. E. Ahamed: Sir, I may be permitted to complete my answer...(interruptions)...he just now asked about the procedure...I am just mentioning the special procedure. For travellers coming to J&K, from Muzaffarabad, the entry permit would be issued by the RPO, Srinagar, at the immigration checkpoint at the LoC. It would indicate the number of days allowed for the visit as well as the places allowed. (Interruptions)

Mr. Chairman: Your reply has been circulated to all the Members. (Interruptions)

Shri E. Ahamed: Sir, I just want to explain that all their concerns with respect to security have been taken into account. This is almost like issuing of a passport. And it is also as much as like issuing of a visa. It will be called a special application form and entry permit will be issued only after due verification by both sides. There should be no reason for any apprehension with respect to the security.

Prof. Saif-ud-Din Soz: Sir, I congratulate the Government of India on taking this bold decision, as also the Prime Minister, who considered this question. Mr. Natwar Singh's contribution is also there. It is very timely. Here I would like to put a definite question. But before that I want to tell this House that this decision to open Srinagar-Muzaffarabad road has been very widely welcomed in the State of Jammu and Kashmir. It has brought relief in the minds of the people who got separated.. I am happy that the Government of India has taken measures in respect of security. Now, the point I have in my mind is that it is very good that Srinagar-Muzaffarabad route will be opened very shortly. There are two routes which are very important — Kargil and Skardu. That is very important for those backward, illiterate and poor people...(Interruptions)

Mr. Chairman: Please, come to the question. (Interruptions)

Prof. Saif-ud-Din Soz: Sir, earlier there was a rail link between Jammu and Suchetgarh. We want that there should be a road link between Suchetgarh and Jammu as also a rail link. So my question is this. Will the hon. External Affairs Minister, Mr. Natwar Singhji, consider and take this House into confidence on Kargil-Skardu road and Suchetgarh-Jammu Road?

Hon. Chairman: This does not come within the purview of this question.

Prof. Saif-ud-Din Soz: it does.

Hon. Chairman: Then let the Minister respond.

Prof. Saif-ud-Din Soz: Sir, we want relief in other areas.

Shir E. Ahamed: Sir, I just want to say only one thing. There are number of such proposals in Kargil sector, Jammu and Sialkot. The Government would examine them soon after the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad route has been assessed.

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Sir, the Minister of State, Shri Ahammed, had explained to this House in detail the procedure that will be followed with regard to the travel documents. He has not indicated, however, certain other things. Therefore part (a) of my question is, which is the designated authority on the Pakistan's side which will entertain the applications and issue the permits?

Part (b) of my question is this. Is it a fact that when the Indian traveller goes to the LoC, he will be travelling in Pak-occupied Kashmir on the basis of an entry permit issued by the Pakistan designated authority? And will it therefore not amount to a situation where he will have some kind of a visa without a passport? Arising out of this, is it a fact that this will strengthen Pakistan's claim that the Jammu and Kashmir is a disputed territory and that the Government of India has lent legitimacy to the authorities of Pak-occupied Kashmir including the northern areas?

Shri E. Ahamed: Sir, I do not think it will strengthen their claims and legitimacy on the area under their occupation. But, on the other hand, it will strengthen India's stated position that we did not accept their demand for local documents. They wanted only a local document. We said, "No, we cannot". Why we said that local document was not acceptable to us is because since 1950, such documents were used to travel not only in Jammu and Kashmir, but also across Punjab and Rajasthan borders. Therefore, we did not accept that. There would be...(Interruptions)... I am coming to Pakistan...(Interruptions)...

Shri Yashwant Sinha: That was my first question: Who is the designated authority? That was my first question...(Interruptions)...

Shri E. Ahamed: They have their own Director-General...(Interruptions)...Sir, we are concerned about the designated authority that we have decided...(Interruptions)...

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Sir, they must know as to who the designated authority on the Pakistani side is. You are saying on 17th March that the bus will be inaugurated by the Prime Minister on the 7th April and you do not know as to who the designated authority on that side is.

Shri E. Ahamed: Sir, designated authority is the discretion of the respective States...(Interruptions)...

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Who is it? ...(Interruptions)... Who have they decided?...(Interruptions)...

Shri E. Ahamed: Hon. Member, I may just be permitted to say that the only thing is whether the special procedure that we have adopted is implemented or not. The special procedure is our designated authority to do our work and their designated authority to do their work...(Interruptions)...

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Is their designated authority the Deputy Commissioner of Muzzafarabad?

Shri E. Ahamed: It is a matter to be decided by Pakistan... (Interruptions)... We are not to dictate them as to who should be theirs, and they are not to dictate to us as to who should be ours...(Interruptions)...

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Sir, this is breath-taking because the Minister will not answer it and I am sorry that the senior Minister is just sitting and not replying. I am asking as to who is the designated authority on the Pakistan side.

Shri K. Natwar Singh: This proposal was put forward by your Government.

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Yes, we are very proud of it. But we had insisted that it should be done on the basis of passport...(Interruptions)...

Shri K. Natwar Singh: Let me assure you that we have looked very carefully at the discussions you had with the Prime Minister Jamali, their proposals for having passport and your proposals. All these details have been discussed ad nauseam and we are not recognising any local identity document. Pakistan can decide who they want to designate as their authority. We are not accepting on our side any document which we don't think is the right document. That is the first thing. Secondly, the composite dialogue that you started, we are taking it forward in every single area. And, the security aspect was also mentioned. The Prime Minister, I may mention, has informed your leadership about what has been done on this particular issue and every care has been taken that in no way India's security or India's national interests will be adversely affected...(Interruptions)...

Mr. Chairman: Please take your seat...(Interruptions)...Please take your seat...(Interruptions)...

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Sir I asked a specific question in parts a, b and c. and I expect a specific reply. Because this 'general editorial' he will get away with this..(interruptions)

Shri C. Ramachandraiah: When your Minister is not in a position to explain, why do you shout?...(Interruptions)...He is not in a position to explain, why do you shout?...(Interruptions)...

Shri Janardhana Poojary: He is a senior Member...(Interruptions)...

Mr. Chairman: The Minister is here with his reply. Please take your seat...(Interruptions)...

Shri K. Natwar Singh: Sir, I am trying my very best to answer the question. Even today, if people travel by normal route, it is okay. They would go on the basis of a Pakistani visa. So, presently, neither is there any compromise nor a change. What I am trying to say is that, please read the interview that you gave in October, 2003 in which you waxed eloquence about the marvellous thing that you were doing on Indo-Pakistan relations. Please read it.

Shri Yashwant Sinha: What has it to do with it?

Shri K. Natwar Singh: It has everything to do with it. (Interruptions)

Shri Yashwant Sinha: I am not opposing it. (Interruptions) He is diverting the attention... (Interruptions) I am not questioning the process. (Interruptions) I am asking a specific question, and I want an answer.

Shri K. Natwar Singh: Sir, this is a very extraordinary situation. We are supposed to answer who will be the Pakistani authority...(Interruptions)

Shri Yashwant Sinha: You will be recognising the Pak-occupied-Kashmir if we accepts anything that Pakistan says. There is our parliamentary resolution. You are not worried about that. What are you doing? I am not only disappointed, but also amazed at his reply. (Interruptions)

Shri K. Natwar Singh: Let me very politely say that I entirely return your compliment, what you have given me. I am amazed and also disappointed by your compliment. Let me tell you one thing sincerely. The Chief Minister of Jammu and Kashmir telephoned the Prime Minister and came to see me in Delhi to say that he welcomed this step, the people of Jammu and Kashmir welcomed it and the whole of India welcomed it.

Shri Jaswant Singh: Mr. Chairman, Sir, I had really no intention of either seeking the clarification or entering into this field, which has been converted into an area of contention from the very beginning by the hon. Minister, by traversing this question in a variety of ways. The question and its elements are very simple. I am sure, they are, in general, maintenance of security, and there is no doubt that we are unacquainted. We are concerned for security. I don't think that was the question at all. We have a commitment, and snide efforts are made as sarcasm by the hon. Minister. The fundamental question still remains that, when it is, a passport officer on this side, and a passport officer's system on the other side, when they would be checked through Customs, and when you are making a beginning, then, why have you moved away from the passport and visa, when in actuality, you are doing everything that a passport and visa are required, plus, what you are doing is that you now say that any citizen of Pakistan, from anywhere in Pakistan, can utilise this method, coming to Srinagar via the Muzaffarabad route, and thereafter, he has not the right to leave Jammu and Kashmir. We are fully convinced of their concern about security. I don't think the starting point of this discussion is that, and that is why, I find it strange when the hon. Minister, who must really have the maximum information, answers the question in this manner, because this becomes a very dangerous instrument, Nzinga, and so, that is why, all that we wanted to know is that when you have shifted away from passport and visa, which, after all, is a method of establishing identity, and a means of travel, what additional benefit has it accrued to India? What is visa? Visa is granting a permission to travel. That is the essence of what it is. When you have moved away from it, what my distinguished colleague, Shri Yashwant Sinha, wanted to know is that, why have you moved away? What additional political, diplomatic and security gains have accrued to India? Have you done this in this region? (Interruptions)

Shri Nilotpall Basu: Let us have a debate on this subject. I think, within the framework of Question-Answer, we cannot really address all the issues. We have no problem in having a debate. (Interruptions) Question Hour is not the appropriate forum. (Interruptions)

Shri S. S. Ahluwalia: The leader of the opposition cannot speak?

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Is this joke?..(interruptions)

Shri Mukhtiar Abbas Naqvi: The House cannot run like this. If they do not let the Leader of the Opposition to speak, the House will not proceed...(interruptions)

Mr. Chairman: Let him speak. ..(interruptions) Let him put the question. Let him speak. You may sit down.

Shri Jaswant Singh: Hon. Chairman, There are no two opinions that for the people of the two countries means of transport are simple and easy and there are more opportunities. That is why we suggested Jammu – Lahore; Amritsar – Lahore; Jammu – Sialkot; Jammu – Suchetgarh – all these places are opened up so that any citizen of Pakistan can use them. But if 35 come and 31 go missing; this raises a question in itself. When visa and passport .. (interruptions)

Shri Nilotpal Basu: This is question or discussion, at least tell us this...(interruptions) We can't misuse the Question Hour like this. ...(Interruptions)... Sir, if you kindly allow us to have a debate on this, we can all participate. ...(Interruptions)... And this is an important issue. ...(Interruptions)...

Shri Jaswant Singh: We said this, these were our suggestions, definitely. This is what Hon. Atal did in the year 2000. We suggested in 2000 that we use the route of passport and visa; this was not acceptable to Pakistan. ..(interruptions)... This did not happen then, then they said that..(interruptions)

Nilotpal Basu: Sir, We need your protection. Is this question or speech? ..(interruptions) ..

Shri Surendra Nath: Why is he repeatedly interrupting? ...(interruptions)

Mr. Chairman: Let him finish.

Shri Jaswant Singh: If now passport and visa requirements have been given up, the reasons for that? What are we going to gain from this?...(interruptions)

Shri K. Natwar Singh: May I, Sir, first, respectfully address the distinguished Leader of the Opposition there? I do not have your gift of obfuscation, and neither do I have your style of speech, fortunately, because you know.....(Interruptions).....(Interruptions)...

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Why is he saying all this? ...(Interruptions)... From the first sentence, the hon. Minister of External Affairs has unnecessarily started saying.....(Interruptions)...

Shri Nalotpal Basu: Sir, Give us an opportunity to make a speech next time. ..(interruptions)

Hon. Chairman: Let him speak. ..(interruptions)

Shri K. Natwar Singh: I will tell you.....(Interruptions)...

Mr. Chairman: Let him reply. ...(Interruptions)...

Shri K. Natwar Singh: Let me answer you. ...(Interruptions)... Let me answer you. ...(Interruptions)... The people of Jammu & Kashmir have welcomed the step, and that is all that is important of what you think.

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Is that all? ...(Interruptions)... The people of Jammu & Kashmir have welcomed it. Is that all? ...(Interruptions)... Is that all?

Mr. Chairman: Dr. Farooq Abdullah. ...(Interruptions)... Dr. Farooq Abdullah.

Dr. Farooq Abdullah: Sir, I would like to first congratulate the ex-Prime Minister of India, Mr. Vajpayee, for starting a dialogue with Pakistan. Then, I would like to congratulate the present Prime Minister for continuing the same process of dialogue that was started by this side. Now, Sir, there is only one problem. Let us be very clear on this. Are we, Kashmiris, Indians or are we, Kashmiris, disputed? Please answer that. This is part one of my question. Secondly, I would like to ask you, Sir, if you have read it that the Pakistan-occupied Kashmir Assembly has announced that only Kashmiris will be travelling on this route, which means nobody from the rest of the country...(Interruptions)...

*

Dr. Farooq Abdullah: —Maharaja of Kashmir might come, but Farooq

Abdullah will not travel because I believe we are all part of India. I will not be; neither will carry me on the bus as these people did not carry me, nor will you carry me. I want to make one thing very clear, Sir. Let me be very clear. I have a lot of problems in my own party. Whereas we welcome this bus, you have opened a new route, but for God's sake, don't compromise on India. Do not compromise on India. One day, probably, I will get a bullet here, but being an Indian. And I hope you won't cry on that day; nor would I want you to put flowers on my grave. I want to make one thing absolutely clear that while we welcome this bus, please, if Mr. Farooq Abdullah has to travel on a passport, why not a passport for a Pakistani from that side? Why should Pakistan dictate to us that there can be no passport? Why cannot the Indian passport stand correctly there? Please answer this, though I welcome the bus. And it is not Mufti who started the bus; it is your Prime Minister and my Prime Minister who did this, and thanks to your diplomatic skill, you are able to do this.

Shri K. Natwar Singh: They have allowed anyone from India and Pakistan including Jammu and Kashmir. You can today come to Delhi and then go to Pakistan. As regards what you said, let me assure you; I am as patriotic, an Indian, as anybody in this House, and I wish you 100 years of life. More likely, you will put flowers on my grave than I will be on yours, because I am 20 years elder to you. But the fact of the matter is that you have welcomed this step. It is a beginning. We are going ahead with the railway line...(Interruptions) The question is, India's security, India's sovereignty, India's nationality, will not be allowed to be compromised.

Dr. Farooq Abdullah: Sir, it is not a question of Indian sovereignty. I would like to know, every Indian would like to know, as to why they would not accept our passport, the document that you and I hold. You cannot travel to Pakistan without that document, nor can I travel without that passport.

Shri K. Natwar Singh: Our distinguished Prime Minister is flagging the bus on the 7th. May I invite you to be there at the ceremony? And, I hope...(Interruptions)

Shri Yashwant Sinha: The question is: Will he be able to travel by bus? (Interruptions)

*

*

Dr. Manmohan Singh: Mr. Chairman, Sir, the hon. Members on the opposite side have raised many issues. The first issue was with regard to the security of our country. I can assure you, and, through you, the House, that all agencies of the Government of India, which are concerned about the security of our country, were consulted, and they were fully on board that the mechanism that we have adopted, in no way, poses any danger to our country. The second thing I do want to say is that there was this reference about the use of passports or not. But we came to the conclusion that we were essentially dealing with the human problem, the problem of divided families. And I am satisfied with the fact that a particular document being used for this purpose does not in any way compromise our rights and obligations with regard to the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

...(Interruptions)...

Hon. Chairman: This will be discussed..(interruptions)

Shri Yashwant Sinha: Sir, what the Prime Minister has said is not reflected in the... ..(Interruptions)...

Shri Jaswant Singh: Sir, with great hesitation... (Interruptions)

Shri Raju Parmar: Sir, you have already called Dr. Ramaswamy. (Interruptions)

* * * *

The Leader of the Opposition (Shri Jaswant Singh) : Mr. Chairman, Sir, ordinarily, after the Prime Minister has given voice to his views and expressed an opinion, we would have no interest whatsoever in creating any kind of questioning of what he has said. I fully agree but Sir, that the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of External Affairs are fully committed to the security of India. I don't think the starting point is that. What I have said that if you have moved away from a visa and a passport system and have agreed to the alteration of the system, then, perhaps, it would do good, if you explain to us what advantage it has accrued to India, what political and diplomatic gain have come. After that, the hon. Prime Minister said, "We will take all care of the security." There is no doubt about it. I don't, for a minute, doubt the intention, either of the Government or of the Prime Minister, but we do question the method that has been adopted. If that method which has raised the kind of query and question that my good friend has also given voice to... (Interruptions)

Shri V. Narayanasamy: That we will discuss at the time of the full-fledged discussion on this subject.

Shri Jaswant Singh: The hon. Minister of External Affairs said that all that has happened is, this has been received with acclaim by the people of Jammu and Kashmir. I don't know if it has been received with acclaim by everybody in all parts of Jammu and Kashmir.

Shri Anand Sharma: Not by you.

Shri Jaswant Singh: After all, my friend, Dr. Farooq Abdullah is also a very distinguished representative of that State. We do support the accord; we have worked for that accord. The moment we think that the people of India and Pakistan must be facilitated, must be eased, but not at the cost of Indian nationalism... (Interruptions) That is why I asked, 'Why have you done away with the visa and passport system? (Interruptions) What advantage has it accrued to us?

177. Reaction of Official Spokesperson on Pakistan's offer to withdraw troops from Siachen.

New Delhi, March 24, 2005.

Question: Pakistan's Foreign Minister has said in an interview¹ that Pakistan is ready to demilitarization in Siachen. Any comment on that? Also, on Srinagar-Muzaffarabad?

Answer: Well as far as Srinagar-Muzaffarabad CBM is concerned, it is in fact a very important CBM. As you know India had proposed it as far back as October 2002. We are certainly hopeful that it will serve the purpose that it is intended to. As far as the issue of Siachen demilitarization is concerned, Siachen is an issue in the Composite Dialogue. It is a matter under discussion between the Defence Secretaries of the two countries. As you know the first round of the Composite Dialogue has already been held. So, I would refrain from any further comment.

1. In an interview to the NDTV channel, Pakistan's Foreign Minister Kasuri reportedly said that Pakistan was ready to pull out troops from the Siachen glacier. He said; "We are prepared to do it (pull out from Siachen) tomorrow. There was already an agreement between the Governments of India and Pakistan ...let's implement it tomorrow...there was an agreement years ago."

178. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on the visit of President of Pakistan Pervez Musharraf.

New Delhi, April 16, 2005.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Navtej Sarna): It is with great pleasure that I welcome the Foreign Secretary accompanied by the High Commissioner, Mr. Shiv Shankar Menon for this briefing. Foreign Secretary will address the press. Since we also have people here who are not usually here, I just want to let you know we will follow a list. Please indicate your interest in asking questions. We will try to accommodate the maximum.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shyam Saran) : Thank you very much. Good afternoon to all of you.

In a short while from now, we will be welcoming President Musharraf and Begum Sehba as our very honoured guests. External Affairs Minister Mr. K. Natwar Singh will be receiving them at the airport. We are looking forward to a very friendly and a very successful visit with a constructive and forward-looking result. We trust that our respective cricket teams will put forward an exciting display of their cricketing skills and sportsmanship tomorrow morning¹.

1. The visit of the Pakistani President flowed from the interest shown by him to watch one of the cricket matches that were being played between the Indian and Pakistani teams in India. Initially when President Musharraf showed interest the Prime Minister had said that he would welcome a visit by him to witness one of the matches. On March 9 the Press Advisor to the Prime Minister Sanjay Baru stated that the Pakistan President would be coming to India to witness one of the cricket matches. "It is a friendly visit...Every visit does not have to become a State visit", he said. "All our neighbours should feel free to come to India any time they want", Baru said. India would be happy to welcome the Pakistani President for any of the matches. He added that the External Affairs Ministry had been asked to coordinate with Islamabad on making arrangements, including security issues for the visit. On March 4 the Pakistan Observer had quoted Gen. Musharraf as saying that he would consider traveling

Of course, this visit also provides an opportunity for leaders to meet and discuss matters of mutual interest and concern. They will, of course, be having this opportunity both socially. Prime Minister, as you know, will be hosting a dinner in honour of President Musharraf and Begum Sehba this evening. But, tomorrow there will be also an occasion for them to talk to each other during the forenoon after they have seen the first part of the cricket match.

As our Prime Minister has pointed out, when two leaders meet, they can talk about whatever they wish to talk about. We have no hesitation in discussing whatever may be of interest to President Musharraf. I would like to draw your attention to the fact that this visit takes place after a year and a half of a very intense dialogue process that has been continuing between the two countries. We have, I think, very much of an improved atmosphere in the relationship between the two countries. We have put in place a number of confidence building measures. The contacts between the peoples of the two countries has been probably on a scale which is unprecedented. Our High Commissioner is having a major problem in trying to keep up with visa applications. He is issuing about ten thousand visas a month, if I am not mistaken. When a cricket match takes place, he is under a greater degree of pressure but that is all for a good cause.

Even on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir, we have had a major breakthrough in the shape of the Srinagar – Muzaffarabad¹ bus service, which despite threats from the terrorists, has gone ahead successfully. Our Prime Minister has a vision, which he has articulated, of a world where borders become less and less relevant. We look forward to a time when there will be much freer traffic across the borders, across the Line of Control; there will be greater transport linkages, cultural exchanges; there would be perhaps even the people of the two sides getting together to look at shared problems of the environment. There are a number of areas in which there could be very fruitful exchanges between the two sides.

I think it is with that vision that Prime Minister would be talking to his honoured guest. As I said, we have every reason to believe that against to India to watch cricket if invited. "I love watching any sport. I would love watching cricket. I don't believe in going without invitation anywhere. If there is an invitation, one would certainly like to consider," he was quoted as having said.

1. When the two leaders held their summit talks the next day, they committed themselves to increasing the frequency of this service.

this background of a much more improved relationship, much greater interaction between the peoples of the two countries, and the fact that on the eve of his visit to India we have heard some very positive statements also coming from Pakistan, coming from President Musharraf himself.

Our Prime Minister also has in his public statements spelt out what our vision is of taking this relationship forward. So, we believe that all this augurs very well for this forthcoming visit; it will be a very informal, relaxed visit celebrating the cricketing bonds between the two countries, and at the same time taking advantage of this opportunity to engage in a very wide-ranging and fruitful dialogue.

Thank you very much.

Question : Mr. Secretary, you said that this is going to be a very friendly and fruitful visit. We are also getting news that some of the members of the official cultural delegation were denied visa by the Pakistan. How would you react to that?

Foreign Secretary: We have always believed that it is to the benefit of both countries to really celebrate the cultural affinities between us. I do not know the reasons why visa has not so far been granted to the cultural troupe which was supposed to visit Pakistan. But certainly I think our projection to our Pakistani friends would be that we welcome all their artistes, cultural personages and we would certainly hope that this would reciprocated from their side.

Question: There are lots of pending issues like the Consulates have to be opened, which is pending. Mr. Menon is under pressure with all kinds of visa problems, manpower problems. When are the missions going to be restored to 100 per cent? What is the hitch? What is happening on Munabao-Khokhrapar front and what about the infrastructure problems?

Foreign Secretary: That is not really related to the visit as such because there is a mechanism through which all these pending issues that you are talking about are in fact being addressed. With regard to the opening of Consulates, rather reopening of the Consulates, we had shown some properties to our Pakistani friends in Mumbai. Perhaps they were not found suitable or they were very expensive. We have now requested the Maharashtra Government to please help us locate some other properties, which I believe has been done. I understand that very soon, perhaps, a team from the Pakistani High Commission will again be going to Mumbai to look at these properties. So, we are making every effort possible to get the Consulates reopened as early as possible.

With regard to the infrastructure that you have mentioned, yes, that is being looked at with great deal of priority. Mr. Menon heads a Mission which is very important. Its requirements have always had priority. So, we are taking all possible action in order to ensure that there is no lack of infrastructure in terms of space or in terms of personnel to enable the High Commission to do its job properly.

Question : ... (Question in Hindi inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: It is our expectations that all the CBMs, which we have offered to are agreed Upon. We believe, and our Prime Minister has also said, that the border line that we have, its importance is somewhat reduced. This is our belief. We have put on the table a large number of CBMs. We believe if all these CBMs are implemented it will make a lot of difference in our relations.

Question : Both General Musharraf and Mr. Natwar Singh have stressed on the need of an out-of-the-box solution? What can be the out-of-the-box-solution?

Foreign Secretary: I think I just mentioned that we are looking at a vision of a relationship between the two countries where the borders become less and less important. I think that is already perhaps thinking away from our conventional way of handling relations between States.

Question : In real terms, how does India interpret soft borders, the phrase used by General Musharraf? In real terms, not in philosophical terms.

Foreign Secretary: I think President Musharraf was in a sense responding to something that we have been saying for some time. We are very happy that he accepts that the way forward is having softer borders. What does softer borders mean? It is precisely what I mentioned at the outset that it means that there should be much freer traffic across the borders; that people should find it very easy to come and go, meet their relatives; there should be very easy trade relations between the two sides; we should have very efficient transport linkages between the two sides. There may be certain common issues that people on both sides face. Are there ways in which we can address those problems, talk about those problems? There are cultural affinities between the peoples of the two sides. Is there some way that we can bring the peoples together through that cultural affinity, celebrate that cultural affinity between them? These are the things that constitute soft borders.

Question : On the one hand we are talking about all this trade and the bus service and rail service and all that. As far as Washington is concerned, what message Washington and Pakistan are giving to India and to the international community by selling and receiving F-16s at this time of our relations? What message do you have for the NRIs? What can we make out of this all?

Foreign Secretary: As far as the issue of F-16s is concerned, I think India's position has been very clearly spelt out and I do not think it needs to be repeated again and again.

What is the message we received in Washington? The message was very clear that the United States of America feels very optimistic about the peace process which is taking place between India and Pakistan and supports fully the peace process.

The message we are getting from Pakistan? As I mentioned to you, we are very encouraged by the statements which President Musharraf himself has been making on the eve of his visit. That is why I am saying that the background to this visit is a very positive background because of the progress that has already taken place in the year and a half since the dialogue process has been resumed. Let us not forget that one and a half years is a rather short time. I think we should be proud about the fact that we have actually achieved quite a great deal in this one and half years. So, it is with a degree of optimism that we look forward to President Musharraf's visit and we believe that it would be a very successful visit.

Question : Will the two leaders take up the Baglihar Dam issue? Is India prepared to amend its projected claim on Baglihar Dam so that the question could be resolved through bilateralism?

Foreign Secretary: I do not wish to prejudge what the two leaders will be discussing. But, as far as the Baglihar Project is concerned, I think you should look at the repeated assurances given by the Indian side that it will not do anything which is in violation of the letter and spirit of the Indus Water Treaty. We attach a great deal of value to this treaty which has stood the test of time for the last forty-five years. We have also explained that the apprehensions which Pakistan may have about this particular Project, if there are certain technical objections that it has, we are ready to discuss it bilaterally. After all, we have been saying that the last round of technical discussions which were held seem to take us in the direction of some convergence. It was our belief that if we continued the discussions we could have perhaps enlarged the area of convergence. But it is Pakistan which decided that it wanted to take this matter to the World Bank. We consider that premature. So, we are prepared to engage in another round of technical discussions, if Pakistan is willing to do so.

Question : Very broadly speaking, does India's changing relationship with China now have any bearing on your relationship with Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: We believe that it is a win-win situation for all concerned. I think if there are good relations between India and China and there are good relations between China and Pakistan, I think it creates a positive ambience all around. It is something to be welcome by all of us.

Question Mr. Foreign Secretary, will there be a Joint Statement tomorrow? As there are expectations in making some concrete CBMs on Kashmir - like you had proposed when you went in December, about opening meeting points along the Line of Control, or a Jammu-Sialkot bus service? Would there be anything in the Joint Statement tomorrow?

Foreign Secretary: Again, as I said, I do not wish to prejudge what would be the outcome of this visit. And, I do not wish to prejudge what would be the content of the discussions which the two leaders will have. Depending upon what is the tenor of those discussions, what the two leaders decide upon in terms of acceptance of certain confidence building measures, how to take the relationship forward, naturally if there is a Joint Statement it will reflect those decisions.

Question President Musharraf has changed the nature of this visit in a way because he had shown his willingness to come and watch cricket, then chose the venue and finally, just before he comes here, he makes complete statements on political test matches rather than the actual cricket series that is going on. Do you see him having scored a point by way of a calculated move?

Foreign Secretary: I do not think we are in the business of scoring points with each other. I think there is a certain distorted view of how this has come about. President Musharraf, when he was asked, "There are cricket matches taking place in India. Would you like to watch one of these cricket matches?" he said, "Yes, it would be nice if I could watch this cricket match." I think, as a friendly country, we lost no time in extending a friendly invitation to come to India and watch the cricket match. Now, where he should have watched the cricket match is a matter of detail. How does it matter whether the cricket match is watched in Bangalore or in Kochi or in Delhi? It just so happens that Delhi was the most convenient in terms of time scheduling, in terms of location for him to watch the one-day match. So, why read into it something that is not there. This is just a friendly gesture on our part to extend a friendly invitation to him. He is welcome anywhere, whether it is in Delhi or whether it is any other part of India. He is a honoured guest no matter where the visit takes place. So, I do not think that it is a question of his having determined the agenda, or having scored a point against us, no. We are very happy to receive President Musharraf not just to watch cricket, but if he would like to utilize this opportunity to engage in discussion with Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, we have welcomed that opportunity because we believe that such an opportunity can only advance the cause of India-Pakistan friendship.

Question : Between all this talk of camaraderie, is it not an embarrassment to India that its flag on President Musharraf's plane was turned upside down?

Foreign Secretary: I am sorry I do not even know what you are talking about but I think we should go by the substance of our relationships rather than certain mistakes which have been inadvertently made by one side or the other. I do not think that is important.

Question : ... (Question in Hindi inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: As far as the question of keeping in view the aspirations of the people of Kashmir, we have to say that we have the electoral process. Representatives of the people have been elected by the people. When we are talking about an Indian public opinion, the people of Jammu and Kashmir and their aspirations, their opinions are very much part and parcel of the Indian public opinion. So, we are talking to the representatives of the people of Jammu and Kashmir. We have also said, we are prepared to talk to all those others who may not have come through the electoral route but who are willing to abjure violence, wish to contribute to peace and stability in the State. We are willing to talk to them as well: they are also our people. So, that is the concept with which we are going into this relationship. Pakistani leaders come, they meet any Hurriyat leaders - Well, we are a democratic country, we have no problem with these kind of meetings.

Question : Musharraf Saheb is repeatedly saying that in the CBMs are on the fast track but on Kashmir there is little movement. If we look at the position the two leaders took on Kashmir in New York, we find that there is hardly any forward movement. What have you to say about this. OF course on CBMs the movement is on the fast track.

Foreign Secretary: It is a wrong perception, if you are looking at the Jammu and Kashmir issue, which is such a complex issue, which is an issue which has been on the horizon for the past more than 57-58 years, then it stands to reason that in addressing such an issue you need to build up a degree of confidence and trust between the two sides. After all, if there has to be a mutually acceptable understanding on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir between the two countries, we have to take our people along with us. Pakistan has to take its people along with it: India has to take its people along with it. How do you do that? You can only do that by enlarging the constituency of peace between the two countries; by giving people a stake in that peace process. And this is what we are trying to do. What is confidence-building measure, or what is people-to-people contact, except with the objective of enlarging that constituency of peace. This is not to say that we are putting aside the issue of Jammu and Kashmir, no. We are willing to talk about Jammu and Kashmir. But it should be understood that it is only through this process of creating a larger constituency of peace, greater public opinion in favour of peace, that we can achieve success.

In terms of whether there has been forward movement or not I think the record is there for everyone to see. So, even in terms of Jammu and Kashmir, what are we saying? We are saying, "Maybe it is difficult for us to change the lines which are drawn on the map. But as civilized countries, let us at least try and deal with, try to alleviate the negative human consequences of those lines drawn on the map." Not just the Line of Control but even the border between India and Pakistan. Wherever the peoples of the two countries have come together, you have seen how much of affinity there is between them. There is a great groundswell of opinion in favour of peace both in India as well as in Pakistan. I think it is our responsibility to take this forward.

179. Speech by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the banquet in honour of President of Pakistan Pervez Musharraf.

New Delhi, April 16, 2005.

President Musharraf, Begum Musharraf, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives my wife and me great pleasure to welcome President Musharraf and Begum Musharraf to our table this evening. The people of India are with me as we extend our hospitality to you on your visit to our country. Mr. President, last month we had the pleasure of meeting your mother, brother and your handsome son. I believe your son was quite a hit with young people here! My wife and I went down memory lane with your mother and brother, talking of common friends and shared experiences.

We were impressed by the wisdom and wit of your most affectionate mother. She was so utterly charming that my wife said to her, "I envy your daughter-in-law. She is so lucky to have a mother-in-law like you!"

Mr. President, when we met in New York I said that while I was born in what is now Pakistan, and you were born here, both of us have come to occupy these high offices in our countries without lengthy careers in politics! Fate has placed on our shoulders the burden of a sacred responsibility that we are now required to bear. The people of both our Nations expect us to play our due role, with sincerity of purpose and a commitment to our shared future.

India, Pakistan and especially the people of Jammu and Kashmir have paid a heavy price in terms of peace and development because of the persistent conflict of the past half century. The time has come to find an enduring solution to all the problems between the two countries. The people of our countries need a positive outcome and must not remain trapped in a zero-sum situation.

Mr. President,

South Asia has the potential to emerge as the most dynamic powerhouse of the world given its hugely talented human and abundant natural resources. There is no reason why the largest concentration of poor people in the world should be in South Asia. It is a challenge for all of us that the chronic poverty, ignorance and disease in our midst becomes a thing of the past in a reasonable period of time. Objective conditions point to South Asia emerging as a growth pole of the world economy. India and Pakistan, the two largest economies in the region, can give concrete shape to this vision and can find the pathway to a future of shared peace and prosperity.

A South Asia free of violence, poverty, disease and ignorance, in which there is a free movement of ideas, people, goods and services, needs to become a reality. The people of South Asia do not need further divisions, but greater unity. Clearly, a lasting peace between India and Pakistan is essential to ensure a stable and prosperous South Asia. The political leadership in both our countries has a solemn obligation to work in concert to realize this noble vision. History beckons us to rise to the challenge and grasp the opportunities to create boundless prosperity in our ancient land. If we fail to grasp these opportunities our people will not excuse us for the economy of vision and courage.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen,

We cannot rewrite the past, but we can build a more secure future. A future that generates people's trust and confidence in the political leadership in South Asia. We must find practical ways and means to resolve all outstanding issues between us in a reasonable, pragmatic manner, cognizant of the ground realities.

The composite dialogue between the two countries, covering all outstanding issues, is encouraging. The confidence-building measures introduced have generated widespread enthusiasm. The bus service between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad has tapped a latent reservoir of public support for stronger people-to-people contact between the two countries, especially among those living on either side of the Line of Control. The peace process and the composite dialogue need to be carried forward with even greater determination. However, in order to take forward and sustain the dialogue process, acts of terrorism must be prevented and we must together fight the scourge of terrorism in our region.

Our people and our common destiny urge us to make an earnest attempt to find a lasting solution to all issues. In a globalising and increasingly integrated world, borders have lost meaning for much of the world. The journey of peace must be based on a step-by-step approach, but the road must be travelled. As an ancient saying goes, a road is made by walking.

Mr. President, let us travel together on this path, to realize our shared vision of what the future holds for all of us.

180. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on the visit of President of Pakistan Pervez Musharraf.

New Delhi, April 17, 2005.

Foreign Secretary (Shri Shyam Saran) : Good afternoon to all of you. Let me begin from what happened this morning.

As you know, President Musharraf and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh began the day today with the inauguration of the final One Day International¹ at Ferozeshah Kotla grounds. They were introduced to the two teams. Thereafter, for about an hour or so they watched the match. We then shifted to Hyderabad House where talks were held between the two sides. We began with talks at which some delegation members were present. From the Indian side, Minister of Defence Shri Pranab Mukherjeeji, our Railway Minister Shri Lalu Prasad Yadavji, our External Affairs Minister was also present. Our Minister for Commerce and Industry Shri Kamal Nathji was also there at the meeting. President Musharraf was accompanied by his Foreign Minister and other members of the delegation.

1. Final match of the cricket series between the cricket teams of the two countries.

During these talks, the Prime Minister and President Musharraf reviewed the progress that had been made in our relations so far. I must say that the very positive and forward-looking atmosphere, which was already evident both on the eve of the visit as also during the speeches which were made last evening at Prime Minister's dinner in honour of President Musharraf, that positive tone, was maintained throughout the talks.

Prime Minister welcomed the fact that during the past year and a half there had been a very significant change in the relationship between the two countries. There was a transformation in terms of the public mood in the two countries. He said that as Prime Minister of India he was prepared to travel the road towards lasting peace between the two countries. In reviewing the relationship, he went back to the Joint Statement, which was made on January 6, 2004, particularly the assurance contained therein that no part of the territory under the control of Pakistan would be used for any terrorist activity against India. He said that this assurance opened up new opportunities for improvement of relations between the two countries, and taking this relationship forward, and that is precisely what had happened.

He mentioned that it was the responsibility of our two countries to ensure that this positive movement in our relations, the positive ambience, which had been created in our relations, is not thwarted by the activities of terrorist elements. He welcomed the fact that the terrorist attack on the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad bus service was condemned by Pakistan. This was just the kind of activity which can mar the ongoing peace process between the two countries, and hence the great importance of our controlling this particular aspect, that is, the activities of terrorist groups.

While we have seen forward movement in our relations, Prime Minister also conveyed that he was aware that there are difficulties that need to be overcome. So, we do not minimize those difficulties. But he put across in his talks his own vision of what he looks at the future of South Asia. He said that if one goes to other parts of the world, we see countries coming together, the economic and commercial prospects of regions improving because they are cooperating with one another. He suggested that if in South Asia, India and Pakistan as the two largest countries, as the two largest economies, if they were to join hands together, brought their creative energies together - after all the peoples of the two countries are extremely talented, we have resources - it is possible for us to transform the economic prospects of South Asian region as a whole so that it becomes also a dynamic pole in terms of economic prosperity of the Asian region and the world as a whole. He also conveyed that in his view this was eminently possible and this is the direction in which he would like to take the relationship between the two countries.

We were very happy to note that President Musharraf not only responded very positively to what Prime Minister had to say but shared his vision of the two countries focusing their energies on improving the livelihood of their peoples, of synergising their energies, so that there is common prosperity, shared prosperity between the two countries.

We also discussed, of course, the issue of Jammu and Kashmir. In this connection, the Prime Minister pointed out that while the redrawing of boundaries was not something that was possible, but anything that could bring the peoples on the two sides together – whether it is in terms of increased transportation linkages; greater traffic of peoples across the border and the Line of Control; cross-LoC, cross-border trade between the two countries; encouraging across-the-spectrum contact between people – would help the process along which would create the ambience so that at sometime in the future the more complex problems could be addressed successfully.

President Musharraf, while stressing the importance of addressing the Jammu and Kashmir issue, agreed that the confidence-building process between the two countries had made a lot of progress. This is a process which should be continued, should be intensified, and that while we need not impose any deadlines or timelines, the more important thing was that we should be addressing whatever outstanding differences there are between the two countries.

There were a number of specific issues that were touched upon during these talks. For example, some of the proposals that have been put forward like the link between Khokhrapar and Munabao across Rajasthan and Sindh. As you know, we had made a pledge in Parliament that from our side this link would be ready to be operationalised by October 2 this year. President Musharraf mentioned that perhaps that deadline may not be feasible but he would ensure that this link became operational by December 2005.

On the economic side it was agreed that the Joint Commission that had already existed between India and Pakistan - and which I think has not met since the late 80s, since 1989 - should be revived. It was agreed that it should meet at an early date. So, this would provide an umbrella within which a number of economic and trade related issues that the two countries have been talking about, we can take them forward in a much more focused manner.

As you know, we also have Joint Business Council that is between the private sectors of the two countries. It was agreed that the work of this Business Council should be further intensified.

As I mentioned to you, Commerce and Industry Minister was there. He referred to the establishment of the Joint Study Group at the Commerce Secretary level between the two countries, which had already held its first meeting in February this year. This could be a mechanism to discuss promotion of trade between the two countries.

Reference was made to some of the obstacles, which may be there to take the trading relationship forward. For example, the apprehension that the business community in Pakistan has about some non-tariff barriers or high tariff barriers that India imposes. We have said that, in fact, there are very few barriers that are there for this trade and we are prepared to sit down together with Pakistan and if there are any such barriers we are prepared to remove them.

In the context of developing our economic and commercial relations, the two leaders also discussed the important of transport linkages, infrastructure. In that connection, the possibility of opening more routes for trade between the two countries was discussed. This is something, which will require more detailed discussion in the future. But, again I would like to stress here that the approach on both sides were very positive, was very forward-looking, a willingness to look at all these particular aspects of taking our relationship forward.

During the meeting we also conveyed to the Pakistan President that 156 Pakistani fishermen are to be released on the 19th of April. There are another 136 civilian prisoners who will be also released as soon as their travel documents have been received from the Pakistani side. The two leaders also agreed that as a humanitarian measure, if there are people who innocently stray across the border or the LoC, then we should in fact hand them over without too much ceremony on either side.

In the context again of developing our trade and economic relationship, Prime Minister also stressed the great benefits, which could accrue both to India and Pakistan, if we were able to open the traditional transit routes through each other's countries. He mentioned the fact that transit routes, for example, to Central Asia, to the Gulf, if normal flow of trade could be possible through these routes this would bring benefit not only to India and Pakistan but to the region of South Asia as well as to Central Asia and the Gulf. This was something that leaders of India and Pakistan should be looking at.

In this context the pipeline was also mentioned. It was agreed that this was a worthwhile project to pursue. In this context it was agreed that we would remain untouched with one another and engage in further discussions in order to realize this project.

I would also like to mention here that at the end of the talks, Prime Minister presented to President Musharraf a fine painting of the haveli (house) in Delhi where President Musharraf was born and was brought up for the first few years of his life. This was accepted with great delight and pleasure by the Pakistani President.

I will stop here and I will be open to questions from your side.

Question : ...(Question in Hindi inaudible)...

Foreign Secretary: The CBMs on Kashmir, and whatever other CBMs are, both sides have assured, there is nothing which we are not prepared to consider. The details of those will have to be worked out. Whatever our reactions and whatever their reactions we have received, there is a readiness to positively look at all of them. The approach has been very forward-looking and also very positive.

Question : Did President Musharraf come out with any fresh proposals on Kashmir? Prime Minister also suggested some new ideas. Did he talk about any fresh proposals?

Foreign Secretary: I am not aware of any specific proposals, which have been made by either side in this regard apart from saying that this is a problem, which needs to be dealt with. As I mentioned to you, I gave you the viewpoints which were expressed by both President Musharraf as well as by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, that there is a readiness to take this dialogue forward, to continue building up confidence and trust between the two sides, remain engaged. The process is important, let us see where it takes us.

Question : After Ms. Condoleezza Rice's visit, this is the first formal meeting that has taken place between India and Pakistan. Was Iran pipeline discussed in this context?

Foreign Secretary : I have said that there was discussion about the pipeline, and it was agreed that this project is beneficial to both the countries and it should be discussed.

Question : Can you elaborate on this?

Foreign Secretary: Well, President Musharraf mentioned that the requirements of energy of Pakistan as well as India are such that pipeline from Turkmenistan through Afghanistan, Pakistan, India or from Iran, Pakistan, India and perhaps other possible pipelines as part and parcel of the economic development of both India and Pakistan as of the region, this is something that we ought to be thinking about, we ought to be discussing how to cooperate with each other. So, it was a broad discussion. At this level you do not go into negotiating details of these projects. But, overall as I mentioned to you, it was agreed that these are projects which are worthwhile pursuing and that we should remain engaged concerning them.

Question What was General Musharraf's response on opening of transit routes?

Foreign Secretary: There was no specific answer to each and every one of these propositions. What I would like to convey to you is a sense that there was a very broad-based discussion of the importance of developing economic and commercial relations between the two countries, both bilaterally as well as part and parcel of a larger regional economic development. It is in this context that Prime Minister mentioned the importance of opening more routes across our borders, across the LoC, because transportation linkages are integral to any plan for development of economic and commercial linkages. So, in that context several of these plans were discussed – pipelines, road linkages, rail linkages. As I said, the point was made from our side that in the context of this broad economic and commercial development, naturally the easier it is to take goods from one place to another the benefit will be greater.

Question : Was there some discussion about the Hurriyat Conference?

Foreign Secretary: As far as I know it was not discussed.

Question : Did you discuss the issue of withdrawal of troops from Siachen?

Foreign Secretary: What was discussed was the need to look at issues such as Siachen, Sir Creek, and see whether or not we can expedite, we can instruct the officials who are already engaged in discussions on these issues, that with a certain greater degree of urgency, with a certain greater sense of priority can we try and resolve these issues as early as possible. As you know, we are in the midst of the second round of our Composite Dialogue in which both Siachen as well as Sir Creek, apart from some of the other issues, are going to be taken up. We will make every effort possible in line with the directions given by the two leaders that we should try and find an early solution to these issues.

Question : You talked about a large number of points of convergence between the two sides. But what about the points of divergence? What did he say on Kashmir? What about Baglihar? What did he say when we raised the issue of terrorism?

Foreign Secretary: On the issue of terrorism for example, I think what came out clearly from President Musharraf was that a point of convergence is already apparent from the fact that when the attack against Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service took place Pakistan came out with an unequivocal condemnation of this act. At least, there is a sense that terrorism is something which can impact very adversely on this ongoing peace process, on this process which is bringing the people together and, therefore, there is a responsibility that we both have to try and make sure that terrorist elements do not derail this process.

As far as Baglihar is concerned, yes, there was a discussion about that. I think we have already discussed this before that there are certain apprehensions which Pakistan has. We have stated unequivocally, and this was repeated by Prime Minister, that we are committed to remaining entirely within the parameters which are laid down by the Indus Water Treaty. This Treaty is important to us. I think I mentioned yesterday also that this Treaty is important to us. For 45 years it has held. We certainly do not have any intention at all of harming the interests of Pakistan. Therefore, if there is a readiness to engage in further technical discussions on this issue to try and resolve it, we are prepared to do that.

On Kashmir, I think right at the beginning when I was making opening statement I mentioned to you the exchange which took place between Prime Minister and President. There is a recognition that yes, this is an issue which needs to be tackled between the two countries. But it is a complicated issue. It may take time to resolve. But in the meantime, as civilized countries we should try and make every effort possible to deal with whatever negative consequences there are of the existence of the Line of Control. I think there is a willingness on both sides in line with this approach, there is a willingness on both sides precisely to make life much easier for people residing on both sides.

Question : On the specifics of LoC confidence-building measures, is there going to be any Joint Statement in which specifics are going to be mentioned? The Prime Minister had also spoken about joint responsibility for this bus passengers. Would there be anything on that? And anything on increasing the frequency of the bus service?

Foreign Secretary: I think the Joint Statement is currently being worked because the talks, as you know, have only ended a short while ago. So, there will be, in the Joint Statement, a reflection of some of the things that were discussed. Let us see how specific the references are. But, I think, some of the points that I have mentioned would be covered in the Joint Statement.

Question : On what PM spoke about the joint responsibility of the safety of bus passengers?

Foreign Secretary: I am just trying to give you a general sense of what was discussed. That was a sharing of belief that, yes, the present positive trend in our relationship, the peace process between the two countries, the many positive things which are happening between the two countries, could be adversely impacted by the activities of terrorist elements. If this is something which is a shared perception on both sides, I think it is very clear that both sides will do everything possible, hopefully, to prevent that from happening.

Question : Was the issue of joint patrolling of the LoC discussed at all? On the terrorism issue, do you perceive a mind shift? In the last few days the Defence Minister has gone on record saying that the infiltration is still present. You say that General Pervez talked about the terrorism issue. You mentioned the statement which had come out of Pakistan condemning the terrorist attack on the Muzaffarabad-Srinagar bus service. Do you think there is a mind shift on the part of Pakistan on this issue?

Foreign Secretary: I think we must go by what the facts are. What I am referring to is a statement which was made by President Musharraf condemning the terrorist incident which took place. In the talks between the two leaders there is a recognition that many positive things are happening in our relations; there is a greater degree of confidence, greater degree of, if not complete mutual trust, at least we are moving in that direction; and there is sense that incidence of terrorism can negatively impact on them. So, in that sense, I think there also, therefore, an acknowledgement that both sides will do whatever is necessary in order not to let this happen. Now, let us wait and see how things work out. Certainly, I do not think there were any discussions about joint patrolling of the LoC or measures like that.

Question : You were saying that Pakistan will not allow their territories to be used against terrorist activities against India. Do we see a shift in the Pakistan's stand there? Also, might we be in a position that India and Pakistan fight the same group of Kashmiri separatists who are making base in Pakistan and launching attacks in Jammu and Kashmir?

Foreign Secretary: That would be something that would be welcome.

Question : The National Security Advisor has said three days ago in an interview that there is a possibility of withdrawing troops from Kashmir in this summer after checking out when the snow melts for the passage of people. Is there something that is likely to happen?

Foreign Secretary: The National Security Advisor has made a certain comment which has been reported. Let us go by that.

Question : On Baglihar, you said yesterday that we abide by the terms and conditions of the Indus Waters Treaty and it was our belief that it should be resolved bilaterally. Was this proposal made to the visiting President Musharraf? What was his response?

Foreign Secretary: As I mentioned to you, Prime Minister conveyed to President Musharraf that India has every intention to abide by the letter and spirit of the Indus Water Treaty and Pakistan should have no apprehensions whatsoever that this particular project will be used in any manner which is going to impact negatively on the interests of Pakistan.

Question : What was President Musharraf's response?

Foreign Secretary: He was very thankful for this assurance which was conveyed by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh. As I said, the way is open for our re-engaging in technical level discussions. But, I would like to mention here that this was not a negotiating session where they were working out how are we going to do this, when are we going to have the meeting, what is the calendar of meetings. That is not their job. I think there was a broad discussion of a number of issues in India-Pakistan relations. In those discussions the mood was, the approach was positive and forward looking.

Question : For a long time mention has been made on trade-related issues. The issue of denial of most-favoured nation status to us. Did this issue come up?

Foreign Secretary: It came up in the sense of the Pakistani apprehension that there are both tariff barriers as well as non-tariff barriers which come in the way of promotion of Pakistani exports to India. There is the apprehension that Pakistan's industry may be adversely impacted if there was an opening out to Indian exports without any restraint. It is in this context that it was agreed that we should, if there are apprehensions on the Pakistani side, we are willing to look at them and try and remove those apprehensions. If they say that this is a non-tariff barrier we are willing to look at it. If it is really true, then we should remove those non-tariff barriers. But it was also agreed that it is in the interest of both India and Pakistan to promote their economic and trade relations. It is because of this sentiment that we agreed to revive the Joint Commission because Joint Commission has not met since 1989. So, obviously there is a sense now, yes, it is worth the while reviving the Joint Commission which can then look into the trade relationship between the two countries, the economic relationship between the two countries, and hopefully take it forward. So, there is a change in the way we are looking at some of these issues.

Question : The Joint Statement that following the Chinese Premier's visit characterized that visit as 'highly successful'. How do you characterize the ongoing visit?

Foreign Secretary: We believe it is a very successful visit too.

Question : Is it highly successful?

Foreign Secretary: Why should we look for comparable adjectives? This is a visit which stands on its own. High successful? Yes, it is highly successful. Very successful? Yes, it is very successful. I think what is more important is the substance of the visit. I think I have spelt out to you where it marks a change from the past. I think not so much in terms of specifics that have been discussed between the two leaders but the approach of the two leaders. The approach was forward-looking. Yes, we have problems. Yes, these are problems which cannot be minimized. We will need to give them very concentrated, intensive attention. But, at the same time, there is a willingness to look forward, to take the relationship forward; a sense that we have come a long way in the last one and a half years; and that what we have achieved so far is something that both sides would like to preserve and to take forward. It is in this context that the issue of terrorism was brought up. That itself is important because if you want to take the relationship forward, and if we really want to preserve what we have achieved so far, this has to be addressed. There is no getting away from it.

Question : There was an attack on the Muzaffarabad – Srinagar bus. Did Pakistan condemn it? Pakistan had condemned the 13th December attack; the Indian side would certainly have liked to know why all this was happening?

Foreign Secretary: Not in detail, how it happened, who did it, would there be investigation, no investigations etc. I think you need to understand that this is two leaders meeting and having a rather broad discussion in the limited time that is available to them. I mentioned to you that in terms of the issue of terrorism President Musharraf did say - I think he has said this publicly not only in the talks - that the fact that Pakistan condemned this incident brought in fact the two countries closer together. This is what he projected. So, he saw this as taking us towards a certain degree of convergence on this issue that we are both committed to ensuring the success of the bus service; we are both committed to increasing the frequency of the bus service; this is worth doing; and, therefore, both sides need to make sure that the kind of incidents that took place do not take place.

1. It may be mentioned that on the sidelines of the summit between the two leaders, the Commerce Ministers of India and Pakistan also met on April 17 and decided to set up a Joint Business Council "to facilitate interaction amongst business and to strengthen economic ties and promote trade". The Indian Commerce Minister told the media that it was agreed between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and President Musharraf that all hindrances must be removed and non-tariff barriers dismantled as soon as possible to have a meaningful "open door" policy on trade between the two countries.
 2. The Joint Statement evoked all-round welcome from across the political spectrum with the Congress Party lauding the Government for having the confidence to "push through the confidence building measures and bring about a paradigm shift in relations between the two countries". The Congress Spokesperson Anand Sharma said that the Congress Party had consistently maintained that dialogue should continue irrespective of any situation that might prevail in either country. "We said so at a time when bilateral relations had hit a low and there was a snapping of people-to-people contact," said Anand Sharma. The Joint Statement, he said was unequivocal in stating that the peace process was irreversible and shall not be held hostage to any act of terrorism or weakened by it. The Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) felt happy that a process initiated by its government had borne fruits. The Left parties said the meeting reflected the strong desire by both countries to move forward in their efforts to normalize relations. The Communist Party of India (Marxist) general secretary Prakash Karat said his party welcomed the outcome of the talks and wanted the India – Pakistan

182. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in the Lok Sabha on the visit of President of Pakistan Pervez Musharraf¹.

New Delhi, April 20, 2005.

The President of Pakistan, General Pervez Musharraf visited India from April 16-18, 2005. I had invited him to the cricket match in New Delhi and we used the opportunity of his presence here to hold substantive discussions on a wide range of bilateral issues. We also issued a Joint Statement, which takes stock of our relations and outlines the ideas and activities agreed upon between us to move our bilateral relationship forward. A copy of the Joint Statement is placed on the Table of the House.

During our talks, President Musharraf and I reviewed the progress made in our bilateral relations. We assessed positively the progress that had been made through confidence building measures, people-to-people contacts and enhancing areas of interactions and expressed our determination to build on the momentum already achieved. I also conveyed to President Musharraf the great importance we attach to enhanced bilateral economic and commercial cooperation. I underlined the need to multiply beneficial linkages of trade and transit, including the gas pipeline. We agreed that greater cooperation between the two largest economies of South Asia would not only contribute to the well being of the peoples of the two countries but also bring a higher level of prosperity for the entire region.

We agreed on several forward looking measures to increase interaction between the countries, among them being the restoration of the rail link between Khokhrapar and Munnabao. Each of these are reflected in the Joint Statement.

Earlier this month, we started the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad bus service despite terrorist threats and a dastardly suicide attack on the Srinagar dialogue process to be carried forward. Describing the talks as "positive development", the Communist Party of India Secretary D. Raja said it was good that the leaders of both the countries realized that the peace process was irreversible and the only way to solve problems was through strengthening the CBMs, diversified people-to-people contacts and economic cooperation. "The CPI hopes both countries will carry forward the peace process through dialogue as no military conflict will be able to resolve the problematic issues," said D. Raja cautioning India and Pakistan of U.S maneuvers to drag the two nations into an arms race with each other.

Tourist Reception Centre. The courage and determination of our peoples and the condemnation by our Governments as contained in the Joint Statement, of attempts to disrupt this important initiative, give us confidence for its continued and successful operation with even greater frequency in the future. I am convinced the bus service has tapped a latent reservoir of public support for greater people to people contact, especially among people living on either side of the Line of Control.

The issue of Jammu and Kashmir was also discussed in a positive atmosphere. I emphasized that while the redrawing of boundaries was not possible, all measures that could bring the peoples on both sides together, including increased transportation linkages to facilitate greater traffic of people and trade across the border and the Line of Control, would help the process and create an atmosphere of mutual trust and confidence. President Musharraf and I agreed to continue our discussions in a sincere, purposeful and forward-looking manner. We have agreed to work together to carry forward the process and to bring the benefit of peace to people of our two countries, and in particular, the people of Jammu and Kashmir.

President Musharraf stressed the importance of addressing the Jammu and Kashmir issue. However, he also agreed that the confidence building process between the two countries had made significant progress. We both felt that this process would contribute to promoting a general sense of trust and understanding in our two countries, which in turn, would be conducive to creating the environment for a just, fair and mutually acceptable solution to all outstanding issues. Consequently, we agreed to pursue further measures to enhance interaction and cooperation across the LoC including agreed meeting points for divided families, trade, pilgrimages and cultural interaction.

The Joint Statement specifically re-affirmed the commitments made in the Joint Press Statement of January 6, 2004, and the Joint Statement issued after the meeting of the Indian Prime Minister and the Pakistani President in New York on September 24, 2004. This re-affirmation addressed our concerns relating to terrorism from across the border. The Joint Statement also contained a pledge that terrorism would not be allowed to impede the peace process. It also underlines the importance of the peace process and the degree of improvement in relations between the two countries.

While I am satisfied with the progress achieved in our talks during the visit, we should remain conscious of the difficulties ahead. The difficult issues that divide us have bedeviled relations between India and Pakistan for far too long to hope for an immediate resolution. The threat to the peace process from extremist forces and terrorist organizations has not been eliminated. Therefore, I mentioned to President Musharraf that the whole process of serious and sustained dialogue hinges on building atmosphere of trust and confidence, free from violence and terror. We look forward to Pakistan implementing their assurances in letter and spirit.

As Hon'ble Members are aware, the past year has been quite a remarkable one for our relations with Pakistan. The two countries successfully concluded one round of the Composite Dialogue and have already commenced the next round. Diplomatic and other links have been normalized and restored to the pre-December 13, 2001 level. People-to-people exchanges are taking place across the spectrum in overwhelming numbers. The ceasefire being observed along the international border, the Line of Control and the Actual Ground Position Line in Siachen has, with the exception of a few stray incidents, held since November 2003.

India is committed to peace and friendship with Pakistan. We sincerely seek a cooperative and constructive relationship with Pakistan. I was heartened to see that this desire is reciprocated by the Pakistan side, and that there is considerable popular support for an improved relationship in both countries. To create such a durable cooperative and constructive relationship, we need to invest in the ongoing process of engagement and confidence building and ensure that recent positive trends are sustained. We have chalked out a detailed schedule and agenda for the round of the composite dialogue that has commenced. We believe that persistent and purposeful engagement will show us the way to peace and enable us to fulfill the promise of friendship and cooperation that we have made to our people¹."

1. On way to Jakarta to participate in the Bandung Golden Jubilee conference, Prime Minister told the journalists (April 22) accompanying him on board the special aircraft that if the process of allowing increased interaction between the people of Jammu and Kashmir was to continue, it would "create a climate conducive to the final settlement" of the "territorial dispute" in the divided state. He said the visit of President Musharraf and also of the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao had yielded "solid results". Asked for his opinion on Gen. Musharraf's call for soft borders in J & K, Dr. Singh said he himself had been saying that India and Pakistan have to look at the Kashmir problem in a "different perspective". He said: "Territorial disputes are never easy to resolve overnight. They take time. But there is a lot we can do 183. Question in the Rajya Sabha: “Normalization of Relations with Pakistan”.

New Delhi, April 21, 2005.

Will the Minister of External Affairs be pleased to state:

- (a) whether there is significant development in respect of border crimes, infiltration, attacks by terrorists and the number of people undertaking official journey between India and Pakistan in the proportion of normalization of relations;
- (b) the remarkable signs of improvements in socio-cultural fields; and
- (c) whether the so-called Kashmir problem has become a barrier in this process of normalization?

The Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs (Shri E. Ahamed)

(a) and (b) Significant developments have taken place in India-Pakistan relations since April 2003. Relations have been restored at the level of High Commissioners; transport and communication links have resumed; one round of Composite Dialogue has been completed; a series of technical level and Composite Dialogue related meetings have been held on schedule. Another round has been initiated with the Foreign Secretary level talks in December 2004.

People to people exchanges are taking place across the spectrum in large numbers. There has been a resumption of visits by pilgrim groups. Our High Commission is issuing close to 10,000 visas per month.

The bilateral process has been given impetus through maintenance together, focusing on the interests of the people, creating an environment where the people of Jammu and Kashmir on both sides of the line of Control can lead a life of dignity and self-respect. And we can create an environment of freer trade, freer movement.” He said “I really believe that if this process is allowed to go forward, it will create a climate conducive to the final settlement. But I really do not know today, it is a process, I cannot lay down a timetable – where will it lead us, when will it – but I am convinced that this is a way of looking at the problem which creates a situation where there are no losers or winners. The only gainers are the people of J & K and the prospects of reconciliation between the people of India and the people of Pakistan.” He added for good measure that “improvement in Pakistan – India relations is uppermost in my mind, and I am glad that this desire has been reciprocated by President Musharraf.” He added that it was his “sincere desire to work with the President of Pakistan to carry forward this process in the months that lie ahead.”

of high level contacts. The meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and President Musharraf in New York in September 2004 was followed by the visit of Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz to New Delhi on November 23-24, 2004. February 2005 saw a bilateral visit by an Indian EAM to Pakistan after a gap of almost 16 years. President Musharraf visited India from April 16-18, 2005 to witness the India-Pakistan cricket match.

During the External Affairs Minister, Shri K. Natwar Singh's visit from 15-17 February, 2005, agreements were reached to start bus services between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad, and between Lahore and Amritsar, including to religious places such as Nankana Sahib. Pakistan also agreed to work towards early restoration of the Khokrapar-Munabao rail link. The Srinagar Muzaffarabad bus has already been operationalized from April 7, 2005.

The ceasefire, being observed along the International Border, the LOC, and the AGPL in Siachen, with the exception of two incidents, has held for more than a year.

India has agreed to discuss the proposal of a pipeline through Pakistan, subject to satisfaction of our concerns on security and adequate supplies.

Agreements would be concluded in the coming months on Pre-notification of Missile Tests, and between Coast Guards and Pakistan's Maritime Security Agency, as well as between the narcotics control authorities of the two countries. Discussions would begin on Agreements on Preventing Incidents at Sea, and Reducing the Risk of Nuclear Accident or Unauthorised use of Nuclear Weapons.

Progress has been made in meetings on conventional and nuclear CBMs, and a Joint Survey of the boundary pillars in the International Boundary in the Sir Creek has also been successfully concluded in January 2005.

Significant progress has been achieved on the humanitarian issue of fishermen and civilian detainees. During the Foreign Secretary level talks in December 2004, it was inter-alia agreed that:

- Immediate notification would be provided to the respective High Commissions through the Foreign Ministries of arrested Pakistani/

Indian nationals;

- Consular access would be provided within three months of apprehension;
- Repatriation would be done immediately after completion of sentence and nationality verification;
- A mechanism would be introduced for early repatriation, without sentencing of inadvertent crossers;

A similar mechanism would be established for early release, without sentencing of those under 16 apprehended by either side.

Since then, Pakistan has released 266 Indian fishermen in January 2005; it has released additional 528 Indian fishermen and 36 civilian prisoners in March 2005. India has provided consular access to 113 civilian prisoners in 2005 and 22 civilian prisoners are slated to be released in April 2005. We are currently releasing 156 out of 194 Pakistani fishermen in our custody.

Thus meaningful progress has been achieved in the process of normalization of India-Pakistan relations.

(c) Government are committed to continuing the process of building confidence, enhancing cooperation and dialogue in an atmosphere free from terrorism and violence, and to discuss any outstanding bilateral issue with Pakistan, including Jammu and Kashmir.

184. Response of the Official Spokesperson to a question on Baglihar Project.New Delhi, April 29, 2005.*In response to a question on Baglihar Project the Official Spokesperson said:

"We have been informed by the World Bank that on the basis of Pakistan's representation, it has, as required under the terms of the Indus Waters Treaty, proposed the appointment of a neutral expert to examine certain issues raised by Pakistan on the design of the Baglihar project. We have consistently declared that India intends to remain in strict conformity with the provisions of the Treaty and, therefore, intends to cooperate fully with the World Bank in the selection of a neutral expert. It may be recalled that India had conveyed to Pakistan its readiness to consider any design changes or technical modifications, in conformity with the Treaty, in case Pakistan was able to provide quantified technical objections in this regard. This was conveyed to Pakistan as recently as during the visit of President Musharraf to Delhi earlier this month. Since Pakistan has chosen to invoke the role of the World Bank, as provided for in the Treaty, India will have no hesitation in making available whatever technical details the neutral expert may require, within the parameters clearly laid down in the Treaty. The Government of India attaches considerable importance to the Baglihar project, which will bring significant economic benefits to the people of Jammu and Kashmir. India will, however, observe all its solemn commitments to the Indus Waters Treaty, which has, for the past 45 years, stood the test of time".

185. Joint statement on Technical level talks on the establishment of communication link between Pakistan Maritime Security Agency (PMSA) and Indian Coast Guard (ICG).

Rawalpindi, May 11, 2005.

The technical level talks on the establishment of a communication link between Pakistan Maritime Security Agency (PMSA) and Indian Coast Guard (ICG) concluded today after two days of negotiations between the two sides. The dialogue was held in a very cordial and friendly atmosphere. The Indian delegation was led by DG, ICG, Vice Admiral Arun Kumar Singh while Rear Admiral Bakhtiar Mohsin, Director General, PMSA headed Pakistan side. The step is a part of the ongoing CBMs between Pakistan and India.

All outstanding issues in the Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on the Establishment of Communication Link have been resolved leading to a consensus document. The MoU will be signed after endorsement by the respective governments.

The communication link will provide a formal mechanism for exchange of information regarding EEZ violations, search and rescue operations, control of pollution, natural disasters and calamities, smuggling and drug trafficking etc.

186. Joint statement issued at the end of India - Pakistan technical level talks for operationalization of Lahore-Amritsar bus service.

Islamabad, May 11, 2005.

The first round of the Pakistan-India technical level talks for operationalization of the Lahore-Amritsar bus service was held in Islamabad on 10-11 May 2005. The Pakistan delegation was led by. Mohammad Abbas, Additional Secretary, Ministry of Communications and the Indian delegation was led by Mr. Alok Rawat, Joint Secretary, Department of Road Transport and Highways. The Indian delegation also called on Minister for Communications H.E. Mr. Muhammad Shamim Siddiqui.

2. The two sides discussed the modalities for operationalization of the Lahore-Amritsar bus service including the designated route, bus terminals, facilities for the bus crew, modalities of visa arrangements and a Protocol/MOU for the Lahore - Amritsar bus service. The next meeting for the technical level talks would be held in New Delhi in two months time.
3. It was agreed in principle to start Amritsar - Nankana Sahib Bus Service. It was decided that its modalities and frequency would be discussed in a subsequent technical level meeting to be held in New Delhi in two months time.
4. The meeting was held in a friendly and cordial atmosphere.

187. Joint press release issued on talks between the Defence Secretaries of India and Pakistan on Siachen.Islamabad, May 27, 2005.

The Defence Secretaries level talks between Pakistan and India to discuss Siachen¹ Issue under the Composite Dialogue Framework were held in Islamabad on 26-27 May 2005. The Pakistan delegation was led by Defence Secretary Lt. Gen Tariq Waseem Ghazi (Retd.). The Indian delegation was headed by Defence Secretary Ajai Vikram Singh.

The two sides held frank and constructive discussions with a view to taking the process forward. They expressed satisfaction at the ceasefire currently in place since November 2003 and agreed to its continuation.

It was agreed by the two Defence Secretaries to continue with their discussions to resolve the Siachen Issue in a peaceful manner.

The Defence Secretary of India called on the Senior Minister for Defence Rao Sikandar Iqbal and Foreign Secretary Mr. Riaz Muhammad Khan.

1. A day earlier on May 26 the Army Chief, General J.J. Singh said that India "wants that the 110 k.m long actual ground position line on the Siachen glacier should be authenticated by Pakistan." Stating the Indian position, General Singh said that the country's interests "will be served only when the AGPL is authenticated". He said the country's basic position was that the present AGPL between NJ 9842 to upper Saltoro ridge should be authenticated as "it will safeguard the country's interests in the future". The army chief added that the Army had given the plans and feedback to the government on the issue. The official sources reiterated this position on the eve of External Affairs Minister's visit to Islamabad in October. It was stated that redeployment of Indian and Pakistani troops in the Siachen would be possible provided the two sides agreed on the current actual ground position. It was further stated that the two countries would have to arrive at an understanding on what would be done with the area where the troops were currently deployed. Media quoted official sources to say that India favoured plotting the further course of the Line of Control which stops at Point NJ9842. President Musharraf during his visit to New Delhi in April had agreed that there should be some form of verification of the actual ground positions in Siachen.

188. Joint press statement issued at the end of India – Pakistan talks on the Sir Creek issue.

Rawalpindi, May 29, 2005.

Pakistan-India talks on the Sir Creek issue under the Composite Dialogue Framework were held in Rawalpindi on 28-29 May 2005 to discuss the demarcation of International boundary between the two countries in the Sir Creek area¹.

2. The Pak delegation was led by Rear Admiral Ahsan-ul-Haq Chaudhri, Additional Secretary, Ministry of Defence and Indian delegation was led by Maj. Gen. M. Gopal Rao, Additional Surveyor General of India.
3. The talks were held in a frank and cordial atmosphere. The two sides exchanged views on various issues involved.

1. It may be recalled that India and Pakistan during their talks in December last year decided on a joint survey of the Sir Creek area, which was undertaken in the month of January. On January 17 a Spokesman of the Pakistan Foreign Office announced in Islamabad that "the two teams cooperated with each other and completed the task successfully and expeditiously." The two sides had deployed eight teams each for the survey of the horizontal segment of the Creek a 60-mile long strip of water, which runs along Rann of Kutch in India and Sindh in Pakistan and is at the centre of a 22-year old dispute between the two countries. According to official sources quoted by the media India asked Pakistan to accept the land delineation on the basis of the joint survey but Pakistan did not agree as it said that Pakistan had not yet analyzed the technical aspects of the survey. Pakistan also insisted that demarcation of the land and maritime boundary at Sir Creek needed to be addressed as one package. [This is the eighth round of talks on the subject and the second under the current round of the composite dialogue process. The issue dates back to 1914, when an agreement was signed between the then Government of Sindh and Rao Maharaj of Kutch.] Meanwhile the Navy Chief Admiral Arun Prakash was quoted by the Times of India (June 9) to say: "The boundary in Sir Creek should be demarcated as soon as possible to preclude any third party from jumping into the fray....But it's only when our maritime boundaries are defined that India and Pakistan will be able to stake their claims for the additional Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ), that is now available under the United Nations Convention on Law of the Sea (UNCLOS)". According to the paper, Navy's Chief Hydrographer Rear Admiral B. R. Rao in fact told the Pakistani official during the Sir Creek talks that in case India and Pakistan were unable to stake "our respective claims" by 2009, the U.S would be perfectly entitled to move in and start exploitation of the seabed in the marshy area. Meanwhile the Prime Minister while in Shimla told a press conference on May 29 "we will thoroughly analyze the progress (of the talks). We are not against finding a permanent solution by way of talks with our neighbours. The atmosphere now is most affable." He took the opportunity to tell the press that the country would make "full and sincere" efforts to resolve all bilateral problems with Pakistan through talks. Though progress had been made in strengthening the ties with Islamabad "several complexities" remained, he added.

4. The two sides agreed to continue their discussions aimed at an early resolution of the issue for the mutual benefit of the two countries.

189. Press interaction of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with foreign journalists based in New Delhi.

New Delhi, May 30, 2005.

Maintaining that it would be “unrealistic” to fix any timeframe for resolving the Kashmir issue, the Prime Minister offered to work together with President Musharraf to find a “meaningful solution” to difficult problems. In an hour-long interaction with foreign journalists based in the capital Dr. Singh said he looked forward to his visit to Pakistan. “I remain firm in my conviction that we must move towards finding constructive solutions to all outstanding issues,” he said when asked whether Gen. Musharraf recent statements on greater autonomy, self-government and international supervision for Jammu and Kashmir were realistic.

He asked Pakistan to honour its commitment to quickly dismantle terrorist camps operating from that country. Reminding the world that terrorism from Pakistan and not India’s obduracy remained the biggest threat to the peace process, the Prime Minister said: “If we have a major attack like the one on Parliament or RSS headquarters or other places that could upset the whole process.” He stated that the “first and foremost precondition” which he had conveyed to President Musharraf was that “terrorist elements must be fully under control.” It was only last week that Musharraf said: “This is some what like the chicken and egg situation. We say that they must stop their atrocities and demilitarize the area. And the response I get from the other side is that all “terrorist activities” inside the valley must stop first. Who stops first?” The Prime Minister is quite clear. Pakistan has to stop its terrorism and dismantle its terror infrastructure.

Observing that he was willing to discuss all issues “including what President Musharraf calls the core issue of Jammu and Kashmir,” Dr. Singh firmly ruled out further division of the country or redrawing of boundaries. “I will never accept anything that leads to further division of India on religious lines. I have no mandate to negotiate on redrawing our boundaries. Within these limitations, the two of us must work together to create an environment to take the peace process forward." This required a "new pattern" of working. A lot could be done by promoting people-to-people contacts. "There is great scope for moving forward."

Dr. Singh said India had a "very vital stake" in the unity and integrity of Sri Lanka and expressed the hope that the ethnic problem would be resolved peacefully. "We are not indifferent" to what was happening in Sri Lanka, he said in reply to a question on the "dangerous" problem arising from the LTTE setting up naval and air bases.

190 Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Hurriyat leaders to Pakistan Occupied Kashmir by the Srinagar – Muzaffarabad Bus.

New Delhi, June 1, 2005.

Question: Pakistan has advised the Hurriyat leaders to get a passport. Have they applied for the Passport? How many are going?

Answer: Let me give you a full position on that because I have been getting a lot of calls on that and there seems to be some confusion on that.

The Government have all along said that it would be willing to consider requests for visits by any Indian national to Muzaffarabad and other places across the Line of Control on the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad bus service, and these requests would be processed in accordance with the understanding reached between India and Pakistan. It is on this basis that individual applications from some of the APHC leaders have been processed and those who have been accepted by the Pakistani side, have been allowed to travel on the bus.

The bilateral understanding is limited for travel, on the basis of permits issued by the two sides, to the entire territory of the erstwhile State of Jammu & Kashmir. If some of the Hurriyat leaders are invited to travel to Islamabad as has been reported, outside this provision of the above understanding, the onus for this lies on the Pakistani authorities.

As regards your specific question on passports the applications of those APHC leaders who have applied to RPO, Srinagar, for issue of passports, are being processed.

Question: How many have applied?

Answer: I do not have the exact number.

Question: The bus goes on Wednesdays, so it should be going today?

Answer: I think the bus is scheduled to go on 2nd June i.e. tomorrow.

Question: Isn't that a change in the stand of the government because earlier it was saying that it would be considered a breach of the understanding but now it is saying that the onus lies on Pakistan?

Answer: I have stated our position on more than one occasion. The understanding between India and Pakistan as far as the bus service is concerned is quite clear. If leaders are invited to visit Islamabad and they do so then the onus for that part of the journey lies on Pakistan authorities. I do not see any contradiction in these statements. It is quite clear.

Question: Last week the Pakistani Foreign Minister in an interview to Daily Times accused India of obduracy and said that no peace process with India could last for more than three to four years. Have you sought any clarification from Islamabad on that?

Answer: I normally do see my daily copy of the Daily Times but I seemed to have missed that one. As far as our views are concerned I think the Prime Minister has made the stand of India on the peace process very clear in his comments in Shimla, which appeared after that interview. So I do not think that I need to get into that.

Question: What are your expectations of the Hurriyat leaders who have passport who have applied for their passports? What are they going to do with that?

Answer: I would not like to go into that. The point simply that I am trying to make is that an Indian national who applies for passport is entitled to the passport being processed and this is being done. As far as travel on the bus is concerned the travel is on the basis of travel permits, which I have explained.

Question: The bus leaves tomorrow. So when are you going to issue the passports?

Answer: That is up to the RPO to process the passports as expeditiously as possible but as I have explained to you the travel on the bus is on the basis of the permits issued for that sector of the journey as per agreed procedure.

Question: There are reports that Hurriyat leaders would be traveling by their own vehicles?

Answer: I have no information on that as I have just answered. I am just addressing the issue of travel by bus.

Question: But is that allowed under the Agreement?

Answer: The agreement is on the bus service, how can I talk about cars? The Agreement between India and Pakistan on the CBMs is for the Srinagar - Muzaffarabad bus service. I could try and check with Ministry of Home, Ministry of Defence on what you are saying but I have no information on this.

191. Joint press statement on the visit of Minister for Petroleum & Natural Gas and Panchayati Raj Mani Shankar Aiyar to Pakistan.

Islamabad, June 7, 2005.

In accordance with the Joint Press Statement of April 18, 2005, in New Delhi by the President of Pakistan, His Excellency General Pervez Musharraf and the Prime Minister of India, His Excellency Mr. Manmohan Singh, it was agreed that the Ministers of Petroleum and Natural Gas would meet to explore cooperation on the issue of pipelines. Accordingly, the Indian Minister for Petroleum & Natural Gas and Panchayati Raj, Shri Mani Shankar Aiyar, visited Pakistan at the invitation of H.E. Mr. Amanullah Khan Jadoon, Minister for Petroleum and Natural Resources of Pakistan, between June 5-7, 2005. The two Ministers discussed cooperation between India and Pakistan with regard to the import of gas through transnational pipelines.

2. In Islamabad, H.E. Mr. Mani Shankar Aiyar had the honour of calling on H.E. President General Pervez Musharraf and H.E. Prime Minister Mr. Shaukat Aziz. He had a one-to-one meeting and delegation-level talks with H.E. Minister Mr. Amanullah Khan Jadoon. The two Ministers agreed that the transnational pipeline projects should be given top priority as there would be substantial advantage to both countries in pursuing and realizing cooperation in these projects, to serve their energy security interests, and to create linkages and interdependencies for establishing an enduring relationship between the two countries. They were of the shared view that, given the substantial requirements of gas of their countries, the processing of pipeline projects should be accelerated.

3. The Indian Minister explained to the Pakistani Minister India's requirements of gas by pipeline and the arrangements worked out by India. The Pakistan side gave a detailed presentation of the position regarding supply and demand for natural gas in Pakistan and provided an overview of the gas sector economy. The Indian Minister thanked the Pakistani side for the detailed information provided and, in turn, provided some details of arrangements made by India to import LNG and agreed to share technical information and experience in this regard with the Pakistani side.

4. Iran-Pakistan-India Pipeline: The two Ministers reviewed the Iran-Pakistan-India gas pipeline proposal. They agreed that the project, which envisaged supply of gas to Pakistan and India through a transnational pipeline, would go a long way in meeting the energy security requirements of the two countries and, thus, should be seen as a significant project for the benefit of the peoples of these countries. The Indian and Pakistani delegations agreed to exchange information in regard to the financial structuring, technical, commercial, legal and related issues to realize a safe and secure world class project. To this end, it was agreed that the momentum pertaining to the project should be accelerated by constituting a Joint Working Group at the Secretary-level, which will meet regularly and report progress to the Ministers to facilitate definitive decisions by them, at the earliest.

5. Turkmenistan¹-Afghanistan-Pakistan Pipeline: H.E. Mr. Amanullah Khan Jadoon provided the Indian Minister with details of this

1. Addressing a press conference in Islamabad on June 7 Mani Shankar Iyer said India would continue to explore the options of importing gas from Turkmenistan through the Turkmenistan – Pakistan – Afghanistan pipeline sponsored by the Asian Development Bank and possibly project in which the Indian side expressed interest. The Indian Minister confirmed that he would respond positively to an invitation to attend the next Steering Committee Meeting.

6. Gulf South Asia (GUSA) Pipeline: The Pakistani side outlined the parameters of the proposed GUSA project and India expressed interest in participating in this project.

7. The Indian Minister conveyed his gratitude to H.E. Mr. Amanullah Khan Jadoon for the warm hospitality and courtesy extended to him and his delegation throughout their stay in Pakistan. Minister Aiyar invited Minister Amanullah Kahn Jadoon to visit India to pursue transnational pipeline projects to maintain the momentum of dialogue and cooperation. The invitation was accepted. It was decided that H.E. the Pakistani Minister would visit India at his earliest convenience. It was also agreed that the Indian Minister would again visit Pakistan at mutual convenience later in the year. These visits would be preceded by meetings of the Joint Working Group, alternately in India and Pakistan, to discuss all issues relevant to the realization of world-class pipeline projects to meet the gas requirements of the two countries.

from Qatar through a pipeline that would run under sea and overland through the UAE and Pakistan. Meanwhile on July 5 the External Affairs Minister held discussions with Pakistan Prime Minister on the sidelines of the Shanghai Cooperation Conference in Astana (Kazakhstan) when the two reviewed the bilateral relations. While Pakistan Prime Minister spoke about the Iran-Pakistan-India Gas-pipeline project, and trade related issues including the movement of trucks between the two countries, External Affairs Minister Natwar Singh told the Pakistani Prime Minister that India was concerned that Pakistan had not done enough to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism and said the evidence about the functioning of certain facilities and camps was available. Media reports quoted senior Indian officials to say that Aziz told EAM that Pakistan Government was "institutionally completely against" cross-border terrorism.

192. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs on discussions in Paris on the Baglihar Hydroelectric Project.New Delhi, June 11, 2005.

The Indian delegation led by Secretary, Ministry of Water Resources attended the first meeting with the Neutral Expert appointed by the World Bank in consultation with the Governments of India and Pakistan under the provisions on the Indus Waters Treaty of 1960.

It may be recalled that the World Bank, had appointed Prof. Raymond Lafitte of the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology, as the Neutral Expert who is to make a determination on the issues of difference which Pakistan had referred to him.

This was the first meeting on the matter held on 9-10 June 2005 in Paris.

The Pakistani delegation was led by Mr. Makhdoom Ali Khan, Attorney General.

Opening the meeting, Mr. Roberto Danino, Senior Vice President and General Counsel, World Bank, appreciated the constructive manner in which the Indus Waters Treaty had been operated for the past 45 years. He pointed out that the Neutral Expert, Prof. Lafitte was appointed in consultation with the Governments of India and Pakistan and he was happy that the Bank had a constructive and positive role to play in the process.

The first meeting focused on setting the procedures, which the Neutral Expert would adopt to enable him to arrive at a determination of the differences in a fair and equitable manner.

The discussions were held in a cordial atmosphere and the Neutral Expert heard the views of the delegations of India and Pakistan on issues of procedure and documents.

The procedure settled by the Neutral Expert affords both parties three occasions each to explain their respective stances which is in line with the practices followed by international courts and other tribunals to reach a just and equitable resolution. The Neutral Expert also proposes a site inspection on mutually convenient dates.

193. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on a news report in the Daily Times regarding involvement of Pakistan's Information Minister Sheikh Rashid Ahmad in training terrorists.

New Delhi, June 14, 2005.

The revelation by Mr. Yasin Malik¹ (reported by the Daily Times, Islamabad, June 14, 2005) at a meeting during an exhibition in Islamabad on June 13 that the Information Minister of Pakistan, Sheikh Rashid Ahmad, had set up a camp where around 3500 jihadis were trained in guerilla warfare is a matter of great concern. It is particularly serious that people directly involved in such activities continue to occupy high positions in Pakistan.

Our stand remains that no effective action has been taken by Pakistan to dismantle the infrastructure of support to terrorism on a permanent basis. This is contrary to the assurance given by the Pakistani leadership that Pakistan will not allow any territory within its control to be used to support terrorism in any manner. It is our sincere hope that Pakistan will abide by its commitment.

1. Yasin Malik was one of the members of the Hurriyat Conference delegation that went to Pakistan occupied Kashmir and from there went to Pakistan, where during one of his public engagements he said that when militancy in Kashmir was at its "zenith" Mr. Rashid set up a "camp where 3, 500 Jahadis were trained in guerilla warfare". Though Rashid, confronted with this bitter truth, tried to deny his involvement and wriggle out of this public embarrassment, Government of India took a serious view of his involvement in activities, which promoted terrorism in the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir. He was apprehensive that this revelation would jeopardize his application for travel to Srinagar by the recently introduced Muzaffarabad – Srinagar Bus. On June 16 a spokesman for the Congress Party reacting sharply said in New Delhi: "If there is any Minister or authority in Pakistan who is involved in or associated with it [training of terrorists], surely such a person will not be welcome in this country. There is no question of any compromise or any dilution of our position." Meanwhile Sheikh Rashid put in his application for travel to Srinagar. On June 17 the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs Navtej Sarna said: "The Government of India has processed the application and has declined to accord permission taking into account all relevant aspects involved."

194. Letter of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to the former Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee replying to his letter of June 15¹ regarding government's handling of the peace process with Pakistan.

New Delhi, June 21, 2005.

Respected Vajpayeeji,

Thank you for your letter of June 15, 2005. We are fully conscious of the issues raised in your letter. It is our endeavour to take the composite dialogue between India and Pakistan forward while ensuring that India's vital interests are fully safeguarded.

We have consistently held that the dialogue with Pakistan is predicated on its commitment to end cross-border terrorism, as outlined in the Joint Statement of January 6, 2004. The centrality of this position was most recently reflected in the Joint Statement released after my meeting with President Musharraf.

I would like to emphasize that there is no room in our discussions – or in our action – for ambiguity regarding our position on Jammu and Kashmir. I have reiterated on every possible occasion that there can be no redrawing of boundaries. We have also ruled out any role for the third party – either through interventions or as guarantor or as mediators – in any form.

With regard to the visit of the Hurriyat leaders to Pakistan, you are aware of the fact that in the last four or five years, these leaders have regularly met Pakistani dignitaries visiting India, as well as Pakistani diplomats. In this background, our Government felt that their visit to Pakistan could not do any harm. I may also add that their visit to Pakistan - occupied Kashmir using the Srinagar – Muzaffarabad bus was cleared on the basis of agreed procedures.

That Pakistan decided to invite them to visit Islamabad and other cities in Pakistan violated an understanding on these procedures that had been reached between India and Pakistan. Passport were issued to those Hurriyat leaders who did not possess Indian passports and made a request for the issue of such documents. It would not, therefore be correct to state that the authorities on our side had mishandled the visit of the Hurriyat.

We have been consistently of the view that Jammu and Kashmir has a duly-elected Government which came into office after an election that was internationally held to be free and fair. We recognize that there are some groups that are outside the electoral process, and the All Party Hurriyat Conference is one among such groups in Jammu and Kashmir. We are nevertheless willing to enter into a dialogue with such groups, provided they agree to abjure the path of violence. Nothing in our action in the last twelve months has compromised our adherence to this principle.

195. Joint press statement issued at the end of India-Pakistan talks on Wullar barrage/Tulbul Navigation Project.

New Delhi, June 29, 2005.

As part of the Composite Dialogue between India and Pakistan, the delegations of the two countries met in New Delhi on 28-29 June 2005 for discussion on the Wullar barrage/Tulbul Navigation Project. The Indian delegation was led by Mr. J. Hari Narayan, Secretary, Ministry of Water Resources, Government of India and the Pakistan delegation was led by Mr. Ashfaq Mahmood, Secretary, Ministry of Water and Power, Government of Pakistan.

2. The talks were held in a cordial and constructive atmosphere¹. The two sides exchanged views on the project and reaffirmed their commitment to the Indus Waters Treaty of 1960.

1. While stating that the two sides had a better understanding of each other's position, at the end of the talks the two sides recorded separate 'minutes' of the meeting. Asked when the work on the project would be resumed, the leader of the Indian delegation Hari Narayan said although the talks had made progress towards resolution, India's position was that work on the project would start after settlement of the issue. Regarding the precise time when the next round would take place, the leader of the Pakistani delegation Ashfaq Mahmood said the talks were part of the composite dialogue and in due course both countries would work out a time-table. [The Tulbul project is a "navigation lock-cum-control structure" at the mouth of the Wullar lake. It envisages regulated release of water from the natural storage in

3. The two sides agreed to continue the discussion at the next round of the Dialogue Process with a view to resolving the issue in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty.

196. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the question of Indian prisoners in Pakistan.

New Delhi, July 14, 2005.

In response to a question the Official Spokesperson said:

We have seen news reports emanating from Pakistan media regarding the alleged hunger strike by some Indian prisoners in Kot Lakhpat Jail, Lahore. The news reports do not reflect the factual position. The Government of India has repeatedly taken up with the Government of Pakistan the issue of release and repatriation of Indian civilian prisoners and fishermen languishing in Pakistani jails. We have confirmed the nationality of 64 Indian prisoners in Lahore. As regards Indian fishermen, there are 173 Indian fishermen whose nationality has been verified. All these await Pakistan Government's approval for their repatriation.

In addition, there are 155 Indian fishermen who have not been granted consular access so far by Pakistan authorities. Several representations have been received by the Government from Members of Parliament, political leaders and the public on the welfare of the Indian fishermen in Pakistan's custody. We have received information today that Pakistan has decided to provide consular access to these fishermen in Karachi jails on July 16 and 18. This has been made possible due to the persistent efforts of the Government of India to secure consular access to all Indian prisoners in Pakistan for their immediate release and repatriation. We hope that they will be released soon.

197. Statement by Official Spokesperson on Organization of Islamic Conference comment on Jammu and Kashmir.

New Delhi, July 18, 2005.

The Organisation of Islamic Conference (OIC) has once again commented upon Jammu & Kashmir at the OIC Foreign Ministers' Meeting in Sana'a, Yemen. The OIC has no locus standi in matters concerning India's internal affairs. We reject all such resolutions.

201. Media briefing on second round of Expert-level talks between India and Pakistan on Conventional Confidence Building Measures.

New Delhi, August 8, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening. As you know, we have just concluded two sets of Expert-level talks with Pakistan. The first one on which you have already received the Joint Statement¹ was on the Nuclear Confidence Building Measures in which the two sides reached an understanding on the proposed Agreement on Pre-Notification of Flight Testing of Ballistic Missiles and we are hopeful that that Agreement and other understandings reached during that dialogue will contribute significantly to the peace process between India and Pakistan.

The second set of talks was the second round of Expert-level talks between India and Pakistan on Conventional Confidence Building Measures which was held today August 8. As you know, Mr. Dilip Sinha, Joint Secretary from the Ministry of External Affairs led the Indian delegation and Mr. Tariq Osman Hyder, Additional Secretary from the Pakistan Foreign Ministry led their delegation.

The Joint Statement that has been agreed upon².....

1. Document No. 199.
2. Document No. 200.

Question: Other than what has been agreed to in the Joint Statement are there any other proposals which have been made by India but not accepted by Pakistan?

Answer: As you know, during the last one year/eighteen months we have been giving several proposals for CBMs and a very large number are on the table, some of which have been agreed upon and some of which have not been agreed upon.

However, in the particular context of today's meeting I would like to just remind you that we have also proposed a number of military CBMs which was done in December 2004 at the first round of the meeting of this Expert level group. Amongst them, of course, there were a set of CBMs which covered exchanges like holding of seminars between academics and research institutions dealing with strategic and defence related issues, for instance, IDSA on the Indian side and IIS from Pakistan. We also proposed exchanges, lectures, seminars between the defence training establishments like the National Defence Colleges. We also proposed friendly sporting contacts and tournaments between Armed Forces from both sides, exchange of military bands and so on. We are hopeful that these proposals, if they are agreed to, would greatly reduce tensions and misperceptions.

It is a matter of regret that Pakistan has not yet found it possible to agree to such proposals.

Question: Any reference to the infiltration going on?

Answer: Well, there was a general overview of the situation but I do not have a line-by-line readout of the discussions. The idea was basically to look at the proposals on the table from both sides. As I said we had proposed six military CBMs in December. Pakistan had proposed some military CBMs. The idea in this meeting was to hone down to what could be agreed upon at the moment.

Question: Were there any new proposals from the Pakistani side?

Answer: Pakistan also had some proposals on the table and those that we found it possible to agree to, we have agreed. For instance, the upgrading of existing communication links between the two DGMOs, it is a proposal which comes from both sides, that has been agreed to. No development of Posts and defence works along the LoC, that has been proposed by Pakistan, that has been agreed to. There was a proposal on the implementation of Article 2 of the Agreement concerning airspace violation, which I paraphrased for you in different terms, that has been agreed to. Monthly meetings at the flag level, that has been agreed to.

Question: When you say that there would be no defence work on the LoC, does that also include fencing?

Answer: Well, I have talked of defence works.

Question: To what level will the hotline be upgraded?

Answer: When you say hotline is upgraded it means that the hotline is upgraded in its quality. You have it at the DGMO level.

Question: At the earlier talks there was this proposal of ... troops along the border with specific accent on Siachen. Was that discussed today?

Answer: I do not see that as a proposal from either side at the moment. As far as the Indian side is concerned you know the quantum and composition of our Armed Forces is governed by our national security interests and objectives in each particular place.

202. Joint statement issued at the end of second round of India-Pakistan talks on Economic and Commercial Cooperation.

New Delhi, August 10, 2005.

The Second Round of India – Pakistan talks on Economic and Commercial Cooperation within the framework of the Composite Dialogue was held here on August 9-10, 2005. The Indian Delegation was led by Commerce Secretary Shri S. N. Menon. The Pakistan delegation was led by the Acting Secretary Ministry of Commerce, Syed Asif Shah.

The discussions were held in a cordial and constructive atmosphere. The two sides recognized the scope for further increase in bilateral trade and discussed further measures to enhance mutually beneficial economic and commercial cooperation.

The two sides agreed on the following:

- Aeronautical talks would be held in Pakistan in September 2005 to review the existing Air Services Agreement.
- Bilateral meeting to review the Shipping Protocol of 1975 would be held in Pakistan in September 2005.
- The Second Meeting of the Joint Study Group (JSG) would be convened at an early date in Islamabad. The JSG meeting would be preceded by the meeting of the Sub-Groups on Non-Tariff Barriers (NTBs) and Customs Cooperation and Trade Facilitation to formulate recommendations for consideration by the JSG.

The two sides recalled the decision taken during the visit of the Prime Minister of Pakistan to India in November 2004 to open branches of scheduled banks in each other's country and agreed that requests for opening of bank branches in both the countries would be processed expeditiously to facilitate bilateral trade relations.

Both sides also noted the progress achieved in concluding a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) between the Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI) and Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan (SECP) to benefit from each other's experiences.

Both sides expressed the hope that Fibre Optic link between Amritsar and Lahore would be established and operationalized at the earliest¹.

1. When the talks began on August 9, the Indian Commerce Secretary in his welcome address said that under the Composite Dialogue, both sides would explore cooperation in the areas of mutual benefit like Civil Aviation, Shipping, Banking, and Petroleum & Natural gas. The exchange of technology and skills between the two countries would help enhance the quality of goods at relatively cheaper prices, he said. He welcomed the move of the Government of Pakistan to open the Wagah- Attari Land Route. "The Wagah- Attari LCS was notified by India in 1994 on the permanent basis for movement of goods by road and rail. We hope that Pakistan would consider opening of the same on permanent basis for a larger number of commodities. This has the potential for the creation of jobs by increasing ancillary activities along these routes" he said. During the talks both the sides noted the quantum increase in the volume of trade between the two countries, which has reached the level of US $ 600.77 million in 2004-05.

203. Address by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the launch of Indo-Pak Parliamentarians Forum.New Delhi, August 23, 2005.

I extend a warm welcome to the distinguished Members of Parliament from Pakistan who have travelled to India for this meeting of the Indo-Pak Parliamentarians Forum.

The fact that such a forum has been created and is meeting in New Delhi with the participation of many esteemed parliamentarians from both countries is in itself a reflection of the change in the climate in our bilateral relations.

It is also a manifestation of the overwhelming desire among people on both sides of the border for peace and friendship.

There is a great reservoir of goodwill on both sides, based on our affinities and commonalities. We need to build further on this foundation. Greater contact among civil society in our region, particularly among the elected representatives of the people, would open the doors for a better appreciation of our respective viewpoints and in bridging our differences.

It would also contribute towards the efforts of the Governments to build a durable structure of peace, stability and cooperation in South Asia. In fact, civil society has been a major driving force in bringing about the positive changes in our relations.

Our people have shown us the way forward to peace and friendship. Our conscious policy has been to be "people centric" and to promote people-to-people exchanges across the spectrum.

India, as the largest democracy in the world, takes pride in her democratic traditions and institutions. The will of the people is of paramount importance and must be harnessed to transform our relations.

Governments need to play a facilitating role in ensuring that the aspirations of our people are met. We need to work towards the consolidation of democratic trends and institutions in our region and across the globe.

Parliamentarians have a critical role to play in this process. I am, therefore, delighted that such an exchange of ideas has now become a reality in our region. I hope that the formation of this Forum will not only serve to bring our two countries closer but also promote democratic values and institutions throughout our region.

We, in India, attach great importance to the ongoing process of engagement and confidence building with Pakistan. We are in the midst of a serious, constructive and purposeful dialogue process and this has yielded tangible benefits to the people of both countries. We can say with a measure of satisfaction that we are moving in the right direction and have discovered several areas of convergence and cooperation.

The last one year has witnessed remarkable and positive developments which, I believe, have brought us on to the threshold of a new phase in our bilateral relations. Diplomatic links have been normalized. The Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service was operationalised on April 7 this year.

We are also working actively to operationalise other transportation links, including the bus service from Amritsar to Lahore and Nankana Sahib and the rail link from Munnabao to Khokhrapar.

We are also looking at opening the Poonch- Rawalkot and the Kargil-Skardu routes. We have announced an increase in the number of religious shrines for pilgrimages by Pakistani nationals and hope for similar gestures from the Government of Pakistan. These increased linkages will not only encourage greater contact among our people, but would also create awareness of the need to transcend borders for the sake of our peoples' prosperity and well-being. We must work towards a situation where borders, even in our part of the world, begin to matter less and less and serve to unite rather than divide people.

As a measure of goodwill and our commitment to normalizing and strengthening relations, we have unilaterally liberalized the visa regime for Pakistani nationals to travel to India, including a system of visas on arrival for certain select categories such as senior citizens and minors. We hope to be able to implement group tours shortly. We have already put in place a special visa regime for Pakistani students to study in Indian educational institutions. We look forward to the reopening of the Consulates in Mumbai and Karachi at the earliest as this would greatly contribute towards increasing interaction among our people. The Governments could play a major role in encouraging people to people exchanges and in defining new parameters in our relationship.

Complex and longstanding issues that have defied solution for decades and in which strong public sentiment is invested, stand very little chance of being tackled successfully in an atmosphere of suspicion and hostility. Such issues need to be dealt in tandem with a confidence building process that enlarges the public constituency for peace and friendship on both sides. We believe that CBMs are integral to the peace process. We need to have an incremental step-by-step approach towards resolving our problems. We need to be practical and realistic and must tread cautiously yet firmly on the path towards peace. We cannot expect dramatic results in such a short period and, therefore, we need to renew our commitment towards continued engagement for as long as it takes to find solutions in an amicable manner through sustained dialogue.

There is enormous potential in our relations with Pakistan and we are determined to enhance the areas of interaction as well as to build on the momentum already achieved. We attach immense importance to expanding bilateral economic and commercial cooperation. We need to jointly work towards tackling the common challenges of poverty and development in our region for the sake of the collective well being of our people. India has emerged as one of the largest and fastest growing economies in the world. We need to exploit our economic complementarities and build on the mutual enthusiasm of our business communities. It is imperative that we chart out a road map in order to give a solid economic foundation to the peace process. The opportunities are vast and exciting and must be seized. All we need is will and determination to move ahead in this direction. I am happy to inform you that Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh, is likely to meet President Musharraf in New York next month. Such regular high level exchanges between our two countries will only help further strengthen and deepen our expanding ties.

Here I would like to underline that terrorism has indeed become a serious menace not just to our two countries but also to the entire world. The bilateral dialogue process hinges on Pakistan adhering to its commitment not to allow any territory under its control to be used for cross-border terrorism against India. Irrespective of what form terrorism takes or what factors motivate this or who resort to perpetrate violent acts against innocent people, terrorism has to be condemned without any reservations. This menace has to be rooted out from our neighbourhood. Your role in this regard would be valuable.

We sincerely seek peace and friendship with Pakistan. We hope that the coming months would witness wider and freer exchanges among our people so that the process becomes irreversible and we can build better understanding and mutual trust as we walk along the path of peace and good neighbourly relations. Our people want us to put an end to conflict and confrontation, to bury the past and to look ahead with hope and determination into a future full of progress and prosperity, peace and stability and friendship and cooperation between our two countries. As representatives of the people and influential members of civil society, I invite you to play a pioneering role in fulfilling the destiny of peace and prosperity that our people are entitled to.

204. Joint press statement issued at the end of Home Secretary level talks between India and Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 30, 2005.

The second round of Home Secretary level talks between India and Pakistan on Terrorism and Drug Trafficking, as a part of the ongoing Composite Dialogue process, were held in New Delhi on August 29-30, 2005. The Indian delegation was led by Shri V.K. Duggal, Union Home Secretary while the Pakistani delegation was led by Syed Kamal Shah, Secretary, Ministry of Interior.

The talks were held in a friendly and cordial atmosphere and the deliberations were frank and forthright. Both sides reiterated their commitment to combat terrorism and re-emphasised the need for effective steps for the complete elimination of this menace.

Both sides underlined the need for cooperation between the Central Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Investigation Agency and agreed that experts from both sides would meet at mutually convenient dates in the near future, to work out modalities for the implementation of the arrangement for cooperation between the two agencies agreed earlier¹.

Both sides agreed to implement the decisions arrived at by the Foreign Secretaries in December 2004 on prisoners and reiterated their commitment to provide immediate notification of arrests made by either side, provide consular access to all persons within three months of arrest and release prisoners immediately after completion of sentence and nationality verification. They also agreed to release on 12 September, 2005 all fishermen and civilian prisoners who have completed their sentence and whose national status has been confirmed.

Both sides noted with satisfaction the continuing cooperation and exchange of information between narcotics control agencies of both countries and agreed that the Memorandum of Understanding between them will be finalised and signed shortly.

The MOU aims at having a regular institutional mechanism in place to intensify mutual cooperation and liaison on drug control matters.

The Pakistan Interior Secretary and members of his delegation called on the Home Minister, Government of India, Shri Shivraj V. Patil. The two sides agreed to continue the discussions within the framework of the Composite Dialogue Process.

1. Explaining the context of this formulation, it was pointed out that the CBI and the FAI could now seek each other's help in criminal cases on the basis of a prior arrangement. Such arrangements it was pointed out were internationally accepted. The CBI and FAI would now assist each other in case of a request made by each side. The Home Secretary V.K Duggal told reporters that the "utmost understanding" had been shown by the two sides of each other's concerns. The agreement was a "fairly substantive move forward" an achievement in itself. "All other related issues pertaining to terrorism were also discussed", he said and added Mr. Shah had promised to look into India's concerns once he returned to Islamabad. However, before the visit, the Home Secretary Duggal told journalists in New Delhi that India would seek the deportation of underworld don Dawood Ibrahim from Pakistan during the talks. "We will seek the deportation of all those who are involved in terrorists activities against India and are wanted in this country for serious crimes and terrorism-related activities and are based in Pakistan," Home Secretary said. Asked specifically if Dawood decalred a global terrorist by the United States figures on the list of those whose deportation is being sought by India, he said "we will ask for all those who are wanted in India so that they can face the due process of law in this country". On whether new names of terrorists and criminals have been added to the list of 20 wanted men given to Pakistan by India during the NDA rule, Mr. Duggal said the list to be given during the Home Secretaries talks comprises of nearly 30 names. (He did not spell out the names on the list.)

205. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran at the end of his first day's talks.

Islamabad, September 1, 2005.

Dr. AVS Ramesh Chandra, Counsellor, High Commission of India, Islamabad: Good evening Ladies and Gentlemen. It is indeed an honor for us to have with us His Excellency Mr. Shyam Saran, Foreign Secretary of India and His Excellency Mr. Shivshankar Menon, High Commissioner of India in Pakistan. Foreign Secretary will have an opening statement after which we will take questions.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you very much. Good evening to all of you. It is a great pleasure for me to be back here again in Islamabad. As you are aware my visit is in connection with the conclusion of the second round of the Composite Dialogue between India and Pakistan on a number of designated issues. The Composite Dialogue's second round came to an end just a couple of days back when we had the meeting of the Indian Home Secretary with the Interior Secretary of Pakistan. Although the review will be carried out at the ministerial level when our Foreign Minister comes to Islamabad in the first week of October, it was felt that it would be worthwhile for me to have this meeting with my Pakistani counterpart, especially in view of the fact that President Musharraf and Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh would be meeting shortly in a couple of weeks' time in New York.

Let me just give you a sense of the discussions that were held today. Both sides in conducting the review of the second round of the Composite Dialogue said that significant progress was made on several of the issues which were on the table. There are specific areas in which we have agreed to take our relationship forward. Just to give you a few examples, we have finalized the text for pre-notification of the missile tests between the two countries and we have agreed that this agreed text will now be signed when our External Affairs Minister comes to visit Islamabad.

Similarly we have been able to finalize the text for a MoU between the Indian Coastguard and the Pakistan Maritime Security Agency. This is for communication links between the two and this text is also ready for signature. We will endeavor to have this also signed during the visit of the External Affairs Minister.

We have during this period of the Composite Dialogue also made progress on a number of transportation, communication links between the two countries, on certain Confidence Building Measures or people-to-people contacts. You are aware of the landmark decision to operationalize the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service. And I think it is testimony to how important this decision has been that it has already played a very important role in terms of bringing the people on the two sides of the LoC together.

We are now, because of the success of the service, looking at the possibility of increasing the frequency of this bus service. We have also agreed to look at some additional bus routes. This includes the proposed Poonch-Rawalpindi bus service. We have on our side also suggested that we could have an additional bus service between Kargil and Skardu, which is also a demand of the people in those areas.

With respect to other linkages we have already agreed that there should be a bus service between Amritsar and Lahore, and Amritsar and Nankana Sahib. We will be holding technical talks in order to operationalize this as early as possible. From our side we have also expressed our readiness to consider a bus service between Lahore and Sirhind on the Indian side.

I will recall that during this period we have also had some high-level visits, and high-level interactions. Our External Affairs Minister visited Islamabad on a bilateral visit and that has taken our relationship forward. In April we had the privilege of receiving President Musharraf in New Delhi and as a result of that visit a very forward-looking joint statement was issued and today in the review that we carried out we looked at the implementation of some of the decisions taken then and also agreed that we need to as early as possible give effect to some of those decisions which have not yet been operationalized. We looked at the humanitarian issue of exchange of prisoners, and treatment of prisoners. We have, as you know, agreed during the talks between the Home Secretary of India and Interior Secretary of Pakistan that as a humanitarian gesture we would have exchange of prisoners who have completed their sentences and also whose nationality has been verified by the 12th of September. We have also agreed to give consular access to each other for the prisoners of each others' countries. And we have also agreed that we will put in place a mechanism whereby as soon as an arrest is made of someone who is suspected, of either Pakistani or Indian nationality, we will inform each other about the arrest.

So as far as the morning meeting is concerned I believe it was very productive, very constructive and forward looking. We have taken a number of decisions in order to take our relationship forward. Just before I came here, I had the privilege to call upon the Prime Minister of Pakistan His Excellency Mr. Shaukat Aziz. During this meeting we went over the results that have been achieved through the Composite Dialogue including in the review meetings this morning. The Prime Minister conveyed to me the interest of Pakistan to take our relationship to a higher level, and further explore complementarities, which exist between our two economies.

For my part, I conveyed to him the message of our Prime Minister that India is determined to address all outstanding issues between the two countries. This includes, of course, the issue of Jammu and Kashmir. I conveyed to him that as far as India is concerned, the parameters within which we can address the issue of Jammu and Kashmir are well known. Prime Minister has himself articulated these parameters. It is not possible for us to look at the re-drawing of boundaries or concessions in territorial terms. We do believe that whatever be the negative consequences or adverse consequences of these lines which are drawn on the map for the people on both sides on these lines, as civilized countries we have the obligation to try and minimize as much as possible these negative consequences, allow people to have easy interaction with one another, restore the natural flow of goods and peoples, give the opportunity for the obvious cultural affinities which exist between people to also play its role. And in this we are prepared to go as far as may be necessary.

We believe that in undertaking this journey together we may not immediately be aware of what the final destination may be, or what shape that final destination would take. But one thing is very clear to us: any mutually acceptable agreement that we have to arrive at must enjoy the support of people of India and the people of Pakistan. If it has to have the support of public opinion on both sides then we need to expand the constituency for peace on both sides of the border. And this expanding of the constituency of peace on both sides of the border does require that we should have many more opportunities to interact with one another, engage in dialogue with one another, understand each other's perspectives and each other's view points. Through this process we believe that the destination that we both wish to arrive at will be within the realms of possibility.

I have conveyed to His Excellency the Prime Minister the very strong desire of India and the vision that our Prime Minister has of this region becoming a region of great economic dynamism. We are living in a world where there are processes of globalization which are imposing both challenges as well as opening up opportunities for us. We believe that if South Asia has to take advantage of these opportunities, and if it has the ability to deal with these challenges, then we need to work together.

And fortunately there are very great economic complementarities amongst the countries of this region. Some of that economic exchange and cooperation is already in evidence. The win-win situation that we have been talking about, for example with regard to the proposed Iran-Pakistan-India pipeline, we believe that the same logic can be applied to a much larger canvas of projects and proposals between the two countries and the rest of the region. We have a vision of a South Asian Economic Community, a community of peace as well as prosperity and we are ready to walk hand in hand with Pakistan in pursuit of this particular destination.

As I said this has been a very satisfying visit for me, a visit which has been productive, a visit that I believe has enabled us to set the stage for what we hope will be another very constructive and also a very productive meeting between the President and Prime Minister in New York. Thank You.

Question & Answer Session

Question : Did you talk about Sarbajit Singh case?

Foreign Secretary: As I told you, when I had a meeting with Pakistan's Foreign Secretary in the morning, the humanitarian issue of prisoners was talked about. I told you what the two sides agreed on this issue. As you know, consular access has been given to Sarbajit Singh. This process is continuing as to how we can help him. And as we have said this is not a question of one single prisoner. It has a human dimension. There are so many prisoners on both sides. A decision has been taken that by September 12 all those people who have completed their sentences and whose nationality verification has been done will be released. This is a very important step and will try to take it further.

Question : President of Pakistan General Pervez Musharraf has been asking throughout the second round of Composite Dialogue that there should be a deadline assigned for the resolution of Kashmir problem. Don't you think that time has approached? And during the third round of this Composite Dialogue, will it not be appropriate that a deadline should be fixed for the resolution of this problem.

Secondly, do you see any possibility of thinning out your troops in the Kashmir controlled by you so that the human right situation should improve in that part of this region. And if you allow me, may I know from you that how do you see the so-called cross-border terrorism. (Mohd. Saleh Zaafir, 'The Jang')

Foreign Secretary: Well sir, it (cross-border terrorism) may be "so-called" for you but unfortunately it is a very bitter reality for us.

As far as the issue of deadline is concerned, frankly President Musharraf has put no deadline to us on the resolution of any issue between India and Pakistan. I have to go by what is said to us by President Musharraf himself. And I think both sides agree that whatever issues are outstanding between the two countries, the sooner we resolve them the better. But I think putting artificial deadlines is not the way to go about.

As far as the issue of thinning out of troops is concerned, this is something which is really within the realm of our own sovereign decision and would be based on the assessment of the security situation prevailing in Jammu and Kashmir. The reality is, as I mentioned, that there continues to be an adverse security situation in the region because of cross-border terrorism, because of continued attempts at infiltration. There are still violent terrorist incidents which are taking place, and until the security situation really improves, the question of re-deployment of security forces really does not arise. And as I said, in any case this is something which will be decided upon on the basis of our assessment of how the security situation is evolving.

Question : It has been said from Pakistani side that the pace of this dialogue has been slow. Was this question raised today and whether there is any decision to speed up the process and whether there was any discussion or any possibility of having a trilateral dialogue, which includes the Kashmiri leadership?

Foreign Secretary: Well sir, as far as the pace of dialogue is concerned, I cannot see how anybody can come to the conclusion that the process is slowing down. I think if you look at the number of occasions on which the two countries have been talking to each other, the number of issues on which they have been interacting with each other - I just spelt out for you some of the important developments which have taken place, I mentioned to you some of the agreements that have already been finalized or are in the process of being finalized- if we look at the progress that we have achieved during the past several months, I do not think any objective observer will come to the conclusion that there has been a slow down.

I think we need to get away from a sense that for India-Pakistan relations to move forward, every few weeks we must have some spectacular initiatives or some spectacular move forward. I think we are engaged in a task which is serious, we are engaged in building up a relationship which is complex and I think given those realities, frankly we have every reason to be satisfied with the progress that we have achieved. And we believe that we have set the stage, as I mentioned, for even further progress in the future. So I do not agree with that approach.

With regard to trilateral dialogue, as you know sir, we have a certain position with regard to the status of Jammu and Kashmir. In terms of dealing with the issues of Jammu and Kashmir, we believe that there is an elected government which has come into office through free and fair elections through the democratic process. However, we have also stated that even those who have not come through this electoral process, but who wish to contribute to the peace and stability of Jammu and Kashmir, we are ready to talk to them and have our doors open to them and this is precisely what I think is taking place.

Question: Sir, could you clarify whether the agreement on the pre-notification of missile test covers cruise missiles as well, because that was an ambiguous area given that Pakistan tested a missile recently that India was not informed of. My second question is that you did not mention anything about a reviewed mandate to the India-Pakistan Joint Commission, though you had indicated in Delhi that the third round of the Composite Dialogue could be in a changed form? (Barkha Dutt, NDTV)

Foreign Secretary: Let me clarify that there is no ambiguity as far as the pre-notification agreement is concerned. It does not include Cruise Missiles.

On the Joint Commission, I think what we have agreed is that the integrity of the Composite Dialogue should be maintained. That is, the format that we have currently in place will continue. On the Joint Commission meeting we have recommended that the first meeting of the plenary of the Joint Commission should take place when our External Affairs Minister visits Islamabad next month and we are waiting for a confirmation (from Pak side). They will decide if there are certain sub-groups or sub-commissions which need to be established. But as far as the Composite Dialogue is concerned and the structure of the Composite Dialogue is concerned, we have agreed to retain that structure.

Question : You are talking about the meeting between President Musharraf and your Prime Minister. If you recall, last year they met in New York and they agreed to explore options for Kashmir solution. What has been the progress in exploring those options and secondly what about withdrawal of troops by both the sides from Siachen?

Foreign Secretary: Well, you know the issue of Jammu and Kashmir is a complex issue. We need to explore all possible means of trying to come to a mutually acceptable solution. As I mentioned to you in the beginning that perhaps at this point of time, the final destination may not be very clear or apparent. But I think what is important is that we should explore every possible means of dealing with, as I mentioned, the negative consequences of the lines drawn on the map. This is an exercise in which we are already engaged in; we have already made some progress in this respect. For example, the bus service between Srinagar and Muzaffarabad and some of the other proposals which are there for cross-LoC interaction.

Also, there will be a number of areas in which we can take this process forward. Certainly we would be open to any ideas which may be expressed from the Pakistani side concerning this process and just as we will give serious consideration to what Pakistan has to say, we hope that on the Pakistani side also there will be an equal willingness to look at our perspective on this particular issue.

With regard to Siachen, yes, we have had an informal exchange of views to see how we can take this forward. We have exchanged certain ideas both on Siachen as well as on the Sir Creek issue and hopefully, in the next few coming weeks we may be able to perhaps record some progress in this regard. At this point of time I really cannot tell you very much more on these two issues.

Question : Pakistan Foreign Secretary in his press briefing today has suggested that what was agreed is a Joint Economic Commission, whereas you are saying it is a Joint Commission. Is there any difference? (Muralidhar Reddy, 'The Hindu')

Foreign Secretary: I am sorry, I don't think there is any ambiguity as far as I am concerned because the decision which was taken was recorded in the April 18th Joint Statement that both sides agreed to revive the Joint Commission. Of course, the Joint Commission has an economic content but it also has certain non-economic issues which are within its ambit. So I would urge you not to please read anything into this more than what you need to. The important thing is that we have agreed that we will revive this Joint Commission. There is a proposal from our side to hold the first plenary of this Joint Commission when our External Affairs Minister comes here and the Pakistani side has reacted favorably to this but we need to have a confirmation that this will happen.

Question : Mr. Secretary my question is are you going to meet Mr. President tomorrow and what is your agenda for the meeting. Is there any one-point agenda regarding Sarbajit or something else?

Foreign Secretary: Well, I have to wait and see whether I will be meeting President Musharraf tomorrow.

Question : You talked about the new bus service. Is there any response to your proposals from Pakistan? (Zee News)

Foreign Secretary: We have agreed on Poonch- Rawalkot bus service and it has also been agreed that we will hold a technical level meeting to operationalize it. There is an in-principle agreement on the Amritsar-Lahore bus service, and for the Amritsar-Nankana Sahib bus service. And we have suggested that from the Pakistan side that the Lahore-Sirhind bus service could also be operationalized. It had been decided that the technical level meeting on the subject takes steps to implement the decision.

Question : Frequency in agreement....(inaudible)...on Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service.

Foreign Secretary: In principle we have agreed that there could be increased frequency but this is again something that the...the mechanics of this needs to be worked out.

Question : You have just told us about your satisfaction of pace of Composite Dialogue. But maybe someone will disagree about your statement. So I think the main question in the given circumstances is to curtail the miseries of Kashmiris. I just want to know that do you have something in your mind to improve the human rights situation in Indian held Kashmir. (Mazhar Iqbal, Daily 'Islam')

Foreign Secretary: Well, I do not think it is very productive to talk about human rights situation in the Indian side of Kashmir. I can also talk about human rights conditions on the Pakistani side of Kashmir. I do not think it is very productive to engage in a debate about human rights situation in Jammu and Kashmir. As far as the interests of the people of Jammu and Kashmir are concerned, I have already mentioned to you that our approach is a people-centric approach. It is an approach which is precisely directed towards making life as easy as possible for people on both sides of the Line of Control. That is why we have operationalized the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service. Both sides have shown flexibility in bringing this about. We have also agreed upon opening other communication linkages. We are open to many more. We have talked about possibility of designating certain meeting points along the LoC where divided families and relatives can meet each other on designated days and designated places. We have talked about cross-LoC trade. President Musharraf had himself made the suggestion that there could be truck traffic across the LoC and there could be trade in locally produced goods. So I think that if you look at the approach that is being adopted, I think that approach is being adopted precisely in order to respond to the concerns and aspirations of the people of the region.

Question : Peace process has started....(in-audible). The Bhartiya Janata Party and President Musharraf and Atal Bihari Vajpayee agreed to start the process and it is now about two years. Change has taken place in India. Now Dr. Manmohan Singh is coming back to the roster (???). The gentleman talked of Pakistan and peace process between the two countries in Washington in very different and paradoxical terms putting (???)... finger.... (inaudible)... accusing Pakistan of proliferation and promoting terrorism in the region. But only last week in Kabul he talked of Pakistan as a responsible state and then said that without Pakistan terrorism cannot be contained. How would you view this contradiction in Indian side towards Pakistan?

Foreign Secretary: Firstly, I do not think there is any contradiction whatsoever. I would like to emphasize that there is consensus across the political spectrum in India as far as pursuing peaceful friendly relations with Pakistan is concerned. There is no difference of opinion amongst any of the political parties in India that we should be engaged in seeking peaceful and friendly relations with Pakistan, whether it is the Bharatiya Janata Party or the Congress Party, or the coalition partners of the two parties. I think there is consensus that we should seek friendly, the best possible friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan. So there is no ambiguity. With regard to the issue of terrorism, I think that the facts are there for everyone to see. We have to understand that our ability to carry the peace process is dependent upon our ability to create an atmosphere free of violence. This will always have an impact on the peace process. And this is something which I think is in the common interest of both India and Pakistan.

I think the two leaders themselves mentioned in their Joint Statement in April that this is a challenge which both need to address together. But I think we have to recognize that terrorism and violence cannot go hand in hand with our pursuit of peace. This is something on which again, whether it is this party or that party, there is also a consensus in India. With regard to proliferation, we know it is not only a concern, which has been expressed by India; there is a general concern internationally over the aspect of proliferation. Again this is a challenge which the international community needs to deal with together. And we have committed ourselves to non-proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction and we are willing to make our contribution to it. If Pakistan is willing to make a contribution to it, this is most welcome.

Question : One of the CBM agreements is underway on the pre-notification of ballistic missiles. Can you tell us the position of the hotline between both secretaries?

Foreign Secretary: I think we have already agreed upon the early operationalization of the hotline. I think there are certain technical problems, which need to be sorted out but my best understanding is that this is going to happen very soon.

Question : When you talked to the Prime Minister, did you raise the issue of Manjit Singh?

Foreign Secretary: No.

206. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran after his second day's talks.

Islamabad, September 2, 2005.

Dr AVS Ramesh Chandra, Counsellor of the Indian High Commission:

Good afternoon Ladies and Gentlemen. It is a matter of honour for me, for the second time in two days, to be presenting to you His Excellency Mr Shyam Saran, Foreign Secretary of India, and His Excellency Shivshankar Menon, High Commissioner of India in Pakistan. Foreign Secretary will have an opening statement and we will then take questions.

Foreign Secretary: Thank you very much. I'll just make an opening statement and take only a few questions because I have to catch a flight this afternoon. I think I have very exhaustively answered most of your questions yesterday. I am very happy to meet all of you again this afternoon. The Joint Statement, which has just been distributed summarizes the main points of my discussion with the Foreign Secretary of Pakistan. Both my counterpart and I have expressed our satisfaction at the many positive developments, which have marked the second round of the Composite Dialogue.

During the forthcoming visit of the External Affairs Minister of India, the agreement on the pre-notification of flight-testing of ballistic missiles and the MoU on establishing communication links between the Pakistan Maritime Security Agency and the Indian Coast Guard will be formally signed. As you will see from the Joint Statement, a number of technical level meetings are scheduled to be held in the coming weeks including on the Poonch-Rawalakot bus service, truck service for trade on Srinagar-Muzaffarabad route, review of the bilateral air service agreement and the shipping protocol, and also on the Lahore-Amritsar and the Nankana Sahib-Amritsar bus services. These technical level meetings will lay the basis for early results. We have also agreed on a broad calendar for the third round of Composite Dialogue that will be initiated when my counterpart, the Foreign Secretary of Pakistan, visits New Delhi in January 2006.

This morning I had the privilege of calling on the President of Pakistan. I conveyed to him my Prime Minister's regards as also that he greatly looks forward to their forthcoming summit meeting in New York. I took the opportunity to brief the President on the discussions, which I had with my counterpart during the current visit and also on the overall progress, which has been achieved in the second round of the Composite Dialogue.

I am grateful to the government of Pakistan for the hospitality and courtesies extended to me during my stay here. I return confident that the Composite Dialogue is proceeding in a satisfactory manner and has proved to be a very useful instrument in bridging the differences between the two countries. Thank you very much.

Question & Answer Session

Question : You have said that Composite Dialogue was very satisfactory, while Pakistan's view is that the progress on the issue of Kashmir (inaudible).... is not very satisfactory. What are your comments on that ? (Javed Siddique, Resident Editor, Nawai Waqt, Islamabad)

Foreign Secretary: A. I think I had in fact answered this question yesterday itself. I stated that we are making progress on all different components of our Composite Dialogue and this includes the issue of Jammu and Kashmir as well as peace and security. I have mentioned yesterday that as far as the issue of Jammu and Kashmir is concerned it remains our belief that we perhaps may not at this point of time know what the final shape the settlement between the two countries would be. But I also stated that in order to get to the destination we both wish to reach, it is important that we create an environment in which we can ensure the support of both the people of India as well as of Pakistan.

I also mentioned that it is important while we are engaged in this process to ensure that while we may not be able to do very much in terms of changing the lines which are drawn on the map, it is important to adopt a people-centric approach, and to try and reduce, ameliorate, the negative consequences of these lines drawn on the map, encourage cross border cross LoC trade, and encourage people-to-people contact. Because this is the manner in which you can create a virtuous circle of understanding, a greater understanding between the peoples, greater interaction between the peoples, and build upon the very natural affinity, which exists between people on both sides. And this will contribute to reaching the goal that we both wish to achieve. And my understanding is that this particular process is in fact taking place and several of the measures that I have mentioned, and which are mentioned in the Joint Statement, are in fact in that direction.

Question : You just informed us that you held a meeting with President General Pervez Musharraf. Can you briefly tell us what was the perspective of General Pervez Musharraf in discussion with you? Thank you. (Shaukat Piracha, AAJ TV)

Foreign Secretary: Well, as I mentioned in my opening statement, this was really a courtesy call on His Excellency the President and in the meeting I mainly concentrated on conveying to him the sentiments of our Prime Minister, recalling the very forward-looking and constructive dialogue that had taken place between them in New Delhi in April this year, and how much our Prime Minister was looking forward to renewing his association with His Excellency in New York and which would also give them an opportunity to carry forward the very productive dialogue that we are engaged in. The President also responded by asking me to convey to our Prime Minister his very gracious acceptance of the invitation to have this meeting in New York and that he would be looking forward to this opportunity to exchange views with our Prime Minister on the various issues which are on the bilateral agenda which of course includes the issue of Jammu and Kashmir as well.

Question : On the 15th of August in Delhi, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh had said in his speech that the measures to combat violence and cross border terrorism by Pakistan have been half-hearted. Did this come up in your meeting with General Pervez Musharraf, and if so, how did he respond? (Barkha Dutt, NDTV)

Foreign Secretary: Well, I took the opportunity to welcome the recent assurances which have been articulated by President himself that various measures are being taken to combat the phenomena of terrorism, that terrorism poses a danger to Pakistan itself, measures to combat extremism and we would hope that these commitments are in fact implemented. I call it to attention to the fact that on the ground infiltration and violence still continues and it is our hope that this would subside. I also drew attention to the fact that both the Prime Minister and President had agreed that terrorism is something which must be confronted, that it must not be allowed to impede the peace process between the two countries.

Thank you, Ladies and Gentlemen. (Responding to a request) O.K... just one more question.

Question : Was the issue of Sarbajit raised with the President in your meeting today? (Piyush, STAR News)

Foreign Secretary: No. Did not talk specifically about it. Thank you very much.

207. Joint statement issued at the end of Foreign Secretary level talks between India and Pakistan

Islamabad, September 2, 2005.

The Foreign Secretary of Pakistan Mr. Riaz Mohammad Khan and the Foreign Secretary of India Mr. Shyam Saran met in Islamabad on September 1, 2005 to review the progress of the second round of the composite dialogue comprising Peace and Security including CBMs; Jammu and Kashmir; Siachen; Wullar Barrage/Tulbul Navigation Project; Sir Creek; Terrorism and Drug Trafficking; Economic and Commercial Cooperation and Promotion of Friendly Exchanges in Various Fields. The talks were held in a cordial, constructive and friendly atmosphere.

2. The Foreign Secretaries reviewed the progress made so far and assessed the developments in bilateral relations since the last review meeting of the Composite Dialogue held in September 2004. The Foreign Secretaries expressed satisfaction over the positive developments during the current round of the composite dialogue. They also reaffirmed the important outcomes of the discussions between President Pervez Musharraf and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh¹ reflected in the 18th April, 2005 Joint Statement.

1. Asked at a news conference about Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's recent remarks that attempts by Pakistan to combat violence and cross border terrorism were "half-hearted" the Foreign Secretary said India welcomed the assurances by Gen. Musharraf that various measures were being taken to fight terrorism. It was conveyed that terrorism and extremism posed a danger to Pakistan too. Saran said India had hoped that "these commitments are, in fact, implemented. I, of course, drew attention to the fact that on the ground infiltration and violence still continue, and it is our hope that this would subside." He recalled that both Gen. Musharraf and Dr. Singh agreed that terrorism must be confronted and not allowed to impede the peace process. "I return confident that the composite dialogue is proceeding in a satisfactory manner and has proved to be a very useful instrument in bridging differences between the two countries," Shyam Saran said.

3. The Foreign Secretaries reviewed the work of their experts who discussed Nuclear and Conventional CBMs and have contributed to a better understanding of each other's concerns. They welcomed the continuation of the ceasefire and commended the finalization of the Agreement on Pre-Notification of Ballistic Missile Tests. They recommended that the Agreement on Pre-Notification of Flight Testing of Ballistic Missiles and the MOU on establishing communication links between the Pakistan Maritime Security Agency and the Indian Coast Guard be signed during the forthcoming Ministerial Level Review Meeting on 3-5 October, 2005 at Islamabad.
4. The Foreign Secretaries welcomed the commencement of the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad Bus Service and agreed to hold a technical level meeting as soon as possible on the early operationalization of Poonch-Rawalakot Bus Service and a truck service for trade on the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad route. They agreed on further discussions on meeting points across LoC for divided families to ensure early implementation.
5. The Foreign Secretaries reiterated the importance of enhancing mutually beneficial economic cooperation and friendly exchanges. They noted that technical meetings would be held in September 2005 to review the bilateral Air Services Agreement and the Shipping Protocol. Technical experts will finalize the modalities for operationalisation of the Lahore-Amritsar and Nankana Sahib – Amritsar bus services during September 2005. They agreed that the 1988 Cultural Exchange Programme Agreement should be revised. The Foreign Secretaries noted the decision to expand the 1974 Bilateral Protocol on Visits to Religious Shrines to increase the number of pilgrims and add new sites in both countries. In addition, it was agreed to undertake an updating of the 1974 Visa Agreement.
6. The two Foreign Secretaries agreed on the need to improve, on humanitarian grounds, the existing mechanism for expeditious disposal of consular issues related to prisoners, fishermen and inadvertent line crossers of either side. They also agreed to implement the understanding reached in this regard during the Foreign Secretaries level talks in December 2004 and Home/Interior Secretaries talks in August 2005. In this regard, the need for revision of the 1982 Protocol on Consular access was agreed upon. The Foreign Secretaries welcomed the decision to release all prisoners on 12th September 2005 whose nationality was confirmed and who have completed their sentences.

7. The Foreign Secretaries recalled the decision taken in April 2005 by President General Pervez Musharraf and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to revive the India-Pakistan Joint Commission. They recommended that a meeting of the Joint Commission be held during the visit of External Affairs Minister, Mr. K. Natwar Singh to Pakistan on October 3-5, 2005.

8. The Foreign Secretaries agreed on the following schedule for third round of Composite Dialogue:

- The Foreign Secretaries would meet in January 2006 in New Delhi to launch the next round of the Composite Dialogue.
- The next round of the Composite Dialogue meetings on the other six subjects will be held between January and July 2006.
- All technical level meetings would be concluded by April 2006.

9. The Indian Foreign Secretary Mr. Shyam Saran paid a courtesy call on President Pervez Musharraf and Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz.

208. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on Sarbjit Singh sentenced to death in Pakistan for his alleged involvement in bomb blasts in Lahore and Multan.

New Delhi, September 5, 2005.

Question: Do you have any update on Sarabjit¹ after news reports that one eyewitness had said that he had made his statement under pressure?

1. It may be recalled that when the issue of death sentence to Sarabjit Singh (accused for his alleged involvement in bomb blasts in Lahore and Multan) was raised in Parliament the government had promised to take up the matter with the Pakistan Government since it was believed to be a case of mistaken identity. On August 25 the External Affairs Minister conveyed to the Pakistan High Commissioner in New Delhi the Indian sentiments that case be treated as an "humanitarian issue" by Pakistan. The Official Spokesperson Navtej Singh Sarna briefed the media after the Minister's meeting with the High Commissioner. The following were the questions and answers at the briefing:

Official Spokesperson: External Affairs Minister Shri Natwar Singh discussed this matter once again with the High Commissioner of Pakistan. He reiterated the fact that this is a humanitarian matter and also that there is a strong public sentiment in India for sparing the life of the individual. Once again the matter of consular access being provided was taken up.

Answer: I have seen that news report. The action that Government of India is taking is focused on a certain series of steps which we have to take as a foreign government - to get consular access, confirmation of national identity

We hope that things would move in a positive direction.

Question: Has consular access not been provided?

Official Spokesperson: Not so far.

Question: There are reports from Islamabad the Indian High Commissioner has met the Pakistan Foreign Secretary?

Official Spokesperson: Yes, we have taken up the matter earlier. The Indian High Commissioner also took it up yesterday. We had another opportunity when External Affairs Minister Shri Natwar Singh just met the Pakistani High Commissioner.

The next day Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran announced that Islamabad had agreed to provide the consular access to Sarabjit Singh "Indian national" sentenced to death. He also added that the issue of prisoners was always on the agenda of the dialogue between India and Pakistan. It would also figure in the forthcoming talks between the Home Secretaries of the two countries. The Foreign Secretary who was expected in Islamabad in the next couple of days for talks with his counterpart further remarked that need to resolve the issue of Indian and Pakistan prisoners from a humanitarian angle would also be discussed. When asked by journalists about the exchange of prisoners, Shyam Saran said: "We have not talked about prisoners exchange in relation to the Sarabjit Singh case. We have been talking about release of civilian and other prisoners including fishermen who are currently in the custody of Pakistan. As a humanitarian gesture we would also be willing to release those Pakistani prisoners who are in Indian jails...In fact we have agreed to release a very large number of Pakistani prisoners in Indian jails. But, the verification process is still being carried out. That is, the Pakistani side, which has been given consular access to these people, has to verify that these are Pakistani nationals and would then be willing to take them back. So that sometimes takes a little time." (On 25 August government informed the Rajya Sabha that there were 1, 348 Indians in Pakistan jails – 923 civilians, 371 fishermen and 54 prisoners of war. However Pakistan has acknowledged the presence of 182 civilian prisoners only.) On August 27 the Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh said "appropriate message had been sent to Pakistan on the issue of Sarabjit Singh. "On my behalf appropriate messages have been conveyed to Pakistan...People have already spoken to them," Dr. Singh told journalists after a book release function at his house. Meanwhile the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan Shankar Menon told Secretary General of the Pakistan Muslim League Mushahid Hussain Sayed that India was prepared to release all the 177 Pakistani prisoners in Indian jails whose nationalities have been confirmed by the Pakistani government. He also told him that it was Pakistan's Foreign Office that was not responding to India's offer. On August 30 Official Spokesperson confirmed the following in his briefing:

- the two officials of HCI, Islamabad have completed consular access to the individual sentenced to death and in custody in Kot Lakhpat Jail Lahore, Pakistan. Consular access had been granted from 1100 hrs and completed by 1230 hrs.
- The team collected full details about the individual who appears to be in good health. He has been left with provisions of items of daily necessity. He had also handed over letters addressed to his wife and his sister which will be forwarded.
- In answer to questions regarding identity of prisoner, prisoner identified himself as Sarabjit Singh and now further checks would be carried out.

On October 4 when EAM met the Pakistani President Musharraf in Islamabad, he raised the question of Sarabjit Singh and suggested "he be dealt with from a humanitarian point of view." Media reports said that President Musharraf assured the EAM that he would take a note of the appeals for taking a humanitarian view of the case.

and so on. As you know, consular access was granted to Indian diplomats to visit the individual. He told them that he was Sarabjit Singh and he gave them letters for his wife and sister. Report of the visit by the High Commission's diplomats was conveyed to Headquarters. This was conveyed by Headquarters to the Punjab government and the Punjab government has now confirmed that the individual is indeed Sarabjit Singh. We have therefore informed Pakistani authorities that the national identity of the individual has been confirmed. He is Sarabjit Singh and he is an Indian national. That is the update.

Question: No access has been granted to his lawyers?

Answer: That is a legal process within Pakistan. We are focusing on firstly confirming his identity and I am informing you that his national identity has been confirmed and this has been conveyed to Pakistan authorities. And incidentally, since I keep getting calls about the letters, the two letters have reached the persons they were addressed to.

Question: What next? Repatriation?

Answer: There is a certain process to be followed. We are conveying to them that he is an Indian national. Now, we will see how they process the legal and juridical process within Pakistan.

Question: When was the identity conveyed?

Answer: Within the last day or two, either today or yesterday. I do not have the exact date but it has been conveyed.

Question: Was it conveyed that he is an Indian national or whether he is Sarabjit Singh and not Manjit Singh?

Answer: That he is Sarabjit Singh and that he is an Indian national. That is our confirmation and this has been conveyed to Pakistan.

States have been advised to bring the Pak civil prisoners as well as the fishermen to the Wagah Border on the 12th of this month for handing them over to the Pak authorities.

The Joint Secretary in the Ministry of Home Affairs, Shri D.S. Mishra has said that arrangements have been made for providing consular access to all Pak civil prisoners who are undergoing sentence or are under-trial and lodged in different jails in the country. 26-27 Sept., 2005	Central Jail, Jaipur Rajasthan, Gujarat and Maharashtra

These actions are being taken in pursuance of the decision taken at the second round of Home Secretary level talks between India and Pakistan on Terrorism and Drug Trafficking held in New Delhi on the 29th and 30th of last month. At the talks, both sides agreed to implement the decisions arrived at by the Foreign Secretaries in December 2004 on prisoners and reiterated their commitment to provide immediate notification of arrests made by either side, provide consular access to all persons within three months of arrest and release prisoners immediately after completion of sentence and nationality verification. They also agreed to release on 12th September, 2005 all fishermen and civilian prisoners who have completed their sentence and whose national status has been confirmed.

The Government of Pakistan have informed that it will be releasing 371 Indian fishermen and 64 Indian civil prisoners who are lodged in different jails of Pakistan. All these persons will be crossing the Wagah Border on the 12th of this month and will be sent to respective States¹.

210. Joint statement issued after talks between Pakistan President Pervez Musharraf and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly Session.

New York, September 14, 2005.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh² and President Pervez Musharraf met in New York on September 14, 2005 and reviewed progress in their relations since they last met in New Delhi on April 18, 2005. The two leaders referred to the earlier statements of January 6, 2004 and April 18,

1. The Pakistan Government too announced that it will release 371 Indian fishermen and 64 Indian civilian prisoners lodged in different jails in that country. They would cross the Wagah border on 12 September, 2005 and be sent to their respective states.
2. Three days before the above meeting in New York, Prime Minister told journalists accompanying him on board the special flight from New Delhi that he continued to "trust" the Pakistani leader and he believed that he could do "business" with the General. "I have not changed my views", he said. Asked about his Independence Day observations that Pakistan's efforts to curb terrorism in Jammu and Kashmir were "half hearted," the Prime Minister noted that Pakistan had taken "some steps" and it was "too early for me to say" (whether promises made have been kept). He repeated his earlier formulations that "we cannot change border but we can work to make borders irrelevant."

2005 and reiterated their pledge that they would not allow terrorism to impede the peace process.

They reaffirmed their commitment to the decisions taken at their meeting in New Delhi and agreed to expedite their implementation. They also welcomed the progress made within the framework of the composite dialogue, including promotion of trade and economic relations, people to people contacts and confidence building measures. They also welcomed the recent release of prisoners on both sides and agreed to continue this process on a humanitarian basis.

They expressed their commitment to ensure a peaceful settlement of all pending issues including Jammu and Kashmir to the satisfaction of both sides. They agreed that possible options for a peaceful, negotiated settlement in this regard should continue to be pursued in a sincere spirit and purposeful manner¹.

1. Foreign Secretary later told the journalists that the joint statement should not be seen as a setback to the peace process. "We are not in the business of event making," he cautioned. He said it was unrealistic to arouse "expectations of spectacular outcomes" every time the President of Pakistan and Prime Minister met. There cannot be break through every two months. "It is a process that must be deepened and this process had to contend with legacies and complications" accumulated over the decades. The talks according to Foreign Secretary were marked by "frankness and candour" but were conducted in "a spirit of taking the relationship forward." While underscoring that it was a "pleasant encounter" between President Musharraf and Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, he suggested that the Indian leader had done some plain-talking on the question of continued violence and terror in Jammu and Kashmir. Dr. Singh told Gen. Musharraf that he would need to "answer credibly to the people of India" whether or not the peace process was yielding results on the ground (in terms of terrorist activities). Dr. Singh suggested to the General that according to the Indian assessment there had been a "spurt" in the violence in June and July and that beyond these "ebbs and flows" a "trend" was yet to emerge that would enable India to reach a "conclusion" (that Pakistan had done enough to control terror). However, Saran pointed out that New Delhi's view was that though the two countries still had many differences, it would take a positive view of the latest round of Manmohan – Musharraf interaction as a contributory development that would deepen the composite dialogue process. "We look forward to the third round of the composite dialogue in January 2006" he said. The Prime Minister had told President Bush a day earlier that "our belief is that Pakistan still controls the flow of terror and they must stop it for any realistic progress."

211. Joint statement at the end of second round of India-Pakistan technical level talks for operationalisation of Amritsar-Lahore and Amritsar-Nankana Sahib bus services.

New Delhi, September 28, 2005.

2. The two sides finalised an agreement on the Lahore-Amritsar bus service. They also discussed the draft agreement / protocol and technical modalities for the Nankana Sahib –Amritsar bus service including issues such as designated routes, bus terminals and facilities for the bus crews. Both sides agreed to hold another round of technical level talks within one month to finalise the arrangements for starting the Nankana Sahib-Amritsar bus service at the earliest possible.

3. A trial run of the Lahore-Amritsar bus service by the operators of the two sides will take place in the second half of October¹ 2005 with a view to starting the regular bus service in the first half of November 2005.

4. The two sides also explored the possibility of travel by pilgrims from both countries to holy shrines in India and Pakistan including Ajmer Sharif.

1. The schedule of October could not be maintained because of earthquake in Pakistan. The trial run from Amritsar to Lahore took place on December 11, when a bus from the Indian part of the Punjab crossed over to the Pakistani side via the Wagah border check post. The bus service is named Punj – Aab (Five Rivers). The Pakistan side conducted its dry run on December 13 when a bus carrying eight officials from Lahore crossed into India through the Attari - Wagah joint check post. The regular bus service which was to start from Lahore on December 23 and from Amritsar on December 27 has been postponed to now start from Lahore on January 20, 2006 and from Amritsar on January 24, 2006. (See Document No. 248.)

213. Statement by Minister of External Affairs K. Natwar Singh on arrival in Islamabad.*Islamabad, October 2, 2005.

I am glad to visit Pakistan after eight months of my last visit in February 2005. I thank Kasuri Sahib for his kind invitation. This frequency of high level visits itself is reflective of the positive momentum of the bilateral relations between India and Pakistan. It is the overwhelming desire of the peoples in both our countries for friendly relations. Our Governments respond to these sentiments and work towards a positive outcome to our deliberations.

My visit to Pakistan is in the context of the review of the progress made in the 2nd round of the Composite Dialogue, which was done by the Foreign Secretaries of the two countries on 1 September 2005 in Islamabad. I am particularly happy to note that the Foreign Minister of Pakistan and I will also be presiding over the first meeting of the India-Pakistan Joint Commission to be held since 1989. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and President Musharraf met in New York on September 14 and reiterated their commitment to take the peace process forward. I am hopeful that this meeting will provide a further impetus to increasing cooperation between our two countries in areas of mutual interest.

I also look forward to my meetings with other leaders of Pakistan both in Islamabad and Karachi to impart greater momentum to our dialogue process and promote further exchanges.

214. Press statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh after the Joint Commission Meeting.

Islamabad, October 4, 2005.

Foreign Minister Kasuri and I have had two days of friendly, intensive and productive talks on all aspects of our bilateral relations. Yesterday, we conducted a comprehensive review of the second round of the Composite Dialogue. I agreed with Foreign Minister Kasuri that the second round of the Composite Dialogue achieved more positive results than the first round. We can expect an even more successful third round which will take place from January to July 2006.

2. This morning, I met President Musharraf and conveyed to him the greetings of our President and our Prime Minister. We both agreed that India-Pakistan relations had made significant progress since the current peace process began in January 2004. We reaffirmed our commitment not to permit terrorism to impede the peace process.

3. The Joint Commission met this morning after a hiatus of 16 years. We had a very useful discussion on how we could use the Joint Commission to further expand our bilateral cooperation. We have presented draft proposals to the Pakistani side on Visa Liberalisation, Consular Access and on expanding both the exchange of pilgrims and increasing the list of shrines on both sides. We have also handed over a draft Cultural Exchange Programme. We hope that these proposals will elicit a positive and early response from the Pakistani side.

4. We welcome the agreement we have reached to initiate technical level discussions to promote bilateral cooperation in a number of areas of mutual interest such as Agriculture, Health, Education, Science and Technology, Information, Environment and Tourism. Such cooperation will add greater substance to our relations both in the bilateral context as well as in the context of regional cooperation under SAARC. We have agreed that the next meeting of the Joint Commission which would be convened in 2006, would consider the reports of the various technical level interactions.

5. This afternoon, I will be meeting PM Shaukat Aziz and exchanging views with him on all aspects of our bilateral relations. I will leave for Karachi this evening for a day long visit. There will be an opportunity for me to call on the Governor of Sindh and meet the Chief Minister of the province. A meeting with the Federation of Pakistani Chamber of Commerce and Industry is being scheduled tomorrow. As you know, we plan to reopen our Consulates in Karachi and Mumbai respectively by January 2006 and my visit to Karachi will give me an opportunity to review the progress in the renovation of our Consulate premises.

6. The detailed results and outcomes of our meeting are laid out in a comprehensive manner in the Joint Press Statement. As is evident from the Joint Press Statement, this has been a substantive visit. I take this opportunity to thank my friend and counterpart, Foreign Minister Kasuri, for the gracious hospitality extended to me and my delegation during our stay in Islamabad.

215. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on call by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh on President Musharraf.

Islamabad, October 4, 2005.

- President Musharraf received EAM this morning in Rawalpindi.
- EAM conveyed to President Musharraf cordial greetings both of President and PM of India.
- These were reciprocated warmly. President Musharraf said that he was looking forward to visit of PM Manmohan Singh where a warm reception awaits him.

They agreed that there was a significant change in climate of relations with public opinion in both countries during the peace process which is reflected in the progress achieved in the second round of the composite dialogue and the decision to expand the areas of cooperation through the revived Joint Commission. President and EAM discussed Siachen and Sir Creek issues and welcomed the ongoing discussions at the diplomatic level on a framework to promote their settlement on a mutually acceptable basis. On J&K the two sides agreed to continue to address this issue in a sincere and purposeful manner. 216. Joint statement issued at the end of the visit of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh to Pakistan.

Islamabad, October 4, 2005.

The Foreign Minister of Pakistan, Mr. Khurshid M. Kasuri and the Indian External Affairs Minister, Shri K. Natwar Singh met in Islamabad on 3 October 2005 for a review meeting on the progress of the second round of the Composite Dialogue comprising Peace & Security including CBMs; Jammu & Kashmir; Siachen; Wullar Barrage/Tulbal Navigation Project; Sir Creek; Terrorism & Drug Trafficking; Economic & Commercial Cooperation and Promotion of Friendly Exchanges in various fields. The plenary meeting of the revived Pakistan-India Joint Commission was also held in Islamabad on 04 October 2005. The meeting was convened pursuant to the decision taken by President General Pervez Musharraf and Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in their Joint Statement issued on 18 April 2005. The talks were held in a cordial and constructive atmosphere.

2. The Ministers held detailed and substantive discussions on the whole range of issues within the framework of the Composite Dialogue process and expressed satisfaction over the progress in the Composite Dialogue since their last review meeting in September 2004. They recalled the outcome of the discussions between the President of Pakistan and Prime Minister of India reflected in the Joint Statements of 6 January 2004, 24 September 2004, 18 April 2005 and 14 September 2005. The Ministers reiterated that possible options for a peaceful, negotiated settlement of the issue of Jammu and Kashmir should be explored in a sincere, purposeful and forward-looking manner. The Ministers reaffirmed their determination not to allow terrorism to impede the peace process. They resolved to carry forward the peace process and to maintain its momentum.

3. The Ministers expressed satisfaction over developments that have taken place over the last one year, including the smooth operation of the Muzaffarabad-Srinagar bus service.

4. The two Ministers endorsed the recommendations made by the Foreign Secretaries as reflected in the Joint Statement of the 02 September 2005. It was agreed that Expert level meetings will be held by the end of this year to finalize modalities for the meeting points of the divided families across the LoC and to initiate a truck service on Muzaffarabad-Srinagar route.

5. The two Ministers:
 - a. welcomed the agreement to operationalize the Lahore-Amritsar bus service in November, 2005;
 - b. agreed that a meeting of experts would be held in Islamabad on 25-26 October, 2005 to start the Nankana Sahib-Amritsar bus service at an early date;
 - c. agreed that a meeting at the technical level would take place before the end of the year to discuss arrangements for operationalizing the Rawalakot-Poonch bus service as early as possible;
 - d. agreed that a technical level meeting would take place before December 2005 to discuss modalities for starting truck service on Muzaffarabad-Srinagar route for trade in permitted goods; and
 - e. welcomed the release of prisoners and fishermen by Pakistan and India. They agreed that the understanding reached between the Interior Secretaries on exchange of prisoners and fishermen would be implemented in letter and spirit including immediate notification of arrests by either side, consular access to all persons within three months of arrest, release of prisoners on completion of sentence and verification of national status, and early release of inadvertent crossers across the LoC. The Indian side handed over a draft of an agreement on consular access.
6. The two sides exchanged ideas on the Siachen issue and agreed to continue their discussions so as to arrive at a common understanding before commencement of the next round of the Composite Dialogue in January next year¹.

1. Speaking to journalists in Karachi the next day Minister Natwar Singh said "there is no deadline for Siachen, but we hope the talks will move forward." He said "on some issues there can be no hurry. On some others, there is speedy movement." On October 3 Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran briefing journalists in Islamabad after the talks had said that while so far there was no agreement between the two sides on the modalities for demilitarization of Siachen Glacier, efforts were on to find ways and means to promote progress on the subject. Saran recalled that during the April visit of President Musharraf to India both sides had agreed that Siachen and Sir Creek should be addressed on a "priority basis" and the quest by the two Foreign Secretaries towards resolution of the two was in line with the understanding. There is an agreement in principle by the two sides to move troops from the Siachen Glacier in accordance with the 1989 understanding. But there was no forward

7. The two sides also exchanged ideas on the Sir Creek issue, taking into account the joint survey of the horizontal section of the boundary in the area. Without prejudice to each other's position, they agreed to undertake a similar joint survey of the Sir Creek itself, and to consider options for the delimitation of their maritime boundary. They agreed that the joint survey should commence before the end of the year and its report will be considered in the next round of the Composite Dialogue. Ideas relating to the delimitation of the maritime boundary would also be addressed in the Composite Dialogue with a view to its early resolution.

8. The two Ministers reiterated their commitment to the Iran-Pakistan-India gas pipeline project¹ and agreed that this would contribute significantly to the prosperity and development of their countries.

9. The two Ministers also welcomed the signing of the following:

- a) Agreement on Pre-Notification of Flight Testing of Ballistic Missiles.
- b) Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on Establishment of a Communication Link between the Pakistan Maritime Security Agency and the Indian Coast Guards.

10. The Indian side presented drafts for consideration proposing amendments to the existing agreements on visa, visits to religious shrines and new proposals for a Cultural Exchange Programme. The two sides agreed to pursue these matters under the Composite Dialogue framework.

movement on this understanding due to difference on its interpretation. While insisted that withdrawal of troops would have to be preceded by certification of existing positions under the control of both sides, Pakistan argued that the demilitarization had to be unconditional. Meanwhile Chief of the Army Staff General J.J. Singh on October 21 told journalists that some sort of acceptance of present (troop) position was essential for the next step (of creating a demilitarized zone). "There should be some sort of documented acceptance of present position in whatever form. If there is an understanding of this requirement by the other side, progress can be made."

1. According to media reports the project also figured in the bilateral discussions between EAM and Pakistani Foreign Minister Khurshid Mahmud Kasuri as well as at Singh's meeting with Pakistani Prime Minister. In the course of the discussions India pointed out to the Pakistani leadership that it had recently appointed an expert to look into the 'economic viability' of the pipeline. It may be recalled that Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran in his press conference on October 3 had said that the Indian vote on the Iran resolution in Vienna had nothing to do with the pipeline project and the economic viability of the project would be the sole criterion for New Delhi in deciding on it.

11. The two sides reaffirmed their commitment to maintain the integrity of the Composite Dialogue.
12. The two Ministers expressed satisfaction at the revival of the Joint Commission and hoped that the Joint Commission would contribute significantly in strengthening the mutually beneficial relations and cooperation between the two countries. The two sides decided to restructure and streamline the work of the Joint Commission in the light of developments that have taken place since its last meeting in 1989.
13. In this context, the two sides had a meaningful and constructive exchange of ideas on restructuring the Joint Commission and subjects to be considered under its purview. The understandings reached would form the guidelines for the future work plan for the Joint Commission. The next meeting of the Joint Commission will be preceded by technical level working groups on Agriculture, Health, Science & Technology, Information, Education, I.T. & Telecommunication, Environment and Tourism.
14. The External Affairs Minister of India invited the Foreign Minister of Pakistan to visit India. The invitation was accepted and dates would be finalized through diplomatic channels.
15. The External Affairs Minister of India also paid courtesy calls on President General Pervez Musharraf and Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz.

219. Speech by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh at the Dinner hosted by the Chief Minister of Sindh.

Karachi, October 4, 2005.

Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to be in Karachi again after many years. I look upon its prominent landmarks with nostalgia and affection. Karachi is one of the great cities of our subcontinent and its history is inextricably linked with that of South Asia for the past 200 years. I am grateful to His Excellency the Chief Minister for the warm hospitality and the gracious welcome extended to me and my delegation today.

I was keen to visit Karachi, for in the coming months a landmark event in Indo-Pak history will take place. The reopening of the Consulates in Mumbai and Karachi will enable and facilitate an easier interaction and contact between the people of India and Pakistan.

As someone who has spent half a century in this business, I can say with some confidence that there is no better way to ease the bitterness of the past and lighten burden of history than people-to-people contact.

The city of Karachi is uniquely place to play a historic role in the endeavour to build Indo-Pakistan relations. The quality of its intellectual life, the mastery of its great artists, the industry of its people, all combine to give it that extra sheen or that special quality.

I believe however that Karachi is poised at the threshold of a great transformation as Pakistan emerges as the hub between South and South East Asia on the one hand and Central Asia and the Gulf on the other. The opening of the Khokhappar - Munnabao land route will enhance that hub status. I believe Karachi, with its long history as the captain of trade and industry in this region, is also uniquely place to act as the beachhead for stronger commercial and economic links between India and Pakistan.

Earlier in the day, I had fruitful meetings with the President and Prime Minister of Pakistan. Yesterday, I had intensive discussions with my counterpart Foreign Minister Kasuri. By comparison, my stay in Karachi will I hope be more relaxed and I look forward to getting a flavour of this city again.

Once again, may I say how very grateful I am to the Governor and Chief Minister for the graciousness and warmth of their welcome.

220. Address by External Affairs Minister K.Natwar Singh to the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce & Industry.

Karachi, October 5, 2005.

I am very glad to be present here this morning and interact with this distinguished gathering of the business community in Pakistan. I am grateful to the Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce & Industry for kindly providing the platform for this interaction.

2.. I have returned to Karachi after a gap of 23 years and it is with a feeling of affection and nostalgia that I see many of the prominent landmarks of this great City.

3.. As I take an overview of the economic and commercial relationship between India and Pakistan and the manner in which it has progressed in the past 18 months or so, there are numerous positive developments. Firstly, economic and commercial contacts between the two countries have rapidly grown in this period. This greater intensity to business-level contacts has encouraged thinking and discussion about joint ventures, technical collaborations, and better marketing strategies in either country. This is a most encouraging sign. Secondly, there has been excellent participation by business communities of both countries in trade fairs and exhibitions in the other country. Thirdly, there are rapid developments beyond conventional trading, and this is in the area of services – in particular tourism, IT, civil aviation, shipping services, medicine and tele-medicine and banking. Fourthly and finally, there have been developments, which inspire confidence that there is an emerging environment in which it would be possible to restructure the infrastructure of trade and economic cooperation. In this regard, I refer, in particular, to the small beginning which has been made with regard to direct trade through the Attari-Wagah border, the good possibilities which exist for such trade on the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad and the Khokrapar-Munabao routes, the interest which has been shown in the Mumbai-Karachi ferry service and the on going discussion on expanding the scope of the present civil aviation and shipping protocols between India and Pakistan.

4.. The points I have mentioned so far provide a bird's eye view of the present conjuncture of economic and commercial cooperation between India and Pakistan. There is a more general environment also to which I must refer. Both the Pakistani and Indian economies are in the midst of a major growth spurt. This provides a most favourable environment to conceive new concepts and ideas of how we can mutually benefit from existing complementarities between the two countries. Secondly, the regional institutional environment, particularly given the impetus, which has been provided by SAPTA and SAFTA, is also more commerce and business sensitive than perhaps, it has ever been. Finally, the current international environment has also provided further impetus to efforts in both India and Pakistan for expanding bilateral economic cooperation. In this context, I would refer, specifically, to the burden that increase in the price of hydrocarbons has placed on both our economies and the fact that we have, today, instruments, which would enable us to alleviate that burden by cooperation with third countries. Transnational pipelines, therefore, immediately come to mind and this is an area which is of immense significance to all of us.

5. Having sketched this general background let me come to specifics. There is a lot of scope for cooperation in many areas such as agriculture, chemicals, textile machinery, hydropower, drugs and pharmaceuticals, cotton industries, to name a few. For example, Pakistan can export cotton yarn, textile fabrics, surgical instruments, sports goods, electric fans and water coolers to India. We can even look at import of power from Pakistan if Pakistan has surplus power. India has recently offered liberalizing import of 116 tariff lines of interest to Pakistan in SAFTA. We are ready to look at non-tariff barriers within the ambit of the Joint Study Group. Similarly, India is in a position to fulfill Pakistan's annual demand of 100,000 units of vehicle tyres but the 46% import tariff on this item acts as a deterrent. We understand that there are certain industries, which need to be protected. We urge Pakistan to make a negative list of these and open the rest for regular trade or atleast open those items that she presently imports from elsewhere to Indian trade. This would go a long way in enhancing economic cooperation between the two countries.

6. I can, confidently assert that the business environment today is more favourable than it has ever been between India and Pakistan. This poses a challenge for those of us in Government and equally for the business community in both countries. I do believe that the role of Government should be to facilitate to the fullest extent possible contacts between the business communities of the two countries. In this spirit, we would welcome suggestions from businessmen in Pakistan on what we can do in specific and precise ways to advance cooperation between the two countries, turn our backs on the barriers and suspicions of the past and in some way endeavour to create and encourage the spirit of enterprise for businessmen in both the countries. Equally, there is a challenge for the business community of both countries. As I said, the environment, which exists today, because of a number of conjunctural forces and factors, is in many ways unique. It is for you to make full use of it. I am aware of the considerable increase in trade, which has already taken place in the last 12 months. This is a most encouraging sign since what, more than anything else, led to this spurt in our trade was only a more open visa regime than existed previously. Once we have better banking, airline, shipping and road transport linkages with each other, clearly, the results will be even more significant. It is our expectation that in the next few months there will be considerable advances in each of these specific sectors. We are on the threshold of a major expansion in people-to-people and business contacts. The re-opening of the Consulates General in Mumbai and Karachi reflects the desire of both Governments to facilitate the expansion of such contacts to the fullest extent possible.

7. Another important milestone will be the opening of Khokrapar-Munabao train route. These developments will facilitate cooperation between Western India and Southern Pakistan to a far greater extent than before. Karachi is poised at the threshold of a great expansion as Pakistan moves to harness its potential as a "hub country" as Foreign Minister Kasuri said at our talks in Islamabad. It is my belief that the expansion in trade and economic cooperation between India and Pakistan will lead Karachi to a even more successful and qualitatively new stage of its evolution as a trading and commercial capital of Asia and the World. The spirit of its citizens and the enterprise of its businessmen are well known to everyone in India. I hope that this spirit and enterprise are harnessed to the cause of expanding economic and commercial cooperation between India and Pakistan for the betterment of our whole region.

8. I expect that the citizens and the business community of Karachi will lead the way forward in building a new future for the people of India and Pakistan¹.

221. Statement by Official Spokesperson on a report in media about possible solution of Jammu and Kashmir.

New Delhi, October 7, 2005.

Government of India has seen the quoted remarks² of Makhdoom Syed Faisal Saleh Hayat, a Pakistan Government Minister concerning discussions taking place between India and Pakistan on Jammu & Kashmir. The Government wishes to clarify that there is no question of India accepting any change in the status of Jammu & Kashmir, which is and which will remain an integral part of India. There have been no discussions with Pakistan on changing, in any form whatsoever, the status of Jammu & Kashmir.

1. Interestingly, the External Affairs Minister's strong pleas for expanding commercial and economic contacts came against the backdrop of the Pakistani Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz's pleas of a day earlier that the Indian investors were not welcome unless the Kashmir issue was resolved.
 2. The Spokesperson Navtej Sarna was referring to the report in a New Delhi daily which quoted the Pakistani Minister for 'Kashmir Affairs' and Northern Areas, Makhdoom Syed Faisal Hayat to say that "joint control of both Kashmirs as a single entity and limited sovereignty are some of the options now under the active consideration of India and Pakistan as well as the All Parties Hurriyat Conference. He said that these solutions were being discussed along with other proposal such as the devolution system at different levels of government and civil society."

222. Message sent by Prime Minister to President Musharraf on the earthquake that struck Pakistan.

New Delhi, October 8, 2005.

We have been distressed to learn of the extensive loss of life and property that has taken place in Pakistan as a result of the severe earthquake which struck this morning. On behalf of the Government and people of India and my own personal behalf, please accept our sympathies and please convey our sincere condolences to those who have been bereaved as a result of this tragedy.

While parts of India have also suffered from this unexpected natural disaster, we are prepared to extend any assistance with rescue and relief which you may deem appropriate.

223. Message sent by External Affairs Minister to Foreign Minister of Pakistan on the earthquake that struck Pakistan.

New Delhi, October 8, 2005.

We were shocked to hear of the significant loss of life and damage to property that people of Pakistan have suffered as a result of the sudden earthquake, which struck both our countries and our region this morning. On behalf of the Government and people of India and my own personal behalf, I wish to convey our profound sympathy to all those who have lost their loved ones and those who have been injured in this grave natural disaster. Please do not hesitate to indicate to us in whatever way we can be of some assistance both for rescue and relief in the affected areas.

224. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on earthquake in certain parts of Pakistan and Pakistan-occupied Kashmir.

New Delhi, October 10, 2005.

Foreign Secretary : Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh received the Pakistani High Commissioner, Aziz Ahmad Khan, at 7 Race Course Road this evening.

Prime Minister asked the High Commissioner to convey to President Musharraf and to Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz the profound sympathies of the Government and people of India on the massive loss of lives and property suffered by the people of Pakistan in the recent earthquake. The people of India, he said, have been deeply moved by the images of destruction and human suffering that they have been witnessing on the Television in the past couple of days. Our hearts go out, he added, to the people of entire villages and communities which have been devastated by this natural disaster. He said, this was a great humanitarian crisis and we would like to help in whatever way we can to alleviate the sense of loss and suffering of the Pakistani people.

The High Commissioner said that Heads of Missions of friendly countries had been provided a list of essential materials which could be supplied on a priority basis. He said that any assistance from India in the form of such materials would be deeply appreciated. We understand that the items required include tents and plastic sheets, blankets and mattresses, food items and a variety of medicines and medical supplies.

The Prime Minister has directed that a consignment of these items should be put together on an urgent basis and delivered to Pakistan at the earliest. The concerned agencies are already at work in organizing an airlift of these items by tomorrow evening subject to clearances being obtained.

Question : Any rescue efforts from our side along the LoC? When I talked to someone in Uri today he said that Pakistanis cannot reach those areas while it would be very easy for us to reach. Is there any suggestion like this?

Foreign Secretary : Yes, we have in fact conveyed to the Pakistani side that there are, as you say, certain areas along the LoC which may be easier to access from the Indian side. What we have said is that if they can tell us the locations of these areas where they would like us to provide relief supplies across the LoC, and even perhaps send across foot patrols of medical personnel, we would be very happy to mobilize that. This has been noted by the Pakistani side. If there is any requirement, they will certainly come back to us. What I can tell you is that there is a very good atmosphere of mutual help at the LoC itself and very good understanding. We are told that normally helicopter sorties do not go very close to the LoC. But, in fact on both sides since the areas which have been devastated by the earthquake are very close to the LoC, we are allowing Pakistani helicopters to come right up to the LoC. I am very happy to say that the same thing is being done from (to) our side because we also need to reach some of our own villages which are at the LoC itself. So, the atmosphere is very good.

Question : Any specific numbers that we have decided (for relief supplies)?

Foreign Secretary : That is being put together. We will probably have a transport aircraft which takes about 25 tonnes of relief supplies. So, things like blankets, mattresses, there would be a fairly large consignment of medicines. These are in the process of being put together. We hope, by tomorrow afternoon we should have one plane load which should be ready for airlift.

Question : Why did not we announce unilaterally monetary aid for Pakistan and what is the amount of the consignment that is being sent?

Foreign Secretary : I cannot tell you what the monetary amount is. As I said, the first consignment, which we are putting together, would be about a plane load, which is about 25 tonnes. What exactly is the monetary value, I am afraid I will have to find out from our agencies and let you know later.

Question : What I was asking was why did not we announce some monetary aid for Pakistan unilaterally when many countries have announced monetary help.

Foreign Secretary : Prime Minister had already in his conversation with President Musharraf said that in whatever form assistance is required by Pakistan, we would be very happy to provide. Since we now have a list of specific items which have been indicated by Pakistan, and these specific items are available with us for immediate delivery, I think that is the best way of responding to the needs of the Pakistani people at this stage.

Question : What is the feedback that the High Commissioner gave Prime Minister? If the consignment goes tomorrow, will it be the first ever since 1971?

Foreign Secretary : I should think so. But you are asking me a history question which I am not fully familiar with. I think I could fairly confidently say that this would be the first time.

Question : What is the feedback?

Foreign Secretary : At the meeting itself what High Commissioner conveyed to Prime Minister was that both President Musharraf and Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz were very deeply appreciative of the message of sympathy and solidarity which had been conveyed by the Prime Minister and also the offer for assistance that would be required by Pakistan. In that context he drew attention to the fact that just an hour or so before the meeting took place this evening that a meeting had been called by the Pakistani Foreign Secretary of Heads of Missions of various friendly countries where a list of items had been provided where relief supplies would be welcome by Pakistan. So, it is on that basis that immediately after the meeting and on Prime Minister's instructions we have been working to organize the airlift as quickly as possible.

Question : Where would it be airlifted to? Islamabad or ...

Foreign Secretary : We have asked the Pakistani side where they would like the aircraft to land.

Question : Have they indicated anything?

Foreign Secretary : Not yet.

Question : You mentioned that the atmosphere is really good. Do you see any chance of a joint relief operation?

Foreign Secretary : I do not see any indication yet that there could be joint operations. But, as I mentioned to you, there are certain points along the LoC which are more easily accessible from the Indian side. So, if those particular points are indicated to us by our Pakistani friends where they would like us to send relief material across or even some medical help, we are geared to provide that.

Question: What about doctors and paramedical staff?

Foreign Secretary : As I mentioned to you, we have indicated that along the LoC if there are any points which are not so accessible from the Pakistani side, we have the wherewithal to provide that kind of medical assistance from our side. I would also like to mention that in Islamabad the meeting which was held with the Heads of Missions, the Pakistani side also indicated that they do not any more wish to have relief teams or medical teams coming to Pakistan because they have sufficient number of them.

Question : The heaviest damage took place in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir, particularly in Muzaffarabad. Is there any indication from Pakistan that they want some assistance there from India?

Foreign Secretary: No, there is no such indication.

225. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on relief supplies to Pakistan in the aftermath of the recent earthquake.

New Delhi, October 14, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening. I just wanted to bring you up-to-date on the relief assistance which has now been sent in two consignments to Pakistan. As you know since the earthquake in Pakistan and in PoK on 8th of October, the Government of India has been in constant touch with the Government of Pakistan.

As you know Prime Minister had spoken to President Musharraf. External Affairs Minister had spoken to his counterpart. The offers of aid were conveyed the same day. The first consignment was sent on October 10 by air. The details of that consignment you have already reported upon so I would not go into that. The second consignment left for Pakistan today by train. The train includes four wagons on the Samjhauta Express route. This consists of 68 tonnes of relief material which is made up of 5000 blankets, 320 tents and 4.5 tonnes of plastic sheets. This train is expected to reach Attari by 8 pm tonight and thereafter will proceed to Lahore tomorrow morning.

Basically, we decided this time that the second consignment should be sent by train and not by air in view of the higher haulage capacity of the train and also not to add the overcrowding at Islamabad airport where International relief traffic is very high.

We also propose to send another consignment of medicines, tents, fortified biscuits and so on and this is expected to go soon. We have also decided to permit relief material being sent by private organizations and international NGOs to Pakistan.

India's gesture has been widely welcomed in Pakistan and this is obvious from the press reports in Pakistan. Our High Commission is also in constant touch with the Pakistani Authorities to enquire about the welfare of the Indian citizens who had travelled by the Srinagar – Muzaffarabad bus and had been trapped there. Five of the Indian citizens who were in this position have now returned to India and two others are getting medical treatment in Islamabad. Two more are expected to return soon.

Question: This relief material which can be sent by private organizations and that you mentioned can go through the Wagah Border?

Answer: That is the indication.

Question: Will India allow international aircraft to land in its...

Answer: We have not seen any such requests but if they are they will be considered

Question: Is the PM going to Pakistan?

Answer: I think you will have to address that question to Prime Minister Office. I have no input.

Question: Does anybody from the government want to go to Pakistan?

Answer: I do not have anything to report on that as of today.

Question: There were a couple of meetings that were to be held in Islamabad ahead of the SAARC Summit. Is there any..?

Answer: The SAARC Summit is still a month away. So, we will come to that. I have no information of any cancellations or changes or postponements.

Question: There was a report that the trial run of the Amritsar and Lahore bus service that was to take place tomorrow has been postponed. Anything on that?

Answer: I will check up on that.

Later the Official Spokesperson added:

The trial run of the Amritsar-Lahore bus that was scheduled for tomorrow has been postponed. Fresh dates would be worked out. The technical-level talks that were scheduled to be held on 25th and 26th October for Amritsar–Nankana Sahib Service have also been postponed.

226. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question on a news report regarding earthquake relief work.

New Delhi, October 15, 2005.

In response to a question the Official Spokesperson said:

We have seen a news report that India is delaying action on a request by Pakistan to cross over the LOC so as to have access for relief work.

It is clarified that we have received no such request from Pakistan. (However) we have received a request from Pakistan on October 13 to fly helicopters in the peacetime no-fly zone (one kilometer along the LOC). We are conveying our agreement today to this request provided permission is taken on a case-by-case basis¹.

1. On the 16th October Home Minister Shivraj Patil speaking to presspersons on the occasion of the Raising Day function of the National Security Guards at Manesar clarified that the decision to allow Pakistani helicopters in the “peacetime no-fly zone” must be seen as a humanitarian gesture. He said the countries should help each other during such crisis. Whatever the Indian defence forces did to help their Pakistani counterparts in the quake-affected areas was on a humanitarian basis. There was no cause for security concern. The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi confirmed in New Delhi the same evening (15-10-05) that it had received the written permission of the Government of India to fly helicopters in the peacetime ‘no-fly zone’.

227. Statement by Official Spokesperson on telephone conversation between Foreign Secretaries of India and Pakistan on earthquake relief work.

New Delhi, October 17, 2005.

Foreign Secretary of Pakistan called Foreign Secretary Shri Shyam Saran this evening to convey that Pakistan would be willing to receive helicopters from India for relief work but without Indian pilots and crews. In his reply Foreign Secretary Shri Shyam Saran conveyed to his Pakistani counterpart that it would not be possible for India to provide helicopters, which are in service with its armed forces without pilots and crews.

Foreign Secretary reiterated our willingness to undertake relief work in villages close to the LOC on the other side as they are more accessible from our side. Concerning helicopter sorties being flown by Pakistani side to points close to the LOC, Foreign Secretary conveyed that these can be undertaken but information concerning the proposed sorties should be communicated as early as possible to the DGMO on the Indian side.

228. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on news reports about President Musharraf's remarks on freer movement across the Line of Control.

New Delhi, October 18, 2005.

- We have seen news reports about President Musharraf's remarks¹.
- If these news reports are correct, we welcome the offer that has been made. This is in line with India's advocacy of greater movement across the LOC for relief work and closer people-to-people contacts.

1. The Official Spokesperson was reacting to the announcement made by President Musharraf on October 18 on the opening of the Line of Control to allow people to assist in the reconstruction of quake-ravaged Pakistan-occupied Kashmir. He said in Muzaffarabad that Islamabad could consider with India's consent opening of routes other than Muzaffarabad-Srinagar to enable people from across the LoC to cross over and participate in the relief and reconstruction effort. He however clarified to journalists that "not formal proposal had been

- India is willing to facilitate such movements but we await word from Pakistan about the practical details of implementing this intention.

229. Statement by Official Spokesperson on Telecom Facilitation Centres at Srinagar, Jammu, Uri and Tangdhar.

New Delhi, October 18, 2005.

In order to assist families in Jammu and Kashmir to contact their relatives and family members on the other side of the Line of Control, Department of Telecommunications will be setting up four Telecom Facilitation Centres at Srinagar, Jammu, Uri and Tangdhar respectively. These Centres will permit people in J&K, who have relatives in Muzaffarabad, to contact them on telephone, free of charge, for the next fortnight. This facility is being provided as a special case, on the directions of Prime Minister. The Centres are expected to be operational by October 19, 2005.

In Srinagar and Jammu, the Centre will be located near the Police Control Room, while in Uri and Tangdhar, they will be located adjacent to the Police Outpost. Those wishing to avail of this facility may please contact the Facilitation Centres for assistance.

made to New Delhi. It is being put across through you. The modalities of this need to be worked out...and we expect a response from the Indian side." It may be recalled that when quake hit most parts of Pakistan-occupied Kashmir, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh had called Pakistani President and offered assistance. Media quoted Indian officials in South Block to say that there was nothing "to react" as India was still awaiting the proposal made by Pakistani President in Muzaffarabad. On Monday October 17 the External Affairs Minister had reminded people that natural disaster had in fact brought home "to us in a most dramatic fashion how lines drawn upon the map mean so little when tragedy strikes." Mr. Singh stressed on the need to build on this "spirit of humanity and natural affinity", which bound the people of the two countries. The Minister's remarks came in a message on the occasion of the launch of a book on Pakistan. He said there had been a remarkable transformation in the public mood in both the countries witnessed in the outpouring of spontaneous sympathy and sense of solidarity between the peoples in the wake of the recent earthquake. On October 21 Chief of the Army Staff Gen. J.J. Singh told journalists that the army was ready to implement any decision of the Government on Pakistan's offer of free movement of Kashmiris across the Line of Control for earthquake relief. "The army has given its recommendations to the Government, and based on the response from the other side we are ready to implement whatever the Government decides," the General said.

It may be noted that telephone links with Pakistan and areas in PoK are already available in Jammu and Kashmir through the booking of regular trunk calls through the exchange.

230. Briefing points by Official Spokesperson on telecom links in earthquake affected areas.

New Delhi, October 19, 2005.

- India conveyed its readiness to assist in restoration of disrupted telecom infrastructure in areas affected by earthquake. Pakistan Foreign Office said that it was grateful for the offer and would revert to us if any specific assistance was required. It said that 40% of the telecom infrastructure disrupted had been restored. Problems which remain were of smaller branch lines which had broken. It also said that mobile/cellular phone companies had been given permission to operate in the area and these facilities were being set up.
- We had received a Note Verbale from Pakistan wanting to establish mobile telephone linkages across LOC. We have conveyed that communication linkages already exist through international satellite and sea cable networks. If Pakistan would like to establish direct optical fibre communication this could be best done at Attari-Wagah where the optical fibres of both countries are nearest.

231. Response of Official Spokesperson to questions on news reports from Pakistan that India has rejected its offer for movement across LOC.

New Delhi, October 20, 2005.

In response to questions the Official Spokesperson said:

We have seen news reports quoting the Pakistani Federal Relief Commissioner that India has rejected Pakistan's offer for movement across LOC. This is entirely baseless.

We had welcomed President Musharraf's offer but had said that we await suggestions for practical implementation of the offer. We have had no follow-up from the Pakistani side so far.¹

232. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on setting up relief points at the Line of Control in Kashmir.

New Delhi, October 22, 2005.

Government has decided to set up composite relief and rehabilitation points at three places²: Kaman (near Aman Setu in Uri), Tithwal (Tangdhar) and Chakan da Bagh (Poonch), to provide facilities for medical assistance and relief to people from across the Line of Control. Arrangement is being made for providing relief material, medical aid, food, drinking water and temporary accommodation at these points. We expect that these centres will become operational from 25th of October. People from across the LoC will be permitted to come to these points after necessary screening during daylight hours and return after receiving medical treatment and relief.

1. On October 25 the Home Minister Shivraj Patil said in Shimla "Irrespective of the expected terrorist infiltration at certain points on the Line of Control, India has no reservations about opening it on humanitarian grounds after the recent earthquake." Patil said that though all care would be taken for stopping terrorists, the country could not back out from the compassionate gesture that was required now.
 2. Meanwhile Pakistan gave India a fresh proposal for five crossing points at the LoC in order to facilitate relief and rehabilitation work in earthquake-affected areas. The Spokesman reacting said: "we will be examining these proposals carefully and expeditiously. It appears

Also, Indian nationals will be able to go to these points for meeting their relatives who may be coming from across the LoC.

So, this is the new development. This has been conveyed to Pakistan both here and in Islamabad and now we will await their response before going ahead with the implementation of setting up of these relief centres.

I may also use this opportunity to give you an update on the total relief assistance from India to Pakistan as on October 22 i.e. today. Medicines - 22 tonnes from official sources and from private sources as per the reports we have received 60 tonnes; Blankets - 16,550 from official sources and 88,000 from private sources; Tents - 620 from official sources and 20,000 from private sources; Quilts/Mattresses - 35,000 from private sources; Plastic sheets - 14 tonnes from official sources and 14 tonnes from private sources; Fortified biscuits - 100 tonnes from official sources; and in addition there have been a few hundred cartons of assorted items like pulses, rice, sugar and tea.

Question: Has this material been already delivered to Pakistan?

Answer: Yes.

Question: Is this unilateral? How do we convey it to them?

Answer: I just said that this has been conveyed to Pakistan both in Delhi and Islamabad. We will await their response and then set up the relief centres. How can we have a unilateral decision for getting people from POK across to India? Naturally, Pakistan has to agree. Setting up of the relief centers is our effort but it can only be implemented if we get a response that yes, people will be allowed to come across.

Question: So, is this expressly to reach out to people across the LoC?

Answer: Naturally, if you recall it follows from our original proposal of opening to us that the proposals made by Pakistan can be reconciled with those that we ourselves had already made. As recommended by Pakistan, we are ready to engage in discussions between our two Foreign Offices on these modalities and reach an early decision. In the meantime, we are prepared to consider dispatch of relief materials and supplies to the quake affected areas through the three points we have designated and which match some of the points that Pakistan has indicated. We will discuss these arrangements with Pakistan as well." On October 26 Prime Minister Manmohan Singh when asked by journalists in New Delhi about possible delay on our side, said that "the delay is not on our side," in opening relief-cum-medical camps close to the Line of Control.

up of five points for meetings between divided families. These are three of those points which have special significance, given the fact of the earthquake and have been now set up as relief points and also as points of meeting of divided families, if this goes through.

Question: ...inaudible...(on relief assistance from India to Pakistan)...in respect of these three points have you been able to speak to your Pakistani counterparts. Has Delhi been able to see if these three points are acceptable to the Pakistani side?

Answer: As you have been following the progress of our relief assistance since the earthquake. It has been progressing in stages. Immediately we had said that whatever assistance is required... we had waited for an indication as to what kind of assistance was acceptable. Then the train consignments and the plane consignment had been sent. Now, this is another proposal for putting into effect the policy of greater movement across the LoC so you have people-to-people contacts and finding ways and means, which are acceptable for giving relief to the earthquake affected people. We have made this proposal. This has been conveyed to Pakistan and we are ready to have it operational by October 25th. Naturally, it would depend upon the response from Pakistan.

Question: People who would be coming for medical assistance, they cannot stay overnight?

Answer: That is the idea that they will get relief and assistance and they would go back. There would be crossover during daylight hours. This is not specified here as to when they will go back. Naturally, they would go back after they have received medical relief assistance. {Later, the Spokesperson clarified that they can stay overnight.}

Question: Screening will also include documentation?

Answer: There would be appropriate screening to show that people who are coming across are those who are genuinely affected by the earthquake and genuine residents of that area.

Question: Just a clarification, they would not necessarily go back on the same day?

Answer: From the brief that I have it seems that they should come during daylight hours and naturally they would go back after receiving treatment and relief. If that happens the same day they would go back the same day. If there are cases which would require longer stay we would have to see how arrangements can be made for that.

Question: Defence Ministry is on record saying that Pakistan does not seem to be ... on its proposal of across the border cooperation. Does MEA have anything to say on that?

Answer: I do not think you should see this as a Defence Ministry or MEA thing. Government of India has welcomed President Musharraf's proposal for greater movement across the LoC, for movement of civilians. We had welcomed it immediately. We have said that we are waiting for practical suggestions for implementing that proposal. That is a proposal, which has been in line with our policy of closer people-to-people contact across the LoC. This is a follow up from our side. This is a continuous development of the policy of suggestions to see how we can quickly reach out to the earthquake affected people. Naturally, this can only happen with the agreement of both Governments.

Question: India has said that it is waiting for a formal proposal from Pakistan. Have you received that?

Answer: No.

Question: What would be the criteria for checking of the papers of...

Answer: These are details, which will be worked out. This is a proposal, which has just been made today. Let us see what the response is. You have to keep your eye on the ball here. The issue here is that there are lots of people who have been affected badly by the earthquake who need relief and assistance, who need medical assistance. This is a proposal aimed to alleviate their suffering.

Question: Are these three places easily accessible from across the border?

Answer: These are places, which were earlier proposed as points for (meeting of) divided families. These are places, which have been chosen for access and their proximity to the area of impact of the earthquake.

Question: Only Kashmiris will be allowed...

Answer: I have said those people who have been affected by the earthquake who are obviously residents of that area.

Question: By 25th of October these will be ready?

Answer: Yes, they are set to be ready and operational by 25th but we would await for response from the Pakistani side.

Question: Musharraf said that only Kashmiris would be allowed to cross over so is this an advance...

Answer: This is not anybody crossing over from the Indian side. Maybe you have not got the impact of what I am saying. I am saying these are people coming from across the LoC to our medical (camps). Indian nationals can go there to meet members of divided families. This proposal is to set up relief camps on the Indian side of the LoC.

Question: You have conveyed this decision despite Pakistan not yet giving a firm proposal?

Answer: I think I am not being able to make myself clear. Pakistan has made a general proposal. We have welcomed it and asked for practical implementation. We have made a specific proposal regarding setting up relief centres. This cannot become operational unless Pakistan also responds.

Question: Do the figures given by you for private relief assistance also include ICRC contributions?

Answer: Private sources as reported by private entities.

Question: ICRC has sent a huge consignment. Is it included in the private aid?

Answer: That is international aid. I am talking of Indian private entities.

Question: About the documentation, it needs to be clarified...(inaudible)...

Answer: Naturally, the real situation on the ground will definitely be taken into consideration. The aim, as I said, is from a humanitarian impulse to extend humanitarian aid.

(Later the Official Spokesperson added that “those NGOs and other Indian relief organizations who want to send relief material to Pakistan are advised to first contact the Pakistan High Commission for clearance. After that they may contact Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iran Division of Ministry of External Affairs. This Division would then facilitate customs clearance and other formalities for transportation of these goods across the Attari-Wagah border.”)

233. Statement by Official Spokesperson on the situation in Gilgit and Baltistan.

New Delhi, October 25, 2005.

Question: There is a curfew in Gilgit and there are reports that Pakistani forces are acting against the local population. Any comment on that?

Answer: Yes, we have noted with concern reports in the Pakistan media about a curfew being imposed in Gilgit and action taken by Pakistani forces against the people in that region. There is a history of sectarian conflict in Gilgit and Baltistan regions of Jammu and Kashmir and of severe repressive measures being taken against legitimate protests and demonstrations. We hope that Pakistani forces will act with utmost restraint and observe international human rights standards. We will keep the situation under close watch¹.

1. This was one of the few occasions when India had spoken out on what it believed was an issue of human rights on the Pakistani side of the LoC. In the “clashes” between the Pakistani forces and Shia students at least 10 persons including two security personnel were killed. According to media reports as people of Pakistan occupied Kashmir grappled with the tragedy caused by the earthquake, Gilgit was reeling under sectarian trouble. The area, which was under curfew was given relaxation for eight hours on October 24 following some improvement in the situation. The curfew was eased 11 days after tension gripped the town in the wake of the clashes between the security forces and students on October 13. The media reports said that the security forces had set up pickets to monitor the situation. There was a cautious movement in traffic as people came out to buy daily necessities. Gilgit had witnessed several incidents of sectarian violence since the beginning of 2005. In June three persons were killed in the town as security forces opened fire on a vehicle violating curfew.

234. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the offer of assistance by the Government of India to Pakistan for relief and rehabilitation of earthquake victims.

New Delhi, October 27, 2005.

I would like to announce that the Government of India has offered an assistance of USD 25 million to Pakistan for relief and rehabilitation of earthquake victims. This was announced by Shri Oscar Fernandes, Minister of State for Statistics and Programme implementation who represented India in a meeting for earthquake relief to Pakistan organized by the UN Office of the Coordinator for Humanitarian Affairs at Geneva. The Government of Pakistan would be welcome to use this contribution for rebuilding homes and rehabilitating people, reconstructing the infrastructure and restoring essential services. It may also procure supplies of building material such as cement, steel and other items from India. The Indian technology for prefabricated earthquake resistant shelters will be also be made available for Pakistan.

235. Joint statement issued at the end of official talks on the opening of crossing points on the Line of Control.

Islamabad, October 29, 2005.

The delegations of Pakistan and India met on 29 October 2005, to discuss the proposal made by the President of Pakistan in the wake of the earthquake of 8 October 2005 regarding the opening of crossing points across the LoC. The Pakistan delegation was headed by Syed Ibne Abbas, Director General (South Asia), Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The Indian delegation was led by Mr. Dilip Sinha, Joint Secretary (PAI), Ministry of External Affairs. The meeting was held in a cordial and constructive atmosphere.

2. The Pakistan side expressed its appreciation for the assistance provided by India for the earthquake victims.
3. The two sides agreed to open crossings at five points across the LoC which are listed below:

- Nauseri-Tithwal
- Chakoti-Uri
- Hajipir-Uri
- Rawalakot-Poonch
- Tattapani-Mendhar

4. It was agreed that because of non-availability of or damage to infrastructure on these points, crossings across the LoC would be permitted on foot. The parameters and procedures as already agreed upon between the two sides being used for the Muzaffarabad-Srinagar bus service would be used for the above additional crossings and both will endeavour to expedite the clearance process preferably within ten days. It was further agreed that priority for crossings would be accorded to members of divided families on either side of LoC.

5. For relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction purposes, it was agreed that with prior information and acceptance and depending on feasibility, relief items can be sent in either direction and handed-over to local authorities on the aforementioned crossing points.

6. The two sides agreed on operationalization of the arrangements on 7 November 2005 as a humanitarian measure¹.

1. The agreement to open five points on the Line of Control (LOC) in order to provide relief and medical assistance to quake victims was widely acclaimed in J & K as a genuine humanitarian gesture by the two countries. "It is a good step" said Hurriyat leader Mirwaiz Umar Farooq. Ms. Mehbooba Mufti, Chairperson of the ruling People's Democratic Party said such steps were imperative for taking the process of restoration of peace and reconciliation forward. "I am very happy that it is happening. It was very much needed," she said adding "this is the beginning. We'll have to go a long way before the dream of oneness, harmony and affinity is translated into reality." On November 5, the Spokesperson Sarna told a media briefing that the necessary work to operationalize the five points was under way. He said that the crossing point at Chakan da Bagh (Poonch) would be operationalized on November 7, at Kaman (Uri) on November 9 and Tithwal (Tangdhar) on November 10, 2005. He clarified that due to non-availability or damage to infrastructure at the above crossing points, crossing would be permitted on foot.

236. Telephonic conversation between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Pakistan President General Musharraf.

New Delhi, October 31, 2005.

The Prime Minister received a phone call from General Musharraf this evening. The Pakistan President offered condolences for those who lost their lives in the terrorist bombings¹ in Delhi on October 29 and the railway accident in Andhra Pradesh. The Prime Minister told the President of Pakistan that the country was outraged at these heinous acts of terrorism. Violence against defenceless civilians can never be justified the Prime Minister said, and terrorism would never weaken India's resolve, or our commitment to the country's unity and territorial integrity. The Prime Minister again drew the President's attention to Pakistan's commitment to ending cross- border terrorism and said that we continue to be disturbed and dismayed at indications of the external linkages of terrorist groups with the October 29 bombing, and said India expects Pakistan to act against terrorism directed at India.²

237. Response of Official Spokesperson to questions on an incident involving a Pakistani diplomat.

New Delhi, November 3, 2005.

In response to questions on an incident involving a Pakistani diplomat on October 30, 2005 the Official Spokesperson said:

On 30 October at 2200 hours, Mohd Nadeem, the domestic help of Mr. Moazzam Ahmad Khan, Counsellor, Pakistan High Commission went shopping at Sunday Bazar, Sector 7, R.K.Puram. He gave a thousand rupee note to a chhole-bhature vendor who wanted to make sure that it were

1. On October 29 on the eve of an important Indian festival of Deepavali in a series of bomb blasts in crowded market places and in a public transport bus, atleast seventy persons were killed.
2. Similar messages of sympathy and condolences were also received by the External Affairs Minister from Pakistani Foreign Minister and Foreign Ministers of many other countries including Foreign Secretary Jack Straw and Foreign Ministers of South Africa and Canada.

genuine. At this, Mohd. Nadeem vociferously stated that he was from Pakistan High Commission and that the note was genuine. His statement that he was a Pakistani attracted the attention of passers-by and neighbouring vendors and a crowd collected, this being just a day after serial blasts. A police patrol party also reached the scene.

Nadeem introduced himself to the police as a driver of the Pakistan High Commission but could not produce any identity papers. The police then called Mr. Moazzam Ahmad Khan who came but also did not produce any identity papers either for himself or for his domestic help. The police requested Mr. Moazzam Ahmad Khan to get his identity papers and meanwhile took Mohd. Nadeem to the police station at Sector 12, RK Puram.

At 2300 hours, Mr. Moazzam Ahmad Khan returned with his and his domestic help's ID cards. He was allowed to take Mr. Mohd. Nadeem with him. The police officers behaved courteously with both Pakistani diplomat and his domestic help. Before leaving, Mr. Moazzam Ahmad Khan thanked the SHO for his cooperation¹.

238. Press release of the Ministry of External Affairs announcing Government of India's sanction for free medical treatment of 20 Pakistani child-patients.

New Delhi, November 3, 2005.

Government of India has sanctioned free medical treatment of another batch of 20 Pakistani children-patients. This will bring the total number of Pakistani children receiving free treatment in India to 60. This scheme is being implemented through our High Commission in Islamabad. It has enabled needy and seriously ill children in Pakistan to get quality medical treatment free of cost in India. Under this scheme, Government pays the air fare and accommodation for the child and one guardian. Of these, 48 children were heart patients who were treated at Narayana Hrudayalaya Hospital, Bangalore and Escorts Hospital, New Delhi.

239. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on reports of large numbers of people trying to reach the Indian relief camp at Poonch in Jammu and Kashmir for relief supplies.

New Delhi, November 7, 2005.

In response to questions on reports of large numbers of people trying to reach the Indian relief camp at Poonch the Official Spokesperson said:

We have seen reports of large numbers of people trying to reach the Indian relief camp at Poonch, after the crossing point at the LOC was opened this morning at Chakan da Bagh.¹ The Pakistan authorities reportedly had to use force to prevent them from crossing the LOC. We understand the sentiments of the people who had gathered at the LOC and their desire to meet their relatives and avail of or offer relief to one another. The Government of India has already declared its willingness to facilitate meetings of divided families at the 5 designated point at the LOC.

It may be recalled that India and Pakistan had agreed, on October 29, 2005, for 5 crossing points to be operationalised along the LOC and using the same procedures as are applicable for the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus service.

1. This was the first point along the Line of Control in Jammu and Kashmir for earthquake relief. As many as 25 truck loads of rice and other eatables and medicines besides three thousand tents and an equal number of tarpaulins had arrived at Chakana da Bagh for distribution among the quake survivors in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir. The second point on the LoC opened on November 9. A field hospital was also set up at this point.

240. Press statement regarding alleged abduction of a dependent of an official of Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi.

New Delhi, November 9, 2005.

At noon today Pakistan High Commission lodged a protest with this Ministry alleging the abduction of Mr. Roshan Ali, the son of a staff member of the Pakistan High Commission, Mr. Ashgar Ali. At the same time Pakistan Foreign Office also summoned India's Acting High Commissioner in Islamabad and lodged a similar protest. According to Pakistan High Commission the details of this incident are as follows:

Mr. Roshan Ali, a student of NIIT, South Extension "was abducted by some unknown people travelling in a vehicle as soon as he left the NIIT around 1715 hours on November 8, 2005. His abductors put a mask on his face rendering him unconscious. When he regained his consciousness, he found himself blind-folded in a room. On his shouting aloud after regaining consciousness one masked person entered the room, removed his blind and took him to an adjacent room where two other masked persons were already present. According to the boy, three dead-bodies with fresh blood on their clothes were lying on the ground in this room. As soon as Roshan Ali entered the room, his abductors smeared blood from the dead bodies on his hands and forced him to hold a large knife in his hands. His tormentors then took his photographs in different poses with the dead-bodies

"After the photographic session, Roshan Ali was again blind-folded and ear-plugs placed in his ears to impair his hearing. The abductors then drove him in the vehicle for a long time before throwing him on the road side near India Gate in the wee hours of November 9, 2005. The boy's school bag, pocket money, wrist watch and college identity card bearing photograph with High Commission address were retained by abductors.

"Before pushing him out of the vehicle, the abductors also stuffed a hand-written letter in Hindi in Roshan Ali's front pocket. The letter is couched in an extremely threatening language warning that he should be sent out of Delhi within five days otherwise he would be eliminated.

The letter openly professes that the abductors were in possession of Roshan Ali's photographs which can lead him to gallows. It is an obvious reference to the photographs taken with the dead bodies under duress and sedation."

According to Pakistan High Commission Mr. Roshan Ali returned to the Mission at 0230 hours in the morning "in a dazed and tramautized state".

Pakistan High Commission also informed Chanakyapuri Police Station of the missing boy around midnight and faxed note verbale to MEA at 0321 hrs.

The Police Station immediately launched a search for the boy and alerted mobile police vans and made enquiries at hospitals. Today the matter was investigated by the police, which has discovered that the note in Hindi alleged to have been stuffed in Roshan Ali's pocket was actually written the same day at NIIT by his colleague, an Indian student Rahul Sharma. Rahul Sharma has acknowledged that he wrote the note at Roshan Ali's request and as dictated by him. According to Rahul Sharma, Roshan Ali said that he would use the note to scare some of his Pakistani friends. Rahul Sharma also stated that he accompanied Roshan Ali from NIIT to the South Extension Part I subway where they parted ways.

Police investigation also reveals that there was no report of any incident of the kind alleged by Roshan Ali outside NIIT around 1715 hours on 8 November. This is a crowded area where an incident of this kind is unlikely to go unnoticed.

It is also surprising that Pakistan High Commission faxed a note verbale to the Ministry at 0321 hrs on 9 November stating that Roshan Ali was still to return when according to their own admission, he had reached the Mission at 0230 hrs.

PTV also carried a report on the alleged abduction early morning on 9 November stating that Pakistan had lodged a protest. The protest was actually lodged some hours later.

Rahul Sharma's statement and the absence of any corroborative report on the alleged abduction clearly establishes that Roshan Ali's story is fabricated. The rush to publicise the allegation in the media in Pakistan is an unfortunate attempt to sensationalise it without proper investigation.

The matter is being further investigated by the police which has requested Pakistan High Commission for interrogating Mr. Roshan Ali.

241. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on earthquake relief material sent to Pakistan, visit of Minister of State E. Ahamed to Pakistan and schedule of opening of crossing points on Line of Control.

New Delhi, November 17, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: ...the third relief train was dispatched this morning carrying relief materials for Pakistan. This train which has 27 wagons is carrying 600 tonnes of relief material.¹ This added together with the other relief material sent by the two trains, one aircraft and 45 trucks across the LOC, (makes) the total amount of material that has been sent by the Government to 1300 tonnes. In addition, private entities have been facilitated in sending relief material to Pakistan. To complete the picture, as you recall, India had pledged USD 25 million to Pakistan at the International Donors' Conference which was held at Geneva on October 26.

On November 19, Government of Pakistan is holding an international conference to request funding for the long term task of rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the areas affected by the earthquake. Government of India will be represented by the Minister of State for External Affairs Shri E. Ahamed. He will be leaving tomorrow for Pakistan.

As regards the opening of the crossing points on which there seems to be some amount of confusion and back and forth. I thought it best if we tell you that the schedule for the five (crossing) points (on LOC) which are being opened. This will be for the purposes of relief material and for the crossing of people whose names have been approved. These dates have been agreed to by Pakistan. These are:

1. The material consisted of snow tents, snow sleeping bags, blankets, essential medicines and medical equipment including injections such as pethidine for pain and X-ray machines among others.

Tithwal-Nauseri (Saturdays): 19 & 26 November and 3 & 10 December

Poonch-Rawalakot (Mondays): 21 November & 5 December

Mendhar-Tattapani (Mondays): 28 November & 12 December

Uri-Chakoti (Thursdays) : 17 November & 1 December

Uri-Hajipur (Thursdays) : 24 November & 8 December

Question: On the one hand Government of India has sent 1300 tonnes of relief to Pakistan. Government of India has also pledged 25 million dollars. On the other hand you have a spurt in terrorist activities in Jammu and Kashmir. What is our reaction to this spurt in terrorism with the spurt in our sending relief? Secondly, has this issue been raised with Pakistan and at what level since in the past three days there have been an equal number of terrorist attacks in Jammu and Kashmir?

Answer: As you know, India had pledged its assistance immediately after the earthquake which was seen as a tragedy for the people of South Asia. India had offered whatever assistance Pakistan would wish us to send. A few days later some elements of this assistance which was required were identified and these were sent immediately by aircraft which you recall was 22 tonnes. This was followed by a gradual increase as the infrastructure improved, as the need for the relief was identified and conveyed, as the points were agreed upon, as the points opened. So, from 22 tonnes on the second or third day you have 1300 tonnes. This has been a gradual build up of relief. While the first train carried, I think, 70 or 80 tonnes, today's train carries 600 tonnes. I would not call this a sudden spurt or a sudden increase. This has been a gradual build up as the needs have been identified, as the materials have been collected, as the conveyance has been facilitated.

As far as terrorism is concerned India's position on terrorism is well known. There is zero tolerance for terrorism and that must be reiterated and that has been reiterated in all places including during the SAARC Conference, in the press conference as well as the briefings on bilateral meetings.

Question: Will Mr. Ahamed take up this issue during his visit on Pakistan?

Answer: Mr. Ahamed is going there to attend the Pledging Conference. That is the main purpose of the visit. As to what is the content of any bilateral engagement that may take place, I can only tell you after, and if and when, such an engagement takes place.

Question: There have also been reports in the Pakistani media that the earthquake has come as a blessing in disguise for the LeT and they have increased efforts of relief and in the process they are making jihadis out of quake victims. Has this matter been taken up with the Pakistan Government?

Answer: I do not want to react on press reports - whatever news reports you are referring to - nor are these matters taken up on the basis of press reports. Naturally, if there is any concern that there is terrorism, there we have already made it clear at every stage that the entire bilateral peace process or the dialogue process which began with the January 6 Statement is based on the premise that Pakistan will not allow territory under its control to be used for any terrorism. That is the basic premise on which this entire confidence building exercise, the dialogue, has taken place.

Question: What is the stand of India on the Iran vote in the light of the stiff opposition from the Left parties?

Answer: I would only best refer you to the Prime Minister's statement at the end-of-the visit conference at SAARC.

242. Statement by Minister of State E. Ahamed at the conference organised by Pakistan for funding Rehabilitation & Reconstruction Work in earthquake affected South Asia.

Islamabad, November 19, 2005.

It is about one and a half months since the devastating earthquake hit the northern parts of South Asia. Pakistan has suffered widespread destruction in this natural calamity, the worst in its history. While natural calamities may be beyond our control, their effects can be mitigated through prompt and effective assistance by the international community. It is in this spirit that India is taking part in this conference. More significantly, as a neighbour, India recognizes its special responsibility in contributing to this global effort to extend its support and aid to Pakistan in its hour of need. The collective response to the appeal for assistance today will be a demonstration of the consciousness of the international community of its responsibility during such calamities and its solidarity with the affected nation.

I would like to take this opportunity to give in brief the assistance India has extended till date. The Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh, spoke with President Musharraf on the day of the quake to offer condolences and assistance. So far about 1300 tonnes of relief goods have been sent to Pakistan by one aircraft, three trains and over 45 trucks. The relief items have included blankets, sleeping bags, tents including snow tents, medicines including vaccines, fortified biscuits, X-Ray machines, rice & pulses. This official assistance has been further supplemented by donations from private organizations.

The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi has been allowed to open a bank account to receive donations from Indians who wish to contribute to the relief effort. We are permitting Pakistani helicopters to fly in the 'no-fly zone' along the Line of Control to enable them access their villages close to the Line of Control. We installed special telephone call centers to enable families from J&K to talk to their families and friends across the Line of Control free of charge. Foreign organizations are also being allowed to source supplies from India. India has also made offers of helicopters, relief camps, cross- LoC relief operations, medical relief teams and repair of telecom infrastructure. Besides, India and Pakistan have agreed to open 5 crossing points on the LoC for the movement of the people and relief material. We are also prepared to permit meetings of divided families and relatives at these 5 points.

May I also reaffirm India's pledge of US $ 25 million made at the International Conference at Geneva organised by the UN Emergency Relief Coordinator on 26 October, 2005. Mr. Oscar Fernandes, India's Minister of State for Statistics and Programme Implementation, had represented India at that conference. The Government of Pakistan would be welcome to use this fund for sourcing supplies from India. It is our wish that India's contribution should be particularly used for rebuilding of schools and hospitals and for rebuilding houses for affected people. The technology available in India for prefabricated earthquake resistant shelters can also be sourced from this fund.

We have seen the report on 'Preliminary Damage and Needs Assessment' prepared by the Asian Development Bank and the World Bank. I would like to convey the willingness of the Government of India to take up specific projects in sectors such as education and health where India has wide experience and considerable expertise. Besides, the cultural, administrative and technological compatibility with the needs of Pakistan in these areas make us ideal partners to undertake these projects. We look forward to identifying such projects in consultation with the Government of Pakistan.

India too was rocked by the earthquake; about 1300 lives were lost. Rescue and relief efforts have been immediately put in place by the Government of the State of Jammu & Kashmir with full material, moral and financial support of the Government of India. The Prime Minister of India visited the affected areas, met the people & local authorities and ensured that relief efforts were launched and sustained on a massive scale. No effort is being spared to make sure that shelter is provided to all the affected before winter sets in. Our armed forces have rendered commendable services in relief and rescue effort even as they themselves suffered casualties in the earthquake.

On behalf of the Government and people of India, I wish to express our heartfelt gratitude to friendly governments, international organisations and NGOs who have contributed generously to the relief effort in Jammu & Kashmir. We particularly appreciate the relief material sent by the Government of Pakistan across the LoC. This generosity is all the more appreciated in view of the tragedy that Pakistan itself has suffered.

It is very encouraging for us to see that people in both countries have come forward to help the victims of this tragedy and have contributed whole-heartedly for their relief. This spontaneous outpouring of sympathy and goodwill for the victims of earthquake gives us the strength and motivation to work for greater people-to-people contact and confidence building measures between our two countries.

President Musharraf in his speech has made a reference to the issue of J & K. Our position in this regard is well-known. We have stated that India is prepared to resolve all issues between India and Pakistan, including the issue of J&K through dialogue between the two countries in an atmosphere free from terrorism and violence¹.

I would like to conclude by saying that my Government has specifically sent me here to offer our full support to the Government of Pakistan and people affected by the earthquake in rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts. I once again reaffirm our full cooperation and support to these efforts that are being mobilized world-wide.

243. Response of Official Spokesperson to questions on Pakistan Foreign Ministry spokesperson's remarks about self governance on both sides of the Line of Control.

New Delhi, November 21, 2005.

During the meeting between PM Dr. Manmohan Singh and PM of Pak Shaukat Aziz in Dhaka the latter had conveyed that in seeking a resolution on the Jammu and Kashmir issue the two countries could inter alia explore ideas such as self governance and demilitarisation. No proposal regarding so-called "self governance" was provided to which a response was expected².

Our PM had conveyed that J&K already enjoyed autonomy under the Indian constitution and had in place a popular government elected through free and fair elections. However, there was clearly a lack of autonomy in POK and there had been no popular elections in Gilgit and Baltistan to determine the wishes and aspirations of the people.

1. MOS was responding to President Musharraf's remarks at the inauguration of the conference that India's donation could be the resolution of Kashmir issue in the context of the earthquake.
2. The Spokesperson was referring to his Pakistani counterpart's remarks to journalists in Islamabad that the Pakistani Prime Minister had during the course of his meeting with Prime Minister Manmohan Singh in Dhaka mooted the idea of "self-governance and demilitarization" on both sides of the LOC. However, despite repeated queries of journalists, Pakistani Spokesperson did not and could not give any details of the said proposal. According to media reports when the Minister of State E. Ahamed called on Pakistani Prime Minister during his visit to Islamabad in connection with the donors' conference for quake relief, Aziz again referred to his undefined proposal, which left India wondering how to react in vacuum.

PM had also reiterated that there would be no question of redeployment of security forces by India while cross border terrorism and infiltration continued and there was no cessation of acts of terrorist violence¹.

244. Briefing points by Official Spokesperson on the travel of six Pakistani nationals back to Pakistan.

New Delhi, November 24, 2005.

- Six Pakistani nationals, who travelled to India on Muzaffarabad-Srinagar Bus Service, have left Srinagar this morning by bus and expected to reach Attari-Wagah border tomorrow (25 November 2005) before noon.
- It may be recalled that 41 Pakistani nationals who travelled to India have been stranded due to the disruption and dislocation caused by the earthquake. The travel of 25 of them back to Pakistan has already been facilitated and with these 6 passengers the number of Pakistani nationals repatriated so far would come to thirty one. The remaining 10 passengers have indicated their willingness to travel at a later date.
- The State Government of Jammu & Kashmir, in coordination with the Government of India, arranged special buses to carry the stranded Pakistani nationals via Attari- Wagah as they were unwilling to travel across LoC because of long trekking involved owing to the damaged state of the roads.

1. The Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran had told the media in Dhaka on November 12, after PM's meeting with his Pakistani counterpart that India could not undertake demilitarization or redeployment of forces unless there was an end to cross border terrorism and infiltration. Foreign Secretary said PM made it clear to Shaukat Aziz that incidents like the terrorist attacks in New Delhi the previous month impacted public opinion in India and the Government thinking. Foreign Secretary said that eventual redeployment of forces should not be restricted to Line of Control. The idea should be to take away forces all along the International Border in the search for a broader peace. This was the first meeting between the two prime ministers since the October 8 earthquake. They agreed to cut down the time taken to process the applications for people to cross the LOC at designated points to 10 days. The Prime Minister assured Aziz that India was willing to send further consignments of relief material to assist the quake victims by rail and road.

245. Joint Statement issued at the end of the 7th Round of Director General Level Talks between the Counter Narcotics Agencies of Pakistan and India.

Rawalpindi, December 2, 2005.

The seventh round of Director General Level Talks between the Counter Narcotics Agencies of Pakistan and India was held at Rawalpindi on 1-2 December 2005. The Pakistan Delegation was led by Major General Syed Khalid Amir Jaffery, Director General, Anti Narcotics Force, Government of Pakistan and the Indian delegation was led by Mr. K.C. Verma, Director General, Narcotics Control Bureau, Government of India.

The talks were held in a cordial atmosphere. The two sides recognized the efforts of both the countries in fighting drug trafficking and appreciated the need for furthering their efforts through enhanced mutual co-operation. Detailed discussions took place on drug supply and demand reduction. There was convergence of views on issues of mutual concern and the two sides reaffirmed their resolve for regular exchange of information on drug related issues. Realizing the region's sensitivity to transit-trafficking of drugs, both sides emphasized their deep commitment for forging closer co-operation between their Drug Law Enforcement Agencies.

To enhance co-operation between the two countries and to give proper direction and substance to this co-operation, a draft Memorandum of Understanding was discussed and agreed upon, in principle, for signature on a mutually convenient date shortly.

The leader of the Indian delegation paid a courtesy call on the Hon'ble Minister for Narcotics Control Mr. Ghous Bux Khan Maher. Mr. K.C. Verma thanked the Government of Pakistan for extending a warm welcome to him and his delegation.

The two sides agreed to continue these talks in future as well.

246. Response of Official Spokesperson to a question regarding reference to Jammu and Kashmir in Organisation of Islamic Conference's final communique.

New Delhi, December 16, 2005.

We are surprised that the Organisation of Islamic Conference (OIC) in its 3rd Extraordinary Session of the Islamic Summit Conference held in Mecca from December 7-8, 2005 should have made references on Jammu & Kashmir, an integral part of the Indian Union, in its final communique¹. We have consistently maintained that the OIC has no locus standi to comment on the matters concerning India's internal affairs, and we completely reject all such references.

247. Joint statement issued at the end of India-Pakistan discussions on Sir Creek.

New Delhi, December 21, 2005.

In pursuance of the understanding reached during the Foreign Minister level meeting in Islamabad on October 3-4, 2005, the Indian and Pakistani delegations met in New Delhi on 20-21 December, 2005 to formulate the terms of reference for carrying out the Joint Survey of the Sir Creek.

The Indian delegation was led by Brig. Girish Kumar, Deputy Surveyor General, and the Pakistani delegation was led by Maj. Gen. Jamil-ur-Rehman Afridi, Surveyor General of Pakistan.

1 The 57-member OIC in its communique, issued after two-day deliberations in Mecca attended among others by the Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf had "extended" its full support to the "inalienable rights" of the people of Jammu and Kashmir for "self-determination" in accordance with the UN resolutions. It may be recalled that in his speech at the conference the Pakistani President had raised the issue of Kashmir and had said "failure to resolve Kashmir and Palestine issues led to desperation, confusion and extremism" and asked the Islamic countries to ban extremist groups.

The two sides held constructive and fruitful discussions. They will report to their respective governments on the discussions.

Lahore, December 21, 2005.

The third round of the India-Pakistan Technical level Talks for operationalisation of the Amritsar-Lahore and Amritsar – Nankana Sahib Bus services was held in Lahore on December 20-21, 2005. The Pakistan delegation was led by Mr. Mohammad Abbas, Additional Secretary, Ministry of Communications and the Indian delegation was led by Mr. Saroj Kumar Dash, Joint Secretary (Transport), Department of Road Transport & Highways.

and return on Wednesday. The Pakistani bus would ply from Lahore to Amritsar on every Friday and return on Saturday. The one-way fare would be Pakistani Rs. 900/- and Indian Rs. 750/-.

- 4 The meeting was held in a friendly and cordial atmosphere.

249. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on India's decision to release eight Pakistani prisoners.

New Delhi, December 22, 2005.

- Government of India has decided to release and repatriate to Pakistan eight Pakistani prisoners on 26th December 2005 via Attari border. Earlier in November 2005, India released 26 Pakistani prisoners.
- With this release on 26th December 2005, the total number of Pakistani prisoners released during the calendar year 2005 will be 159.

250. Reaction of Official Spokesperson to a question on unrest in Balochistan (Pakistan).

New Delhi, December 27, 2005.

In response to a question on Balochistan the Official Spokesperson said:

The Government of India has been watching with concern the spiralling violence in Balochistan and the heavy military action, including the use of helicopter gunships and jet fighters by the Government of Pakistan to quell it. We hope that the Government of Pakistan will exercise restraint and take recourse to peaceful discussions to address the grievances of the people of Balochistan.¹

The Spokesman was reacting to Pakistan's own media reports of large scale Baluch protests in Pakistan and disproportionate use of violence by the Pakistani army which killed according to reports "dozens of people". According to reports more than 50 people had been killed and more than 100 injured in Balochistan violence. When the journalists asked Navtej Sarna to react to Pakistani charge of describing Indian reaction as "interference" in Pakistan's internal affairs, he refused to be drawn into any controversy on this issue and said, "I think I have made the point I had to." However on December 30 an unnamed official source briefing the media denied there was anything untoward or provocative in the External Affairs Ministry's recent statement on the situation in Balochistan. "There is a certain serious situation that has been developing in Balochistan and when (the Government was) asked for its views, (it) gave a restrained answer."

Once again on January 1, 2006 official sources were at pains to clarify that notwithstanding Pakistan President Pervez Musharraf terming as "intriguing" India's comments on Balochistan, there was nothing wrong in reacting to the "serious situation" in the neighbouring country, particularly when it waves "red rags" at India virtually on daily basis. India insisted that the statement by the MEA spokesperson was "nothing unusual or extraordinary". "Why there should be inhibition on our side to say something on what is happening in our neighbourhood? A serious situation has been developing in Balochistan and when a reaction was sought, MEA spokesperson gave it," a senior government official said responding to Pakistan's objection. New Delhi insisted that the reaction it gave was "quite restrained and reasonable" and did not mark any departure from its policy on Pakistan. Officials in New Delhi said India's comment on happenings in Balochistan was not unjustified since Pakistan also keeps on talking about the situation in Jammu and Kashmir although "no human rights violations" are taking place there from the government side unlike in Balochistan.

SRI LANKA

251. Press release of Ministry of External Affairs on the working visit of Foreign Minister of Sri Lanka Lakshman Kadirgamar.

New Delhi, February 24, 2005.

H.E. Mr Lakshman Kadirgamar, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Sri Lanka, will be on a working visit to India on February 24-26, 2005 at the invitation of External Affairs Minister.

India-Sri Lanka relations have seen significant progress in the recent past. Political relations are close, trade and investments have increased dramatically, infrastructural linkages are expanding, and there is a general, broad-based improvement across all sectors of bilateral cooperation.

The importance attached to our relations is evident from the fact that following the tsunami of December 26, 2004 India made every effort possible within its means to assist Sri Lanka in its hour of need despite suffering grievously itself. A composite relief package of Rs 100 crore was announced for Sri Lanka and was followed by a massive relief effort in which India deployed an air detachment of 10 aircraft for three weeks and sent about 15 naval ship-loads of supplies, fifteen medical teams, a mobile field hospital (140 men) that was airlifted, specialist doctors, a 45-bed hospital ship, 10 teams of naval divers and a 81-member composite Army disaster management team¹.

The economic dynamism of the relationship is manifest in the success of the Indian Sri Lankan Free Trade Agreement. Bilateral trade has more than doubled after the FTA was signed and exceeded US $ 1.5 billion dollars in 2003-4. India was the largest investor in Sri Lanka in 2002 and 2003.

Discussions on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement

1. Foreign Minister Kadirgamar who came as a Special Envoy to thank New Delhi and the people of India for the post- Tsunami assistance was effusive in his praise for the assistance extended by India to Sri Lanka in the wake of Tsunami disaster at his press conference in New Delhi on February 26. When he met the Prime Minister he handed over a personal letter from President Chandrika Kumaratunga thanking India for her help.

to further deepen and widen the relationship have made substantial progress. A Committee has been set up under the co-Chairmanship of the Commerce Secretaries to oversee negotiations and Working Groups have been constituted to work out details of with the intention of finalizing the Agreement at the earliest¹.

During his visit, Foreign Minister Kadirgamar will meet senior Indian leaders including External Affairs Minister. Issues of mutual concern will be discussed and ways and means of further strengthening bilateral relations will be identified.

Apart from a review of bilateral relations, the visit will provide an opportunity to discuss the latest developments in the peace process in Sri Lanka. The Government of India is committed to the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka and to the restoration of a lasting peace through a peaceful, negotiated settlement that meets the just aspirations of all communities. Peace in Sri Lanka can only contribute to the further deepening and expansion of Indo-Sri Lankan ties to mutual advantage and benefit.

1. Meanwhile also on February 26, the Indian High Commissioner in Sri Lanka Mrs. Nirupama Rao said in Colombo that Government of India had pledged a $ 5.7 million grant assistance to build a state-of-the-art cancer hospital in Colombo. In addition, as part of her continued assistance to the Tsunami devastated districts, the Indian Health and Family Welfare Ministry "will also augment the existing facilities in three hospitals in southern, eastern and northern Sri Lanka." Currently an Indian official team was in Sri Lanka visiting the three hospitals and looking into their needs. Measures to improve accident and emergency services, trauma care and operating theatres were some of the areas identified. Improvements to the Jaffna Teaching Hospital where the Indian Government had donated a state-of-the-art CT Scanner in 2003 were also discussed. Meanwhile discussions were also on for constructing a hospital in Dikoya, in Sri Lanka's central hill districts, where there is a concentration of plantation Tamils of Indian origin.

1. Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on arrival in Colombo on April 1 in a statement said: "India stands ready to assist Sri Lanka as it moves resolutely on the path towards peace and accelerated development, while preserving and strengthening the democratic and pluralistic nature of its society". Reiterating India's position that it "has an abiding interest in Sri Lanka's security" Mr. Saran said he would reaffirm New Delhi's "strong and consistent support for the unity, territorial integrity and sovereignty of Sri Lanka as well as for a peaceful, negotiated political solution to the ethnic conflict that meets the just aspirations of all communities in Sri Lanka." The Foreign Office Consultations are against the backdrop of increasing economic ties between the two countries over the past few years, particularly since the signing of the India – Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement. Since 1996 India has extended 18 lines of credit to Sri Lanka. The latest in March 2005 was for $ 150 million for the supply of petroleum products. When the Foreign Secretary visited Trincomalee on April 30th he said that India was committed to the development of Sri Lanka's north-east through "economic and technical assistance". The presence of the petroleum joint venture, Indian Oil Corporation – Lanka in the eastern district and the Indian assistance to the Trincomalee Technical College were "symbolic and representative of the close and enduring ties that India has with north-eastern Sri Lanka", Foreign Secretary Saran said. Speaking at a function in Kandy to handover four ambulances as Indian gift to the people of Sri Lanka's central plantation districts, Shyam Saran said steps would be taken to expedite the construction of a 150-bed hospital. The welfare of the plantation workers "has always remained close to our hearts", he said.

the bilateral trade between the two countries has increased to approximately US$ 1.8 billion in 2004 and that the trade imbalance has narrowed significantly. It was also noted that the CEPA negotiating process had commenced and that the Commerce Secretaries of India and Sri Lanka had met in New Delhi in February 2005. The process is proceeding satisfactorily and the technical working and sub-groups would be meeting in Colombo from 5th – 7th May 2005.

5. Indian participation in post Tsunami reconstruction efforts was discussed and Foreign Secretary Saran announced a debt moratorium of three years on repayment of Sri Lankan debt to India. He also announced a number of Indian assistance measures including a series of workshops on low-cost rebuilding of houses to be conducted by Indian experts and a capacity-building exercise in management of disasters and post-disaster scenarios. It was also agreed that India would consider participation in Tsunami affected Colombo-Matara railway line reconstruction.

6. Investment in various sectors including power and energy, transport and the proposed ferry service were discussed and it was noted that the National Thermal Power Corporation of India would be submitting a detailed Project Report on a 300 MW Power Plant in May 2005, following detailed discussions with Sri Lankan authorities. It was also announced that, following a Sri Lankan request, a team of experts from the National Highways Authority of India would visit Sri Lanka to assess Indian participation in a highway project. The utilization of four Indian Lines of Credit amounting to US$ 381 million was also discussed including Sri Lanka's request to import passenger buses under one of the Lines of Credit.

7. It was noted that the first meeting of the Joint Working Group on Fisheries (JWG) that was constituted following President Kumaratunga's visit to India in November 2004 with the mandate of dealing with issues relating to straying fishermen, working out modalities for prevention of use of force against them and the early release of confiscated boats, and exploring possibilities of working towards bilateral arrangements for licensed fishing was held on 21st April 2005. The Government of India's deep appreciation for the humane treatment of straying fishermen was reiterated and it was agreed that the JWG would be an excellent instrument to continue this dialogue and pursue mutually acceptable solutions.

8. The Sri Lanka government appreciated India's cooperation in the repatriation of refugees who have decided to voluntarily return to Sri Lanka. Both sides noted that the issue is complex and sensitive and discussed the need for an appropriate resettlement package for returning refugees.

9. The exchange of information relative to the Sethusamudram Canal Project was noted with satisfaction. It was agreed that further technical information sought by the Government of Sri Lanka would be made available once specific issues have been elaborated by the Sri Lankan authorities for further technical level discussion.

10. Sri Lankan side expressed appreciation for the US$ 7.5 million grant pledged by India for the establishment of a Cancer Hospital and was agreed that a decision on the location of the site for the Cancer Hospital needs to be taken urgently. It was also agreed that an Indian team would visit Sri Lanka to discuss this matter further.

11. In the context of the Indian technical and economic programme, Foreign Secretary Saran also announced that the training of Sri Lankan police personnel in criminal investigation techniques and other police administration methods is under active consideration.

12. The ongoing cooperation between the two countries including the de-limitation of the Continental Shelf between the two countries was discussed. The successful conclusion of a Technical Workshop in Goa from 25 – 29 April 2005 was noted. They stressed the need for continuing technical cooperation between the two countries in this regard. It was agreed to constitute a sub-group to jointly examine legal matters pertaining to this issue. A proposal for Sri Lankan Geologists/Geophysicists to participate in the Indian Antarctica Research Programme was discussed.

13. The need to have more cultural exchanges and strengthening of people to people contact was highlighted. The two sides noted with appreciation the commendable activities undertaken by the Indian Council for Cultural Relations.

14. The early convening of the 13th SAARC Summit in Dhaka was discussed and the need for strengthening SAARC was endorsed.

15. It was noted that there is a convergence of views on a number of multilateral issues including the need to conclude a Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. Both sides endorsed the adoption of the International Convention for Suppression of Acts on Nuclear Terrorism and discussed the Report of the High Level Panel on "Threats, Challenges and Change" and the Report of the Secretary General, "In Larger Freedom". Indian appreciation for Sri Lanka's support for a permanent seat for India in the UN Security Council was reiterated.

16. Views were exchanged on a range of regional and international issues including regional political and economic developments and cooperation in other international fora.

17. The two sides found the consultations constructive and beneficial and agreed to maintain frequent High Level contacts¹.

1. At the end of the consultations, Foreign Secretary Saran told the Colombo based Indian journalists that "I go back with a very encouraging and very optimistic assessment of the prospects for India – Sri Lanka relations". To question from the media-men, he said the proposed Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement "is making good progress". "There is a strong political will both on the Indian side and the Sri Lanka side to bring about an early conclusion of this agreement." On the Sri Lankan apprehensions on the Sethusamudram project, he said "Protection of the environment is a matter of great importance to India as well. We believe the safeguards, which are required have been incorporated." A "very extensive briefing" was given to the technical parameters of the project to Sri Lankan representatives and India was "ready to provide" any additional clarification. The petroleum joint venture between Indian Oil and Ceylon Petroleum Corporation "has the potential of emerging as a major petrochemical base not only for the two countries but can serve the wider region as well. It has a very strong economic potential and that is what we are engaged in developing at this point in time." Dispelling apprehensions on the proposed defence cooperation agreement, Foreign Secretary said; "I don't think that any apprehension has a basis. I don't think this kind of cooperation is directed or should be seen as targeting either any group within Sri Lanka or against any third country." { It may be recalled when Sri Lanka's Foreign Minister Kadirgamar had visited New Delhi at the end of February, he had told a press conference: "All preparatory work had been completed and formal signatures of the two sides could be appended any time."} When asked if Sri Lanka's peace process was crowded with the internationalization of efforts, the Foreign Secretary replied: "This is really a call for the Government of Sri Lanka." India has made its stand very clear. "We are committed to the territorial integrity and national unity of Sri Lanka, so any peace process which is within those broad parameters is something that we would welcome. We would certainly be keen to see there is no return to violence and we would also like to see a settlement in which the interests of all ethnic groups in this country are safeguarded. There should be an acceptance of the values of plural democracy. As long as these principles are observed and ensured we would support it."

The mechanism would include representative of the Sri Lankan government, the LTTE and representatives of the Muslim and Sinhala communities.

The Foreign Secretary expressed his appreciation to Mr. Solheim for sharing these details with India (and welcomed the regular and close consultations between the two sides on matters relating to the peace process in Sri Lanka.

In his remarks, Foreign Secretary once again reiterated India's firm commitment to the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka. The Foreign Secretary briefed Mr. Solheim on the projects for reconstruction and community development that India is undertaking in Sri Lanka, including in the country's Northern and Eastern regions."

254. Joint Press Statement issued on the visit of President of Sri Lanka Chandrika Bandaranaike Kumaratunga.New Delhi, June 3, 2005.

On the subject of economic cooperation, they noted that bilateral trade recorded a volume of US$ 1.8 billion in 2004 with the trade imbalance between the two countries having narrowed significantly. Taking stock of the encouraging progress on negotiations on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA), the two leaders directed that the negotiations on the CEPA be concluded by the end of 2005 so as to give a new thrust to overall bilateral business activity as well as to encourage investments in several areas of mutual interest and thereby strengthen the partnership in economic development between the two countries.
6. The President of Sri Lanka thanked the Prime Minister and the Government and people of India for the generous assistance sent to Sri Lanka immediately after the tsunami and for the further aid pledged. The Prime Minister of India reiterated that India remains committed to assist Sri Lanka's remarkable efforts to recover from the tragedy of the tsunami of December 2004. Indian assistance would consist of a grant of Rs. 100 crores for relief and reconstruction projects, a moratorium on debt repayments for three years, as well as the factoring of post-tsunami reconstruction priorities into existing and proposed lines of credit.

7. The President conveyed to the Prime Minister her commitment to ensure the full participation of all communities in the country to ensure the delivery of relief and reconstruction assistance to those affected by Tsunami. In this context, she apprised the Prime Minister of her efforts to establish a Post Tsunami Operational Management Structure (P-TOMS)¹ for coordinating relief and reconstruction in areas affected by the Tsunami. The Prime Minister expressed understanding of and support for these ongoing efforts.

8. The President of Sri Lanka briefed the Prime Minister on the current status of the peace process in Sri Lanka. The Prime Minister reiterated India's support for the process of seeking a comprehensive, negotiated settlement acceptable to all communities, and reflecting the pluralistic nature of Sri Lankan society, within the framework of a united and democratic Sri Lanka.

9. They emphasized the need for the early resumption of negotiations in the peace process that will lead to a durable political solution that maintains the unity and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka, and guarantees the fundamental rights of all individuals while ensuring the safety and prosperity of the people.

10. In their discussions on the peace process, concern was expressed over ceasefire violations. Particular concern was expressed over the illegal acquisition of air capability.

1. Indian endorsement of the P-TOMS was an important item on President Chandrika's agenda which it was made out in her country that even India had reservations on involving the LTTE in the post-Tsunami reconstruction programme. According to media reports the President explained the importance of P-TOMS in the context of the on-going peace process. "For the first time, the LTTE is going to involve itself in an administrative process with the Sri Lankan government", a senior official of the Sri Lanka delegation told the media, and "this will be an open, transparent mechanism with observers from the donors." If and when the joint mechanism gets off the ground, it would represent the first time Colombo and the LTTE engage each other since April 2003 when the LTTE broke off the talks with the then UNP government.

The Prime Minister said that he looked forward to visiting Sri Lanka stating that he attached the highest importance to the furtherance and strengthening of India-Sri Lanka relations.

1. According to media reports, quoting senior officials, the Prime Minister assured the visiting President that her country's worries with regard to the project would be accommodated. The project, which received Cabinet clearance the previous month would create a 20-km long, 300-metre wide channel between India and Sri Lanka, which when complete would knock out 36 hours of the time that the ships take while navigating between eastern and western coasts. The Rs. 2, 4270 million project requires major dredging operations in and around the Palk Bay, the Palk Straits and Adam's Bridge. The entire dredging is within the Indian territorial waters, but Sri Lanka is concerned about the impact of the project on its own coast and territorial waters including fish stock.

255. Statement by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh on arrival at Colombo on a 3-day visit.

Colombo, June 9, 2005.

I am delighted to visit Sri Lanka, a close and friendly neighbour, to co-Chair the India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission.

The enduring friendship between our two democracies is a major factor for peace and stability in our region. The recent tragedy wrought by the tsunami, and our cooperation in its aftermath, has strengthened our ties further.

With my colleague and counterpart, Hon'ble Lakshman Kadirgamar, Foreign Minister of Sri Lanka, I will review the progress made since the India-Sri Lanka Joint Commission last met in October 2003. I am eager to discuss with my Sri Lankan colleagues ways and means to advance bilateral cooperation on matters pertaining to finance, trade and investment; education and culture; science and technology, which are on the agenda. Such cooperation is tangible evidence of India's commitment to Sri Lanka's economic development and progress, and the strengthening of the democratic and inclusive nature of Sri Lankan society.

The Government and people of India remain firmly committed in their support for efforts being made by the Government and people of Sri Lanka to consolidate the processes of peace and to promote development in their country. India's support for an outcome that accommodates the concerns and aspirations of all the groups that constitute Sri Lanka's multi-ethnic pluralistic society, while upholding and preserving the territorial integrity and sovereignty of the country, remains undiluted¹.

1. At a media briefing in New Delhi on the same day the Official Spokesperson Navtej Sarna recalled that the political relations between the two countries "are close, trade and investments have increased, infrastructural linkages are expanding, defence cooperation is under discussion and there is a general, broad-based improvement across all sectors of bilateral cooperation." He said "there has been traditional convergence of views between the two countries on a range of international issues including their deep commitment to oppose terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. They agree on the need for urgent reform of the UN system to meet global challenges, including the expansion of both permanent and non-permanent membership of the Security Council. Sri Lanka has endorsed India's candidature for the permanent membership of the UNSC. The dynamism of the economic relationship is manifest in the success of the India-Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement. Bilateral trade has more than doubled after the FTA was signed and exceeded US$ 1.8 billion in 2003-04. India was the largest investor in Sri Lanka in 2002 and 2003. Discussions on a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement to further deepen and widen the relationship have made substantial progress. A Committee has been set up under the Co-Chairmanship of the Commerce Secretaries of the two countries to oversee negotiations and Working Groups are meeting to work out the details with the intention of finalizing the Agreement by the end of 2005. Discussions are also underway between the two countries on major Indian investments in the power sector, in development of road and rail infrastructure and in energy. India has a substantial development partnership with Sri Lanka. It has committed a total of US$ 381 million as credit lines to Sri Lanka for financing a variety of activities that are of economic importance to Sri Lanka. Government of India is in the process of executing development projects in Sri Lanka worth about Rs. 70 crore. Several more projects in the health, Information Technology and education sectors are under consideration. Intensification of economic and political relations is accompanied by an increase in people-to-people contacts. There are more than 109 flights every week between India and Sri Lanka and Indians constitute almost twenty per cent of all tourist arrivals in Sri Lanka. A number of measures that will build our cultural links, which are based on our common heritage and historical bonds, will also be discussed. The first meeting of the Joint Working Group on Fisheries, set up following a directive during the visit of Her Excellency the President of Sri Lanka to India in November 2004 took place in New Delhi on April 21, 2005. The Group is mandated to look into issues relating to straying fishermen, work out modalities for prevention of use of force against them and explore possibilities of working towards bilateral arrangement for licensed fishing. India supports the process of seeking a comprehensive, negotiated settlement acceptable to all communities reflecting the pluralistic nature of Sri Lankan society, within the framework of a united and democratic Sri Lanka. India also supports the early resumption of negotiations in the peace process that will lead to a durable political solution that maintains the unity and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka and guarantees the fundamental rights of all individuals while ensuring the security and well-being of the people. India maintains an abiding interest in the security of Sri Lanka and remains committed to its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Her Excellency the President of Sri Lanka has apprised the Prime Minister of India about her efforts to establish a Post-Tsunami Operational Management Structure. India understands and supports these ongoing efforts.

Prime Minister had announced a Rs. 100 crore composite Tsunami relief package for Sri Lanka on December 26, 2004. A massive relief effort was launched in which India deployed an air detachment of 10 aircraft for three weeks and sent about 15 naval shiploads of supplies, 15 medical teams including a mobile field hospital (140 men) that was airlifted, specialist doctors, a 45-bed hospital ship (INS Jamuna), 10 teams of Naval divers and a 81-member composite Army disaster management team. Indian ships and aircraft were the first to arrive in Sri Lanka. Ten truckloads of supplies sent by CII were also distributed in Tamil held areas through the Ramakrishna Mission at Point Pedro in Northern Sri Lanka. In the post-emergency phase, 5 Bailey Bridges were installed; a major aerial photographic survey of affected areas by the National Remote Sensing Agency was conducted; and medical assistance was continued through deployment of defence medical teams and supply of medicines. Indian assistance in Sri Lanka's "Rebuilding the Nation Programme" is continuing. A three-year moratorium on Sri Lankan debt to India has been announced, major support packages in the health and railway sectors are being worked out and a series of capacity building and experience sharing exercises are being conducted."

256. Joint press conference by External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh and Foreign Minister of Sri Lanka Lakshman Kadirgamar.

Colombo, June 10, 2005.

External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh's opening remarks:

Hon'ble Lakshman Kadirgamar, Senior officials, Distinguished Invitees, Members of the Press Corps, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to be here in Sri Lanka. India and Sri Lanka have a shared history, religion and culture. The Joint Commission Meeting that we have just concluded successfully today bears ample testimony to the excellent bilateral relations that our two countries enjoy. Indeed, it would be no exaggeration to say that Indo-Sri Lankan relations now serve as a role model for the entire region.

It would be easy to rest complacent with the excellent state of bilateral relations. But, we are determined to take relations with Sri Lanka to greater heights. To give one example, the bilateral free trade agreement between India and Sri Lanka has been a huge success story with the two-way trade touching 1.8 billion US Dollars. Notwithstanding this, however, both countries have decided to realize the enormous potential that exists for further economic and commercial cooperation. To this end, negotiations are currently in progress for concluding a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement, hopefully by the end of this year.

We also had a chance to discuss increased people-to-people contacts, particularly through cooperation in the area of tourism and civil aviation. In this era of globalization, both our two countries need to focus on better infrastructure for not just movement of goods and services, but also movement of people across borders.

I wish to emphasize the fact that we have signed two agreements today, one relating to Small Development Projects and the other dealing with an Exchange Programme on Education. Both are important because they focus on the most valuable resource we have, namely, our people.

In addition to the above two Agreements, we have also taken a number of specific measures to assist Sri Lanka in various spheres of development. We will train around 450 Sri Lankan policemen in India. We will provide a grant of Rupees 10 million for funding a pilot project of 20 e-libraries or “nenasalas”. We also discussed the utilization of credit lines worth 381 million US Dollars.

On the peace process, we support the process of seeking a comprehensive, negotiated settlement acceptable to all communities and reflecting the pluralistic nature of Sri Lankan society within the framework of a united and democratic Sri Lanka. India maintains an abiding interest in the security of Sri Lanka and remains committed to its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Indrani Bagchi (Times of India). India has offered an Air Defence System to Sri Lanka. Are you going to accept?

Mr. Lakshman Kadirgamar: This is very much under discussion. We will accept it. We are looking into ways and means on how this can be done.

Question . Is there any timeframe?

Answer. No.

De Villiers (Free lance journalist) . How soon will the India Sri Lanka Defence Cooperation Agreement be signed? Will it be signed before the Joint Mechanism? Would there be India troops stationed in Sri Lanka? – de Villiers (free lance journalist)

Shri Natwar Singh : India and Sri Lanka already have extensive cooperation in the defence field. The defence cooperation agreement is in the process of being finalized. There are certain procedures to be gone through and that process is underway. The defence cooperation agreement would be a framework for cooperation for providing cooperation or regular exchanges between our defence establishments, training of personnel and capacity building and this is a continuous process.

Question : On the Joint Mechanism, what is India’s stand? What are your conditions? Is India going to support the President on the Joint Mechanism?

Shri Natwar Singh: We are aware of the efforts by the President of Sri Lanka on the Post-Tsunami Operational Management Structure (P-TOMS) or Joint Mechanism for coordinating relief and reconstruction in the areas affected by the tsunami. We have already expressed understanding of and support for these ongoing efforts.

Question : If President CBK goes ahead with the Joint Mechanism, the JVP is going to pull out of the government. What is India's comment on it?

Shri Natwar Singh: This is an internal matter. I am not going to comment on it.

Question : The Sethusamudram project will be operationalised soon. How is India addressing Sri Lankan concerns on this?

Mr. Lakshman Kadirgamar: It must be remembered that there are very strong and vocal environmentalist groups in India and also a very powerful Ministry of Environment. This project is closer to the Indian coastline as you all know, and therefore, India is more concerned than anyone else to ensure that all safeguards against any environmental impact is fully taken into account. This has been done in a transparent manner. India is very concerned that Sri Lanka may have apprehensions about the project and India is reacting suitably.

Shri Natwar Singh: As Minister said there are very strong and vocal environmental groups in India and we also have a powerful Ministry of Environment. This project I should clarify is closer to the Indian coastline and therefore we are more concerned than any one else to ensure that all safeguards against any environmental impact is fully taken into account. This has been done in a transparent manner and let me assure you that we will do nothing that will remotely adversely affect our relations. We are very mindful of any concern that Sri Lanka may have concerning the project. We had already arranged an extensive briefing for Sri Lankan experts in January this year. If there are any specific areas of concern, we are ready to organize further technical discussions. The dialogue between our experts is continuing in order to promote common understanding.

Question : Can we have some details on the MOU on small developmental projects that has been signed in this meeting?

Foreign Secretary: This is a new dimension to India-Sri Lanka economic cooperation. These are projects which will be at the community level or at the local level and upto a limit of US$ 3 million. So these will be projects like link road in villages and some small irrigation projects, school projects and all those which will be of a quick-yielding variety and will also give a benefit to the community.

257. Response of the Official Spokesperson to a question regarding P-TOMS agreement signed by Sri Lanka Government and LTTE.

New Delhi, June 27, 2005.

In response to a question regarding P-TOMS agreement signed by Sri Lanka Government and LTTE the Official Spokesperson said:

We hope that the implementation of the mechanism will strengthen democratic processes and uphold pluralism in the North and the East of Sri Lanka.

India steadfastly supports the efforts being made by the government and people of Sri Lanka to consolidate the processes of peace and development in their country. India's support for a comprehensive negotiated settlement acceptable to all communities, and reflecting the pluralistic nature of Sri Lankan society, within the framework of a united and democratic Sri Lanka, remains undiluted. India is firmly opposed to violence and conflict as a means to resolve this issue.¹

1. On June 24 the Spokesperson, referring to the Post-Tsunami joint mechanism said: "I was earlier asked about the signing of the joint mechanism in Sri Lanka. I can say to that that during the visit of President of Sri Lanka to India from 2nd to 4th June, we had conveyed our understanding of and support to her efforts to devise a mechanism by which relief could be channelized to the victims of the tsunami. Considering the scale and tragedy, it is important that the relief is made available to all victims regardless of their religion or ethnicity. We hope that Post-Tsunami Operational Management Structure, or P-TOMS as it is called, functions in this direction." As far as India is concerned we will continue to provide assistance and a number of bilateral projects are under discussion in the infrastructure, health and sharing of technical expertise. These are being discussed between the two governments. It may be recalled that on May 12 Eric Solheim, Advisor to the Norwegian Foreign Ministry had met Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran and conveyed to him his latest assessment of the situation in Sri Lanka since he had played a significant role in facilitating the establishment of a three-tier joint mechanism in North and East of the island for delivery of relief and reconstruction aid to the Tsunami-affected areas.

The Sri Lanka Foreign Minister, Mr. Mangala Samaraweera visited New Delhi for official talks from 30 November to 1 December. He called on the Prime Minister of India Dr. Manmohan Singh and had discussions with the Minister of State for External Affairs, Mr. E Ahamed.

Minister Samaraweera apprised the Indian side of the policy the Government of President Mahinda Rajapaksa seeks to follow with regard to the peace process in Sri Lanka. He emphasized the continued commitment of the government to the maintenance of the Ceasefire, and the desire for a review of its operations, so that the implementation of the Agreement can be made more effective. The Government also extends a firm invitation to the LTTE to negotiations to discuss a political solution. President Rajapaksa views the greatest possible degree of openness, transparency and inclusivity in the peace process, as being essential for its acceptance and eventual success. Minister Samaraweera spelt out the approaches that President Rajapaksa and his administration would adopt towards this end of arriving at a broad national consensus. Parallel to this endeavour, reconstruction and development in the North and East would be accorded the highest priority.

Minister Samaraweera affirmed that the Government of Sri Lanka would, in the tradition of close dialogue between the two countries, continue to apprise the Government of India in regard to the ways and means by which the peace process could be made more effective.

Indian side thanked the Sri Lanka Foreign Minister for outlining the approach of President Rajapaksa and his administration towards the peace process. India believes that an enduring solution can only emerge essentially through internal political processes. India supports the process of seeking a negotiated settlement acceptable to all sections of Sri Lanka society within the framework of a united Sri Lanka, and consistent with democracy, pluralism and respect for human rights. India continues to maintain an abiding interest in the security of Sri Lanka and remains committed to its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Several other matters of mutual interest, including the further strengthening of economic and commercial cooperation, were addressed during the visit of Minister Samaraweera. Both sides emphasized the need to conclude, as early as possible, the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement.

Government of India reiterated to Minister Samaraweera the invitation already extended by it to President Rajapaksa to pay a State Visit to India at the earliest opportunity.

264. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the visit of Sri Lankan President Rajapaksa.New Delhi, December 28, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening. I thought I would brief you on today's talks between India and Sri Lanka very briefly. As you know, President Rajapaksa arrived yesterday and this morning there was a ceremonial welcome at Rashtrapati Bhawan after which the visiting President went and laid a wreath at Rajghat. There was a detailed interaction between the two delegations in Hyderabad House. There was also one to one meeting with the Prime Minister, which I understand was for forty minutes after which there were delegation level talks.

I have some readout from the delegation level talks. We understand that the President briefed the Indian side of his assessment of the current status of the peace process in Sri Lanka. Both sides agreed that peace talks aimed at strengthening the ceasefire should begin at the earliest. The discussions also covered the wide-ranging economic and commercial cooperation that already exists between the two countries, as well as ways and means of enhancing it in the coming years. Specific issues in this context that came up were the conclusion of a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement, cooperation in the field of railways, civil aviation, information technology and energy.

As you know the President will carry on the rest of his programme this evening, which will include the banquet by the President and other calls by several Ministers today and tomorrow, the details of which I have already given you.

Question: What is the status of the Defence Agreement¹? Is the Defence Minister calling on him?

1. Though there was no reference to the defence cooperation agreement, but media quoted official sources to confirm that India had indeed provided Sri Lanka with two indigenously developed military radar on the eve of the President's visit. The transfer of radars, to enable low-level detection of fighter aircraft, marked the resumption of non-lethal military aid after five years. The Defence Ministry sources which confirmed the transfer of radars did not provide their details. It beefs up the Sri Lankan defence against any distant possibility of the LTTE acquiring prowess in air operations. (Presently the LTTE possessed two micro-light aircraft and believed to have developed two airstrips in areas under its control.) Media reports said that the radars were provided by Bharat Electronic Ltd. It may be recalled that the two countries deepened the military contacts and held the first ever joint naval exercises earlier in December.

Answer: I do not have exact programme with me but, I do not recall a call on by the Raksha Mantri and I am afraid that what I have given you is what I have out of today's discussions. I really cannot now go into guessing what else was discussed and what was not discussed.

Question: Any discussion on a greater role for India in the peace process?

Answer: As I said, he (President) briefed the Indian side on the current status of the peace process. They said that the talks, which are aimed at strengthening the ceasefire should begin at the earliest. So, this is the position which both shared. I can add that India's position on the peace process is well known and President Rajapaksa welcomed India's commitment to peace and security in Sri Lanka.

Question: Navtej, is India willing to be the fifth co-chair (in peace talks)?

Answer: As I said, India's position on the peace process is well known.

Question: How does India view the peace process in view of the recent attacks in Sri Lanka?

Answer: We are deeply concerned at the recent escalation of violence in Sri Lanka and the repeated violations of the ceasefire. This is a trend that can only undermine the search for a negotiated political settlement, which is critical for the maintenance of peace and for the resumption of talks which are aimed at finding a just solution to Sri Lanka's ethnic problems.

Question: Is India embarrassed by the fact the Jayalalitha has cancelled her meeting (with the President of Sri Lanka)?

Answer: I would not characterize it as embarrassment or anything like that. The programme for Tamil Nadu for the visiting President was tentative in nature and was based on mutual convenience. Given the fact that the President has a full schedule in Delhi and other places and the fact that the Chief Minister was not available that day, the programme has been changed.

Question: Is he going to Chennai at all?

Answer: I understand no.

Question: So he goes to Guruvayur and he leaves India?

Answer: Yes, he goes to Kochi.

265. Speech of President A.P.J. Abdul Kalam at a banquet in honour of the President of Sri Lanka

New Delhi, December 28, 2005.

Your Excellency President Mahinda Rajapaksa,
President of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka,
Madam Shiranthi Rajapaksa,

Excellencies,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome Your Excellency and all the distinguished members of the Sri Lankan delegation to India and to especially extend my felicitations to you on your assumption of the high office of the President of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka.

India and Sri Lanka are inextricably linked together by bonds of history, culture and religion. Our relations go back many centuries and are part of our ancient legends. Buddhism is indeed an excellent bond between our two nations and our people.

Your Excellency, we are your closest neighbours. Our immutable and inalienable geographical links come alive even in the satellite pictures taken from outer space. Gandhiji once described your beautiful island as a 'resplendent pendant'. Pandit Nehru too was enchanted by the beauty of your land and observed eloquently: 'It is ever afternoon there and the summer breezes blow and rustle through the graceful palm trees.' We have built up on this shared legacy of ours in line with the vision of our founding fathers. Our bilateral cooperation has also expanded rapidly over the past decade. As your late Foreign Minister Lakshman Kadirgamar put it, our relations are now in a state of 'irreversible excellence'.

We have had the opportunity today to discuss a wide range of developments, including your ideas for taking forward the peace process in Sri Lanka. We have convergence of views on a wide range of issues, and this flows naturally from our shared respect for democracy, diversity and dialogue. India remains committed in its support to the unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka and for a peaceful, negotiated settlement of the ethnic issue. We appreciate your efforts to build a national consensus on a solution within a united Sri Lanka and on the basis of maximum devolution. We are ready to share with you our own experience of unity in diversity, pluralist traditions in a democracy and devolution within a federal framework. We stand with you in rejecting war and conflict and in opposing terrorism, which constitutes the biggest threat to democratic societies today.

Your Excellency, we have agreed to impart a greater purpose to our efforts to use the full potential of our bilateral relationship. I am impressed by the sincerity of your vision for the social and economic progress of your country. India is ready and willing to assist you in this noble task. I hope we can reach agreement during your visit on specific projects of mutual cooperation in the areas of agriculture and fisheries, railways, health, ports infrastructure, education and vocational training. Our bilateral development cooperation has entered an important stage with the agreement on Small Development Projects, which would act as a platform for exchange of technical expertise at the grass roots level.

Trade, investment and people-to-people contacts between our two countries are expanding significantly. Globalisation as a worldwide phenomenon, is here to stay. It presents both opportunities and challenges. India and Sri Lanka need to pool their resources and talent to use the opportunities and to meet the future challenges. It is against this background that I take great satisfaction at the functioning of the bilateral Free Trade Agreement between our two countries. Since its inception in 1998, this Agreement has helped both the countries to improve their trade and investment. Indeed, the bilateral Free Trade Agreement has become a role model for the entire South Asian region. I am confident that the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA), which we hope to finalise soon, would lead to further growth in trade and investment to the benefit of our two peoples.

Your Excellency, this State Visit gives us an opportunity to take stock of our bilateral relations and to take them forward. We must not be complacent about the excellent state of our bilateral relationship. We need to work harder to achieve much higher levels of cooperation in all areas in a way that will bring tangible benefits to the people of our two countries.

Distinguished guests, may I now request you to join me in raising a toast to the: -

- health of His Excellency President Rajapaksa and Madam Shiranthi Rajapaksa;
- everlasting friendship and cooperation between India and Sri Lanka; and
- peace, progress and prosperity of Sri Lanka

2. President Rajapaksa held wide-ranging discussions with President A.P.J. Abdul Kalam, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, Home Minister Shivraj Patil, Commerce Minister Kamal Nath and Shipping Minister T.R. Baalu, and other dignitaries.
3. Smt. Sonia Gandhi, Chairperson, UPA, called on President Rajapaksa.
4. The President also met with several senior personalities from other political parties¹ during his stay in New Delhi.

1. The President during his stay in New Delhi met with senior leaders of the Communist Party of India (Marxist), who urged him to provide maximum autonomy for Tamils within the

5. It was noted with satisfaction that Indo-Lanka bilateral relations have continued to be in a state of excellence characterized by political consensus in both countries, understanding, friendship, cooperation and mutual respect and benefit. The two sides reaffirmed their resolve to further consolidate and build on this strong and dynamic relationship.

6. The discussions on international issues reflected the long-standing consonance of views between the two friendly nations. Both sides remain resolutely committed to opposing terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, while reiterating that terrorism can never be justified, either on political, or on religious, or on ideological grounds. The two sides agreed that the current global challenges require the reinvigoration of multilateralism, including through the strengthening of the UN system. In this context, Sri Lanka reiterated her position that the UN Security Council reform process should facilitate India's legitimate claim for a permanent seat in the UN Security Council and reaffirmed her support for the candidature of India as a permanent member of the UN Security Council.

7. India and Sri Lanka emphasized their commitment to work for the full realisation of the objectives identified by the 13th SAARC Summit in Dhaka last November. They were of the view that the South Asian Free Trade Agreement once operationalised should pave the way for the SAARC nations to move towards even closer economic cooperation, with the eventual goal being that of an economic union encompassing the entire region.

framework of a united Sri Lanka. The CPM leaders were Prakash Karat (General Secretary) and Sitaram Yechury (Polit Bureau member). Media reports said that the President told the Marxist Leaders that his government was eager to have the LTTE to return to the peace talks and he was willing to discuss all issues within these parametres. The Left leaders apparently conveyed to the visiting President that they have favoured granting maximum autonomy to the Sri Lanka Tamils within the framework of united Sri Lanka. Meanwhile supporters of Sri Lanka Tamils, including the two constituents of the ruling United Progressive Alliance at the Centre – the Pattali Makkal Katchi (PMK) and the Marumaarchi Dravida Munnetra Kazagam (MDMK) on December 29 urged the Prime Minister not to extend any military assistance to the Island government. A resolution adopted by the Tamil Parties in Chennai on December 29 inter alia said "at no cost should India extend military assistance such as the sale of arms, training the island's army personnel and renovating its naval or air base. Meanwhile media reports quoted official sources to suggest that the cease fire in Sri Lanka was under 'strain' and there was a need for a "southern consensus" and devolution of powers in the island nation. The same unidentified sources were quoted to say that the Sri Lanka President did not seek a greater Indian involvement in Sri Lanka, but he did seek Indian support and blessings for the peace process. It was said that Rajapakse appeared "flexible" on the issue of devolution of powers and believed that he should be given 'space' to push for a settlement.

8. The Prime Minister of India and the President of Sri Lanka expressed satisfaction at the dynamism of the bilateral economic relationship. They noted the good progress by the two governments in building on the success of the India-Sri Lanka Free Trade Agreement by negotiating a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA). They expressed their confidence that the finalisation of CEPA, on the basis of mutual benefit for both sides, would further unleash the inherent synergies between the two countries.

9. It was noted that India has made an initial allocation of a Credit Line of US$ 100 million for the integrated development of the Colombo – Matara rail network. It was agreed at the request of the Sri Lanka side, that India would take this process forward by the extension of concessionary terms to be mutually agreed upon, for the allocated credit of US$ 100 million, and for any additional credit to be made available for the said project. A multi-disciplinary delegation from India has already visited Sri Lanka. A delegation of officials from Sri Lanka representing the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Railways, will visit India in turn to discuss and agree on the technical and engineering aspects of the project, and the terms and conditions of the Credit Line.

10. The two leaders welcomed the bilateral understandings being reached on identifying joint ventures for the development of the eastern Sri Lankan port city of Trincomalee, and its surrounding region. They noted the need to prepare a Master Plan for realizing, including through the building up of the necessary infrastructural support, the full economic potential held out by Trincomalee and its environs. It was agreed in this context that a coal based power project of capacity 2x250 MW will be set up in the Trincomalee region of Sri Lanka, as a joint venture between the National Thermal Power Company Ltd, a Government of India enterprise and the Ceylon Electricity Board, a Government of Sri Lanka entity. The Government of Sri Lanka will have the responsibility of facilitating and extending all necessary help in setting up this project. A detailed Memorandum of Understanding for setting up the Power Project is to be signed separately.

11. The Indian side in recognition of the high priority accorded by the President of Sri Lanka to reconstruction and development in the North and East, offered to support these efforts through technical and financial assistance. The Sri Lanka side welcomed this offer of assistance and agreed to facilitate the related initiatives. The Indian side also announced assistance in constructing a library and a stadium in Jaffna.

12. The two sides agreed that there was great potential for cooperation in the areas of agriculture, IT and renewable energy. Both sides discussed collaboration in the Information and Communication Technology (ICT) area, which would include, inter alia, institutional capacity building, training and skills development and technical assistance. In this regard, India and Sri Lanka will collaborate to set up an ICT Park in Sri Lanka.

13. The two sides reiterated their desire to accelerate their co-operation in the field of human resource development, and in the fashioning of educational policies appropriate for developing within the national workforces, the skills and capacities required by the 21st Century. Towards this end, it was agreed that the Joint Working Group under the India-Sri Lanka MOU on the Education Exchange Programme would be operationalized at the earliest possible. Several measures funded by India to enhance cooperation in the field of education and training were also agreed upon. These include the Mahatma Gandhi scholarship scheme for 100 deserving Sri Lankan students every year, the upgradation of libraries and science laboratories in the Upcountry areas, the setting up of a Chair in Contemporary Indian studies in Peradeniya University and commissioning of a field study on vocational training centers.

14. It was noted that the training of 450 Sri Lankan Policemen has already commenced in different institutions in India.

15. Sri Lanka welcomed the donation of medical equipment as Tsunami relief to the affected hospitals of Point Pedro and of Hambantota. The Indian side announced that it had initiated action to prepare a Detailed Project Report on the rehabilitation of the tsunami-damaged Base Hospital in Trincomalee. The Indian side also indicated that construction of the new 150-bed Hospital at Dickoya in the Central Province is expected to commence shortly. The Government of India further announced that it would provide equipment to set up a fully-equipped Obstetrics and Gynaecology unit in the existing hospital at Dickoya.

16. Sri Lanka expressed her appreciation for the valuable contribution by the Indian Cultural Centre in Colombo, towards continuing a level of cultural interaction worthy of the longstanding historical and civilizational links between the two nations. President Rajapaksa declared the intent of his administration to present in India during the course of next year, the rich and varied cultural heritage of Sri Lanka via a series of exhibitions and events. The Indian side welcomed this endeavour which would further spur people-to-people interaction, and also enhance intellectual and artistic exchanges. India further announced that it would hold an Exhibition of Contemporary Indian Art in Colombo during 2006.

17. Both the Heads of Government noted that a positive collaborative relationship was being established for the study and monitoring of the environmental implications of the Sethusamudram Ship Channel Project. They endorsed that the outcome of the collaboration must be to reach a common understanding as to whether there are environmental consequences and if so, the action to be taken to mitigate them. They directed towards this end, the continuation of the interaction, as and when necessary, between the concerned technical experts from both sides. They also noted that the Project would bring in its wake developmental opportunities.

18. Both sides reiterated the importance of continuing bilateral cooperation in the demarcation of the continental margins of the two countries.

19. The Indian side welcomed the proposal by Sri Lanka for economic cooperation within the Palk Bay area. India looks forward to Sri Lanka presenting her proposals in the form of a Paper, which would then be the subject of study by an India-Sri Lanka Expert Group. The report of the Expert Group could be considered during the ongoing CEPA negotiations.

20. The President of Sri Lanka and the Prime Minister of India noted that both countries have a record of unbroken commitment to the free and fair exercise of the franchise, and to democratic governance. The two sides were of the view that this common commitment, which is yet another of the many strong bonds between India and Sri Lanka, could be availed of by the establishment of India-Sri Lanka Parliamentary Friendship Associations in the national legislatures of both countries. They noted with satisfaction the formation of the Sri Lanka-India Parliamentary Friendship Association in the Sri Lankan Parliament on December 22, 2005, and the decision to form an India-Sri Lanka Parliamentary Friendship Group in the Indian Parliament. They envisaged that the Associations once established, would cooperate for the further development of democratic best practice, and for strengthening bilateral relations. They accordingly recommended that the Speakers and the Members of the Parliament of India and of the Parliament of Sri Lanka, may consider expeditiously taking the necessary steps towards this end.

21. The President of Sri Lanka briefed the Indian leadership on his approach to the peace process to achieve maximum devolution which preserves the unity and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka. The two sides agreed that an enduring solution can emerge only through internal political processes that promote consensus and reconciliation. India reiterated its support for a process of seeking a negotiated political settlement acceptable to all sections of Sri Lankan society within the framework of an undivided Sri Lanka and consistent with democracy, pluralism and respect for human rights. India continues to maintain an abiding interest in the security of Sri Lanka and remains committed to her unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity. The Indian side expressed the hope that a political settlement of the ethnic issue based on devolution, openness, transparency and inclusivity would emerge through negotiations between the parties concerned, so as to ensure a peaceful and bright future for all Sri Lankans in an undivided and democratic Sri Lanka.

22. The President of Sri Lanka apprised the Prime Minister of India of recent attacks on Sri Lankan security forces and other ceasefire violations. The two leaders deplored violations of the ceasefire, which could undermine the prospects for peace in Sri Lanka. The Indian side welcomed the Sri Lankan Government's offer for early resumption of peace talks. Both sides emphasized the need for the strict observance of the ceasefire and immediate resumption of talks aimed at strengthening the ceasefire.

23. Sri Lanka is appreciative of the Indian offer to provide intellectual and academic resources in support of the peace process. The Sri Lankan side thanked the Indian side for the presentation, during the Presidential State visit, on distribution of powers between Centre, States and local government in India.

24. The State Visit by President Rajapaksa is testimony to the excellent relations between the two countries. President Rajapaksa invited their Excellencies the President and the Prime Minister of India to visit Sri Lanka at mutually convenient times.

267. Press release of the Prime Minister's Office stating that Prime Minister wants Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement talks with ASEAN speeded up.

New Delhi, June 29, 2005.

PM wants CECA talks with ASEAN speeded up. Calls for greater economic integration with neighbours in South Asia.

Government will facilitate capacity building in policymaking and strengthen competitiveness of domestic industry.

The Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) being signed today by the Prime Ministers of India and Singapore in New Delhi will take India another step closer to a CECA with the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh has asked the Trade and Economic Relations Committee (TERC) to come forward with proposals to enable forward movement on negotiations for an India- ASEAN CECA. Noting the fact that over the past decade successive Governments have reiterated their commitment to bring India's tariffs in line with ASEAN rates, the Prime Minister said that while this would benefit all of India's trade partners it is necessary to place trade and investment liberalization with respect to India's neighbours and ASEAN countries on a "faster track".

Dr. Manmohan Singh told the TERC, "we must enlarge our economic interaction and integration with SAARC, BIMSTEC and ASEAN, and find creative solutions to overcome existing hurdles. We must become a partner in the economic progress of our neighbours."

The PM also asked the ministries of finance, commerce and external affairs to strengthen research and policy making capabilities in the area of external trade and economic relations both within Government and outside. The TERC was also asked to produce an annual review of India's external economic relations. The Investment Commission and the National Manufacturing Competitiveness Commission have been asked to take into account the concerns of domestic industry and come forward with ideas to facilitate the transition to a more open economy, more closely engaged with all our neighbours in South and South-east Asia.

268. Press release issued by the Ministry of External Affairs on the First BIMSTEC Energy Ministers' Conference.

New Delhi, October 4, 2005.

First BIMSTEC Energy Ministers' Conference was held in New Delhi on October 4, 2005. One of the main objectives of the Conference was to give impetus to intra-BIMSTEC cooperation in Energy sector.

BIMSTEC-an acronym for Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation, is a grouping for regional cooperation. Its current membership includes Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Myanmar, Nepal, Sri Lanka & Thailand.

In the First BIMSTEC Summit held in Bangkok on July 31, 2004, energy was identified as one of the sectors for focused cooperation. At the Summit, Prime Minister of India had offered to host the BIMSTEC Ministerial Conference on Energy Cooperation.

The Conference deliberated upon various options and strategies for expanding and strengthening cooperation in energy sector and adopted a Ministerial Declaration in this regard on October 4, 2005. It also approved a Plan of Action to implement the decisions of the Conference.

The BIMSTEC Energy Ministers agreed to a vision of electric grid connectivity in the region by developing country-to-country grid inter-connections for ultimately facilitating flow of electricity across the region.

The Conference recognized the need for detailed feasibility studies and techno-economic agreements between and among participating countries to allow for the optimal utilization of the natural gas resources of the region.

It was also agreed to develop hydro power potential of the region, suitably addressing the concerns regarding rehabilitation and environment. The Energy Ministers, inter alia, agreed that all hydro power projects, irrespective of their size are clean and renewable sources of energy.

Special emphasis will be laid for promoting non-conventional energy sources and harmonization of standards. Joint R&D activities would be undertaken for development of cost effective technologies for developing non-conventional energy resources.

The Conference recognized the potential of energy efficiency measures in promoting economic growth and competitiveness of respective economies of the member countries. Efforts will be made to harmonize Standards and Labelling within BIMSTEC countries. Building, domestic appliances and transport have been identified as key areas for focusing attention in respect of energy conservation.

The Conference called upon for experience sharing in reforms, restructuring and best practices in Energy sector. It has been decided to establish a BIMSTEC Centre for Energy for facilitating energy studies and exchange of expertise.

The Ministers agreed to enhance Energy Security through optimal development of energy resources of the region, namely, oil, gas, hydropower, coal, biofuels and other non conventional energy resources.

269. Media briefing by Secretary (East), Rajiv Sikri on the visit of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to Kuala Lumpur.

New Delhi, December 9, 2005.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Navtej Sarna) : Good afternoon everybody and welcome to this special briefing by Shri Rajiv Sikri, Secretary (East), on the forthcoming visit of the Prime Minister to Kuala Lumpur.

Secretary (East) (Shri Rajiv Sikri) : Good evening ladies and gentlemen.

As you are aware, Prime Minister is leaving on Sunday the 11th of December for Kuala Lumpur to attend the India-ASEAN Summit. This is the fourth India-ASEAN Summit. The Summit has been held every year since 2002. It has become a regular feature and an important event in India's diplomatic calendar. This year there will also be the first East Asia Summit on the 14th of December at Kuala Lumpur to which Prime Minister has been invited along with the leaders of 10 ASEAN countries and China, Japan, Republic of Korea, Australia and New Zealand.

The visit of Prime Minister for the India-ASEAN Summit constitutes a very important dimension of our diplomacy, to bring together the different strands of India's 'Look East' policy which is acquiring a greater importance in our overall foreign policy. It is also the occasion where the leaders of the region meet at the highest level. India-ASEAN cooperation over the years has been steadily and very satisfactorily going ahead. One of the parameters to judge this is our trade which was, according to figures that I have with me, nearly 18 billion dollars last year and has been increasing at about 25 per cent or perhaps even more this year. We do not have the full figures for this year but it should be about 22 or 25 billion or something like that.

In Bali two years ago, leaders of India and ASEAN had signed Framework Agreement for Comprehensive Economic Cooperation. One of the elements of that was a Free Trade Agreement on which two sides have been negotiating and the issue of rules of origin has been resolved. We are now very hopeful that FTA negotiations would be completed shortly and that the FTA would come into effect within a year or so.

We have also set up, in the new ASEAN member-States of Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar and Vietnam, Entrepreneurship Development Centres. The one in Laos is fully functional and the Laos side is very happy. The others are in the process of being set up.

There are other elements of our relationship like offers of lines of credit, better connectivity through air, rail and road links. You have no doubt noticed how air connectivity has dramatically improved in the last couple of years between ASEAN countries and India. This is because there is a demand of tourists, of businessmen to look for the opportunities much more actively. We have also been working through RITES on feasibility study for a rail link between India and Myanmar. Discussions are going on for an India-Myanmar-Thailand highway.

In other sectors also like health, agriculture, transport and infrastructure, science and technology, we have had regular interaction with ASEAN partners. There are a number of project activities that are under way.

At the Summit the leaders will review what has been achieved, come up with new ideas, and give the directives to the Ministers and the senior officials for follow up action. I am sure that at this Summit also some new ideas will be put forward for taking forward a multi-faceted cooperation.

The overall relationship with ASEAN is supplemented and complemented by our increasing bilateral ties with the individual countries of ASEAN and the region as a whole. If one were to just look back over the last one year or so, you find that there have been visits to India by the President of Indonesia and Republic of Korea, the Prime Ministers of Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, China, Japan and New Zealand. All these are countries which would be represented at the ASEAN Summit and at the East Asia Summit. We have also had the Senior General Than Shwe of Myanmar. Prime Minister himself was in Bandung in April and now he is going to Kuala Lumpur. These are only the Heads of State or Government visits that I am talking about. These are supplemented by so many more exchanges that have been taking place at different levels and between the States in India and the countries of ASEAN. In the coming months no doubt there will be more such visits from India to these countries and vice versa.

The first East Asia Summit has been much talked about. It is an event to which a lot of attention has been drawn because it will be for the first time that the Heads of State and Government of 16 of some of the more important countries in the world and certainly of this region will meet together. There are increasing inter-linkages and a growing inter-dependence between various countries who will be represented in the East Asia Summit. They are all trying to increase the scope of their cooperation, trade, connectivity, economic investments. It is expected that the East Asia Summit will lead to some progress in leaders exchanging views on what should be the future regional architecture and what would be the future shape of a community of the nations of the East Asia Summit.

Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh, as you know, talked about his vision of increasing inter-linkages on various occasions - the India-ASEAN Business Summit last year and most recently at the World Economic Forum in the end of November and he has articulated the idea of an Asian Economic Community as the long-term objective. So, many people in the region have been thinking about this. Many leaders have been talking about this. Think tanks have been engaged in this idea. Last month one of the think tanks here had organized together with other think tanks a symposium on this. So, all these different strands of thinking will no doubt be reflected in the discussions.

The discussions will take place essentially in a retreat format. There will be a formal session there but it will be essentially in a retreat so that the leaders can meet and discuss among themselves in an informal and free and frank manner their respective views on how various countries could be cooperating. India, I am sure, will be participating actively and constructively in these deliberations. This is the beginning of a process. We are not clear what the outcome will be.

Let me give you a few details about the programme. As I said, there is the India-ASEAN Summit meeting. This is supplemented by various informal meetings that take place on the margins of the gathering. There is the East Asia Summit on the December 14. There will be various bilateral meetings depending on the time available and the convenience on the various leaders. Prime Minister will be speaking on December 12 at Special Leaders Dialogue of the Business Advisory Council of ASEAN. Leaders of Korea and China, I think, are also speaking, maybe some others, I do not have all the details.

Of course, while he is in Kuala Lumpur, Prime Minister will be meeting with the representatives of the Malaysian Indian and the expatriate Indian community in Malaysia.

Question : Can you tell us something about the bilateral meetings that have been finalized?

Secretary (East) : He would certainly be meeting with his host the Prime Minister of Malaysia and maybe some other ASEAN countries and, of course, with some other non-ASEAN countries also. I do not know what has actually been finalized but probably with China, Japan and Korea. But it is subject to convenience and what fits into the programmes.

Question : Could you give us a sense of how discussions are going on especially about the Summit Declaration of ASEAN Plus Six Summit?

Secretary (East) : It is not an ASEAN Plus Six Summit; it is an East Asia Summit. It is probable that there would be some kind of a document to reflect it but it will be a very brief thing. As I said, it would be wrong to expect that in the first meeting. This is a top down driven initiative because there have been no meetings at the Ministerial level or any kind of serious preparatory thing. Let us see what emerges in the discussions the leaders will have. That is the heart of the East Asia Summit that sixteen leaders, may be with just one other person with each leader, would be present in a room and talk around the table and discuss certainly development issues, regional architecture, trans-national issues. All these will come up for discussion. I suppose the effort will be to see what are the points of convergence where the sixteen can act together more effectively than individually or in smaller groups.

Question : Could you give us more details on India's view on the East Asian regional economic architecture, especially in view of reports that China is interested in ASEAN Plus Three?

Secretary (East) : The ASEAN Plus Three is an existing mechanism that has been there for many years. The East Asia Summit is not intended to supplant any of the existing mechanisms. These are all building blocks in what could be a new framework of cooperation. What shape it would take is difficult to say at this stage. As I said, this is merely the beginning of the process of a dialogue. But I think the leaders would agree to meet again. When? It is not clear. What would be the follow up? Leaders will meet and decide this matter.

Question : I have two questions. The first relates to FTA. There is supposed to have been an Early Harvest Agreement. I think it was to be implemented from April 1, this year. I just want to know whether it has started. Secondly, the United States is not invited to this East Asia Summit though President Putin will be present as a guest in Kuala Lumpur. Does India have a view about the American non-inclusiveness at the Summit?

Secretary (East) : As for the Early Harvest Programme, both sides agreed that they would not implement this because there had been no agreement on the rules of origin. The time has passed and now both sides have agreed that we would move on straight to the main FTA. As for the United States and other countries' possible participation, the understanding is that this is a process which is open and inclusive; that ASEAN is the guiding force of this process; and that future membership would be decided on the basis of criteria that have been established by ASEAN. These are: substantial relationship with ASEAN, full dialogue partnership with ASEAN, and acceding to the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in South East Asia.

Question : Will it be a real East Asia Summit because Australia and New Zealand are also participating?

Secretary (East) : East Asia Summit concept flowed out of East Asia Vision Group and an East Asia Study Group that was set up in the late 90s by ASEAN and China, Japan and Korea. Then, last year at the Vientiane Summit the ASEAN decided that they would call the first East Asia Summit this year at Kuala Lumpur. They had a long process of internal discussion about who to invite for this Summit. It was after many months of deliberation that they came up with the three criteria, that I have just outlined, at the meeting of the ASEAN Ministers in a retreat in Cebu in Philippines. I think it was in April this year. This was formalized at the ASEAN Ministerial meeting in Laos in July this year. So, East Asia for the purposes of this Summit means all the countries who are participating. It is not a geographical connotation.

Question : Mr. Sikri, you have talked about the concept of East Asia Summit. Could you talk a little more about how this concept came about? Is it basically to take into its fold the important non-ASEAN countries like RoK, New Zealand, Australia, etc? And what is your agenda? Will it be all comprehensive inclusive of economy, trade, terrorism, etc? Who will be the international observers? Will it be countries like France, Germany, USA? Will there be UN observers?

Secretary (East) : As I said, it is the beginning of a process. One cannot say what shape it will take. As far as I am aware, there is no provision for the moment for any observer of the kind that you have mentioned. It is true that some countries outside the 16 have shown some interest in this organization. But the ASEAN have decided, and I have mentioned that ASEAN is in the driver's seat of this process, that for the first East Asia Summit only these 16 countries will be there. President Putin will be in Malaysia for the ASEAN-Russia Summit, a one off summit of the kind ASEAN had with Australia and New Zealand last year. Perhaps he may be invited as a guest of the host Malaysia for something on the margins of the East Asia Summit. But we are not quite clear. ASEAN are working in this.

Question : Does India have a vision for the Summit? What are we looking for?

Secretary (East) : I think in my earlier remarks I have pointed out how this part of the world is increasingly becoming important in our foreign policy. In our foreign economic policy if you look at the various moves under way or things that have already been done on establishing either FTAs or comprehensive economic cooperation agreements, you would understand that we have signed India-Singapore Economic Cooperation Agreement in June. We have an India-Thailand FTA. We have just concluded, or about to conclude, a Joint Study Group Report on Malaysia. When the Indonesian President was here we agreed to set up a Joint Study Group to examine a CECA with Indonesia. We have similar joint study groups with the Republic of Korea and Japan which are meeting. We have moves for a BIMSTEC FTA. We have a SAARC SAFTA which is there. We are discussing with the Gulf Cooperation Council. So, there is a lot of integration that is happening. I have just also listed out for you bilateral contacts with these countries. Our trade and economic relations with this part of the world constitute about 30 per cent of our overall foreign trade. That is a large chunk. This is also an area of growth and dynamic economies. It is most natural that India should seek to be plugged into important growth areas. Foreign trade is now an increasingly important component of our overall GDP. As I have mentioned earlier, Prime Minister himself has spelt out his vision of area from the Himalayas to the Pacific where there is free movement of capital goods, creativity, ideas. He has talked about a pan-Asian FTA at the India Economic Summit. So, these are some long-term visions that are there.

Question : Coming back to FTA with ASEAN, does it mean that we will have an agreement similar to the one that we have with Thailand, Indonesia, etc?

Secretary (East) : There are certain things. With ASEAN we have to establish a common denominator for all the ten ASEAN countries. With individual countries you have different parameters because you have to have the same negative list or the same approach for the ten ASEAN countries. It could be different from the individual countries. It is not necessary that what has been agreed with an individual country is necessarily what will apply in the case of ASEAN as a whole.

Question : Will the FTA be finalized during this visit?

Secretary (East) : As I said, the rules of origin have been finalized. But the other details still have to be negotiated including the sensitive list, the negative list. So, that will take a few months.

Question : Will there be any signing?

Secretary (East) : The framework agreement has already been signed. That was signed two years ago in Bali. So, this is no actual signing.

Question : Do you envisage any rivalry with China in this region?

Secretary (East) : I do not think that we are looking at that kind of a scenario in Asia. Our own relationship with China is progressing very well. Our economic relationship and trade are doing very well. We do not see any need for rivalry with China, India or China kind of situation.

Question : Malaysia has been making some noises about the inclusion of Australia. Do you have anything to say?

Secretary (East) : I am not aware that there is any reservation on the part of Malaysia because there is a common ASEAN position which is that all these countries, which I have just mentioned, will be included in the first East Asia Summit.

Question : Could you give us some more details on the FTA and the rules of origin? What is the exact position? What are we looking for? Is that the only sticking point?

Secretary (East) : I think you will have to talk to our commerce negotiators to get the more detailed briefing. But let me try and tell you whatever I understand. The rules of origin are meant to ensure that only those goods which originate in the ASEAN countries get the preferential access to the Indian market and that there is no diversion from other countries via ASEAN. Certain criteria are invariably laid down that there must be a certain minimum value addition; that there must be a change in tariff heading at a certain four-digit or six-digit level; that there should be some minimal transformation; that some processes are described; and that for certain items there could be product-specific rules. That is as far as I can say. For more details I am afraid you will have to talk to our commerce negotiators.

Question : But is that the only sticking point?

Secretary (East) : No, there is also the issue of what is going to be the negative list on which duty free access will not be given. There may be some items which are sensitive for us and certain items which are sensitive for ASEAN. But the FTA would cover substantially all trade between India and ASEAN when it is fully kicked in which would be 2011 in the case of original six ASEAN countries, and 2016 I think for the CLMD countries.

Question : We have received the video footage from Singapore which shows images of Mahatma Gandhi painted on a slipper. It has been there for the past almost one month. Also, in the past there have been instances in some countries of images of Hindu Gods and Goddesses being printed on footwear. What do you intend to do with regard to the instance in Singapore?

Secretary (East) : This is the first time that I am hearing about it. We will look into it.

Question : Will India push for the expansion of ASEAN Plus Three to ASEAN Plus Four?

Secretary (East) : I do not think there is any move to have an ASEAN Plus Four. What is now is much wider architecture of ASEAN plus these six other countries.

Question : Sir, you talked about how our trade is evolving with these countries. Do you want it to remain a primarily economic relationship or will it expand into a geo-strategic relationship?

Secretary (East) I think the issues that would be discussed will be also going beyond the purely economic. But I would not go to the extent of saying this could be geo-strategic. There are countries outside these 16 which have important interests there. I would like to reiterate what I mentioned earlier that this is an open and inclusive forum. That is one of the principles which has been agreed upon.

Question : The last two-three Summits of ASEAN have mainly focused on trade. But we notice that security and counter terrorism have been taking the centre stage in these countries especially Indonesia, Thailand and Philippines. Now India has also been plagued by this. Is there any agenda for India for this Summit on these issues?

Secretary (East) : Cooperation with the ASEAN in the field of counter terrorism is envisaged. The leaders issued a statement on cooperation in the field of counter terrorism. It was at the Bali Summit in 2003. We do have individual working groups and other cooperation with the individual ASEAN countries. With the ASEAN as a whole also we have been participating in various workshops that have been organized with interaction between counter terrorism centers that are located in the region. This is a part of the activity covered under the ARF also in which India has been an active participant. We have also hosted many events. So, yes, counter terrorism is an important element of cooperation with ASEAN.

270. Statement by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on his departure for Kuala Lumpur to attend the India – ASEAN Summit and East Asia Summit.

New Delhi, December 11, 2005.

I am leaving for Malaysia today to participate in the 4th India-ASEAN Summit and the 1st East Asia Summit that will be held on 13-14th December.

The India-ASEAN Summit is an occasion to review the progress that has been made in our relationship with the ASEAN countries and consider new initiatives for cooperation that we could undertake jointly. Our relations with ASEAN as a whole, and with its individual members, have progressed steadily and satisfactorily over the years. They have acquired a qualitatively new dimension since 2002, when we initiated our annual Summit Dialogue. We attach great importance to our relations with ASEAN, which constitute a central element in India's 'Look East' Policy¹.

1. Talking to newsmen accompanying him on board the flight that brought the Prime Minister to Kuala Lumpur, Dr. Manmohan Singh said India did not need to look West to attract investments, but should focus on South-East Asia and East Asia as the region has the largest savings surplus in the world. He said East Asia and South-East Asia were of the "greatest importance" to India as it sought more investments. He said India had a "benign" relationship with South-East Asia and had no dispute with any country there. Reiterating India's determination to conclude a free trade area agreement with the ASEAN, Dr. Singh said New Delhi's vision at the East Asia Summit was to bring about an Asian Economic Community. He said the Asian Economic Community would constitute a "new magnet, a new pole" for growth and stability in the world economy. Asked about the resistance New Delhi to the operation of Chinese companies, Dr. Singh said he welcomed Chinese investments. "We need faster growth of our economic exchanges with China. Our trade is growing at a healthy rate. I expect that in the years to come more Indian companies will invest in China. Several Indian pharmaceutical companies are already in China," he said. Asked whether China was trying to limit India's growth, Dr. Singh said it was a "misconception" that the countries were competitors. "India and China are partners. It is our effort to engage China in greater economic interaction. Our relations with China are moving in a healthy direction. India and China were also able to agree on basic guiding principles to resolve their border dispute. We are hopeful that we can make progress with China, but also in resolving our border issue." Describing the Congress as the author of India's "Look East"

The First East Asia Summit would be a historic event. It would be the first ever gathering of leaders of countries that have made the region an engine of growth for the entire world economy. It is the beginning of a process that brings together countries with increasing inter-linkages and growing inter-dependence. It is our expectation that the Summit would articulate a collective long-term vision for shaping the regional architecture and promoting community-building.

While in Malaysia, I will also address the Special Leaders Dialogue organized by the ASEAN Business Advisory Council and interact with local business leaders. Malaysia has a very large population of people of Indian origin and I will be meeting them and the expatriate Indian community.

During my stay, I will get an opportunity to interact with the leaders of countries who will be in Kuala Lumpur at that time. I would be holding bilateral discussions and reviewing bilateral relations with our host and the other leaders present.

271. Media briefing by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on-board Special Aircraft to Kuala Lumpur to attend 4th India-ASEAN Summit and 1st East Asia Summit.

December 11, 2005.

Prime Minister (Shri Manmohan Singh) : Ladies and gentlemen, the Look-East Policy was first elaborated by the Congress Government in 1991. I am happy to note that that initiative, which at that time looked visionary, has enormously increased our linkages with the countries of ASEAN and countries of East Asia. Our trade with South Korea, our trade with China, our trade with ASEAN countries, is increasing at a handsome rate. Also, we are forging new linkages in trade and services. In the years to come, I believe investment flows will also figure very prominently in exchanges between India and countries of ASEAN, and other countries of East Asia.

policy, the Prime Minister said the country's trade with East Asia and ASEAN was growing at a "handsome rate". In the years to come investment flows would figure prominently in exchanges between ASEAN and East Asia.

Ten years ago nobody could imagine that South Korea will be such a large investor in India. Today, that is a reality. There is a new wave in Japan looking at the possibilities not only of trade but of investment and cooperation in many other ways between India and Japan. So, this visit is of great importance for us. It is in a way a fulfilment of our commitment to Look-East Policy, to work closely with the countries of South-East Asia and East Asia. That is because in many ways we have a benign relationship with East Asia and South-East Asia.

Indonesia is our neighbour; Myanmar is our neighbour; with Malaysia we have a long historic link; with Thailand we are forging together a new relationship in BIMSTEC. These are all countries with which we have no disputes of any kind. Therefore, on this benign background we can build up a healthy economic relationship covering trade, investment flows. In the years to come, we have to notice that the largest savings surplus of the world is in East Asia and South-East Asia. So, if we are looking for investment, we do not have to look West. The real surplus resources, surplus savings, are in East Asia and South-East Asia. In our quest for more foreign investment in our country, this is the region of greatest importance. That is why, my meetings with the ASEAN leaders are of great importance.

I will reaffirm the commitment of our Government to work out a Free Trade Arrangement with the ASEAN countries. At the East Asian Summit I will spell out the vision of India to work with other like-minded countries to bring about an Asian Economic Community, which will constitute a new magnet, a new fold, for growth and stability in the world economy.

Question : On your reference to the East Asia Summit and South East Asia, one of the things that we have seen is there is some resistance within sections of the Government to greater economic interaction especially with China and through the North-East especially. There has been resistance to Chinese companies operating and expanding in India. As part of your Look-East Policy, are you looking to remove some of these obstacles?

Prime Minister : We need a faster growth of our economic exchanges with China. Our trade is growing at a healthy rate. I expect that in the years to come, more Indian companies will invest in China. Several pharmaceutical companies of India are operating in China. I welcome Chinese investment in our country.

Question : Through the Yunnan Province there are proposals like the PCIM initiative which India is not ...

Prime Minister : We should look at all proposals which establish closer linkages between India and ASEAN countries and India and East Asia.

Question : Are you hopeful of India getting a berth in the Core Committee at the East Asian Summit?

Prime Minister : All these matters as to what shape the East Asia Summit will take, what permanent arrangements will be made, are the subject matter of discussion. The very fact that we are invited to take part in it, is a measure of our potential to contribute to the economic growth of East Asia.

Question : The world is again getting divided into blocs – the European Community and the Asian Community. ...Inaudible...

Prime Minister : Let me say that regionalism has come to stay. There is a regional trading arrangement in Europe. The European Union is more than a trading arrangement, it is a community. The American continent also has seen an upsurge of regionalism. In this background, I do not think there is anything wrong in Asian countries coming together to forge the growth of an Asian Economic Community. In the final analysis, all these three groups must adopt convergent policies to contribute to world growth.

Question : There is one of the concerns that China might try to prevent Indian firms ... (Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : There is a misconception that India and China are in competition. India and China are economic partners. It is our effort to engage China in greater interaction with India. Our relations with China are evolving in a healthy direction. Even on the border issue, we have agreed on the basic principles, the guiding principles, which should guide alleviation of the border issue. We are hopeful to make, and we can make, progress not only in economic relations with China but also in solving the border issue.

Question : Could you spell out at what stage is the separation exercise of our civilian and military nuclear facilities?

Prime Minister : We have two groups – one on the US' side and one on our side. These groups are interacting. As far as the exercise for separation of civilian and military programmes, I think fairly advanced stage.

Question : Are you going to take up the issue of terrorism?

Prime Minister : Terrorism today is a world problem, international terrorism you have seen in our neighbourhood. (We have seen it in) Indonesia for the last several years. We have seen it in Philippines. So, I think it is now widely recognised that international terrorism constitutes a threat to the civilised world anywhere and everywhere.

Question : Mr. Prime Minister, some ASEAN countries were not too keen on India being included at this stage in East Asia Summit. They wanted that the Summit ... But China supported it I think.

Prime Minister : It is a fact that we are invited. I think we should look at the outcome. I find there is a great support for India's engagement and India's involvement. The South-East Asian countries recognise that a fast-growing Indian economy with a Gross National Product of over seven hundred billion, growing at the rate of seven to eight per cent, has beneficial impact on growth processes in South-East Asia as a whole.

Question : Is there any effort to join ASEAN-Plus-Three?

Prime Minister : We are already in ASEAN Plus-Three.

Question : How important is the East Asia Summit for India?

Prime Minister: I am saying it is very important. The speed at which our trade is growing with East Asia, it is not growing with the same speed with any other country. Look at the investment that is coming into India from South Korea. Whether it is China, South Korea or Japan, I see enormous scope for expanding trade and investment flows between our countries.

Question : How do you react to the presence of Australia and New Zealand in the East-Asia Summit?

Prime Minister : We are happy that Australia and New Zealand are there.

* * * *

Question : Now that ...(Inaudible)... important economic agenda of the Government ...(Inaudible)...

Prime Minister : The economic agenda of the Government is now well laid down. We have, in the last one and a half years, taken several initiatives. There is the employment guarantee programme. We have now to implement it and see that it is expanded all over the country in the next four years. We have come out with the Rural Health Mission covering eighteen States. We have to implement it and see that the health status of our nation improves very substantially. We have come out with Bharat Nirman, a programme to improve rural infrastructure like power, roads, telecom, and other facilities. We have to implement that. We have only last week launched the Urban Renewal Mission which seeks to improve the quality of living of our citizens ... We have now a clearly set agenda. Never before in our history, I think, any Government in one year has come out with so many initiatives. Our overall thrust is to ensure our economy grows at the rate of 8-10 percent per annum and the fruits of this growth reach the poorer sections of our society, that our agriculture is able to receive a proper push. We need a second Green Revolution in agriculture.

Question : Mr. Prime Minister, on your larger kind of vision for East Asia and South-East Asia, there is some impression that India seems closer to the United States than other member-countries in Asia. So, what is your larger strategic vision for India?

Prime Minister : I have said that coming to trade, technology flow, investment, South-East Asia and East Asia are the two regions of greatest importance for the future growth of our economy.

272. Keynote address by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at Special Leaders' Dialogue of ASEAN Business Advisory Council.

Kuala Lumpur, December 12, 2005.

I am indeed very happy to have the opportunity to address such an important forum as yours. I thank Dato Ajit Singh for the kind words that he has spoken about me and my country. He is an old friend and I believe it is customary on such occasions to praise one's friends. But I have known him for many-many years when he was in the Malaysian Civil service, then he rose to head the ASEAN Secretariat. We have great admiration for him in our country as a great friend of India and a great ambassador of goodwill for ASEAN. I take this opportunity to thank the ASEAN Business Advisory Council for inviting me to outline our vision of the India-ASEAN partnership. I assure you we take this partnership very seriously and we are determined to carry this partnership to an ever-expanding horizon.

Some of you might recall that in 1992, our Government launched India's "Look East Policy". This was not merely an external economic policy, it was also a strategic shift in India's vision of the world and India's place in the evolving global economy. Most of all it was about reaching out to our civilizational neighbours in South East Asia and East Asia. I have always viewed India's destiny as being inter-linked with that of Asia and more so South East Asia. I reiterate India's commitment to work with ASEAN and East Asian countries to make the 21st century truly an Asian century.

India's share in the global flows of goods, services, knowledge and culture has grown exponentially in the past decade. Today, our external economic profile is robust and re-assuring to investors, at home as well as abroad. After registering an 8 per cent rate of growth in 2003-2004, our economy recorded upwards of 7.0 per cent growth for two years in a row. Indeed, in the first half of the current fiscal year, we have touched 8.5% and it is our ambition in the next three-four years to raise India's growth rate to the range of 9 to 10 per cent per annum. In the past year and a half, our policies relating to investment, taxation, foreign trade, foreign direct investment, banking, finance and capital markets have evolved to make Indian industry and enterprise more competitive globally. We have launched a massive program for rural renewal which will upgrade rural infrastructure and incomes and thereby expand the domestic market. New policies are enabling public-private partnership in the modernisation of roads system, railways system, ports, airports, power and the entire urban infrastructure.

Today, I am happy to report to you that India is a vibrant marketplace. Our entrepreneurs are investing overseas successfully. Businesses from abroad, including from ASEAN, Japan and the Republic of Korea, find India a productive and profitable business destination. Similarly, the gathering momentum of India-China relations is visible in the expansion of our bilateral economic ties. The process of engagement in the Asian region has truly taken off. I am confident it will be self-sustaining, enhancing direct contact between peoples and civil societies of the region.

The challenge that faces all of us today is to create and maintain a regional and international environment that enables us to attain and sustain high rates of economic growth. We must create opportunities for entrepreneurship to flourish not only locally, but also regionally and globally. Economic activity cannot be confined to national borders; it must be channelled to fuel growth in each other's countries. Regional trading arrangements have become important building blocks of multilateralism in an increasingly globalized world that we live in.

Therefore, India seeks closer economic interaction with ASEAN. We are committed to bringing down our tariffs to levels prevalent in ASEAN countries, to dismantle unwanted barriers and to expand global capital flows. We must walk this road together with ASEAN, so that enterprises in our countries find it a mutually beneficial process, not a hurtful one. There may be losers, and there will certainly be gainers, but on the whole, we will obtain a win-win outcome and that should be our ambition to work jointly.

In this context, India has concluded a Framework Agreement on Comprehensive Economic Cooperation with ASEAN in 2003 and with Singapore more recently, a few months ago. We are developing a similar model with Thailand, and are setting up a Joint Study Group for conclusion of Free Trade Agreements with Malaysia, Indonesia, Japan and the Republic of Korea. We are also examining ways to develop regional trading arrangements with our great neighbour - China. These are all milestones on the road to the eventual creation of an Asian Economic Community, or the 'arc of prosperity' that I envisage to become a reality in the early part of the 21st century.

I believe the objective basis for the economies of our region to come together already exists. The subjective desire to create an East Asian Community, bringing together ASEAN, China, Japan, Korea, and also Australia and New Zealand, is manifest. Like the North American Free Trade Area, and the expanding European Union, a Pan-Asian FTA will be a dynamic, open and inclusive association of the countries of our vast region. This will not be easy, and it cannot be done in a day. There will be sceptics. But for believers, it is eminently possible. I am convinced that this is the only way to move forward and India wishes to associate with other like-minded countries to make it happen.

I believe that the East Asian Community is a natural extension of the ASEAN-India engagement process. The India-ASEAN Free Trade Agreement can become the first step in the process. The limited Free Trade Area is a beginning but we must ensure that it leads to explosive growth – both in trade and investment.

The essence of the idea is to build up closer linkages among India and the countries of the ASEAN. This we believe can be done through identifying and drawing upon each other's strengths. The key to the future is the development of new synergies. In the 1960s, synergies between scientists in India and scientists at the International Rice Research Institute in the Philippines contributed to the dawn of Green Revolution in India. This resulted in filling India's granaries with food grains. We have both benefited from each other.

Today India has developed expertise in high technology areas such as Information Technology, Space, Biotechnology and Pharmaceuticals. We are ready to share our skills in these sectors with our partners in ASEAN and other developing countries. Each of these sectors presents its own opportunities for India-ASEAN cooperation.

With the growing recognition of complementary strengths, India is developing increasing links to ASEAN and East Asian production networks. These links relate to the knowledge intensive segments of the value chain. They include software development, R&D, engineering and designing and high quality manufacturing, and are invaluable to the furthering of the process of integration.

The best aspect of our renewed engagement is that both of us recognise now that we have something to offer one another. The ASEAN region has an abundance of natural resources and significant technological skills. These provide a natural base for the growth of synergies and integration between ASEAN and India - in both trade and investment. I believe we can double the present level of bilateral trade by 2007, reaching a target of US$30 billion by then.

I am therefore happy that the inaugural meeting of the ASEAN India Business Council was held in May 2005 in this very beautiful city. The Council must be active to exert pressure on Governments to move faster than they are wont to do. It must reach out to all stakeholders in India and ASEAN member countries to mobilise opinion in favour of greater regional interaction. I look forward to working with leaders in this region for the future success of India- ASEAN cooperation and that of the East Asian community. On behalf of the Government of India, I pledge myself to work with all like-minded countries and like-minded friends to make the future happening.

273. Speech by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh at the meeting with the Indian Community in Malaysia.

Kuala Lumpur, December 12, 2005.

I am delighted to be here with members of the Indian community in Malaysia. I believe the Malaysian-Indian community represents the largest concentration of Persons of Indian Origin living outside the Indian sub-continent. This makes our interaction this evening even more significant. However, it is not numbers alone that make you so special. You have, for generations, kept the spirit and the idea of India alive in this home away from home. I commend you for it. I salute you.

The 'Little Indias' which we see in so many towns in Malaysia are more than geographical spaces. They are repositories of the sentiment that links people of Indian origin to their Motherland. I compliment you for the affection that you still have for the land of your ancestors. I salute you too for your commitment to the progress and prosperity in Malaysia. It is a unique characteristic of our people that while being devoted to Mother India, they are also loyal to their new, adopted homeland.

I acknowledge the presence in this hall of the senior Minister and President of the Malaysian Indian Congress, Dato'Seri S. Samy Vellu. We in India know him as a good friend of long standing and high repute. He has made numerous friends in all walks of life in India and constitutes an important bridge between our two countries. He is a great son of Malaysia, and a great friend of India.

While the large migration of Indians to Malaysia during the colonial era provided the bedrock linking our countries, the more recent second wave of skilled professionals has provided an economic impetus which will surely serve us well in the years to come. Your presence in Malaysia will make it easier for us to rapidly upgrade our economic relations to a new, higher level.

The relations between India and Malaysia go back many centuries and have always been characterized by peaceful and productive people-to-people contact and cultural cross-fertilization. Malaysia has been a good host and a society open to influences from abroad. Tolerance of diversity, choosing the best from other civilizations and seeking to blend them into a unique and harmonious culture makes Malaysia truly unique.

We in India, admire Malaysia's achievements. We are proud that the Indian community here has contributed in no small measure to the progress of this beautiful land. Within the space of a single generation, Malaysia has transformed itself into a modern industrialized economy, increasingly looking towards knowledge-based and high technology industries to fuel its future growth and expansion. There are therefore, great similarities among our two countries and indeed, among our perspectives of the world as a whole.

Malaysia is also a moderate and progressive Islamic State which represents a successful development model having relevance for the future in the 21st century. As a modern and industrialized state with business and investor friendly policies, it has shown that Islam and modernity are perfectly compatible. Rejecting the thesis of a 'clash of civilizations' you have shown, like India, that a 'confluence of civilizations' is in fact possible and in fact, the only possible to make success in this 21st century.

I bring to you the message that India too is on the move. India is increasingly viewed as a land of opportunities, of new possibilities. Indians are viewed across the world now as a people who respect knowledge, creativity and enterprise. Our vibrant democracy and the well established rule of law have provided a resilient base for steady economic growth with stability. These are free India's biggest assets. Our Government is committed to taking this reform process further. A reform process that emphasizes caring for the common man, ensures that no one is left behind and includes all sections of society in our march forward to progress and prosperity. India was always open to the world culturally; we are now also open economically as well. I invite you to take advantage of this new openness of our economy.

Malaysian firms are now actively participating in the Indian economy, and our bilateral trade is growing satisfactorily. But we cannot be satisfied with the status quo. I would also like to see Indian companies participate in projects in Malaysia. The Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) with this country that Prime Minister Badawi and I agreed to initiate, will I sincerely believe, transform the bilateral relationship.

Education is an area that offers immense potential. I am happy to note that a significant proportion of practicing doctors and legal luminaries in Malaysia have obtained professional degrees from Indian universities. However, since the 1980's this trend has slowed down for several reasons. We must not only reinstate our traditional educational linkages but provide them with a fresh momentum. The Government of India will work with you to make this happen.

You will be happy to know that we are concluding an MOU with Malaysia in education, in which Mutual Recognition Arrangements of educational qualifications is an integral component. We will find new projects to replicate the successful twinning experiment between the Melaka-Manipal Medical Colleges. Our Government is considering several proposals to increase the number of seats available to persons of Indian origin in our educational institutions. The idea of establishing an exclusive PIO University is also being considered. The feedback from the PIO community the world over on this initiative has been extremely encouraging.

I invite you to join in the exciting journey of creating a new India, an India that is open to all its children, and India that cares for all, that lives for all, that is home to all. I thank you once again for your kind hospitality in this beautiful city of Kuala Lumpur.

1. The Prime Minister in his remarks at the Retreat appreciated the idea of the East Asian Summit stressing that “a safe and experienced driver” would take the forum to its destination. Calling upon the leaders not to stop at sectional free trade area agreements, Dr. Singh wanted a greater economic integration at the ASEAN level for which he suggested that the East Asia Summit set up a follow-up mechanism consisting of officials and experts to prepare a roadmap. Prime Minister called on all the countries of the region to strive harmonious relationships and seamless trade and investment ties. “We are on the cusp of a new opportunity. We should seize it,” the Prime Minister was quoted by the Secretary (East) Rajiv Sikri. Sikri added that there were range of proposal from other leaders too but “there were no contradictory remarks.” It was a meeting of friends without misunderstanding.

277. Media briefing by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh on-board Special Aircraft after attending the 4th India-ASEAN Summit and 1st East Asia Summit.

December 14, 2005.

Prime Minister's Statement:

"You have been briefed regularly about the many meetings that I have had while in Kuala Lumpur. In summing up my visit to Kuala Lumpur, I think it would be accurate to say it gave me a very valuable opportunity to engage with ASEAN leaders on the direction of our partnership which is growing increasingly closer, and to have bilateral interactions with an even larger number of leaders.

In our view the present level of India-ASEAN co-operation is a realization of a policy choice we made almost a decade-and-a-half ago when we embarked upon our Look East policy. It was our belief at that stage that there was potential for mutually beneficial interaction which had not even been recognised, leave alone utilized. I am happy to say that the situation is quite the opposite now; both sides are very conscious of the potential and there is a healthy impatience at the pace at which we are able to utilize it. It is a fact that the impatience is a little more pronounced on the ASEAN side; my counterparts have expressed themselves that it would be better if we were able to move faster. I in turn took this opportunity to reassure them – in the India-ASEAN Summit and in my many bilateral meetings – that the important aspect to bear in mind is that our direction is correct and the intent to move towards closer economic integration is there. The pace at which we move has to take account of our democratic processes and the wide variety of views we have to reflect in our economic policy-making. I believe that the ASEAN leaders understand this reality and are keener on co-operation across an expanding canvas.

At the India-ASEAN Summit I put forward a series of proposals that are predicated on using Indian capabilities in areas such as satellite connectivity and English-language teaching, which had an excellent response. In fact, our ASEAN partners suggested extending such project-based co-operation to related areas such as bio-technology, which we have agreed to take on board. A significant suggestion made to me was increased interaction on regional security issues. Specific mention was made of increased co-operation in counter terrorism and maritime security. Both of these are of great interest to us; we are co-operating on these issues on a bilateral basis with some ASEAN members already and arrangements to broaden these should be devised.

As you are aware, there were extensive comments on the India-ASEAN FTA, on which negotiations are continuing. The ASEAN members have expressed concerns about size of the negative list proposed by India. I have noted their concern and told them that this issue would be resolved in a mutually satisfactory manner. In any case we shall keep to the schedule for the FTA to come into effect by January 01, 2007. My ASEAN counterparts also expressed their interest in an ASEAN-India open skies arrangement; we shall be examining how this can be operationalised. I have described all these aspects to illustrate the increasingly broader sweep of our ties with ASEAN.

Earlier today we met in the 1st East Asia Summit. The significance and potential of this grouping is almost self-evident. Its composition, its evolving agenda and format give it the potential to play a major role in global affairs. India's presence in this group from its very outset is an opportunity that we value. This is clearly a good work in progress. The Malaysian Prime Minister in his opening remarks said that this group represents a desire for engagement and not containment. I was happy to associate myself with this sentiment. In an evolving global balance, East Asia carries ever-increasing weight; India's participation adds to its significance.

While in Kuala Lumpur I also had several bilateral meetings. My first call was on Prime Minister Badawi, where we reviewed both our bilateral ties and our expectations from the ASEAN and East Asian Summits. I met the Prime Minister of Vietnam and we reviewed the potential for carrying forward our co-operation in areas such as hydrocarbons and defence. We shall also try to respond to Vietnam's interests in bilateral co-operation in high technology areas such as biotechnology. I had an extensive review of our co-operation with Japan in my meeting with Prime Minister Koizumi. We decided to work to upgrade our relationship both quantitatively and qualitatively. The Prime Minister of Japan emphasised the importance of co-operation on a global scale on existing and emerging issues; these include possibilities in infrastructure, co-operation in disaster management and our on-going participation in the G-4 group. I thanked Prime Minister Koizumi for Japan's support for India's entry into ITER and shared with him my belief that Japan is key to India's Look East policy. I also thanked the President of Korea for supporting India's entry into ITER and flagged to him the importance of Korean support for the removal of NSG restrictions that affect India. In my meeting with the Prime Minister of Myanmar we reviewed the status of progress on various cross border projects. Our interest in co-operation in the hydrocarbon sector was also reiterated. Shortly before leaving I also met Premier Wen Jiabao of China. We reviewed developments since Premier Wen's landmark visit to India in April and agreed to work together to ensure that the momentum in our relationship is maintained. Our work on the boundary question will carry on; our Special Representatives will meet early. Our bilateral trade is increasing rapidly, as we had hoped for and we await the recommendations of the Joint Study Group to upgrade our economic and commercial ties in a befitting manner. In sum, I feel, this has been a productive and useful visit."

Prime Minister (Dr. Manmohan Singh) : Well, if you have any questions, I will be happy to answer.

Question : Could you tell us about your meetings with the Chinese Prime Minister Wen Jiabao and Myanmar's General Soe Win.

Prime Minister : I had a very good meeting with Prime Minister Wen Jiabao of China. He was our honoured guest in April. Since then this is my second meeting with him. We reviewed the state of our bilateral relations. We came to the joint conclusion that our economic relations are moving in the right direction. Our trade turnover is now about 15 billion dollars and by the year 2008 it will exceed the target of 20 billion dollars.

We also agreed that the Joint Study Group that we had set up, we should move now to implement its recommendations. That would also include a preferential trade arrangement or some variant of it.

We also discussed cooperation in science and technology. I thanked the Chinese Prime Minister for China's support for India's membership of the ITER project which has great significance in the area of nuclear science.

We also had a very good discussion on the resolution of the boundary dispute. You know that when Prime Minister Wen came to Delhi we had signed a document which sets out the fundamental principles and broad political parameters which should guide the resolution of the boundary question. Since then, our special representatives have had one meeting. Another meeting is planned in January. Both of us agreed that these discussions and negotiations should be expedited. Both of us expressed our commitment to find a mutually satisfactory resolution of the boundary problem.

With regard to Myanmar, we reviewed the state of our bilateral relations. We agreed that our two countries can do a great deal more in helping Myanmar to develop its transport and hydrocarbons potential. I also discussed with him the use of Myanmar territories by the insurgent groups operating in the North-Eastern parts of our country. I was assured that Myanmar Government will fully cooperate with India and not allow its territory to be used by insurgents.

We also had a discussion about the political reforms. He pointed out the difficulties that Myanmar society is facing. There were so many tribes that there were factions which were inciting insurgency. He also felt that some outside powers were inciting these insurgent groups. But, he said they were committed to democracy, they will use the National Congress as a forum to evolve a pattern of democracy suited to the genius of them. I said we favoured a national reconciliation and also the movement towards democracy, respect for fundamental human rights and allowing all political activities to flourish. But I also said that it is for the people of Myanmar to resolve problems and I did not know the answer, the answer has to be found by the people of Myanmar themselves.

Question : Was there any discussion on Aung San Suu Kyi?

Prime Minister : Yes, I am saying that. I said we are in favour of a national reconciliation and that Aun San Suu Kyi should be set free. But it was not my purpose to advise him what political arrangements they should have.

Question : ...Inaudible...Chinese companies.

Prime Minister : ...old habits of looking at things. In a globalised world, enterprise has a logic of its own. I am confident that we too can move forward and not worry too much about these old fears.

Question : ...Inaudible ...East-Asia Summit, is it going to be more sort of a forum which is going to produce results in the long-term? Do you feel that this is a forum where you will be talking about this pan-Asian FTA? Is it something that the forum will be able to implement?

Prime Minister : In the long run, there has to be a vision to guide the process. I think the East-Asia Summit has started the process. The primary emphasis right now is on dialogue to discuss issues relating to security, peace, progress, environment, energy security, and cooperation in tackling infectious diseases. But it can evolve. My own feeling is that in course of time the habits of working (together) will grow. Where they will lead us, it is too premature for me to say that I know the answer to it.

Question : ...Inaudible...

Prime Minister : Our people have to get used to competition. We live in a harsh competitive world. I am confident that the people of India have the capacity and the will to stand up to competition. Look at the atmosphere fifteen years ago. All big industrialists then were opposed to liberalisation. Today they all stand by it. So, that is a measure of the change that has come about. There is such a thing as the fear of the unknown. I recognise that. We have to give legitimate protection to our industry, particularly, to the small sector. But all this can be arranged in a manner that we evolve. Evolving arrangements will turn out to be a win-win situation.

Question : Dr. Singh, on the issue of FTA, is it possible to announce some kind of a timeframe to resolve this?

Prime Minister : We are dealing with difficult issues. Without setting any deadlines, I do feel it is possible to move forward at a faster pace.

Question : ...Inaudible...(on India-Japan relations)

Prime Minister : Fortunately we have a situation where there are no bilateral disputes between India and Japan. We both agree that the economic interchange between our two countries is far below the potential. It has been agreed that both of us will work together to increase our cooperation in matters relating to economics, but also in issues relating to security, environment, science and technology, information technology and power technology. I invited the Japanese industry to take a hard look at the possibilities and the scope of hardware industry being developed in India, and India being used for outsourcing purposes. The Japanese Government is fully in support of it. Recently, they had sent a very high-powered business delegation (to India). So, I think our relations with Japan are in for a significant improvement.

Question : What is your long-term policy on managing our forex reserves?

Prime Minister : I do not know the answer to that question. The reserves are looked after by the Reserve Bank of India. All I can say is that today our reserves are about 14 months' imports. I think they are adequate. We need a reserve level which gives us comfort. I think our reserve level right now is quite satisfactory.

*

*

*

Question : ...Inaudible...(on India-Japan relations)

Prime Minister : The cooperation between us will be strengthened. But we have to accept that Japan wants to strengthen its relations with America.

Question : Any agreement on digital technology? Any agreement about telecom technology?

Prime Minister : Well, I am not a salesman of that.

278. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the meeting between External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh and Australian Foreign Minister Alexander Downer.

New Delhi, June 8, 2005.

Official Spokesperson: Good evening. Let me just give you a brief account of the meeting between External Affairs Minister Shri Natwar Singh and the Australian Foreign Minister Mr. Alexander Downer¹.

One point of interest, which you have straightaway, is that they both agreed to make a joint initiative for a Donald Bradman exhibition in India. Seeing a lot of mutual interest in cricket and how both countries view each other through the sports prism, they thought that it was a very good idea. The Australians are planning to do that exhibition and External Affairs Minister said that we are willing to jointly take this on. The dates are to be worked out. They have to get it from different museums within Australia.

They reviewed bilateral relations and looked at the exchange of visits. They looked at areas of mutual interest in which India's role is being increasingly appreciated by Australia. Counter-terrorism, ensuring security of sea lanes, the tsunami experience, and the post tsunami realization of India's regional role were discussed. There was discussion on trade. Mr. Kamal Nath has been to Australia 2 weeks ago and he has come back satisfied with the situation. They said that there are over 20 Indian IT

1. The Australian Foreign Minister had arrived in Chennai the previous day, which he spent there meeting the Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu. The Spokesperson informed the media that the discussions between the External Affairs Minister and the visiting Minister were under the rubric of the Ministerial Framework Dialogue would focus on bilateral visits, economic and trade relations, cooperation in energy security, education, tourism, science and technology and regional and multilateral issues.

companies working in Australia and they are doing very well. Joint ventures are working in coal and energy. Australia particularly mentioned that India has expanding energy needs and Australia has considerable experience in LNG and also in building sea terminals for LNG. They offered that facility to India.

Besides LNG he also talked of Australia's food industry, storage facilities, etc. India is now the 6th largest export market for Australia starting from about number 4-5 years ago. They are very keen to build educational linkages. They talked of exchange of young political leaders in terms of visits. They also discussed the possibilities of enhancing the defence relationship between the two countries.

Education and tourism were two other issues discussed. India has 21,000 students in Australia and evidently it is now the third biggest education destination for Indian students after UK and US. In tourism, more than 60,000 Australians visit India but this needs to be increased. Both sides mentioned that.

External Affairs Minister briefed him on recent initiatives particularly on developments in India – Pakistan relations over the last few months. Mr. Downer said that he was very impressed with his one day visit to Chennai and found that the ordinary person in India is very positive about Australia. He said that they hoped to actualize this potential and this positive feeling into trade, economic cooperation and so on.

Among the regional issues discussed were Afghanistan - both sides gave their view with different perspectives and levels of engagement - and Iran. On China, External Affairs Minister briefed Mr. Downer on Premier Wen's visit to India. They also discussed India – ASEAN relations including the recent visits of the Prime Ministers of Thailand and Japan. They also discussed the developments at the UN and the ongoing process of momentum building towards reform.

Over lunch they had more extended discussions on Iraq and Iran. Mr. Downer briefed on their experiences in these countries. He was particularly interested in asking External Affairs Minister about the J&K issue and the recent developments. He got a full briefing on that. He also raised other areas of cooperation in international organisations particularly relating to environment. As you know Australia has not ratified the Kyoto Treaty while we have. So there are possibilities of engaging towards clean energy even through cooperation in international organisations.

1. Addressing a press conference on June 8 the visiting Australian Foreign Minister said that there was a "reasonable chance" for the expansion of the UN Security Council. He saw "every chance" of the G-4 draft resolution getting the required 2/3rd majority in the UN General Assembly. He said that in his talks with the Indian External Affairs Minister he had assured the latter of Australian support. Mr. Downer told the journalists that his advice to India was to push ahead with the reform move and not "give it up". However, he felt that there was need for "some finessing" of the draft resolution that had been circulated by the G-4.

Both sides expressed satisfaction at the decision taken during the Joint Ministerial Commission meeting in Australia to commence discussions on the proposed Trade and Economic Framework Agreement (TEF) between India and Australia that will set up a consultative framework to encourage the growth of trade and economic relations between the two countries.

The two sides also agreed to increase interaction in other dimensions of the bilateral relationship, including the areas of energy, science and technology, biotechnology, IT, tourism, education, culture and people-to-people contacts. It was agreed to organize an exhibition in India on the legendary cricketer, Don Bradman. CHINA

282. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the meeting of External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh with the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao on the sidelines of the Special ASEAN Leaders meeting in the aftermath of the Asian Tsunami.

Jakarta, January 6, 2005.

A few points on External Affairs Minister's meeting with the Chinese Premier. During this meeting the Chinese Premier conveyed his Government's sympathy to the Indian Government and people on the Tsunami disaster. He expressed admiration for the courage and determination shown by the Indian nation and people in dealing with this crisis. External Affairs Minister thanked him for his warm and sincere sentiments.

The two leaders also reviewed the satisfactory and comprehensive development of bilateral relations that have improved qualitatively and entered a new phase. Both of them agreed that it was necessary to look for ways and means to maintain the positive momentum in the bilateral relationship from a long-term strategic perspective as well as to resolve the border issue.

The Chinese Premier said that he was greatly looking forward to his visit to India this year, which would be an important event that would further consolidate India–China relations and friendship¹.

1. External Affairs Minister later himself described the talks with the Chinese Premier as a "very good" exercise in positive diplomacy. Echoing the sentiments the Chinese Foreign Minister who was present at the talks said "Premier Wen Jibao and Foreign Minister (Singh) have had a very good discussions." Laying emphasis on this aspect, Li said: "Both sides believe that we are working together to consolidate and enhance the friendship and cooperation further between the two nations and peoples." Summing up the discussions Natwar Singh said the Chinese Prime Minister was "deeply appreciative of what India is doing" to help itself and its Tsunami-hit neighbours in the present crisis. While China was aware of India's own efforts, Mr. Wen indicated his country's willingness to be of help. Deeply appreciating China's friendly sentiments, Mr. Singh told him that India was "coping" with the tsunami impact as "we have extensive experience in dealing with natural disasters." EAM confirmed to journalists that the question of India's permanent membership of the UNSC did not come up for discussion with the Chinese Prime Minister.

283. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the first meeting of India-China Strategic Dialogue.New Delhi, January 24, 2005.

...the first meeting of the India-China Strategic Dialogue was held in New Delhi (24 January' 05). The Indian delegation was led by the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Shyam Saran and the Chinese delegation was led by their Vice Foreign Minister Wu Dawei.

During the meeting, detailed discussions took place on important regional and global issues that shape the present international environment. There was a broad convergence of views on these issues. Both sides also briefed each other on their respective foreign and security policies.

Substantive discussions took place on bilateral relations, including in particular on preparations for the forthcoming visit of China's Premier Wen Jiabao to India later this year. The two sides agreed to closely work together to ensure a substantive outcome of the visit, which is expected to mark a new phase in the relationship between the two countries.

Both sides are satisfied with the outcome of the discussions and feel that these have further increased their mutual trust and understanding. The launching of this new dialogue mechanism between the two countries is significant in that it indicates their readiness to look at the bilateral relationship in a long-term and strategic perspective.

Right now Vice Foreign Minister Wu Dawei is calling on External Affairs Minister Shri Natwar Singh.

It has also been agreed that the next round of the Strategic Dialogue will be held in China on mutually agreed dates.

Later, the Official Spokesperson added:

Chinese Vice Foreign Minister called on EAM this evening. During this warm and cordial meeting, the present state of bilateral relations was reviewed and assessed highly as well as future directions were discussed. EAM said that we were looking forward to visit of Premier Wen Jiabao, which would be a major event in our bilateral relations and lead to substantive results. During the call on EAM, the celebrations for the 55th anniversary of establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China, which are to begin on April 1, 2005 were also discussed.

Question: On India – China dialogue, any discussion on nuclear doctrine or on specific issues like Iraq?

Answer: I will not be able to go into more specific details of what was discussed besides what we have agreed to share with the press and the details that I have given you. What I can tell you is that this is a new dialogue mechanism. The purpose as I have said is to provide a mechanism which shows that the two countries are engaging with each other to enhance the strategic and long – term relationship between India and China. So, this provides a forum for discussing all aspects in which the two countries are interested. It is quite possible that the issues that you mentioned may have come up. I am not aware of that.

Question: Was there something on the border issue?

Answer: Again, it is possible that as a part of the general discussion the issue may have come up but you know that we also have the other mechanism of the Special Representatives looking at the border issue.

Question: Have the dates for the PM visit been decided?

Answer: Later this year.

Question: This new mechanism represents a pragmatic course between India and China. Which country's initiative is it?

Answer: I think that these mechanisms are only agreed upon when both countries agree.

Question: Could you run through the list of regional and international issues that were discussed?

Answer: I am afraid I would not be able to run through a list. I think what I have given you is a fairly exhaustive read out of the general contours of the discussion and that I am afraid is about all that I will be able to give.

*

Question: How long did the talks last?

Answer: The talks lasted well into the afternoon. I think they started at about 9:30 am and finished at about 2:30 pm or 3 pm, about that time.

Question: Will this be an annual affair?

Answer: That is not decided. They will agree upon dates as to when it has to be held. It will be held in China. That is decided.

Question: Did India raise Pakistan with the Chinese?

Answer: I do not have any more specific details of the discussions. Our relationship with China is a strong bilateral relationship and we have a fair amount to discuss on a bilateral level.

Question: Is there any time frame for these discussions?

Answer: No.

Question: Is the Chinese Vice Foreign Minister meeting Prime Minister at all?

Answer: No. He is meeting the External Affairs Minister right now and that is it.

Question: ...inaudible...

Answer: No, I do not understand that to be the situation. This is a new dialogue mechanism that has been set up and the Special Representatives dialogue mechanism is a very specific one looking at the boundary question and looking at it from a political point of view. But this, as I said, is a wide-ranging dialogue between both the countries looking at long-term and strategic interests between them.

284. Press statement on 15th Meeting of the India-China Joint Working Group on the Boundary Question.Beijing, March 31, 2005.

The 15th Meeting of the India-China Joint Working Group on the Boundary Question was held in Beijing from March 30-31, 2005. The Indian delegation which included representatives from the Ministries of External Affairs, Home and Defence was led by Foreign Secretary Shri Shyam Saran. The Chinese delegation was led by Vice Foreign Minister Wu Dawei. The discussions marked a resumption of dialogue in the JWG process after a gap of two and a half years.

The discussions in JWG-15 were held over three sessions and were positive and forward looking. Both sides reviewed the ongoing process of LAC clarification and confidence building measures. They highlighted the importance of the implementation of the bilateral agreements of 1993 and 1996 for maintenance of peace and tranquility and for furthering confidence building measures in border areas so as to promote mutual trust and confidence which is essential for the objective of a settlement of the boundary question. The JWG -15 noted the progress in the work done in the meetings of the Expert Group since the previous meeting of the JWG. The 15th meeting of EG was held in Beijing on March 29, 2005.

During the meeting of the JWG, a comprehensive review of bilateral relations was undertaken, including preparations for the forthcoming visit to India, by Premier Wen Jiabao. Both sides noted that the visit would be a major landmark in upgrading our bilateral relations and would through its outcomes provide a global and strategic perspective to our relations.

Foreign Secretary called on State Councillor Tang Jiaxuan and conveyed the greetings of EAM Shri Natwar Singh. They exchanged views on the significant role played by the JWG process in the overall settlement of the boundary question.

They also discussed the cooperation and coordination between the two sides on global and multilateral issues. State Councillor Tang said India-China relations serve the interests not only of our two peoples but also peace and prosperity of the region and the world at large.

Foreign Secretary called on Foreign Minister Li Zhaoxing and conveyed the warm regards of EAM and his wish to continue their interaction in New Delhi during the forthcoming visit of Premier Wen Jiabao. They discussed the steady momentum in our bilateral relations including preparations for the visit of Premier Wen Jiabao and regional issues.

Foreign Secretary also met Vice Foreign Minister and Special Representative Dai Bingguo and conveyed the invitation of Special Representative Shri M.K. Narayanan to visit India in advance of Premier Wen Jiabao's visit. Vice Foreign Minister Dai accepted the invitation with pleasure and said they look forward to meeting Shri Narayanan and continuing dialogue in the Special Representatives process. Both sides exchanged views on the positive developments in the ongoing process of settlement of the boundary question from the overall perspective of our bilateral relations.

Foreign Secretary invited Vice Foreign Minister Wu for the next round of JWG discussions¹.

1. On March 28 the Official Spokesperson of the MEA Navtej Sarna had recalled that the last meeting of the India - China JWG was held in New Delhi in November 2002. Giving a background briefing on the talks Navtej Sarna said, "The Indian side attaches high importance to the Chinese Premier's visit. There have already been detailed consultations at various levels and between the authorities concerned of the two countries. Foreign Secretary will utilize his visit to China to carry this process forward, especially on the substantive outcome of the visit. These discussions will cover, inter alia, political parameters and guiding principles for the settlement of the India-China boundary question, measures to strengthen the constructive and cooperative partnership between the two countries taking into account the overall global and strategic perspective of the bilateral relationship, and other issues of mutual interest and concern."
- The Spokesperson answered some questions too:
- Question: You talked about the guiding principles – What are they and what do they mean?
- Answer: There are a number of guiding principles, as you know, which are being negotiated. These are basically for moving towards the settlement of the India-China boundary question. What exactly they are I cannot tell you at this stage.
- Question: Would there be a meeting of the Special Representatives before the visit of Premier Wen Jiabao?
- Answer: Both sides are keen to schedule a meeting of the Special Representatives at an early date. The exact dates of such a meeting are presently under discussion.
- Question: Would there be any announcements during the visit?
- Answer: It would be incorrect for me to try to foretell the exact results of the visit. As you know, what we have said is that there is a stress on the substantive outcome of the visit and the Foreign Secretary's visit, for instance, includes on its agenda the discussions of the political parameters and the guiding principles for settlement of the boundary question.
- Later, when asked about a story in the Hindustan Times the Official Spokesperson added:*

285. Message of President A. P. J. Abdul Kalam to the President of the People's Republic of China Hu Jintao on the occasion of the 55th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China.

New Delhi, April 1, 2005.

Excellency,

On behalf of the Government and the people of India, and on my own behalf, I have great pleasure in extending to the Government and the people of China, and to you personally, warm felicitations and friendly greetings on the fifty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China.

Friendly exchanges between India and China have transcended time and space to bind our present ties. Being two of the world's oldest civilizations, our long history of close contacts has been enriched by the shared cultural and spiritual heritage and has made profound contributions to our respective development and that of the entire humanity. The establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries was an important landmark in our relations in modern times. The shared vision of relationship which was reflected in the principles of Panchsheel jointly enunciated by our leaders, not only continues to be the bedrock of India-China relations, but also guides the world to peace, stability and development.

"As I mentioned earlier, we are presently negotiating an agreement on the political parameters and guiding principles for settlement of the India-China boundary question. At this stage, I cannot comment on the contents of the proposed agreement. The Hindustan Times story is, however, speculative in nature."

Meanwhile the Indian Embassy in Beijing said on March 31 "both sides noted that (Mr. Wen's) visit would be a major landmark in upgrading our bilateral relations and would, through its outcome, provide a global and strategic perspective to our relations." In another significant remark, the Chinese Ambassador in New Delhi Sun Yuxi said at a press conference in New Delhi that Tibet was no longer an "issue" in Sino – Indian relations. He said that with India publicly stating in Beijing in 2003 that it would not allow anti-China activities relating to Tibet, this had ceased to be a problem in bilateral relations between the two countries, he said and added "it (Tibet) is totally an internal matter (for China)." On Sikkim, he said the "issue" had been settled between India and China. "It is completely solved", he said when asked if anything more needed to be done. "There is no problem (in Sikkim)." Asked about circulation of some maps at an international conference last year showing Sikkim as an "independent State", the Ambassador said that no such "maps" would be published afresh by the Chinese government.

Today, as two of the world's largest and most populous countries and also as two rapidly developing economies, India and China are uniquely poised to define the contours of the international political and economic landscape. Close cooperation and good neighbourly relations between us offer a source of strength and stability in the international relations amidst the contemporary global uncertainties. We both seek a peaceful environment for our paramount task of national construction and for ensuring the well-being of our peoples. The way our relationship has made headway in recent years gives us enough confidence and hope for the future of our cooperation.

The fifty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of our diplomatic relations provides us an important opportunity to renew our commitment to the sustained development and all round diversification of our rapidly growing ties.

Excellency, please accept my best wishes for your good health and for the prosperity and well being of the people of China.

With the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

H.E. Mr. Hu Jintao
President of the People's Republic of China
Beijing

286. Message of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh to the Premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China on the occasion of the 55th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between India and China.

Camp: Port Louis, April 1, 2005.

Excellency,

On behalf of the Government and the people of India, and on my own behalf, I have great pleasure in extending to the Government and the people of China, and to you personally, warm felicitations and friendly greetings on the fifty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China.

Our commitment to carry forward friendly historical exchanges in contemporary times was manifest in the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries fifty-five years ago. Together, India and China comprise one third of humanity. As two of the world's largest developing countries as well as two rapidly developing economies, the tasks that we face are profound, but our determination is resolute. In realizing our objectives, we draw strength and inspiration from the richness of our shared civilizational legacy and the depth of our historical experiences.

The sustained growth and diversification of India-China relations in recent years reflect our common commitment to take our relationship to new heights, while proactively addressing our differences in a fair, reasonable and mutually acceptable manner. Today our relationship has entered a new phase of comprehensive development. Continuing high level exchanges have enormously contributed to our mutual trust and understanding. I am confident that this process will be further strengthened by Your Excellency's visit to India in the coming days.

Both India and China share the aspiration to build a Just, equitable and democratic international political and economic order on the twin pillars of multipolarization and multilateralism. As the world becomes increasingly inter-dependent, it is important for our two countries to join hands to harness the positive forces of globalization and safeguard the interests of the developing countries. Close cooperation and good neighbourly relations between us are not only our shared commitment, but also an imperative in the backdrop of today's fast changing international environment as well as in keeping with the long-term and strategic vision of the relationship that we both espouse.

I look forward to having comprehensive discussions with Your Excellency to further enrich and strengthen our constructive and cooperative partnership, taking into account the global and strategic perspective of our relations.

Excellency, please accept my best wishes for your good health, for the prosperity and well being of the people of China and the assurances of my highest consideration.

(Manmohan Singh)

H.E. Mr. Wen Jiabao,
Premier of the State Council, People's Republic of China, Beijing

287. Media briefing by Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on the visit of Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

New Delhi, April 11, 2005.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Navtej Sarna) : We are very happy to have the Foreign Secretary here to brief you on the day's developments in the visit of Premier Wen Jiabao and the discussions with the Prime Minister¹.

1. On April 8, 2005, the Official Spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs announcing the visit gave a detailed briefing on the programme and agenda of the Chinese Premier's visit. He said that before arriving in New Delhi, "Premier Wen will visit Bangalore, where he is reaching on the evening of April 9. Chief Minister of Karnataka will call on him that evening. On April 10, he will visit important scientific and industrial establishments in Bangalore, including ISRO, Indian Institute of Science, and TCS." Giving details of his programme in New Delhi, the Spokesperson said "meetings have been scheduled for Premier Wen with our President, the Vice-President, the Prime Minister, and the External Affairs Minister, apart from the Chairperson of UPA and the Leader of Opposition. Premier Wen is also expected to address an India-China Business Cooperation Conference jointly organized by CII and FICCI on April 11 as also deliver a speech at the IIT, New Delhi on the morning of April 12 before leaving for Beijing. A large delegation of Chinese business and industry is accompanying Premier Wen. The talks between the two Prime Ministers are expected to cover bilateral, regional and international issues of mutual interest and concern. The two Foreign Secretary (Shri Shyam Saran) : Thank you very much and good afternoon to all of you.

I think you are already in possession of the various documents, which have been signed during the visit. So I do not need to go into those details. Let me just try and pick out for you what are the significant points in these agreements.

First of all, the most important document to be signed during this visit was the Joint Statement between the Prime Minister of India and the Prime Minister of China. It is, as you would notice, a fairly substantive document, a detailed document. The key element in that is that the two countries have decided to upgrade their relationship to a strategic and cooperative partnership for peace and prosperity. Earlier we had talked about a cooperative partnership between India and China taking into account the global environment. Now there is a raising the level of the relationship between the two countries with a common understanding that there is a certain level of maturity, which has been reached in the relationship between leaders are expected to review the current state of bilateral relations and discuss ways and means to further strengthen the constructive and cooperative partnership keeping in view the current international situation and the global and strategic perspective of bilateral relations. Several agreements in diverse areas of interaction are expected to be concluded during the visit. Their discussions are expected to cover issues related to the India-China boundary question, including the work of the Special Representatives, confidence building measures and clarification and confirmation of the line of actual control. As you might be aware, the Special Representatives of the two Governments have been engaged in discussions to explore from the political perspective of the overall bilateral relations the framework of a boundary settlement. Their next meeting is scheduled on April 10, before the meeting of two Prime Ministers. The discussions are currently focused on the political parameters and guiding principles for the settlement of the boundary question.

It is expected that the discussions between the two Prime Ministers will dwell in detail on India-China economic cooperation, including trade and investment, which constitutes an important dimension of a stronger China-India relationship. As is known, the two sides had set up a Joint Study Group (JSG) to examine the potential complementarities between the two countries in expanded trade and economic cooperation. The Joint Study Group has already completed its work and finalised its report, which will be presented to the two Prime Ministers. The two leaders may decide to give further directions on the recommendations of the JSG."

Underlying the importance of the visit, the Spokesperson said: "We attach great importance to the visit of Premier Wen Jiabao to India. He has visited India earlier in 1994 at the head of a delegation from the International Liaison Department of the Communist Party of China. This is, however, his first visit as the Prime Minister of China, a country with which we enjoy friendly and good neighbourly ties. Premier Wen's visit is also taking place in the 55th anniversary year of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries. His visit is expected to contribute to developing trust, understanding and confidence between India and China."

the two countries. Important in this aspect is that on a number of occasions it was mentioned by the Chinese Prime Minister and endorsed by the Indian Prime Minister that India and China are partners and they are not rivals. This is an important aspect that we do not look upon each other as adversaries, but we look upon each other as partners. So, this is the sort of most important element of the declaration, a declaration of a cooperative and strategic partnership for peace and prosperity between India and China.

The other important aspect that I would like to draw your attention to is the very categorical acceptance of Sikkim as a part of India. Here you would have seen in the Statement that there is a specific and explicit reference to the Sikkim State of the Republic of India. The Chinese side has also brought to our attention the new map that they have now published. I do not know whether you can see, but here is Sikkim, which is now shown under India's international boundaries with the same colourwash as the rest of India. So, this is now the official map, which has been printed by China and they have handed this over to us to demonstrate that this issue, as Prime Minister Wen Jiabao mentioned to our Prime Minister, is no longer an issue in India-China relations. It is something, which has been now put behind us. So, this is the second important aspect of the Joint Statement.

The third aspect which I would like to draw attention to will link up with the second document. This is the reference to the proactive manner in which both countries will deal with the issue of boundary settlement. The approach that has been accepted by the two Prime Ministers is that we are seeking a political settlement of the boundary question² in the context of their overall and long-term interests. So, this is something which also needs to be pursued as a strategic objective.

2. Chinese Premier in an interview to the Indian new agency Press Trust of India (PTI) days before the beginning of his visit suggesting that India and China should handle their relations from a "strategic high ground" had said that a solution to the boundary issue was possible if the two sides showed mutual accommodation "while taking the reality into account," and added: "China and India have reached important consensus. That is, both sides should view and handle the relations from a strategic high ground bearing in mind the larger picture and refuse to let questions left over from history disrupt and impede the development of friendly relations." Observing that peace and tranquility have prevailed in the Sino – India border areas thanks to the concerted efforts by both sides, Wen said that the Special Representatives on the boundary question have had four meetings, where the two sides conducted "useful" discussions on the political guiding principles with "sound progress". "I believe that as long as the two sides act in a spirit of mutual understanding and mutual accommodation, respect history while taking the reality into account, they will be able to find a mutually acceptable solution to the boundary question through negotiations on the equal footing", Chinese Premier told the PTI.

As I had mentioned to some of you, the Chinese Special Representative had come to New Delhi a day in advance of Premier Wen Jiabao's visit. A round of discussions was held between Shri M.K.Narayanan, our National Security Advisor, and His Excellency Mr. Dai Bingguo who is the Vice Foreign Minister but also the Special Representative from the Chinese side. They were able to reach a consensus on the text of the Political Parameters and Guiding Principles for the settlement of the boundary question. Those principles, eleven in number, are also now public. So, I think you can judge that these are very important agreements that have been arrived at on what would be the basis for the next phase of our work. The next phase of our work is that the two Special Representatives will actually be working on the framework for a boundary settlement.

In this context, during the talks that were held between the two Prime Ministers, the point was made that on the Indian side we have the political will to take the decisions which are necessary in order to reach a boundary settlement with China, and that same sentiment was also expressed from the Chinese side.

As you know, we have been talking about a three-phase process in terms of the settlement of the boundary issue. First phase has been completed. Second phase will involve the framework. The third phase will be when we actually get down to doing the necessary delineation on the ground. It is expected that we will start work on the second phase at a very early date.

Now, in addition to these two very important agreements, we also have a protocol on confidence-building measures again relating to the situation on the boundary. We have had an agreement in 1993 for the maintenance of peace and tranquility along India-China border. Then, there was a follow-up agreement in 1996. Really what we have now agreed upon is concretizing some of the elements that were agreed upon in those two documents.

There are various elements in this relating to, for example, avoidance of large-scale military exercises in close proximity of the Line of Control; the procedure which is to be followed by both sides in the eventuality of their border personnel coming face to face with each other; establishment of additional points for meetings between border personnel along the Line of Control. It has also been agreed that, as you would have seen in the Joint Statement, a considerable amount of importance is attached to the parallel exercise being carried out in the Joint Working Group for the clarification of the Line of Control. In that context also the exchange of maps on the various sectors, each side putting forward each side's perception on the Line of Actual Control. So, this exercise will also continue in parallel.

These are some of the important agreements. In addition, in the talks there was considerable focus on the economic relationship between India and China. I think it was a common view expressed by both the Prime Ministers that while we should express satisfaction at the very rapid increase and the somewhat dramatic increase which has taken in the India-China trade, which as you know, is almost at the level of 13 billion dollars currently, but it was felt that this is still very far from the potential between the two countries – potential both in terms of the political relationship that they had now established. So, it was not in keeping with that level of political relationship. Secondly, it was also mentioned that there are actually considerable complementarities between the economies of India and China. That although we are both very large developing countries and there may be a certain degree of overlap in our developmental patterns, but actually there is also a very large area of complementarity between the two countries as far as their economies are concerned. Here, for example, Premier Wen Jiabao mentioned about his visit to Bangalore when he said that "India has obvious strengths in the area of software. China has certain strengths in the area of hardware. Is it not possible for us to bring our strengths together in order that they should be of mutual benefit to both sides." This was cited as one of the areas of complementarity.

So, there was, therefore, an agreement that the various recommendations which have been made by the Joint Study Group on the promotion of economic and commercial relations between India and China. You know, that report was handed over to the Prime Ministers today by the respective Commerce Ministers of the two countries. It was agreed that those various recommendations will be now followed up and we will make every effort to implement those recommendations, which also includes the study of the feasibility of setting up a Regional Framework Arrangement between India and China. This aspect of economic relationship, as one of the foundations of India-China relations, was something which was emphasized by both Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh as well as Premier Wen Jiabao.

There was also an exchange of views on other aspects of our relations. The fact is that in areas like science and technology there is considerable strength that both India and China have. Premier Wen Jiabao was quite impressed by his visit to ISRO where he was able to see the Satellite Development Centre. He also visited the Indian Institute of Science in Bangalore. He had the opportunity to talk to several scientists and the Institute. From those discussions and this afternoon there was also a meeting with our President, a very distinguished scientist himself, it was agreed that in addition to information technology there are areas such as biotechnology, nanotechnology, space sciences, where the two sides could work together. The President even suggested that there could be joint projects in some of these areas which was very much welcomed by Premier Wen Jiabao.

As you know, this also happens to be the 55th year of the establishment of diplomatic relations, and also the 50th year of the Panchsheel. There are certain events, which are being held to celebrate these anniversaries. This evening itself, a major cultural programme is being held for commemoration of the anniversary. In this connection attention was drawn to the fact that we are already doing a cultural exchange for this celebration. Some Chinese events are being held in India and Indian events are being held in China. But, there was a proposal made that 2006 should be declared an India-China Friendship Year and should be celebrated as such. This was welcomed by the Indian side.

Premier Wen Jiabao also said that during the current year itself he would like to invite 100 Indian youth to visit China as China's guests and give them a chance to the exposure to different aspects of China and its development. This was also something, which we welcomed. There are a number of other agreements that have been signed. I do not think I will go into each and every detail. Perhaps to just give a flavour of the discussions, which took place, quite clearly there was already a certain personal rapport, which had been established between the two Prime Ministers when they had met at Vientiane. That was the time when Premier Wen Jiabao told our Prime Minister that he considers his forthcoming visit to India to be the most important event for China in the year 2005. He repeated that sentiment again.

He had a very easy conversation with PM. He described the Prime Minister not only as an outstanding statesman but also as a scholar. He said that he was very much longing to visit India. He recalled that he visited India eleven years ago as head of an International Liaison Department of the Communist Party Delegation and he had had a chance to see something of India. But on this occasion when he visited India after this gap of eleven years he found that there were such major changes that had taken place in the country. He said that India has experience in a number of areas that China could learn from. He also stated that in terms of the talent, which he found in India, this was something quite remarkable and this is another strength of India, which China could benefit from.

He also mentioned that with the kind of results that had been achieved from this visit, it was undoubtedly a historic visit in India-China relations. He said it was not an ordinary visit, it was quite an outstanding visit, and the results, which have been achieved from this visit would be something that would draw the attention of the entire world that India and China are cooperating in this manner.

Another important element was a very clear assertion by Premier Wen Jiabao that a strong, stable and prosperous India serves China's interest. This he repeated a couple of times. The other aside, it was also mentioned that we have been talking about how we need to look at solving the outstanding problems including the boundary problem from a political perspective. Here what Premier Wen Jiabao said to Prime Minister was that in the recent past on a number of issues it is the political leaders of the two countries who have given the big picture, given the big vision, managed to resolve some of the issues which could not be solved at the bureaucratic level or the technical level. They were able to overcome that narrower perspective. In this connection he said that the decisions of the political leaders are what will determine the course of India-China relations. So, there is clearly a very strong political commitment to taking India-China relations forward.

As I mentioned to you, there was also a meeting this afternoon with the Rashtrapatiji, a very interesting meeting where Premier Wen Jiabao said that he was very familiar with the writings of President that very frequently he even quotes our President when he is talking about the importance of education, or science and technology. He also said that the areas which the President had identified for cooperation between the two sides such as biotechnology, information technology, nano-technology, space technology, these were precisely the areas in which he would go back and make certain that we can actually do some concrete work together.

Just to also mention to you that when the two leaders were talking about the importance of India-China friendship, the two countries constituting over two billion people, in terms of the maintenance of peace not only for the two countries but for Asia and the world.

The President said that in preparing for this meeting he came across a very profound saying by one of the Chinese Philosophers whose name is Lao Tzu, a very ancient philosopher. He has a small saying on "keeping the peace", that is the heading. If you are interested, I will just read it out to you. It made a very big impression at the meeting. Lao Tzu says that, "Do not exalt the very gifted, And people will not contend. Do not treasure goods that are hard to get, And people will not become thieves. Do not focus on desires, And people's minds will not be confused. Therefore, Evolved individuals lead others by Opening their minds, Reinforcing their centers, Relaxing their desires, Strengthening their characters."

This was something that President read out to Premier Wen Jiabao who was extremely impressed. They also talked about the ancient long-standing history of relations between India and China. President referred to the travel of the Chinese monk Hiuen Tsang to India in the 7th century and his long sojourn at Nalanda University. Premier Wen referred to even earlier travelers from China to India and from India to China. Thereafter, President gave him a very short demonstration on this computer on this plan of PURA – Providing Urban Amenities in Rural Areas - which again was of very great interest to Premier Wen Jiabao because he himself is very much interested in rural development.

Later this evening, External Affairs Minister will also be calling on Premier Wen Jiabao. That is at around 5.15 pm. Thereafter, there will be the cultural programme at which both the Prime Ministers will be present. Tomorrow, the Prime Minister of China will be going to the Indian Institute of Technology where he will be delivering an address. Around noon is his departure from India.

So, all in all, this is an extremely successful visit, with very important results, results which are very far-reaching in character and (have) set the pace for much more accelerated development in our bilateral relations.

On the issue of India's candidature for the UN Security Council, every indication was given during the talks that China would welcome India's emergence as a permanent member of the UN Security Council. So, we have every reason to be quite satisfied with the results of the visit³.

Question : On the issue of permanent membership for India in the UN Security Council, you have just said that you have every reason to be satisfied. Do you think this to be a forward movement on that as China has recently said that it would like to have consensus on the issue when it comes in the General Assembly?

Foreign Secretary: What was conveyed to us was that the question of reform of the United Nations was a broader agenda in which there was also the issue of the membership of the United Nations, and that no consensus had yet been reached about how this is going to be brought about. But, while there may be certain lack of agreement on the mechanism to be adopted, China was very clear in its mind that India was one of the largest developing countries in the world; that the UN Security Council should have greater representation of the developing countries; and that China will be happy to see India as a permanent member of the Security Council. So, I do not think we need to belabour the point. I think the Chinese attitude is very clear, very positive. In general terms, it is also reflected in the Joint Statement.

Question : What precisely does this strategic relations mean? With regard to agreement on political parameters and the guiding principles, what exactly does this framework mean? Would it be a framework through which these adjustments will be made? Will it be a new kind of a Joint Working Group? Will it be a Technical Group?

Foreign Secretary : As far as the strategic partnership is concerned, it is actually a concretization of what we have been saying for some time, which is that if you look at the international situation today and if you look at the increased role that India and China have come to play in the recent past because of their economic development, because of the fact that they are the two largest developing countries, both agree that their relationship has acquired a certain strategic dimension, a certain global dimension. That is, India-China relations are not merely limited to their bilateral relations. But what happens in India-China relations has a certain global impact, has a certain strategic impact.

3. On April 19 the Chinese Ambassador in India Sun Yuxi reiterated at a press conference China's support for India's candidature of the UN Security Council. He said: "Whenever time comes for taking a decision on giving support to any country, India will be on top of the list. We have no difficulty in supporting India." He said the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao had also given an assurance in this regard to Prime Minister Manmohan Singh during their talks.

There is also a sense that India and China on a number of regional and international issues have both common concerns and also have certain common positions. Therefore, there is a certain merit in the two countries working together on these common issues, which also have a certain impact on the interests of the developing world as a whole. So, that is the context in which this partnership has been projected. As you will see, it is a strategic partnership for a certain objective. What is that objective? It is for peace and for prosperity. So, it is very clear that it is not a military alliance, it is not India and China coming together against this or that country or against this or that region, but rather expressing a very positive kind of a view of their relationship that the two countries' bilateral relations have today acquired a certain global character, a certain strategic significance. That is what it means.

If we look at the political parameters and guiding principles, as I mentioned to you, we have been looking at this exercise as a three-step process. What we have achieved so far is the first phase where both sides have agreed principles. That is, the significance of these principles lying in the fact that both countries subscribe to these principles. What do these principles do? They in a sense set out the parameters, or they set out the kind of limits within which the two countries will have to find a politically-acceptable solution to the boundary issue; that certain things will be ruled out because these principles have been agreed upon; certain pointers are being given to how you find a settlement of the boundary issue, how do you treat differences between the two countries.

So, the next phase of the exercise which is actually looking for an actual framework for a boundary settlement. The framework for the boundary settlement will essentially be working out the adjustments, which may be required. Of course, these adjustments will be broad in character. It is in the third phase that we would get down to the very specific agreements in terms of the delineation and the demarcation. But the framework would be essentially a political decision by the two countries that this is the manner in which based on these principles we intend to resolve the boundary issue. I think that is really the sense. It is in this connection that I pointed out to you that a very clear statement made by, for example our Prime Minister, that we have the will to take the decisions that are required in order to reach a settlement. That is the sentiment, which was also expressed from the Chinese side.

Question : In the guiding principles, could you explain a little what you mean by package settlement? Is it that you would be addressing all the sectors together? Would there be spirit of give and take to that?

Foreign Secretary : I do not think we are saying that we will be looking at all the sectors together. What we are saying is that we may look at different sectors one by one but the settlement will be an overall settlement that there will have to be obviously a certain degree of balance. You cannot say I am going to settle this part first and then I will look at another part. That will not allow that kind of overall balance to emerge. So, when we talk about a package settlement, it means that it will be a settlement, which has a certain overall balance in terms of whatever adjustments that will be need to made.

Question : The issue of energy security to which there is a reference in the Joint Statement, what does it mean? It says about cooperation in the third country. But there is also an element of competition between India and China being vast energy consumers. So, would there be an element of cooperation on this aspect and who is going to ... what would be the mechanism for it?

Foreign Secretary : I do not think there should be any sense that there is no competition between India and China. Yes, there will be areas where there will be competition. But there are also certain convergent interests. You mentioned the energy sector. Obviously if both India and China are looking for oil and say gas resources, if both get into a bidding war with each other, it does not help either India or China. So, there is a certain sense in the two countries consulting more closely with each other, in some ways coordinating with each other, and in some areas, like for example in Central Asia, even working together. Why cannot Indian energy companies and Chinese energy companies in fact work together in some kind of a consortium in certain areas and do joint development? These are the kind of possibilities that we want to suggest when we are mentioning these in the Joint Statement.

Question : You spoke about United Nations reform. China had sometime ago mentioned that there should be international consensus on the issue. Did you raise that issue with them? Did you speak about China and Pakistan? Did this issue also come up?

Foreign Secretary : With regard to the UN Security Council, again our approach need not necessarily be the same as the Chinese approach. As you very rightly mentioned, there have been statements emerging from China saying that they would prefer that the reform of the UN Security Council, any expansion, should be done on the basis of consensus. There may even be some doubt about whether China supports the formula A or formula B. Those things have not yet been clarified. So, there may be differences in approaches with regard to the question of UN Security Council reform. What is important from our point of view is a very clear political statement coming from China that it would be happy to see India as a permanent Security Council member, and that it supports a greater role by India in international affairs and in the United Nations, which is mentioned in the Joint Statement.

There was no specific discussion of arms supply to Pakistan or arms supply to any other country. In the discussion, there was exchange of views on India-Pakistan relations. In this context, Premier Wen Jiabao expressed his support for the ongoing peace process between India and Pakistan. He said that this was something that China welcomed, the reduction of tensions, and that China with regard to South-Asia had no selfish interest, this is the term he used, to pursue with regard to this region, it wishes to have very friendly relations with all the countries in the region.

Question : Chinese interest in joining the SAARC, was that discussed? If not, what in any case is India's stance on that?

Prime Minister Vajpayee told Lok Sabha after the Agra Summit that the Shaksgam Valley issue was discussed with President Musharraf. That brings Pakistan also in the equation of the boundary dispute with China. Does it or does it not?

Mr. Natwar Singh had mentioned something about a nuclear strategy involving Pakistan and China and India. Is that a serious issue? Was that discussed?

Foreign Secretary : What was generally mentioned by the two leaders was that regional cooperation is something important, both countries support regional cooperation and the participation by each other in such regional cooperation. But, no specifics were mentioned in this regard. You talked about China's interest in being associated with SAARC. I think I have pointed out earlier also that when this matter had come up in the SAARC, what had been decided by consensus was that we should not take ad hoc decisions with regard to requests from various countries for observer status or for some kind of a partnership status; that we need to evolve certain agreed criteria on the basis of which we could look at this kind of request; also we need to work out what precisely the nature of the association of a partner country or of an observer country with regard to the deliberations of SAARC itself.

What would be the mechanism for them, for example, to cooperate with SAARC on actual projects? When this was discussed, then it was agreed that the SAARC Secretariat would prepare a paper on these issues, which were raised by the member countries and this would be then circulated to the member countries in time for the next SAARC Summit. So, I would imagine that when the SAARC Summit is held, then one of the issues that will come up will be the Secretariat's recommendations with regard to what are the criteria we should be applying in order to deal with applications not just from China but from other countries and organisations as well. That is with regard to SAARC.

As I said, we have not got down to the stage of actually looking at specific sectors of the border. What we have done so far is agree upon a set of guiding principles and political parameters. It is when we get down the nitty-gritty of actually looking at the border and what kind of a framework needs to be put in place in order to enable us to come to a settlement. Then, perhaps these issues that you are raising will also be included.

There was no discussion about a nuclear doctrine between India and China or involving any other country. Not in these talks.

Question : Back to the UN Security Council, you have said that the Prime Minister said that they would welcome India's emergence as a candidate. In your view, is this a movement forward from what Deng Xiaoping said in October that they understand and support India's greater role in international institutions including the UN Security Council. Are you saying that this is a movement forward?

Foreign Secretary : That is the sense I have, yes.

Question : India also wants to join Shanghai Cooperation Organisation. Was that discussed?

Foreign Secretary : As I said, not specifically. As you know, we have already applied for observer status in Shanghai Cooperation Organisation and the Secretariat actually is located in Beijing. So, China is aware that we are an applicant for observer status. A general support has been expressed for the participation of each other in regional cooperation processes. I am told that PM did mention in the opening statement that India had applied to become an observer of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation.

Question : Did the Chinese Prime Minister respond to it?

Foreign Secretary : He did not respond specifically to this particular issue but he did say that China supports the participation of India in various regional processes for regional cooperation. That was the sentiment also expressed by the Prime Minister. For example, he did mention Asian Summit which is being sponsored by ASEAN.

Question : Did the issue of Nepal come up in the talks?

Foreign Secretary : No, we did not discuss Nepal. In fact, we did not really have time to discuss any specific regional issues.

Question : What is the regional trade arrangement that they talked about? What does that imply?

Question : Why does India not want a Free Trade Area with China? It is the same question, Sir.

Foreign Secretary : I would request you to kindly look at the recommendations of the Joint Study Group on promotion of economic and commercial cooperation between India and China. I think you will find that it is an extraordinarily detailed study which looks at various aspects of the relationship between India and China. As I mentioned, there is a recognition that there will be a competition element in India-China economic and commercial relations but there is also a recognition that there is a considerable amount of complementarity between the two economies, and it would be worthwhile for us to build upon those complementarities. The fact that within a very short period of time our trade has grown in such a spectacular manner quite beyond expectations to fourteen billion dollars, and it is still growing, would appear to show that the convergences, the complementarities are perhaps stronger than the competitive elements.

The other aspect is that both economies in any case are liberalizing and opening. Tariff levels are going to be coming down. So, I think that there may be a flood of Chinese goods into India or vice versa, I do not think that we need to worry so much about that aspect. There are enough safeguards I think in terms of the kind of arrangements that we are looking at. I think given the fact that these are two very very large economies and developing at a very rapid pace, the sense that is coming out from the conversations that we have been having is that there is enough place for both of us, and that in terms of market, in terms of sources of supplies actually India and China can develop a relationship which benefits both. The point that was made was that although China and India are both very large developing countries, but there is a certain difference in their pattern of development. We have certain areas of strength, which China does not have. China has certain areas of strength, which India does not have. Many of you would have seen the editorial, which came in The Beijing Review on the eve of the visit. I think that is the sense which is coming out. I think I mentioned to some of you that the pattern of development of the Indian economy has been quite different from the pattern of development of the Chinese economy.

Today in India's economic development you find that the contribution of the services sector is much larger than is normally the case for a developing country. There are obviously areas of strength. When Premier Wen Jiabao decided to go to Bangalore, why did he go to Bangalore? It is because there was a sense that there are areas of excellence in India, which could be also of benefit to China. So I think without really setting aside the aspect of competition, nobody is saying there is no competition between India and China. Obviously, there will be competition just as there is competition with other countries as well in terms of trade. We have our comparative advantages; other countries have their comparative advantages. There will be competition. Having said that, we also are very conscious of the fact that there are very large areas of complementarity, which we can exploit in order to benefit both the economies.

1. Increasing confidence in bilateral relations and thaw on the border led to increasing military level cooperation between the two countries. In May the Chinese Army Chief General Liang Guanglie visited India and went round Indian Defence establishments and witnessed a combined army-air force exercises. Indian Army Chief Gen. J. J. He said there was a possibility of holding joint training on the counter-terrorist operations and the greater cooperation in UN Peacekeeping missions. The Army chief said there was peace prevailing along the 4000-km long northern border between India and China. He brushed aside recent reports of Chinese intrusions into the Indian territory. He however said there were a few aberrations for which a mechanism had been institutionalized. Talking about the McMahon Line, General Singh said that the troops were “by and large” respecting the LAC by maintaining “correct behaviour”. He said the momentum given by the leaders to normalize relations has been embraced by the two militaries and other measures like military to military cooperation like joint adventure activities, exchange of visits by senior and medium level military officers and holding of more border meetings were also being enforced. When the Chinese Chief of Staff met the National Security Advisor M. K. He also adding said that the PLA was also ready to build confidence measure with the Indian Army at the military areas along the Line of Actual Control and continue keeping peace and tranquillity along the border. The Indian Defence Minister Pranab Mukherjee told the Chinese general that friendly atmosphere built by the two sides was helpful to the solution of the border problem. He said Gen. Liang's visit was another important high-level contact between the two countries after the official visit of the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

292. Statement¹ by Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh in the Lok Sabha on the visit of Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao.

New Delhi, April 20, 2005.

Premier Wen Jiabao of China paid a State visit to India from April 9-12, 2005. The visit was substantive in its outcome. Premier Wen has himself described it as 'historic'.

My meeting with the Chinese Premier on April 11 was most warm and productive. We signed a Joint Statement, which contains a vision of where India-China relations are headed and an action plan for cooperation in bilateral, regional and global domains. A copy of the Joint Statement is placed on the Table of the House.² Eleven other agreements were signed and the report of the India-China Joint Study Group on comprehensive trade and economic cooperation released. The range of agreements concluded reflects the rapid strides made in our relations with China in recent years. Premier Wen Jiabao and I agreed that India-China relations have entered a new phase of comprehensive development.

In the Joint Statement, we have agreed to establish a 'Strategic and Cooperative Partnership for Peace and Prosperity'. It codifies the consensus between us that India-China relations transcend bilateral issues and have now acquired a global and strategic character. The partnership also reflects our desire to proactively resolve outstanding differences, while not letting them come in the way of continued development of relations. This is not in the nature of a military pact or alliance but reflects a congruence of purpose apart from a common perception of world events.

A major outcome of the visit was the Agreement on the Political Parameters and Guiding Principles for the Settlement of the India-China boundary question. A copy of the Agreement is placed on the Table of the House.³ This understanding has been possible as a result of deliberations between the Special Representatives of India and China on the boundary question. The institution of Special Representatives was created during my distinguished predecessor's visit to China in June 2003. The Agreement is truly a major milestone on the way to the settlement of the boundary question. It provides for a 'political settlement' of the boundary question in the context of the 'overall and long term interests' of the two countries. Both sides have agreed that an early boundary settlement should be pursued as a 'strategic objective'⁴.

The Agreement sets out for the first time ever, principles for an overall settlement of the India-China boundary question. While this understanding is of great significance, we do acknowledge that we are still quite some distance away from a final boundary settlement. We have agreed that in the meantime, the two sides will strictly respect and observe the line of actual control (LAC), maintain peace and tranquility in the border areas and expedite the work of clarification and confirmation of the LAC. The Protocol on the Modalities for the implementation of Confidence Building Measures in the Military Field in the Border Areas, signed during the Chinese Premier's visit, will help in maintaining peace along the LAC.

During my meeting with Premier Wen, he stated that China regarded Sikkim as an 'inalienable part of India', and that Sikkim was no longer an issue in India-China relations. The Joint Statement signed by us explicitly refers to 'Sikkim State of the Republic of India'. The Chinese side has officially handed over to us a revised map showing Sikkim as within the international boundaries of India. The understandings reached during the visit will also give a major fillip to the economic dimension of the relationship, to which both sides are attaching a great deal of importance. Bilateral trade has been growing rapidly and crossed the US$13 billion mark last year. A target of US $20 billion by 2008 is envisaged. During my meeting with Premier Wen, we agreed to establish an India-China Joint Economic Group, co-chaired by the two Commerce Ministers, to oversee facilitation and

4. A greater understanding between the two countries was reached on security matters when the Chinese Chief of General Staff, General Liang Guanglie visited India in May and had wide ranging discussions with the top brass of the Indian defence establishment. The proposals included increasing the number of flag meetings to prevent inadvertent border crossings into each other's territories. Measures to deal with air violations were also discussed along with the need to increase military-to-military exchanges along the McMahon line. According to media reports India invited China to take part as an observer in an Army armoured exercise in Rajasthan later in 2005. The Chinese had invited the Indian army personnel at a similar exercise in Tibet last year.

expansion of trade in goods and services, investment flows and other areas of economic cooperation. Premier Wen and I agreed to set up a Joint Task Force as well to examine the feasibility and benefits of Trading Arrangements.

The Chinese Premier and I also had a useful exchange of views on regional and multilateral issues. Among other things, we agreed on the importance of comprehensive reforms in the UN system. China conveyed that it attached great importance to the status of India in international affairs and understood and supported India's desire to play an active role in the UN and international affairs.

I believe the Chinese Premier's visit to India will give a significant boost to the all round development of India-China relations. Our policy towards China is characterized by continuity and consensus.

293. Statement by Minister of External Affairs K. Natwar Singh on arrival at Vladivostok for the Trilateral meeting between the Foreign Ministers of Russia, China and India.

Vladivostok, June 1, 2005.

I am delighted to be in this beautiful and historic city of Vladivostok, which is rapidly emerging as Russia's gateway to East Asia and the Pacific. During my stay, I look forward to personally assessing the immense potential of this resource-rich region of Russia. India is already present here as a partner in the energy sector, in the joint development of the Sakhalin oil and gas fields.

Russia, India and China would be holding the Fourth Trilateral Meeting of the Foreign Ministers on June 2, 2005. The three countries together represent some of the oldest civilizations in the world as well as large and economically dynamic countries. Together, we account for nearly 40% of the world's population and account for a considerable proportion of world's resources and agricultural and industrial production. Russia is one of the largest producers in the world of oil and gas. India and China are two of the largest consumers of energy. The three countries have acknowledged achievement in science and technology including in frontier areas of information technology and biotechnology. There are, therefore, obvious potentialities for mutually beneficial cooperation among our countries, which would also contribute to the advancement of science and economic prosperity in today's increasingly globalised world.

India, Russia and China have similar viewpoints on several issues of regional and international concern and I look forward to a broad exchange of views with my esteemed colleagues on matters of mutual interest both in trilateral as well as bilateral meetings in the next couple of days.

I would like to convey my good wishes for the people of Vladivostok and to the people of the Russian federation¹.

1. Besides attending the Trilateral meeting, EAM had separate meetings on bilateral basis with his Russian and Chinese counterparts. According to media reports during his meeting with the Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov, Mr. Singh offered to set aside about $ 100 million for new areas of cooperation with Russia covering information technology, biotechnology and nano-technology. The proposal of the Russian company Rosmeft which has offered ONGC Videshequity participation in an oil producing block was discussed. The Russian side agreed with the Indian EAM that a decision on the suggestion should be taken at the earliest. "Moscow was interested in the rupee debt fund and Russian company Systema has proposed to the Russian government to utilize nearly $400 million worth of rupee funds for investment in the telecom sector," the Russian Foreign Minister Lavrov said. He said that the Russian Prime Minister Mikhail Fradkov may undertake a visit to India later this year so that the economic content of bilateral relations gets a "systematic boost". The Russian Minister also announced a packed programme for India – Russia exchanges for the current year. The programme included a visit by the Russian Prime Minister to India, EAM's visit to Russia, a meeting of the Inter-Governmental Commission for trade, economic, scientific-technological cooperation. It is to be crowned by an annual summit meeting towards the end of the year when Prime Minister Manmohan Singh would visit Russia. Mr. Natwar Singh described these visits "very valuable" and as follow up to last year's visit of President Putin to India and the visit of Dr. Singh and President Kalam to Moscow this year. EAM had also an hour long meeting with the Chinese Foreign Minister LI Zhaoxing, which was dominated by discussion on the reform of the UN. Mr. Natwar Singh stressed that the time had come to act and use the opportunity created by the broad support for UN reform.

294. Joint communiqué issued on the results of the informal trilateral meeting of the Foreign Ministers of India, Russia and China.

Vladivostok (Russia), June 2, 2005.

The fourth informal trilateral meeting between the Foreign Ministers of the Russian Federation, the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China was held in Vladivostok on June 2, 2005.

The Ministers confirmed that India, Russia and China shared a common approach to key global developments in the 21st century and favoured the democratization of international relations aimed at building a just world order based on the observance of international law, equity, mutual respect, cooperation and progress towards multipolarity. The Ministers further underlined that UN, as the most universal international organisation, should play the central role in realizing this goal. They agreed on the objective requirement for comprehensive reforms of UN, including of UNSC, so that the Organization becomes more reflective of contemporary global realities and more effective in discharging its functions.

The Ministers declared the intention of India, Russia and China to cooperate in trilateral format in combating new threats and challenges. They stressed that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and irrespective of its origins and motivations posed one of the most serious threats to international peace and security. They agreed that it should be combated in a consistent, sustained and comprehensive manner without any double standards. They underscored the need for coordinated action between the law enforcement authorities of the three countries to act against illegal drug trafficking and other manifestations of trans-border crimes.

The Ministers discussed prospects for economic cooperation in the trilateral format. They acknowledged the considerable potential for mutually beneficial cooperation between Russia, India and China in such spheres as transport, agriculture, energy and high technologies. They agreed that relevant experts and officials from the three sides could meet to examine concrete possibilities in these and other sectors and make specific recommendations. Stressing the important role of direct business-to-business contacts, they supported the proposal of a trilateral business meeting hosted by India before the end of March 2006.

The Ministers recalled the considerable efforts made by the three countries in alleviating the suffering of the victims of the recent Tsunami. In this connection, they noted the need for coordination of trilateral efforts in their joint fight against natural disasters and their consequences in the Asia Pacific Region.

The Ministers expressed satisfaction at the dynamic development of bilateral relations between India and Russia, Russia and China, India and China. This opens up possibilities for India, Russia and China to raise their trilateral cooperation to a qualitatively new level.

The Ministers expressed shared confidence that their meeting in Vladivostok would provide a new impetus to the trilateral dialogue in all spheres of mutual interest. They confirmed that strengthening of partnership in the trilateral format met the long-term national interests of India, Russia and China. They were convinced that development of mutually beneficial cooperation between the three countries in practical terms would make considerable contribution to the strengthening of peace and stability not only in Asia but also globally¹.

1. This was the first stand-alone trilateral meeting of the three foreign ministers. Earlier three meetings were on the sidelines of various international forums. Of the earlier three meetings, two were held on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in 2002 and 2003 and once in Almaty in 2004 on the sidelines of the conference for confidence building measures in Asia. It was also for the first time that a joint communiqué was issued setting out a common agenda. EAM Natwar Singh said that the meeting carried "very great importance," while Russia's Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov stressed that "the interaction of Russia, India and China must become a key factor of international stability." The Chinese Foreign Minister Li Zhaoxing hailed the meeting's "joint contribution to the good cause of global peace and stability." Mr. Natwar Singh said that the recent destabilization in Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan was a "matter of great concern and worry" for India and that New Delhi was watching the situation "very closely". "There is no doubt that undesirable outside elements are trying to destabilize the situation in this part of Asia in the name of religion," said the Indian Foreign Minister. He said "it is essential for India and Russia that peace and stability return to the region so that development in those countries is not hampered."

296. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on meeting between Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh and Chinese President Hua Jintao on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly Session.

New York, September 14, 2005.

Official Spokesperson (Shri Navtej Sarna) : I thought I will give you a few points on meeting between Prime Minister and President Hu Jintao of China, which has just concluded.

The two leaders had an extensive discussion. They noted that this was the fourth meeting between the two leaders in the last one year, and that relations between the two countries had developed in a very positive direction in recent time. President Hu Jintao referred to what Prime Minister had said to him on one of the earlier occasions that India and China are not adversaries but partners, and said that this strategic and cooperative partnership between the two countries would benefit Asia as well as the entire world. Prime Minister endorsed this view.¹

Prime Minister said that India and China had launched this strategic and cooperative partnership when Premier Wen had come to India earlier this year. This promised prospects of prosperity and peace not only for the two countries themselves but also Asia and the world. President Hu said that it was in this spirit that China had supported India becoming an observer at the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation and also to attend the East Asia Summit.

Prime Minister then referred to the economic relations between the two countries and said that India-China trade relations were developing very rapidly, nevertheless there was large unutilized potential. As had been agreed during the visit of Premier Wen, the two countries should try to double the trade between the two countries over the next five years.

President Hu then went on to say that these relations were indeed developing very well. In the first half of this year itself, the trade between the two countries had reached a figure of 9.3 billion US dollars which marked an increase of 40 per cent over the same period last year. Going by this pace of development of the trade, he felt that it was possible to double trade between the two countries in the next two to three years rather than five years. Therefore, we must aim higher.

The two leaders also agreed to launch the study on the setting up of regional trade arrangement between India and China. This was one of the things that had been agreed to during Premier Wen's visit. Also they agreed that the Joint Commission between India and China should be scheduled at an early date. Joint Commission is wider than just trade. President Hu also referred to the year of friendship which is 2006. The year is being celebrated as the year of friendship between the two countries. A series of celebrations are under way. He felt that these would also bring the two countries closer together.

The boundary question was also discussed. Prime Minister referred to the political parameters and guiding principles which have been agreed to during the visit of Premier Wen and looked forward to the meeting of the Special Representatives of the two countries later in China to carry forward the dialogue on this issue. He said that we have an opportunity to seek a pragmatic and reasonable solution to this problem based on these guiding principles and political parameters. President Hu agreed that the two countries should address this issue with greater urgency in consonance with these principles and should seek reasonable solution.

Prime Minister also thanked President Hu for China's participation in the ITER project, the fusion reactor project in Europe. Regional issues were also discussed. China briefed India on the six-party talks on DPRK nuclear issue. There was an exchange of views on Iran. The views concerning this issue between the two countries were very similar. That is more or less what I have on China.

Question : How long was the meeting?

Official Spokesperson : The meeting took place for about 45 minutes.

298. Media briefing by Official Spokesperson on the meeting between External Affairs Minister K. Natwar Singh and the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao on the sidelines of the meeting of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization in Moscow.

New Delhi, October 27, 2005.

External Affairs Minister met Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao last evening. It was a very cordial and friendly meeting in which they recalled the progress achieved during Premier Wen's landmark visit (to India) in April this year, and appreciated the momentum that has been maintained in our bilateral relations since then.

Premier Wen emphasized the importance of the long-term significance of strategic cooperation that has been established between India and China and said that we should persevere with the vision that has been set out by the leadership of the two countries. The two sides also reviewed the progress achieved in the talks recently between the Special Representatives on the boundary issue. The Chinese premier said that it was important that the two countries continue their strategic dialogue as well as the talks on the boundary issue and nothing should be allowed to come in the way of friendly relations between the two countries which have a significance far greater than that of bilateral relations.

The Chinese Premier recalled that when he was leaving Delhi our Prime Minister had said that the two countries on that day had begun to make history. External Affairs Minister responded by reminding the Chinese Premier that when the two leaders shook hands at the start of their meeting the Chinese Premier had then remarked that this was a handshake that was being watched closely round the world.

Question: India wants to become a member of the SCO, China is opposed to the move. Was there any progress on it?

Answer: India has just been admitted as an Observer of the SCO and we are attending on that basis.

Question: Did Mr. Natwar Singh raise with the Chinese Premier their offer to help against the Maoists?

Answer: I do not know about this offer that you are...I have only seen news reports on that. So, I have no idea when this offer was made, what (offer) has been made. From the read out that I have this matter has not been discussed.

300. Question in the Rajya Sabha: “Framework to Resolve India – China Border Dispute”.

New Delhi, December 1, 2005.

Will the Minister of External Affairs be pleased to state:-

- (a) whether India and China have agreed to proceed towards a framework for resolving vexed border dispute in a fair and reasonable manner keeping in view political perspective of overall bilateral relations;
- (b) whether during the month of September, talks on two sides reviewed in a satisfactory manner, progress made in Special Representatives' meeting and agreed to proceed from political perspective of overall bilateral relations;
- (c) if so, at what stage border dispute is at present and by what time clear picture of settlement is being reached; and
- (d) whether both Governments are confident to settle this issue immediately for improvement of relations between the two countries?

The Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs (Shri E. Ahamed):

(a)-(d) A statement is laid on the Table of the House.

Statement

(a) Yes, Sir.

(b) Yes, Sir.

(c) Based on the first five rounds of talks between the Special Representatives of India and China on the boundary question, both sides signed the 'Agreement on Political Parameters and Guiding Principles for Settlement of India-China Boundary Question' on April 11, 2005 during the visit of the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao to India. The sixth round of talks between the Special Representatives was held in Beijing from September 26 to September 28, 2005, which marked the beginning of the second phase of negotiations. In the second phase of negotiations, the two Special Representatives are mandated to work out an agreed framework for a boundary settlement on the basis of the aforementioned Agreement. Such an agreed framework will provide the basis for the delineation and demarcation of the India-China boundary to be subsequently undertaken by civil and military officials and surveyors of the two sides. No timeframe has been fixed for the final settlement of the boundary question.

(d) Both India and China have expressed the conviction that an early settlement of the boundary question will advance the basic interests of the two countries and should, therefore, be pursued as a strategic objective.

Shri Gireesh Kumar Sanghi : Sir, my supplementary is, what are the major differences between India and China as far as border disputes are concerned? When are they going to meet next and what is the probable agenda during that meeting? Sir, I will put my second supplementary also.

Mr. Chairman : Only one supplementary.

Shri Gireesh Kumar Sanghi : Sir, China has emerged as a large manufacturing base and recently the Chinese Ambassador has also said that India as the world's office in software development and China as the world's factory can go forward. Apart from being the world's office, India has also emerged as the world's leading market.

Mr. Chairman : What is your question?

Shri Gireesh Kumar Sanghi : Sir, I am coming to the question. With the advantage of being the world's leading market I would like to know whether our negotiating skills have improved in this dispute.

Shri E. Ahamed : Sir, the question is with regard to the framework and the hon. Member's question does not come under the purview of the main question. Hon. Member has asked about the dispute between the two countries. As it is known, it is a border dispute for which negotiations are going on. A special representation will be meeting. Six times they have already had the discussions and the seventh round of discussions will be there in New Delhi, and it will be decided very soon.

Dr. T. Subbarami Reddy : Sir, we are extremely happy that India and China have agreed to seek a reasonable solution to the boundary question with greater urgency. In the month of September in the US in New York, this agreement was reached at the meeting on Wednesday between our hon. Prime Minister and the Chinese President. So, it was a great achievement for our Government. In this connection, I would like to know the economic ties also. They have agreed that it is going to be double trade between the two countries in the next two to three years. So, I would like to know what is the strategy they are going to adopt to achieve these in two to three years. Also I would like to know, Sir, after the sixth round of border talks between Mr. M. K. Narayanan and his counterpart in China, how are they going to achieve this as early as possible?

Shri E. Ahamed : There are two questions which our hon. Member has put. One is about the economic relations. Sir, now, both the countries are having very good trade relationship. It has gone up to $ 13.5 billion in trade relationship we have had with China. So far as the boundary talk is concerned, Sir, there are three steps. The first step is India and China have agreed to have the guiding principles of political parameters on which the hon. Prime Minister, as well as, the Chinese Prime Minister have agreed to. The second is, on the basis of these political parameters and guiding principle, the two special representatives have initiated the discussion to reach the consensus on the agreed framework of the boundary settlement that would involve the specific adjustment to be made by both countries; and as the hon. Member has pointed out the sixth one has already been over. Now, the next one will definitely be held, on a mutually convenient date, at New Delhi and this will lead to the third stage and the final stage i.e. civil and military officials and the surveyors will undertake the de-lineation and demarcation of boundary on the basis of the agreed frame. This is the position.

Shri Shahid Siddiqui: Hon. Chairman, Sir, Pakistan had surrendered a part of the occupied area of Kashmir, Do the current negotiations also cover the area surrendered by Pakistan to China? Please tell us if that is so and what stage the negotiations are and what can be done and what is being done?

Shri E. Ahamed: Sir, the entire gamut of discussion is on the disputed area. It is quite premature on my part to say anything at this point of time.

Shri Shahid Siddiqui: Sir, IS it being discussed? Has this issue been raised? This you can tell. ..(interruptions)...Is this issue under discussion or not? You can at least tell that.

Hon. Chairman: Please sit down.Next...(interruptions)...

Shri Shahid Siddiqui: Sir, I am not satisfied with the reply. The Hon. Minister can at least tell whether this is under discussion or not? Is this issue on the agenda of not? At least he can tell this. Sir, has not replied at all.

Dr. Manmohan Singh: Sir, the situation is such that it will be difficult for me to actually give a categorical answer to precise points that have been discussed. The two Special Representatives, appointed by the Prime Minister of India and the Prime Minister of China, are going through various stages. The first stage was the laying down of the broad principles which should guide the delineation of the border. That phase has been completed. When the Chinese Prime Minister was here, we signed a Broad Framework Agreement. Now, the next step for the Special Representatives is to workout an agreed framework for actual delineation or demarcation of the boundary. When that stage is reached, all elements, where there is a difference of opinion, where there is a dispute, they will all be tackled.

India proposed extending “concessional line of credit” to Indonesia for the “reconstruction of roads, buildings and harbours” in Aceh province, which was ravaged by the tsunami. Should Indonesia accept this offer, New Delhi’s assistance to Indonesia will go beyond the emergency help now being rendered by the two naval ships of the Indian navy sent to that country as emergency assistance. 305. Interview of Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh with the Jakarta Post.

Jakarta, April 25, 2005.

[Prime Minister Manmohan Singh came on the second and last days of the Asian-African Summit. His absence on the first day was most noticeable not only because India has championed the cause of the Third World, but also due to recent developments in India. Now one of Asia's economic giants, India recently signed agreements with long-time foes China and Pakistan, which will significantly alter the geopolitics of Asia and the world. The prime minister met with The Jakarta Post's Sabam Siagian and Endy M. Bayuni to talk about the summit and India's role in Asia and in the world. Following are excerpts from the interview and from earlier written questions and answers:]

What is the significance of your presence here?

For me personally this is a sentimental journey. It reminds me of the glorious chapter in India's foreign policy. Jawaharlal Nehru, President Sukarno, Chou En Lai, Mohammad Nasser and Ho Chi Minh worked hard to get rid of colonialism, to dismantle the structure that imperialism had created and give a sense of unity and purpose to the countries of the Third World.

1. On May 4 Lok Sabha was informed of the details of the relief supplies delivered to Indonesia:

Sl.No	ITEMS	Quantity
1.	Amul Spray	16 MT
2.	Biscuits	11.5 MT
3.	Sugar	02 MT
4.	Edible Oil	02 MT
5.	Lux Soap	02 MT
6.	Coffee	04 MT
7.	Medicine	6.5 MT
	Total (Approx)	44 MT

What do you hope to see achieved at this summit?

Today, a different struggle continues for the people of Asia and Africa. It is our expectation that the summit will lead to the establishment of a new partnership between the continents of Asia and Africa, which would enable us to collectively address the challenges of poverty eradication, development and growth. Political freedom has to be complemented by economic development if we are to eliminate hunger, disease and illiteracy. Collective action can help us address these common problems.

How does India plan to follow up the results of this meeting?

India intends to stay engaged by sharing experiences — gained from our own development process — with nations in Asia and Africa. Human resource development holds the key to employment and wealth creation, particularly in this age of globalization. This has been our strategy and we have laid particular emphasis on training and skills development as we globalize. We have extended technical assistance valued at about US$1 billion. We stand ready to do more. We are also ready to extend lines of credit to our friends in the two continents.

With the emergence of China and India, we see a different Asia from the one we saw in 1955. How do you view this?

We need to look at the whole thing from a different perspective. Globalization is a reality. Developments in science and technology have created opportunities that were unthinkable, even two decades ago. We have to put into place the instrumentalities, to take advantage of the forces unleashed by developments in science and technology. There is no single path that will serve the interests of all countries, but we have to develop compatibilities. We have to ensure that the globalization processes are harmonized with the domestic requirements of strengthening the inner cohesion of our societies. So efficiency is important to get going in this world but the quest for social equity, the quest for social justice, is equally important if plural societies are to be kept together.

During your recent meeting with Chinese Prime Minister Wen Jiabao, did you agree on the instrumentalities, so that the China-India war of 1962 will not be repeated?

I am pretty sure that chapter is over. We have together agreed on political parameters and guiding principles for the final resolution of the boundary dispute. We have also agreed that, pending that final settlement, nothing should be done that will affect the peace and tranquility in the line of control. We have also agreed that our two countries will move forward to determine the actual line of control, and that we should not allow these differences to come in the way of positive interaction in economy, culture, science and technology. We have declared that we are strategic partners in peace and prosperity. India and China relations are evolving in the right direction, which will strengthen peace, progress and prosperity — not only in Asia, but in the world as a whole.

Are you not worried that China is at the same time building access ports in Pakistan and Myanmar?

We are now taking another look at our relations with Pakistan. When President (Pervez) Musharraf was in New Delhi, we determined jointly that we would make sincere efforts to resolve all our outstanding issues bilaterally. We will carry forward the process of reconciliation with Pakistan. My effort is to ensure that India's relations with all its neighbors are excellent ... so that we can devote all our resources and all our energy to fighting mass poverty and disease, which still afflict millions and millions of people in our country.

When Asia's two economic giants join forces, should the rest of Asia be worried?

Our emergence as a growth pole will be a positive help to other countries. I believe India and China, which are growing at a fast pace, will create demands and markets for a large number of other Asian countries. Our development will bring up the level of development in other Asian countries. Our Look East policy is now firmly embedded — that this is the path that is essential to pursue to realize our development goals. We want to work with countries of ASEAN (Association of Southeast Asian Nations), particularly Indonesia as the largest economy in ASEAN. We have very close relations and we want to expand these relations in every possible way.

Indian culture is an inseparable part of Indonesian customs. But India's influence stops there. There has been a dearth of contacts in other significant areas, particularly politics and economics. What are the reasons or impediments for this?

It's quite natural that our cultures and values are closely related, bearing in mind the history of the civilizational contacts between India and Indonesia, which span over 2000 years. From that perspective, variations in intensity of relations over short spells are not very significant. What is important is that today we are Asia's largest pluralistic democracies. The focus of governance in democracies is to meet popular aspirations and to ensure that economic growth is accompanied by equity and social justice. Both our countries are engaged in meeting this challenge. In fact, there has been considerable expansion of our trade, economic and investment relations over the past few years.

306. Speech of President Dr. A. P. J. Abdul Kalam at a banquet in honour of Indonesian President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono.

New Delhi, November 23, 2005.

Your Excellency Dr. Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono, President of the Republic of Indonesia, Madam Ani Bambang Yudhoyono, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen,

On behalf of the Government and people of India, it gives me great pleasure to extend a very warm welcome to you, Mr. President, to Madam Yudhoyono and to all members of the distinguished delegation accompanying you on your State Visit to India. You represent one of the greatest civilizations in South-East Asia, one with which the people of India have interacted for more than two millennia.

Mr. President, the vision of a free world where our two countries would interact as equals was forged in the early years of the 20th century by Indian and Indonesian leaders, for whom the struggle for independence of their own countries was but a part of a larger struggle of all oppressed peoples and nations to gain control over their destinies. Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru, Soekarno and Hatta all played a pivotal role in carrying this vision forward.

Convening a Conference on Indonesia in New Delhi in 1949, Jawaharlal Nehru said: "We meet today because the freedom of a sister country of ours has been imperiled... the consequences will affect not merely Indonesia but Asia and the entire world." Visiting India for its first Republic Day Celebrations in 1950, Dr. Soekarno had said: "The whole world realises the deep significance of the independence of India but I think there is no country which realises its significance more than Indonesia does."

It was in this spirit of mutual solidarity that Soekarno and Nehru convened the Bandung Conference in 1955. Freedom became the essence of the life and philosophy of our two nations and together, we wrote the concluding chapter of colonialism and crafted the principles of non-alignment.

Today, India and Indonesia stand proudly together as the largest pluralistic democracies of Asia with a mutual stake in each other's progress, prosperity, security and territorial integrity. They stand out as shining examples of the successful democratic organisation of societies that are both diverse and developing. India and Indonesia are both home to societies, which are multi-religious and multi-cultural. Together, we serve to remind the world that religious and cultural heritage is a product of the sustained and harmonious intermingling of various traditions and beliefs. Its nature is composite and all embracing, not narrow or exclusivist.

Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the Government, the people and the sagacious leadership of Indonesia for the immense strides that have been made in recent years to build democratic institutions and place the economy firmly back on the road to recovery and growth. Your Government has also been successfully addressing domestic political and economic challenges with courage and decisiveness. I would like to felicitate Your Excellency for the vision and foresight with which you are guiding the affairs of your nation.

The decision which we have reached to forge a New Strategic Partnership between our two countries in the modern era is as welcome as it is timely. The destinies of our two nations have been bound together and our partnership has already stood the test of time. We must now synergise our strengths and complementarities to impart a new dynamism to this partnership. We could cooperate by setting up joint ventures in our areas of core-competence for the design, development and marketing of such products worldwide.

Mr. President, your visit has opened a new chapter in our bilateral relations. The two MoUs on training cooperation and cooperation in the field of marine fisheries which have been concluded during your visit are a manifestation of our mutual desire to come closer. India and Indonesia have been partners in history. If our past is any pointer, our future is full of promise. In this regard, the decision to set up a Joint Study Group to examine the feasibility of a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement is very welcome. In fact, I would suggest that we should set a target of increasing our bilateral trade to a figure of US $ 10 Billion by 2010. I am also confident that the New Strategic Partnership, which we have now launched, will become an anchor for the shared prosperity and stability of our region and of Asia as a whole.

Distinguished guests, may I now request you to join me in raising a toast to the: -- health, happiness and success of His Excellency President Yudhoyono and Madam Ani Bambang Yudhoyono; - progress and prosperity of the fraternal and peace-loving people of Indonesia; and- close and abiding friendship and cooperation between India and Indonesia.
